In its common acceptation, the term may be said to include those parts of the earth which are capable of being mined or extracted from beneath the surface, and which have a commer- cial value. Williams v. South Penn Oil Co.. 52 W. Va. 181, 43 S. E. 214, 60 U R. A. 795. But, in its widest sense, “minerals” may be described as comprising all the substances which now form or which once formed a part of the solid body of the earth, both external and internal, and which are now destitute of or in- capable of supporting animal or vegetable life. In this sense, the word includes not only the various ores of the precious metals, but also coal, clay, marble, stone of various sorts, slate, salt, sand, natural gas, petroleum, and water. See Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 104 Fed. 423, 43 C. C. A. 620 ; Murray v. Allred. 100 Tenn. 100, 43 S. W. 355, 39 L. R. A. 249, 66 Am. St. Rep. 740 ; Gibson v. MINERAL, ad). Relating to minerals or the process and business of mining ; bearing or producing valuable minerals.

— Mineral district. A term occasionally used in acts of congress, designating in a general way those portions, or regions of the country where valuable minerals are mostly found, or where the business of mining is chiefly carried on, but carrying no very precise meaning and not a known term of the law. See U. S. v. Smith (C. C.) 11 Fed. 490. — Mineral lands. See Land. — Mineral land entry. See Entry.

MINISTERIAL.

That which is done un- der the authority of a superior; opposed to judicial; that which involves obedience to Instructions, but demands no special discre- tion, Judgment, or skill.

— Ministerial not. A ministerial act may be defined . to be one which a person performs in a‘ given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, without regard to or the exercise of his own judgment, upon the propriety of the act being done. Acts done out of court in bringing parties into court are. as a general proposition, minis- terial acts. Pennington v. Streight. 54 Ind. 376 : Bair v. Struck. 29 Mont. 45, 74 Pac. 69, 63 h. R. [Law: mandamus — lies to compel a ministerial act, not to direct discretion]

The ministerial/discretionary divide governs mandamus: the writ lies to compel performance of a clear ministerial act, but never to control or direct the exercise of discretion.

Why: The entry defines the ministerial act as obedience without judgment; mandamus is the writ whose whole office turns on exactly that distinction, so the link is doctrinal, not decorative.

[Law: infancy doctrine — a minor's contracts are voidable at the minor's election, except for necessaries]

Minority's legal significance is the infancy doctrine: a minor's contracts are generally voidable at the minor's election, saving contracts for necessaries.

Why: The entry defines the minor as one under the age of legal competence; the voidability rule is the substantive consequence of that status in contract law.

MISDEMEANOR.

In criminal law. A general name for criminal offenses of every sort, punishable by indictment or special proceedings, which do not in law amount to the grade of felony.

A misdemeanor is an act committed or omit- ted in violation of a public law either forbidding or commanding it. This general definition, how- ever, comprehends both “crimes” and “misde- meanors,” which, properly speaking, are mere synonymous terms ; though, in common usage, the word “crimes” is made to denote such of- fenses as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye ; while smaller faults and omissions of less consequence are comprised under the milder term of “misdemeanors” only. In the English law, “misdemeanor” is generally used in contra- distinction to “felony and misdemeanors com- prehend all indictable offenses which do not amount to felony, as libels, conspiracies, at- tempts, and solicitations to commit felonies, etc. Brown. And see People v. Upson, 79 Htin. 87, 29 N. Y. Supp. 615; In re Bergin, 31 Wis. 3.86; Kelly v. People, 132 111. 303, 24 N. E. 56; State v. Hunter, 67 Ala. 83; Walsh v. People, 65 111. 65, 16 Am. [Law] — Law

[Law: common-law doctrine of misrepresentation — material deception in the subject-matter avoids the contract]

A contract induced by a misdescription that deceives a party in a material point is voidable: fraud and material misrepresentation vitiate consent.

Why: The entry defines misdescription as error deceiving a party to his injury; the misrepresentation doctrine is the genuine rule of consequence for exactly that fact pattern.

MISDIRECTION.

In practice. An er- ror made by a Judge in instructing the Jury upon the trial of a cause.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: reversible error must be prejudicial; harmless error does not reverse]

An error in instructing the jury reverses the judgment only if prejudicial; harmless error — error not affecting the substantial rights of the parties — does not warrant reversal.

Why: The entry states that misdirection is error for which judgment may be reversed; the axiom states the genuine condition — prejudice — that appellate review actually requires.

MISE.

[Law: Roman-law rule of the necessary deposit (depositum necessarium) — the depositary in extremity answered in double damages]

The necessary deposit — made in extremity, as by shipwreck, fire, or other calamity — was guarded by a heightened duty: Roman law gave the depositor an action in double damages against a faithless depositary.

Why: The entry defines the involuntary deposit under pressing necessity; the duplum action is the genuine doctrine that made the classification matter, kept in loose form since no Digest citation was verified.

MISFEASANCE.

A misdeed or trespass. The doing what a party ought to do improp- erly. 1 Tidd, Pr. 4. The improper perform- ance of some act which a man may lawfully do. 3 Steph. Comm. 460. And see Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray (Mass.) 309, 63 Am. Dec. 741 ; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Foulks, 191 111. 57, 60 N. E. 890; Dudley v. Flemingsburg, 115 Ky. 5, 72 S. W. 327, 60 L. R. A. 575, 103 Am. St. Rep. 253.

Misfeasance, strictly, is not doing a lawful act in a proper manner, omitting to do it as it should be done ; while malfeasance is the doing an act wholly wrongful ; and non-feasance is an omission to perform a duty, or a total neglect of duty. But "misfeasance” is often carelessly used in the sense of "malfeasance.” Coite v. Lynes, 33 Conn. 109.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: misfeasance is actionable as undertaken performance done improperly; nonfeasance requires a pre-existing duty]

One who undertakes a lawful act answers for injury caused by its improper performance; mere nonfeasance — failure to act — is actionable only where a duty to act already existed.

Why: The entry defines misfeasance against the implied nonfeasance contrast; the undertaking/duty distinction is the genuine tort doctrine that gives the contrast legal content.

[Maxim: Actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make a man guilty unless his mind be guilty]

In homicide law misfortune always implies the actor was engaged in no unlawful act; without a guilty mind the killing is misadventure, not crime.

Why: Same doctrine as misadventure by the entry's own cross-reference to 4 Bl. Comm. 182; the maxim is the genuine rule, applied here independently since the entry stands alone.

[Maxim: Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat — error in the name is nothing where the person is certain]

A misnomer does not vitiate the instrument where the person is otherwise certainly identified: error in the name is nothing when there is certainty as to the body.

Why: The entry defines misnomer as an incorrect name in a pleading or deed; the maxim is the genuine rule of consequence — the misnaming is immaterial if identity is certain.

MISPRISION.

In criminal law. A term used to signify every considerable mis- demeanor which has not a certain name given to it by law. 3 Inst. 36. But more par- ticularly and properly the term denotes ei- ther (1) a contempt against the sovereign, the government, or the courts of justice, includ- ing not only contempts of court, properly so called, but also all forms of seditious or dis- loyal conduct and leze-majesty; (2) malad- ministration of high public office, including peculation of the public funds; (3) neglect or light account made of a crime, that is, fuilure in the duty of a citizen to endeavor to pre- vent the commission of a crime, or, having knowledge of its commission, to reveal it to the proper authorities. See 4 Bl. Comm. 119- 126.

—Misprision o f felony. The offense of con- cealing a felony committed by another, but without such previous concert with or subsequent assistance to the felon as would make the party concealing an accessory before or after the fact. 4 Steph. Comm. 260 ; 4 Bl. Comm. 121 ; Car- penter v. State, 62 Ark. 286, 36 S. W. 900.— Misprision of treason. The bare knowledge and concealment of an act of treason or treason- able plot, that is, without any assent or par- ticipation therein, for if the latter elements be present the party becomes a principal. 4 Bl. Comm. 120; Pen. Code Cal. { 38. — N eg* tire misprision. The concealment of something which ought to be revealed ; that is, mis- prision in the third of the specific meanings given above.— Positive misprision. [Law] — Law

[Law: common-law misprision of felony — concealment of a known felony is itself an offense]

Misprision of felony is the concealment of a known felony without making it known to authority; mere knowledge unreported, without assent to the crime, is itself the offense.

Why: The entry defines misprision in terms of concealment and contempt; the duty-to-disclose principle is the genuine doctrine giving the definition legal content, kept loose-form to avoid anachronistic code citation.

[Law: non est factum — a deed misread to an illiterate or blind man is not his deed]

A deed whose contents were falsely read to an illiterate or blind party is not his deed: the plea of non est factum defeats an instrument the party never understood himself to be signing.

Why: The entry is the classic non est factum fact pattern and cites 5 Coke, 19 itself; the plea is the genuine defense the definition exists to support.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:14, KJV]

Thou shalt not curse the deaf, nor put a stumblingblock before the blind, but shalt fear thy God: I am the LORD.

MISTAKE.

Some unintentional act, omission, or error arising from ignorance, sur- prise, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Code Ga. 8 3117; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 110.

That result of ignorance of law or fact which has misled a person to commit that which, if he had not been in error, be would not have done. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 358.

A mistake exists when a person, under some erroneous conviction of law or fact, does, or omits to do, some act which, but for the erroneous conviction, he would not have done or omitted. It may arise either from unconsciousness. Ignorance, forgetfulness, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Bisph. Eq. 1 185. And see Allen v. Elder, 76 Ga. 677, Bl.Law Dict.(2d Ed.)— 00

Mistake of fact is a mistake not caused by the neglect of a legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake, and consisting in (1) an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact, past or present, material to the contract; or (2) belief in the present existence of a thing material to the contract which does not exist, or in the past existence of such a thing which has not existed. Civ. Code Cal. 8 1577.

A mistake of lata happens when a party, hav- ing full knowledge of the facts, comes to an er- roneous conclusion as to their legal effect. It is a mistaken opinion or inference, arising from an imperfect or incorrect exercise of the judg- ment, upon facts as they really are ; and, like a correct opinion, which is law, necessarily pre- supposes that the person forming it is in full possession of them. The facts precede the law, and the true and false opinion alike imply an acquaintance with them. Neither can exist without it. The one is the result of a correct application to them of legal principles, which every man is presumed to know, and is called “law ;” the other, the result of a faulty applica- tion, and is called a “mistake of law.” Hurd v. Hall, 12 Wis. 124.

Mutual mistake is where the parties have a common intention, but it is induced by a com- mon or mutual mistake.

Retrial after a mistrial does not offend double jeopardy where the first trial was discharged for manifest necessity: the defendant's 'valued right' to one trial yields to the public interest in fair adjudication.

Why: The entry defines the nugatory trial; Perez is the genuine foundational authority on the consequence that matters — when the state may try again — and the citation is used only because it is certain.

Why: The entry defines misuser as abuse of office or franchise citing 2 Bl. Comm. 153; forfeiture by quo warranto is the genuine remedy for exactly that abuse.

MITIGATION.

Alleviation; abatement or diminution of a penalty or punishment im- posed by law. "Mitigating circumstances" are such as do not constitute a justification or excuse of the offense in question, but which, in fairness and mercy, may be con- sidered as extenuating or reducing the degree of moral culpability. [William Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, c. 1599]

"Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears" — Antony's funeral oration turns the Roman crowd into exactly the violent, disorderly assemblage defying order that the entry defines.

Why: The play stages the legal 'mob' in action: a crowd swayed by rhetoric into violence. The quoted opening line is verbatim-certain and is the pivot of the mob scene.

MOBBING AND RIOTING.

In Scotch law. A general term including all those convocations of the lieges for violent and un- lawful purposes, which are attended with in- jury to the persons or property of the lieges, or terror and alarm to the neighborhood in which it takes place. The two phrases are usually placed together: but, nevertheless, they have distinct meanings, and are some- times used separately in legal language, the word “mobbing” being peculiarly applicable to the unlawful assemblage nnd violence of a number of persons, nnd that of “rioting” to the MONET.

A general, indefinite term for the measure and representative of value ; currency; the circulating medium; cash.

“Money" is a generic term, and embraces every description of coin or bank-notes rec- ognized by common consent as a representa- tive of value in effecting exchanges of prop- erty or payment of debts. Hopson v. Foun- tain, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 140.

Money is used in a specific and also in a gen- eral and more comprehensive sense. In its spe- cific sense, it means what is coined or stamped by public authority, and has its determinate value fixed by governments. In its more com- prehensive and general sense, it means wealth,— the representative of commodities of all kinds, of lands, and of everything that can be trans- ferred in commerce. Paul v. Bail, 31 Tex. 10.

In its strict technical sense, “money” means coined, metal, usually gold or silver, upon which the government stamp has been impressed to in- dicate its value. In its more popular sense, “money” means any currency, tokens, bank- notes, or other circulating medium in general iise as the representative of value. Kennedy v. Briere, 45 Tex. 305.

The term “moneys" is not of more extensive signification than "money,” and means only cash, and not things in action. Mann v. Mann, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, 7 Am. Dec. 416.

These “money claims" correspond very nearly to the “money counts" hitherto in use. Mozley & Whitley. — Money demand. A claim for a fixed and liquidated amount of money, or for a sum which can be ascertained by mere calculation; in this sense, distinguished from a claim which must be passed upon and liquidated by a jury, called “dam- ages.” Roberts v. [Alexander Pushkin, Eugene Onegin, 1833]

(paraphrase) In Pushkin's verse novel, Onegin kills his friend Lensky in a duel — the single combat the entry defines, once allowed by law for the trial or proof of causes. (paraphrase)

Why: The duel is the novel's climactic legal-social institution, matching the entry's definition of monomachia as a lawful single combat.

MONOMANIA.

In medical jurispru- dence. Derangement of a single faculty of the mind, or with regard to a particular sub- ject the other faculties being in regular ex- ercise. See Insanity.

That degree of assurance which in- duces a man of sound mind to act, without doubt, upon the conclusions to which it leads. Wills, Circ. Ev. 7. A high degree of impression of the truth of a fact, fall- ing short of absolute certainty, but sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty, even in a capital case. See Burrill, Circ. Bv. 198-200. The phrase "moral certainty” has been introduced into our jurisprudence from the publicists and metaphysicians, and signifies only a very high degree of probability. It was observed by Puf- fendorf that, "when we declare such a thing to be morally certain, because it has been confirm- ed by credible witnesses, this moral certitude is nothing else but a strong presumption grounded on probable reasons, and which very seldom fails and deceives us.” “Probable evidence,” says Bishop Butler, in the opening sentence of his Analogy, "is essentially distinguished from demonstrative by this: that it admits of de- grees, and of all variety of them, from the high- est moral certainty to the very lowest presump- tion.” Com. v. Costley, 118 Mass. 23.— Moral evidence. See Evidence.— Moral fraud. An estate created by a conveyance absolute In Its form, but Intended to secure the performance of some act, such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, find to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed at the time of making such conveyance. 1 Washb. Real Prop. *473.

A conditional conveyance of land, designed as a security for* the payment of money, the fulfillment of some contract, or the perform- ance of some act, and to be void upon such payment, fulfillment, or performance. Mit- chell v. Burnham, 44 Me. 299.

A debt by specialty, secured by a pledge of lands, of which the legal ownership is vested in the creditor, but of which, in equity, the debtor and those claiming under him remain the actual owners, until debarred by Judicial sentence or their own laches. Coote, Mortg. 1.

The foregoing definitions are applicable to the common-law conception of a mortgage. But in many states in modern times, it is regarded as a mere lien, and not as creating a title or estate. It is a pledge or security of particular property for the payment of a debt or the performance of some other obligation, whatever form the transaction may take, but is not now regarded as a convey- ance in effect, though it may be cast in the form of a conveyance. See Muth v. Goddard, 28 Mont. 237, 72 Pac. 621, 98 Am. St. Rep. 553 ; Johnson v. Robinson, 68 Tex. 399, 4 S.

C. 182, 10 S. E. 159, 17 Am. St Rep. 672. To the same purport are also the following statutory definitions:

Mortgage is a right granted to the creditor over the property of the debtor for the secu- rity of his debt, and gives him the power of having the property Beized and sold in de- fault of payment Civ. Code La. art 3278.

Mortgage is a contract by which specific property is hypothecated for the performance of an act, without the necessity of a change of possession. Civ. Code Cal. {.2920.

—Chattel mortgage. A mortgage of goods, chattels, or personal property. See Chattel Mobtgage.— Conventional mortgage. The conventional mortgage is a contract by which a person binds the whole of his property, or a portion of it only, in favor of another, to secure the execution of some engagement, but without divesting himself of possession. Civ. Code La. art. 3290; Succession of Benjamin, 39 La. Ann. 612, 2 South. 187. It is distinguished from the ‘‘legal” mortgage, which is a privilege which the law alone in certain cases gives to a creditor over the property of his debtor, without stipu- lation of the parties. This last is very much like a general lien at common law, created by the law rather than by the act of the parties, such as a judgment lien. — Equitable mort- gage. A specific lien upon real property to se- cure the payment of money or the performance of some other obligation, which a court of eq- uity will recognize and enforce, in accordance with the clearly ascertained intent of the par- ties to that effect, but which lacks the essential features of a legal mortgage, either because it grows out of the transactions of the parties without any deed or express contract to give a lien, or because the instrument used for that purpose is wanting in some of the character- istics of a common-law mortgage, or, being ab- solute in form, is accompanied by a collateral reservation of a right to redeem, or because an explicit agreement to give a mortgage has not been carried into effect. See 4 Kent, Comm. 150; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. ! 1018: Ketchum v. St. Louis, 101 U. S. 306. 25 L. Ed. 999 ; Payne v. Wilson, 74 N. Y. 348; Gessner v. Palmateer, 89 Cal. 89, 26 Pac. 789, 13 L. R. In English law, the fol- lowing mortgages are equitable: (1) Where the subject of a mortgage is trust property, which security is effected either by a formal deed or a written memorandum, notice being given to the trustees in order to preserve the priority. (2) Where it is an equity of redemption, which is merely a right to bring an action in the chancery division to redeem the estate. (3) Where there is a written agreement only to make a mortgage, which creates an equitable lien on the land. {4) Where a debtor deposits the title- deeds of his estate with his creditor or some person on his behalf, without even a verbal com- munication. The deposit itself is deemed evi- dence of an executed agreement or contract for a mortgage for such estate. Wharton. — First mortgage. The first (in time or right) of a series of two or more mortgages covering the same property and successively attaching as liens upon it; also, in a more particular sense.

a mortgage which is a first lien on the property, not only as against other mortgages, but as against any other charges or incumbrances. Green's Appeal, 97 Pa. 347. — First mortgage bonds. Bonds the payment of which is secur- ed by a first mortgage on property. Bank of Atchison County v. Byers, 139 Mo. 627, 41 S.

W. 325; Minnesota & P. It. Co. v. Sibley. 2 Minn. 18 (Gil. 1) : Com. v. Williamstown, 156 Maas. 70, 30 N. E. 472. — Second mortgage. One which takes rank immediately after a ‘first mortgage on the same property, without any intervening liens, and is next entitled to satis- faction out of the proceeds of the property. Green’s Appeal, 97 Pa. 347. Properly speak- ing, however, the term designates the second of a series of mortgages, not necessarily the second lien. For instance, the lien of a judg- ment might intervene between the first and sec- ond mortgages; in which case, the second mort- gage would be the third lien.— General mort- gage. Mortgages are sometimes classified as general and special, a mortgage of the former class being one which binds all property, pres- ent and future, of the debtor (sometimes called a "blanket” mortgage); while a special mort- gage is limited to certain particular and speci- fied property. Barnard v. Erwin, 2 Rob. (La.) 415. — Judicial mortgage. In the law of Lou- isiana. The lien resulting from judgments, whether rendered on contested cases or by de- fault, whether final or provisional, in favor of the person obtaining them. Civ. Code La. art. 3321. — Legal mortgage. A term used in Lou- isiana. The law alone in certain cases gives to the creditor a mortgage on the property of his debtor, without it being requisite that the par- ties should stipulate it. This is called "legal mortgage.” Civ. Code La. art. 3311.— Mort- gage of goods. A conveyance of goods in gage or mortgage by which tile whole legal title passes conditionally to the mortgagee ; and, if the goods are not redeemed at the time stipu- lated, the title becomes absolute in law, al- though equity will interfere to compel a redemp- tion. It is distinguished from a "pledge” by the circumstance that possession by the mort- gagee is not or may not be essential to create or to support the title. Stow. Bailm. g 287. See Chattel Mortgage.— Purchase-money mortgage. A mortgage given, concurrently with a conveyance of land, by the vendee to the vendor, on the same land, to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price. See Baker v. Clepper, 26 Tex. 620. 84 Am. Dec. 591.— Tacit mortgage. In Louisiana. The same as a “legal” mortgage. See supra. — Welsh mort- gage. In English law. A species of security which partakes of the nature of a mortgage, as there is a debt due, and an estate is given as security for the repayment, but differs from it in the circumstances that the rents and profits are to be received without account till the prin- cipal money is paid off, and there is no remedy to enforce payment, while the mortgagor has a perpetual power of redemption. It is now rare- ly used. 1 Pow. Mortg. 373a. See O’Neill v. Gray, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 566 ; Bentley v. Phelps, 3 Fed. Cas. 250.

[Maxim: Once a mortgage, always a mortgage — the equity of redemption cannot be clogged]

Once a mortgage, always a mortgage: the mortgagor's equity of redemption cannot be clogged or fettered by any stipulation in the mortgage itself.

Why: The entry defines the mortgage as a conditional conveyance defeasible on performance; the equity-of-redemption maxim is the genuine equitable doctrine that defines the mortgagor's protected interest.

MORTGAGEE.

He that takes or re- ceives a mortgage.

—Mortgagee In possession. A mortgagee of real property who is in possession of it with the agreement or assent of the mortgagor, ex- press or implied, and in recognition of his mort- gage and because of it, and under such circum- stances as to make the satisfaction of his lien an equitable prerequisite to his being dispossess- ed. [Law: mortgagee in possession — equitable duty to account for rents and profits]

A mortgagee in possession must account for the rents and profits received from the mortgaged premises, applying them toward the debt.

Why: The entry defines the mortgagee in possession by reference to satisfaction of his lien; the duty to account is the genuine equitable obligation attached to that possession.

MORTGAGOR.

He that gives a mort- gage.

[Law: donatio mortis causa — revocable deathbed gift requiring delivery]

A donatio mortis causa — a gift in contemplation of death — is revocable until the donor's death, requires delivery, and fails if the donor recovers.

Why: The entry introduces the phrase through donatio mortis causa; the revocability-and-delivery requirements are the genuine doctrine distinguishing it from an inter vivos gift.

MORTMAIN.

A term applied to denote the alienation of lands or tenements to any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. These purchases having been chiefly made by religious bouses, in conse- quence of which lands became perpetually inherent in one dead hand, this has occa- sioned the general appellation of “mortmain" to be applied to such alienations. 2 BL Comm. 268 ; Co. Lltt. 26; Perln v. Carey, 24 How. 495, 16 L. Ed. 701.

—Mortmain acts. These acts had for their object to prevent lands getting into the pos- session or control of religious corporations, or, as the name indicates, in mortua mans. After numerous prior acts dating from the reign of Edward I., it was enacted by the statute 9 Geo.

II. c. 36, (called the “Mortmain Act” par ex- cellence,) that no lands should be given to chari- ties unless certain requisites should be observ- ed. Brown. Yates v. Yates, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 324.

[Law: statutes of mortmain — restraints on alienation of land to corporations]

The statutes of mortmain restrained the alienation of lands to corporations — the 'dead hand' — lest land become perpetually inalienable in ecclesiastical or corporate ownership.

Why: The entry defines mortmain as alienation to corporations producing perpetually inherent land; the statutes are the genuine legislative response the term exists to name.

[Law: mortality tables — admissible to prove life expectancy in damage computation]

Mortality tables are admissible in evidence to establish a party's life expectancy in computing damages for wrongful death and personal injury.

Why: The entry defines the tables as estimating probable duration of life; admissibility for life-expectancy proof is the genuine evidentiary use the definition serves.

MOTION.

In practice. An occasional application to a court by the parties or their counsel, in order to obtain some rule or order, which becomes necessary either in the progress of a cause, or summarily and whol- ly unconnected with plenary proceedings. Citizens’ St R. Co. v. Reed, 28 Ind. App. 629, 63 N. B. 770; Low v. Cheney, 3 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 287; People v. Ah Sam, 41 Cal. 645; In re Jetter, 78 N. Y. 601.

MOTIVE.

The inducement, cause, or reason why a thing is done. An act legal in itself, and which violates no right, is not actionable on account of the motive which actuated it. Chatfleld v. Wilson, 5 Am. Law Reg. (O. S.) 528.

"Motive" and "intent" are not identical, and an intent may exist where a motive » wanting. Motive is the moving power which impels to ac- tion for a definite result; intent is the pur- pose to use a particular means to effect such result. In the popular mind intent and motive are often regarded as the same thing; but in law there is a clear distinction between them. When a crime is clearly proved to have been committed by a person charged therewith, the question of motive may be of little or no im- portance, but criminal intent is always essen- tial to the commission of a crime. People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L.

R. A. 193: Warren v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 29 Fed. Cas. 287. But motive is often an important subject of inquiry in criminal prosecutions, par- ticularly where the case depends mainly or en- tirely on circumstantial evidence, the combina- tion of motive and opportunity (for the commis- sion of the particular crime by the person ac- cused) being generally considered essential links in a chain of such evidence, while the absence of all motive on the part of the prisoner is an admissible and important item of evidence ip his favor.

MUNICIPAL.

“Municipal” signifies that which belongs to a corporation or a city. The term Includes the rules or laws by which a particular district, community, or nation is governed. It may also mean local, par- ticular, Independent Horton v. Mobile School Com’rs, 48 Ala. 698.

“Municipal,” in one of its meanings, is used in opposition to “international,” and denotes that which pertains or belongs properly to an in- dividual state or separate community, as distin- guished from that which is common to, or ob- served between, all nations. Thus, piracy is an "international offense,” and is denounced by “international law,” but smuggling is a “munic- ipal offense,” and cognizable by "municipal law.”

— Municipal aid. A contribution or assist- ance granted by a municipal corporation to- wards the execution or progress of some enter- prise, undertaken by private parties, but likely to be of benefit to the municipality ; e. g., a railroad. — Municipal bonds. See that title infra.— Munic- ipal courts. In the judicial organization of several states, courts are established under this name, whose territorial authority is confined to the city or community in which they are erect- ed. Such courts usually have a criminal juris- diction corresponding to that of a police court, and, in some cases, possess civil jurisdiction in small causes.— Municipal law, in contradis- tinction to international law, is the law of an individual state or nation. It is the rule or law by which a particular district, community, or nation is governed. 1 111. Comm.' 44. An incorporation of persons, inhabitants of a particular place, or connected with a particular district, enabling them to con- duct its local civil government. Glov. Mun. Corp. 1.

In English law. A body of persons in a town having the powers of acting as one person, of holding and transmitting property, and of regulating the government of the town. Such corporations existed in the chief towns of England (as of other countries) from very early times, deriving their author- ity from “incorporating” charters granted by the crown. Wharton.

Degrees of murder. These were unknown at common law, but have been introduced in many states by statutes, the terms of which are too variant to be here discussed in detail. In general, however, it may be said that moat states only divide the crime into “murder in the first degree” and “murder in the second degree,” though in a few there are as many as five de- grees ; and that the general purport of these statutes is to confine murder in the first degree to homicide committed by poison, lying in wait, and other killings committed in pursuance of a deliberate and premeditated design, and to those which accompany the commission of some of the more atrocious felonies, such as burglary, arson, and rape ; while murder in the second degree occurs where there is no such deliberately form- ed design to take life or to perpetrate one of the enumerated felonies as is required for the first degree, but where, nevertheless, there was- a purpose to kill (or at least a purpose to inflict the particular injury without caring whether it caused death or not) formed instantaneously in the mind, and where the killing was without justification or excuse, and without any such provocation as would reduce the crime to the grade of manslaughter. In a few states, there- Fa a crime of “murder in the third degree," which is defined as the killing of a human being without any design to effect death by a person who is engaged in the commission of a felony. The fourth and fifth degrees (in New Mexico) correspond to certain classifies tiona of man- slaughter elsewhere.

A. 642, 8 Am. St Rep. 744.

Besides the element of autonomy or self-gov- ernment, that is, the independence of the com- munity as a whole from the interference of any foreign lxiwer in its affairs or any subjection to such power, it is further necessary to the con- stitution of a nation that it should be an or- ganized jural society, that is, both governing jts own members by regular laws, and defining and protecting their rights, and respecting the rights and duties which attach to it as a constituent member of the family of nations. Such a so- ciety, says Vattel, has her affairs and her inter- ests ; she deliberates and takes resolutions in common ; thus becoming a moral person, who possesses an understanding and will peculiar to herself, and is susceptible of obligations and rights. Vattel, §§ 1. 2.

The words “nation” and “people” are fre- uently used as synonyms, but there is a great ifference between them. A nation is an aggre- gation of men speaking the same language, hav- ing the same customs, and endowed with certain moral qualities which distinguish them from oth- er groups of a like nature. It would follow from this definition that a nation is destined to form only one state, and that it constitutes one indivisible whole. Nevertheless, the history of every age presents us with nations divided into several states. Thus, Italy was for centuries divided among several different governments. The people is the collection of all citizens with- out distinction of rank or order. All men liv- ing under the same government compose the people of the state. In relation to the state, the citizens constitute the people ; in relation to the human race, they constitute the nation. A free nation is one not subject to a foreign gov- ernment, whatever be the constitution of the state ; a people is free when all the citizens oan participate in a certain measure in the direc- tion and in the examination of public affairs. The people is the political body brought into ex- istence by community of laws, and the people may perish with these laws. The nation is the moral body, independent of political revolutions, because it is constituted by inborn qualities which render it indissoluble. The state is the

See jus Natubale.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The rule and dictate of right reason, show- ing the moral deformity or moral necessity there is in any act, according to its suitable- ness or unsuitableness to a reasonable na- ture. Tayl. Civil Law, 99.

This expression, “natural law," or jut nat- urals, was largely used in the philosophical speculations of the Roman jurists of the Anto- mne age, and was intended to denote a system of 'rules and principles f<5r the guidance of hu- man conduct which, independently of enacted law or of the systems peculiar to any one peo- ple, might be discovered by the rational intelli- gence of man, and would be.found to grow out of and conform to his nofure, meaning by that word his whole mental, moral, and physical con- stitution. The point of departure tor this con- ception was the Stoic doctrine of a life ordered “according to nature," which in its turn rested upon the purely supposititious existence, in primitive times, of a “state of nature;” that is, a condition of society in which men uni- versally were governed solely by a rational and consistent obedience to the needs, impulses, and promptings of their true nature, sucli nature being as yet undefaced by dishonesty, falsehood, or indulgence of the baser passions. See Maine, Anc. Law, 50, et seq.

We understand all laws to be either human or divine, according as they have man or God for their author; and divine laws are of two kinds, that is to say: (1) Natural laws; <2) positive or revealed laws. A natural law is denned by Burlamaqui to be “a rule which bo necessarily agrees with the nature and state of man that,- without observing its maxims, the peace and happiness of society can never be preserved.” Ana he says that, these are called “natural' laws” because a knowledge of them may be at- tained merely by the light of reason, from the fact of their essential agreeableness with the constitution of human nature; while, on the contrary, positive or revealed laws are not founded upon the general constitution of human nature, but only upon the will of God ; though in other respects such law is established upon very good reason, and procures the ad- vantage of those to whom it is sent. The ceremonial or political laws of the Jews are of this latter class. Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 527, 44 Am. Dec. 217.

[Law: praetorian edict on nautae, caupones, stabularii — strict liability for goods received]

By the praetor's edict, shipmasters — with innkeepers and stablekeepers — are answerable for the goods committed to them, a strict custodial liability surviving in the modern law of carriers and innkeepers.

Why: The entry cites Dig. 4, 9 as the nauta's source; the edict's strict custodial liability is the genuine doctrine of that title, not an imported gloss.

NAUTICAL.

Pertaining to ships or to the art of navigation or the business of car- riage by sea.

— Nautical assessors. Experienced shipmas- ters, or other persons having special knowledge of navigation and nautical affairs, who are call- ed to the assistance of a court of admiralty, in difficult cases involving questions of negli- gence, and who sit with the judge during the argument, and give their advice upon questions of seamanship or the weight of testimony. [Law: bottomry/respondentia — the lender's maritime interest is lost with the ship]

Maritime interest on bottomry or respondentia is the price of the sea risk: the extraordinary rate is earned only if the venture survives — if the ship perishes, the lender loses the loan.

Why: The entry defines nautical interest as the extraordinary rate for money lent on the hazard of the voyage; the risk-bearing term is the genuine maritime content of that definition.

NAVIGABLE.

Capable of being navi- gated; that may be navigated or passed over in ships or vessels. But the term is gen- erally understood in a more restricted sense, viz., subject to the ebb and flow of the tide.

“The doctrine of the common law as to the navigability of waters has no application in this country. Here the ebb and flow of the tide do not constitute the usual test, as in England, or any test at all, of the navigability of waters. There no waters are navigable in fact, or at least to any considerable extent, which are not subject to the tide, and from this circumstance tide-water and navigable water there signify substantially the same thing. But in this coun- try the case is widely different. Some of our rivers are as navigable for many hundreds of miles above as they are below the limits of tide-water, and some of them are navigable for great distances by large vessels, which are not even affected by the tide at any point during their entire length. A different test must there- fore be applied to determine the navigability of our rivers, and that is found in their navigable capacity. Those rivers must be regarded as public navigable rivers, in law, which are navi- gable in fact. And they are navigable in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes Of trade and travel on water. And they consti- tute navigable waters of the United States, within the meaning of the acts of congress, in contradistinction from the navigable waters of the states, when they form, in their ordinary condition, by themselves, or by uniting with other waters, a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other states or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water." The T>aniel Ball, 10 Wall. 503. 19 L. Ed. 999. And see Packer v. Bird. 137 U. S. 001. 11 Sup. Ct. 210, 34 L. Ed. 819; The Genesee Chief. 12 How. 455, 13 T,. Ed. 1058; Illinois Cent. It. Co. v. State. 140 U. S. 387, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 30 L. Ed. 10ia

It is true that the flow and ebb of the tide Is not regarded, in this country, as the usual, or any real, test of navigability; and it only op- erates to impress, prima facie, the character of being public and navigable, and to place the onus of proof on the party affirming the con- trary. Rut the navigability of tide-waters does not materially depend upon past or present actual public use. Such use may establish navi- gability. but it is not essential to give the char- acter. Otherwise, streams in new and unsettled sections of the country, or where the increase, growth, and development have not been suffi- cient to call them into public use, would be excluded, though navigable in fact, thus making the character of being a navigable stream de- pendent on the occurrence of the necessity of public use. Capability of being used for useful purposes of navigation, of trade and travel, in the usual and ordinary modes, and not the ex- tent and manner of the use, is the test of navi- gability. Sullivan v. Spotswood, 82 Ala. 10C, 2 South. 716.

[Law: navigable-in-fact test — waters navigable in fact are navigable in law (The Daniel Ball)]

In American law the English ebb-and-flow test does not govern: waters navigable in fact are navigable in law, and federal authority extends to waters that are or may be used as highways of interstate commerce.

Why: The entry expressly rejects the common-law tidal test for America; the navigable-in-fact test is the genuine doctrine replacing it.

this term is not used in its strictest sense, nor limited to. that which is required to sus- tain life. Those things which are proper and suitable to each individual, according to his circumstances and condition in life, are nec- essaries, if not supplied from some other source. See Hamilton v. NEGLECT.

Omission ; failure to do something that one Is bound to do; care- lessness.

The term Is used In the law of bailment as synonymous with “negligence." But the latter word Is the closer translation of the Latin “neoligentia.”

As used in respect to the payment of mon- ey, refusal is the failure to pay money when demanded ; neglect is the failure to pay money which the party Is hound to pay with- out demand. Kimball v. Howland, 6 Gray (Mass.) 224.

The term means to omit, as to neglect busi- ness or payment or duty or work, and is generally used in this sense. It does not generally imply carelessness or imprudence, but simply an emission to do or perform some work, duty, or act. Rosenplaenter v. Boessle, 54 N. Y. 262. —Culpable neglect. In this phrase, the word “culpable” means not criminal, but censurable ; and, when the term Is applied to the omission by a person to preserve the means of enforcing his own rights, censurable is more nearly an equivalent. As he has merely lost a right of action which he might voluntarily relinquish, and has wronged nobody but himself, _ culpable neglect conveys the idea of neglect which exists where the loss can

NEGLIGENCE.

The omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those considerations which ordinarily reg- ulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do. Negligence is any culpable omission of a pos- itive duty. It differs from heedlessness, in that heedlessness is the doing of an act in vio- lation of a negative duty, without adverting to its possible consequences. In both cases there is inadvertence, and there is breach of duty. Aust. Jur. § 630.

—New and useful. The phrase used in the patent laws to describe the two qualities of an invention or discovery which are essential to make it patentable, viz., novelty, or the condition of having been previously 'unknown, and practical utility. See In re Gould, 1 MacArthur (D. C.) 410; Adams v. Turner, 73 Conn. 38. 40 Atl. 247; Lowell v. Lewis, 1 Mason, 182, Fed. Cas. No. 8,508. — New assets. In the law governing the administration of estates, this term denotes assets coming into the hands of an executor or administrator after the expiration of the time when, by statute, claims against the estate are barred so far as regards recourse against the assets with which he was originally charged. See Littlefield v. Eaton. 74 Me. 521 ; Chenery v. Webster. 8 Allen (Mass.) 77 ; Robinson v. Hodge, 117 Mass.

222; Veaxle v. Marrett, 6 Allen (Mass.) 372. —New assignment. Under the common-law practice, where the declaration' in an action is ambiguous, and the defendant pleads facts which are literally an answer to it, but not to the real claim set up by the plaintiff, the plaintiff’s course is to reply by way of new assignment; i. e., allege that he brought his action not for the 'cause supposed by the defendant, but for some other cause to which the plea has no ap- plication. 3 Steph. —Next devisee. By the term ‘‘first devisee” is ■understood the person to whom the estate is first given by toe will, while the term “next devisee” refers to the person to whom the remainder is given. Young v. Robinson, 5 N. J. Law, 689.— Next friend. The legal designa- tion of the person by whom an infant or other person disabled from suing in his own name brings and prosecutes an action either at law or in equity ; usually a relative. Strictly speaking, a next friend (or “prochein amp”) is not appointed by the court to bring or maintain the suit, but is simply one who volunteers for that purpose, and is merely admitted or permitted to sue in behalf of the infant ; but the practice of suing by a next friend has now been almost en- tirely superseded by the practice of appointing a guardian ad litem. See McKinney v. Jones, 55 Wis. 39. 11 N. W. 606 ; Guild v. Cranston. 8 Cush. (Mass.) 506 ; Tucker v. Dabbs, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 18; Leopold v. Meyer, 10 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 40.— Next of kin. This term properly denotes the persons nearest of kindred to the decedent, that is. those who are most nearly re- lated to him by blood ; but it is sometimes con- strued to mean only those who are entitled to take under the statute of distributions, and sometimes to include other persons. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. I 10656. The words "next of kin,” used aimpliciter in a deed or will, mean, not nearest of kindred, but those relatives who share in the estate according to the statute of distri- butions, including those claiming per atirpea or by representation. NE1UM.

Lat. In Roman law. In an- cient times the nexvm seems to have been a species of formal contract, involving a loan of money, and attended with peculiar conse- quences, solemnized with the “copper and bal- ance.” Later, it appears to have been used as a general term for any contract struck with those ceremonies, and hence to have included the special form of conveyance called “ mancipatio .” In a general sense it means the obligation or bond between con- tracting parties. See Maine, Anc. Law, 305, «f *eq.; Hadl. Rom. Law, 247.

In Roman law, this word expressed the tie or obligation Involved in the old conveyance by mancipatio; and came latterly to be used inter- changeably with (but less frequently than) the word “obligatio" itself. Brown.

opinion that, If there be daylight, or crepusculum, enough begun or left to discern a man’s face, that is con- sidered day; and night is when it is so dark that the countenance of a man caunot be dis- cerned. 1 Hale, P. C. 350. However, the limit; of 9 p. k. to 6 a. m. has been fixed by statute, in England, as the period of night, in prosecutions for burglary and larceny. St. 24 & 25 Vlct. c. 96, J 1; Brown. In Amer- ican law, the common-law definition is still adhered to in some states, but in others ‘‘night” has been defined by statute as the period between sunset and sunrise.

—Night magistrate. A constable of the night; the head of a watch-house.— Night walkers. Described In the statute 5 Bdw. III. c. 14, as persons who sleep by day and walk by night. Persons who prowl about at night, and are of a suspicious appearance and behavior. Persons whose habit is to be abroad at night for the purpose of committing some crime or nuisance or mischief or disturbing the peace; not now generally subject to. the criminal laws except in respect to misdemeanors actually committed, or in the character of vagrants or suspicious persons. [Law: common-law burglary — breaking and entering a dwelling-house in the nighttime]

Night is when darkness prevents discerning a man's face; the definition matters because common-law burglary is the breaking and entering of a dwelling-house in the nighttime.

Why: The entry gives the common-law test of night from Hale; burglary's nighttime element is the genuine doctrine the test exists to serve.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 1:5, KJV]

And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day.

Why: The entry concerns what the common law reckons night and what day. Genesis 1:5 is the archetypal distinction: God Himself names the light Day and the darkness Night — the categories the legal reckoning presupposes. Na…

NIHIL.

Lat. Nothing. Often contracted to "nil." The word standing alone is the name of an abbreviated form of return to a writ made by a sheriff or constable, the fuller form of which would be "nihil eat" or “nihil habet,” according to circumstances.

— Nib 11 capiat per breve. In practice. That he take nothing by his writ. The form of judgment against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar or in abatement. When the plaintiff has commenced his proceedings by bill, the judgment is nihil capiat per billam. Co. Litt.

363.— Nihil 'licit. He says nothing. This is the name of the judgment which may be taken as of course against a defendant who omits to plead or answer the plaintiff's declaration or complaint within the time limited. In some jurisdictions it is otherwise known as judgment ‘‘for want of a plea.” See Gilder v. McIntyre, 29 Tex. 91 : Falken v. Iiousa tonic It. Co., 63 Conn. 258, 27 Atl. 1117; Wilbur v. Maynard, 6 Colo. 486.— Nihil est. There is nothing. A form of return made by a sheriff when he has been unable to serve the writ. “Although non eat inventua is the more frequent return in such a case, yet it is by no means as full an answer to the command of the writ as is the return of nihil. That amounts to an averment that the defendant has nothing in the bailiwick, no dwelling-house, no family, no residence, and no personal presence to enable the officer to make the service required by the act of assembly. It is therefore a full answer to the exigency of the writ.” Sherer v. Easton Bank, 33 Pa. 139. —Nihil habet. He has nothing. NISI.

Lat Unless. The word is often affixed, as a kind of elliptical expression, to the words “rule,” “order,” “decree,” “Judg- ment,” or “confirmation,” to indicate that the adjudication spoken of is one' which is to stand as valid and operative unless the par- ty affected by it shall appear and show cause against it or take some other appro- priate step to avoid it or procure its revoca- tion. Thus a “decree nisi” is one which will definitely conclude the defendant’s rights unless, within the prescribed time, he shows cause to set it aside or successfully appeals. The word, in this sense, is opposed to “ab- solute.” And when a rule niti is finally con- firmed, for the defendant’s failure to show cause against it it is said to be “mude abso- lute.”

— Nisi feeerls. The name of a clause com- monly occurring in the old mnnorial writs, commanding that, if the lords failed to do justice, the king’s court or officer should do it By virtue of this clause, the king's court usurped the jurisdiction of the private, manorial, or local courts. Stim. Law Gloss.— Nisi prlna. The nisi prim* courts are such as are held for the trial of issues of fact before a jury and one pre- siding judge. In America the phrase is famil- iarly used to denote the forum (whatever may be its statutory name) in which the cause was tried to a jury, as distinguished from the ap- pellate court. See 3 Bl. Comm. 58.— Nisi priua clause. In practice. A clause entered on the record in an action at law, authorizing the trial of the cause at nisi print in the par- ticular county designated. [Law: presumption of legitimacy — rebutted by proof of non-access]

A child born in wedlock is presumed legitimate, but proof of non-access — the absence of opportunity for intercourse between husband and wife — rebuts the presumption.

Why: The entry defines non-access in legal parlance as absence of intercourse or opportunity; the legitimacy presumption is the genuine doctrine the definition exists to defeat.

NON ACCREVIT INFRA SEX ANN08.

It did not accrue within six years. The name of a plea by which the defendant sets up the statute of limitations against a cause of action which is barred after six years.

NON LIQUET.

Lat It is not clear. In the Roman courts, when any of the Judges, after the hearing of a cause, were not satis- fied that the case was made clear enough for them to pronounce a verdict, they were privileged to signify this opinion by casting a ballot inscribed with the letters “N. L.,” the abbreviated form of the phrase “non liquet.”

[Law: exclusion from the mails — obscene matter barred (Comstock laws)]

Letters and parcels excluded by law from the mails — by size, nature, or obscene character — are non-mailable; the obscenity exclusion is the Comstock legislation.

Why: The entry defines non-mailable by legal exclusion and names obscene character; the Comstock exclusion is the genuine statutory content of that ground.

[Law: the dispensing power — the Crown's non obstante license, condemned by the Bill of Rights 1689]

The non obstante clause was the Crown's license to do what a statute restrained — the dispensing power, condemned when the Bill of Rights 1689 declared the pretended power of dispensing with laws illegal.

Why: The entry defines the non obstante clause as a license to do what statute forbids; the dispensing-power controversy is the genuine constitutional history the clause exists to name.

An order or Judgment, granted upon the trial of a cause, that the plaintiff has abandoned, or shall abandon, the further prosecution of his suit.

A voluntary nonsuit is one incurred by the plaintiff's own act or omission, and is a judgment entered against him as a conse- quence of his abandoning or not following up his cause, or being absent when his pres- ence is required. Sandoval v. Rosser, 86 Tex. 682, 26 S. W. 933; Deeley v. Heintz, 169 N. Y. 129, 62 N. E. 158 ; Boyce v. Snow. 88 111. App. 405.

An involuntary nonsuit is one which takes place when the plaintiff fails to nppear when his case Is before the court for trial or at the time when the Jury are to deliver their verdict, or when he has given no evidence on which a Jury may find a verdict, or when his case is put out of court by some adverse ruling which precludes a recovery. Boyce v. Snow, 187 111. 181, 58 N. E. 403; Deeley v. Heintz, 160 N. X. 120, 62 N. E. 158; Stults v. Forst, 135 Ind. 297, 34 N. E. 1125; Wil- liams v. Finks, 156 Mo. 597, 57 S. W. 732.

[1 John 1:9, KJV]

"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

Why: The verdict of acquittal answers confession: faithfulness and justice are reconciled in forgiveness. The entry is the courtroom word of acquittal; the verse gives its spiritual mirror.

[Lumet, 12 Angry Men, 1957]

(paraphrase) The jury room deliberating its way to the 'not guilty' verdict — the form of verdict in criminal cases where the jury acquit the prisoner, dramatized in real time. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry names both the plea and the verdict form. The film is the canonical dramatization of a jury reaching 'not guilty.' Marked paraphrase.

NOT GUILTY BY STATUTE.

In Eng- lish practice. A plea of the general issue by a defendant in a civil action, when he intends to give special matter in evidence by virtue of some act or acts of parliament, in which case he must add the reference to such act or acts, and state whether such acts are public or otherwise. But, if a defendant so plend, he will not be allowed to plead any other defense, without the leave of the court or a judge. Mozley & Whitley.

[Law: UCC § 3-104 — negotiable instrument; must be payable to order or bearer]

Writing 'not transferable' across an instrument destroys negotiability because a negotiable instrument must be payable to order or bearer.

Why: Genuine because it states the operative rule that makes the entry's statement true; UCC § 3-104 is the real, current statement of the negotiability requirement the entry presupposes.

NOTATION.

In English probate prac- tice, notation Is the act of making a memo- randum of some special circumstance on a probate or letters of administration. Thus, where a grant is made for the whole personal estate of the deceased within the United Kingdom, which can only be done In the case of a person dying domiciled in England, the fact of his having been so domiciled Is noted on the grant. Coote, Prob. Pr. 36; Sweet.

NOTE, v. To make a brief written state- ment; to enter a memorandum; as to note an exception.

—Note a bill. When a foreign bill has been dishonored, it is usual for a notary public to present it again on the same day, and, if it be not then paid, to make a minute, consisting of his initials, the day, month, and year, and rea- son, if assigned, of non-payment. The making of this minute is called “noting the bill. Wharton.

NOTICE.

Knowledge; Information; the result of observation, whether by the senses or the mind ; knowledge- of the existence of a fact or state of affairs; the means of knowledge. Used in this sense In such phras- es as “A. had notice of the conversion," “a purchaser without notice of fraud,” etc.

Notice is either (1) statutory, i. e., made so by legislative enactment; (2) actual, which brings the knowledge of a fact directly home to the party; or (3) constructive or implied, which is no more than evidence of facts which raise such a strong presumption of notice that equity will not allow the presumption to be rebutted. Constructive notice may be subdivided into: (a) Where there exists actual notice of matter, to which equity has added constructive notice of facts, which an inquiry after such matter would have elicited ; and (6) where there has been a designed abstinence from inquiry for the very purpose of escaping notice. Wharton.

In another sense, "notice” means Infor- mation of an act to be done or required to be done; as of a motion to be made, a trial to be had, a plea or answer to be put in, costs to be taxed, etc. In this sense, “notice” means an advice, or written warning, In more or less formal shape, intended to ap- prise a person of some proceeding in which his interests are Involved, or Informing him of some fact which it is his right to know and the duty of the notifying party to com- municate.

Classification. Notice is actual or construc- tive. Actual notice is notice expressly and actually given, and brought home to the party directly, in distinction from notice inferred or imputed by the law on acount of the existence of means of knowledge. Jordan v. Pollock, 14 Ga. 145; Johnson v. Dooly, 72 Ga. 297 ; Mor- ey v. Milliken, 86 Me. 404, 30 Atl. 102; Mc- Cray v. Clar, 82 Pa. 457; Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498; White v. Fisher, 77 Ind. 65. 40 Am. Rep. 287 ; Clark v. Lambert, 55 W. Va. 512, 47 S. E. 312. Constructive notice is in- formation or knowledge of a fact imputed by law to a person, (although he may not actually have it,) because he could have discovered the fact by proper diligence, and his situation was such as to cast upon him the duty of inquiring into it. Baltimore v. Whittington. 78 Md. 231, 27 Atl. 984; Wells v. Sheerer, 78 Ala. 142; Jordan v. Pollock, 14 Ga. 145 ; Jackson v. Waldstein (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 26: Acer v. Westcott, 46 N. Y. 384, 7 Am. Rep. 355. Further as to the distinction between actual and constructive notice, see Baltimore v. Whit- tington. 78 Md. 231, 27 Atl. 984: Thomas v. Flint, 123 Mich. 10, 81 N. W. 936, 47 L. R.

A. 499; Vaughn v. Tracy, 22 Mo. 420.

Notice is also further classified as express or implied. Express notice embraces not only knowledge, but also that which ia communicated by direct Information, either written or oral, from those who are cognizant of the fact communicated. Baltimore v. Whittington, 78 Md. 281, 27 Atl. 084. 'Implied notice is one of the varietiea of actual notice (not constructive) and is distinguished from “express’’ actual notice. It is notice inferred or imputed to a party by reason of his knowledge of facts or circum- stances collateral to the main fact, of such a character as to put him upon inquiry, and which, if the inquiry were followed up with due diligence, would lead him definitely to the knowledge of the main fact Uliodes v. Outcalt, 48 Mo. 370; Baltimore v. Whittington, 78 Md. 231, 27 Atl. 984; Wells v. Sheerer, 78 Ala. 147. Or as otherwise defined, implied notice may be said to exist where the fact in question lies open to the knowledge of the party, so that the exercise of reasonable observation and watcbfulnss would not fail to apprise him of it, although no one has told him of it in so many words. See Philadelphia v. Smith (Pa.) 16 Atl. 493.

Other compound and descriptive terms. — Judicial notice. The act by which a court, in conducting a trial, or framing its decision, will, of its own motion, and without the production of evidence, recognize the existence and truth of certain facts, linving a bearing on the controversy at bar, and which, from their na- ture, are not properly the subject of testimony, or which are universally regarded as establish- ed by common notoriety, e. g., the laws of the state, international law, historical events, the constitution and course of nature, main geo- graphical features, etc. North Hempstead v. Gregory, 53 App. Div. 350. 65 N. X. Supp. 867 ; State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 37 Atl. 80, 36 I*

R. A. 623, 61 Am. St. Rep. 30. — Legal notice. Such notice as is adequate in point of law ; such notice as the law requires to be given for the specific purpose or in the particular case. See Sanborn v. Piper, 64 N. H. 335, 10 Atl. 680; People's Bank v. Ktting, 17 Phila. (Pa.) 285. — Notice, averment of. In pleading. The allegation in a pleading that notice lias been gryen. — Notice In lien of servloe. In lieu of personally serving a writ of summons (or other legal process.) in English practice, the court occasionally allows the plaintiff (or other party) to give notice in lieu of service, such no- tice being such as will in ail probability reach the party. This notice is peculiarly appropriate in the case of a foreigner out of the jurisdiction, whom it is desired to serve with a writ of sum- mons. Sweet.— Notice of action. A no- tice in writing, entitled in a cause, stating that, on a certain day designated, a motion will be made to the court for the purpose or object stated. Field v. Park. 20 Johns. (N. A notice given by one of the parties in an action to the other, after an issue has been reached, that he intends to bring the cause forward for trial at the next term of the court.— Notice to admit. In the practice of the English high court, either party to an action may call on the other party by notice to admit the existence and execution of any document, in order to save the expense of prov- ing it at the trial ; and the party refusing to admit must bear the costs of proving it unless the judge certifies that the refusal to admit was reasonable. No costs of proving a document will in general be allowed, unless such a notice is given. Rules of Court, xxxii. 2; Sweet.— No- tice to plead. This is a notice which, in the practice of some states, is prerequisite to the taking judgment by default. It proceeds from the plaintiff, and warns the defendant that he must plead to the declaration or complaint with- in a prescribed time.— Notice to produce. In practice. A written notice given by a landlord to his tenant, stating that the former desires to repossess himself of the demised premises, and that the latter is requir- ed to quit and remove from the same at a time designated, either at the expiration of the term, if the tenant is in under a lease, or immediately, if the tenancy is at will or by sufferance. The term is also sometimes applied to a written no- tice given by the tenant to the landlord, to the effect that he intends to quit the demised prem- ises and deliver possession of the same on a day named. Gamer v. Hannah, 6 Duer (N. X.) 270; Oakes v. Munroe. 8 Cush. (Mass.) 287. — Per- sonal notice. Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from the entry's own authority (6 Coke, 29); the footnote records the maxim Black's itself cites rather than importing one.

NOTORIETY.

Novation is a contract, consisting of two stipulations, — one to extinguish an existing obligation; the other to substitute a new one in its place. Civ. Code La. art. 2185.

The term was originally a technical term of the civil law, but is now in very general use in English and American jurisprudence.

In the civil law, there are three kinds of nova- tion: (1) Where the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new debt takes the place of the old one ; (2) where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted ; (3) where the debt and debtor remain, but a new creditor is substituted. NOVELTY.

An objection to a patent or claim for a patent on the ground that the invention is not new or original is called an objection “for want of novelty."

5e apparatus — Carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Law] — Law

[Law: 35 U.S.C. § 102 — conditions for patentability; novelty]

Novelty is the threshold condition of patentability: an invention already known or used cannot be patented.

Why: Genuine because the entry's 'want of novelty' objection is precisely the § 102 novelty bar; it names the statute the definition presupposes.

(paraphrase) Cinderella's stepmother — the fairy-tale noverca, the civil law's word for stepmother wearing a story's face. (paraphrase)

NOVERZNT UNIVEKSI PER PRJE- / BENTES.

Know all men by these presents. Formal words used at the commencement of deeds of release in the Latin forms.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Daniel 3:4, KJV]

"Then an herald cried aloud, To you it is commanded, O people, nations, and languages."

Why: 'Know all men by these presents' is the formal deed-opening addressed to all; the herald's cry to all peoples in Daniel is the scriptural form of such a public proclamation. Narrative, not deity speech — no flag.

NOVI OPERXS NUNCIATIO.

Lat De- nunciation of, or protest against a new work. This was a species of remedy in the civil law, available to a person who thought his rights or bis property were threatened with injury by the act of his nelgbber in erecting or demolishing any structure, (which was called a “new work." In such case, he might go upon the ground, while the work was in progress, and publicly protest against or forbid its completion, in the presence of the workmen or of the owner or bis repre- sentative.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 6:31, KJV]

"But if he be found, he shall restore sevenfold; he shall give all the substance of his house."

Why: The entry is manifold pecuniary satisfaction for an injury — ninefold in Saxon law; sevenfold restitution for theft is its biblical twin. Not deity speech — no flag.

[Maxim: Novitas non tam utilitate prodest quam novitate perturbat — a novelty does not benefit so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty]

The entry quotes Jenkyns' maxim that a novelty 'does not benefit so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty.'

Why: Genuine because the maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry from the entry's own authority (Jenk. Cent. p. 167, case 23); the footnote records Black's own cited maxim rather than importing one.

NOVODAKUB.

In old Scotch law. (We give anew.) The name given to a charter, or clause in a charter, granting a renewal of a right Bell.

[Maxim: Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum — a new adjudication does not make a new law, but declares the old]

The entry quotes the maxim that a new adjudication does not make new law but declares the old — the declaratory theory of adjudication.

Why: Genuine because the maxim is quoted in the entry itself; it states the declaratory theory under which courts discover rather than make law, illuminating why a renewed charter (novodamus) re-declares rather than re-cre... [Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 5:17, KJV]

"Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

Why: The entry applies 'new man' to the pardoned criminal; the verse is the spiritual form of the same figure — pardon making the man new. Paul's epistle, not deity speech — no flag.

NONA.

Lat In the civil law. This term denoted any damage or Injury done to persons or property by an unlawful act com- mitted by a man’s slave or animal. An ac- tion for damages lay against tbe master er owner, who, however, might escape further responsibility by delivering up the offending agent to the party Injured. “Woxo” was al- so used as the designation of the offense committed, and of its punishment and some- times of the slave or animal doing the dam- age.

Noxm acquitur caput. The injury [(. a., liability to make good an Injury caused by a slave] follows the head or person, [I. e., at- taches to his master.] Helnecc. Elem. L 4, t & I 1231.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 21:30, KJV]

"If there be laid on him a sum of money, then he shall give for the ransom of his life whatsoever is laid upon him."

Why: The noxal action makes the master answer in money for the harm done by his beast or slave; the goring-ox law lays exactly that ransom on the owner. Third-person legal command, not first-person divine speech — no flag.

NOXALI8 ACTIO.

[Maxim: Nuda pactio obligationem non parit — a naked agreement does not beget an obligation]

The entry quotes the Roman maxim that a naked agreement — one without consideration — does not beget an obligation.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Dig. 2,14,7,4 and Broom, Max. 746; it states the consideration requirement, the operative rule behind unenforceable bare promises.

The entry quotes the maxim defining nudum pactum: where no cause underlies the agreement beyond the convention itself it is a naked pact; where a cause underlies it, obligation and action follow.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry; it states the consideration rule that makes the entry's subject operative in American law, reinforced by the entry's own cited cases (Justice v. Lang; Wardell v. Wil...

^Classification. Nuisances are commonly classed as public and private, to which is some- times added a third class called mixed. A pub- lic nuisance is one which affects an indefinite number of persons, or all the residents of a particular locality, or all people coming within the extent of its range or operation, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflict- ed upon individuals may be unequal; and hence, though only a few persons may be actually Injured or annoyed at any* given time, it is none the less a public nuisance if of such a character that it must or will injure or an- noy all that portion of the. general public which may be compelled to come into contact with it, or within the range of its influence. See Burn- ham V. Hotchkiss, 14 Conn. 317; Chesbrough v. Com’rs, 37 Ohio St. 508; Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 30, 21 Am. Dec. 89; Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668, 38 Atl. 703; Kelley v. private nuisance was originally defined as anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. 3 Bi. Comm. 216. But the modern definition includes any wrongful act which destroys or deteriorates the property of another or interferes with his lawful use or enjoyment thereof, or any act which unlawfully hinders him in the enjoyment of a common or public right and causes him a special injury. Therefore, although the ground bf distinction between pub- lic and private nuisances is still the injury to the community at large or, on the other hand, to a single individual, It is evident that the same thing or. act may constitute a public nui- sance and at the same time a private nuisance, being the latter as to any person who sustains from it, in his person or property, a special injury different from that of the general pub- lic. See Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 582. 36 Am. Rep. 654; BaHzeger v. Carolina Midland R. Co., 54 S. C. 242, 32 S. E. 358, 71 Am. St. Rep. 789 ; Kavanagh v. Barber. 131 N. Y. 211, 30 N. E. 235, 15 L. R. Nothing; no proceeding; an act or proceeding In a cause which the op- posite party may treat as though it had not taken place, or which has absolutely no legal force or effect Salter v. HUgen, 40 Wis. 363; Jenness v. Lapeer County Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 469, 4 N. W. 220 ; Johnson v. Hines, 61 Md. 122.

—Absolute anility. In Spanish law, nullity is either absolute or relative. The former is that which arises from the law, whether civil or criminal, the principal motive for which Is the public interest, while the latter is that which affects one certain individual. Sunol ▼. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 281. No such distinction, however, is recognized in American law, and the term “absolute nullity” is used more for emphasis than as indicating a degree of invalid- ity. As to the ratification or subsequent valida- tion of “absolute nullities,” see Means v. Rob- inson, 7 Tex. 502, 516. — Nullity of marriage. The entire invalidity of a supposed, pretended, or attempted marriage, by reason of relation- ship or incapacity of the parties or other diri- ment impediments. An action seeking a decree declaring such an assumed marriage to be null and void is called a suit of “nullity of mar- riage.” It differs from an action for divorce, because the latter supposes the existence of a valid and lawful marriage. [Maxim: Nullius hominis auctoritas apud nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequamur si quis attulerit — the authority of no man ought to prevail with us so as to prevent our following better opinions if anyone should present them]

The entry quotes Coke's rule of legal reasoning: no man's authority ought to prevail against better opinions.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Co. Litt. 383b; it is recorded as the entry's own cited authority on the method of legal argument, not as a comment on bastardy.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 23:2, KJV]

"A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the LORD; even to his tenth generation shall he not enter into the congregation of the LORD."

Why: The entry is the legal status of the bastard — 'the son of nobody'; the verse states that status's scriptural consequence in the congregation. Moses' law, third person — no flag.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Shakespeare, King Lear, 1606]

(paraphrase) Edmund — the 'bastard' son who hears the word 'base' as a brand — the law's 'son of nobody' raging against the status the entry names. (Printed headword is the OCR garbling of NULLIUS FILIUS.) (paraphrase)

Why: Entry: 'the son of nobody; a bastard.' Edmund is the canonical literary nullius filius. Keyed on the printed headword with the OCR correction recorded in reasoning. Marked paraphrase.

NULLIUS IN BONIS.

Lat. Among the property of no person.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 24:1, KJV]

"The earth is the LORD's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein."

Why: The entry names things 'among the property of no person'; the psalm is scripture's counterpoint — ultimately nothing is ownerless, the earth is the LORD's. Addressed to God, not spoken by him — no flag.

[Maxim: Nullum crimen majus est inobedientia — no crime is greater than disobedience]

The entry quotes Jenkyns' maxim that no crime is greater than disobedience.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Jenk. Cent. p. 77, case 48, as applied to an officer's refusal; recorded as the entry's own cited authority.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Nullum iniquum est praesumendum in jure — no iniquity is to be presumed in law]

The entry quotes Coke's maxim that no iniquity is to be presumed in law.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 7 Coke, 71; it states the presumption of lawful conduct, recorded as the entry's own cited authority.

[Maxim: Nullum tempus occurrit regi — no lapse of time bars the king]

The Nullum Tempus Act (3 Geo. III c. 16) was named for limiting the very maxim it contravened — that no lapse of time bars the king.

Why: Genuine because the entry itself names the Act for the maxim and explains that the Act limited the Crown's right to sue to sixty years 'in contravention of' it; the footnote records the maxim the entry presupposes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 5:20, KJV]

"Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."

Why: A nuncio is the permanent representative of a sovereign at a foreign court; the apostle as ambassador 'in Christ's stead' is the concept's scriptural form. Paul's epistle, not deity speech — no flag.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Dig. 50,17,139,1, Bacon's Maxims reg. 8, and Broom, Max. 42; it is the genuine antecedent of the rule against ex post facto aggravation of offenses.

[Maxim: Nunquam decurritur ad extraordinarium sed ubi deficit ordinarium — we never resort to the extraordinary except where the ordinary fails]

The entry quotes the maxim that we never resort to the extraordinary where the ordinary remedy is available.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry; it states the subsidiarity rule governing extraordinary writs and remedies, recorded as the entry's own cited authority.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry; it states the real rule that fraud defeats prescriptive title. The companion rhetorical maxim about never saying too much was declined as non-legal.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:8, KJV]

"Owe no man any thing, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law."

Why: The plea is 'never indebted' — the state of owing nothing; the verse commands exactly that state as the fulfillment of the law. Not deity speech — no flag.

[Maxim: Nuptiae non concubitus sed consensus faciunt — not cohabitation but consent makes the marriage]

The entry quotes Coke's maxim that not cohabitation but consent makes the marriage.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Co. Litt. 33; it states the consent theory of marriage that the entry's definition of 'nuptial' presupposes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 2:24, KJV]

"Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh."

Why: The entry covers what pertains to marriage; this is the foundational marriage text — leaving, cleaving, one flesh. Narrator's voice, not deity speech — no flag.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Ex turpi causa non oritur actio — from an immoral cause no action arises]

An agreement founded on an immoral consideration is unenforceable — from a dishonorable cause no action arises.

Why: Genuine because the entry's 'ob turpem causam' (Dig. 12,5) is precisely the Roman root of the ex turpi causa rule barring enforcement of immoral bargains; it states the consequence the definition presupposes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 23:18, KJV]

"Thou shalt not bring the hire of a whore, or the price of a dog, into the house of the LORD thy God for any vow: for even both these are abomination unto the LORD thy God."

Why: For an immoral consideration — the entry voids agreements on corrupt consideration; the verse refuses even the payment arising from an immoral transaction. Third-person law — no flag.

OBA1RATUS.

Lat. In Roman law. A debtor who was obliged to serve his credit- or till his debt was discharged. Adams, Rom. Ant. 49.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 15:1, KJV]

"At the end of every seven years thou shalt make a release."

Why: The obaeratus served his creditor until the debt was discharged; the seven-year release is scripture's limit on that bondage — debt may bind, but not forever. Moses' law, third person — no flag.

OBEDIENCE.

Compliance with a com- mand. prohibition, or known law and rule of duty prescribed ; the performance of what is required or enjoined by authority, or the abstaining from what is prohibited, in com- pliance with the command or prohibition. Webster.

5e apparatus — Carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Samuel 15:22, KJV]

"Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

Why: The entry is compliance with command and known law; Samuel's rebuke to Saul is the classic scriptural word that obedience outranks ritual. Samuel's speech, not deity speech — no flag.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Shakespeare, The Taming of the Shrew, c. 1594]

(paraphrase) Kate's closing speech lays out the period doctrine of wifely obedience — compliance with commands prescribed by authority, preached at length as duty. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines obedience as compliance with a command, prohibition, or known rule of duty prescribed by authority; the speech is the era's doctrine of obedience in dramatic form. Marked paraphrase — no verbatim claim.

OBEDIENTIA.

An office, or the admin- istration of it ; a kind of rent ; submission ; obedience.

Obedient!* eat legia essentia. 11 Coke, 190. Obedience is the essence of law.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Obedientia est legis essentia — obedience is the essence of law]

The entry quotes Coke's maxim that obedience is the essence of law.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 11 Coke, 190; recorded as the entry's own cited authority — the classical statement of law's claim to be obeyed.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ecclesiastes 12:13, KJV]

"Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man."

Why: The entry's maxim is 'Obedience is the essence of law'; the Preacher's conclusion makes obedience — fearing God and keeping commandments — the whole duty of man. Not deity speech — no flag.

Why: The entry is the legal state of dying without issue; the levirate law opens on exactly that contingency — a brother dead with no child — and orders the remedy. Third-person law — no flag.

OBIT.

In old English law. A funeral solemnity, or office for the dead. Cowell. The anniversary of a person’s death ; the an- niversary office. Cro. Jac. 51.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 50:10, KJV]

"And they came to the threshingfloor of Atad, which is beyond Jordan, and there they mourned with a great and very sore lamentation: and he made a mourning for his father seven days."

Why: The entry is the funeral solemnity — the office for the dead; the seven days' mourning for Jacob is its scriptural form. Narrative, not deity speech — no flag.

OBITER.

Lat. By the way ; in passing ; incidentally ; collaterally.

^-Obiter dictum. A remark made, or opin- ion expressed, by a judge, in his decision upon a cause, “by the way,’’ that is, incidentally or collaterally, and not directly upon -the question before him, or upon a point not necessarily in- volved in the determination of the cause, or introduced by way of illustration, or analogy or argument.

OBJECT, v. In legal proceedings, to ob- ject (e. ff., to the admission of evidence) is to Interpose a declaration to the effect that the particular matter or thing under considera- tion is not done or admitted with the consent of the party objecting, but is by him consid- ered improper or Illegal, and referring the- question of its propriety or legality to the court OBJECT, n. This term “includes what- ever is presented to the mind, as well as what may be presented to the senses; whatever,- also, is acted upon, or operated upon, ■ af- firmatively, or intentionally Influenced by anything done, moved, or applied thereto.” Woodruff, J„ Wells v. Shook, 8 Blatchf. 257, Fed. Cas. No. 17,406.

—Object ot an action. The thing sought to be obtained by the action ; the remedy demand- ed or the relief or recovery sought or prayed for ; not the same thing as the cause of action or the subject of the action. Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 406; Lassiter v. Norfolk & C. It Co.,' 136 N. C. 89, 48 S. B. 643.— Object of a stat- ute. The "object” of a statute is the aim or purpose of the enactment, the end or design which it is meant to accomplish, while the “sub- ject” is the matter to which it relates and with which it deals. [Axiom: obiter dicta are persuasive only; the ratio decidendi alone binds]

An obiter dictum is not binding: only the ratio decidendi — the reason necessary to the decision — carries precedential force.

Why: Genuine because the entry defines obiter dictum as remarks made incidentally and 'not directly upon the question'; the axiom states the precedential consequence the definition presupposes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 9:7, KJV]

"Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver."

Why: Oblatio in the church sense is what the pious offer; the verse is the New Testament rule of the freewill offering — given as purposed in the heart. Not deity speech — no flag.

OBLIGATE.

To bind or constrain; to bind to the observance or performance of a duty.; to place under an obligation. To bind one’s self by an obligation or promise ; to as- sume a duty ; to execute a written promise or covenant; to make a writing obligatory. Wachter v. Famachon, 62 Wis. 117, 22 N. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 18:18, KJV]

"Verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

Why: To obligate is to bind; Christ's words give the binding act its highest form — what is bound on earth is bound in heaven. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

OBLIGATIO.

Lat In Roman law. The legal relation existing between two fcertaln persons whereby one (the creditor) is au- thorized to demand of the other (the debtor) a certain performance which has a money vfdue. In this sense obligatio signifies not only the duty of the debtor, but also the right of the creditor. The fact establishing such claim and debt, .as also the instrument evi- dencing it, is termed “obligation.” Mackeld. Rom. Law,, f 360.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

That legal relation subsisting between two persons by which one is bound to the other for a certain performance. The passive re- lation sustained by the debtor to the creditor is likewise called an "obligation.” Some- times, also, the term "obligatio" is used for the causa obligation is, and the contract it- self is designated an "obligation.” There are passages in which even the document which affords the prbof of a contract Is call- ed an “obligation.” Such applications, however, are but a loose extension of the term, which, according to its true idea, is only prop- erly employed when it is used to denote the debt relationship, in its totality, active and passive, subsisting between the creditor and the debtor. Tomk. A J. Mod. Rom. Law, 301.

Obligations, ' in the civil law, are of the several descriptions enumerated below.

Obligatio civilii is an obligation enforceable by action, whether it derives its origin from jut 0* vile, as the obligation engendered by formal contracts or the obligation, enforceable by bilat- erally penal suits, or from Buck portion of the iut gentium as had been completely naturalized In the civil law and protected by all its reme- dies, such as the obligation engendered by form- less contracts.

Obligatio naturalit is an obligation not imme- diately enforceable by action, or an obligation imposed by that portion of the jut gentium which is only imperfectly recognized by civil law.

Obligatio ex contractu, an obligation arising from contract, or an antecedent jut in perto- nam. In this there are two stages.— first, a pri- mary or sanctioned personal right antecedent to wrong, and, afterwards, a secondary or sanc- tioning personal right consequent on a wrong. Poste's Galus’ Inst. 359.

Obligatio ex delicto, an obligation founded on wrong or tort, or arising from the invasion of a jut in rent. In this there is the second stage, a secondary or sanctioning personal right con- sequent on a wrong, but the first stage is not a personal right, (jut in p ertonam,) but a real right, (jut «» rent,) whether a primordial right right or statue, or of property. Poste’s Gains Inst. 359.

Obligationet ex delicto are obligations arising from the commission of a wrongful injury to the person or property of another. “Delictum” is not exactly synonymous with “tort,” for, while it includes most of the wrongs known to the common law as torts, it is also wide enough to cover some offenses (snch as theft and rob- bery) primarily injurious to the individual, but now only punished as crimes. Such acts gave rise to an obligatio, which consisted in the lia- bility to pay damages.

Obligationet quasi em contractu. Often per- sons who have not contracted with each other, under a certain state of facts, are regarded by the Roman law as if they had actually conclud- ed a convention between themselves. The legal relation which then takes place between these persons, which has always a similarity to a con- tract obligation, is therefore termed “ obligatio guati ex contractu." Snch a relation arises from the conducting of affairs without authority, (n egotiorum gestioj) from the management of property that is in common when the community arose from casualty, (communit incident ;) from the payment of what was not due, (tolutio in- dsbiti ;) from tutorship and curatorship ; and from taking possession of an inheritance. Mack- eld. Rom. Law, { 491.

Obligationet guati em delicto. This class em- braces all torts not coming under the denomina- tion of " delicto " and not having a special form of action provided for them by law. They dif- fered widely in character, and at common laW would in some cases give rise to an action on the case; in others to an action on an implied contract. Ort. Inst f| 1781-1792.

OBLIGATION.

An obligation is a legal duty, by which a person is bound to do or not to do a certain thing. Civ. Code OaL $ 1427 : Civ. Code Dnk. { 798. •

The binding power of a vow, promise, oath, or contract, or of law, civil, political, or moral, Independent of a promise; that which constitutes legal or moral duty, and which renders a person liable to coercion and pun- ishment for neglecting It Webster.

"Obligation" is the correlative of "right." Taking the latter word in its politico-ethical sense, as a power of free action lodged in a per- son, "obligation" is the corresponding duty, con- straint', ot binding force which should prevent all other persons from denying, abridging, or ob- structing such right, or interfering with its ex- ercise. And the same' is its meaning as the cor- relative of a "jut in rem." Taking "right" as meaning a "jut in peraonam," (a power, demand, claim, or privilege inherent in one person, and incident upon another,) the "obligation" is tho coercive force or control imposed upon tho per- son of incidence by the moral law and the posi- tive law, (or the moral law as recognized and sanctioned by the positive law,) constraining him to accede to the demand, render up the thing claimed, pay the money due, or otherwise perform what is expected of him with respect to the subject-matter of the right.

In a limited and arbitrary sense, it means a penal bond or "writing obligatory," that is, a bond containing a penalty, with a con- dition annexed for the payment of money or performance of covenants. Co. Litt. 172.

Obligation is (1) legal or moral duty, as op- posed to physical compulsion ; (2) a duty in- cumbent upon an individual, or a specific and limited number of individuals, as opposed to a duty imposed upon the world at large; (3) the right to enforce such a duty, (jut in pertonam,) as opposed to such a right as that of property, (jut in rem,) which avails against the world at large; (4) a bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed, for the payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like. Mozley ft Whitley.

In English expositions of the Roman law, and works upon general jurisprudence, "ob- ligation" is used to translate the Latin "o6- linatio." In this sense its meaning is much wider than as a technical term of English law. See Obligatio.

Classification. The various sorts of obliga- tions may be classified and defined as follows: They are either perfect or imperfect. A perfect obligation is one recognized and sanctioned by positive law ; one of which the fulfillment can be enforced by the aid of the law. Aycock

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

▼. Martin, 37 Ga. 124, 92 Am. Dec. 60. But if the duty created by the obligation operates only on the moral sense, without being enforced by any positive law, it is called an “imperfect ob- ligation," and creates no right of action, nor has it any legal operation. The duty of exerj rising gratitude, charity, and the other merely moral duties is an example of this kind of obli- gation. ' Civ. Code La. art. 1757 : Edwards v. Kearaey, 96 TJ. S. 600, 24 L. Ed. 793.

They are either natural or ciriJ. A natural obligation is one which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and according to natural justice. Blair v. Williams, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 41. A civil obligation is a legal tie. which gives the party with whom it is contracted the right of enforcing its performance by law. Civ. Code La. art. 1757; Poth. Obi. 173. 191.

They are either express or implied; the for- mer being those by which the obligor binds him- self in express terms to perform his obligation; while the latter are such as are raised by the implication or inference of the law from the nature of the transaction.

They are determinate or indeterminate ; the former being the caae where the thing contracted to be delivered is specified as an individual ; the latter, where it may be any one of a particu- lar class or species.

They are divisible or indivisible, according as the obligation may or may not be lawfully brok- en into several distinct obligations without the consent of the obligor.

They are joint or several; the former, where there are two or more obligors binding them-) selves jointly for the performance of the obliga- tion; the latter, where the obligors promise,- each for himself, to fulfill the engagement. - f

They are personal or real; the formerv being* the case when the obligor bintBeif is personally* liable for the performance of the engagement^ but does not directly bind his property : the lat- ter, where real estate, not the person of the obr ligor, is primarily liable for performance. ,

They are heritable or personal. The former, Is the case when the heirs and assigns of ona party may enforce the. performance against the heirs of the other; the latter, wbehtbe obligor binds himself only, not his heirs or representa-i tives. ■ ■ : 6 b ,

They are either principal or atoettortp. ■ A) principal obligation is one which Is the most im- portant object of the engagement of ■ the con* trading parties ; while an accessory obligation depends upon or is collateral to the principal. •

They may be either conjunctive or alternative^ The former is one in which the several objects In It are connected by a copulative, or in any; other manner which shows that all of them arq severally comprised in the contract. This, con- tract creates as many different obligations as there are different objects ; and the debtor; when he wishes to discharge himself, -macy force the creditor to receive them separately;' ■ But where the things which form the object of this contract are separated by a disjunctive, them the obligation is alternative. A promise to deliver.a> certain thing or to pay a specified’ sum of money, is an example of this kind of obligation. 'Civ; Code La. art. 2063;

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

They are either simple or conditional,'. Simple obligations are such as are not dependent for their execution on any . event provided, for by the parties, and which are not agreed to become void on the happening of any snch event Coh-i ditional obligations are such as are made tor depend on an uncertain event If the obliga- tion is not to take effect until the event happens,' it is a suspensive condition ; if the obligation takes effect immediately, bnt la liable to be de- feated when the event happens, it is then area- olutory condition. Civ. Code La. arts.: 2020. 2021; Moss v. Smoker. 2 Lai Ann. 989. !

They may be either tingle or penal; the lattefc1 when a penal clanse is attached to the undertake ing. to be enforced in case .the obligor fails to perform; the former, when, bo such penalty is added. '

Other compound and descriptive terms- — Moral obligation. A duty which is' valid and binding in the forum of the conscience but is not recognized by the law as adequate ,to set in motion the machinery of justice ; that is, one which rests upon ethical consideration^ alone, and is not imposed or enforced by post-f tive law. This, in French law, corresponds to joint and several liability in English law, but is applied also to tbe joint and several rights of the creditors parties to the obligation.— Pri- mary obligation. An obligation which is the principal object of the contract. For example, the primary obligation of the seller is to deliver the thing sold, and to transfer the title to it. It is distinguished from the accessory or sec- ondary obligation to pay damages for not doing so. 1 Bouv. Inst. no. 702. The words "pri- mary” and “direct,” contrasted with “secon- dary,” when spoken with reference to an obli- gation, refer to the remedy provided by law for enforcing the obligation, rather than to the character and limits of the obligation itself. Kilton v. Providence Tool Co., 22 R. I. 003, 48 Atl. 1039.— Principal obligation. That obligation which arises from the principal ob- ject of the engagement which has been contract- ed between the parties. Potb. Obi. no. 182. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Ecclesiastes 5:4, KJV]

"When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou hast vowed."

Why: The entry names the binding power of vow, promise, oath, and contract; the verse states that power directly — a vow made must be paid. Not deity speech — no flag.

[Shakespeare, Hamlet, 1601]

“Neither a borrower nor a lender be, / For loan oft loses both itself and friend.”

Why: The entry names the binding power of vow, promise, oath, or contract; Polonius's counsel is the classic literary warning on the obligation debt creates. Short verbatim quote, certain.

[Cicero, De Officiis, 44 BCE]

(paraphrase) Cicero's De Officiis is the classical treatise on duty — what one person owes to another — the philosophical ground of the entry's 'legal or moral duty.' (paraphrase)

Why: Second note on the same headword: the entry explicitly invokes moral duty alongside legal; Cicero's work is the canonical classical treatment. Marked paraphrase.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:11, KJV]

"Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."

Why: Obloquy is exposure to censure and reproach; Christ's beatitude answers exactly that exposure — reviling and evil spoken falsely. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 21:6, KJV]

"The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death."

Why: Obreptio is obtaining a thing by fraud or surprise; the proverb names the same act — treasures got by a lying tongue. Not deity speech — no flag.

OBREPTION.

Obtaining anything by fraud or surprise. Acquisition of escheats, etc., from tbe sovereign, by making false rep- resentations. Bell.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: fraud vitiates every transaction it touches]

The entry defines obreption as acquisition by fraud; the governing principle is that fraud vitiates every transaction it touches.

Why: Genuine because it states the operative legal consequence of obtaining a thing by fraud or false representations (the entry's definition), in axiom form to avoid fabricating a Latin citation.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 20:17, KJV]

"Bread of deceit is sweet to a man; but afterwards his mouth shall be filled with gravel."

Why: Obreption is acquisition by false representations; the proverb traces the same gain — deceit sweet in the getting, gravel in the keeping. Not deity speech — no flag.

"But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints; Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks."

Why: The entry defines the obscene as what shocks the moral sense by disregard of chastity; the epistle sets the scriptural standard — filthiness and foolish talking not once named among saints. Not deity speech — no flag.

OBSCENITY.

The character or quality of being obscene ; conduct tending to corrupt tbe public morals by its indecency or lewd- ness. State v. Pfenninger, 76 Mo. App. 813;

OCCUPANCY.

Occupancy Is a inode of acquiring property- by which a thing which belongs to nobody becomes the property of the person who took possession of It, with the intention of acquiring a right of owner- ship in it. Civ. Code La. art. 3412; God- dard v. WlncheU, 86 Iowa, 71, 52 N. W. 1124, 17 L. R. A. 788, 41 Am. St Rep. 481.

The taking possession of things which be- fore belonged to nobody, with an Intention of appropriating them to' one’s own use.

‘‘Possession” and "occupancy,” when applied to land, are nearly synonymous terms, and may exist through a tenancy. Thus, occupancy of a homestead, such as will satisfy the statute, may be by means other than that of actual residence on the premises by the widow or child. Walters v. People, 21 111. 17&

There is a use of the word in public-land laws, homestead laws, “occupyiqg-clafmant” laws, cas- es of landlord and tenant, and like connections, which seems to require the broader sense of possession, although there is. in most of these uses, a shade of meaning discarding any prior title as a foundation of right Perhaps both uses or views may be harmonized, by saying that in jurisprudence occupancy or occupation is pos- session, presented independent of the idea of a chain of title, of any earlier owner. Or "occu- pancy” and “occupant” might be used for as-* suming property which has no owner, and "oc- cupation and "occupier” for the more genera! idea of possession. Judge Bouvier’s definitions seem partly founded on such a distinction, and there are indications of it in English usage. It dogs not appear generally drawn in American books. Abbott.

OCCUPANT.

In a general sense. One who takes possession of a thing, of which there is no owner; one who has the actual possession or control of a thing.

In a special sense. One who takes pos- session of lands held pur autre vie, after the death of the tenant and during the life of the cestui que vie.

—General oecupant. At common law where a man was tenant pur autre viet or had an es- tate granted to himBelf only (Without mention- ing his heirs) for the life of another man, and died without alienation during the life of cestui que vie, or him by whose life it was holden, he that could first enter on the land might lawfully retain the possession, so long as cestui que vis lived, by right of occupancy, and was hence termed a .“general” or common “occupant.” 1 Steph. Comm. 415.— Special occupant. A person having a special right to enter upon and occupy' lands granted pur autre vie, on the death of the tenant, and during the life of cestui que vie. In its usual sense "occupation" is where a per- son exercises physical control over land. Thu% the lessee of a house is, in occupation of it so long as he has the power of entering into and staying there at pleasure, and of excluding all other persons (or all except one or more speci- fied persons) from the use of it. Occupation is therefore the same thing as actual possession.

The word "occupation," applied to teal proper-, ty, is, ordinarily, equivalent to "possession." In connection with other expressions, it may mean that the party should be living upon the premises ; but, standing alone, it is satisfied by actual possession. Lawrence v. Fulton, 10 Oal. 683.

2. A trade; employment; profession; busi- ness ; means of livelihood.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 4:2, KJV]

"Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful."

Why: The oeconomus is the executor/administrator; the steward's required faithfulness is the scriptural measure of that office. Not deity speech — no flag.

OF COUNSEL.

A phrase commonly ap1 plied in practice to the counsel employed by a party in a cause, and particularly to one employed to assist in the preparation or management of a cause, or its presentation on appeal, but who is not the principal at- torney of record for the party.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

OF COURSE.

Any action or step taken • in the course of Judicial proceedings which will be allowed by the court upon mere ap- plication, without any Inquiry or contest, or which may be effectually taken without even applying to the court for leave, is said to be “of course.” Stoddard v. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 2:8, KJV]

"For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God."

Why: 'Of grace' in law is what is granted by favor, not claimable as of right; the verse defines grace itself — gift, not entitlement. Not deity speech — no flag.

OF RECORD.

Recorded; entered on the records; existing and remaining in of upon the appropriate records.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 John 3:4, KJV]

"Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law."

Why: An offense is a breach of the criminal laws; the verse defines the breach itself — sin as transgression of law. Not deity speech — no flag.

OFFENSIVE.

In the law relating to nuisances and similar matters, this term means noxious, causing annoyance, discom- fort, or painful or disagreeable sensations. See Rowland v. Miller (Super. N. Y.) 15 N.

Y. Supp. 701 r Moller v. Presbyterian Hos- pital, 65 App. Div. 134, 72 N. Y. Supp. 483 ; Barrow v. Richard, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 360, 35 Am. Dec. 713. As occasionally used in crim- inal law and statutes, an “offensive weapon” Is primarily one meant and adapted for at- tack and the infliction of Injury, but prac- tically the term includes anything that would come within the description of a “deadly" or “dangerous” weapon. See State v. Dlneen, 10 Minn. 411 (Gil. 325); Rex v. Grice, 7 Car. & P. 803; Rex v. Noakes, 5 Car. & P. 326. In International law, an “of- fensive and defensive league” Is one bind- ing the contracting powers not only to aid each other In case of aggression upon ei- ther of them by a third power, but also to support and aid each other In active and ag- gressive measures against a power with which either of them may engage In war.

OFFER. 1. To bring to or before; to present for acceptance or rejection; to hold out or proffer ; to make a proposal to ; to exhibit something that may be taken or re- ceived or not. Morrison v. Springer, 15 Iowa, 346; Vincent v. Woodland Oil Co., 165 Pa. 402, 30 Atl. 991; People v. Ah Fook, 62 Cal. 494.

2. To attempt or endeavojr ; to make an effort to effect Borne object; In this sense used principally in criminal law. Com. v. Harris, 1 Leg. Gaz. R. (Pa.) 457.

3. In trial practice, to “offer” evidence is to state Its nature and purport, or to re- cite what Is expected to be proved by a giv- en witness or document, and demand Its adpilssion. Unless under exceptional circum- stances, the terra Ls not to be taken as equiv- alent to “Introduce.” See Ansley v. Meikle, 81 Iud. 260; Lyon v. Davis, 111 Ihd. 384, 12 N. E. 714 ; Harris v. OFFICE.

“Office” ls defined to be a right to exercise a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments there- unto belonging, whether public, as those of magistrates, or private, as of bailiffs, re- ceivers, or the like. 2 Bl. Comm. 36. Row- land v. New York, 83 N. Y. 372; Dailey v. State, 8 Blackf. (Iud.) 330; Blair v. Marye, 80 Va. 495; Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N. C. 202; People v. Duane, 121 N. Y. 367, 24 N.

E. 845; U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 393, 18

That function by virtue whereof a person has some employment in the affairs of an- other, whether judicial, ministerial, legisla- tive, municipal, ecclesiastical, etc. Cowell.

An employment on behalf of the govern- ment in any station or public trust, not merely transient, occasional, or Incidental. In re Attorneys’ Oaths, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 493.

The most frequent occasions to use the word arise with reference to a duty and power con- ferred on an individual by the government; and, when this is the connection, “public office” is a usual and more discriminating expression. But a power and duty may exist without im- mediate grant from government, and may be properly called an “office;” as the office of ex- ecutor, the office of steward. Here the individual acts towards legatees or towards tenants in per- formance of a duty, and in exercise of a power not derived from their consent, but devolved on him by an authority which quoad hoo is supe- rior. Abbott.

Offices may be classed as civil and military; and civil offices may be classed as political, ju- dicial, and ministerial. Political offices are such as are not connected immediately with the ad- ministration of justice, or the execution of the mandates of a superior officer. Judicial arte those which relate to the administration of jus- tice. Ministerial are those which give the of- ficer no power to judge of the matter to be done, and require him to obey the mandates of a su- perior. It is a general rule that a judicial of- fice cannot be exercised by deputy, while a min- isterial one may. Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 569.

“Office” is frequently used In the old books as an abbreviation for “inquest of office,” (q. o.)

—Lucrative office. See Lucrative. — Office- hook. Any book for the record of official or other transactions, kept under authority of the state, in public offices not connected with the courts.— Office-copy. A copy or transcript of a deed or record or any filed document made by the officer having it in custody or under his sanction, and by him sealed or certified.— Of- fice found. In English law. Inquest of office found ; the finding of certain facts by a jury on an inquest or inquisition of office. 3 Bl. Comm. 258. 259. This phrase has been adopted in American law. 2 Kent. Comm. 61. See Phillips v. Moore, 100 U. S. 212, 25 L. Ed. 603; Baker v. Shy, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 89. — Office graut. private injury, is regarded as a proceeding ema- nating from the office of the judge, and may be instituted by the mere motion of the judge. But, in practice, these suits are instituted by K' te individuals, with the permission of the or his surrogate ; and the private prosecu- tor in any such case is, accordingly, said to “promote the office of the judge.” Mosley & Whitley.— Political office. Civil offices are usually divided into three classes,— political, ju- dicial, and ministerial. Political offices are such as are not immediately connected with the ad- ministration of justice, or with the execution of the mandates of a superior, such as the presi- dent or the head of a department. Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 669; Fitzpatrick v. U. S., 7 Ct. Cl. 293.— Principal office. The principal office of a corporation is its headquarters, or the place where the chief or principal affairs and business of the corporation are transacted. Usually it is the office where the company’s books are kept, where its meetings of stockhold- ers are held, and where the directors, trustees, or managers assemble to discuss and transact the important general business of the company; but no one of these circumstances is a controll- ing test. See Jossey v. Georgia A A. Ry., 102 Ga. 706. 28 S. E. 273: Milwaukee Steamship Co. v. Milwaukee, 83 Wis. 590, 63 N. W. 839. 18 L. R. A. 353: Standard Oil Co. v. Com., 110 Ky. 821. 62 S. [Maxim: Omnia praesumuntur contra spoliatorem — all things are presumed against a despoiler or wrong-doer]

The entry quotes the leading evidence maxim that all things are presumed against a despoiler.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry, which itself calls it 'a leading maxim in the law of evidence' (Best, Ev. p. 340; Broom, Max. 938); recorded as the entry's own cited authority.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Axiom: equity will not permit a clog on the equity of redemption]

The rule protects the equity of redemption: equity will not permit a mortgagor's right to redeem to be clogged or fettered by any subsequent agreement.

Why: Genuine because 'once a mortgage, always a mortgage' is the classic statement of the anti-clogging rule; the axiom names the equitable principle the entry's rule serves rather than re-quoting the rule.

ONCE IN JEOPARDY.

A phrase used to express the condition of a person charged with crime, who has once already, by legal proceedings, been put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense. See Com. v. Fitzpatrick, 121 Pa. 109, 15 AtL 466, 1 L. R. A. 451, 6 Am. St.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — double jeopardy]

Double jeopardy: no person shall be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb for the same offense.

Why: Genuine because the entry defines the condition of one already put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense; the Fifth Amendment clause is the governing American authority for the protection.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Nahum 1:9, KJV]

"What do ye imagine against the LORD? he will make an utter end: affliction shall not rise up the second time."

Why: Once in jeopardy is the bar against a second trial for the same offense; 'affliction shall not rise up the second time' is the traditional scriptural warrant for that bar. Third-person prophecy — no flag.

[Beresford, Double Jeopardy, 1999]

(paraphrase) The thriller's entire premise turns on the rule the entry states: acquitted once of the killing by legal proceedings, she cannot be put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense again. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry: a person once already, by legal proceedings, put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense. The film dramatizes precisely this doctrine. Marked paraphrase — premise certain, no dialogue quoted.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Galatians 6:2, KJV]

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

Why: The servitude of support requires one's wall to sustain the adjoining house; the verse commands the same structure in morals — bearing another's load. Not deity speech — no flag.

ONEROUS.

A contract, lease, share, or other right is said to be “onerous” when the obligations attaching to it counter-balance or exceed the advantage to be derived from it, either absolutely or with reference to the particular possessor. Sweet.

As used in the civil law and in the systems derived from it, (French, Scotch, Spanish. Mexican.) the term also means based upon, supported by, or relating to a good and valoable consideration, i. e., one which imposes a burden or charge in return for the benefit conferred.

—Onerous cause. In Scotch law. A good and legal consideration.— Onerous contract. See Contbact.— Onerous deed. In Scotch law. A deed given for a valuable consideration. Bell . — Onerous gift. A gift made subject to certain charges imposed by the donor on the donee.— Onerons title. The charge of importing merchandise, mentioned in St. 12 Car. II. c. 28.— Ons p ro- ta andi. Burden of proving; the burden of proof. The strict meaning of the term “onus probandi" is that, if no evidence is adduced by the party on whom the burden is cast, the issue must be found against him. Davis v. Rogers, 1 Houst (Del.) 44.

OPE OONSH.IO. Lat By aid and coun- sel. A civil law term applied to accessaries, similar in import to the “aiding and abetting" .of .the common law. Often written "ope et consilio.” Burrlll.

OPEN, v. To render accessible, visible, or available; to submit or subject to examina- tion, inquiry, or review, by the removal of restrictions or impediments.

—Open a ease. In practice. To open a case is to begin it ; to make an initiatory explana- tion of its features to the court, jury, referee, etc., by outlining the nature of the transaction on which it is founded, the questions involved, and the character and general course of the evidence to be adduced.— Open a commission. To enter upon the duties under a commission, or commence to act under a commission, is so termed in English law. Thus, the judges of assise and m*» print derive their authority to act under or by virtue of commissions directed to them for that purpose ; and, when they com- mence acting under the powers so committed to them, they are said to open the commissions; and the day on which they so commence their proceedings is thence termed the “commission day of the assizes.’’ Brown. — Open a court. To open a court is to make a formal announce- ment, usually by the crier or bailiff, that its session has now begun and that the business be- fore the court will be proceeded with.— Open a credit. To accept or pay the draft of a cor- respondent who has not furnished funds. Par- dessue, no. 296. — Open a deposition. To break the seals by which it was secured, and lay it open to view, or to bring it into court ready for use.— Open a Judgment. To lift or relax the bar of finality and conclusiveness which it imposes so as to permit a re-examination of the merits of the action in which it was rendered. This is done at the instance of a party show- ing good cause why the execution of the judg- ment would be inequitable. It so far annuls the' judgment as to prevent its enforcement until the final determination upon it, but does not in the mean time release its lien upon real estate. See Insurance Co. v. Beale, 110 Pa. 321, 1 Atl. 926. —Open a rule. To restore or recall a rule which has been made absolute to its conditional state, as a rule nisi, so as to readmit of cause being shown against the rule. Thus, when a rule to show cause has been made absolute un- der a mistaken impression that no counsel had been instructed to show cause against it, it is usual for the party at whose instance the rule was obtained to consent to have the rule opened, by which all the proceedings subsequent to the day when cause ought to have been shown against it are in effect nullified, and the rule is then argued in the ordinary way. Brown.— Open a street or highway. To establish it by law and make it passable and available for public travel. See Reed v. Toledo, 18 Ohio, 161 ; Wllcoxon v. Opinio est duplex, seilioet, opinio vul- garis, orta inter graves et discretos, et «w vultum veritatis habett et opinio tantnm orta inter levee et vnlgares homi- nes, absque specie veritatis. 4 Coke, 107. Opinion is of two kinds, namely, common opinion, which springs up among grave and discreet men, and which has the appearance of truth, and opinion which springs up only among light and foolish men, without the semblance of truth.

Opinio quae favet test amen to est te- nenda. The opinion which favors a will is to be followed. 1 W. Bl. 13, arg.

OPINION. 1. In the law of evidence, opinion is an Inference or conclusion drawn by a witness from facts some of which are known to him and others assumed, or drawn from facts which, though lending probability to the inference, dd not evolve it by a pro- cess of absolutely necessary reasoning. See Lipscomb v. State, 75 Miss. 559, 23 South. 210.

An inference necessarily involving certain facts may be stated without the facts, the in- ference being an equivalent to a specification of the facts ; but, when the facts are not neces- sarily involved in the inference (e. p., when the inference may be sustained upon therefore call- ed his “option.” 1 BL Comm. 381 ; 3 Steph. Comm. 63, 64; Cowell.

In contracts. An option is a privilege existing in one person, for which he has paid money, which gives him the right to buy cer- tain merchandise or certain specified securi- ties from another person, if he chooses, at any time within an agreed period, at a fixed price, or to sell such property to such other person at an agreed price and time. If the option gives the choice of buying or not buy- ing, it is denominated a “call.” If it gives the choice of selling or not, it is called a “put” If it is a combination of both these, and gives the privilege of either buying or selling or not, it is called a "straddle” or a “spread eagle.” These terms are used on the stock-exchange. See Tenney v. Foote, 95 111. 99; Plank v. Jackson, 128 Ind. 424, 26 N. E. 568; Osgood v. Bauder, 75 Iowa, 550, 39 N. W. 887, 1 L. R. A. 655.

Entrop v. Williams, 11 Minn. 382 (Gil. 276); Struli v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 76 S.

W. 183.— General orders. Orders or rules of court, promulgated for the guidance of practi- tioners and the regulation of procedure in gen- eral, or in some general branch of its jurisdic- tion ; as opposed to a rule or an order made in an individual case ; the rules of court. — In- terlocutory order. “An order which decides not the cause, but only settles some Intervening matter relating to it; as when an order is made, on a motion in chancery, for the plaintiff to have an injunction to quiet his possession till the hearing of the cause. This or any such order, not being final, is interlocutory.” Termes de la Ley.— Money order. See Monet.— Or- der and disposition of goods and chattels. When goods are in the “order and disposition" of a bankrupt, they go to hia trustee, and have gone so since the time of James I. Wharton. —Order niai. A provisional or conditional order, allowing a certain time within which to do some required act, on failure of which, the order will be made absolute.— Order of dis- charge. In England. An order made under the bankruptcy act of 1869, by a court of bank- ruptcy, the effect of w’hich is to discharge a bankrupt from all debts, claims, or demands provable under the bankruptcy.— Order of fil- iation. An order made by a court or judge having jurisdiction, fixing the paternity of a bastard child upon a given man, and requiring him to provide for its support— Order of re- vivor. In English practice. An order as of course for the continuance of an abated suit It superseded the bill of revivor. — Restrain- ing order. In equity practice. An order which may issue upon the filing of an applica- tion for an injunction forbidding the defendant to do the threatened act until a hearing on the application can be had. Though the term is sometimes used as a synonym of “injunction,” a restraining order is properly distinguishable from an injunction, in that the former is in- tended only as a restraint upon the defendant until the propriety of granting an injunction, temporary or perpetual, can be determined, and it does no more than restrain the pn*.*e',,ugs until such determination. Wetzateln v. Boston, etc., Min. Co., 25 Mont. 135, 63 Pac. 1043 ; State v. Lichtenberg, 4 Wash. 407, 30 Pac. 716: Riggins v. Thompson, 96 Tex. 154, 71 8. W. 14. In English law, the term is special- ly applied to an order restraining the Bank of England, or any public company, from allowing any dealing with some stock or shares specified in the order. It Is granted on motion or peti- tion. Hunt. Eq. p. 216.— Speoldmc order. An order which contains matter which la ex- planatory or illustrative of the mere direction which is given by it is sometimes thus called. Puff v. Duff, 101 Cal. 1, 35 Pac. 437.— Stop or- der. The meaning of a stop order given to a broker is to wait until the' market price of the particular security reaches a specified figure, and then to “stop” the transaction by either selling or buying, as the case may be. as well as possible. ORDINANCE.

A rule established by authority ; a permanent mle of action ; a law or statute. In a more limited sense, the term is used to designate the enactments of the legislative body of a municipal corpora- tion. Citizens’ Gas Co. v. Elwood, 114 Ind. 332, 16 N. E. 624; State v. Swindell, 140 Ind. 527, 45 N. E. 700, 58 Am. St Rep. 375 ; Bills v. Goshen, 117 Ind. 22i, 20 N. E. 115, 3 I* R. A. 261; State v. Lee, 29 Minn. 445, 13 N. W. 913.

Strictly, a bill or law which might stand with the old law, and did not alter any statute in force at the time, and which became complete by the royal assent on the parliament roll,. with- out any entry on the statute roll. A bill or law which might at any time be amended by the parliament, without any statute. Hale, Com. Law. An ordinance was otherwise distinguish- ed from a statute by the circumstance that the latter required the threefold assent of king, lords, and commons, while an ordinance might he ordained by ope or two of these constituent bodies. See 4 Inst. 25.

The name has also been given to certain enactments, more general In their character than ordinary statutes, and serving as or- ganic laws-, yet not exactly to be called ‘‘con- stitutions.” Such was the “Ordinance for the government of the North-West Terri- tory,” enacted by congress In 1787.

OUT OP COURT.

He who has no legal status in court is said to be “out of court,” i, e., he is not before the court. Thus, when the plaintiff in an action, by some act of omission or commission, shows that he is unable to maintain his action, he is frequent- ly said to put himself “out of court.” Brown.

The phrase is also used with reference to agreements and transactions in regard to a pending suit which are arranged or take place between the parties or their counsel privately and without being referred to the judge or court for authorization or approval. Thus, a case which is compromised, settled, and withdrawn by private agreement of the parties, after its institution, is said to be settled “out of court" So attorneys may make agreements with reference to the con- duct of a suit or the course of proceedings therein; but if these are made “out of court,” that is, not made in open court or with the approval of the judge, it is a general rule that they will not be noticed by the court unless reduced to writing. OVERDRAW.

To draw upon a person or a bank, by bills or checks, to an amount in excess of the funds remaining to the drawer’s credit with the drawee, or to an amount greater than what is due.

The term "overdraw” has a definite and well- understood meaning. Money is drawn from the bank by him who draws the check, not by him who receives the money ; and it is drawn upon the account of the individual by whose check it is drawn, though it be paid to and for the benefit of another. No one can draw money from bank upon his own account, except by means of his own check or draft, nor can he overdraw his account with the bank in any. other manner. State v. Stiinson, 24 N. J. [2 Corinthians 8:14, KJV]

"But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want: that there may be equality."

Why: Owelty is equality effected by a money payment between coparceners; the verse ordains equality by mutual supply — 'that there may be equality.' Not deity speech — no flag.

OWNER.

The person in whom is vested the ownership, dominion, or title of property ; proprietor. Garver v. Ilawkeye Ins. Co., 69 Iowa, 202, 28 N. W. 555; Turner v. Cross, 83 Tex. 218, 18 S. W. 578, 15 L. R. A. 262; Coombs v. People, 198 111. 586, 64 N. E. 1656 ; Atwater v. Spalding, 86 Minn. 101, 90 N.

W. 370, 91 Am. St Rep. 331.

He who has dominion of a thing, real or per- sonal. corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with as he pleases, even to spoil or destroy it, as far as the law permits, unless he be prevented by some agreement or covenant which restrains his right. Bouvier.

—Equitable owner. One who is recognized in equity as the owner of property, because the real and beneficial use and title belong to him, although the bare legal title is vested in another, e. g., a trustee for his benefit.— General owner. The general owner of a thing is he who has the primary or residuary title to it: as distinguished from a special owner, who has a special interest in the same thing, amounting to a qualified ownership, such, for example, as a bailee’s lien. Farmers’ & Mechanics’ Nat. Bank v. Logan, 74 N. Y. 581.— Joint owners. Two or more persons who jointly own and hold title to property, e. g., joint tenants. — Legal own- er. One who is recognized and held respon- sible by the law as the owner of property. In a more particular sense, one in whom the legal title to real estate is vested, but who holds it in trust for the benefit of another, the latter being called the “equitable” owner.— Part own- ers. Joint owners ; co-owners ; those who have shares of ownership in the same thing, particularly a vessel.— Reputed owner. He who has the general credit or reputation of be- ing the owner or proprietor of goods is said to be the reputed owner. See Santa Cruz Rock Pav. Co. v. Lyons (Cal.) 43 Pae. 601. This phrase is chiefly used in English bankruptcy practice, where the bankrupt is styled the “re- puted owner” of goods lawfully in his possession, though the real owner may be another person. The word "reputed” has a much weaker sense than its derivation would appear to warrant : importing merely a supposition or opinion de- rived or made up from outward appearances, and often unsupported by fact. The term "re- puted owner” is frequently employed in this sense. 2 Steph. Comm. 206. — Riparian own- er. See Riparian.— Special owner. One who has a special interest in an article of prop- erty, amounting to a qualified ownership of it, such, for example, as a bailee’s lien ; as distin- guished from the general owner, who has the primary or residuary title to the same thing. Frazier v. State, 18 Tex. App. 44L

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Haggai 2:8, KJV]

"The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the LORD of hosts."

Why: The owner is he in whom dominion is vested; the verse states ownership's ultimate form — the LORD's 'mine' over silver and gold. First-person divine speech — flagged per the red-letter rule.

OWNERSHIP.

The complete dominion, title, or proprietary right in a thing or claim. See Property.

The ownership of a thing is the right of one or more persons to possess and use it to the exclusion of others. In this Code, the thing of which there may be ownership is called “property.” Civ. Code Cal. f 634.

Ownership is the right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular, to the ex- clusion of all other persons. Civ. Code La. art. 488.

Ownership is divided into perfect and imper- fect. Ownership is perfect when it is perpetual, and when the thing is unincumbered with any real right towards any other person than the owner. On the contrary, ownership is imper- fect when it is to terminate at a certain time or on a condition, or if the thing which is the object of it, being an immovable, is charged with any real right towards a third person ; as a usufruct, use, or servitude. When an immovable is subject to a usufruct, the owner of it is said to possess the naked ownership. Civ. Code La. art. 490: Maestri v. Board of Assessors, 110 La. 517, 34 South. 658.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 10:14, KJV]

"Behold, the heaven and the heaven of heavens is the LORD's thy God, the earth also, with all that therein is."

Why: Ownership is complete dominion and proprietary right; the verse ascribes that completeness to the LORD — heaven, earth, and all therein. Moses' speech, third person — no flag.

[Maxim: Paci sunt maxime contraria vis et injuria — violence and injury are the things chiefly hostile to peace]

The entry quotes the maxim that violence and injury are the things chiefly hostile to peace.

Why: Quoted in the entry from Co. Litt. 161 with the entry's own English gloss; the entry's Latin is OCR-garbled, so the standard form is recorded with the gloss rather than presented as verbatim from a clean text.

PACIFI&ATION.

PACT.

A bargain ; compact ; agreement This word is used in writings on Roman law and on general Jurisprudence as the English form of the Latin “pactum " (which see.)

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

—Nude pact. A translation of the Latin "nudum pactum," a bare or naked pact, that is. r promise or agreement made without any consideration on the other side, which is therefore not enforceable.— Pact do non alienan- do. An agreement not to alienate1 incumbered (particularly mortgaged) property. This stipu- lation, sometimes found in mortgages made in Louisiana, and derived from the Spanish law, binds the mortgagor not to sell or incumber the mortgaged premises to the prejudice of the mortgagee ; it does not avoid a sale made to a third person, but enables the mortgagee to pro- ceed directly against the mortgaged property in a proceeding against the mortgagor alone and without notice to tbe purchaser. PARAMOUNT.

Above; upwards. That which is superior; usually applied to the highest lord of the fee of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as distinguished from the metne (or intermediate) lord. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 135.

In the law of real property, the term "paramount title” properly denotes one which is superior to the title with which it is compared, in the sense that the former is the source or origin of the latter. It Is, however, frequently used to denote a title which is simply better or stronger than an- other, or will prevail over It But this use is scarcely correct, unless the PARAPHERNALIA.

In the civil law.

Tile separate property of a married woman, other than that which is Included in her dowry, or do*.

The separate property of the wife is di- vided into dotal and extradotal. Dotal prop- erty is that which the wife brings to the husband to assist him in bearing the ex- penses of the marriage establishment. Ex- tradotal property, otherwise called “paraphernal property,” is that which forms no part of the dowry. Civ. Code La. art. 2335.

The wife's paraphernalia shall not be sub-, ject to the debts or contracts of the hus- band, and shall consist of the apparel of her- Self and her children, her watch, and orna- ments suitable to her condition in life, and all such articles of personalty as have been given to her for her own use and comfort Code Ga. 1882, | 1773.

In English law. Those goods which a woman is allowed to have, after the death of her husband, besides her dotcer, .consist- ing of her apparel and ornaments, suitable to her rank and degree. 2 Bl. Comm. 436.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 31:16, KJV]

"She considereth a field, and buyeth it: with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard."

Why: Paraphernalia is the wife's separate property beyond her dowry; the virtuous woman buying a field with the fruit of her hands is the wife's separate economic agency in scriptural form. Not deity speech — no flag.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 8:17, KJV]

"And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."

Why: Parcenary is joint heirship — holding by parceners together; 'joint-heirs with Christ' is the concept's scriptural form. Not deity speech — no flag.

PARENS.

Lat. In Roman law. A par- ent; originally and properly only the father or mother of the person spoken of ; but also, by an extension of its meaning, any relative, male or female, in the line of direct ascent.

—Parens patriae. Parent of the country. In England, the king. In the United States, the state, as a sovereign, is the parent patriot.

PARDON, An act of grace, proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the Individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has com- mitted. U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet. 160, 8 L. Ed. 040 ; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 380, 18

L. Ed. 366; Moore v. State, 43 N. J. Law, 241, 39 Am. Rep. 558; Rich v. Chamberlain, 104 Mich. 436, 62 N. W. 584, 27 L. R. A. 573; Edwards v. Com., 78 Va. 39, 49 Am, Rep. 377.

“Pardon’’ is to be distinguished from “amnes- ty.” The former applies only to the individual, releases him from the punishment fixed by law for his specific offense, but does not affect the criminality of the same or similar acts when performed by other persons or repeated by the same person. The fatter term denotes an act of grace, extended by the government to all per- sons who may come within its terms, and which obliterates the criminality of past acts done, and declares that they shall not be treated as pun- ishable.

—Conditional pardon. A conditional pardon is one granted on the condition that it shall only endure until the voluntary doing of some act by the person pardoned, or that it shall be revoked by a subsequent act on his part, as, that he shall leave the state and never return. Ex parte Janes, 1 Nev. 319; State v. Wolfer, 53 Minn. 135, 54 N. W. 1065, 19 L. R. A. 783, 39 Am. St. Rep. 582; State v. Barnes. 32 S.

PARENT.

The lawful father or the mother of a person. Appeal of Gibson, 154 Mass. 378, 28 N. E. 296. This word 'is dis- tinguished from “ancestors” in including only the immediate progenitors of the per- son, while the latter embraces his more re- mote relatives in the ascending line.

PARENTELA, or de parentela se tollere, in old English law, signified a renunciation of one’s kindred and family. This was, ac- cording to ancient custom, done in open court, before the Judge, and in the presence of twelve men, who made oath that they believed it was done for a Just cause. We read of it In the laws of Henry I. After such abjuration, the person was — Parish apprentice. In English law. The children of parents unable to maintain them may, by law, be apprenticed, by the guardians or overseers of their parish, to such persons as may be willing to receive them as apprentices. Such children are called "parish apprentices.", 2 Steph. Comm. 230.— Parish church. This expression has various significations. It is ap-' plied sometimes to a select body of Christians, forming a local spiritual association, and some- times to the building in which the public wor- ship of the inhabitants of a parish is celebrat- ed; but the true legal notion Of a parochial church is a consecrated place, having attached to it the rights of burial and the administration of the sacraments. Story.L, Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Crunch. 326, 3 L. Ed.. 735.— Farlsh clerk. In English law. An Officer, in tonner times often in holy orders, and appointed to officiate* at the altar; now his duty consists chiefly in. making responses in church tp the minister.. By common law he has a freehold in his office, but it seems now to be falling into desuetude. ' 2 Steph, Comm. 700 ; Mozley & Whitley.— Par- ish constable. A petty constable exercising ' his functions within a given parish. Mozley &, Whitley.— Pariah court, The name of a court . established in each parish in Louisiana, and cor- responding to the county courts or common pleas courts in the other states. PARSON.

The rector of a church; one that has full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. The appellation of “par- son,” however It may be depreciated by familiar, clownish, and Indiscriminate use, is the most legal, most beneficial, and most honorable title that a parish priest can en- joy, because such a one, Sir Edward Coke observes, and he only, Is said vicem sen per- sonam ecclesiw gcrere, (to represent and bear the person of the church.) 1 Bl. Comm. 384.

—Parson imparsonee. In English law. A clerk or parson in full possession of a benefice. Cowell.— Parson mortal. A rector instituted and inducted for his own life. But any collegiate or conventional body, to whom a church was forever .appropriated, was termed “per sons immortaUt." Wharton.

5e apparatus — Carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Jeremiah 3:15, KJV]

"And I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding."

Why: The parson is the rector with cure of souls; the verse is the giving of pastors to feed the flock with knowledge. First-person divine speech — flagged per the red-letter rule.

PARTAGE.

In French law. A division made between co-proprietors of a particular estate held by them In common. It is the operation by means of which the goods of a succession are divided among the co-heirs ; while licltation (q. v.) Is an adjudication to the highest bidder of objects which are not divisible. Duverger.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 15:12, KJV]

"And the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living."

Why: Partage is the division of the estate among co-heirs; the parable opens on exactly that division — the living divided between the sons. Christ's verbatim parable words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Parte quacumque integrante sublata, tollitur totum — an integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away]

The entry quotes Coke's maxim that an integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 8 Coke, 41; recorded as the entry's own cited authority.

[Maxim: Partem aliquam recte intelligere nemo potest, antequam totum, iterum atque iterum, perlegerit — no one can rightly understand any part before he has read the whole, again and again]

The entry quotes Coke's hermeneutic rule that no one can rightly understand a part before reading the whole again and again.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 3 Coke, 52; it states the whole-instrument rule of construction, recorded as the entry's own cited authority.

PARTIES.

The persona who take part in the performance of any act, or who are directly interested in any affair, eontract, or conveyance, or who are actively concerned in the proeeeution and defense of any legal proceeding. U. S. v. Henderlong (C. C.) 102 Fed. 2; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 672, 18

L. Ed. 427; Green v. Bogue, 158 U. S. 478, 15 Sup. Ct. 975, 39 L. Ed. 1061; Hughes v. Jones, 116 N. Y. 67. 22 N. E. 446, 5 L. R. A 637, 15 Am. St. Rep. 386. See also Babtt.

In the Roman civil law. the parties were designated as “actor" and “rcu».” In the com- mon law, they are called "plaintiff" and “defend- ant ;” in real actions, “demandant” and “tenant;” in equity, “complainant” or “plaintiff" and “defendant;” in Scotch law, “pursuer" and “defender;” in admiralty practice, “libelant" and “respondent ;” in appeals, “appellant” and “respondent," sometimes, “plaintiff in error” and "defendant in error; in criminal proceedings, “prosecutor” and “prisoner.” Classification. Formal parties are those who have no interest in the controversy between the immediate litigants, but have an interest in the subject-matter which may be conveniently settled in tbe suit, and thereby prevent further litigation; they may be made parties or not, at the option of the complainant. Clmdbourne v. Coe, 51 Fed. 479, 2 C. C. A. 327.— Acces- sary parties are those parties who have such an interest in the subject-matter of a suit in equity, or whose rights are so involved in the contro- versy, that no complete and effective decree can be made, dispopiqg of the matters in issue and dispensing complete justice, unlew they are be- fore the court in such a manner as to entitle them to be heard in vindication or protection of their interests. See Chandler v. Ward, 188 111. 322, 58 N. E. 919; Phoenix Nat. Bank v. Cleveland Co., 58 Hun, 606, 11 N. Y. Supp. 873; Chadbourne v. Coe, 51 Fed. 480, 2 C.

C. A. 327; Burrill v. Garst, 19 R. I. 38. 31 Atl. 436; Castle v. Madison, 113 Wis. 346, 89 N. W. 156; Iowa County Sup'rs v. Mineral Point R. Co., -24 Wis. 132. Nominal parties are those who are joined as plaintiffs or de- fendants. not because they have any real in- terest in tbe subject-matter or because any relief is demanded as against them, but merely because tbe technical rules of pleading require their presence on the record. It should be noted that some courts make a further distinction between “necessary" parties and “indispensable” parties. Thus, it is said that the supreme court of the United States divides parties in equity suits into three different classes: (1) Formal parties, who have no interest in the controversy between the immediate litigants, but have such an interest in the subject-matter as may be conveniently settled in the suit, and thereby prevent further litigation ; (2) necessary par- ties, who have an interest in the controversy, but whose interests are separable from those or the parties before the court, and will not be directly affected by a decree which does com- plete and full justice between them; (3) in- dispensable parties, who not only have an in- terest in the subject-matter of the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting their interests or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Ilieklin v. Marco. 56 Fed. 552, 6 C. C. A. 10. citing Shields v. Barrow. 17 How. 139, 15 L. Ed. 158; Ribon v. Railroad Co.,. 16 Wall. 450. 21 L. Ed. 367; Williams v. Bankhead, 19 Wall. 571. 22 L. Ed. 184; Kendig v. Dean, 97 U. S. 425, 24 L. Ed. 1061. —Parties and privies. Parties to a deed or contract are those with whom the deed or con- tract is actually made or entered into. By the term “privies,” as applied to contracts, is fre- quently meant those between whom the contract is mutually binding, although not literally par- ties to such contract. Thus, in the case of a lease, the lessor and lessee are both parties and privies, the contract being literally made be- tween the two, and also being mutually bind- ing; but, if the lessee assign his interest to a third party, then a privity arises between the assignee and tbe original lessor, although such assignee is not literally a party to the original lease. —Owelty of partition. See Owelty. Par- tition, deed of. In conveyancing. A species of primary or original conveyance between two or more joint tennnts. coparceners, or tenants in common, by which they divide the lands so held among them in severalty, each taking a distinct part. 2 HI. Comm. 323, 324.— Partition of a ■accession. The partition of a succession is the division of the effects of which the succes- sion is composed, among all the co-heirs, ac- cording to their respective rights. Partition is Voluntary or judicial. It is voluntary when it is made among all the co-heirs present and of age, and by their mutual consent. It is ju- dicial when it is made by the authority of the court, and according to the formalities prescrib- ed by law. Every partition is either definitive or provisional. Definitive partition is that which is made in a permanent and irrevocable manner. Provisional partition is that which is made provisionally, either of certain things be- fore the rest can be divided, or even of every- thing that is to be divided, when the parties are not In a situation to make an irrevocable par- tition. PARTY.

A person concerned or having or taking part in any affair, matter, transac- tion, or proceeding, considered Individually. See Pasties.

The term “parties” includes all persons who are directly interested in the subject-matter in issue, who have a right to make defense, control the proceedings, or appeal from the judgment Strangers are persons who do not possess these rights. Hunt v. Haven, 52 N. H. 162.

"Party” is a technical word, and has a pre- cise meaning in legal parlance. By it is under- stood he or they by or against whom a suit is brought, whether in law or equity ; the party plaintiff or defendant, whether composed of one or more individuals, and whether natural or legal persons, (they are parties in the writ, and parties on the record ;) and all others who may be affected by the suit, indirectly or consequen- tially, are persons interested, but not parties. Merchants’ Bank v. Cook, 4 Pick. 405.

—Party and party. This phrase signifies the contending parties in an action ; i. e.. the plain- tiff and defendant, as distinguished from the at- torney and his client. It is used in connection with the subject of costs, which are differently taxed between party and party and between at- torney and client. Brown.— Real party. In statutes requiring suits to be

4. The term also means to examine into anything and then authoritatively determine the disputed questions which it involves. In this sense a jury is said to pass upon the rights or issues in litigation before them.

5. In the language of conveyancing, the term means to move from one person to an- other; to be transferred or conveyed from one owner to another; as in the phrase “the word ‘heirs’ will pass the fee.”

6. To publish; utter; transfer; circulate; impose fraudulently. This is the meaning of the word when the offense of passing coun- terfeit money or a forged paper Is spoken of.

“Pass,” “utter,” "publish.” and “sell” are in some respects convertible terms, and. in a given case, “pass” may include utter, publish, and sell. The words “uttering” and “passing,” qsed of notes, do not necessarily import that they are transferred as genuine. The words include any delivery of a note to another for value, with in- tent that it shall be put into circulation as money. U. S. v. Nelson, 1 Abb. (U. 8.) 135, Fed. Cas. No. 15,861.

Passing a paper is putting it off in payment or exchange. Uttering it is a declaration that it is good, with an intention to pass, or an offer to pass it.

PASS, n. Permission to pass; a license to go or come; a certificate, emanating from authority, wherein it is declared that a des- ignated person is permitted to go beyond cer- tain boundaries which, without such author- ity, he could not lawfully pass. Also a ticket issued by a railroad or other transportation company, authorizing a designated person to travel free on its lines, between certain points or for a limited time.

PATENT, adj. Open; manifest; evident; unsealed. Used in this sense In such phrases as “patent ambiguity,” “patent writ,” “letters patent" —Letters patent. Open letters, as distin- guished from letters close. An instrument proceeding from the government, and conveying a right, authority, or grant to an individual, as a' patent for a tract of land, or for the exclu- sive right to make and sell a new invention. Familiarly termed a “patent.” See Interna- tional Tooth Crown Co. v. Hanks Dental Ass'n (C. C.) Ill Fed. 918.— Patent ambiguity. See Ambiguity.— Patent defeet. In sales of personal property, one which is plainly visible or which can be discovered by such an inspec- tion as would be made in the exercise of ordi- nary care and prudence. See Lawson v. Baer, 52 N. C. 461.— Patent writ, in old practice. An open writ ; one not closed or sealed up. See Close Writs.

PATENT, n. A grant of some privilege, property, or authority, made by the govern- ment or sovereign of a country to one or more Individuals. Phil. Pat. 1.

In English law. A grant by the sover- eign to a subject or subjects, under the great seal, conferring some authority, title, fran- chise, or property; termed “letters patent” from being delivered open, and not closed up from Inspection.

In American law. The Instrument by which a state or government grants public lands to an Individual.

A grant made by the government to an In- ventor, conveying and securing to him the exclusive right to make and sell his invention for a term of years. Atlas Glass Co. v. Simonds Mfg. Co., 102 Fed. 647, 42 C. C. A. 554 ; Society Anonyme v. General Electric Co.

—Patent bill office. The attorney general's patent bill office is the office in which were formerly prepared the drafts of all letters patent issued in England, other than those for inventions. The draft patent was called a “bill,” and the officer who prepared It was called the “clerk of the patents to the queen’s attorney and solic- itor general.” Sweet.— Patent of precedence. Letters patent granted, in England, to such bar- risters as the crown thinks fit to honor with that mark of distinction, whereby they are en- titled to such rank and preaudience as are as- signed in their respective patents, which is some- times next after the attorney general, but more usually next after her majesty’s counsel then be- ing. These rank promiscuously with the king's (or queen’s) counsel, but are not the sworn serv- ants of the crown. 3 Bl. Comm. 28; 3 Steph. Comm. 274.— Patent-office. In the adminis- trative system of the United States, this is one of the bureaus of the department of the interior. It has charge of the issuing of patents to inven- tors and of such business as is connected there- with.—Patent-right. A right secured by pa- tent; usually meaning a right to the exclusive manufacture and sale of an invention or patent- ed article. Avery v. Wilson (C. C.) 20 Fed. 856; Crown Cork & Seal Co. v. State, 87 Md. 687, 40 Atl. 1074, 53 L. R. A. 417: Com. v. Central, etc., Tel. Co.. 145 Pa. 121, 22 Atl. 841, 27 Am. St. Rep. 677. — Patent-right

[Maxim: Pater is est quem nuptiae demonstrant — the father is he whom the marriage points out]

The entry quotes the paternity presumption: the father is he whom the marriage points out.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 1 Bl. Comm. 446, Tate v. Penne, and the Digest; it states the presumption of paternity for children born in wedlock, recorded as the entry's own cited authorities.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 6:9, KJV]

"After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name."

[Shakespeare, The Winter's Tale, 1611]

(paraphrase) Leontes doubting his paternity of the newborn Perdita and denying her — the living drama of the entry's maxim 'pater is est quem nuptiae demonstrant' (the father is he whom the marriage points out). (paraphrase)

Why: The entry's paternity presumption is the hinge of Leontes's jealousy. Marked paraphrase.

PATERFAMILIAS.

The father of a family.

In Roman law. The bead or master of a family.

This word is sometimes employed, in a wide sense, as equivalent to aui juria. A person aui juris is called “ paterfamiliaa ” even when under the age of puberty. In the narrower and more common use, a paterfamiliaa is any one invest- ed with poteataa over any person. It is thus as applicable to a grandfather as to a father. Hunter, Rom. Law, 49.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Joshua 24:15, KJV]

"And if it seem evil unto you to serve the LORD, choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but as for me and my house, we will serve the LORD."

Why: The paterfamilias is the head and master of the family, deciding for the house; Joshua's declaration — 'as for me and my house' — is that headship exercised. Joshua's speech, not deity speech — no flag.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 36:7, KJV]

"So shall not the inheritance of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe: for every one of the children of Israel shall keep himself to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers."

Why: Paterna paternis sends paternal estates to paternal heirs; the verse keeps each inheritance to the tribe of the fathers — the paternal line preserved. Third-person command — no flag.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 6:4, KJV]

"And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

Why: Paternal power is the authority lawfully exercised by parents; the verse states its scriptural measure and bound — nurture, not provocation. Not deity speech — no flag.

PATERNITY.

The fact of being a fa- ther; the relationship of a father.

The Latin “patcrnitas" Is used in the can- on law to denote a kind of spiritual relation- ship contracted by baptism. Hetnecc. Elem. lib. 1, tit. 10, 1 161, note.

[Maxim: Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori]

Horace's line — 'it is sweet and fitting to die for one's country' — is the classical world's supreme utterance on patria as the country that commands duty; it illuminates the entry's 'country' sense.

Why: The entry defines patria as 'the country.' The Horatian maxim is the single most famous classical statement containing the word, and it genuinely illuminates patria-as-country as an object of obligation. Latin quoted...

PATRIA POTESTAS.

Lat In Roman law. Paternal authority; the paternal pow- er. This term denotes the aggregate of those peculiar powers and rights which, by the civil law of Rome, belonged to the head of a family In respect to his wife, children, (nat- ural or adopted,) and any more remote de- scendants who sprang from him through males only. Anciently, It was of very ex- tensive reach, embracing even the power of life and death, but was gradually curtailed, until finally It amounted to little more than a right In the paterfamilias to hold as his own any property or acquisitions of one un- der his power. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 589.

Patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocit&te, eonaiatere. Paternal power should ponsist [or be exercised] In affection, not in atrocity.

[Law: the common-law offense of breach of the peace and modern disorderly-conduct statutes]

The king's peace — the public order the state guarantees — is the ancestor of the modern common-law and statutory offense of breach of the peace (disorderly conduct).

Why: Genuine lineage: the entry itself names the pax regis as the peace government maintains; breach of that peace is the direct doctrinal descendant, still charged today.

Why: Pax regis is the sovereign's guaranteed public peace — the security of life and property under law. The apostolic instruction names exactly that peace (a quiet and peaceable life under authority) as the thing to seek....

PAY.

To pay is to deliver to a creditor the value of a debt, either in money or in goods, for his acceptance, by which the debt is discharged. Beals v. Home Ins. Co., 36 N, Y. 522.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

PAYABLE.

A sum of money is said to be payable when a person is under an obliga- tion to pay It. “Payable” may therefore sig- nify an obligation to pay at a future time, but, when used without qualification, “pay- able" means that the debt is payable at once, as opposed to “owing.” Sweet And see First Nat. Bank v. Greenville Nat Bank, 84 Tex. 40, 19 S. W. 334; Easton v. Hyde, 13 Minn. 91 (Gil. 83).

[Law: UCC § 3-108 — payable on demand vs. payable at a definite time]

The entry distinguishes 'payable' (due now) from 'owing' (due in future); negotiable-instruments law codifies exactly this as 'payable on demand' versus 'payable at a definite time.'

Why: Genuine and direct: the entry's whole point is the timing distinction, and UCC § 3-108 is the statute that draws it for notes and drafts. No hop.

PAYEE.

In mercantile law. The per- son in whose favor a bill of exchange, prom- issory note, or check is made or drawn; the- person to whom or to whose order a bill, note, or check is made payable. 3 Kent, Comm. 75.

PAYEB, ox PAYOR. One who pays, or who is to make a payment; particularly the person who is to make payment of a bill or note. Correlative to “payee.”

[Law: UCC Article 3 — the payee as the person entitled to enforce a negotiable instrument (UCC § 3-301)]

The payee of a bill, note, or check is the party entitled to enforce the instrument under negotiable-instruments law.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the payee of mercantile paper; UCC Article 3 governs exactly who may enforce such paper. Direct mapping.

PAYMASTER.

An officer of the army or navy whose duty is to keep the pay-ac- counts and pay the wages of the officers and men. Any official charged with the disburse- ment of public money.

PEACE.

As applied to the affairs of a state or nation peace may be either external or Internal. In the former case, the term denotes the prevalence of amicable relations and mutual good will between the particu- lar society and all foreign powers. In the latter case, it means the tranquility, securi- ty, nnd freedom from commotion or disturb- ance which is the sign of good order and harmony and obedience to the laws among all the members of the society. [Law: common-law prohibition of forcible entry; modern unlawful-detainer statutes]

'Peaceable entry' and 'peaceable possession' are defined against their opposite: the common law forbade forcible entry on lands, a prohibition surviving in modern unlawful-entry and unlawful-detainer statutes.

But the women, and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the spoil thereof, shalt thou take unto thyself; and thou shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies, which the LORD thy God hath given thee.

Why: Pelfre is booty — spoil of war. The verse is the law of war's own rule of spoil: what may be taken and eaten. Filed as God's spoken command, hence deity verbatim.

PEKAL.

Punishable; Inflicting & pun- ishment; containing a penalty, or relating to a penalty.

—Penal action. In practice. An action up- on a penal statute; an action for the recoveij of a penalty given by statute. 3 Steph. 535, 536. Distinguished from a popular or gui tam action, in which the action is brought by the informer, to whom part of the penalty goes. A penal action or information is brought by an officer, and the penalty goes to the king. 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 25, note; 2 Archb. Pr. 188. But in American law, the term includes actions brought by informers or other private persons, as well as those instituted by governments or public officers. In a broad sense, the term has been made to include all actions in which there may be a recovery of exemplary or vindictive damages, as suits for libel and slander, or in which special, double, or treble damages are given by statute, such as actions to recover money paid as usury or lost in gaming. See Bailey v. Dean, 5 Barb. (N. YJ 303: Ashley v. Frame, 4 Kan. App. 265, 45 Pac. 927 ; Cole v. Groves, 134 Mass. 472. But in a more par- ticular sense It means (1) an action on a stat- ute which gives a certain penalty to be recover- ed by any person who will sue for it, (In re Barker, 56 Vt. 20.) or (2) an action in which the judgment against the defendant is in the nature of a fine or is intended as a punishment, actions in which the recovery is to be compensa- tory in its purpose and effect not being penal actions but civil suits, though they may cany special damages by statute. See Moller v. U. S., 57 Fed. 490, 6 C. C. A. 459; Atlanta v. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works, 127 Fed. 23. 61 C. C. A. 387. 64 L. R. A. 721.— Penal Mil. An instrument formerly in use, by which a party bound himself to pay a certain sum or sums of money, or to do certain acts, or, in default thereof, to pay a certain specified sum by way of penalty ; thence termed a “penal sum.” These instruments have been superseded by the use of a bond in a penal sum, with con- ditions. Brown.— Penal bend. A bond prom- ising to pay a named sum of money (the pen- alty) with a condition underwritten that, if a stipulated collateral thing, other than the pay- ment of money, be done or forborne, as the case may be. the obligation shall be void. Burn- side v. Wand, 170 Mo. 531, 71 S. W. 337. 62 L. R. A. 427.— Penal clanse. A penal clause is a secondary obligation, entered Into for the purpose of enforcing the performance of a primary obligation. Civ. Code La. art. 2117. Also a clause in a statute declaring a penalty for a violation of the preceding clauses.— Penal laws. Those which prohibit an act and impose n penalty for the commission of it. 2 Cro. Jac. 415. Strictly and properly speaking, a penal law is one imposing a penalty or punishment (and properly a pecuniary fine or mulct) for some offense of a public nature or wrong com- mitted against the state. Sackett v. Sackett, 8 Tick. (Mass.) 320; Kilton v. Providence Tool Co.. 22 R. I. 605. 48 Atl. 1039; Drew v. Rus- sell. 47 Vt. 252: Nebraska Nat. Bank v.

Walsh, 68 Ark. 433, 59 8. W. 952, 82 Am. St Rep. 301. Strictly speaking, statutes giving a private action against a wrongdoer are not pe- nal in their nature, neither the liability imposed nor the remedy given being penal. If the wrong done ie to the Individual, the law riving him a right of action ia remedial, rather than penal, though the sum to be recovered may be called a "penalty*’ or may consist in double or treble damages. See Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Snp. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123 ; Diver- sey v. Smith. 103 111. 390. 42 Am. Ren, 14; fuilinan v. P^rkhard, 41 Misc. Rep. 321, 84

N. Y. Supp. 825; People v. Common Council of Bay City, 36 Mich. 189.— Penal servitude, in English criminal law, is a punishment which consists in keeping an offender in confinement, and compelling him to labor. Steph. Crirn. Dig. 2.— Penal atatntea. See “ penal laic*,” supra. — Penal sum. A sum agreed upon in a bond, to be forfeited if the condition of the bond is not fulfilled.

PEN ALTY. 1. The sum of money which the obligor of a bond undertakes to pay by way of penalty, in the event of his omitting to perform or carry out the terms imposed upon him by the conditions of the bond. Brown; Tayloe v. Sandiford, 7 Wheat 13, 5 L. Ed. 384 ; Watt v. Sheppard, 2 Ala. 445.

A penalty is an agreement to pay a greater sum, to secure the payment of a less sum. It is conditional, and can be avoided by the pay- ment of the less sum before the contingency agreed upon shall happen. By what name it is called is immaterial. Henry v. Thompson, Mi- nor (Ala.) 209, 227.

2. A punishment; a punishment imposed by statute as a consequence of the commis- sion of a certain specified offense. Lancas- ter v. Richardson, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 136; Peo- ple v. Nedrow, 122 111. 363, 13 N. E. 533; Iowa v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (C. C.) 37 Fed. 497, SLR. A 554.

The terms “fine.” "forfeiture,” and "penalty” are often used loosely, and even confusedly ; but, when a discrimination is made, the word “penalty” is found to be generic in its charac- ter, including both fine ana forfeiture. A “fine is a pecuniary penalty, and is commonly (per- haps always) to be collected by suit in some form. A “forfeiture” is a penalty by which one loses his rights and Interest in his proper- ty. Gosselink v. Campbell, 4 Iowa, 300.

3. The term also denotes money recover- able by virtue of a statute imposing a pay- ment by way of punishment

[Maxim: Penal statutes are to be strictly construed]

The entry defines actions on penal statutes; such statutes are governed by the canon that penal laws are strictly construed.

Why: Genuine: the strict-construction canon is the named rule governing exactly the penal actions the entry defines. Kept in loose maxim form; no case citation invented.

PENANCE.

[Maxim: Pendente lite nihil innovetur]

The entry's maxim — pendente lite nihil innovetur, 'during litigation nothing new should be introduced' — is the foundation of lis pendens: a pending suit over property is notice to the world, so no new interest can be created to defeat it.

Why: Genuine: the footnote identifies the governing principle the entry itself quotes, and names the living doctrine (lis pendens, with state lis-pendens statutes) built on it. PENDENCY and PENDENS left bare as twins.

[Richard Lovelace, "To Althea, from Prison", 1642]

'Stone walls do not a prison make, / Nor iron bars a cage' — Lovelace, writing from actual confinement, states the canonical literary truth that the penitentiary is not its walls; it illuminates what the entry's 'prison or place of punishment' is and is not.

Why: Entry defines the penitentiary as a prison/place of punishment. The Lovelace couplet is verbatim-certain and is the classic literary statement on imprisonment. Genuinely illuminating.

[Law: 42 U.S.C. § 1994 (Peonage Abolition Act of 1867); U.S. Const. amend. XIII]

Enforced servitude to work out a debt was abolished by the Peonage Abolition Act — the very statute (Rev. St. § 5526) the entry cites — under the Thirteenth Amendment's prohibition of involuntary servitude.

Why: Genuine and direct: the entry defines peonage and cites the federal statute against it; the footnote gives the statute's modern codification and its constitutional root. No hop.

[Scripture] — Scripture

The word “people” may have various significa- tions according to the connection in which it is used. When we speak of the rights of the peo- ple, or of the government of the people by faw, or of the people as a non-political aggregate, we mean all the inhabitants of the state or nation, without distinction as to sex, age, or otherwise. But when reference is made to the people as the repository of sovereignty, or as the source of governmental power, or to' popular govern- ment. We are in fact speaking of that selected and limited class of citizens to whom the con- stitution accords the elective franchise and the right of participation in the offices of govern- ment. [Law: the Rule in Shelley's Case (1581)]

Taking 'by the form of the gift' rather than by operation of law is the pivot of the Rule in Shelley's Case: where the ancestor takes a freehold with remainder to his heirs, the heirs take by descent, not per formam doni.

Why: Genuine: the rule's whole point is the contrast the phrase names — form-of-the-gift taking versus taking by descent. The entry cites 2 Bl. Comm. on the phrase; Shelley's Case is the doctrine built on it.

[Law: negligence per se]

'By itself; inherently' is the term of art in negligence per se: violation of a safety statute is negligence as a matter of law, without further proof of unreasonableness.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the bare phrase; negligence per se is the leading doctrine employing it as a term of art. Framed as the doctrine, not a redefinition.

PER STIRPES.

Lat By roots or stocks; by representation. This term, de- rived from the civil law, is much used in the law of descents and distribution, and de- notes that method of dividing an intestate es- tate where a class or group of distributees take the share which their stock (a deceased ancestor) would have been entitled to, taking thus by their right of representing such an- cestor, and not as so many individuals ; while other heirs, who stand in equal degree with such ancestor to the decedent, take each a share equal to his. PERJURY.

In criminal law. The will- ful assertion as to a matter of fact, opinion, belief, or knowledge, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding as part of his evidence, either upon oath or in any form allowed by law to be substituted for an oath, whether such evidence is given in open court, or in ■n affidavit, or otherwise, such assertion be- ing known to such witness to be false, and being Intended by him to mislead the court. Jury, or person bolding the proceeding. 2 Whart. Crim. Law, | 1244; Herring v. State, 119 Ga. 709, 46 S. E. 876; Beecher v. Ander- son, 46 Mich. 543, 8 N. W. 539; Schmidt v.

Witherick, 29 Minn. 156, 12 N. W. 448; State v. Simons, 30 Vt. 620; MUler v. State, 15 Fla. 585; Clark v. Clark, 51 N. J. Eq. 404, 26 Atl. 1012; Hood v. State, 44 Ala. 81.

Perjury shall consist in willfully, knowingly, absolutely, and falsely swearing, either with or without laying the hand on the Holy Evangelist of Almighty God, or affirming, in a matter mate- rial to the issue or point in question, in some judicial proceeding, by a person to whom a lawful oath or affirmation is administered. Code Ga. 1882, g 4460.

Every person who, having taken an oath that he will testify, declare, depose, or certi% truly before any competent tribunal, officer, or per- son, in any of the cases in which such an oath may by law be administered, willfully, and con- trary to such oath, states as truth any material matter which he knows to be false, is guilty of perjury. Pen. Code Cal. § 118. .....

The willful giving, under oath, in a judicial proceeding or course of justice, of false testimony material to the issue or point of inquiry. 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 1015.

Perjury, at common law, is the taking of a willful false oath by one who, being lawfully sworn by a competent court to depose the truth in any judicial proceeding, swears absolutely and falsely in a matter material to the point in issue, whether he believed or not.” Comm. v. Powell, 2 Mete. (Ky.) 10; Cothran v. State, 39 Miss. 541.

It will be observed that, at common law, the crime of perjury can be committed only in the course of a suit or judicial proceeding. But statutes have very generally extended both the definition and the punishment of this offense to willful false swearing in many different kinds of affidavits and depositions, such as those re- quired to be made in tax returns, pension pro- ceedings, transactions at the custom house, and various other administrative or non-judicial pro- ceedings.

PETITION.

A written address, embody- ing an application or prayer from the person or persons preferring it, to the power, body, or person to whom it is presented, for the exercise of his or their authority in the re- dress of some wrong, or the grant of some favor, privilege, or license.

■ In practice. An application made to a court ex parte, or where there are no parties Bl.La.w Dict.(2d Ed.)— 67 in opposition, praying for the exercise of the judicial powers of the court in relation, to some matter which is not the subject for a suit or action, or for authority to do some act which requires the sanction of the court ; as for the appointment of a guardian, for leave to sell trust property, etc.

The word “petition” is generally used in ju- dicial proceedings to describe an application in writing, in contradistinction to a motion, which may be viva voce. Bergen v. Jones, 4 Mete. (Mass.) 371.

In the practice of some of the states, the word “petition” is adopted as the name of that initiatory pleading In an action which is elsewhere called a “declaration" or “com- plaint” See Code Ga. 1882, § 3332.

In equity practice. PIRACY.

In criminal law. A robbery or forcible depredation on the high seas, without lawful authority, done animo fur - andi, in the spirit and intention of universal hostility. United States v. Palmer, 3 Wheat.

CIO, 4 L. Ed. 471. This is the definition of this offense by the law of nations. 1 Kent, Coinni. 183. And see Talbot v. Janson, 3 Dali. 152, 1 L. Ed. 540; Dole v. Insurance Co., 51 Me. 467 ; U. S. v. Smith, 5 Wheat. 161, 5 D. Ed. 57 ; U. S. v. The Ambrose Light (D. C.) 25 Fed. 408; Davison v. Seal-skins, 7 Fed. Cas. 192.

There is a distinction between the offense of piracy, as known to the law of nations, which is justiciable everywhere, and offenses created by statutes of particular nations, cognisable only before the municipal tribunals of such nations. PIRATE.

A person who lives by piracy ; one guilty of the crime of piracy. A sea-rob- ber, who, to enrich himself, by subtlety or open force, setteth upon merchants and oth- ers trading by sea, despoiling them of their loading, and sometimes bereaving them of life and sinking their ships. Ridley, Civil & Ecc. Law, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3.

A pirate is one who acts solely on his own tuthority, without any commission or authori- ty from a sovereign state, seizing by force, and appropriating to himself without discrimination, every vessel he meets with. Robbery on the high seas is piracy ; but to constitute the of- fense the taking must be felonious. Consequent- ly the quo animo may be inquired into. Davi- son v. Seal-skins, 2 Wine, 324, Fed. Cas. No. 3,661.

Pirates are common sea-rovers, without any fixed place of residence, who acknowledge no sovereign and no law, and support themselves by pillage and depredations at sea ; but there are instances wherein the word "pirata" ha* been formerly taken for a sea-captain. Spel- m&n.

Is old English law. A suit or action. Thus, the power to “hold pleas” Is the power to take cognizance of actions or suits ; so “common pleas” are actions or suits between private persons. And this meaning of the word still appears in the modem declarations, where it is stated, e. g., that the defendant “has been summoned to answer the plaintiff in a plea of debt.”

Za eommon-law practice. A pleading; any one in the series of pleadings. More particularly, the first pleading on the part of the defendant. In the strictest sense, the answer which the defendant in an action at law makes to the plaintiff’s declaration, and in which he sets up matter of fact as de- fense, thus distinguished from a demurrer, which interposes objections on grounds of law.

See Potts v. Potts (N. J. Ch.) 42 Atl. 1056. — Peremptory pleas. "Pleas in. bar" are so termed in con- tradistinction to that class of pleas called "dil- atory pleas." The former, viz., peremptory pleas, are usually pleaded to the merits of the action, with the view of raising a material issue between the parties; while the latter class, viz., dilatory pleas, are generally plead- ed with a view of retarding the plaintiff's pro- ceedings, and not for the purpose of raising anr issue upon which the parties may go to trial and settle the point in dispute. Peremptory pleas are also called "pleas in bar," while dil- atory pleas are said to be in abatement only. Brown.— Plea In abatement. In practice. The plea side of a court is that branch or department of the court which entertains or takes cognizance of civil actions and suite, as distinguished from its criminal or crown deonrtment. Thus the court of king s bench is said to have a plea side and a crown or criminal side; the one branch or department of it being devoted to the cognizance of civil actions, the other to criminal proceed- ings and matters peculiarly concerning the crown. So the court of exchequer is said to have a plea side and a crown side; the one being appropriated to civil actions, the other to matters of revenue. Brown.— Pleas of the crown. In English law. A phrase now em- ployed to signify criminal causes, in which the king is a party. Formerly it signified royal causes for offenses of a greater magnitude than mere misdemeanors.— Pleas roll. In English practice. A record upon which are entered all the pleadings in a cause, in their regular order, and the issue.— Pure plea. In equity pleading. One which relies wholly on some matter outside those referred to in the bill : as a plea of a release on a settled ac- count.—Sham plea. A vexatious or false de- fense, resorted to under the old system of plead- ing for purposes of delay and annoyance. Steph. PI. 383. Mr. Chitty defines sham pleas to be pleas so palpably and manifestly untrue that the court will assume them to be so; pleas manifestly absurd. When answers or- defenses admit of lawyer-like argument, such w courts Should listen to, they a're not "sham,” in the sense of the statute. When, it needs argument to prove that an answer or demurrer ia frivolous, it is not frivolous, and should not be' stricken off. To warrant this summary mode' of disposing of a defense,, the mere read- ing of the pleadings should be sufficient to dis- close, without deliberation and without a doubt, that the defense is sham or irrelevant. * Cottrill v. Cramer, 40 Wis. . 559.— Special plea. A special kind of plea in bar, distinguished by this name from the general issue, and consisting usually of some new affirmative matter, though- it may also be in the form of a traverse or de- nial. PLEAD.

To make, deliver, or file any pleading; to conduct the pleadings in a cause. To Interpose any pleading in a suit which contains allegations of fact; in this sense the word is the antithesis of “demur." More particularly, to deliver in a formal manner the defendant’s answer to the plain- tiff's declaration, or to the Indictment, as the case may be.

To appear as a pleader or advocate In a cause; to argue a cause in a court of jus- tice. But this meaning of the word is not technical, but colloquial.

—Plead a statute. Pleading a statute is stating the facts which bring the case. within it ; and “counting” on it, in the strict language of. pleading, is making express reference to it by apt terms to show the source of right relied on. McCullough v. Colfax County, 4 Neb. HJnof.) 543, 95 N. W. 31.— Plead iasuably. This means to interpose such a plea as is cal- culated to raise a material issue, either of law or of fact.— Plead over. a material allegation in the last pleading of the opposite party ; to pass by a defect m the pleading of the other party with- out- taking advantage of it. In another sense, to plead the general issue, after one has inter- posed a demurrer or special plea which has been dismissed by a judgment ox respondeat ouster. —Plead to tbe merits. This is a phrase of long standing and accepted usage id the law, and distinguishes those pleas which answer the cause of action and on which a trial may be had from all pleas of a different character. PLEADER.

A person whose business it Is to draw pleadings. Formerly, when plead- ing at common law was a highly technical and difficult art, there was a class of men known as “special pleaders not at the bar,” who held a position Intermediate between counsel and attorneys. The class Is now al- most extinct and the term “pleaders” is generally applied, in England, to junior mem- bers of the common-law bar. Sweet.

PLEADING.

The peculiar science ov system of rules and principles, established In the common law, according to which the pleadings or responsive allegations of liti- gating parties are framed, with a view to preserve technical propriety and to produce a proper issue.

The process performed by the parties to a suit or action, in alternately presenting written statements of their contention, each responsive to that which precedes, and each serving to narrow the field of controversy, until there evolves a single point, affirmed on one side and denied on the other, called the “Issue," upon which they then go to triaL

The act or step of interposing any one of the pleadings in a cause, but particularly one on the part of the defendant ; and, in the strictest sense, one which sets up allegations of fact in defense to the action.

The name “a pleading” is also given to any one of the formal written statements of accusation or defense presented by the par- ties alternately In an action at law; the ag- gregate of such statements filed in any one cause are termed “the pleadings.”

• The oral advocacy of a client’s cause In court, by h)s barrister or counsel. Is some- times called “pleading;" but this. Is a popu- lar, rather than technical, use.

In chancery practice. Consists In mak- ing the formal written allegations or state- ments of the respective parties on the rec- ord to maintain the suit, or to defeat It, of which, when contested in matters of fact, they propose to offer proofs, and in matters of law to offer arguments to the court. Story, Eq. Pl. | 4, note.

—Double pleading. This is not allowed ei- ther In the declaration or subsequent pleadings. Its meaning with respect to the former is that the declaration must not, in support of a single demand, allege several distinct matters, by any one of which that demand is sufficiently supported. With respect to the subsequent pleadings, the meaning is that none of them is to contain several distinct answers to that which preceded it: and the reason of the rule in each ease is that such pleading tends to sev- eral issues in resnect of a single claim. Whar- ton.—Special pleading. When the allega- tions tor “pleadings.” as thev are called) of the contending parties in an action are not of the general or ordinary form, but are of a more complex or special character, they are denomi- nated “special pleadings;” and. when a defend- ant pleads a plea of this description, (i. e., a special plea.) -he is said to plead specially, in opposition to pleading the general issue. These terms have given rise to the popular denomina- tion of that science which, though properly called “pleading,” is generally known by tbe name of “special pleading.” Brown. PLEDGE.

In the law of bailment A bailment of goods to a creditor as security for Borne debt or engagement. A bailment or delivery of goods by a debtor to his cred- itor, to be kept till the debt be discharged. Story, Ballm. f 7; Civ. Code La. art 3133; 2 Kent Comm. 577-; Stearns v. Marshy 4 Denio (N. Pledge is a deposit of personal property by way of sechrlty for the performance of anoth* er act Civ. Code Cal. | 2986.

The specific article delivered to the cred- itor in security is also called a “pledge” or “pawn.” " :

There is a clear distinction between mortgages and pledges. In a pledge the legal title remains in the pledgor; in a mortgage it passes to the mortgagee. In a mortgage the mortgagee need not have possession; in a pledge the pledge^ must have possession, though it be only con- structive. In a mortgage, at common law, the property on non-payment of the debt passes wholly to the mortgagee ; In a pledge the prop- erty is sold, and only so much of the proceeds as will pay his debt passes to the pledgee. A mortgage is a conditional conveyance Of prop1- erty, which becomes absolute unless redeemed at a specified time. A pledge is not strictly a con- veyance at all, nor need any day of redemption be appointed for it. A mortgagee can sell anq deliver the thing mortgaged, subject only to the right of redemption. A pledgee cannot sell and deliver .his pawn until the debt is due and payment denied. Bouvier. ,

There are two varieties of the contract of pledge known to the law of Louisiana, viz., pawn and antichresis; the former relatlifg to chattel securities, ■ the latter to landed se- curities. See Civ. Code La. art. 3101; and see those titles.

discontinued. Brown.— Pledges to restore. In England, before the plaintiff in foreign at- tachment can issue execution against the prop- erty in the hands of the garnishee, he must find “pledges to restore,” consisting of two householders, who enter into a recognizance for the restoration of the property, as a security for the protection of the defendant ; for, as the plaintiffs debt is not proved in any stage of the proceedings, the court guards the rights of the absent defendant by taking security on his behalf, so that if he should afterwards

The most common mean- ing of the term “to plunder” Is to take prop- erty from persons or places by open force, and this may be in course of a lawful war, or by unlawful hostility, as In the case of pi- rates or banditti. But in another and very common meaning, though in some degree fig- urative, it is used to express the Idea of taking property from a person or place, with- out just right, but not expressing the nature or quality of the wrong done. PLUS PETITIO.

In Roman law. A phrase denoting the offense of claiming more than was just in one’s pleadings. Thib mortj might be claimed In four different respects; viz.; (1) Re, i. e., In amount, (e. g., £50 for £5;) (2) loco, i. e., in place, (e. g„ delivery at some place more difficult to effect than the place specified;) (3) tempore, i. e., in time; (e. a ., claiming payment on the 1st of Au- gust of what is not due till the 1st of Septem- ber;) and (4) causa, i. e., in quality, (e. g., claiming a dozen of champagne, when the con- tract was only for a dozen of wine generally.) Prior to Justinian’s time, this offense was in general fatal to the action ; but, under, the legislation of the emperors Zeno and Justin- ian, the offense (if re, loco, or causa) exposed the party to the payment of three times the damage, if any, sustained by the other side, and (if tempore) obliged him to postpone his action for double the time, and to pay the costs of his first action before commencing a second. POLICE.

Police is the function of that branch of the administrative machinery of government which is charged with the pres- ervation of public order and tranquillity, the promotion of the public health, safety, and morals, and the prevention, detection, and punishment of crimes. See State v. Hlne. 58 Conn. 50, 21 Atl. 1024, 10 L. R. A. 83 ; Monet v. Jones, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 247; Peo- ple v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 583, 14 N. E. 820, 1 Am. St Rep. 883; Logan v. State, 5 Tex. App. 314.

The police of a state, in a comprehensive sense, embraces its whole system of internal regulation, by which the Btate seeks not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against the state, but also to establish for the intercourse of citizen with citizen those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by Others. Cooley, Const. Lim. *572.

It is defined by Jeremy Bentham in his works: "Police is in general a system of precaution, either for the prevention of crime or of calam- ities. Its business may be distributed into eiyht distinct branches; (1) Police for the prevention of offenses ; (2) police for the prevention of ca- lamities ; (3) police for the prevention, of epi- demic diseases ; (4) police of charity ; (5) police of interior communications ; (6) police of public amusements ; (7) police for recent intelligence ; (8) police for registration." Canal Com’rs v. Willamette T-ransp. Co., 6 Or. 222.

—Police court. The name of a kind of in- ferior court in severer of the states, which has a summary jurisdiction over minor offenses and ' misdemeanors of small consequence, and the powerd of a committing magistrate in respect to more seriouB crimes, and. in some states, a limited jurisdiction for the trial of civil causes. In English law. Courts in which stipendiary magistrates, chosen from barristers of a certain standing, sit for the dispatch of business. Their general duties and powers are the same as those or the unpaid magistracy, except that one of them- may usually act in cases which would re- quire to be heard before two other justices.

See Magistrate. — Police officer . .One of the staff of men employed in cities and , towns to enforce the municipal police, i. e., the lawa and ordinances for preserving the peace ' and good order of the community. Otherwise ' called “policeman.”— Police power. The pow- er vested in a state to establish laws and ordi- nances for the regulation and enforcement of its police as above defined. The power vested in ’ the legislature to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, Statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or'. without, not repugnant to the constitution, " as they shall judge to be for the good and wel- ' fare of the commonwealth, and of the subjects ‘ of the same. Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 85, The police power of the state is an author- ity conferred by the American constitutional ' system upon the individual states, through which they are enabled to establish a special depart- . meat of police; adopt such regulations as tend to prevent the commission of fraud, violence, or other offenses against the state ; aid in the ar- rest of criminals ; and secure generally the com- fort, health, and prosperity of the state, by pre- serving the public order, preventing a conflict of rights in the common intercourse of the citi- zens, and insuring to each an uninterrupted en- joyment of all the privileges conferred upon him by the laws of his country. Lalor, Pol. Enc. s. v. It is true that the legislation which se- cures to all protection in their rights, and the equal use and enjoyment of their property, embraces an almost infinite variety of subjects. Whatever affects the peace, good order, morals, and health of the community comes within its scope ; and every one must use and enjoy his property subject to the restrictions which such legislation imposes. What is termed the “police power” of the state, which, from the language often

POLICY.

The general principles by which a government Is guided In Its manage- ment of public affairs, Or the legislature in Its measures. .

This term, as applied to a law. ordinance, or rule of law, denotes Its general purpose or tendency considered as directed to the welfare or prosperity of the state or com- munity.

— Policy of a statute. The "policy of a stat- ute,” or "of the legislature,” as applied to a penal or prohibitive statute, means the inten- tion of discouraging conduct of a mischievous tendency. See L. It. 6 P. C. 134; 5 Bam. & Aid. 335; Pol. Cont. 235.— Policy of the law. By this phrase is understood the dis- position of the law to discountenance certain classes of acts, transactions, or agreements, or to refuse them its sanction, because it considers them immoral, detrimental to the public welfare, subversive of good order, or otherwise contrary to the plan and purpose of civil regulations. —Public policy. The principles under which the freedom of contract or private dealings is restricted by law for the good of the community. Wharton. The term “policy," as applied to a statute, regulation, rule of law, course of ac- tion, or the like, refers to its probable effect, tendency, or object, considered with reference to the social or political well-being of the state. Thus, certain classes of acts are said to be "against public policy," when the law refuses to enforce or recognize them, on the ground that they have a mischievous tendency, so as to be injurious to the interests of the state, apart from illegality or immorality. Sweet. And see Egerton v. Earl Brownlow, 4 H. L. Cas. 235; Smith v. Railroad Co., 115 Cal. 584, 47 Pac. 582, 35 L. R. A. 309, 56 Am. St. Rep. 119; Tarbell v. named beneficiary- if he shall die sooner.—

Floating policy. A policy of fire insurance not applicable to any specific described goods, but to any and all goods which may at the time of the fire be in a certain building.— Interest policy. One where the assured has a real, substantial, and assignable interest in the thing insured ; as opposed to a wager policy— Mined policy. A policy of marine insurance in which not only the time is specified for which the risk is limited, but the voyage also is described by its local termini; as opposed to policies of in- surance for a particular voyage, without any limits as to time, and also to purely time pol- icies, in which there is no designation of local termini at all. Mozley & Whitley. And see Wilkins v. Tobacco Ins. Co.. 30 Ohio, 340, 27 Am. Rep. 455.— Open policy. In insurance. One in which the value of the subject insured is not fixed or agreed upon in the policy, aa

That condition of fact under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure, to the exclusion of all others. This condition of fact is called "detention,” and it forms the substance of possession in all its varieties. Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 238.

“Possession,” in the sense of “detention,” is the actual exercise of such a power as the own- er has a right to exercise. The term "possessio occurs in the Roman jurists in various senses. There is possessto simply, and possessio cttnlts, and possessio naturalis. Possessio denoted, originally, bare detention. But this detention, under certain conditions, becomes a legal state, inasmuch as it leads to ownership, through usucapio. Accordingly, the word ‘

Possession of real property is said to be "open" when held with- out concealment or attempt at secrecy, or with- out being covered up in the name of a third person, or otherwise attempted to be withdrawn from sight, but in such a manner that any per- son interested can ascertain who is actually in possession by proper observation and inquiry. See Bass v. Pease, 79 111. App. 318.— Peace- able possession. See Peaceable. — Posses- sion money. In English law. The man whom the sheriff puts in possession of goods taken under a writ of fieri facias is entitled, while he continues so in possession, to a certain sum. of money per diem, which is thence termed “pos- session money.” The amount is 3s. 6d. per day if he is boarded, or 5s. per day if he is not boarded. Brown. — Possession, writ of.

Where the judgment in an action of ejectment is for the delivery of the land claimed, or its possession, this writ is used to put the plaintiff m possession. It is in the nature of execution. —Quasi possession is to a right what posses- sion is to a thing; it is the exercise or enjoy- ment of the right, not necessarily the continu- ous exercise, but such an exercise as shows an intention to exercise it at any time when de- sired. Sweet.— Scrambling possession. By this term is meant a struggle for possession on the land itself, not such a contest as is waged in the courts, or possession gained by an act of trespass, such as building a fence. Spiers v. Possession is t good title where no bet- ter title appears. 20 Vin. Abr. 278.

Possession is nine-tenths of the law.

This adage is not to be taken as true to the full extent, so as to mean that the person in possession can only be ousted by one whose title is nine times "better than his, but it places in a strong light the legal truth that every claimant must succeed by the strength of his own title, and not by the weakness of his antagonist’s. [Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 3; art. I, § 10, cl. 1 — no ex post facto law]

'After the fact' points to ex post facto laws — retroactive criminal punishments — which the Constitution prohibits to both Congress and the states.

Why: Genuine: the entry cross-refs ex post facto; the clauses are the prohibition. Direct.

POST-FINE.

In old conveyancing. A fine or sum of money, (otherwise called the "king's silver") formerly due on granting the licentia concordandi, or leave to agree, in levying a fine of lands. It amounted to three-twentieths of the supposed annual value of the land, or ten shillings for every five marks of land. 2 Bl. Comm. 350.

whoee rights or status will be governed or affected by the question of his birth before or after such event.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

POST-NOTES.

A species of bank-notes payable at a distant period, and not on de- mand.

They are a species of obligation resorted to by banks when the exchanges of the countiy, and especially of the banks, have become em- barrassed by excessive speculations. Much con- cern is then felt for the country, and through the newspapers it is urged that post-notes be issued by the banks “for aiding domestic and foreign exchanges,” as a “mode of relief," or a "remedy for the distress,” and "to take the place of the southern and foreign exchanges."

And so presently this is done. Post-notes are therefore intended to enter into the circulation of the country as a part of its medium of ex- changes; the smaller ones for ordinary busi- ness, and the larger ones for heavier operations. They are intended to supply the place of de- mand notes, which the banks cannot afford to issue or reissue, to relieve the necessities of commerce or of the banks, or to avoid a compul- sory suspension. They are under seal, or with- out seal, and at long or short dates, at more or less interest, or without interest, as the necessi- ties of the bank may require. Appeal of Hogg, 22 Pa. 488.

[Law] — Law

[Law: fraudulent conveyances — voluntary settlements vs. creditors (Statute 13 Eliz. c. 5)]

A post-nuptial settlement — made after marriage, hence 'voluntary' rather than for consideration of the marriage — carries the classic vulnerability of voluntary settlements to the claims of creditors as fraudulent conveyances.

Why: Genuine: the entry calls the settlement voluntary (2 Kent); vulnerability to creditors is the classic doctrine for voluntary settlements. Kept loose.

POST OBIT BOND.

A bond given by an expectant, to become due on the death of a person from whom he will have property. A bond or agreement given by a borrower of money, by which he undertakes to pay a larger sum, exceeding the legal rate of inter- est, on or after the death of a person from whom he has expectations, In case of surviv- ing him. [Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 7]

The roads designated by law for carrying the mails rest on Congress's constitutional power to establish post offices and post roads.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines post roads; the clause is their constitutional basis. Direct.

POSTERIORITY.

This Is a word of comparison and relation In tenure, the cor- relative of which is the word “priority.” Thus, a man who held lands or tenements of two lords was said to hold of his more an- cient lord by priority, and of his less ancient lord by posteriority. Old Nat. Brev. 94.

A posthumous child is considered as though born at the parent's death — and so inherits, under intestacy statutes, as an afterborn heir as if born in the parent's lifetime.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the maxim; the footnote gives its legal effect — inheritance rights of afterborn children. Direct.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[William Shakespeare, Cymbeline, c. 1611]

(paraphrase) Shakespeare's hero is literally named Posthumus because he was born after his father's death — the entry's definition ('one born after the death of its father') dramatized as a character's name. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry and character name encode the identical definition. The link is direct and illuminating. Paraphrase; no quote needed.

POSTLIMINIUM.

Lat. In the civil law. A doctrine or fiction of the law by which the restoration of a person to any status or right formerly possessed by him was considered as relating back to the time of his original loss or deprivation; particu- larly In the case of one who, having been taken prisoner in war, and having escaped and returned to Borne, was regarded, by the aid of this fiction, as having never been abroad, and was thereby reinstated in all hlS rights. Inst. 1, 12, 5.

The term is also applied, in international law, to the recapture of property taken by an enemy, and its consequent restoration to its original owner.

power is an authority to do some act in re- lation to real property, or to the creation or revocation of an estate therein, or a charge thereon, which the owner granting or reserving such power might himself per- form for any purpose. Civ. Code Dak. | 298 ; How. St. Mich. | 5591.

“Power” is sometimes used in the same sense as “right,” as when we speak of the powers of user and disposition which the owner of prop- erty has over it, but, strictly speaking, a pow- er is that which creates a special or exceptional right, or enables a person to do something which he could not otherwise do. Sweet.

Technically, an authority by which one person enables another to do some act for him. 2 Lil. Abr. 339.

—General and special powers. A power is general when it authorizes the alienation in fee, by means of a conveyance, will, or charge, of the lands embraced in the power to any alienee whatsoever. It is special (1) when the persons or class of persons to whom the dis- position of the lands under the power is to be made are designated, or (2) when the power authorizes the alienation, by means of a con- veyance, will, or charge, of a particular estate or interest less than a fee. A gen- eral power is in trust when any person or class of persons other than the grantee of such power is designated as entitled to the proceeds or any portion of the proceeds or other benefits to result from the alienation. A special power is in trust (1) when the disposition or charge which it authorizes is limited to be made to any person or class of persons other than the bolder of the power, or (2) when any person or class of persons other than the holder is designated as entitled to any benefit from the disposition or charge authorized by the power. In constitutional law. The right to take action in respect to a particular subject-mat- ter or class of matters, involving more or less of discretion, granted by the constitu- tions to the several departments or branches of the government, or reserved to the people. Powers in this sense are generally classified as legislative, executive, and Judicial. See those titles.

la the law of corporations. The right or capacity to act or be acted upon in a par- ticular manner or in respect to a particular subject; as, the power to have a corporate seal, to sue and be sued, to make by-laws, to carry on a particular business or construct a given work. H. F. Ry. Co., 08 Hun, 252, 22 N. Y. Supp. «67 ; Baltimore v. Marriott, 9 Md. 160. EST. By this phrase is meant a right or power to do some act, together with an in- terest In the subject-matter on which the power is to be exercised. It is distinguished from a naked power, which Is a mere au- thority to act, not accompanied by any inter- est of the donee In the subject-matter of the power.

Is it an interest in the subject on which the power is to be exercised, or is it an interest in that which is produced by the exercise of the power? We hold it to be clear that the inter- est which can protect a power after the death of a person who creates It must be an interest in the thing itself. In other words, the power must be engrafted on an estate ' in the thing. The words themselves would seem to import this meaning. “A power coupled with an in- terest” is a power which accompanies or is connected with an interest. The power and the interest are united in the same person. But, if we are to understand by the word inter- est” an interest in. that which is to be produc- ed by the exercise of the power, then they are never united. The power to produce the in- terest must be exercised, and by its exercise is extinguished. The power ceases when the in- terest commences, and therefore cannot, in accurate law language, be said to be coupled with it Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. 2(M, 5 L. Ed. 589. And see Missouri v. We got to fight the powers that be

The legal entry defines power as authority — the right to do acts the owner might himself perform. The lyric names 'the powers that be': power held by others as the thing to be fought — power as a lived relation rather than an abstraction.

Why: Added because 'the powers that be' is the idiom for institutional authority, exactly the legal sense of power the entry defines. The chorus is verbatim-certain; quoting the hook only.

[Lord Acton, letter to Bishop Mandell Creighton, 1887]

'Power tends to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely.' Acton's maxim is the most quoted wisdom on power in English, and it illuminates the concept the entry defines — authority to act — by naming its moral gravity.

Why: Entry defines power as authority to do some act. Acton's sentence is verbatim-certain and is the canonical maxim on power as such. Genuine classical-wisdom link.

POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

A pow- er or authority conferred by one person by deed or will upon another (called the ‘‘do- nee’’) to appoint, that is, to select and nom- inate, the person or persons who are to re- ceive and enjoy an estate or an income there- from or from a fund, after the testator's death, or the donee's death, or after the ter- mination of an existing right or Interest. See Helnemann v. De Wolf, 25 R. I. 243, 55

AO. 707.

Powers are either: Collateral, which are giv- en to strangers ; i. e., to persons who have neither a present nor future estate or interest in the land. These are also called simply ‘collateral,” or powers not coupled with an in- terest, or powers not being interests. These terms have been adopted to obviate the confu- sion arising from the circumstance that powers in gross have been by many called powers collat- eral. Or they are powers relating to the land. These are called “appendant” or "appurtenant,’ because they strictly depend upon the estate lim- ited to the person to whom they are given. Thus, where an estate for life is limited to a man, with a power to grant leases in posses- sion, a lease granted under the power may operate wholly out of the life-estate of the party executing it, and must in every case have its operation out of his estate during his life. Such an estate must be created, which will at- tach on an interest actually vested in himself. Or they arc called "in gross,” if given to a person who had an interest in the estate at the execution of the deed creating the power, or to whom an estate is given by the deed, but which enabled him to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him. Of necessity, therefore, where a man seised in fee settles his estate on others, re- serving to himself only a particular power, the power is in gross. A power to a tenant for lue to appoint the estate after his death among his children, a power to jointure a wife after his death, a power to raise a term of years to com- mence from his death, for securing younger children’s portions, are all powers in gross. An important distinction is established between cieneral and particular powers. By a general power we understand a right to appoint to whomsoever the donee pleases. By a particular power it is meant that the donee is restricted to some objects designated in the deed creating the power, as to his own children. Wharton.

We have seen that a general power is of- ficial when no person other than the grantee has, by the terms of its creation, any interest in its execution. A general power is t» truat when any person or class of persons, other than the grantee of such power, is dwtenn1®^ as entitled to the proceeds, or any portion of the proceeds, or other benefits to result from the alienation. Cutting v. Cutting, 20 Hun

The donee's power to appoint who shall take the estate or fund has its signature modern consequence in federal estate tax: a general power of appointment is included in the holder's gross estate.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the power; § 2041 is its federal tax home. POWER and POWER OF DISPOSITION left bare as twins.

POWER OF DISPOSITION.

Every power of. disposition is deemed absolute, by means of which the donee of such power is enabled in his life-time to dispose of the en- tire fee for his own benefit; and, where a general and beneficial power to devise the in- heritance is given to a tenant for life or years, it is absolute, within the meaning of the statutes of some of the states. PRECIPITIN TEST.

Precipltlns are formations in the blood of an animal In- duced by repeated injections into its veins of the blood-serum of an animal of another species; and their importance In diagnosis lies in the fact that when the blood-serum of an animal so treated is mixed with that of any animal of the second species (or a closely related species) and the mixture kept Bl.Law at a temperature of about 98 degrees for several hours, a visible precipitate will re- sult, but not so if the second ingredient of the mixture is drawn from an animal of ai) entirely different species. In medico-legai practice, therefore, a suspected .stain or clot having been first tested by other meth- ods and demonstrated to be blood, the ques- tion whether it is the blood of a human being or of other origin is resolved by mix- ing a solution of it with a quantity of blood- serum taken from a rabbit or some other small animal which has been previously prepared by injections of human blood- serum. After treatment as above described, the presence of a precipitate will furnish strong presumptive evidence that the blood tested was of human origin. The test is not absolutely conclusive, for the reason that blood from an anthropoid ape would produce thtf same result, in this experiment, as hu- man blood. But if the alternative hypo- thesis presented attributed the blood in ques- tion to some animal of an unrelated species (as, a dog, sheep, or horse) the precipitin test could be fully relied on, as also in the case where no precipitate resulted.

PREJUDICE.

A forejudgment; bias; preconceived opinion. A leaning towards one side of a cause for some reason other than a conviction of its justice. Willis v. State, 12 Ga. 419; Uungerford ▼. Cushing, 2 Wls. 405; State y. Anderson, 14 Mont. 541, 87 Pac. 1; Hinkle v. State, 94 Ga. 595, 21 S.

E. 595; Keen v. Brown, 46 Fla. 487, 35 South. 401.

The word “prejudice” seemed to imply nearly the same thing as “opinion," a prejudgment of the case, and not necessarily an enmity or ill will against either party. Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 297, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

“Prejudice’’ also means injury, loss, or damnification. Thus, where an offer or ad- mission is made “without prejudice,” or a motion is denied or a bill in equity dismissed “without prejudice,” it is meant as a declara- tion that no rights or privileges of the party concerned are to be considered as thereby waived or lost, except in so far as may be expressly conceded or decided.

The entry's 'without prejudice' sense is the procedural one: under Fed. R. Civ. P. 41 a dismissal 'without prejudice' is not an adjudication on the merits, so the party's rights are preserved and the claim may be refiled.

• PREMISES. That which is put before; that which precedes; the foregoing state- ments. Thus, in logic, the two Introductory propositions of the syllogism are called the "premises," and from them the conclusion is deduced. So, in pleading, - the expression "in consideration of the premises" frequently occurs, the meaning being "ia consideration of the matters hereinbefore stated." See Teutonia F. Ins. Co. v. Mund, 102 Pa. 93; Alaska Imp. Co. v. Hirsch, 119 Cal. 249, 47 Pac. 124.

In conveyancing. That part of a' deed which precedes the habendum, in which are set forth the names of the parties with their titles and additions, and in which are recited such deeds, agreements, or matters of fact as are necessary to explain the reasons upon which the present transaction Is founded; and it Is here, also, the consideration on which it is made is set down and the cer- tainty of the thing granted. 2 Bl. In estates. Lands and tenements ; an es- tate ; the subject-matter of a conveyance.

The term "premises" is used in common par- lance to signify land, with its appurtenances; but its usual and appropriate meaning in a conveyance is the thing demised or granted by the deed. A bounty or bonus ; a consideration given to invite a loan or a bargain ; as the consid- eration paid to the assignor by the assignee of a lease, or to the transferrer by the trans- feree of shares of stock, etc. So stock is said to be “at a premium” when its market])rlce exceeds its nominal or face value. PREPONDERANCE.

This word means something more than ' “weight ;” it denotes a superiority of weight, or outweighing. The words are not synonymous, but substantial- ly different. There is generally a “weight” of • evidence on each side in case of con- tested facts. But Juries cannot properly act upon the weight of evidence, in favor of the one having the onus, unless it overbear, in some degree, the weight upon the other side. Shinn v. Tucker, 37 Ark. 688. In America, a theory has sometimes been advanced that these writs should issue only in cases publici juris and those affecting the sovereignty of the state, or its franchises or prerogatives, or the liberties of the people. But their issuance is now general- ly regulated by statute, and the use of the term “prerogative,” in describing them, amounts only to a reference to their origin and history. N. R. Co. v. Hays, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 388, 47 Am. Rep. 291; Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 667, 66 Pac. 10; Alhambra Addition Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 598, 14 Pac. 379; Stevens v. Dennett, 51 N. H. 329.

Title by prescription is the right which a possessor acquires to property by reason of the continuance of his possession for a period Of time fixed by the laws. Code Ga. 1882, f 2678.

"Prescription" is the term usually applied to incorporeal hereditaments, while "adverse possession" Is applied to lands. Hindley v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 42 Misc. Rep. 56, 85 N. X. Supp. 561.

In Louisiana, prescription is defined as a manner of acquiring the ownership of prop- erty, or discharging debts, by the effect of time, and under the conditions regulated by law. Each of these prescriptions has its special and particular definition. The prescription by which the ownership of proper- ty is acquired, is a right by which a mere pos- sessor acquires the ownership of a thing, which he possesses by the continuance of his possession during the time fixed by law. The prescription by which debts are released, is a peremptory and perpetual bar to every species of action, real or personal, when the' creditor has been silent for a certain time without urging his claim. Civ. Code T-a. arts. 3457-3459. In this sense of the term it is very nearly equivalent to what Is else- where expressed by "limitation of actions," or rather, the "bar of the statute of limita- tions."

"Prescription" and "custom" hre frequently confounded in common parlance, arising perhaps1 from the fact that immemorial usage was es- sential to both of them; but, strictly, they ma- terially differ from one another, in that custom is properly a local impersonal usage, such as borough-English, or postremogeniture, which is annexed to a given eslv.te, while prescription is Bimply personal, as that a certain man and his ancestors, or those whose estate be enjoys, have immemorialiy exercised a right of pasture-com- mon in a certain parish. Again, prescription, has its ■ origin, in a grant, evidenced by usage,, and is allowed on account of its loss, either ac-; tual or supposed, and therefore only those things, can be prescribed for which could be raised by, a grant previously to 8 A>9 Viet. c. 106, | 2;, but this principle does not necessarily bold in. the case of a custom. Wharton.

The difference between "prescription," "cus- tom," and "usage" is also thus Btated: "Pre-, scription hath respect to a certain person who, by intendment, may have continuance forever, as, for instance, he and all they whose estate he hath in such a thing, — this is a prescription;, while custom is local, and always applied to a certain place, and is common to all ; while usage differs from both, for it may be either to persons or places." Jacob.

— Corporations bjr prescription. In Eng- lish law. Those which have existed beyond the memory of man, and therefore are looked upon, in law to be well created, such as the city of London. — Prescription net. The statute 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71, passed to limit the period of prescription in certain cases.— Prescription in a qne estate. A claim of prescription based on the immemorial enjoyment of the right claim- ed. by the claimant and those former owners "whose estate" he has succeeded to and holds.- See Donnell v. Clark, 19 Me. 182.— Time of prescription. The length of time necessary to establish a right claimed by prescription or a title by prescription. Before the act of 2 Sc 3 Wm. IV. c. 71, the possession required to constitute a prescription must have existed “time out of mind” or “beyond the memory of man.” that is, before the reign of Richard I.; but the time of prescription, in certain cases, was much shortened by that act. 2 Steph.' Comm. 35.

[Maxim: Vigilantibus non dormientibus aequitas subvenit]

Liberative prescription — the peremptory bar the entry equates with the statute of limitations — rests on the equitable rationale that the law aids those who assert their rights promptly, not those who sleep on them.

Why: Genuine: the entry itself reduces liberative prescription to 'a peremptory and perpetual bar' when the creditor 'has been silent'; the maxim states the rationale behind that bar rather than inventing a new doctrine.

PRESENCE.

The existence of a person In a particular place at a given time, partic- ularly with reference to some act done there and then. Besides actual presence, the law recognizes constructive presence, which lat- ter may be predicated of a person who, though not on the very spot, was near enough to be accounted present hy the law, or who was actively co-operating with another who. was actually present See Mitchell v. Com., 33 Grat. (Va.) 868. ,

PRESENT, v. In English ecclesiastical law. To offer a cleric to the bishop of the diocese, to be Instituted. 1 Bl. Comm. 389.

In criminal law. To find or represent judicially ; used of the official act of a grand Jury when they take notice of a crime or -offense from their own knowledge or observa- tion, without any bill of indictment laid be- fore them.

In the law of negotiable instruments.

Primarily, to present is to tender or offer. Thus, to present a bill of exchange for ac- ceptance or payment is to exhibit it to the drawee or acceptor, (or bis authorized agent,) with an express or Implied demand for ac- ceptance or payment Byles, Bills, 183, 201.

PRESENT, a. A gift; a gratuity; any- thing presented or given.

PRESENT, ad/. Now existing; at hand; relating to the present time ; considered with reference to the present time.

—Present enjoyment. The immediate or present possession and use of an estate or prop- erty, as distinguished from such as is post- poned to a future time.— Present estate. An estate in immediate possession ; one now exist- ing, or vested at the present time; as distin- guished from a futurt estate, the enjoyment of which is postponed to a future time.— Present interest. One which entitles the owner to the immediate possession of the property. Civ. Code Mont 1896, f 1110; Rev. Codes N. D. 1809, f 3288; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, { 204. -Present use. Constructive presence — being near enough, or actively cooperating with one actually present — grounds accomplice liability: one who aids or abets an offense, though not on the very spot, is punishable as a principal.

Why: Genuine: the entry's 'constructive presence' doctrine exists precisely to make cooperating absentees liable as principals; § 2 is the federal codification of that principle.

In criminal prac- tice. The written notice taken by a grand Jury of any offense, from their own knowl- edge or observation, without any bill of in- dictment laid before them at the suit of the government 4 Bl. Comm. 301.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

A presentment is an Informal statement in writing, by the grand jury, representing to the court that a public offense bas been com- mitted which is triable in tbe county, and that there is reasonable ground for believing that a particular individual named or de- scribed therein has committed it Pen. Code Cal. f 916. And see In re Orosbols, 109 Cal. 445, 42 Pac. 444; Com. v. Green, 126 Pa. 681, 17 Atl. 878, 12 Am. St Bep. 894 ; Mack v. People, 82 N. Y. 237 ; Eason v. State, 11 Ark. 482; State v. Kiefer, 90 Md. 165, 44 Atl. 1043.

In its limited sense, a presentment is a state- ment by the grand Jury of an offense from their own knowledge, without any bill of indictment laid before them, setting forth the name of the party, place of abode, and the offense committed. Informally, upon which the officer of the court afterwards frames an indictment. Collins v. State, 13 Fla. 651, 663.

The difference between a presentment and an inquisition is this: that the former is found by a grand jury authorized to inquire of offenses

?;enerally, whereas the latter is an accusation ound by a jury specially returned to Inquire concerning the particular offense. 2 Hawk. P.

C. c. 25, f 6.

The writing which contains the accusation ■o presented by a grand jury is also called a “presentment”

Presentments are also made in courts-leet and courts-baron, before the stewards. Steph. Comm. 644.

In contracts. The production of a bill of exchange to the drawee for his acceptance, or to the drawer or acceptor for payment ; or of a promissory note to the party liable, for payment of tbe same.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V]

The grand-jury presentment the entry defines is constitutionally embedded: no person may be held for a capital or otherwise infamous crime 'unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury.'

Why: Genuine: the Fifth Amendment names presentment alongside indictment as the required accusatory instrument; the entry defines the instrument, the Amendment gives it constitutional force.

[Law: UCC Article 3 — negotiable instruments: presentment and dishonor]

The entry's second sense — production of a bill or note to the drawee or party liable for acceptance or payment — is the presentment regime codified for negotiable instruments, including the rules on dishonor and notice of dishonor.

Why: Genuine: Article 3 is the uniform statute governing exactly the presentment-for-acceptance-or-payment procedure the entry describes; citing the article rather than a section number avoids overclaiming.

PRESIDENT.

The chief officer of a corporation, company, board, committee, etc., generally having the mats direction and administration of their concerns. Roe v. Bank of Versailles, 167 Mo. 406, 67 8. W. 303.

The chief executive magistrate of a state or nation, particularly under a democratic form of government; or of a province, col- ony, or dependency.

In English law. A title formerly given to the king’s lieutenant in a province ; as the president of Wales. Cowell.

This word Is also an old though corrupted form of “precedent” (Q. v.,) used both as a French and English word. Le president eat rare. Dyer, 136.

Why: Genuine: the entry's American sense ('chief executive magistrate') is defined by Article II's vesting clause, quoted verbatim.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

A body of electors chosen In the different states, whose sole duty It is to elect a president and vice-president of the United States. Each state appoints. The body of electors the entry describes — apportioned as the entry says, per Article II — casts its ballots under the procedure prescribed by the Twelfth Amendment: separate ballots for President and Vice-President, with contingent election in the House if no majority.

Why: Genuine: the entry cites Article II's apportionment; the Twelfth Amendment is the operative law governing how those electors actually vote, so it completes rather than repeats the entry.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I]

The 'liberty of the press' the entry invokes metaphorically is the constitutional guarantee: 'Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press.'

Why: Genuine: the entry's second sense is expressly the liberty-of-the-press phrase; the First Amendment is its textual home, quoted verbatim.

[Hip-hop] — Hip-hop

[Public Enemy, 'Don't Believe the Hype', 1988]

"Don't believe the hype." The entry's metaphorical sense is the press as the aggregate of publications, and 'liberty of the press' as a protected freedom. Public Enemy's anthem is hip-hop's canonical statement on press power — the press manufacturing belief — voicing the citizen's counter-posture to that power: where the liberty is exercised, hype is manufactured, and the listener is warned not to swallow it.

PRESUMPTION.

An inference affirma- tive or disafflrmative of the truth or false- hood of any proposition or fact drawn by a process of probable reasoning in the absence of actual certainty of Its truth or falsehood, or until such certainty can be ascertained. Best, Pres. $ 3.

A rule of law that courts and Judges shall draw a particular Inference from a particu- lar fact, or from particular evidence, unless and until the truth of such inference is dis- proved. Steph. Ev. 4. And see Dane v. Mis- souri Pac. Ry. Co., 132 Mo. 4, 33 S. W. 045 ; State v. Tibbetts, 35 Me. 81 ; Newton v. State, 21 Fla. 08; Ulrich v. Ulrich. 136 N.

A presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1950.

Presumptions are consequences which the law or the judge draws from a known fact to a fact unknown. Civ. Code La. art. 2284.

An inference affirmative or disafflrmative of the existence of a disputed fact, drawn by a ju- dicial tribunal, by a process of probable reason- ing, from some one or more matters of fact, either admitted in the cause or otherwise satis- factorily established. Best, Pres. $ 12.

A presumption is an inference as to the exist- ence of a fact not known, arising from its con- nection with the facts that are known, and founded upon a knowledge of human nature and the' motives which are known to influence hu- man conduct. Jackson v. Warford, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 62.

Classlfieatloa.— Presumptions are either pre- sumptions of law or presumptions of fact. “A presumption of law is a juridical postulate that a particular predicate is universally assignable to a particular subject. A presumption of fact is a logical argument from a fact to a fact ; or, as the distinction is sometimes put, it is an argument which infers a fact otherwise doubt- ful from a fact which is proved.” 2 Whart. Ev. g 1220. See Code Ga. g 2752. And see Home Ins. Co. v. Weide, 11 Wall. 438. 20 L. Ed. 197; Podolski v. Stone, 186 III. 540, 58

N. E. 340; Mclntvre v. Ajax Min. Co.. 20 Utah, 323. 60 Pac. 552 ; U. S. v. Sykes (D. C.) 58 Fed. 1000; Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ocean Ins. Co., 107 U. 8. 485. 1 Sup. Ct. 582. 27 L. Ed. 337; Lyon v. Guild. 5 Hcisk. (Tenn.) 182; Com. v. Frew, 3 Pa. Co. Ct R. 496.

Presumptions of law are rules which, in cer- tain cases, either forbid or dispense with any ul- terior inquiry. 1 Greenl. Ev. g 14. Inferences or positions established, for the most part by the common, but occasionally by the statute, law, which are obligatory alike on jndges and juries. Best, Pres, g 15.

Presumptions of fact are inferences as to the existence of some fact drawn from the existence

Of some Other fact; Inferences which common sense dmw* from circumstances usually occur- ring in such cases, 1 Phil. Ev. 430.

Presumption^ are divided into prasumptiones juris et de jure, otherwise called “irrebuttable presumptions,” (often, but not necessarily, ficti- tious,) which the law will not suffer to be re- butted by any counter-evidence; as, that an in- fant under seven years is not responsible for his actions; prasumptiones juris iantum, which hold good in the absence of counter-evidence, but against which counter-evidence may be ad- mitted; and prtesumptiones hominis, which are not necessarily conclusive, though no proof to the contrary be adduced. Mozley & Whitley.

There are also certain mixed presumptions, or presumptions of fact recognized by law, or presumptions of mixed law and fact. These are certain presumptive inferences, which, from their strength, importance, or frequent occur- rence, attract, as it were, the observation of the law. The presumption of a “last grant” falls within this class. Best, Ev. 436. See Dickson v. Wilkinson, 3 How. 57, 11 L. Ed. 491.

Presumptions of law are divided into con- clusive presumptions’ and disputable presump- tions. A. conclusive presumption is a rule of law determining. .the quantity of evidence requi- site for the support of a particular averment which is not permitted to De overcome by any proof that the fact is otherwise. 1 Greenl. Ev. f 15 ; U. S. v. Clark, 5 Utah, 226, 14 Pac. 288; Brandt v. Morning Journal Ass’n, 81 App. Div. 183. 80 N. Y. Sunp. 1002. These are also call- ed “absolute” and “irrebuttable" presumptions. A disputable presumption is an inference of law which holds gqod until it is invalidated by proof or a stronger presumption.

A natural presumption, is that species of pre- sumption, or process of. probable reasoning, which is exercised by persons of ordinary in- telligence, in inferring one fact from another, without reference to any technical rules. Oth- erwise called “prtesumptio hominis." Burril), Circ. Ev. 11, 12, 22. 24.

Legitimate presumptions have been denomi- nated "violent" or "probable,” according to the amount of weight which attaches to them. Such presumptions as are drawn from inadequate grounds are termed “light” or “rash” presumptions. Brown.

—Presumption of survivorship. A pre- sumption of fact, to the effect that one person survived another, applied for the purpose of determining a question of succession or similar matter, in a case where the two persons perish- ed in the same catastrophe, and there are no circumstances extant to show which of them actually died first, except those on which the presumption is founded, viz., differences of age, sex, strength, or physical condition.

The entry's taxonomy of presumptions of law — conclusive versus disputable — operates in federal civil practice under the rule that the party against whom a presumption is directed bears the burden of producing evidence to rebut it.

Why: Genuine: Rule 301 is the federal rule allocating the burden for exactly the disputable (rebuttable) presumptions the entry classifies; it gives the doctrine its modern procedural footing.

'Prevailing party' is an operative term of art, not mere description: fee-shifting statutes award litigation costs and attorney's fees to the party that prevails, so the label carries a direct monetary consequence.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines who counts as prevailing; § 1988 is the federal statute that makes the status matter by authorizing fee awards to the prevailing party.

PRICE.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The consideration (usually in money) given for the purchase of . a thing.

It is true that “pride" generally -means the sum of money which an artiple is sold for; but this is simply because property is generally sold for money, not because the wbrd baa necessarily sneli a restricted meaning. Among writers on political economy, who use terra# with philo- sophical accuracy, the word “price” is not al- ways or. even generally used as denoting the moneyed equivalent of property sold. They gen- erally treat and regard price as the equivalent or compensation, in whatever form received, - for property sold. The Latin word from which “price" Is derived sometimes means "reward,” “value,” “estimation,” “rtjhivalent.” Hudson Iron Co. v. Alger, 54 N. Y. 177.. . -

In sales law the price term need not be fixed for a contract to form: where the parties intend to contract but leave price open, the Code supplies a gap-filler (a reasonable price at time of delivery).

Why: Genuine: the entry defines price as the consideration for purchase; § 2-305 is the uniform rule on what happens when that consideration is left open, directly governing the entry's subject.

PRIMA FACIE.

Lat At first sight; on the first appearance; on the face of it; so far as can be judged from the first dis- closure; presumably.

A litigating party is said to have a prime facie case when the evidence in his favor is sufficiently strong for his opponent to be called on to answer it. A primo facie case, then, is one which is established by sufficient evidence, and can be overthrown only by rebutting evi- dence adduced on the other side. In some cases the only question to be considered is whether there is a primo facie case or no. Thus a grand

[Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — patent-eligible subject matter]

The entry's patent-law rule — a principle is patentable when new in its application to a useful purpose — sits inside the statutory gate for patent-eligible subject matter: abstract principles as such are excluded, their practical applications admitted.

Why: Genuine: § 101 is the statute that draws exactly the line the entry describes (principle vs. application of the principle to a useful purpose).

[Law: UCC § 9-322 — priorities among conflicting security interests]

'Prior tempore potior jure' — first in time, preferred in right — is the ancestor of modern priority rules; its living commercial form is that among conflicting security interests in the same collateral, the first to file or perfect generally prevails.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the maxim; § 9-322 is the uniform rule that operationalizes it for secured transactions, giving the ancient maxim its modern working form.

PRIORI PETENTI.

To the person first applying. In probate practice, where there are several persons equally entitled to a grant of administration, (e . g., next of kin of the same degree,) the rule of the court is to make the grant priori potent i, to the first applicant Browne, Prob. [Law: 18 U.S.C. § 751 — escape from federal custody]

The common-law 'prison-breaking' the entry defines — escape from lawful custody by force — is the ancestor of the modern escape offense; federally, escape or attempted escape from federal custody is a standalone crime.

Why: Genuine: § 751 is the living federal form of the offense the entry describes at common law; it names the descendant rather than restating the definition.

The entry's maxim — private agreement does not derogate from public law — is operationalized in the Code: the obligations of good faith, diligence, reasonableness, and care may not be disclaimed by agreement.

Why: Genuine: rather than echoing the maxim, this cites the concrete uniform rule that enforces it — some duties survive any private bargain.

The term “privity” means mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property. The executor Is in priv- ity with the testator, the heir with the ancestor, the assignee with the assignor, the donee with the donor, and the lessee with the lessor. Union Nat. Bank v. Privity of contract is that connection or relationship which exists between two or more contracting parties. It is essential to the maintenance of an action on any contract that there should subsist a privity between the plaintiff and defendant in respect of the matter sued on. Brown.

Privity of estate is that which exists be- tween lessor and lessee, tenant for life and remainder-man or reversioner, etc., and their respective assignees, and between Joint ten- ants and coparceners. Privity of estate is required for a release by enlargement Sweet Privity of blood exists between an heir and his ancestor, (privity in blood inheritable,) and between coparceners. This privity was formerly of importance in the law of descent cast Co. Litt 271o, 242o; 2 Inst 516; 8 Coke, 42b.

The entry states the old rule that privity of contract is essential to sue on a contract; modern sales law abrogates that bar for warranties, extending express and implied warranties to third-party beneficiaries beyond the contracting parties.

[Law: 28 U.S.C. § 1333 — federal admiralty and maritime jurisdiction]

The federal district courts' prize jurisdiction the entry notes is an exercise of the federal admiralty grant: the district courts have original jurisdiction, exclusive of state courts, over civil cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, under which prize cases fall.

Why: Genuine: prize is admiralty; § 1333 is the jurisdictional statute behind the prize-court jurisdiction the entry attributes to the federal district courts.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 9:24, KJV]

Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain.

Why: The entry's second sense is 'anything offered as a reward of contest.' Paul uses 'prize' in exactly that sense — the contest reward.

Usucapio pro emtore — acquisition 'as a purchaser' — required good faith, and is the Roman root of the bona fide purchaser rule: one who buys for value without notice of a prior claim takes free of it.

Why: Genuine but borderline: the entry never names the descendant doctrine; the axiom names the living rule that grew from the Roman title, which is illumination rather than repetition.

— Common and solemn form of probate.

In English law, there arc two kinds of pro- bate, namely, probate in common form, and probate in solemn form. Probate in common form is granted in the registry, without any formal procedure in court, upon an ex parte application made by the executor. Probate in solemn form is in the nature of a final de- cree pronounced in open court, all parties in- terested having been duly cited. The difference between the effect of probate in common form and probate in solemn form is that probate in common form is revocable, whereas probate in solemn form is irrevocable, as against ail per- sons who have been cited to see the proceed- ings, or who can be proved to have been privy to- those proceedings, except in the case where a will of subsequent date is discovered, in which case probate of an earlier will, though granted in solemn form, would he revoked. A writ which issued out of the common- law Jurisdiction of the court of chancery, when judges of any subordinate court delay- ed the parties, for that they would not give judgment either on the one side or on the other, when they ought so to do. In such a case, a writ of procedendo ad judicium was awarded, commanding the inferior court In the sovereign's name to proceed to give judg- menL but without specifying any particular Judgment Wharton.

Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.

Why: 'A good and lawful man' — the juror or witness free from all exception. This is the biblical qualification standard for adjudicators: able, God-fearing, truthful, hating covetousness.

PROCEDURE.

This word is commonly opposed to the sum of legal principles consti- tuting the substance of the law, and denotes the body of rules, whether of practice or of pleading, whereby rights are effectuated through the successful application of the proper remedies. It is also generally distin- guished from the law of evidence. Brown. See Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 Sup.

[Axiom: final judgments are immune from collateral attack]

The 'collateral proceeding' sub-entry states the rule's setting; the rule itself is that a final judgment cannot be attacked collaterally — it must be challenged by direct appeal or other direct review.

Why: Genuine but borderline: the entry defines the collateral-proceeding setting without stating the consequence; the axiom states the consequence courts apply. Kept for the naming value.

Nobles ; lords. The house of lords in England is called, in Latin, “Do- mus Procervm."

PROOEs VERBAL. In Freuch law. A written report, which is signed, setting forth a statement of facts. This term is applied to the report proving the meeting and the resolutions passed at a meeting of share- holders, or to the report of a commission to take testimony. It can also be applied to the statement drawn up by a huissicr in relation to any facts which one of the parties to a suit can be interested in proving; for instance the sale of a counterfeited object. PROCESS.

In practice. This word Is generally defined to be the means of compel- ling the defendant in an action to appear in court. And when actions were commenced by original writ, instead of, as at present, by writ of summons, the method of compelling the defendant to appear was by what was termed “original process,’’ being founded an the original writ, and so called also to distin- guish it from “mesne” or “intermediate” process, which was some writ or process which issued during the progress of the suit The word “process,” however, as now com- monly understood, signifies those formal in- struments called “writs.” The word “pro- cess” is in common-law practice frequently applied to the writ of summons, which is the instrument now in use for commencing per- sonal actions. But in its more comprehensive signification it includes not only the writ of summons, but all other writs which may be Issued during the progress of an action. Those writs which are used to carry the judg- ments of the courts into effect, and which are termed "writs of execution’’ are also common- ly denominated “final process,” because they usually issue at the end of a suit See Carey v. German American Ins. Co., 84 Wis. SO, 54 N. W. 18, 20 L. R. A. 267, 36 Am. St Rep. 907 ; Savage v. Oliver, 110 Ga. 636, 36 S. E. 54 ; Perry v. Lorillard Fire Ins. Co., 6 Lana. (N. Y.) 204 ; Davenport v. Bird, 34 Iowa, 527 ; Philadelphia v. Campbell, 11 Fhila. (Pa.) 164 ; Phillips v. Spotts, 14 Neb. 139, 15 N. W. 332.

In the practice of the English privy council in ecclesiastical appeals, “process” means on official copy of the whole proceedings and proofs of the court below, which is transmit- ted to the registry of the court of appeal by the registrar of the court below in obedi- ence to an order or requisition requiring him so to do, called a “monition for process,” is- sued by the court of appeal. Macph. Jud. Com. 173.

— Abuse of process. See Abuse. — Compul- sory process. See Compulsory.— Executory process. In the law of Louisiana, a summary process in the nature of an order of seizure and sale, which is available when the right of the creditor arises from an act or instrument which includes or imports a confession of judgment and a privilege or lien in bis favor, and also to enforce the execution of a judgment render- ed in another jurisdiction. See Rev. Code l’rac. 1894, art. 732.— Final process. The last process in a suit; that is, writs of execu- tion. Thus distinguished from mesne process, which includes all writs issued during the prog- ress of a cause and before final judgment. Amis v. Smith, 16 Pet. 313, 10 L. Ed. 973.— Ir- regular process. Sometimes the term “ir- regular process” has been defined to mean pro- cess absolutely void, and not merely erroneous and voidable; but usually it has been applied to all process not issued in strict conformity with the law, whether the defect appears upon the face of the process, or by reference to ex- trinsic facts, and whether such defects render the process absolutely void or only voidable. Cooper v. Harter, 2 Ind. 253. And see Bryan v. Congdon, 86 Fed. 221, 29 C. C. A. 670: Paine v. Ely, N. Chip. (Vt) 24— Judicial process. In a wide sense, this term may in- clude all the acts of a court from the be- ginning to the end of its proceedings in a given cause : but more specifically it means the writ, summons, mandate, or other process which Is used to inform the defendant of the institntion of proceedings against him and to com- pel his appearance, in either civil or criminal cases. See State v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 575, 47 N. E. 551, 38 L R. A. 519. 60 Am. St. Itep. 756; In re Smith (D. C.) 132 Fed. 303. —Legal process. This term is sometimes used as equivalent to “lawful process.” Cooley v. Davis, 34 Iowa, 130. But properly it means a writ, warrant, mandate, or other process issuing from a court of justice, such as an at- tachment, execution, injunction, etc. See In re Bininger. 3 Fed. Cas. 416; Loy v. Ilome Ins. Co., 24 Minn. 319, 31 Am. Rep. 346; Perry v. Lorillard F. Ins. Co., 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 204 : Cbm. v. Brower, 7 Pa. Dist. R. 255.— Mesne process. As distinguished from final process, this signifies any writ or process issued between the commencement of the action and the suing out of execution. It includes the writ of summons, (although that is now the usu- al commencement of actions,) because ancient- ly that was preceded by the original writ. The writ of capiat ad respondendum was called “mesne” to distinguish it. on the one hand, from the original process by which a suit was formerly commenced ; and, on the other, from the final process of execution. Birmingham Dry Goods Co. v. Bledsoe. 113 Ala. 418, 21 South. 403; Hirshlser v. Tinsley, 9 Mo. App. 342; Pennington v. Lowinstein, 19 Fed. Cas. 168. — Original process. That by which a ju- dicial proceeding is instituted ; process to com- pel the appearance of the defendant. Distin- guished from “mesne” process, which issues, during the progress of a suit, for some sub- ordinate or collateral purpose ; and from “final” process, which is process of execution. Appeal of Hotchkiss. 32 Conn. 353. — Process of Interpleader. A means of determining the ri"ht to property claimed by each of tiyo or more persons, which is in the possession of a third.— Process of law. See Due Process of Law.— Process roll. In practice. A roll used for the entry of process to save the stat- ute of limitations. 1 Tidd, Pr. 161, 162.— Regular process. Such as is issued accord- ing to rule and the prescribed practice, or which emanates, lawfully and in a proper case, from a court or magistrate possessing jurisdic- tion.—Summary process. Such as is Im- mediate or instantaneous, in distinction from the ordinary course, by emanating and taking effect without intermediate applications or delays. Gaines v. Travis. 8 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 49.— Trustee process. The name given in some states (particularly in New England) to the process of garnishment or foreign attach? ment.— Void process. Such as was issued without power in the court to award it, or which the court had not acquired jurisdiction to issue in the particular case, or which fails in some material respect to comply with the requisite form of legal process. Bryan v, Congdon, 86 Fed. 223, 29 C. O. A. 670.

In patent law. A means or method em- ployed to produce a certain result or effect, or a mode of treatment of given materials to produce a desired result, either by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, or of one substance to another. Irrespective of any ma- chine or mechanical device; in this sense a “process” is patentable, though, strictly speaking, it Is the art and not the process which Is the subject of patent. The entry's 'process of law' cross-reference points to due process: no person shall 'be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.'

Why: Genuine: the due process clauses are the constitutional content of 'process of law'; quoted verbatim.

[Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U.S. 780 (1876)]

For the patent-law sense, the Supreme Court authority the entry itself cites defines a patentable process as an art — a means or method of producing a result, irrespective of any particular machine.

[50 Cent, 'P.I.M.P.', 2003]

"No Cadillac, no perms, you can't see / That I'm a motherfuckin' P-I-M-P." The entry defines the procurer plainly: a pimp, one that procures. The track is hip-hop's most famous first-person inhabitation of exactly that legal role — the statute's subject speaking in his own voice. (Profanity retained verbatim; bowdlerizing would falsify the quote.)

Why: Added because the link is definitional: the entry IS the pimp, and the lyric is the pimp's own self-declaration, verbatim-certain. Genuine illumination of the role the law punishes.

PROCUREUR.

In French law. An at- torney-; one who has received a commission from another to act on his behalf. There were in France two classes of procureurs: Procureurs ad ncgotia, appointed by an in- dividual to act for him in the administration of his affairs ; persons invested with a power of attorney; corresponding to “attorneys In fact.” Procureurs ad litcs were persons ap- pointed and authorized to act for a party in a court of 'justice. These corresponded to at- torneys at law, (now called, in England, “so- licitors of the supreme court.”) The order of procureurs was abolished in 1791, and that of avoufs established in their place. Mozley & Whitley.

PROCUREUR DU ROI, in French law, is a public prosecutor, with whom rests the initiation of all criminal proceedings. In the exercise of his office (which appears to include the apprehension of offenders) he is entitled to call to his assistance the public force, (posse comitatus ;) and the officers of police are auxiliary to him.

PROCUREUR GENERAL, or IM- PERIAL. In French law. An officer of the imperial court, who either personally or by his deputy prosecutes every one who is ac- cused of a crime according to the forms of French law. His functions appear to be con- fined to preparing the case for trial at the assizes, assisting in that trial, demanding the sentence in case of a conviction, and being present at the delivery of the sentence. He has a general superintendence over the of- ficers of police and of the fuges d’instruction, and he 'requires from the procureur du roi a general report once in every three months. Brown.

PROFITS. 1. The advance in the price of goods sold beyond the cost of purchase. The gain made by the sale of produce or manufactures, after deducting the value of the labor, materials, rents, and all expenses, together with the interest of the capital em- ployed. Webster. See Providence Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. 805, 19 L. Ed. 828; Mundy v. Van Hoose, 104 Ga. 292, 80 S. E. 783; Hinckley v. Pittsburgh Bessemer Steel Co., 121 U. S. 264, 7 Sup. Ct 875, 30 L. 2. The benefit, advantage, or pecuniary gain accruing to the owner or occupant of land from its actual use; as in the'fnmlllar phrase "rents, issues, and profits,"' or in the expression "mesne profits."

3. A division • sometimes made of incor- poreal hereditaments ; as distinguished from "easements," which tend rather to the con- venience than the profit of the claimant 2 Steph. Comm. 2.

—Mesne profits. Intermediate profits; that is, profits which have been accruing between two given periods. Thus, after a party has recovered the land itself in an action of eject- ment, he frequently brings another action for the purpose of recovering the profits which have been accruing or arising out of the land between the time when his title to the possession accrued or was raised and the time of his recovery in the action of ejectment, and such an action is thence termed an "action for mesne profits." Brown.— Mesne profits, action of. But as the expression "gross profits" Is sometimes used to describe the mere excess of present value over former value, or of returns from sales over prime cost, the phrase "net profits" is appropriate to de- scribe the gain which remains after the further deduction of all expenses, charges, costs, allow- ance for depreciation, etc*.— Profit and loss. PROMISE.

A declaration, verbal or written, made by one person to another for a good or valuable consideration In the na- ture of a covenant by which the promisor binds himself to do or forbear some act, and gives to the promisee a legal- right to de- mand and enforce a fulfillment. See Taylor v. Miller, 113 N. C. 340. 18 S. E. 504 ; New- comb v. Clark, 1 Denlo (N. Y.) 228; Foute v. Bacon, 2 Cush. (Miss.) 104 ; U. S. v. Bal- tic Mills Co., 124 Fed. 41, 59 C. C. A. 558.

“Promise” is to be distinguished, on the one hand, from a mere declaration of intention in- volving no engagement or assurance as to the future; and, on the other, from “agreement," which is an obligation arising upon reciprocal promises, or upon a promise founded on a con- sideration. Abbott.

“Fictitious promises,” sometimes called “implied promises,” or “promises Implied In law,” occur in the case of those contracts which were Invented to enable persons In certain cases to take advantage of the old rules of pleading peculiar to contracts, and which are not now of practical Importance. Sweet.

— Mutual promises. Promises simultaneous- ly made by and between two parties; each be- ing the consideration for the other.— Naked promise. One given without any considera- tion, equivalent, or reciprocal obligation, and for that reason not enforceable at law. See Arend v. Smith, 151 N. Y. 502, 45 N. E. 872. —New promise. An undertaking or promise, based upon and having relation to a former romise which, for some reason, can no longer e enforced, whereby the promisor recognizes and revives Rnch former promise and engages to fulfill it.— Parol promise. A simple contract; a verbal promise. 2 Steph. Comm. 109.— Prom- ise of marriage. A contract mutually en- tered Into by a man and a woman that they will marry each other.

PROPERTY.

Rightful dominion over external objects; ownership; the unrestrict- ed and exclusive right to a thing; the right to dispose of the substance of a thing in every legal way, to possess it, to use It, and to exclude every one else from interfering with it. Mackeld. Rom. Law, S 266.

Property is the highest’ right a man can have to anything; being used for that right which one has to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which noway depends on another man’s cour- tesy. Jackson ex dem. Pearson v. Housel, 17 Johns. 281, 283.

A right imparting to the owner a power of indefinite user, capable of being transmitted to universal successors by way of descent, and Imparting to the owner the power of disposition, from himself and his successors per uni- versitatem, and from all other persona who have a spes succession under any existing conces- sion or disposition, in favor of such person or series of persons as he may choose, with the like capacities and powers as he had himself, and under such conditions as the municipal or par- ticular law allows to be annexed to the disposi- tions of private persons. Aust. Jur. (Campbell’s Ed.) f 1103.

The right of property is that sole and despotic dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world, in total exclusion of the right of any other individual in the universe. It consists in the free use, en- joyment, and disposal of all a person’s acquisi- tions, without any control or diminution save only bv the laws of the land.

PROPTER.

For; on account of. The initial word of several Latin phrases.

— Propter affectum. For or on account of tome affection or prejudice. The name of a species of challenge, (q . v.)— -Propter defec- tum. On account of or for some defect. The name of a species of challenge, (q. v.)— Propter defectum sanguinis. On account of failure of blood.— Propter delictum. For or on ac- count of crime. The name of a species of chal- lenge, (q. v.)— Propter honoris respectum. On account of respect of honor or rank. See Challenge. — Propter impotentiam. On •account of helplessness. The term describes one of the grounds of a qualified property in wild animals, consisting in the fact of their inability to escape; as is the case with the young of such animals before they can fly or run. 2 Bl. Comm. 304.— Propter privilegium. On account of privilege. The term describes one of the grounds of a qualified property in wild nnimals, consisting in the special privilege of hunting, taking and killing them, in a given park or preserve, to the exclusion of other per- sons. 2 Bl. Comm. 394.

[Axiom: jurors are subject to challenge for cause for implied bias]

The propter affectum, propter defectum, and propter delictum challenges are the common-law species of challenge for cause for implied bias: a juror may be removed where relationship, interest, formed opinion, or disqualifying status implies partiality as a matter of law.

Why: Genuine but borderline: the entry lists the species of challenge without stating the living practice; the axiom names the consequence — removal for cause — that these challenges serve.

PRORATE.

[Axiom: subject-matter jurisdiction cannot be conferred by the parties' consent]

The Scots doctrine the entry describes — jurisdiction conferred on an otherwise incompetent judge by the parties' consent — is the opposite of the American rule: subject-matter jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent, waiver, or estoppel, and its absence may be raised at any time.

Why: Genuine: the illumination is the contrast — the entry describes a doctrine American law rejects, and the axiom states the rejecting rule, which is what an American reader needs.

PROROGATION.

Prolonging or putting off to another day. In English law, a pro- rogation is the continuance of the parlia- ment from one session to another, as an ad- journment is a continuation of the session from day to day. Wharton.

PROSECUTION.

In criminal law. A criminal action; a proceeding instituted and carried on by due course of law, before a competent tribunal, for the purpose of de- termining the guilt or innocence of a per- son charged with crime. See U. S. v. Rels- lnger, 128 U. S. 308, 9 Sup. Ct. 99, 32 L. Ed. 480 ; Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 257. 25

By an easy extension of its meaning “pros- ecution’’ is sometimes used to designate the state as the party proceeding in a criminal action, or the prosecutor, or counsel ; as when we speak of “the evidence adduced by the prosecution.”

—Malicious prosecution. See Malicious.

[Romans 13:4, KJV]

For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

Why: Prosecution is the criminal action carried on by the state. This verse is the theological root of public prosecution: the ruler as God's minister, bearing the sword against evildoers.

[N.W.A., 'Fuck tha Police', 1988]

"In the case of N.W.A. versus the police department / Prosecuting attorneys are MC Ren, Ice Cube, and Eazy-motherfuckin'-E." The entry: a criminal proceeding before a competent tribunal to determine guilt or innocence. The track stages exactly that — court convened, Judge Dre presiding, prosecuting attorneys named — with accuser and accused inverted: the police stand trial. Hip-hop's most famous dramatization of a prosecution, illuminating the term by asking who gets to be the prosecution.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Why: Added because the lyric stages a literal prosecution (caption, tribunal, prosecuting attorneys named) — it is about the proceeding itself, not merely adjacent. Verbatim-certain; the inversion is the illumination.

PROSECUTOR.

In practice. He who prosecutes another for a. crime in the name of the government.

— Private prosecutor. One who sets in mo- tion the machinery of criminal justice against a person whom he suspects or believes to be guilty of a crime, by laying an accusation before the proper authorities, and who is not himself an offi- cer of justice. See Ileacock v. State. 13 Tex. App. 129 ; State v. Millain, 3 Nev. 425.— Pros- ecutor of the pleas. This name is given, in New Jersey, to the county officer who is charged with the prosecution of criminal actions, cor- responding to the “district attorney” or ‘‘coun- ty attorney” in other states.— PnbUo prosecu- tor. Why: Genuine: the ex post facto clauses are the constitutional prohibition on the retrospective laws the entry distinguishes from prospective ones; quoted verbatim.

PROSPECTUS.

A document published by a company or corporation, or by persons acting as its agents or assignees, setting forth the nature and objects of an issue of shares, debentures, or other securities creat- ed by the company or corporation, and in- viting the public to subscribe to the issue. A prospectus is also usually published on the issue, in England, of bonds or other se- curities by a foreign state or corporation. Sweet.

[Law: Securities Act of 1933 — registration and prospectus requirements]

The prospectus the entry defines — the document inviting the public to subscribe to an issue of securities — is federally regulated: public offerings require registration and a conforming prospectus.

Why: Genuine: the '33 Act is the federal statute governing exactly the public-subscription prospectus the entry describes; cited in loose form to avoid overclaiming section numbers.

PROSTITUTE.

A woman who indis- criminately consorts with men for hire. Car- penter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. X.) 611 ; State v. Stoyell, 04 Me. 24, 89 Am. Dec. 716.

PROTEST. 1. A formal declaration made by a person interested or concerned in some act about to be done, or already per- formed, and in relation thereto, whereby he expresses his dissent or disapproval, or af- firms the act to be done against his will or convictions, the object being generally to save some right which would be lost to him if his implied assent could be made out, or to exonerate himself from some responsibil- ity which would attach to him unless he ex- pressly negatived his assent to or voluntary participation in the act.

2. A notarial act, being a formal state- ment in writing made by a notary under his seal of office, at the request of the holder of a bill or note, in which such bill or note is described, and it is declared that the same was on a certain day presented for payment, (or acceptance, as the case may lie,) and that such payment or acceptance was refused, and stating the reasons, if any, given for such refusal, whereupon the notary protests against all parties to such Instrument, and declares that they will be held responsible for all loss or damage arising from its dis- honor. See Annvllle Nat. Bank v. Kettering, 100 Pa. 531, 51 Am. Rep. 536; Ayrault v. Pacific Bank, 47 N. Y. 575, 7 Am. Rep. 489.

A formal notarial certificate attesting the dis- honor of a bill of exchange or promissory note. Benj. Chaim. Bills & N. art. 170.

A solemn declaration written by the notary, under a fair copy of the bill, stating that the payment or acceptance has been demanded and refused, the reason, if any, assigned, and that the bill is therefore protested. Dennistoun v. Stewart. 17 How. G07T 15 L. Ed. 228.

“Protest,” in a technical sense, means only the formal declaration drawn up and signed by the notary ; yet, as used by commercial men, the word includes all the steps necessary to charge an. indorser. Townsend v. Lorain Bank, 2 Ohio St. 340.

3. A formal declaration made by a minor- ity (or by certain individuals) in a legisla- tive body that they dissent from some act or resolution of the body, usually adding the grounds of their dissent. The term, in this sense, seems to be particularly appropriate to such a proceeding In the English house of lords. See Auditor General v. Board of Sup'rs, 89 Mich. 552, 51 N. W. 483.

4. The name “protest” is also given to the formal statement, usually in writing, made by a person who is called upon by pub- lic authority to pay a sum of money, in which he declares that he does not concede the legality or Justice of the claim or his duty to pay it, or that he disputes the amount demanded; the object being to save his right to recover or reclaim the amount, which right would 'be lost by his acquies- cence. Thus, taxes may be paid under “pro- test"

See Meyer v. Clark, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 509.

5. “Protest” is also the name of a pat>er served on a collector of customs by an im- porter of merchandise, stating that he be- lieves the sum charged as duty to be excess- ive, and that, although he pays such sum for the purpose of getting his goods out of the custom-house, he reserves the right to bring an action against the collector to re- cover the excess.

6. In maritime law, a protest is a written statement by the master of a vessel, attest- ed by a proper judicial officer or a notary, to the effect that damage suffered by the ship on her voyage was caused by storms or other perils of the sea, without any negligence or misconduct on his own part. A term applied to an acceptance of a bill by a third, person, after protest for nonacceptance by the' drawee. 3 Kent, Comm. 87. — Waiver of protest. As applied to a note or bill, a waiver of protest implies not only dis- pensing with the formal act known as “pro- test"’ but also with that which ordinarily most precede it, viz., demand and notice of non-pay- ment. See Baker v. Scott, 29 Kan. 136. 44 Am. Rep. 628; First Nat. Bank v. Hartman, 110 Pa. 196, 2 Atl. 271 ; Coddington v. Davis, 1 N. Y. 186.

Assignees to whom the property of a bankrupt was assigned until the regular or permanent assignees were appointed by the creditors.— Provisional com- mittee. A committee appointed for a tempo- rary occasion.— Provisional government. One temporarily established in anticipation of and to exist and continue until another (more regular or more permanent) shall be organized and instituted in its stead. Chambers v. Fisk, 22 Tex. 535.— Provisional order. In Eng- lish law. Under various acts of parliament, certain public bodies and departments of the government are authorized to inquire into mat- ters which, in the ordinary course, could only be dealt with by a private act of parliament, and to make orders for their regulation. These orders have no effect unless they are confirmed by an act of parliament, and are hence called “provisional orders.” Several orders may be confirmed by one act The object of this mode of proceeding is to save the trouble and expense of promoting a number of private bills. Sweet — Provisional remedy. A remedy provided for present need or for the immediate occasion; one adapted to meet a particular exigency. Par- ticularly, a temporary process available to a plaintiff in a civil action, which secures him against loss, irreparable injury, dissipation of the property, etc., while the action is pending. Such are the remedies by injunction, appoint- ment of a receiver, attachment, or arrest. The term is chiefly used in the codes of practice. See McCarthy v. McCarthy, 54 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 100; Witter v. Lyon, 34 Wis. 574; Snavely v. Abbott Buggy Co., 30 Kan. 106, 12 Pac. 522.

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 64 — seizure of person or property under state remedies]

The provisional remedies the entry lists — injunction, receiver, attachment, arrest — secure the plaintiff against loss while the action pends; federally, every state-law remedy for seizing person or property to secure satisfaction of a potential judgment is made available.

Why: Genuine: Rule 64 is the federal rule incorporating the provisional remedies (attachment, garnishment, replevin, sequestration) the entry catalogs.

PROVISO.

A condition or provision which is inserted in a deed, lease, mortgage, or contract, and on the performance or non- performance of which the validity of the deed, etc., frequently depends ; it usually be- gins with the word “provided."

A proviso in deeds or laws is a limitation or exception to a grant made or authority con- ferred, the effect of which is to declare that the one shall not operate, or the other be exercised, unless in the case provided. Voorhees v. Bank of United States, 10 Pet 449, 9 L. Ed. 490.

The word “proviso” is generally taken for a condition, hot it differs from it in several re- spects; for a condition is usually created by the grantor or lessor, but a proviso by the gran- tee or lessee. Jacob.

A proviso differs from an exception. 1 Barn. A Aid. 99. An exception exempts, absolutely, from the operation of an engagement or an en- actment ; a proviso defeats their operation, con- ditionally. An exception takes out of an en- gagement or enactment something which would otherwise be part of the subject-matter of it; a proviso avoids them by way of defeasance or excuse. 8 Am. Jur. 242.

[Axiom: adequate provocation mitigates murder to voluntary manslaughter]

The entry defines provocation but not its great doctrinal consequence: adequate provocation — conduct arousing heat of passion in a reasonable person — reduces an intentional killing from murder to voluntary manslaughter.

Why: Genuine: the heat-of-passion mitigation is the operative legal consequence of the provocation the entry defines; the entry never names it, so the axiom illuminates rather than repeats.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 6:4, KJV]

And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Why: Provocation is conduct tending to arouse rage in another. This verse addresses provocation directly — provoking to wrath — in the family, the law's original school of the concept.

The entry's proximate-cause definition is the doctrine of Palsgraf: liability turns on foreseeability — a duty is owed only to those within the reasonably foreseeable zone of danger, not to the world at large.

Why: Genuine: Palsgraf is the canonical proximate-cause decision, and its foreseeability holding is exactly the 'efficient cause' analysis the entry's definition performs.

The entry defines prudence as the care required by the circumstances, contrasted with negligence; the operative standard it implies is the reasonable-person test: negligence is the failure to exercise the care of a reasonably prudent person under the circumstances.

PUBLIC.

Pertaining to a state, nation, or whole community; proceeding from, re- lating to, or ahecting the whole body of peo- ple or an entire community. Open to all; notorious. Common to all or many; gen- eral ; open to common use. Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt 786, 14 Am. Rep. 640; Crane v. Wa- ters (C. C.) 10 Fed. 621 ; Austin v. Soule, 36 Vt. 650; Appeal of Eliot, 74 Conn. 586, 51 Atl. 558 ; O’Hara r. Miller, 1 Kulp (Pa.) 295.

A distinction has been made between the terms “public” and “general.” They are some- times used as synonymous. The former term is applied strictly to that which concerns all the citizens and every member of the state; while the latter includes a lesser, though still n large, portion of the community. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 128.

As a noun, the word “public” denotes the whole body politic, or the aggregate of the citizens of a state, district, or municipality. Knight v. Thomas, 93 Me. 494, 45 Atl. 499 ; State v. Luce, 9 Houst. (Del.) 396, 32 Atl. 1076; Wyatt v. Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 Pac. 906.

— Public appointments. Public offices or stations which are to be filled by the appoint- ment of individuals, under authority of law, in- stead of by election.— Public building. One of which the possession and use, as well as the property in it, are in the public. Pancoast v. Troth, 34 N. J. Law, 383.— Public law. That branch or department of law which is concerned with the state in its political or sovereign capac- ity, including constitutional and administrative law, and with the definition, regulation, and en- forcement of rights in cases where the state is regarded as the subject of the right or object of the duty,— including criminal law and crim- inal procedure, — and the law of the state, con- sidered in its quasi private personality, ». c., as capable of holding or exercising rights, or ac- quiring and dealing with property, in the char- acter of an individual. See Iloll. Jur. 106, 300. That portion of law which is concerned with political conditions ; that is to say, with the powers, rights, duties, capacities, and incapaci- ties which are peculiar to political superiors, supreme and subordinate. Aust. Jur. “Public law,” in one sense, is a designation given to "in- ternational law,” as distinguished from the laws of a particular nation or state. In another sense, a law or statute that applies to the peo- ple generally of the nation or state adopting or enacting it. is denominated a public law, as con- tradistinguished from a private law, affecting only an individual or a small number of per- sons. Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 773, 14 Am. Rep. 640.— Public offense. A public offense is an act or omission forbidden by law, and

A right, subsisting in the public, to pnss over a body of water, whether the land under it be public or owned by a pri- vate person. — Public place. A place to which the general public has a right to resort; not necessarily a place devoted solely to the uses of the public, but a place which is in point of fact public rather than private, a place visited by many persons and usually accessible to the public. See State v. Welch, 88 Ind. 310; Gom- precht v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 434, 37 S. W. 734; Russell v. Dyer, 40 N. II. 187; Roach v. Eugene, 23 Or. 376, 31 Pac. 825; Taylor v. State, 22 Ala. 15.— Public purpose. In the law of taxation, eminent domain, etc., this is a term of classification to distinguish the objects for which, according to settled usage, the gov- ernment is to provide, from those which, by the like usage, are left to private interest, inclfha-' tion, or liberality. People v. Salem Tp. Board, 20 Mich. 485, 4 Am. Rep. 400. See Black, Const Law (3d Eld.) p. 454, et cq. — Public service. A term applied in modem usage to the objects and enterprises of certain kinds of corporations, which specially serve the needs of the general public or conduce to the comfort and convenience of an entire community, such as railroads, gas, water, and electric light com- panies.— Public, true, and notorious. The old form by which charges in the allegation* in the ecclesiastical courts were described at the end of each particular.— Public use, in consti- tutional provisions restricting the exercise of the right to ttfke private property in virtue of em- inent domain, means a use concerning the wholg community as distinguished from particular In- dividuals. But each and Ivery member of so- ciety need not be equally interested in such use, or be personally and directly affected by it; if the object is to satisfy a great public want or exigency, that is sufficient. PUBLICATION. 1. The act of publish- ing anything or making it public ; offering it to public notice, or rendering It accessible to public scrutiny.

2. As descriptive of the publishing of laws and ordinances, “publication” means printing or otherwise reproducing copies of them and distributing them in such a manner as to make their contents easily accessible to the public ; it forms no part of the enactment of the law. “Promulgation,” on the other hand, seems to denote the proclamation or an- nouncement of the edict or statute as a pre- liminary to its acquiring the force and op- eration of law. But the two terms are often used interchangeably. Chicago v. McCoy, 136 111. 344, 26 N. E. 363, 11 L. R. A. 413 ; Sholes v. State, 2 Pin. (Wls.) 499.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII]

The entry's 'cruel and unusual punishment' definition is the Eighth Amendment's operative phrase: 'nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.'

Why: Genuine: the Amendment is the textual source of the phrase the entry defines at length; quoted verbatim.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 12:19, KJV]

Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord.

Why: Punishment is pain or penalty inflicted by authority of law. This verse reserves vengeance to lawful hands — punishment belongs to authority, not private revenge — the root of public punishment.

PURCHASE.

The word “purchase” is used in law in contradistinction to "descent,” and means any other mode of acquiring real property than by the common course of in- heritance. But it is also much used in its more restricted vernacular sense, (that of buying for a sum of money,) especially in modern law literature; and this is univer- sally its application to the case of chattels. See Stamm v. Bostwick, 122 N. Y. 48, 25 —Purchase money. The consideration in money paid or agreed to be paid by the buyer to the seller of property, particularly of land. Purchase money means money stipulated to be paid by a purchaser to his vendor, and does not include money the purchaser may have borrow- ed to complete his purchase. Purchase money, as between vendor and vendee only, is contem- plated ; as between purchaser and lender, the money is “borrowed money.” Heuisler v. Nick- urn, 38 Md. 270. But see Houlehan v. Rassler, 73 Wis. 557, 41 N. W. 720.— Purchase-money mortgage. See Mobtgaoe.— Quasi pur- chase. In the civil law. A purchase of prop- erty not founded on the actual agreement of the parties, but on conduct of the owner which is inconsistent with any other hypothesis than that he intended a sale.— Words of purchase. Words of purchase are words which denote the person who is to take the estate. Thus, if 1 grant land to A. for twenty-one years, and aft- er the determination of thnt term to A.’s heirs, the word “heirs” does not denote the duration of A.’s estate, but the person who is to take the remainder on the expiration of the term, and is therefore called a “word of purchase." PURCHASER.

One who acquires real property in any other mode than by descent One who acquires either real or personal property by buying it for a price in money; a buyer ; vendee.

In the construction of registry acts, the term “pnrohftser” is usually taken in its technical legal sense. It means a complete purchaser, or, in other words, one clothed with the legal title. QUASTIO.

In Roman law. Anciently a species of commission granted by the comitia to one or more persons for the pur- pose of Inquiring into some crime or public offense and reporting thereon. In later times, the quwstio came to exercise plenary criminal jurisdiction, even to pronouncing sentence, and then was appointed i>eriodieal- ly, and eventually became a permanent com- mission or regular criminal tribunal, and was then called “quastio perpetua." See Maine, Anc. Law, 3C9-372.

In medieval law. The question ; the tor- ture; inquiry or inquisition by inflicting the torture.

— Cadit quastio. The question falls ; the dis- cussion ends; there Is no room for further ar- gument.— Quwstio vezata. A vexed question or mooted point; a question often agitated or discussed but not determined; a question or point which has been differently decided, and so left doubtful.

circumstances, natural or adventitious, which are inherently or legally necessary to render him eligible to fill an office or to perform a public duty or function. Thus, the ownership of a freehold estate may be made the qualification of a voter; so the possession of a certain amount of stock in a corporation may be the qualification neces- sary to enable one to serve on its board of directors. [Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 319]

The entry cites Cummings v. Missouri for the definition; the case's holding is the limit on the definition: post-Civil-War test oaths imposed as 'qualifications' for office were struck down as bills of attainder and ex post facto laws — legislatures may set qualifications, but not attainder by another name.

Why: Genuine: the citation (volume and page) comes from the entry's own body, so nothing is invented; the year is omitted rather than guessed. The holding gives the constitutional boundary of the defined term.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 18:21, KJV]

Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.

Why: Qualification is the possession of the qualities legally necessary to fill an office. This is the biblical qualification standard for public office: able, God-fearing, truthful, hating covetousness.

QUALIFIED.

an article, for a reduction of the agreed price on account of defects In the thing which diminish its value.

QUANTUM DAMNIFIC ATU8 ? How much damnified? The name of an issue di- rected by a court of equity to be tried in a court of law, to ascertain the amount of compensation to be allowed for damage.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 2-714 — damages for breach of warranty]

The civil-law action reducing the agreed price for defects is the ancestor of the buyer's warranty damages: the difference between the value of the goods as warranted and their value as delivered.

Why: Genuine: § 2-714 is the uniform measure for exactly the defect-in-value claim the quanti minoris action brought; the ancient action's modern form.

QUANTUM MERUIT.

As much as he deserved. In pleading.- The common count in an action of assumpsit for work and labor, founded on an implied assumpsit or promise on the part of the defendant to pay the plaintiff as much as he reasonably deserved to have for his labor. 3 Bl. Comm. 161; 1 Tidd, Pr. 2.

■ Quantum taneu domino on homagio, tan tom dominos tenentl ez dominio debet p raster colam reverentiam; mntna debet esse domlnll et homagii fidelita- tis eennezlo. Co. Lltt 64. As much as the tenant by his homage owes to his lord, so much is the lord, by his lordship, indebted to the tenant, except reverence alone; the tie of dominion and of homage ought to be mutual.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 10:7, KJV]

And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house.

Why: 'As much as he deserved' — the action for work and labor on an implied promise to pay what the labor reasonably deserved. 'The labourer is worthy of his hire' is the scriptural root of quantum meruit.

QUANTUM VALEBANT.

As much as they were worth. In pleading. The com- mon count in an action of assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, founded on an Im- plied assumpsit or promise, on the part of the defendant, to pay the plaintiff as much as the goods were reasonably worth. 3 Bl. Comm. 161 ; 1 Tidd, Pr. 2.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

QUARANTINE.

A period of time (theo- retically forty days) during which a vessel, coming from a place where a contagious or infectious disease is prevalent, is detained by authority in the harbor of her port of desti- nation, or at a station near it, without being permitted to land or to discharge her crew or passengers. Quarantine Is said to have been first established at Venice in 1484. Baker, Quar. 3.

Ia real property. The space of forty days during which a widow bas a right to remain in her late husband's principal man- sion immediately after his death. The right of the widow is also called her “quarantine.” See Davis v. Lowden. 56 N. J. Eq. 126, 38 Atl. 648 ; Glenn v. Glenn, 41 Ala. 580 ; Spin- ning v. Spinning, 43 X. J. Eq. 215, 10 Atl. 270.

5e apparatus — Carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Law] — Law

[Law: 42 U.S.C. § 264 — federal quarantine authority]

The entry's first sense — detention of vessels from infected ports — is exercised federally as the quarantine authority over communicable disease: regulations for apprehension, detention, and conditional release to prevent interstate spread.

Why: Genuine: § 264 is the federal statute behind the maritime quarantine the entry defines; the widow's-quarantine sense is left alone as historical dower law.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 13:46, KJV]

All the days wherein the plague shall be in him he shall be defiled; he is unclean: he shall dwell alone; without the camp shall his habitation be.

Why: Quarantine is detention by authority where contagious disease is prevalent. This is scripture's quarantine law — the leper's separation without the camp.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Camus, The Plague, 1947]

(paraphrase) Oran sealed by plague — Camus's quarantined city is the entry's detained vessel written large: authority holding men apart from men against contagion. [Camus, The Plague, 1947] (paraphrase)

Why: Entry's core: detention by authority of those coming from where contagion prevails. The novel's whole premise is that mechanism at city scale. Marked (paraphrase).

[Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962)]

The entry's 'Political question' cross-reference is the justiciability doctrine: disputes textually committed to the political branches, or lacking judicially manageable standards, are nonjusticiable — the six-factor test of Baker v. Carr.

Why: Genuine: Baker v. Carr is the decision that systematized the political-question doctrine the entry cross-references; it gives the bare cross-ref its operative content.

QUIRIT ARLAN OWNERSHIP.

In Ro- man law. Ownership held by a title recog- nized by the municipal law, In an object also recognized by that law, and in the strict character of a Roman citizen. “Roman law originally only recognized one kind of domin- ion, called, emphatically, ‘qulritary domin- ion.’ Gradually, however, certain real rights arose which, though they failed to satisfy all the elements of the definition of qulritary dominion, were practically Its equivalent, and received from the courts a similar protec- tion. These real rights might fall short of qulritary dominion in three respects: (1>

Either in respect of the persons in whom they resided ; (2) or of the subjects to which they related; or (3) of the title by which they were acquired.” In the latter case, the ownership was called “bonltarian,” i. e., "the property of a Roman citizen, In a subject capable of qulritary property, acquired by a title not known to the civil law, but Intro- duced by the pnetor and protected by his imperium or supreme executive power;" e. g ., where res mancipi had been transferred by mere tradition. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 6:12, KJV]

And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

Why: Quittance is release, acquittance, discharge. This petition is the release-of-debt root — forgiveness of debts as the pattern of all quittance.

QUO ANIMO.

Lat. With what Intention or motive. Used sometimes as a substan- tive, In lieu of the single word “animus" design or motive. "The quo animo Is the real subject of Inquiry." 1 Kent, Comm. 77.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea]

'The quo animo is the real subject of inquiry' — intention or motive — states the mens rea principle: the act alone does not make one guilty unless the mind is guilty.

Why: Genuine: the maxim is the canonical statement of the intent-inquiry the entry defines; standard form, confidently cited.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Samuel 16:7, KJV]

But the LORD said unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature; because

I have refused him: for the LORD seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the LORD looketh on the heart.

Why: 'With what intention or motive' — the inquiry into inward design. This verse states the inward-intention principle behind quo-animo inquiries: the LORD looks on the heart.

QUO JURE.

Lat In old English prac- tice. A writ which lay for one that had land in which another claimed common, to compel the latter to show by what title he claimed It Cowell ; Fltzh. Nat Brev. 128, F.

QUO MINUS.

Lat. A writ upon which all proceedings In the court of exchequer were formerly grounded. In It the plaintiff suggests that he is the king's debtor, and that the defendant has done him the injury or damage complained of, quo minus sufflcienS existit, by which he is less able to pay the king’s debt. This was originally requisite In order to give Jurisdiction to the court of ex- chequer; but now this suggestion Is a mere form. 3 Bl. Comm. 46.

Also, a writ which lay for him who had a grant of house-bote and hay-bote in another's woods, against the grantor making such waste as that the grantee could not enjoy his grant. Old Nat. Brev. 148.

.Quo modo quid oonatitnitwr eodem modo dlssolvitur. Jenk. Cent. 74. In the same manner by which nn.vthing Is consti- tuted by that it Is dissolved.

QUO WARRANTO.

In old English prac- tice. A writ, In the nature of a writ of right for the king, against him who claimed or usurped any office, franchise, or liberty, to inquire by what authority he supported his claim, lu order to determine the right. It lay also in case of uon-user, or long neg- lect of a franchise, or misuser or abuse of it ; being a writ commanding the defendant to show by what warrant he exercises such a franchise, having never had any grant of it, or having forfeited it by neglect or abuse. 3 Bl. Comm. 202.

In England, and quite generally through- out the United States, this writ has given place to an “information in the nature of a quo warranto,” which, though In form a crim- inal proceeding, is in effect a civil remedy similar to the old writ, and is the method now usually employed for trying the title to a corporate or other franchise, or to a public or corporate office. See Ames v. Kan- sas, 111 U. 8. 449, 4 Sup. Ct. 437, 28 L. Ed. 482; People v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 Pac. 764, 6 L. R. A. 444; State v. Owens, 63 Tex. 270; State v. Gleason, 12 Fla. 190; State v. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 21:23, KJV]

And when he was come into the temple, the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and said, By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority?

Why: Quo warranto commands the defendant to show by what warrant he exercises a franchise. This is the scriptural quo warranto — 'By what authority doest thou these things?' asked of Christ Himself.

[N.W.A., 'Fuck tha Police', 1988]

"And not the other color so police think / They have the authority to kill a minority." The writ lies against one who usurps an office, franchise, or liberty, commanding him to show by what warrant he exercises it. The lyric names the usurped authority under challenge — police power over Black life — and the track answers the writ's question by putting the police themselves on trial. Hip-hop's quo warranto: by what warrant does the badge kill?

Why: Added because the lyric directly names the authority that quo warranto would call to account, and the song performs the writ's function (summoning usurped power to show its warrant). Verbatim-certain; genuine, not for…

QUORUM.

When a 'committee, board of directors, meeting of shareholders, legisla- tive or other body of persons cannot act un- less a certain number at least of them are present, that number is called a “quorum." Sweet. In the absence of any law or rule fixing the quorum, it consists of a major- ity of those entitled to act. See Ex parte Willcocks, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 409, 17 Am. Dec. 525; State v. Wilkesville Tp., 20 Ohio St. 293; Heiskell v. Baltimore, 05 Md. 125, 4 Atl. 116, 57 Am. Rep. 308; Snider v. Rine- hart, 18 Colo. 18, 31 Pac. 710.

— Justices of the quorum. In English law, those justices of the peace whose presence at a session is necessary to make a lawful bench. AH the justices of the peace for a county are named and appointed in one commission, which authorizes them all, jointly and severally, to keep the peace, but provides that some particu- lar named justices or one of them shall always be present when business is to be transacted, the ancient Latin phrase being “quorum tmum

A sum paid or agreed to be paid for the redemption of captured property. 1 Kent. Comm. 105.

A “ransom," strictly speaking, is not a recap- ture of the captured property. It is 'rather a purchase of the right of the captors at the time, be it what it may ; or, more properly, it is a relinquishment of all the interest and benefit which the captors might acquire or consummate In the property, by a regular adjudication of a prize tribunal, whether it be an interest in rem. a lien, or a mere title to expenses. In this re- spect, there seems to be no difference between the case of a ransom of an enemy or a neutral. Maiaonnaire v. Keating, 2 Gall. 325, Fed. Oaa. No. 8.978.

In old English law. A sum of money paid for the pardoning of some great offense. The distinction between ransom and amer- ciament is said to lie that ransom was the re- demption of a coriioral punishment, while amerciament was a fine or penalty directly Imposed, and not in lieu of another punish- ment. Cowell; 4 Bl. Comm. 380; IJ. S. v. Griffin, 6 D. C. 57.

[Law: UCC § 3-407 — alteration of negotiable instruments]

An erasure that materially alters a written instrument invokes the alteration doctrine: a material alteration made without the obligor's assent voids or discharges the instrument.

Why: The entry defines rasure as scraping away letters/words from a written instrument and distinguishes it from obliteration; rasure is a species of alteration, and the alteration doctrine states its legal consequence. UC...

RATABLE ESTATE.

Within the mean- ing of a tax law, this term means “taxable estate ;” the real and personal property which the legislature designates as “tax- able." Marshfield v. Middlesex, 55 Vt. 546.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Ratihabitio mandato aequiparatur — ratification is equivalent to prior command]

This civil-law 'holding a thing ratified' is the root of the agency rule that subsequent ratification is equivalent to prior authority, relating back to the act.

Why: The entry defines ratam rem habere as 'to ratify or confirm it' (Dig. 46, 8, 12, 1); the ratihabitio maxim states the operative legal effect of ratification in the descended agency doctrine. Direct lineage, genuinely...

RATE.

Proportional or relative value, measure, or degree ; the proportion or stand- ard by which quantity or value is adjusted. Thus, the rate of interest is the proportion or ratio between the principal and interest. So the buildings in a town are rated for in- surance purposes; i. e., classified and indi vidually estimated with reference to their insurable qualities. In this sense also we speak of articles as being in “first-rate” or “second-rate" condition.

Absolute measure, value, or degree. Thus, we speak of the rate at which public lands are sold, of the, rates of fare upon railroads, etc. See Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Maddox, 116 Ga. 64, 42 S. E. 315 ; Chase v. New York Cent. It. Co., 26 N. Y. 526 ; People v. Dolan, 36 N. Y. 67.

The term is also used as the synonym of “tax ;" that is, a sum assessed by govern- mental authority upon persons or property, by proportional valuation, for public pur- poses. It is chiefly employed in this sense in England, but is there usually confined to taxes of a local nature, or those raised by the parish; such as the poor-rate, borough- rate, etc.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

It sometimes occurs in a connection which gives it a meaning synonymous with “as sessment;” that is, the apportionment of a tax among the whole number of persons who are responsible for it, by estimating the val- ue of the taxable property of each, and mak- ing a proportional distribution of the whole amount. Thus we speak of “rating” persons and property.

In marine Insurance, the term refers to the classification or scaling of vessels based on their relative state and condition In re- gard to Insurable qualities; thus, a vessel in the beat possible condition and offering the best risk from the underwriter’s stand- point, is “rated” as “A 1.” See Insurance Companies v. Wright, 1 Wall. 472, 17 L. Ed. 505.

—Rate of exohange. In commercial law. The actual price at which a bill, drawn in one country Upon another country, can be bought or obtained in the former country at any given time. Story, Bills, § 31.— Rate-tithe. In English law. When any sheep, or other cattle, are kept in a parish for less time than a year, the owner must pay tithe for them pro rata, ac- cording to the custom of the place. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 51.

[Law] — Law

[Law: the marital support duty as the basis of alimony]

Alimony rests on the common-law duty of marital support — the obligation to maintain a spouse — which is what this 'reasonable estover' secured to the wife.

Why: The entry equates the phrase with 'alimony' in one line; the support duty explains what alimony is for in law, giving the equivalence its legal content rather than leaving it a bare translation.

The clausula rebus sic stantibus is the treaty-law doctrine permitting termination or withdrawal upon a fundamental change of circumstances.

REBUT.

In pleading and evidence. To rebut Is to defeat or take away the effect of something. Thus, when a plaintiff in an action produces evidence which raises a pre- sumption of the defendant's liability, and the defendant adduces evidence whtch shows that the presumption is ill-founded, he la said to “rebut It” Sweet.

In the old law of real property, to rebut was to repel or bar a claim. Thus, when a person was sued for land which bad been warranted to him by the plaintiff or his an- cestor, and he pleaded the warranty as a defense to the nction. this was called a “re- butter.” Co. Lltt. 365a; Termes de la Ley.

REGHT.

Ger. Right; justice; equity; the whole body of law ; unwritten law ; law ; also a right

There is much ambiguity in the use of this term, an ambiguity which it shares with the French “droit," the Italian "diritto,” and the English “right” On the one hand, the term “recht" answers to the Roman "jua,” and thus indicates law in the abstract, consid- ered ns the foundation of all rights, or the complex of underlying moral principles which impart the character of justice to all positive law, or give it an ethical content. Taken in this abstract sense, the term may be an adjective. In which case it is equiva- lent to the English “just,” or a noun, in which case it may be paraphrased by the expressions “justice.” “morality,” or “equi- ty." On the other hand, it serves to point out a right : that Is. a power, privilege, facul- ty. or demand. Inherent in one person, and Incident upon another. In the latter signification "recht” (or "droit," or "diritto," or “right") is the correlative of “duty” or “ob- ligation.” In the former sense, it may be considered as opposed to wrong, injustice, or the absence of law. The word “recht" has the further ambiguity that it is used in con- tradistinction to “geaetz,” as "jua” is opposed to “lea," or the unwritten law to enacted law. See Dboxt; Jus; Right.

[Law: release on own recognizance in criminal procedure]

The modern descendant is release on recognizance — pretrial release on the defendant's recorded undertaking to appear.

Why: The entry defines the recognizance as an obligation of record conditioned on an act 'as to appear'; release on recognizance is that definition's living criminal-procedure form. Genuine lineage from the defined term.

RECOGNIZE.

To try; to examine in order to determine the truth of a matter. Also to enter into a recognizance.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 6:1, KJV]

My son, if thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger

Why: The recognizor is he who enters into a recognizance — who binds himself of record for another's performance, i.e. stands surety. Proverbs 6:1 is Scripture's standing warning on suretyship, the genus of the recognizance.

RECOLEMENT.

In French law. This is the process by which a witness, who has given his deposition, reads the same over and scrutinizes it, with a view to affirming bis satisfaction with it as it stands, or to mak- ing such changes in it as his better recollec- tion may suggest t6 him as necessary to the truth. This is necessary to the validity of the deposition. See Poth. Proc. Crim. § 4, art 4.

[Law: precatory words and the precatory-trust doctrine]

Precatory words ('wish,' 'desire,' 'recommend') raise the precatory-trust question: whether the testator meant to impose a binding trust or merely express a hope — modern law requires clear intent.

Why: The entry defines recommendatory/precatory language in wills; the precatory-trust doctrine is the construction question such language always raises. Directly illuminates the definition's legal stakes.

[Law: condonation as a bar in divorce]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

As condonation, reconciliation bars the forgiven marital offense as a ground of divorce — forgiveness pleaded as a defense.

Why: The entry says reconciliation is used in divorce law as synonymous with 'condonation'; condonation-as-bar states the doctrine's legal effect. Genuine: gives the operative consequence of the defined term.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 5:18, KJV]

And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation.

Why: Reconciliation is the renewal of amicable relations after enmity, implying forgiveness. The verse names both the act (God reconciling) and the office (the ministry of reconciliation).

[William Shakespeare, The Winter's Tale, c.1611]

(paraphrase) Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale is structured around the entry's concept: after sixteen years of enmity, Leontes is reconciled with Hermione and Perdita — the renewal of amicable relations implying forgiveness of injuries, dramatized in the final statue scene. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines reconciliation as renewal of amicable relations after enmity, usually implying forgiveness; the play's final act is the canonical dramatic working-out of exactly that. Paraphrase.

[Law: holdover tenancy]

The common-law analogue is the holdover tenancy: remaining in possession with the landlord's assent renews the tenancy as a periodic one.

Why: The entry defines reconduction as renewal of a lease; the holdover-tenancy rule is the same principle in the common-law system — continued possession as implied renewal. Genuine comparative illumination.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The name com- monly given to the process of reorganising, by acts of congress and executive action, the governments of the states which had passed ordinances of secession, and of re-establish- ing their constitutional relations to the national government, restoring their represen- tation in congress, and effecting the necessary changes in their Internal government, after the close of the civil war. See Black,' Const. Law (3d Ed.) 48; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700, 19 L. Ed. 227.

RECONTINUANCE seems to be used to signify that a person has recovered an in- corporeal hereditament of which he had been wrongfully deprived. Thus, “A. is dis- seised of a mannor, whereunto an advowson is appendant, an estranger [i. is., neither A. nor the disseisor] usurpes to the advowson ; If the disseisee [A.] enter into the mannor, the advowson is recontinued again, which was severed by the usurpation. • • • And so note a diversitie between a recon- tinuance and a remitter ; for a remitter can- not be properly, nnlesse there be two titles; but a recontinuance may be where there Is but one.” Co. Why: The entry names the post-Civil-War reorganization of the seceded states; the novel is the best-known fictional treatment of that exact historical process. Paraphrase.

RECOUPMENT.

In practice. Defalca- tion or discount from a demand. A keeping back something which is due, because there is an equitable reason to withhold It. Tom- lins.

Recoupment is a right of the defendant to have a deduction from the amount of the plaintiff's damages, for the reason that the plaintiff has not complied with the cross-obli- gations or independent covenants arising un- der the same contract. Code Ga. 1882, g 2909.

It is keeping back something which is due because there 1b an equitable reason to withhold it ; and is now uniformly applied where a man brings an action for breach of a contract be- tween him and the defendant ; and where the latter can show that some stipulation in the same contract was made by the plaintiff, which he has violated, the defendant may, if he choose, instead of suing in his turn, recoupe his dam- ages arising from the breach committed by the plaintiff, whether they be liquidated or not. A. 266 ; The Wellsville v. Geissie. 3 Ohio St. 341 ; Nichols v. Dusenbury, 2 N. Y. 286; Myers v. Estell, 47 Miss. 23.

In speaking of matters to be shown in de- fense, the term “recoupment” is ‘often used as synonymous with “reduction.” The term is of French origin, and signifies cutting again, or cutting back, and, as a defense, means the cut- ting back on the plaintiff's claim by the de- fendant. Like reduction, it is of necessity lim- ited to the amount of the plaintiff’s claim. It is properly applicable to a case where the same contract imposes mutual duties and obligations on the two parties, and one seeks a remedy for the breach of duty by the second, and the sec- ond meets the demand by a claim for the breach of duty by the first. Davenport v. Hub- bard, 46 Vt. 207, 14 Am. Rep. 620.

“Recoupment” differs from “set-off” in this respect; that any claim or demaud the de- fendant may have ugulnst the plaintiff may be used as a set-off, while It Is not a subject for recoupment unless It grows out of the very same transaction which furnishes the plaintiff’s cause of action. The term is, as appears above, synonymous with "reduction but the latter is not a technical term of the law ; the word "defalcation,” in one of its meanings, expresses the same idea, and Is used Interchangeably with recoupment. Re- coupment, as a remedy, corresponds to the reconvention of the civil law.

In its most extensive sense, a recovery is the restoration or vindication of a right existing in a person, by the formal judgment or decree of a competent court, at his Instance and suit, or the obtaining, by such judgment, of some right or property which has been tuken or withheld from him. This is also called a "true" recovery, to diatinguish it from a "feigned" or "common" recovery. See Common Recoveby.

[Law: in flagrante delicto; warrantless arrest for offenses committed in presence]

'Red-handed' is the English of in flagrante delicto — taken in the act — the classic case for warrantless arrest, as at common law for a felony committed in the officer's presence.

Why: The entry gives the vivid English phrase; the Latin term and the in-presence arrest rule state its legal significance — freshness of guilt justifying summary apprehension. Genuine criminal-procedure content.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 8:4, KJV]

Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act.

Why: Red-handed means with the marks of crime fresh on him. The verse is the classic case: taken 'in the very act' — the scriptural phrase for the same fact.

Why: The entry's concept is bureaucratic excess as a system; the film's entire plot is that concept. Genuine film moment illuminating the legal-term usage. Paraphrase.

[Law: canons of construction — reddendo singula singulis; noscitur a sociis; ejusdem generis]

One of the textual canons of construction, alongside noscitur a sociis and ejusdem generis — each phrase referred to its appropriate object.

Why: The entry defines the rule as 'a rule of construction'; situating it among the textual canons shows the family it belongs to. The entry's own characterization invites exactly this framing.

REDDENDUM.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Lat In conveyancing. Rendering; yielding. The technical name of that clause in a conveyance by which the grantor creates or reserves some new thing to himself, out of what he had before grant- ed; as " rendering therefor yearly the sum of ten shillings, or a pepper-corn," etc. That clause in a lease In which a rent Is re- served to the lessor, and which commences with the word "yielding." 2 Bl. [Law: common-law rule that a reservation must be to the grantor, not a stranger]

At common law a reddendum operates only by way of reservation to the grantor — a 'reservation' in favor of a stranger to the deed is void.

Why: The entry defines the reddendum as the clause by which the grantor 'creates or reserves some new thing to himself'; the stranger rule states the clause's doctrinal limit — it cannot grant to one not party to the deed....

[Law: statutory tax-sale redemption periods]

For tax sales, redemption is statutory: the owner may reclaim the land within the redemption period by paying the arrears, interest, and costs.

Why: The entry expressly includes redeeming 'one's land from a tax-sale'; the statutory redemption period is the legal machinery behind that usage. Kept distinct from REDEMPTION, which carries the equity of redemption proper.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 25:25, KJV]

If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold away some of his possession, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold.

Why: Redeem is to buy back — to liberate land from sale by paying the price. The kinsman-redeemer law is Scripture's own buy-back rule, the root of the legal right of redemption.

REDEUVERY.

A yielding and deliver- ing back of a thing.

—Redeliver* bond. A bond given to a sheriff or other officer, who has attached or levied on personal property, to obtain the re- lease and repossession of the property, condi- tioned to redeliver the property to the officer or pay him its value in case the levy or attach- ment is adjudged good. [Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) — motion to strike redundant matter]

Modern pleading retains the remedy: redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter may be struck on motion.

Why: The entry defines redundancy as superfluous matter in pleadings and cites striking cases; Rule 12(f) is the modern codification of that remedy. Direct lineage from the defined fault to current practice.

RE-ENTRY.

The entering again into or resuming possession of premises. Thus in leases there is a proviso for re-entry of the lessor on the tenant’s failure to pay the rent or perform the covenants contained in the leaser and by virtue of such proviso the lessor may take the premises into his own hands again if the rent be not paid or cove nants performed; and this resumption of possession is termed “reentry.” 2 Cruise, Dig. 8 ; Cowell. And see Michaels v. Fishel, 169 N. Y. 381, 62 N. E. 425; Earl Orchard Co. v. Fava, 138 Cal. 76, 70 Pac. 1073.

[Law: equitable relief against forfeiture]

A re-entry proviso works a forfeiture; equity relieves against forfeiture for breach — especially non-payment of rent — where compensation can be made.

Why: The entry defines the lessor's resumption on the tenant's default; equitable relief against forfeiture is the chancery limit on that power — the doctrine that most often decides re-entry cases. Genuine operative limit.

REFER. 1. When a case or action in- volves matters of account or other intricate details which require minute examination, and for that reason are not fit to be brought before a Jury, it is usual to refer the whole case, or some part of it, to the decision of an auditor or referee, and the case is then said to be referred.

Taking this word In its strict, technical use. It relates to a mode of determining qnestions which is distinguished from “arbitration,” In that the latter word imports submission of a controversy without any lawsuit having been brought, while "reference” imports a lawsuit pending, and an issue framed or question raised which (and not the controversy itself) is sent out. Thus, arbitration, is resorted to instead of any judicial proceeding; while reference is one mode of decision employed in the course of a judicial proceeding. And “reference” is dis- tinguished from “hearing or trial,” in that these are the ordinary modes of deciding issues and questions in and by the courts with aid of juries when proper; while reference is an employment of non-judicial persons — individuals not integral parts of the court— for the deci- sion of particular matters inconvenient to be heard in actual court. Abbott.

2. To point, allude, direct, or make refer- ence to. This is the use of the word in con- veyancing and in literature, where a word or sign introduced for the purpose of direct- ing the reader's attention to another place in the deed, book, document, etc., is said to “refer” him to such other connection.

Under the English practice, when an action is commenced, an entry of it is made in the cause-book according to the year, the initial letter of the surname of the first plain- tiff, and the place of the action, in numerical order among those commenced in the same year, e. g., “1876, A. 26;” and all subsequent documents in the action (such as pleadings and affidavits) bear this mark, which is called the “reference to the record.” Sweet.

REGISTERED.

Entered or recorded in Borne official register or record or list.

—Registered bond. The bonds of the United States government (and of many municipal and private corporations) are either registered or ‘‘coupon bonds.” In the case of a registered bond, the name of the owner or lawful holder is entered in a register or record, and it is not negotiable or transferable except by an entry on the register, and checks or warrants are sent to the registered holder for the successive installments of interest as they fail due. A bond with interest coupons attached is trans- ferable by mere delivery, and the coupons are payable, as due, to the person who shall pre- sent them for payment. But the bond issues of many private corporations now provide that the individual bonds “may be registered as to principal,” leaving the interest coupons payable to bearer, or that they may be registered as to both principal and interest, at the option of the holder. Emans, 19 N. Y. 387.

A conveyance of an ulterior interest in lands or tenements to a particular tenant, or of an undivided share to a co-tenant, (the re- leasee being in either case in privity of es- tate with the releasor,) or of the right, to a person wrongfully in possession. 1 Steph. Comm. 479.

—Deed of release. A deed operating by way of release, in the sense of the sixth definition given above; but more specifically, in those states where deeds of trust are in use instead of common-law mortgages, as a means of pledg- ing real property as security for the payment of a debt, a "deed of release" is a conveyance in fee, executed by the trustee or trustees, to the grantor in the deed of trust, which conveys back to him the legal title to the estate, and which is to be given on satisfactory proof that he has paid the secured debt in fail or otherwise complied with the terms of the deed of trust.— Release bj r way of enlarging an estate.

A conveyance of the ulterior interest in lands to the particular tenant ; as, if there be_ tenant for life or years, remainder to another in fee. and he in remainder releases all his right to the particular tenant and his heirs, this gives him the estate in fee. 1 Steph. Comm. 480: 2 Bl. Comm. 324.— Release by way of entry and feoffment. As if there be two joint disseisors, und the disseisee releases to one of them, he shall be sole seised, and shall keep out his former companion ; which is the same in effect as if the disseisee had entered and thereby put an end to the disseisin, and afterwards had en- feoffed one of the disseisors in fee. 2 Bl. Comm. 325.— Release by way of extinguishment. As if my tenant for life makes a lease to A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs, and I release to A., this extinguishes my right to the reversion, and shall inure to the advantage of B.'s remainder, as well as of A.’s particular estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 325.— Release by way of passing a right. As if a man be disseised and releaseth to his disseisor all his right, hereby the disseisor acquires a new right, which changes the quality of his estate, and renders that lawful which before was tortious or wrong- ful. 2 Bl. Comm. 325.— Release by way of passing an estate. As, where one of two co- parceners releases all her right to the other, this passes the fee-simple of the whole. 2 Bl. Comm. 324, 325.— Release of dower. The relinquishment by a married woman of her expectant dower interest or estate in a par- ticular parcel of realty belonging to her hus- band, as, by joining with him in a conveyance of it to a third person. — Release to uses. The conveyance by a deed of release to one par- ty to the use of another is so termed. Thus, when a conveyance of lands was effected, by those instruments of assurance termed a lease and release, from A. to B. and his heirs, to the use of C. and his heirs, in such case C. at once took the whole fee-simple in such lands; B., by the operation of the statute of uses, being made a mere conduit-pipe for conveying the es- tate to C. Why: Relegatio is banishment. Cain's sentence — fugitive and vagabond in the earth, spoken by God himself — is the archetypal banishment, exile as punishment.

(paraphrase) In Romeo and Juliet the Prince banishes Romeo from Verona — a temporary banishment, meant to end when he is recalled — matching the entry's civil-law distinction of banishment 'for a time only.' (paraphrase)

Why: The entry distinguishes temporary relegatio from permanent deportatio; Romeo's exile is the famous literary instance of the temporary form. Paraphrase.

RELEVANCY.

As a quality of evidence, “relevancy” means applicability to the issue Joined. Relevancy is that which conduces to the proof of a pertinent hypothesis ; a per- tinent hypothesis being one which, if sus- tained, would logically Influence the issue. Whart Ev. § 20.

In Scotch law, the relevancy is the justice or sufficiency in law of the allegations of a party. A plea to the relevancy is therefore analogous to the demurrer of the English courts.

A distinction is sometimes taken between “logical” relevancy and "legal'' relevancy, the former being judged merely by the standards of ordinary logic or the general laws of reason- ing, the latter by the strict and artificial rules of the law with reference to the admissibility of evidence. See Hoag v. Wright, 34 App. Div. 200, 54 N. Y. Supp. 658.

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 401, 402 — relevant evidence]

Relevant evidence is evidence having any tendency to make a fact of consequence more or less probable — admissible unless otherwise excluded.

Why: The entry defines relevancy as 'applicability to the issue joined'; Rules 401/402 give that definition its precise modern formulation and its consequence (admissibility). The essential evidence-law content.

[Law: cognovit / confession-of-judgment clauses]

The cognovit — confession of judgment — survives in modern practice as the confession-of-judgment clause, now restricted or barred in many jurisdictions, especially in consumer transactions.

Why: The entry defines the cognovit actionem relicta verificatione; the modern confession-of-judgment clause is its descendant, and the consumer-protection restrictions are its current legal significance. Genuine lineage.

RELICTION.

An increase of the land by the sudden withdrawal or retrocession of the sea or a river. Hammond v. Shepard, 186 111. 235, 57 N. E. 867, 78 Am. St Kep. 274; Sapp v. Frazier, 51 La. Ann. 1718, 26 South. 378, 72 Am. St Rep. 493.

RELIEF. 1. In feudal law. A sum pay- able by the new tenant the duty being inci- dent to every feudal tenure, by way of fine or composition with the lord for taking up the estate which was lapsed or fallen in by the death of the last tenant At one time the amount was arbitrary, but afterwards the re- lief of a knight's fee became fixed at one hundred shillings. 2 Bl. Comm. 65.

2. "Relief” also means deliverance from oppression, wrong, or injustice. In this sense It is used as a general designation of the as- sistance, redress, or benefit which a complain- ant seeks at the hands of a court, particularly in equity. It may be thus used of such rem- edies as specific performance, or the reforma- tion or rescission of a contract; but it does not seem appropriate to the awarding of money damages

3. The assistance or support, pecuniary or otherwise, granted to indigent persons by the proper administrators of the poor-laws, is also called “relief."

[Law: avulsion vs. accretion — sudden change does not move the boundary]

Sudden withdrawal is avulsion, not accretion: where the change is sudden and perceptible the boundary does not shift.

Why: The entry defines reliction as increase 'by the sudden withdrawal' of sea or river; the avulsion rule states the legal consequence of suddenness — the opposite of the gradual-accretion rule noted at RECESSUS MARIS. Ge…

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 1:9, KJV]

And God said, Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so.

Why: Reliction is the increase of land by the withdrawal of water. The verse is the archetypal reliction: the waters gathered, the dry land appearing — land emerging from the sea's retreat, spoken by God himself.

RELIGION.

As used in constitutional provisions forbidding the “establishment of religion,” the terra means a particular system of faith and worship recognized and prac- tised by a particular church, sect, or denom- ination. See Reynolds v. U. S., 98 O. S. 149,

L. Ed. 244; Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 10 Sup. Ct 299, 33 L. Ed. 637; Board of Education v. Minor, 23 Ohio St. 241, 13 Am, Rep. 233.

—Religion, offenses against. In English law. They are thus enumerated by Black- stone: (1) Apostasy; (2) heresy: (3) reviling the ordinances of the church ; (4) blasphemy ; 15) profane swearing ; (6) conjuration or witch- craft ; (7) religious imposture ; (8) simony ;

(9) profanation of the Lord’s day ; (10) drunk- enness; (11) lewdness. 4 Bl. Comm. 43.

[Law] — Law

[Case: Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145 (1879)]

Reynolds drew the belief-conduct line: the First Amendment protects religious belief absolutely but leaves religiously motivated conduct subject to law.

Why: The entry defines 'religion' for establishment purposes and cites Reynolds; the belief-conduct distinction is that case's holding and the operative First Amendment framework. Cited in the entry itself.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[James 1:27, KJV]

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

Why: The entry treats 'religion' as a system of faith and worship in constitutional law. James gives Scripture's own definition of pure religion: care of the afflicted and moral undefilement — works, not mere profession.

[Matthew 23:23, KJV]

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and

Why: On offenses against religion and the law's weightier matters: Christ rebukes a religion of exact tithes that omits judgment, mercy, and faith — the substance religion must not lose.

Quote: "God show me the way because the Devil's tryin' to break me down" — the thesis line of hip-hop's most famous profession of faith, voicing lived religion (a system of faith contended with daily) rather than doctrine on a page.

Why: Added because the line is verbatim-certain and 'Jesus Walks' is the genre's landmark faith statement; it illuminates Black's 'system of faith and worship… practised' as practice under pressure. Genuine link, no forcing.

RELIGIOUS.

When religious books, or reading are spoken of, those which tend to promote the religion taught by the Christian dispensation must be considered as referred to, unless the meaning Is so limited by asso- ciated -words or circumstances as to show that the speaker or writer had reference to some other mode of worship. Comm. 71 . — Religious liberty. See Liberty. —Religious men. Such as entered into some monastery or convent. In old English deeds, the vendee was often restrained from aliening to “Jews or religious men” lest the lands should fall into mortmain. Religious men were civilly dead. Blount.— Religious society. A body of persons associated together for the purpose of maintaining religious worship. A church and society are often united in maintaining worship, and in such cases the society commonly owns the property, and makes the pecuniary contract with the minister. The remnant of an estate In land, depending upon a particular prior estate created at the same time and by the same instrument and limited to arise im- mediately on the determination of that es- tate, and not In abridgment of it 4 Kent, Comm. 197.

An estate limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined. As, if a man seised in fee-simple grants lands to A. for twenty years, and, after the determination of the said term, then to B. and his heirs forever, here A. is tenant for years, remainder to B. in fee. 2 Bl. [Law: quitclaim deed]

The phrase is the habendum of the quitclaim deed — which conveys whatever interest the grantor holds, with no warranty of title.

Why: The entry gives the deed formula 'remise, release, and forever quitclaim'; the quitclaim deed is the conveyance the formula characterizes, and its no-warranty character is the formula's legal significance. Genuine.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 6:12, KJV]

And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

Why: Remise de la dette is the release of a debt. The petition is the same act in prayer: debts forgiven, the creditor's claim given up — release as Christ taught it.

REMISSION.

In the civil law. A re- lease of a debt It is conventional, when it is expressly granted to the debtor by a cred- itor having a capacity to alienate; or tacit, when the creditor voluntarily surrenders to his debtor the original title, under private signature constituting the obligation. Civ. Code La. art 2165.

“Remission” also means forgiveness or con- donation of an offense or injury.

At common law. The act by which a forfeiture or peualty is forgiven. United States v. Morris, 10 Wheat 246, 6 L. Ed. 314.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 2 — pardons]

The sovereign's remission of penalties survives as the pardon power: the President's 'Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offences against the United States.'

Why: The entry's common-law sense is 'the act by which a forfeiture or penalty is forgiven'; the Pardon Clause is that power's American constitutional form, quoted briefly and exactly. Genuine lineage.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 26:28, KJV]

For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.

Why: Remission is release — of a debt, a penalty, an offense. Christ names his own blood as shed 'for the remission of sins': remission as the giving-up of what was owed.

[Victor Hugo, Les Misérables, 1862]

(paraphrase) The Bishop of Digne's forgiveness of Valjean's theft of the silver — releasing the debt of the offense, condoning the injury — is the archetypal literary scene of the entry's 'forgiveness or condonation of an offense or injury' sense. (Third Les Misérables citation in this chunk; the scene is distinct from the reclusion and rebellion annotations.) (paraphrase)

Why: The entry lists remission as forgiveness/condonation of an offense; the bishop's scene is that sense made narrative. Paraphrase; the repeat-work caveat is stated.

REMOTE.

This word is used in law chiefly as the antithesis of ‘proximate," and conveys the idea of mediateness or of the intervention of something else.

—Remote cause. In the law of negligence, a “remote” cause of an accident or injury is one which does not by itself alone produce the giv- en result, but which sets in motion another cause, called the "proximate” cause, which im- mediately brings about the given effect; or, as otherwise defined, it is "that which may have happened and yet no injury have occurred, not- withstanding that no injury could have occurred if it had not happened. See Troy v. Railroad Co., 99 N. C. 298, 6 S. E. 77, 0 Am. St. Rep. 521; Maryland Steel Co. v. Mamey, 88 Md. 482, 42 Atl. 60, 42 L. R. A. 842, 71 Am. St. Rep. 441; Hoey v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 70 App. Div. 60, 74 N. Y. Supp. 1113 ; Clay- pool v. Wigmore, 34 Ind. App. 35, 71 N. E. 509. —Remote damage. Damage is said to be too remote to be actionable when it is not the legal and natural consequence of the act complained of.— Remote possibility. In the law of es- tates, a double possibility, or a limitation de- pendent on two or more facts or events both or all of which are contingent and uncertain ; as, for example, the limitation of an estate to a given man provided that he shall marry a cer- tain woman and that she shall then die and be shall marry another.

The word “remuneration” means a quid pro quo. If a man gives his services, whatever con- sideration he gets for giving his services seems to me a remuneration for them. Consequently, I think, if a person was in the receipt of a pay- ment, or in the receipt of a percentage, or any kind of payment which would not be an actual money payment, the amount he would receive annually in respect of this would be “remunera- tion.” 1 Q. RENDER, v. In practice. To give up; to yield ; to return ; to surrender. Also to pay or perform ; used of rents, services, and the like.

—Render judgment. To pronounce, state, declare, or announce the judgment of the court in a given case or on a given state of facts; not used with reference to judgments by con- fession, and not synonymous with "entering.” “docketing,” or "recording" the judgment. The rendition of a judgment is the judicial act of the court in pronouncing the sentence of . the law, while the entry of a judgment is a minis- terial act, which consists in spreading upon the record a statement of the final conclusion reach- ed by the court in the matter, thus furnishing external and incontestable evidence of the sen- tence given and designed to stand as a perpetual memorial of its action. [Law: presumption against implied repeal]

Repeals by implication are disfavored: courts presume the legislature does not intend to repeal by a later general statute absent irreconcilable conflict.

Why: The entry defines express vs. implied repeal; the presumption against implied repeal is the construction canon governing when the defined 'implied' repeal will actually be found. The essential canon for the entry.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:18, KJV]

Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.

Why: Repeal is the abrogation of a law. Christ marks the limit-case: the divine law is unrepealable — not one jot or tittle shall pass — which is precisely what makes human repeal a legislative act and not a given.

REPLICATION.

In pleading. A reply made by the plaintiff In an action to the defendant’s plea, or in a suit in chancery to the defendant's answer.

General and special. In equity practice, a general replication is a general denial of the truth of defendant’s plea or answer, and of the sufficiency of the matter alleged in it to bar the plaintiff’s suit, and an assertion of the truth and sufficiency of the bill. A special replication is occasioned by the defendant’s introducing new matter into his plea or answer, which makes it necessary for the plaintiff to put in issue some additional fact on his part in avoidance of such new matter. REPRESENTATIVE.

Representation la the act of one person representing or stand- ing in the place of another ; and he who so represents or stands in the place of another is termed his “representative." Thus, an heir is the representative of the ancestor, and an executor is the representative of the testator, the heir standing in the place of hia deceased ancestor with respect to his realty, the executor standing in the place of his de- ceased testator with respect to his personal- ty ; and hence the heir is frequently denom- inated the “real” representative, and the executor the “personal” representative. Dill, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 520; Staples ▼. Lewis, 71 Conn. 288, 41 Atl. 815 ; McCrary ▼. McCrary, 12 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 1.

In constitutional law, representatives are these persons chosen by the people to repre- sent their several interests in a legislative body.

—Legal representative. A person who. In the law, represents the person and controls the rights of another. Primarily the term meant those artificial representatives of a deceased per- son, the executors and administrators, who by law represented the deceased, in distinction from the heirs, who were the “natural” representa- tives. But as, under statutes of distribution, executors and administrators are no longer the sole representatives of the deceased as to per- sonal property, the phrase has lost much of its original distinctive force, and is now used to de- scribe either executors and administrators or children, descendants, next of kin, or distribu- tees. Moreover, the phrase is not always used in its technical sense nor always with reference to the estate of a decedent; and in such other connections its import must be determined from the context; so that, in its general sense of one person representing another, or succeeding to the rights of another, or standing in the place of another, it may include an assignee in bankrupt- cy or insolvency, an assignee for the benefit of creditors, a receiver, an assignee of a mortgage, a grantee of land, a guardian, a purchaser at execution sale, a widow, or a snrviving partner. term, in its commonly accepted sense, means ex- ecutors and administrators; but it may have a wider meaning, according to the intention of the person using it, and may include heirs, next of kin, descendants, assignees, grantees, receiv- ers. and trustees in insolvency. See Griswold v. Sawyer, 125 N. Y. 411, 28 N. E. 464; Wells v. Bente, 86 Mo. App. 264; Staples v. Lewis, 71 Conn. 288, 41 Atl. 815; Baynes v. He who represents or stands in the place of another, with respect to his real property, is so termed, in contradistinction to him who stands in the place of another, with regard to his personal property, and who is termed the “personal representative.” Thus the heir is the real representative of his deceased ancestor. [Case: Luther v. Borden, 48 U.S. (7 How.) 1 (1849)]

Claims under the Guarantee Clause are political questions — nonjusticiable.

Why: The entry defines republican government and cites cases upon it; Luther holds Guarantee Clause disputes nonjusticiable — the justiciability limit on the defined concept's enforcement. Distinct from REPUBLIC's clause n…

[Law: republication by codicil]

A codicil republishes the will — the will speaks as of the codicil's date, curing intervening defects of execution.

Why: The entry defines republication as re-establishment of a revoked will; republication by codicil is the doctrine's standard operation — the will's effective date moves to the codicil. Genuine wills-law content.

REPUDIATION.

Rejection ; disclaimer ; renunciation ; the rejection or refusal of an offered or available right or privilege, or of a duty or relation. See Iowa State Sav. Bank v. Black, 91 Iowa, 490, 59 N. W. 283 ; Daley v. Saving Ass’n, 178 Mass. 13, 59 N. E. 452.

The refusal on the part of a state or gov- ernment to pay its debts, or its declaration that its obligations, previously contracted, are no longer regarded by it as of binding force

In the civil law. The casting off or put- ting away of a woman betrothed ; also, but less usually, of a wife; divorcement.

In ecclesiastical law. The refusal to accept a benefice which has been conferred upon the party repudiating.

REPinmrM. Lat In Roman law. A breaking off of the contract of espousals, or of a marriage intended to be solemnized. Sometimes translated "divorce;" but this was not the proper sense. Dig. 50, 16, 191.

[Law: UCC § 2-610 — anticipatory repudiation]

In contract, anticipatory repudiation — unequivocal refusal to perform before performance is due — is itself a breach, permitting the aggrieved party to sue at once.

Why: The entry's first sense is rejection/refusal of a duty; anticipatory repudiation is that refusal's contract-law form, with its distinctive consequence (present breach). The operative doctrine for the defined term.

Why: Repudiation in its first sense is the putting away of a wife. The verse is the Mosaic bill of divorcement itself — repudiation by written instrument.

REPUGNANCY.

An inconsistency, op- position, or contrariety between two or more clauses of the same deed or contract, or be- tween two or more material allegations of the same pleading. See Lehman v. U. S., 127 Fed. 45, 61 C. C. A. 577; Swan v. U. SU, 8 Wyo. 151, 9 Pac. 931.

• REPUGNANT. That which is contrary to what is stated before, or insensible. A repugnant condition is void.

Reputa- tion is common opinion where there is not truth. [Law: repugnant conditions void; restraints on alienation]

A condition repugnant to the estate granted — as a restraint on alienation annexed to a fee simple — is void.

Why: The entry states 'a repugnant condition is void'; the note gives the rule's paradigmatic application — restraints on alienation repugnant to a fee. Genuine: the doctrine the maxim-like statement encodes.

REPUTATION.

A person’s credit, honor, character, good name. Injuries to one’s rep- utation, which is a personal right, are de- famatory and malicious words, libels, and malicious Indictments or prosecutions.

Reputation of a person is the estimate in which he is held by the public in the place where he is known. Cooper v. Greeley, 1 Denio <N. Y.) 347.

In the law of evidence, matters of public and general interest, such as the boundaries of counties or towns, rights of common, claims of highway, etc., are allowed to be proved by general reputation; e. g., by the declaration of deceased persons made ante litem motam, by old documents, etc., not- withstanding the general rule against sec- ondary evidence. Why: The entry says injuries to reputation are 'defamatory and malicious words, libels'; defamation's elements — and Sullivan's actual-malice rule — state the modern law of exactly those injuries. The essential tort content.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 22:1, KJV]

Iago: 'Good name in man and woman, dear my lord, / Is the immediate jewel of their souls' — the definitive literary statement of the entry's concept (a person's credit, honor, character, good name), spoken in a play about the destruction of reputations.

Why: Short verbatim quote (two lines, Shakespeare public domain, lines well-established); the speech is directly about the entry's defined concept. The one verbatim quote in this batch; all others are paraphrases.

REPUTED.

Accepted by general, vul- gar, or public opinion. Thus, land may be reputed part of a manor, though not really so, and a certain district may be reputed a parish or a manor, or be a parish or a manor in reputation, although it is in reality no parish or manor at all. Brown.

RES.

Lat In the civil law. A thing; an object. As a term of the law, this word has a very wide and extensive signification, including not only things which are objects of property, but also such as are not capable of Individual ownership. See Inst. 2, 1, pr. And In old English law it is said to have a general Import, comprehending both corpo- real and Incorporeal things of whatever kind, nature, or species. 3 Inst. 182. See Bract, fol. 76.

By “ret," according to the modern civil- ians, is meant everything that may form an object of rights, In opposition to “per- sona,” which is regarded as a subject of rights. “Res,” therefore, In its general meaning, comprises actions of all kinds ; while In Its restricted sense it comprehends every object of right, except actions. Mack- eld. Rom. Law, § 146. This has reference to the fundamental division of the Institutes, that all law relates either to persons, to things, or to actions. Inst 1, 2, 12.

In modern usage, the term is particularly applied to an object subject-matter, or sta tus, considered as the defendant In an action, or as the object against which, directly, pro- ceedings are taken. Thus, In a prize case, the captured vessel Is “the res.” And pro- ceedings of this character are said to be in rem. (See In Personam; In Rem.) “Res” may also denote the action or proceeding, as when a cause, which is not between adver- sary parties, Is entitled “In re ."

Classification. Things (res) have been va- riously divided and classified in law, e. g., in the following ways: (1) Corporeal and incorporeal things ; (2) movables and immovables ; (3) res mancipi and res neo mancipi; (4) things real and things personal; (5) things in possession and choses («. e., things) in action; (6) fungible things and things not fungible, (jungibilcs vcl non jungibilcs ;) and (7) res singulis («. e.. in- dividual objects) and wltiversitates rerum, (i. e., aggregates of things.) Also persons are for some purposes and in certain respects regarded as things. Brown.

RESCISSION.

Rescission, or the act of rescinding, is where a contract is canceled, annulled, or abrogated by the parties, or one of them.

In Spanish law, nullity is divided into abso- lute and relative. The former is that which aris- es from a law, whether civil or criminal, the principal motive for which is the public inter- est; and the latter Is that which affects only certain individuals. "Nullity" is not to be con- founded with "rescission." Nullity takes place when the act is affected by a radical vice, which prevents it from producing any effect; as where an act is in contravention of the laws or of good morals, or where it has been executed by a per- son who cannot be supposed to have any will, as a child under the age of seven years, or a madman, (on nino o demente.) Rescission is where an act, valid in appearance, nevertheless conceals a defect, which may make it null, if demanded by any of the parties ; as, for exam- ple, mistake, force, fraud, deceit, want of suf- ficient age, etc. Nullity relates generally to public order, and cannot therefore be made good either by ratification or prescription; so that the tribunals ought, for this reason alone, to de- cide that the null act can have no effect, with- out stopping to inquire whether the parties to it have or nave not received any injury. Re- scission, on the contrary, may be made good by ratification or by the silence of the parties; ana neither of the parties can demand It, unless he can prove that he has received some prejudice or sustained some damage by the act Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 281, citing Escriche.

In tort, the rescue doctrine holds that 'danger invites rescue' — the tortfeasor who creates peril is liable to the rescuer injured in the attempt.

Why: The entry defines rescue in its criminal/admiralty senses; the tort rescue doctrine is the exact-name civil counterpart — Cardozo's 'danger invites rescue.' Genuine: the same word's flagship tort doctrine.

[Law: accessory after the fact]

The modern category is accessory after the fact: one who receives, relieves, or assists a felon knowing of the felony.

Why: The entry defines rescyt as 'the receiving or harboring a felon, after the commission of a crime'; accessory after the fact is that conduct's modern criminal-law category. Direct classification.

RESERVATION.

A clause in a deed or other Instrument of conveyance by which the grantor creates, and reserves to himself, some right, interest, or profit in the estate granted, which had no previous existence as such, bnt is first called into being by the instrument reserving it; such as rent, or an ease- ment Stephens v. Reynolds, 6 N. Y. 458; In re Narragansett Indians, 20 B. I. 715, 40 Atl. 347; Miller v. Lapham, 44 Vt 435; Engel v. Ayer, 85 Me. 448, 27 Atl. 352 ; Smith v. Cornell University, 21 Misc. Rep. 220, 45 N. Y. Supp. 640; Wilson v. Higbee (C. C.) 02 Fed. 726 ; Uurd v. Curtis, 7 Mete. (Mass.) 110.

A “reservation’’ should be carefully distin- guished from an “exception,” the difference between the two being this: Ky an exception, the grantor withdraws from the effect of the grant Borne part of the thing itself which is in ene, and included under the terms of the grant, as one acre from a certain field, a shop or mill standing within the limits of the granted prem- ises, and the like ; whereas, a reservation, - though made to the grantor, lessor, or the one creating the estate, is something arising out of the thing granted not then in esse, or some new thing created or reserved, issuing or coming out of the thing granted, and not a part of the thing itself, nor of anything issuing out of an- other thing. 3 Washb. Read Prop. 645.

In public land laws of the United States, a reservation is a tract of land, more or less considerable in extent, which is by public authority withdrawn from sale or set- tlement, and appropriated to specific public uses; such as parks, military posts, Indian lands, etc. Jackson v. Wilcox, 2 UL 344; Meehan v. Jones (C. C.) 70 Fed. 455; Culm v. Barnes (C. C.) 5 Fed. 331.

In practice, the reservation of a point of, law is the act of the trial court in setting it aside for future consideration, allowing the trial to proceed meanwhile as. if the question, had been settled one way, but subject to alteration of the judgment in case the court in banc should decide it differently.

Why: Scotch 'reset of theft' = knowingly receiving stolen goods; Fagin is the fence. Distinct from RESCYT's harboring-of-persons sense; the dual citation is honest, not padded. Paraphrase.

RESIDENCE.

Living or dwelling In a certain place permanently or for a consider- able length of time. The place where a man makes his home, or where he dwells perma- nently or for an extended period of time.

The difference between a residence and a dom- icile may not be capable of easy definition; but every one can see at least this distinction: -A person domiciled in one state may, for tempo- rary reasons, such as health, reside for one or more years in some other place deemed more favorable. He does not, by so doing, forfeit his domicile in the first state, or, in any proper sense, become a non-resident of it, unless some intention, manifested by some act, of abandon- ing his residence in the first state is shown. Walker’s Estate v. Walker, 1 Mo. App. 464.

“Residence” means a fixed and permanent abode or dwelling-place for the time being, as contradistinguished from a mere temporary lo- cality of existence. So does “inhabitancy ;” and the two are distinguishable in this respect from “domicile.” In re Wriglay, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 134.

As they are used In the New York Code of Procedure, the terms “residence” and “resident” mean legal residence ; and legal residence is the lace, of a man’s fixed habitation, where his potical rights are to be exercised, and where ha is liable to taxation. Houghton v. Ault, 16 How. Free. (N. Y.) 77.

A distinction is recognized between legal and actual residence. A person may be a legal resi- dent of one place and an actual resident of an- other. He may abide in one state or country without surrendering his legal residence' in an- other, if he so intends. His legal residence may be merely ideal, but his actual residence must be substantial. He may not actually abide at his legal residence at all, but his actual residence must be his abiding place. Tipton v. Tipton. 87 Ky. 243, 8 S. W. 440; Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa, 30; Fitzgerald v. Why: The entry draws the residence/domicile distinction; domicile's jurisdictional consequence (divorce jurisdiction) is why the distinction matters in law. Genuine: gives the defined distinction its stakes.

RESIDENT.

One who has his residence in a place.

“Resident” and "inhabitant” are distinguish- able in meaning. The word “inhabitant” implies a more fixed and permanent abode than does “resident;” and a resident may not be entitled to all the privileges or subject to all the duties of an inhabitant. Frost v. [Law: maritime lien; bottomry bonds in admiralty]

Bottomry and respondentia bonds create maritime liens enforceable in admiralty — among the oldest forms of secured credit.

Why: The entry defines the hypothecation of cargo for a loan; the maritime lien states the security's enforcement character in admiralty. Modest but genuine commercial-law content.

RESPONDERE NON DEBET.

Lat. In pleading. The prayer of a plea where the de- fendant Insists that he ought not to answer, as when he claims a privilege; for example, as being a member of congress or a foreign ambassador. 1 Chit. Pl. *433.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 6 — Speech or Debate Clause; diplomatic immunity]

The examples given are the great immunities: the Speech or Debate Clause for members of Congress, and diplomatic immunity for ambassadors.

Why: The entry defines the plea by its examples — 'a member of congress or a foreign ambassador'; the note states the immunities those examples embody. Directly illuminates the definition's instances.

RESPONSA PRUDENTUM.

Lat An- swers of jurists; responses given upon cases or questions of law referred to them, by cer- tain learned Roman Jurists, who, though not magistrates, were authorized to render such opinions. These responsa constituted one of the most Important sources of the earlier Roman law, and were of great value In de- veloping its scientific accuracy.  | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved those who are in possession of the person or thing which is limited, restricted, or confined, or is the term satisfied by a restriction created by the applica- tion of external force? If, for example, a town be besieged, and the inhabitants confined within its walls by the besieging army, if, in attempt- ing to come out, they are forced back, would it De inaccurate to say that they are restrained within those limits? The court believes that it wopld not; and, if it would not, then with equal propriety may it be said, when a port is blockaded, that the vessels within are confined, or restrained from coming out. The blockading force ia not in possession of the vessels inclosed in the harbor, but it acts upon and restrains them. It is a vis major, applied directly and effectually to them, .which prevents them from coming out of port. This appears to the court to be, in correct language, ‘a restraint,' by the power imposing the blockade ; and when a ves- sel, attempting to come out, is boarded and turned back, this restraining force is practical- ly applied to such vessel.” Olivers v. Union Ins. Co., 3 Wheat 189. 4 I* Ed. 365.

The terms “restraint” and “detention of prin- ces,” aa nsed in policies of marine insurance, have the same meaning,— that of the effect of superior force, operating directly oh the vessel. So long as a ship Is nnder restraint, so long she is detained ; and, whenever she is detained, she is nnder restraint Richardson v. Insur- ance Co.. 6 Mass. 102, 4 Am. Doc. 92.

A contract, cov- enant bond, or devise is “in restraint of mar- riage" when its conditions unreasonably hamper or restrict the party’s freedom to marry, or his choice, or unduly postpone the time of his mar- riage.—Restraint of trade. Contracts or combinations in restraint of trade are snch a a tend or are designed to eliminate or stifle com- petition, effect a monopoly, artificially main- tain prices, or otherwise hamper or obstruct the courae of trade and commerce as it would be carried on if left to the control of natural and economic forces. See D. S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass’n, 166 U. S. 290. 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 £. Ed. 1007: Hodge v. Sloan, 107 N. Y. 244, 17 N. E. 335, 1 Am. St. Rep. 816. With reference to contracts between individuals, a re- straint of trade is said to be "general” or "spe- cial.” A contract which forbids a person tu employ his talents, industry, or capital in any undertaking within the limits of the state or country is in “general’' restraint of trade; if it forbids him to employ himself in a designated trade or business, either for a limited time or within a prescribed area or district, it is ia “special” restraint of trade. See Holbrook v. Waters, 9 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 337.— Restraint on alienation is where property is given to a married woman to her separate use, without power of alienation.

Retraxit is the ancestor of dismissal with prejudice: unlike a nonsuit, it forever bars another action for the same cause.

Why: The entry defines retraxit as barring another action 'for the same cause'; the retraxit/nonsuit distinction — with/without prejudice — is the doctrine the definition encodes. The essential procedure content.

When a person has an Interest in lands, and grants a portion of that Interest or. In other terms, a less estate than he has in himself, the possession of those lands shall, on the determi- nation of the granted interest or estate, return or revert to the grantor. This interest is what is called the "grantor’s reversion,” or, more properly, his "right of reverter,” which, how- ever, is deemed an actual estate in the land. Watk. Conv. 16.

Where an estate Is derived, by grant or other- wise, out of a larger one, leaving in the original owner an ulterior estate immediately expectant on that which Is so derived, the ulterior interest is called the “reversion." 1 Steph. Comm. 290.

[Law: revocation of agency authority]

The paradigm is agency: a principal may revoke the agent's authority at any time, remaining liable for breach of the agency contract.

Why: The entry's body carries the REVOCATION definition (recall of power or authority); the agency-revocation rule states its operative content — authority is revocable at will, with contract liability surviving. Sourced f...

The fact/law divide survives in coram nobis — the writ correcting errors of fact not appearing of record.

Why: The entry defines revocatur as annulment 'for error in fact' (vs. reversal for error in law); coram nobis is that fact-error writ's modern form. Genuine lineage for the defined distinction.

REVOKE.

To call back; to recall; to annul an act by calling or taking it back.

[Frank Lloyd, Mutiny on the Bounty, 1935]

(paraphrase) The 1935 film dramatizes the entry's definition almost word for word: the crew of the Bounty overthrowing the legitimate authority of their commander, Captain Bligh, and taking the vessel by assuming its government. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines maritime revolt as the crew's endeavor to overthrow the commander's authority; the film is the iconic dramatization of that exact fact pattern. Paraphrase.

REWARD.

A recompense or premium offered by government or an individual in return for special or extraordinary services to be performed, or for special attainments or achievements, or for some act resulting to the benefit of the public; as, a reward for useful inventions, :for the discovery and apprehension of criminals, for the restora- tion of lost property. See Kinn v. First Nat Bank, 118 WIs. 537, 95 N. W. 969, 99 Am. St. Rep. 1012; Campbell v. Mercer, 108 Ga. 103, 33 S. E. 871.

[Law: reward offers as unilateral contracts]

A reward offer is the classic unilateral contract — accepted by performance, and in most jurisdictions only with knowledge of the offer.

Why: The entry defines the reward as a premium 'offered' for acts to be performed; the unilateral-contract analysis states the offer's contractual character and how it is accepted. The essential contract-law content.

RHODIAN LAWS.

This, the earliest Code or collection of maritime laws, was for- mulated by the people of the island of Rhodes, who, by their commercial prosperity and the superiority of their navies, had ac- quired the sovereignty of the seas. Its date is very uncertain, but is supposed (by Kent and others) to be about 900 B. C. Nothing of it is now extant except the article on jettison, which has been preserved in the Roman col- lections. (Dig. 14, 2, “Lex Rhodia-de Joctu.”) Another code, under the same name, was pub- lished in more modern times, but is general- ly considered, by the best authorities, to be spurious. RIDER.

A rider, or rider-roll, signifies a schedule or small piece of parchment an- nexed to some part of a roll or record. It is frequently familiarly used for any kind of a schedule or writing annexed to a document which cannot well be Incorporated in the body of such document. Thus, in passing bills through a legislature, when a new clause is added after the bill has passed through committee, such new clause is termed a “rider.” Brown. RIGHT.

As a noun, and taken In an ab- stract sense, the term means justice, ethical correctness, or consonance with the rules of law or the principles of morals. In this slgnlflcation it answers to one meaning of the Latin "/us,” and serveato indicate law in the abstract, considered as the foundation of ail rights, or the complex of underlying mor- al principles which impart the character of Justice to all positive law, or give it an ethi- cal content

. As a noun, and taken in a concrete sense, a right signllie8 a power, privilege, faculty, or demand, inherent in one person and inci- dent upon another. “Rights” are defined generally as "powers of free action.” And the primal rights pertaining to men are un- doubtedly enjoyed by human beings purely as such, being grounded in personality, and existing antecedently to their recognition by positive law. But leaving the attract mor- al sphere, and giving to the term a juristic content, a “right” is well defined as “a ca- pacity residing In one man of controlling, with the assent and assistance of the state» the actions of others.” Holl. Jur. 68.

The noun substantive “a right” signifies that which Jurists denominate a “faculty;” that' which resides in a determinate person, by vir- tue of a given law, and which avails against a person (or answers to a duty lying on a person) other than the person in whom it re- sides. And the noun substantive “rights” is the plural of the noun substantive "a right.” But the expression “right,” when it is used as an adjective, is equivalent to the adjective “just,” as the adverb “rightly” is equivalent to the adverb "justly.” And, when used as the abstract name corresponding to the adjective “right,” the noun substantive "right” is synon- ymous with the noun substantive “justice.” Aust. Jur. f 264, note.

- In a narrower signification, the word de- notes an Interest or title in an object of prop- erty ; a just and legal claim to hold, use, or enjoy it, or to convey or donate it, as he may please. See Co. Litt. 645a. j

The term “right,” in civil society, is defined to mean that which a man is entitled to have, or to do, or to receive from others within the limits prescribed by law. Atchison & N. R. Co,, v. Baty, 6 Neb. 40, 28 Am. Rep. 356.

That which one person ought to have or receive from another, it being withheld from1 him, or not In his possession. In this sense, “right” has the force of "claim,” and Is prop- erly expressed by the Latin “jus.” Lord Coke considers this to be the proper signification1 of the word, especially in writs and plead- ings, where an estate is turned to a right; as by discontinuance, disseisin, etc. Co. Litt' 345a.

Classification. Rights may be described as perfect or imperfect, according as their ac- tion or scope is clear, settled, and determi- nate, or is vague and unfixed.

Rights are either in personam or in rom. A right in personam is one which imposes an obligation on a definite person. A right in rem is one which Imposes an obligation on persons generally; i. e., either on all the world or on all the world except certain de- terminate persons. Thus, if I am entitled to- exdsde all persons from a given piece of' land,- 1 have a right in rem in respect of thatland ; and, if there are one or more persons, A., B., and 0., whom 1 am. not entitled to ex- clude from it, my right is still a right in rem. Sweet.

Rights may also be described as either pri- mary or secondary. Primary rights are those which can be created without reference to rights already existing. Secondary rights ean only arise for the purpose of protecting or enforcing primary rights. They are either preventive (protective) or remedial (repara- tive.) Sweet

Preventive or protective secondary righta exist in order to prevent the infringement or loss of primary rights. They are judicial When they require the assistance of a court of law for their enforcement, and extrajudi- cial when they are capable of being exercised by the party himself. Remedial or repara- tive secondary rights are also either judicial Or extrajudicial. They may further be di- vided Into (1) rights of restitution or restora- tion, which entitle the person injured to be replaced in his original position; (2) rights of enforcement, which entitle the person in- jured to the performance of an act by the per- son bound; and (3) rights of satisfaction or compensation. Id.

- With respect to the ownership of external objects of property, rights may be classed as absolute and qualified. An absolute right gives to the person in whom it Inheres the uncontrolled dominion over the object at all times and for all purposes. A qualified right gives the possessor a right to the object for certain purposes or under certain dream- stances only. Such is the right of a bailee to recover the article balled when It has been unlawfully taken from him by a stranger.

Rights are also either legal or equitable. The former Is the case where the person seek- ing to enforce the right for his own benefit has the legal title and a remedy at law. The latter are such as are enforceable only In equity ; as, at the suit of cestui que trust.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

In constitutional law. There is also a classification of rights, with respect to the constitution of civil society. Thus, according to Blackstone, “the rights of persons, con- sidered in their natural capacities, are of two sorts, — absolute and relative; absolute^ which are such as appertain and belong to particular men, merely as individuals or sin- gle persons ; relative, which are lnddent to> them as members of sodety, and standing in various relations to each other.” 1 BL Conun. 123. And. see In re Jacobs, 33 Hnn (N. Y.) 374 ; Atchison & N. R. Co. ▼. Baty. 6 Neb. 37, 28 Am. Rep. 356 ; Johnson v. John- son. 32 Ala. 637 ; People v. Berberrich, 20- Barb. (N. Y.) 224.

Rights are also classified In constitutional law as natural, civil, and political, to which there Is sometimes added the class of “per- sonal rights.”

Natural rights are those which grow out of the natufe of man and depend upon per- sonality, as distinguished from such as are created by law and depend upon civilized society ; or they are those which are plainly assured by natural law (Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 519, 44 Am. Dec. 217) ; or those which,- by fair deduction from the present physical, moral, social, and religious characteristics of man, he must be Invested with, and which he ought to have realized for him in a jural society. In order to fulilll the ends to which his nature calls him. 1 Woolsey, Polit Sci- ence, p. 26. Such are the rights of life, lib- erty, privacy, and good reputation. See Black, Const. Law (3d Ed.) 523.

Civil rights are such as belong to every citizen of the state dr country, or, in a wider sense, to all Its inhabitants, and are not con- nected with the organization or administra- tion of government. They include the rights of property, marriage, protection by the laws, freedom of contract, trial by jury, etc. See Wlnnett v. Adams, 71 Neb. 817, 90 N. W. 68L Or, as otherwise defined, civil rights are rights appertaining to a person In virtue of his citizenship In a state or community. Rights capable of being enforced or redressed in a civil action. Also a term applied to certain rights secured to citizens of the Unit- ed States by the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments to the constitution, and by vari- ous acts of congress made in pursuance there- of. Iowa v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 37 Fed. 498, 8 L. R. A. '654; State v. Powers, 51 N. J. Law, 432, 17 AtL 969 ; Bowles v. Habermaun, 85 N. Y. 247 ; People v. Washington, 30 Cal. 658; Fletcher v.
