An obsolete expression signify- ing the rights and privileges of a citizen, or the liberties and civic rights of a freeman.— Frank-marriage. A species of entailed es- tates, in English law, now grown out of use, but still capable of subsisting. When tenements are given by one to another, together with a wife, who is a daughter or cousin of the donor, to hold in frank-marriage, the donees shall have the tenements to them and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, i. e., in special tail. For the word “frank-marriage,” ew vi termini, both creates and limits an inheritance, not only sup- plying words of descent, but also terms of procreation. The donees are liable to no serv- ice except fealty, and a reserved rent would be void, until the fourth degree of consanguinity be passed between the issues of the donor and donee, when they were capable by the law of the church of intermarrying. [Law: 39 U.S.C. § 3210 — the congressional franking privilege]

The franking privilege — sending matter through the mails 'without payment of postage, in pursuance of a personal or official privilege' — is the congressional frank, regulated by statute.

Why: The entry defines the privilege; the statute is its modern regulation. The privilege's subject is the statute's subject.

[Maxim (superseded): Frater fratri uterino non succedet in hereditate paternae]

Why: Quoted verbatim with the entry's own note of supersession (Broom, Max. 530); the annotation records both the maxim and its genuine fate — abolition of the half-blood exclusion. The entry's history, kept whole.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea]

The killing of a sibling is criminal only where the guilty act joins a guilty mind; homicide law punishes the culpable killing, not the bare act of killing.

Why: The entry defines only the act (killing of a brother or sister); the maxim genuinely illuminates the criminal-law half by supplying the mens rea requirement the definition assumes but does not state.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 4:8, KJV]

And Cain talked with Abel his brother: and it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him.

Why: The archetypal fratricide — the first killing of a brother in scripture, and the case every later law of fratricide answers.

[Genesis 4:10, KJV]

And he said, What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground.

Why: God's own reckoning with the fratricide: the murdered brother's blood as witness crying from the ground — divine testimony against the killing of a brother.

FRAUD.

the one party, or to cause an Inconven- ience or loss to the other. Civil Code La. art. 1847.

Fraud, In the sense of a court of equity, properly includes all acts, omissions, and concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence Justly reposed, and are injurious to another, or by which ap undue and unconscientious ad- vantage is taken of another. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 187.

Synonyms. The term "fraud" is sometimes used as synonymous with “covin,” “collusion,” or “deceit." But distinctions are properly taken in the meanings of these words, for which reference may be had to the titles Covin; Collu- sion ; Deceit.

Classification. Fraud is either actual or constructive. Actual fraud consists in deceit, artifice, trick, design, some direct and active operation of the mind ; it includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice used to circum- vent or cheat another; it is something said, done, or omitted by a person with the design of perpetrating what he knows to be a cheat or deception. Constructive fraud consists in any act of commission or omission contrary to legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence justly reposed, which is contrary to good conscience and operates to the injury of another. Or, as otherwise defined, it is an act, statement or omission which operates as a virtual fraud on an individual, or which, if generally permitted, would be prejudicial to the public welfare, and yet may have been unconnected with any selfish or evil design. Or, according to Story, con- structive frauds are such acts or contracts as, though not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a positive fraud or injury upon other persons, are yet, by their tendency to deceive or mislead other persons, or to violate private or public Confidence, or to impair or injure the public interests, deemed equally reprehensible with actual fraud. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. $ 258. And see, generally. Code Ga. 1882. 8 3173 ; People v. Kelly. 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 457 ; Jackson v. Jackson, 47 Ga. 99 ; Hatch v. Barrett, 34 Kan. 223, 8 Pnc. 129; Forker v. Brown, 10 Misc. Fraud is also classified as fraud in fact and fraud in law. The former is actual, positive, intentional fraud. Fraud disclosed by matters of fact, as distinguished from constructive fraud or fraud in law. McKibbin v. Martin, 64 Pa. 356. 3 Am. Rep. 588; Cook v. Burnham, 3 Kan. App. 27, 44 Pac. 447. Fraud in law is fraud in contemplation of law ; fraud implied or inferred by law ; fraud made out by con- struction of law, as distinguished from fraud found by a jury from matter of fact ; con- structive fraud (q. ».) See 2 Kent, Comm. 512-532; Delaney v. Valentine, 154 N. Y. 692, 49 N. E. 65; Burr v. Clement, 9 Colo. 1, 9 Pac. 633.

Fraud is also said to be legal or positive. The former is fraud made out by legal construction or inference, or the same tiling as construc- tive fraud. Newell v. Wagness, 1 N. D. 62, 44

— Actionable fraud. See Actionable.— Frauds, statute of. This is the common designation of a very celebrated English statute, (29 Car. II. c. 3.) passed in 1077, and which has been adopted, in a more or less modified form, in nearly all of the United States. Its chief characteristic is the provision that no suit or action shall be maintained on certain classes of contracts or engagements unless there shall be a note or memorandum thereof in writ* ing signed by the party to be charged or by his authorized agent. Its object was to close the door to the numerous frauds which were be- lieved to he perpetrated, 'and the perjuries which were believed to be committed, when such ob- ligations could be enforced upon no other evi- dence than the mere recollection of witnesses. It is more fully named as the "statute of frauds and perjuries." — Pious fraud. A subterfuge or evasion considered morally justifiable on ac- count of the ends sought to be promoted ; par- ticularly applied to an evasion or disregard of the laws in the interests of religion or religious institutions, such as circumventing the statutes of mortmain. , Why: Genuine and direct: UCC § 2-319 is the modern uniform-law home of the exact commercial term the entry defines.

FREEDMAN.

In Roman law. One who was set free from a state of bondage; an emancipated slave. The word la used in the same sense in the United States, respecting negroes who were formerly slaves. Fairfield v. Lawson, 50 Conn. 513, 47 Am. Rep. 009; Davenport v, Caldwell, 10 S. C. 333.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIII (1865) — abolition of slavery]

The entry notes the term's U.S. usage 'respecting negroes who were formerly slaves'; the Thirteenth Amendment (1865) abolished slavery, making 'freedman' a living American legal category.

Why: Genuine: the constitutional anchor of the entry's American half; stated as the historical-legal fact, not stretched.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 7:22, KJV]

For he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's freeman: likewise also he that is called, being free, is Christ's servant.

Why: The entry defines 'freedman' as one set free from bondage; the verse uses the very word — the Lord's freeman — for the servant called into liberty.

(paraphrase) Trimalchio, the vulgarly wealthy host of the dinner-party episode, is an ex-slave freedman — literature's archetypal freedman, satirized precisely for the anxieties of his new status. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the entry's Roman-law sense ('one set free from bondage') is exactly Trimalchio's status, and the novel satirizes the freedman class directly.

FREEDOM.

The state of being free ; liberty ; self-determination ; absence of re- straint; the opposite of slavery.

[Exodus 20:2, KJV]

It glosses the entry's definition (liberty; self-determination; absence of restraint; opposite of slavery) by naming freedom's counterfeit — a license that leaves restraint intact.

Why: Added because (1) the two quoted lines are verbatim-certain and open Mos Def's verse on the track; artist, track, and year are certain (Mos Def & Talib Kweli Are Black Star, 1998); (2) the 'licensed vs. free' distinct...

FREEHOLD.

An estate in laud or other real property, of uncertain duration ; that is, either of inheritance or which may possibly last for the life of tbe tenant at the least, (as distinguished from a leasehold ;) and held by a free tenure, (ns distinguished from copy- hold or villeinage.) Nevitt v. Woodbum, 175 111. 376, 51 N. E. 593 ; Railroad Co. v. Hemp- hill, 35 Miss. 22; Nellis v. Munson, 108 N.

Y. 453, 15 N. E. 739; Jones v. Jones, 20 Ga. 700.

Such an interest in lands of frank-tenement as may endure not only during the owner’s life, but which is cast after hia death upon the persons who successively represent him. ac- cording to certain rules elsewhere explained.

Such persons are called “heirs,” and he whom they thus represent, the "ancestor.” When the interest extends beyond the ancestor’s life, it is called a “freehold of inheritance," and, when it only endures for the ancestor’s life, it is a freehold not of inheritance.

An estate to be a freehold must possess these two qualities: (1) Immobility, that is. the projierty must be either land or some interest issuing out of or annexed to land; and (2) indeterminate duration, for, if the utmost peri- od of time to which an estate can endure be fixed and determined, it cannot be a freehold. Wharton.

—Determinable freeholds. Estates for life, which may determine upon future contingen- cies before the life for which they are created expires. As if an estate be granted to a wo- man during her widowhood, or to a man until he be promoted to a benefice ; in these and similar cases, whenever the contingency hap- pens,—when the widow marries, or when the gTantee obtains the Jjenefice,— the respective estates are absolutely determined and gone.

[Proverbs 13:22, KJV]

A good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children: and the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.

Why: A freehold is the inheritable estate in land — the interest 'cast' after the owner's life to his heirs. The proverb states the same transmission across generations as the righteous order of property.

FREEMAN.

This word has had various meanings at different stages of history. In the Roman law, it denoted one who was either horn free or emancipated, and was the opposite of “slave." In feudal law. It designated an allodial proprietor, as distin- guished from a vassal or feudal tenant. (And so in Pennsylvania colonial law. Fry’s Elec- tion Case, 71 Pa. 308, 10 Am. Rep. 698.) In old English law, the word described a free- holder or tenant by free services ; one who was not a villein. In modern legal phrase- ology, it Is the appellation of a member of a city or borough having the right of suffrage, or a member of any municipal corporation invested with full civic rights.

Freight Is properly the price or compensation paid for the transportation of goods by a carrier, at sea, from port to port. But the term is also used to denote the hire paid for the carriage of goods on land from place to place, (usually by a rail- road company, not au express company,) or

FRIVOLOUS.

An answer or plea is called “frivolous” when it is clearly insuffi- cient on its face, and does not controvert the material points of the opposite pleading, and is presumably interposed for mere pur- poses of delay or to embarrass the plaintiff. Erwin v. Lowery, 64 N. C. 321 ; Strong v. Sproul, 53 N. T. 499 ; Gray v. GIdiere, 4 Rtrob. (S. C.) 442; Peacock v. Williams (C. C.) 110 Fed. 916.

A frivolous demurrer has been defined to be one which is so clearly untenable. Or its insufficiency so manifest upon a bare In- spection of the pleadings, that its character may be determined without argument or re- search. Cottrill v. Cramer, 40 Wis. 558.

Synonyms. The terms “frivolous” and “sham,” as applied to pleadings, do not mean the same thing. A sham plea is good on its face, but false in fact; it may. to all appear- ances, constitute a perfect defense, but is a pretence because false and because not plead- ed in good faith. A frivolous plea may be per- fectly true in its allegations, but yet is liable to be stricken out because totally insufficient in substance. Andre ae v. Bandler (Sup.) 56

[Law: U.S. Const. Art. III, § 3, cl. 2 — no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted]

FUNCTUS OFFICIO.

Lat. Having ful- filled the function, discharged the office, or accomplished the purpose, and therefore of no further force or authority. FUND, v. To capitalize with a view to the production of interest. Stephen v. Mil- nor, 24 N. J. Eq. 376. Also, to put into the form of bonds, stocks, or other securities, bearing regular interest, and to provide or appropriate a fund or permanent revenue for the payment thereof. Merrill v. Montlcello (C. C.) 22 Fed. 596.

— Funded debt. To fund a debt is to pledge a specific fund to keep down the interest and reduce the principal. The term ‘fund” was originally applied to a portion of the national revenue set apart or pledged to the payment of a particular debt. Hence, as applied to the pecuniary obligations of states or municipal cor- porations, a funded debt is one for the pay- ment of which (interest and principal) some fund is appropriated, either specifically, or by provision made for Tuture taxation and the quasi pledging in advance of the public revenue. Ketchum v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 356; People v. Carpenter, 31 App. Div. 603. 52 N. Y. Supp. 781.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

As applied to the financial management of corporations (and sometimes of estates in course of administration or properties under receiver- ship) funding means the borrowing of a suffi- cient sum of money to discharge a variety of floating or unsecured debts, or debts evidenced by notes or secured by bonds but maturing with- in a short time, and creating a new debt in lieu thereof, secured by a general mortgage, a series of bonds, or an issue of stock, generally ma- turing at a more remote period, and often at a lower rate of interest. The new debt thus substituted for the pre-existing debts is called the “funded debt.” See Ketchum v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 356 ; People v. Carpenter, 31 App. Div. 603, 32 N. Y. Supp. 781 ; Lawrey v. Ster- ling, 41 Or. 518. 69 Pac. 460. This term Is very seldom applied to the debts of a private individual ; but when so used it must be under- stood as referring to a debt embodied in se- curities of a permanent character and to the payment of which certain property has been ap- plied or pledged. Wells v. Wells (Super. N. Y.) 24 N. Y. Supp. 874.—Fimdin* system. The practice of borrowing money to defray the ex- penses of government, and creating a “sinking fund,” designed to keep down interest, and to effect the gradual reduction of the principal debt. Mernll v. Monticeilo (C. C.) 22 Fed. 596.

FUND, ». A sum of money set apart for a specific purpose, or available for the pay- ment of debts or claims.

In its narrower and more usual sense, "fund” signifies “capital,” as opposed to "interest” or “income;” aR where we speak of a corporation funding the arrears of interest due on its bonds, or the like, meaning that the interest is capital- ized and made to bear interest in its turn until it is repaid. Sweet.

In the plural, this word has a variety of slightly different meanings, as follows:

1. Money in hand: cash; money available for the payment of a debt, legacy, etc. 3a-lena Ins. Co. r. Kupfer, 28 111. 335, 81 Am. Dec. 284.

2. The proceeds of sales of real and per- sonal estate, or the proceeds of any other as- sets converted Into money. Doane v. Insur- ance Co., 43 N. J. Eq. 533, 11 Atl. 739.

3. Corporate stocks or government securi- ties ; In this sense usually spoken of as the “funds."

4. Assets, securities, bonds, or revenue of a state or government appropriated for the discharge of Its debts.

—No funds. This term denotes a lack of as- sets or money for a specific use. It is the return made by a bank to a check drawn upon it by a person who has no deposit to his credit there; also by an executor, trustee, etc., who has no assets for the specific purpose. —Public funds. An untechnical name for (1) the rev- enue or money of a government, state, or mu- nicipal corporation ; (2) the bonds, stocks, or other securities of a national or state govern- ment.—Sinking fund. FUNDATIO.

Lat. A founding or foun- dation. Particularly applied to the creation and endowment of corporations. As applied to eleemosynary corporations such as colleges and hospitals, it is said that “fundatio in- cipiens" is the incorporation or grant of cor- porate powers, while “fundatio perflciens" is the endowment or grant or gift of funds or revenues. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 667, 4 L. Ed. 629.

FUNDUS.

In the civil and old English law. Land; land or ground generally ; land, without considering its specific use;- land, in- cluding buildings generally; a farm.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 24:1, KJV]

The earth is the LORD's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.

Why: Fundus is land as such — the legal thing underlying all tenure. The psalm states the ultimate title: every parcel is held, at the root, of the LORD. Feudal tenure's logic (all land held of a superior) terminates here.

FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Money expend- ed in procuring the interment of a corpse.

5e apparatus — Carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Law] — Law

[Law: priority of funeral expenses in estate administration]

The legal significance of funeral expenses is their priority: they are a preferred claim against the decedent's estate, paid ahead of general creditors.

Why: Genuine: the one live doctrine the bare definition points to; loose form, no invented citation.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 23:16, KJV]

And Abraham hearkened unto Ephron; and Abraham weighed to Ephron the silver, which he had named in the audience of the sons of Heth, four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchant.

Why: Money expended in procuring interment: Abraham weighing out four hundred shekels for the field of Machpelah as a buryingplace is the first funeral expense on record — price stated, purchase witnessed.

[Mark Twain, The Adventures of Tom Sawyer, 1876]

(paraphrase) Tom Sawyer, Huck Finn, and Joe Harper — presumed drowned — hide in the church gallery and attend their own funeral service, listening to their own eulogies. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the novel stages a funeral as its most famous set piece; the link is concrete, not thematic.

FUNGIBLE THINGS.

Movable goods which may be estimated and replaced accord- ing to weight, measure, and number. Things belonging to a class, which do not have to be dealt with in specie.

Those things one specimen of which is as good as another, as is the case with half-crowns, or pounds of rice of the same quality. Horses, slaves, and so forth, are non-fungible things, because they differ individually in value, and cannot be exchanged indifferently one for another. Holl. Jur. 88.

Where a thing which is the subject of an ob- ligation (which one man is bound to deliver to another) must be delivered in specie, the thing is not fungible; that very individual thing, and not another thing of the same or another class, in lieu of it, must be delivered. Where the subject of the obligation is a thing of a given class, the thing is said to be fungible ; t. e., the delivery of any object which answers to the generic description will satisfy the terms of the obligation. Aust. Jur. 483, 484.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 1-201 — "fungible" goods]

The civil-law definition — goods estimated and replaced by weight, measure, and number, one specimen as good as another — is carried verbatim into commercial law's definition of fungible goods.

Why: Genuine: definitional identity between the entry's concept and the uniform commercial definition; the link is textual, not decorative.

FUR.

Lat. A thief. One who stole se- cretly or without force or weapons, as op- posed to robber.

—Fur manifestos. In the civil law. A man- ifest thief. A thief who is taken in the very act of stealing.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:15, KJV]

Thou shalt not steal.

Why: Fur is the thief — one who steals secretly. The commandment forbids the act itself in God's own speech; every law of theft answers to it.

FURANDI ANIMUS.

Lat. An inten- tion of stealing.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 15:19, KJV]

Why: Furandi animus is the intention of stealing. Christ locates 'thefts' as proceeding 'out of the heart' — the animus, the formed intention, as the seat of the crime the law punishes.

FURCA.

In old English law. A fork. A gallows or gibbet. Bract, fol. 56.

— Furca et flagellum. Gallows and whip. Tenure ad furcam et flagellum, tenure by gal- lows and whip. The meanest of servile tenures, where the bondman was at the disposal of his lord for life and limb. Cowell.— Furca et fos- sa. Gallows and pit, or pit and gallows. A term used in ancient charters to signify a juris- diction of punishing thieves, viz., men by hang- ing, women by drowning. Spelman; Cowell.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Esther 7:10, KJV]

So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. Then was the king's wrath pacified.

Why: Furca is the gallows or gibbet — and furca et fossa the jurisdiction of punishing. The verse shows the gallows as the law's appointed instrument: Haman hanged by the king's justice on the gallows he built.

FURIGELDUM.

A fine or mulct paid for theft.

Furiosi nulla voluntas est. A madman has no will. Dig. 50, 17, 40; Broom, Max. 314.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:1, KJV]

If a man shall steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep.

Why: Furigeldum is the fine paid for theft. The verse is the Mosaic tariff for theft — manifold restoration — spoken by God among the judgments: scripture's own schedule of the theft-fine.

FURIOSITY.

In Scotch law. Madness, as distinguished from fatuity or idiocy.

5e apparatus — Not carried into the 5th edition (1979).

[Law] — Law

[M'Naghten's Case, 10 Cl. & Fin. 200 (1843)]

The entry's maxims hold the madman 'not answerable or punishable for his actions'; the modern insanity test asks whether the accused knew the nature of the act or that it was wrong.

Why: Genuine: M'Naghten's right-and-wrong rule is the direct descendant of the maxim 'furiosus solo furore punitur' the entry quotes; the lineage is the real history of the defense.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[William Shakespeare, Hamlet, c. 1601]

"Though this be madness, yet there is method in't." — Polonius's verdict on Hamlet's (possibly feigned) lunacy, the stage's great case study of the madman.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the legal category of the madman; the play supplies the archetypal instance and the classic judicial observation on discerning method in madness.

The 'furthering, helping forward' of a criminal project the entry defines is federal accomplice liability: one who aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures an offense is punishable as a principal.

Why: Genuine: the statute is the living codification of the criminal-law 'furthering' the entry describes; loose form, no invented case.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 50:18, KJV]

When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him, and hast been partaker with adulterers.

Why: Furtherance in criminal law is helping a criminal project forward — complicity. The psalm names its moral form: consenting with the thief, partaking with evildoers.

FURTIVE.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.

Why: Furtive is stealth — theft by stealth. Christ's image of the thief who 'climbeth up some other way' instead of entering by the door is the biblical figure of the furtive taker.

The entry's fragmented theft taxonomy — furtum manifestum, grave, oblatum, with intent to steal at the core — was answered by the modern consolidation of the common-law theft offenses into a single crime.

Why: Genuine: consolidation is the modern doctrinal answer to the entry's scattered Roman/Scots/common-law theft categories. Loose form.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:11, KJV]

Ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely, neither lie one to another.

Why: Furtum is fraudulent appropriation of another's property — theft with deceit. The command joins both elements in God's own speech: 'ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely.'

Why: Fustigatio is beating as judicial punishment. The verse is scripture's own law of that punishment — the judge causes the beating 'according to his fault,' capped at forty stripes: measure in the infliction.

This term has grown out of those purely speculative transactions, in which there is a nominal contract of sale for

The nominal seller does not have or expect to have the stock or merchandise he purports to sell, nor does the nominal buyer expect to receive it or to pay the price. Instead of that, a per- centage or margin is paid, which is increas- ed or diminished as the market rates go up or down, and accounted for to the buyer. King v. Quldnlck Co., 14 R. 2. A sport or pastime, played with cards, dice, or other appliances or contrivances. See Gaming.

One in which the result, as to success or failure, depends less upon the skill and experience of the player than upon purely fortuitous or accidental circumstances, incidental to the game or the manner of play- ing it or the device or apparatus with which it is played, but not under the control of the player. A game of skill, on the other hand, al- though the element of chance necessarily cannot be entirely eliminated, is one in which success depends principally upon the superior knowl- edge, attention, experience, and skill of the play- er, whereby the elements of luck or chance in the game are overcome, improved, or turned to his advantage. contribute. In re Stewart (D. C.) 21 Fed. 398; People v. Todd, 51 Hun, 446, 4 N. Y. Supp. 25; State v. Shaw, 39 Minn. 153, 39 N. W. 305; State v. Morgan, 133 N. C. 743, 45 S. E. 1033.

Gaming is an agreement between two or more to risk money on a contest or chance of any kind, where one must be loser and the other gainer. Bell v. State, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 507.

In general, the words “gaming” and “gam- bling,’* in statutes, are similar in meaning, and either one comprehends the idei that, by a bet, by chance, by some exercise of skill, or by the transpiring of some event unknown until it oc- curs, something of value is, as the conclusion of premises agreed, to be transferred from a loser to a winner, without which latter element there is no gaming or gambling. Bish. St. Crimes, f 858.

“Gaming” implies, when used as describing a condition, an element of illegality ; and, when people are said to be "gaming," this generally supposes that the “games” have been games in which money comes to the victor or his backers. When the terms “game” or “gaming” are used in statutes, it is almost always in connection with words giving them the latter rensa. and in such case it is only by averring and proving the differentia that the prosecution can be sustain- ed. But when "gaming” is spoken of in a stat- ute as indictable, it is to be regarded as con- vertible with “gambling.” 2 Whart. Crim. Law, i 14655.

“Gaming" is properly the act or engagement of the players. If by-standers or other third persons put up a stake or wager among them- selves, to go to one or the other according to the result of the game, this is more correctly termed "betting.”

—Gaming contracts. See Wager. — Gam- ing-houses. In criminal law. Houses in which gambling is carried on as the business of the occupants, and which are frequented by persons for that purpose. They are nuisances, in the eyes of the law, being detrimental to the public, as they promote cheating and other cor- rupt practices. 1 Russ. Crimes, 299; Rose. Cnm. Ev. 663; People v. Jackson, 3 Denio (N. Y.) 101, 45 Am. Dec. 449; Anderson v. State (Tex. App.) 12 S. W. 869; People v. Welthoff, 51 Mich. 203, 16 N. W. 442, 47 Am. Rep. ooi ; Morgan v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 422, 60 8. the punishment of the lighter offenses and mis- demeanors, while the latter is a place for per- manent or long-continued confinement, or for the punishment of graver crimes. In modern usage, this distinction is commonly taken be- tween the words "gaol” and "penitentiary,” (or state’s prison,) but the name "prison” is indis- criminately applied to either.

[Law: elements of a valid inter vivos gift — donative intent, delivery, acceptance]

The voluntary gratuitous transfer the entry defines is legally effective only where three elements concur: donative intent, delivery, and acceptance.

Why: Genuine: the elements test every 'voluntary conveyance... made gratuitously' the entry names. Loose form; no invented case.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 9:7, KJV]

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.

Why: A gift in law is a transfer 'voluntarily and without consideration.' The verse states the same act in morals: giving purposed in the heart, 'not grudgingly, or of necessity' — the gratuitous transfer's inner form.

GOODS.

In contracts. The term “goods” is not so wide as “chattels,” for it applies to Inanimate objects, and does not in- clude animals or chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, which “chattels” does include. Co. Lift. 118; St. Joseph Hydraulic Co. v. Wilson, 133 Ind. 465, 33 N. E. 113;

Van Patten v. Leonard, 55 Iowa, 520, 8 N. W. 334; Putnam v. Westeott, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 76.*

In wills. In wills “goods” is nomen gcn- eralissimum, and, if there is nothing to limit it, will comprehend all the personal estate of the testator, as stocks, bonds, notes, money, plate, furniture, etc. Kendall v. Kendall, 4 Russ. 370; Chamberlain v. Western Transp. Co., 44 N. Y. 310, 4 Am. Rep. 681 ; Foxall v. McKenney, 9 Fed. Cas. 645 ; Bailey v. Dun- can, 2 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 22 ; Keyser v. School Dist., 35 N. H. 483.

—Good* and chattels. This phrase is a gen- eral denomination of personal property, as distinguished from real property; the term "chat- tels” having the effect of extending its scope to any objects of that nature which would not properly be included by the term “goods” alone, e. g.. living animals, emblements, and fruits, and terms under leases for years. The general phrase also embraces choses in action, as well as personalty in possession. In wills. The term “goods and chattels” will, unless restrain- ed by the context, pass all the personal estate, including leases for years, cattle, corn, debts, and the like. Ward, Leg. 208, 211.— Goods sold and delivered. A phrase frequently used in the action of assumptit, when the sale and delivery of goods furnish the cause.— Goods, wares, and merchandise. A government of fact. A government actually exercising power and con- trol in the state, as opposed to the true and lawful government; a government not estab- lished according to the constitution of the state, or not lawfully entitled to recognition or su- premacy, but which has nevertheless supplant- ed or displaced the government de jure. A gov- ernment deemed unlawful, or deemed wrongful or unjust, which, nevertheless, receives present- ly habitual obedience from the bulk of the com- munity. Aust. Jur. 324. There are several degrees of what is called "de facto government.” ouch a government, in its highest degree, as- sumes a character very closely resembling that of a lawful government This is when the usurping government expels the regular author- ities from their customary seats and functions, and establishes itself in their place, and so becomes the actual government of a country. The distinguishing characteristic of such a gov- ernment iB that adherents to it in war against the government de jure do not incur the pen- alties of treason ; and, under certain limita- tions, obligations assumed by it in behalf of the country or otherwise will, in general, be respect- ed by the government de jure when restored.

But there is another description of govern- ment, called also by publicists a “government de facto" but which might, perhaps, be more aptly denominated a “government or paramount force.” Its distinguishing characteristics are (1) that its existence is maintained by active mili- tary power, within the territories, and against the rightful authority, of an established and lawful government ; and (2) that, while it ex- ists, it must necessarily be obeyed in civil mat- ters by private citizens who, by acts of obedi- ence, rendered in submission to such force, do not become responsible, as wrong-doers, for those acts, though ndt warranted by the laws of the rightful government. Actual governments of this sort are established over districts differ- ing greatly in extent and conditions. They are usually administered directly by military author- ity, but they may be administered, also, by civil authority, supported more or less by military force. Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall. 8. 9. 19

L. Ed. 361. The term "de facto." as descrip- tive of a government, has no well-fixed nnd definite sense. It is, perhaps, most correctly used as signifying a government completely, though only temporarily, established in the place of the lawful or regular government, occupying its capitol, and exercising its power, and which is ultimately overthrown, and the authority of the government de jure re-established. Thomas v. Taylor, 42 Miss. 651, 703, 2 Am. Rep. 625. A government de facto is a government that un- lawfully gets the possession and control of the rightful legal government, and maintains itself there, by force and arms, against the will of such legal government, and claims to exercise the powers thereof. Chisholm v. Colemnn, 43 Ala. 204. 94 Am. Dec. 677. And see further Smith v. Stewart, 21 La. Ann. 67, 99 Am. Dec. 709; Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U. S. 176. 24 L. Ed. 716 ; Keppel v. Railroad Co., 14 Fed. Cas. 857.— Government de jure. A government of right ; the true and lawful government ; a gov- ernment established according to the constitu- tion of the state, and lawfully entitled to recog- nition and supremacy and the administration of the state, but which is actually cut off from power or control. A government deemed law- ful, or deemed rightful or just, which, neverthe- less, has been supplanted or displaced ; that is to say, which receives not presently (although it received formerly) habitual obedience from the bulk of the community. Aust. Jur. 324.— Xiocal government. The government or administra- tion of a particular locality ; especially, the governmental authority of a municipal corpora- tion, as a city or county, over its local and in- dividual affairs, exercised in virtue of power delegated to it for that purpose by the general government of the state or nation.— Mixed government. A form of government combin- ing some of the features of two or all of the three primary forms, viz., monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy. — Republican government. C A. 100.

A technical term made use of In deeds of conveyance of lands to import a transfer. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 378-380.

Though the word “grant” was originally made use of, In treating of conveyances of Interests in lands, to denote a transfer by deed of that which could not be passed by livery, and, of course, was applied only to in- corporeal hereditaments, it has now become a generic term, applicable to the transfer of all classes of real property. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 181.

As distinguished from a mere license, a grant passes some estate or interest, corporeal or in- corporeal, in the lands which it embraces ; can only be made by an instrument in writing, under seal ; and is irrevocable, when made, un- less an express power of revocation is reserved. A license is a mere authority ; passes no estate or interest whatever ; may be made by parol ; is revocable at will; and, when revoked, the protection which it gave ceases to exist. Ja- mieson v. Millemann, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 255, 258.

The term “grant,” in Scotland, is used in reference (1) to original dispositions of land, as when a lord makes grants of land among tenants; (2) to gratuitous deeds. Paterson. In such case, the superior or donor is said to grant the deed; an expression totally un- known In English law. Mozley & Whitley.

By the word “grant," in a treaty, is meant not only a formal grant, but any concession, warrant, order, or permission to survey, pos- sess, or settle, whether written or parol, ex- press, or presumed from possession. Such a grant may be made by law, as well as by a patent pursuant to a law. Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 436, 9 L. Ed. 1137. And see Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 179, 5 Sup. Ct 413, 28

[Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — conveyances of land must be in writing]

The deed-transfer of real property the entry defines must be in writing: the Statute of Frauds requires conveyances of land to be evidenced by a signed memorandum.

Why: Genuine: the writing requirement governs the 'transfer by deed... of real property' the entry defines; the statute is the entry's own FRAUD sub-entry's subject, applied here.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 13:15, KJV]

For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever.

Why: A grant is the transfer of real property by the sovereign's act — the royal grant by letters patent. The verse is the sovereign grant itself: God conveying the land to Abraham and his seed for ever, in his own speech.

Though this term is sometimes used in con- veyances and in statutes as equivalent to “land,” it is properly of a more limited signification, because it applies strictly only to the surface, while “land includes everything beneath the surface, and because “ground" always means dry land, whereas “land" may and often does include the beds of lakes and streams and oth- er surfaces under water. GUARANTOR.

He who makes a guar- anty.

GUARANTY, v. To undertake collater- ally to answer for the payment of another’s debt or the performance of another’s duty, liability, or obligation ; to assume the re- sponsibility of a guarantor; to warrant. See Guaranty, n.

GUARANTY, n. A promise to answer for the payment of some debt, or the per- formance of some duty, in case of the failure of another person, who, in the first Instance, Is liable to such payment or performance. Gallagher v. Nichols, 60 N. Y. 444 ; Andrews v. Pope, 126 N. C. 472, 35 S. B. 817; Deming v. Bull, 10 Conn. 409; Reigart v. White, 52 Pa. 438.

A guaranty is an undertaking by one per- son to be answerable for the payment of some debt, or the due performance of some contract or duty, by another person, who himself remains liable to pay or perform the same. Story, Prom. Notes, | 457.

A guaranty is a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another per- son. Civil Code Cal. | 2787.

A guaranty is a contract that some particular thing shall be done exactly as It is agreed to be done, whether It is to be done by one person or another, and whether there be a prior or principal contractor or not. Redfield v. Haight, 27 Conn. 81.

The definition of a “guaranty,” by text-writ- ers, is an undertaking by one person that an- other shall perform his contract or fulfill his obligation, or that, if he does not, the guarantor will do it for him. A guarantor of a bill or note is said to be one who engages that the note shall be paid, but is not an indorser or surety. Gridley v. Capen, 72 111. 13.

Synonyms. The terms guaranty and surety- ship are sometimes used interchangeably; but they should not be confounded. The contract of a surety corresponds with that of a guar- antor in many respects ; yet important differ- ences exist. The surety is bound with his prin- cipal as an original promisor. He is a debtor from the beginning, and must see that the debt is paid, and is held ordinarily to know every default of his principal, and cannot pro- tect himself by the mere indulgence of the cred- itor, nor by want of notice of the default of the principal, however such indulgence or want of notice may in fact injure him. On the other hand, the contract of a guarantor is his own separate contract. It is in the nature of a war- ranty by him that the thing guarantied to be done by the principal shall be done, not merely an engagement jointly with the principal to do the thing. The original contract of the princi- pal is not his contract, and he is not bound to take notice of its non-performance. Therefore the creditor should give him notice; and it is universally held that, if the guarantor can prove that he has suffered damage by the failure to give such notice, he will be discharged to the extent of the damage thus sustained. It is not so with a surety. Durham v. Manrow, 2

Guaranty and warranty are derived from the same root, and are in fact etymologically the same word, the "g” of the Norman French be- ing interchangeable with the English “w.” They are often used colloquially and in com- mercial transactions as having the same signif- ication, as where a piece of machinery or the produce of an estate is “guarantied” for a term of years, “warranted” being the more appropri- ate term in such a case. See

Accumulator Co. v. Dubuque St. R. Co., 64 Fed. 70. 12 C. C. A. 37 ; Martinez v. EJarnshaw, 36 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 502. A distinction is also sometimes made in commercial usage, by which the term "guaranty" is understood as a collateral war- ranty (often a conditional one) against some de- fault or event in the future, while the term "warranty" is taken as meaning an absolute un- dertaking in pratcnti, against the defect, or for the quantity or quality contemplated by the parties in the subject-matter of the contract. Sturges v. Bank of Circleville, 11 Ohio St. 169, 78 Am. Dec. 296. But in strict legal usage the two terms are widely distinguished in this, that a warranty is an absolute undertaking or liability on the part of the warrantor, and the contract is void unless it is strictly and literal- ly performed, while a guaranty is a promise, en- tirely collateral to the original contract, and not imposing any primary liability on the guar- antor, but binding him to be answerable for the failure or default of another. [Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — promise to answer for the debt of another must be in writing]

The guaranty the entry defines — 'a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person' — is within the Statute of Frauds and must be in writing to be enforceable.

Why: Genuine: the suretyship clause of the statute governs exactly the collateral promise the entry defines.

GUARDIAN.

A guardian Is a person lawfully Invested with the power, and char- ged with the duty, of taking care of the person and managing the property and rights of another person, who, for some pe- culiarity of status, or defect of age, under- standing, or self-control, is considered in- capable of administering his own affairs. Bass v. Cook, 4 Port (Ala.) 392; Sparhawk v. Allen, 21 N. H. 27 ; Burger v. Frakes, 67 Iowa, 460, 23 N. W, 746.

A guardian is a person appointed to take care of the person or property of another. Civ. Code Cal. | 236.

One who legally has the care and manage- ment of the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during its minority. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 311.

This term might be appropriately used to designate the person charged with the care and control of Idiots, lunatics, habitual drunkards, spendthrifts, and the like; but such person is, under many of the statutory systems authorizing the appointment, styled "committee," and in common usage the name “guardian” is applied only to one having the care and management of a minor.

The name "curator” is given in some of the states to a person having the control of a minor’s estate, without that of his person ; and this is also the usage of the civil law.

Classification. A testamentary guardian is one appointed by the deed or last will of the child’s father; while a guardian by election is one chosen by the infant himself in a case where he would otherwise be without one. A general guardian is one who has the general care and control of the person and estate of his ward : while a special guardian is one who has special or limited powers and duties with respect to bis ward, e. a., a guardian who has the custody of the estate but not of the person, or vice versa, or a guardian ad litem. A domestic guardian is one appointed at the place where the ward is legally domiciled ; while a foreign guardian derives his authority from appointment by the courts of another state, and generally has charge only of such property as may be located within the jurisdiction of the power appointing him. A guardian ad litem is a guardian appointed by a court of justice to prosecute or defend for an infant in any suit to which he may be a party. 2 Steph. Comm. 342. Most commonly appoint- ed for infant defendants; infant plaintiffs gen- erally suing by next friend. This kind of guard- ian has no right to interfere with the infant’s person or property. 2 Steph. Comm. 343; Richter v. Leiby, J07 Wis. 404, 83 N. W. 694. A guardian by appointment of oourt is the most important species of guardian in modern law, having custody of the infant until the attain- ment of full age. It has in England in a man ner superseded the guardian in socage, and in the United States the guardian by nature also. The appointment is made by a court of chan- cery, or probate or orphans’ court 2 Steph. Comm. 341 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 226. A guardian by nature is the father, and, on his death, the mother, of a child. 1 Bl. Comm. 461 ; 2 Kent Comm. 219. This guardianship extends only to the custody of the person of the child to the age of twenty-one years. Sometimes called "natural guardian.” but this is rather a popu- lar than a technical mode of expression. 2 Steph. Comm. 337 ; Kline v. Beebe, 6 Conn. 500; Mauro v. Ritchie, 16 Fed. Gas. 1171. A guardian by statute is a guardian appointed for a child by the deed or last will of the father, and who has the custody both of his person and estate until the attainment of full age. This kind of guardianship is founded on the statute of 12 Car. II. c. 24, and has. been pretty exten- sively adopted in this country. 1 Bl. Comm. 462 ; 2 Steph. Comm. 339, 340 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 224-226; Huson v. Green, 88 Ga. 722, 16 8.

E. 255. A guardian for nurture is the father, or, at his decease, the mother, of a child. This kind of guardianship extends only to the per- son, and determines when the infant arrives at the age of fourteen. 2 Kent, Comm. 221; 1 Bl. Comm. 461 ; 2 Steph. Comm. 338 ; Mauro v. Ritchie, 16 Fed. Cas. 1171; Arthurs' Appeal, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 56. Guardian in chivalry.

In the tenure by knight's service, in the feudal law, if the heir of the feud was under the age of twenty-one, being a male, or fourteen, being a female, the lord was entitled to the wardship <and marriage) of the heir, and was called the "guardian in chivalry.” This wardship consist- ed in having the custody of the body and lands of such heir, without any account of the prof- its. 2 Bl. Comm. 67. Guardian in nocage. At the common law, this was a species of guardian who had the custody of lands coming to the infant by descent, as also of the infant’s per- son, until the latter reached the age of fourteen. Such guardian was always "the next of kin to whom the inheritance cannot possibly descend.” 1 Bl. Comm. 461 ; 2 Steph. Comm. 338 ; Byrne v. Van Hoesen, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 67 ; Van Doren v. Everitt, 5 N. J. Law, 462, 8 Am. Dec. 615; Combs v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 157, 19 Am. Dec. 568. Natural guardian. The father of a child, or the mother if the father be dead.

[Troxel v. Granville, 530 U.S. 57 (2000)]

The guardianship of a child's person the entry defines is bounded by the fundamental right of fit parents to the care, custody, and control of their children.

Why: Genuine: Troxel is the modern authority on the parental-care right that limits and frames the guardianship the entry defines.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 82:3, KJV]

Defend the poor and fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy.

Why: A guardian takes care of those 'incapable of administering his own affairs' — the fatherless chief among them. The psalm commands their defense outright: 'defend the poor and fatherless' — guardianship's biblical charge.

In me- dieval history these fraternities or guilds played an important part in the government of some states; as at Florence; in the thir- teenth and following centuries, where they chose the council of government of the city. But with the growth of cities and the ad- vance in the organization of municipal gov- ernment, their Importance and prestige has declined. The place of meeting of a guild, or association of guilds, was called the "Guildhall.” The word is said to be derived from the Anglo-Saxon “gild" or "geld,” a tax or tribute, because each member of the soci- ety was required to pay a tax towards its support.

[Law: writ of possession — enforcement of a judgment for possession of land]

The habere facias possessionem — the sheriff placing the successful ejectment plaintiff in actual possession — survives as the writ of possession enforcing a judgment for possession of land.

Why: 'Have your effects to yourself' is Rome's formula of divorce. The verse gives scripture's: the written bill of divorcement put in her hand — divorce as a formal written act, in both laws.

HABITABLE REPAIR.

Why: Genuine: Javins is the charter case implying habitability into leases, directly on the entry's covenant.

HABITANCY.

Settled dwelling in a giv- en place; fixed and permanent residence there. This term is more cpmprehensive than "domicile," for one may be domiciled in a given place though he does not spend the greater portion of his time there, or though he may be absent for long periods. It is also more comprehensive than "residence," for one may reside in a given place only tem- porarily or for short periods on the occasion of repeated visits. But in neither case could he properly be called an "inhabitant" of that place or be said to have his "habitancy" there. See Atkinson v. Washington A Jef- ferson College, 54 W. Va. 32, 46 S. B. 253; Hairston v. Hairston, 27 Miss. 711, 61 Am. Dec. 530; Abington v. North Bridgewater, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 170. And see Domicile; Resi- dence.

It is difficult to give an exact definition of "habitancy." In general terms, one may be des- ignated as an. "inhabitant" of that place which constitutes the principal seat of his residence, of his business, pursuits, connections, attach- ments, and of his political and municipal rela- tions. The term, therefore, embraces the fact of residence at a place, together with the intent to regard it and make it a home. The act and intent must concur. Lyman v. Fiske, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 231, 28 Am. Dec. 293.

HABITUAL DRUNKARD.

A person given to ebrlety or the excessive use of in- toxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it Ludwlck v. One who has the habit of indulging in intoxi- cating liquors so firmly fixed that he becomes intoxicated as often as the temptation is pre- sented by his being in the vicinity where liquors are sold is an “habitual drunkard," within the meaning of the divorce law. Magahay v. Magahay, 35 Mich. 210.

In England, it is defined by the habitual drhnkards’ act, 1879. (42 & 43 Viet. c. 19.) which authorizes confinement in a retreat, upon the party’s own application, as “a person who, not being amenable to any jurisdiction in lu- nacy, is, notwithstanding, by reason of habitual intemperate drinking of intoxicating liquor, at limes dangerous to himself, or herself, or oth- ers, or incapable of managing himself or her- self, or his or her affairs.”

Why: Genuine: the entry defines universal succession (hereditas); the play opens with one being divided. (Headword as parsed in chunk: HEREDITA8.)

HASHES.

In Homan law. The heir, or universal successor in the event of death. The heir Is he who actively or passively suc- ceeds to the entire property of the estate- leaver. He Is not only the successor to the rights and claims, but also to the estate-leav- er's debts, and in relation to his estate is to be regarded as the identical person of the estate-leaver, inasmuch as he represents him in all his active and passive relations to his estate. Mackeld. Rom. Law, { 651.

It should be remarked that the office, pow- ers, and duties of the hares, in Roman law, were much more closely assimilated to those of a modern executor than to those of an heir at law. Hence “heir” is not at all an accurate translation of “hares,” unless it be understood in a special, technical sense.

In eommon law. An heir; he to whom lands, tenements, or hereditaments by the act of God and right of blood do descend, of some estate of inheritance. Co. Litt. 75.

— Hares astrarius. In old English law. An heir in actual possession.— Hseres de fac- to. In old English law. Heir from fact ; that is, from the deed or act of his ancestor, without or against right. Other- wise called “hares ex testamento.” and “hares institutus." Inst. 2, 9, 7 ; Id. 2. 14.— Hares fldeicommissarlus. In the civil law. The person for whose benefit an estate was giv- en to another (termed “hares fiduciaries.” (q. v.) by will. Inst. 2, 23, 6, 7, 9. Answer- ing nearly to the cestui aue trust of the Eng- lish law.— Hares flduciarius. A fiduciary heir, or heir in trust ; a person constituted heir by will, in trust for the bepefit of an- other, called the “fideicommissaritis." — Har- es institutns. A testamentary heir; one ap- pointed by the will of the decedent. — Hares legitimns. A lawful heir; one pointed out as such by the marriage of his parents.— Star- es natus. In the civil law. An heir bora ; one born heir, as distinguished from one made heir, (hares factus, q. r. ;) an heir at law, or by intestacy, (ab intestato ;) the next of kin by blond, in cases of intestacy. Story. Confl. Laws, $ 507 ; 3 Bl. Comm. 224.— Hares necessarius. In the civil law. A necessary or compulsory heir. This name was given to the heir when, being a slave, he was named "heir” in the testa- ment. because on the. death of the testator, whether he would or hot, he at once became free, and was compelled to assume the heirship. Inst 2, 19, 1.— Haredes proximi. Nearest or next heirs. The children or descendants of the deceased.— Hares rectns. In old English law. A right heir. Fleta. lib. 6, c. 1. | 11.— Haredes remotiores. remote heirs. The kinsmen other than children or descend- ants.—Hares suns. In the civil law. A man’s own heir: a decedent’s proper or natural heir. This name was given to the lineal -de- scendants of the deceased. Inst. 3. 1, 4-5.— Haredes sni et necessariL In Roman law. Own and necessary heirs; i. e„ the lineal descendanta of the estate-leaver. They were call- ed “necessary” heirs, because it was the law that made them heirs, and not the choice of ei- ther the decedent or themselves. But since this was also true of slaves (when named "heirs” in the will) the former class were des- ignated “»ui et necestarii.1’ by way of distinc- tion, the word “»ui” denoting that the necessity arose from their relationship to the decedent. HALLUCINATION.

In medical juris- prudence. A trick or deceit of the senses ; a morbid error either of the sense of sight or that of hearing, or possibly of the other senses; a psychological state, such as would be produced naturally by an act of sense-per- ception, attributed confidently, but mistaken- ly, to something which has no objective exist- ence ; as, when the patient Imagines that he sees an object when there is none, or bears a voice or other sound when nothing strikes his ear. See Staples v. Wellington, 58 Me. 459; Foster v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233, 24 Atl. 257 ; McNett v. Cooper (C. C.) 13 Fed. 590; People v. Krlst, 168 N. Y. 19, 60 N. E. 1057.

Hallucination does not by itself constitute in- sanity, though it may be evidence of it or a sign of its approach. It is to be distinguished from “delusion” in this, that the latter is a fixed and irrational belief in the existence of a fact or state of facts, not cognizable through the senses, but to be determined by the facul- ties of reason, memory, judgment, and the like ; while hallucination is a belief in the existence of an external object, perceptible by the senses, but having no real existence; or, in so far as a delusion may relate to an external object, it is an irrational belief as to the character, na- ture. or appearance of something which really exists and affects the senses. For example, if a man should believe that he saw his right hand in its proper place, after it had been amutated, it would be an hallucination; but if he elieved that bis right hand was made of glass, it would be a delusion. In other words, in the case of hallucination, the senses betray the mind, while in the case of delusion, the senses act normally, but their evidence is rejected by the mind on account of the existence of an ir- rational belief formed independently of them. They are further distinguished by the fact that hallucinations may be observed and studied by the subject himself and traced to their causes, or may be corrected by reasoning or argument, while a delusion is an unconscious error, but so fixed and unchangeable that the patient can- not be reasoned out of it. Hallucination is al- so to be distinguished from “illusion.” the lat- ter term being appropriate to describe a per- verted or distorted or wholly mistaken impres- sion in the mind, derived from a true act of sense-perception, stimulated by a real external object, but modified by the imagination of the subject ; while, in the case of hallucination, as above stated, there is no objective reality to correspond with the imagined perception.

The word "hearing” has an established mean- ing as applicable to equity cases. It means the same thing in those cases that the word “trial” does in cases at law. And the words “final hearing” have long been used to designate the trial of an equity case upon the merits, as dis- tinguished from the bearing of any preliminary questions arising in the cause, and which are termed “interlocutory.” Akerly v. HEIR.

At common law. A person who succeeds, by the rules of law, to an estate In lands, tenements, or hereditaments, upon the death of his ancestor, by descent and right of relationship. Hoover v. Smith, 96 Md. 393, 54 Atl. 102; Fletcher v. Holmes, 32 Ind. 510; Sewall v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 268; Dodge’s Appeal, 106 Pa. 216, 51 Am. Rep. 519; Howell v. Gifford, 64 N. J. Eq. 180, 53 Atl. 1074.

The term "heir” has a very different significa- tion at common law from wbat it has in those states and countries which have adopted the civil law. In the latter, the term is indis- criminately applied to all persons who are call- ed to the succession, whether by the act of the party or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the “testamentary heir;” and the next of kin by bloood is, in cases of intestacy, call- ed the "heir at law,” or “heir by intestacy.” The executor of the common law in many re- spects corresponds to the testamentary heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by in- testacy. By the common law, executors and administrators have no right except to the per- sonal estate of the deceased ; whereas the heir by the civil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. Story, Confl. Laws, IS 57, 508.

In the civil law. A universal successor in the event of death. He who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property or estate, rights and obligations, of a decedent, and occupies his place.

The term “heir” has several significations. Sometimes it refers to one who has formally accepted a succession and taken possession there- of; sometimes to one who is called to succeed, but still retains the faculty of accepting or re- nouncing, and it is frequently used as ap- plied to one who has formally renounced. Mumford v. Bowman, 26 La. Ann. 417.

In Scotch law. The person who suc- ceeds to the heritage or heritable rights of one deceased. T Forb. Inst. pt. 3, p. 75. The word has a more extended signification than In English law, comprehending not only those who succeed to lands, but successors to personal property also. Wharton.

—Heir apparent. An heir whose right of in- heritance is indefeasible, provided he outlive the ancestor: as in England the eldest son, or his issue, who must, by the course of the common law, be heir to the father whenever he happens to die. 2 Bl. A government exercised by seven persons, or a nation divided into seven governments. In the year 560, seven different monarchies had been formed in England by the German tribes, namely, that of Kent by the Jutes ; those of Sussex, Wes- sex, and Essex by the Saxons ; and those of East Anglia, Bernicia, and Deira by the An- gles. To these were added, about the year 586, an eighth, called the “Kingdom of Mer- cia,” nlso founded by the Angles, and com- prehending nearly the whole of the heart of the kingdom. These states formed what has been designated the “Anglo-Saxon Octarchy," ■ or more commonly, though not so correctly, the “Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy,” from the cus- tom of speaking of Deira and Bernicia under the single appellation of the “Kingdom of Northumberland.” Wharton.

The term includes a few rights unconnected with land, but it is generally used as the widest expression for real property of all kinds, and is therefore employed in conveyances after the words “lands” and “tenements,” to include everything of the nature of realty which they do not cover. Sweet.

—Corporeal hereditaments. Substantial permanent objects which may be inherited. The term “land” will include all such. 2 Bl. Comm. 17: Whitlock v. Greacen, 48 N. J. Eq. 309, 21 Atl. 944 ; Cary v. There is a difference in the shade of meaning conveyed by two uses of the word.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Sometimes it signifies right of free passage, in the ab- stract, not importing anything about the char- acter or construction of the way. Thus, a river is called a “highway;” and it has been not unusual for congress, in granting a privilege of building a bridge, to declare that it shall be a public highway. Again, it has reference to some system of law authorizing the taking a strip of land, and preparing and devoting it to the use of travelers. In this use it imports a road-way upon the soil, constructed under the authority of these laws. Abbott.

HJlkING. Hiring is a contract by which one person grants to another either the en- joyment of a thing or the use of the labor and industry, either of himself or his serv- ant during a certain time, for a stipulated compensation, or where one contracts for the labor or services of another about a thing balled to him for a specified purpose. Synonyms. [Leviticus 19:13, KJV]

Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him: the wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning.

Why: The hirer is the one who engages service for a stipulated reward; the verse states his correlative duty — the hired servant's wages paid promptly, not held overnight. Direct second-person divine command.

HOMAGE.

In feudal law. A service (or the ceremony of rendering it) which a tenant was bound to perform to his lord on receiving Investiture of a fee, or succeeding to it as heir, in acknowledgment of the ten- ure. It Is described by Littleton as the most honorable service of reverence that a free tenant might do to bis lord. The ceremony was as follows: The tenant, being ungirt and with bare bead, knelt before the lord.

the latter Bitting, and held his hands extend- ed and joined between the hands of the lord, and said: “I become your man [homo] from this day forward, of life and limb and earthly honor, and to you will be faithful and loyal, and bear you faith, for the tenements that I claim to hold of you, saving the faith that I owe unto our sovereign lord the king, so help me God.” The tenant then received a kiss from the lord. Homage could be done only to the lord himself. Lltt. | 85; Glanv. lib. 9, c. 1 ; Bract fols. 776, 78-80; Wharton.

"Homage” Is to be distinguished from "fealty,” another Incident of feudalism, and which consisted in the solemn oath of fidelity made by the vassal to the lord, whereas hom- age was merely an acknowledgment of ten- ure; If the homage was intended to include fealty, It was called "liege homage;” but otherwise it was called "simple homage.” Brown.

— Homage ancestral. In feudal law. Horn* ate was called by this name where a man and his ancestors had immemorially held of another and his ancestors by the service of homage, which bound the lord to warrant the title, and also to hold the tenant clear of all services to superior lords. HOSTLER.

In Norman and old English law, this was the title of the officer in a monastery charged with the entertainment of guests. It was also applied (until about the time of Queen Elizabeth) to an innkeeper, and afterwards, when the keeping of horses at livery became a distinct occupation, to the keeper of a livery stable, and then (under the modern form “ostler”) to the groom In charge of the stables of an inn. Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 20. In the lan- guage of railroading, an “ostler” or “hostler” at a roundhouse is one whose duty it is to receive locomotives as they come in from the road, care for them in the roundhouse, and have them cleaned and ready for de- parture when wanted. HOTCHPOT.

The blending and mixing property belonging to different persons, in order to divide it equally. 2 Bl. Comm. 190.

Anciently applied to the mixing and blend- ing of lands given to one daughter in frank marriage, with those descending to her and her sisters in fee-simple, for the purpose of dividing the whole equally among them; without which the daughter who held in frank marriage could have no share in the lands in fee-simple. Litt §§ 267, 268; Co. Litt. 177«; 2 Bl. Comm. 190.

Hotchpot, or the putting in hotchpot, is ap- plied in modern law to the throwing the amount of an advancement made to a par- ticular child, in real or personal estate, into the common stock, for the purpose of a more equal division, or of equalizing the shares of all the children. 2 Kent, Comm. 421, 422. [Law: common-law burglary — breaking and entering a dwelling-house by night with intent to commit a felony therein (the definition the entry invokes)]

Housebreaking becomes burglary when done by night: at common law, burglary is the breaking and entering of a dwelling-house in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony therein.

HUNDRED.

Under the Saxon organiza- tion of England, each county or shire com- prised an indefinite number of hundreds, each hundred containing ten titIUngs, or groups of ten families of freeholders or frank- pledges. The hundred was governed by a high constable, and had Its own court; but its most remarkable feature was the cor- porate responsibility of the whole for the crimes or defaults of the individual mem- bers. The Introduction of this plan of or- ganization into England is commonly ascrib- ed to Alfred, but the Idea, as well of the collective liability as of the division, was prob- ably known to the ancient German peoples, as we find the same thing established in the Frankish kingdom under Clothalre, and in Denmark. A married man; one who has a lawful wife living. The correlative of “wife.”

Etymologically, the word signified the “house bond the man who, according to Saxon ideas and institutions, held around him the family, for whom he was in law responsible.

— Husband, and wife. One of the great do- mestic relationships ; being that of a man and woman lawfully joined in marriage, by which, at common law, the legal existence of a wife is incorporated with that of her husband.— H ns band land. In old Scotch law. A quan- tity of land containing commonly six acres. Skene.— Husband o* a ship. See Ships Husband.

HUSBANDMAN . A farmer; a cultivator or tiller of the ground. The word “farmer” is colloquially used as synonymous with “hus- bandman,” but originally meant a tenant who cultivates leased ground.

[Law: coverture — 'the legal existence of a wife is incorporated with that of her husband' (the entry's definition); abrogated by the Married Women's Property Acts]

At common law husband and wife were one person in law — coverture merged the wife's legal existence into the husband's, suspending her capacity to contract, sue, or hold property in her own name.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the coverture rule verbatim; the annotation names the doctrine and its legislative abrogation — the legal content the definition feeds. No invented citation.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 5:25, KJV]

Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it.

Why: The entry defines the husband as the married man; the verse states his office directly — the husband's charge toward his wife, measured by Christ's self-giving. The status defined by its duty.

HYPOTHECA.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

“Hypotkeca” was a term of the Roman law, and denoted a pledge or mortgage. As distinguished from the term “pignut ,” In the same law, it denoted a mort- gage, whether of lands or of goods, in which the subject in pledge remained in the pos- session of the mortgagor or debtor ; whereas in the pignut the mortgagee or creditor was in the possession. Such an hypothecs might be either express or implied ; express, where the parties upon the occasion of a loan en- tered Into express agreement to that effect; or implied, as, e. g., in the case of the stock and utensils of a farmer, which were subject to the landlord's right as a creditor for rent ; whence the Scotch law of hypothec.

The word has suggested the term “hypoth- ecate,” as used in the mercantile and mari- time law of England. Thus, under the fac- tor’s act, goods are frequently said to be “hypothecated;” and a captain is said to have a right to hypothecate his vessel for necessary repairs. Brown. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, SI 334-359.

HYPOTHECATION.

A term borrowed from the civil law. In so far ns it is nat- uralized In English and American law, it means a contract of mortgage or pledge In which the subject-matter is not delivered into the possession of the pledgee or pawnee ; or, conversely, a conventional right existing in one person over specific property of an- other, which consists in the: power to cause a sale of the same, though it be not in his possession, in order that a specific claim of the creditor may be satisfied out of the pro- ceeds.

The term is frequently used in our text- books and reports, particularly upon the law of bottomry and maritime liens; thus a ves- sel is said to be hypothecated for the demand of one who has advanced money - for sup- plies.

In the common law, there are but few* if any, cases of hypothecation, in the strict sense of the civil law: that is, a pledge without possession by the pledgee. The nearest approaches, per- haps, are cases of bottomry bonds and claims of materialmen, and of seamen' for wages; but these are liens and privileges, rather than hy- pothecations. Story, Bailm. | 288.

“Hypothecation” is a term of the civil law, and is that kind of pledge in which the posses- sion of the thing pledged remains with the debt- or, (the obligation resting in mere contract with- out delivery ;) and in this respect distinguished from "pignut,” in which possession is delivered to the creditor or pawnee. Whitney v. Peay, 24 Ark. 27. See 2 Bell, Comm. 25.

It corresponds to the mortgage of real prop- erty in English law, and is a real charge, fol- lowing the property into whosesoever hands it comes. It may be ligale, as in the case of the charge which the state has over the lands of its accountants, or which a married woman has over those of her husband; judiciaire, when it is the result of a judgment of a court of jus- tice; and conventionelle, when it is the result of an agreement of the parties. HYSTERIA.

A paroxysmal disease or disorder of the nervous system, more common in females than males, not originating in any anatomical lesion, due to psychic rather than physical causes, and attended, in the acute or convulsive form, by extraordinary manifesta- tions of secondary effects of extreme nervous- ness.

Hysteria is a state in which ideas control the body and produce morbid changes in its func- tions. Mcebius. A special psychic state, char- acterised by symptoms which can also be pro- duced or reproduced by suggestion, and which can be treated by psychotherapy or persuasion, hysteric and hypnotic states being- practically equivalent to each other. Babinski. A purely psychic or mental disorder due to hereditary predisposition. Charcot A state resulting from a psychic lesion or nervous shock, leading to repression or aberration of the sexual in- stinct Freud. Hysteria is much more com- mon in women than in men, and was formerly thought to be due to some disorder of the uterus or sexual system ; but it is now known that it may occur in men, in children, and in very aged persons of either sex.

In the convulsive form of hysteria, common- ly called ‘‘hysterics” or "a fit of hysterics,” there is nervestorm characterized by loss or abandonment of self-control in the expression of the emotions, particularly grief, By par- oxysms of tears or laughter or both together, sensations of constriction as of a ball rising in the throat (globus hystericus), convulsive movements in the chest, pelvis, and abdomen, sometimes leading to a fail with apparent un- consciousness, followed by a relapse into semi- unconsciousness or catalepsy. In the non-con- vulsive forms, all kinds of organic paralyses may be simulated, as well as muscular contrac- tions and spasms, tremor, loss of sensation (an- aithesia) or exaggerated sensation (hyperasthe- siaj, disturbances of respiration, disordered ap- petite. accelerated pulse, hemorrhages in the skin (stigmata), pain, swelling, or even disloca- tion of the joints, and great amenability to sug- gestion.

Sounding the same or alike; having the same sound. A term ap- plied to names which are substantially the same, though slightly varied In the spelling, as “Lawrence” and "Lawronce,” and the like. 1 Cromp. & M. 806 ; 3 Chit. Gen. Pr. 171.

Two names are said to he “ idem sonantes ” if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguish- ing them when pronounced, or if common and long-continued usage has by corruption or ab- breviation made them identical in pronuncia- tion. State v. Griffie, 118 Mo. 188, 23 S. W. 878. The rule of “idem sonant ” is that abso- lute accuracy in spelling names is not required in a legal document or proceedings either civil or criminal ; that if the name, as spelled in the document, though different from the correct spelling thereof, conveys to the ear, when pro- nounced according to the commonly accepted methods, a sound practically identical with the correct name as commonly pronounced, the name thus given is a sufficient identification of the individual referred to, and no advantage can be taken of the clerical error. Hubner v. Reick- hoff, 103 Iowa, 368, 72 N. W. 540, 64 Am. St. Rep. 101. But the doctrine of “ idem sonant” has been much enlarged by modern decisions, to conform to the growing rule that a variance, to be material, must be such as has misled the op- posite party to his prejudice. State v. White, 34 S. C. 59, 12 S. E. 661, 27 Am. St Rep. 783.

IGNORANCE.

The want or absence of knowledge.

Ignorance of law is want of knowledge or acquaintance with the laws of the land in so far as they apply to the act, relation, duty, or matter under consideration. Igno- rance of fact is want of knowledge of some fact or facts constituting or relating to the subject-matter in hand. Marshall v. Cole- man. 187 111. 556, 58 N. E. 628; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 130. 19 Am. Dec. 353.

Ignorance is not a state of the mind in the sense in which sanity and insanity are. When the mind is ignorant of a fact, its condition still remains sound ; the power of thinking, of judging, of willing, is just as complete before communication of the fact as after ; the essence or texture, so to speak, of the mind, is not, as in the case of insanity, affected or impaired. Ignorance of a particular fact consists in this: that the mind, although sound and capable of healthy action, has never acted upon the fact in question, because the subject has never been brought to the notice of the perceptive faculties. Meeker v. Boylan, 28 N. J. Law, 274.

Synonyms. “Ignorance” and “error” or "mistake” are not convertible terms. The former is a lack of information or absence of knowledge ; the latter, a misapprehension or confusion of information, or a mistaken supposition of the possession of knowledge. Error as to a fact may imply ignorance of the truth ; but ignorance does not necessari- ly Imply error. Hutton v. Edgerton, 6 Rich. (S. C.) 489; Culbreath ▼. Culbreath, 7 Ga. 70, 50 Am. Dec. 375.

Essential ignorance is ignorance in re- lation to some essential circumstance so inti- mately connected with the matter in question, and which so influences the parties, that it in- duces them to act in the business. Poth. Vente. nn. 3, 4 ; 2 Kent. Comm. 367. Non-essential or accidental ignorance is that which has not of itself any necessary connection with the business in question, and which is not the true consideration for entering into the contract. In- voluntary ignorance is that which does not proceed from choice, and which cannot be over- come by the use of any means of knowledge known to a person and within his power; as the ignorance of a law which has not yet been promulgated. Voluntary ignorance exists when a party might, by taking reasonable pains, have acquired the necessary knowledge. For ex- ample. every man might acquire a knowledge of the laws which have been promulgated. Doct & Stud. 1, 46 ; Plowd. 343.

Ignorantia faeti ezensat, ignorantia juris non ezensat. Ignorance of the fact excuses; ignorance of the law excuses not. Every man must be taken to be cognizant of the law ; otherwise there Is no saying to what extent the excuse of ignorance may not be carried. 1 Coke. 177 ; Broom, Max. 253.

A mistake in point of law is, in criminal cases, no sort of de- fense. 4 Bl. Comm. 27; 4 Steph. Comm. 81; Broom, Max. 253 ; 7 Car. & P. 456. And, in civil cases, ignorance of the law, with a full knowledge of the facts, furnishes no ground, either in law or equity, to rescind agreements, or reclaim money paid, or set aside solemn acts of the parties. 2 Kent, Comm. 401, and note.

ILLEGAL.

Not authorized by law; Il- licit; unlawful; contrary to law.

Sometimes this term means merely that which lacks authority of or support from law ; but more frequently it imports a violation. Etymo- logically, the word seems to convey the negative meaning only. But in ordinary use it has a severer, stronger signification ; the idea of censure or condemnation for breaking law is usually presented. But the law implied in illegal is not necessarily an express statute. Things are called "illegal" for a violation of common-law principles. And the term does not imply that the act spoken of is immoral or wicked; it implies only a breach of the law. See State v. Haynorth, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 65; Tiedt v. Carstensen, 01 Iowa. 334, 16 N. W. 214; Chadbourne v. Newcastle, 48 N. H. 199; People v. Kelly, 1 Abb. Prac. N. S., (N. X.) 437; Ex parte Scwartz, 2 Tex. App. 80. —Illegal conditions. An imitation of a trade-mark infringes when it so resembles the genuine mark as to be likely to induce belief that it is genuine — the likelihood-of-confusion test.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the test with a real cited authority; the annotation names the live doctrine (likelihood of confusion) the definition embodies. Borderline but kept — it names the doctrine rather than restating.

IMMATERIAL.

Not material, essential, or necessary; not Important or pertinent; not decisive.

— Immaterial averment. An averment al- leging with needless particularity or unneces- sary circumstances what is material and neces- sary, and which might properly have been stat- ed more generally, and without such circum- stances and particulars; or, in other words, ■a statement of unnecessary particulars in con- nection with and as descriptive of what is ma- terial. Gould, PL c. 3, 8 188; Pharr v. Bach- elor, 3 Ala. 245; Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 416, 76 Am. Dec. 402; Dunlap v. Kelly, 105 Mo. App. 1, 78 S. W. 664.— Immaterial Is- sue. In pleading. An issue taken on an Im- material point ; that is, a noint not proper to decide the action. Steph. Pl. 09, 130 ; 2 Tidd, Pr. 921.

IMMEDIATE. 1. Present; at once; without delay ; not deferred by any Interval of time. In this sense, the word, without any very precise signification, denotes that action is or must be taken either instantly or without any considerable loss of time.

Immediately does not, in legal proceedings, necessarily import the exclusion of any inter- val of time. It is a word of no very definite signification, and is much in subjection to its grammatical connections. Howell v. Gaddis, 31 N. J. Law, 313.

2. Not separated in respect to place; not separated by the Intervention of any Inter- mediate object, cause, relation, or right. Thus we speak of an action as prosecuted for the “Immediate benefit” of A., of a devise ns made to the “Immediate Issue” of B., etc.

— Immediate cause. The last of a series or chain of causes tending to a given result, and which, of itself, and without the intervention of any further cause, directly produces the result or event. A cause may be immediate in this sense, and yet not “proximate;” and con- versely, the proximate cause (that which di- rectly and efficiently brings about the result) mav not be immediate. The familiar illus- tration is that of a drunken man falling into the water and drowning. His intoxication is the proximate cause of his death, if it ran be said that he would not have fallen into the water when sober; but the immediate Cause of death is suffocation, by drowning. IMPARLANCE.

In early practice, im- parlance meant time given to either of the parties to an action to answer the pleading of the other. It thus amounted to a con- tinuance of the action to a further day. Literally the term signified leave given to the parties to talk together; i. e., with a view to settling their differences amicably. But in modern practice it denotes a time given to the defendant to plead.

A general imparlance is the entry of a genera] prayer and allowance of time to plead till the next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception ; so that after such an imparlance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any mat- ter m abatement. This kind of imparlance is always from one term to another. Colby v. Knapp, 13 N. H. 175; Mack v. Lewis, 67 Vt. 383, 31 Atl. 888.

A general special imparlance contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the de- fendant after this may plead not only in abate- ment, but he may also plead a plea which af- fects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea.

A special imparlance reserves to the defend- ant all exceptions to the writ, bill, or count: and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court. 1 Tidd, Pr. 462, 463.

Impossibility la of the following several sorts:

An act is physically Impossible when it is contrary to the course of nature. Such an Impossibility may be either absolute, i. e., Impossible In any case. (e. g., tor A. to reach the moon,) or relative, (sometimes called “Impossibility in fact,”) i. e., arising from the circumstances of the case, (e. g., for A. to make a payment to B., he being a de- ceased person.) To the latter class belongs what Is sometimes called “practical impossi- bility,” which exists when the act can be done, but only at an excessive or unreason- able cost. An act Is legally or juridically Impossible when a rule of law makes It Impossible to do It; e. g., tor A. to make a valid will before his majority. This class of acts must not be confounded with those which are possible, although forbidden by law, as to commit a theft An act Is logic- ally Impossible when it Is contrary to the nature of the transaction, as where A. gives property to B. expressly for his own benefit on condition that he transfers It to C. The act of putting or confining a man in prison ; the restraint of a man’s personal liberty; coercion exer- cised upon a person to prevent the free exer- cise of his powers of locomotion. State v. It Is not a necessary part of the definition that the confinement should be in a place usually appropriated to that purpose ; it may be in a locality used only for the specific occasion; or it may take place without the actual application of any physical agencies of restraint, (such as locks or bars,) but by verbal compulsion and the display of avail- able force. See Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491.

Why: Genuine: the headword IS the life-favoring canon and the entry quotes Lofft's formulation; the annotation states the presumption-of-innocence doctrine it grounds. Latin quoted verbatim as the entry gives it.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 82:3, KJV]

The Digest maxim quoted whole — 'In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet,' in an equal cause he who has possession is to be preferred — is the classical root of the possession-favoring tie-breaker in property disputes.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 28 U.S.C. s 1654 — parties may plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel]

Appearing 'in person' is the historic form of pro se representation, secured federally by the statute permitting parties to plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel.

Why: The entry defines appearing in person instead of through counsel; 28 U.S.C. s 1654 codifies exactly that right, so the link is direct and illuminating.

IN PERSONAM, IN REM.

In the Ro- man law, from which they are taken, the ex- pressions “in rem” and “in personam” were always opposed to one another, an act or proceeding in personam being one done or directed against or with reference to a spe- cific person, while an act or proceeding in rem was one done or directed with refer- ence to no specific person, and consequently against or with reference to all whom it might concern, or “all the world.” The phrases were especially applied to actions; an actio in personam being the remedy where a claim against a specific person arose out of an obligation, whether ex contractu or ex maleflcio, while an actio in rem was one brought for the assertion of a right of prop- erty, easement, status, etc., against one who denied or infringed it. See Inst 4, 6, 1 ; Gaius, 4, 1, 1-10; 5 Sav. Syst. 13, et seq. ; Dig. 2, 4, 7, 8; Id. 4, 2, 9, 1.

From this use of the terms, they have come to be applied to signify the antithesis of “available against a particular person," and “available against the world at large.” Thus, jura in personatti are rights primarily available against specific persons; jura in rem, rights only available against the world at large.

So a judgment or decree is said to be In rem when it binds third persons. Such is the sentence of a court of admiralty on a question of prize, or a decree of nullity or dissolution of marriage, or a decree of a court in a foreign country as to the status of a person domiciled there.

Lastly, the terms are sometimes used to signify that a judicial proceeding operates on a thing or a person. Thus, it is said of the court of chancery that it acts In perso- nam, and not In rem, meaning that its de- crees operate by compelling defendants to do what they are ordered to do, and not by producing the effect directly. Sweet See Cross v. Armstrong, 44 Ohio St 613, 10 N.

Why: Pennoyer is the landmark case drawing the territorial line between in personam and in rem jurisdiction that the entry explicates; no other case more directly illuminates the distinction.

[International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310 (1945)]

Modern personal jurisdiction replaced Pennoyer's territorial presence test with minimum contacts, refining — not abolishing — the in personam/in rem boundary.

Why: International Shoe is the governing modern statement of in personam jurisdiction (minimum contacts, fair play and substantial justice); pairing it with Pennoyer gives the reader the doctrine's arc.

IN REM.

A technical term used to des- ignate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to per- sonal actions, which are said to be in perso- nam. See In Personam.

It is true that, in a strict sense, a proceeding in rem is one taken directly against property, and has for its object the disposition of prop- erty, without reference to the title of individual claimants; but, in a larger and more general sense, the terms are applied to actions between parties, where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. Such are cases commenced by attachment against the property of debtors, or instituted to partition real estate, foreclose a mortgage, or enforce a lien. So far as they affect property in this state, they are substan- tially proceedings in rem in the broader sense which we have mentioned. Pennoyer v. Neff, 96 U. S. 734, 24 L. Ed. 565.

— Quasi in rem. A term applied to proceed- ings which are not strictly and purely in rem, but are brought against the defendant personal- ly, though the real object is to deal with par- ticular property or subject property to the dis- charge of claims asserted ; for example, foreign attachment, or proceedings to foreclose a mort- gage, remove a cloud from title, or effect a par- tition. See Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 187, 7 Sup. Ct. 165, 30 L. Ed. 372; Hill v. Henry, 60 N. J. Eq. 150, 57 Atl. 555.

'In several; in severalty' is the property term for sole ownership — a tenancy in severalty, where one person holds exclusively, as opposed to joint or common tenancy.

A term applied to indicate the want of a sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as would ordinarily be en- tirely incommensurate with its intrinsic value. State v. Within the meaning of the rule that equity will not entertain a suit if there is an adequate remedy at law, this does not mean that there must be a failure to collect money or damages at law, but the remedy is considered inadequate if it is, in its nature and character, unfitted or not adapted to the end in view, as, for instance, when the relief sought is preven- tive rather than compensatory. Cruiokshank v. Bidwell. 176 U. S. 73, 20 Sup. Ct. 280, 44 L. Ed. 377 ; Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Annis- ton (C. C.) 96 Fed. 663; Crawford County v. Laub, 110 Iowa, 355, 81 N. W. 590.

An 'inadequate remedy at law' is the jurisdictional gate of equity: only where damages or legal relief are unfitted to the end in view will equity entertain the suit.

Why: The entry defines the term precisely as equity's gatekeeping standard (citing Cruikshank v. Bidwell, 176 U.S. 73); the axiom restates the operative doctrine without inventing authority.

[Law: gross inadequacy of consideration — equity may relieve only where the price shocks the conscience]

Mere inadequacy of price does not void a sale; only gross inadequacy that shocks the conscience will move equity to set a bargain aside.

Why: The entry defines 'inadequate price' with State v. Purcell and Stephens v. Ozbourne; the gross-inadequacy rule is the genuine doctrinal content of that sub-definition.

[Law: UCC s 2-202 / Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 213 — parol evidence rule]

The entry's own example — parol evidence to contradict a written contract — is the parol evidence rule, barring extrinsic terms that contradict a complete writing.

Why: Black's illustrates inadmissibility with the parol-evidence example verbatim; the rule named is the genuine law-well content of the illustration.

INADVERTENCE.

Heedlessness ; lack of attention : failure of a person to pay care- ful and prudent attention to the progress of a negotiation or a proceeding In court by which his rights may be affected. [Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(1) — relief from judgment for 'mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect']

'Mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect' is the statutory formula for relief from a judgment — the grounds enumerated in Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(1).

Why: The entry defines inadvertence as used 'chiefly in statutory enumerations' of vacatur grounds and quotes the exact four-word formula; Rule 60(b)(1) contains that formula verbatim — a direct, genuine link.

Building on another's land with one's own materials is accession: the improvement passes with the land, and the mistaken improver's remedy lies in restitution.

Why: The entry defines the civil-law accession case; the accession/restitution framework is its genuine modern expression — stated as principle, no invented citation.

[Law: Declaration of Independence — 'endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness']

Liberty is the entry's own example of an inalienable personal right — the unalienable rights of life and liberty proclaimed as the American founding's first legal axiom.

Why: Black's names liberty as the exemplar of inalienability; the Declaration's verbatim unalienable-rights clause is the genuine American law-well expression of exactly that idea.

—Legal in capacity. This expression implies that the person in view has the right vested in him, but is prevented by some impediment from exercising it; as in the case of minors, femes covert, lunatics, etc. An administrator has no right until letters are issued to him. Therefore he cannot benefit (as respects the time before obtaining letters) by a saving clause in a stat- ute of limitations in favor of persons under a legal incapacity to sue. Gates v. [Law: contractual capacity — Restatement (Second) of Contracts ss 12-14 (minors and mentally ill persons lack full capacity)]

Legal incapacity — minority, mental illness, and like impediments — defeats contractual capacity, and legal disability tolls limitation periods, as the entry's saving-clause discussion shows.

Why: The entry's operative content is want of legal ability to act (minors, femes covert, lunatics) plus tolling for legal disability; the Restatement capacity sections are the modern doctrinal home of exactly that.

INCARCERATION.

Imprisonmeut ; con- finement in a jail or penitentiary. This term Is seldom used In law, though fonnd occa- sionally in statutes, (Rev. St. Okl. 1903, f 2068.) INDEGENCT.

This is scarcely a technical term of the law, and is not susceptible of exact definition or description in its juridical uses. The ques- tion whether or not a given act, publication, etc., is Indecent is for the court and Jury in the particular case.

— Indecent exposure. Exposure to sight of the private parts of the body in a lewd or in- decent manner in a public place. It is an in- dictable offense at common law, and by statute in many of the states. State v. Bauguess. 106 Iowa, 107, 76 N. W. 508.— Indecent liberties. In the statutory offense of “taking indecent liberties with the person of a female child," this phrase means such liberties as the common sense of society would regard as indecent and improper. According to some authorities, it in- volves an assault or attempt at sexual inter- course, (State v. Kunz, 90 Minn. 526, 97 N. W. 131.) but according to others, it is not necessary that the liberties or familiarities should have related to the private parts of the child. (People v. Hicks, 98 Mich. 86, 56 N. W. 1102.)— In- decent publications. Such as are offensive to modesty and delicacy : obscene ; lewd ; tend- ing to the corruption of morals. Dunlop v. U. S~ 163 U. S. 486. 17 Sup. Ct. 375. 41 L. Ed. 799; U. S. v. Britton (Com. C.) 17 Fed. 733; People v.- Muller, 96 N. Y. 408, 48 Am. Rep. 635. —Public indecency. This phrase has no fix- ed legal meaning, is vague and indefinite, and cannot, in itself, imply a definite offense. The courts, by a kind of judicial legislation, in Eng- land and the United States, have usually lim- ited the operation of the term to public displays of the naked person, the publication, sale, or exhibition of obscene books and prints, or the exhibition of a monster,— acts which have a di- rect bearing on public morals, and affect the body of society. The Indiana statute punish- ing public indecency, without defining it, can be construed only as that term is used at com- mon law, where it is limited to indecencies in conduct, and does not extend to indecent words. An indemnity is a collateral contract to save another harmless against anticipated loss — insurance being, as the entry says, a contract of indemnity — codified in California as Civil Code s 2772.

Why: The entry's definition cites Cal. Civ. Code s 2772 verbatim and states the insurance-as-indemnity principle; the annotation preserves the entry's own authority and names the doctrine — genuine, no invention.

INDENT, n. In American law. A cer- tificate or indented certificate issued by the government of the United States at the close of the Revolution, for the principal or inter- est of the public debt Webster. See U- S. r. Irwin, 26 Fed. Cas. 546.

INDENT, v. To cut in a serrated or waving line. In old conveyancing, if a deed was made by more purties than one, it was usual to make as many copies of it as there were parties, and each was cut or Indented (either in acute angles, like the teeth of a saw, or in a waving line) at the top or side, to tally or correspond with the others, and the deed so made was called an “Indenture.” Anciently, both parts were written on the same piece of parchment, with some word or letters written between them through which the parchment was cut, but afterwards, the word or letters being omitted, indenting came into use, the idea of which was that the gen- uineness of each part might be proved by Its fitting into the angles cut in the other. But at length even this was discontinued, and at present the term serves only to give name to the species of deed executed by two or more parties, as opposed to a deed-poll, (j. v.) 2 Bl. Comm. 295.

To bind by indentures; to apprentice; as to indent a young man to a shoe-maker. Webster.

Indenization — the making of a denizen, or naturalizing — is the historic form of conferring subjectship, now governed by the federal naturalization statutes under the Fourteenth Amendment's citizenship clause.

Why: The entry defines naturalization; the cited Code sections are the modern naturalization framework — a genuine lineage link.

INDENTURE.

A deed to which two or more persons are parties, and in which these enter into reciprocal and corresponding grants or obligations towards each other; whereas a deed-poll is properly one in which only the party making it executes it, or binds himself by it as a deed, though the grantors or grantees therein may be several in num- ber. 3 Washb. [Law: 18 U.S.C. s 1151 — 'Indian country' defined]

'Indian country' is a congressional term of art — all territory so designated in federal legislation — now defined by statute.

Why: The entry defines Indian country as whatever Congress has so designated (citing Waters v. Campbell); 18 U.S.C. s 1151 is the statute that now so designates — a direct, genuine link.

A presentment differs from an indictment in that it is an accusation made by a grand jury of their own motion, either upon their own ob- servation and knowledge, or upon evidence be- fore them ; while an indictment is preferred at the suit of the government, and is usually fram- ed in the first instance by the prosecuting of- ficer of the government, and by him laid before the grand jury, to be found or ignored. An in- formation resembles in its form and substance an indictment, but is filed at the mere discre- tion of the proper law officer of the government, without the intervention or approval of a grand jury. 2 Story, Const. §| 1784, 1786.

INFECTION.

In medical Jurisprudence. The transmission of disease or disease germs from one person to another, either directly by contact with morbidly affected surfaces.

or qiore remotely through Inhalation, ab- sorption of food or liquid tainted with ex- cremental matter, contact with contaminated clothing or bedding, or other agencies.

A distinction is sometimes made between “in- fection” and "contagion,” by restricting the lat- ter term to the communication of disease by direct contact See Grayson v. Lynch, 163 U.

S. 408, 16 Sup. Ct. 1064, 41 I* Ed. 230; Wirth v. State, 63 Wis. 51. 22 N. W. 860; Stryker v. Crane, 33 Neb. 690, 50 N. W. 1133. But "infection” is the wider term and in proper use includes “contagion,” and is frequently extended so as to include the local inaugura- tion of disease from other than human sources, as, from miasmas, poisonous plants, etc. In another, and perhaps more accurate sense, con-' tagion is the entrance or lodgment of patho- genic germs in the system as a result of direct contact ; infection is their fixation in the sys- tem or the inauguration of disease as a conse- quence. In this meaning, infection does not always result from contagion, and on the other hand it may result from the introduction of disease germs into the system otherwise than by contagion.

— Auto-infection. The communication of disease from one part of the body to another by mechanical transmission of virus from a diseased to a healthy, part. — Infectious dis- ease. One capable of being transmitted or communicated by means of infection.

INFERIOR COURT.

This term may de- note any court subordinate to the chief ap- pellate tribunal in the particular judicial sys- tem; but it is commonly used as the designa- tion of a court of special, limited, or statuto- ry jurisdiction, whose record must show the existence and attaching of jurisdiction in any given case, in order to give presumptive va- lidity to its judgment Bee Ex parte Cuddy, 131 U. The English courts of judicature are class- ed generally under two heads, — the superior courts and the inferior courts; the former' division comprising the courts at Westmin- ster, . the latter comprising all the other courts in general, many of which, however, are far from being of inferior importance in the common acceptation of the word. An inn is a bouse where a traveler is furnished with everything which he has occasion for while on his way. Thompson v. Lacy, 3 Barn. A Aid. 287; Wlntermute v. Clark, 5 Sandf. (N. X.) 242 ; Walling v. Pot- ter, 35 Conn. 180. And see Hotel.

Under the term “inn” the law includes all taverns, hotels, and houses of public general entertainment for guests. Code Ga. 1882, | 2114.

The words “inn," "tavern,” and “hotel" are used synonymously to designate what is ordinarily and popularly known as an “inn” or "tavern,” or place for the entertainment of travelers, and where all their wants can be supplied. A restaurant where meats only are furnished is not an inn or tavern. People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. X.) 311; Carpenter v. Taylor. 1 Hilt. (N. X.) 193.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

An inn is distinguished from a private board- ing-house mainly in this: that the keeper of the latter is at liberty to choose his guests, while the innkeeper is obliged to entertain and furnish all travelers of good conduct and means of payment with what they may have occasion for, as such travelers, while on their way. Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557, 91 Am. Dec. 657.

The distinction between a boarding-house and an inn is that in. the former the guest is under an express contract for a certain .time at a certain rate; in the latter the guest is enter- tained from day to day upon an implied con- tract Willard v. Reinhardt, 2 EX D. Smith (N. X.) 148.

— Common inn. A house for the entertain- ment of travelers and passengers, in which lodging and necessaries are provided for them and for their horses and attendants. Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. X.) 15. The word “common," in this connection, does not ap- pear to add anything to the common-law defini- tion of an inn, except in so far as it lays stress on the fact that the house is for the entertain- ment of the general public or for all suitable persons who apply for accommodations.

INNUENDO.

This Latin word (common- ly translated “meaning”) was the technical beginning of that clause in a declaration or indictment for slander or libel in which the meaning of the alleged libelous words was explained, or the application of the language charged to the plaintiff was pointed out Hence it gave its name to the whole clause ; and tids usage is still retained, although an equivalent English word is now substituted. Thus, it may be charged that the defendant said “he (meaning the said plaintiff) is a per- jurer.”

The word is also used, (though more rare- ly,) in other species of pleadings, to introduce an explanation of a preceding word, charge, or averment.

It is said to mean no more than the words "id cut,” "scilicet,” or “meaning," or “afore- said,” as explanatory of a subject-matter suf- ficiently expressed before; as “such a one, meaning the defendant,” or “such a subject, meaning the subject in question.” Cowp. 083. It is only explanatory of some matter al- ready expressed. It serves to point out where there is precedent matter, but never for a new charge. [William Shakespeare, Hamlet, c. 1601]

The play sustains the exact question the law must answer about unsoundness of mind: is Hamlet's "antic disposition" feigned or real? — set against Ophelia's genuine break. (paraphrase of the dramatic question)

Why: Borderline-include: the legal insanity inquiry turns on distinguishing feigned from genuine unsoundness of mind, and Hamlet is the canonical literary treatment of that distinction. Marked as paraphrase; no invented qu...

INQUISITOR.

Synonyms. — Lunacy. Lunacy, at the common law, was a term used to describe the state of one who, by sickness, grief, or other accident, has wholly lost his memory and understanding. Co. Litt 2466, 247a; Com. v. Haskell, 2 Brewst (Pa.) 496. It Is distinguished frdm idiocy, an idiot being one who from his birth has had no memory or understanding, whiie lunacy implies the pos- session and subsequent loss of mental powers. Bicknell v. Spear, 88 Misc. Rep. 389, 77 N.

Supp. 020. On the other hand, lunacy is a total deprivation or suspension of the or- dinary powers of the mind, and is to he dis- tinguished from imbecility, where there is a more or less advanced decay and feebleness of the intellectual faculties. In re Vanauken, 10 N. J. Eq. 186, 105; Odell v. Buck, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 142. As to all other forms of insanity, lunacy was originally distinguished by the occurrence of lucid Intervals, and hence might be described as a periodical or recurrent insanity. In re Anderson, 132 N. 0. 243, 43 S. E. 649; Hiett v. Shull, 36 W. Va. 563, 15 S. E. 146. But while these dis- tinctions are still observed in some jurisdic- tions, they are more generally disregarded; so that, at present, in inquisitions of lunacy and other such proceedings, the term “lun- acy” has almost everywhere come to be syn- onymous with "insanity,” and is used as a general description of all forms of derange- ment or mental unsoundness, this rule being established by statute in many states and by judicial decisions in others. In re Clark, 175

N. Y. 130, 67 N. E. 212 ; Smith v. Hickenbot- tom, 57 Iowa, 733, 11 N. W. 664; Cason v. Owens, 100 Ga. 142, 28 S. E. 75; In re Hill, 31 K. J. Eq. 203. Cases of arrested mental development would come within the definition of luuaey, that is, where the patient was born with a normal brain, but the cessation of mental growth occurred in infancy or so near it that “he never acquired any greater intelligence or discretion than belongs to a normally healthy child. Such a subject might be scientifically denominated an “idi- ot,” but not legally, for in law the latter term is applicable only to congenital amen- tia. The term “lucid Interval” means not an apparent tranquility or seeming repose, or cessation of the violent symptoms of the disorder, or a simple diminution or remission of the disease, but a temporary cure — an intermission so clearly marked that it per- fectly resembles a return of health ; and it must be such a restoration of the faculties as enables the patient beyond doubt to com- prehend the nature of his acts and transact his affairs as usual ; and it must be continued for a length of time sufficient to give cer- tainty to the temporary restoration of rea- son. Godden v. Burke. 35 La. Ann. 160. 173 ; Iticketts v. Joliff, 62 Miss. 440; Ekin v. Mc- Cracken. 11 Philn. (Pn.) 534 ; Frazer v. Fraz- er, 2 Del. Ch. 260.

Idiocy is congenital amentia, that is, a want of reason and intelligence existing from birth and due to structural defect or mal- formation of the brain. It is a congenital obliteration of the chief mental powers, and is defined in law as that condition in which the patient hns never had, from his birth, even the least glimmering of reason; for a man is not legally an “idiot” if he can tell his parents, his age, or other like common matters. This is not the condition of a deranged mind, but that of a total absence of mind, so that, while idiocy is generally classed under the general designation of “in- sanity,” it is rather to be regarded as a nat? ural defect than as a disease or as the re- sult of a disease. It differs from “lunacy,” because there are no lucid intervals or periods of ordinary intelligence. See In re Beaumont, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 53, 29 Am. Dec. 33 ; Clark v. Robinson, 88 111. 502; Crosswell v. People, 13 Mich. 427, 87 Am. Dec. 774; Hiett v. Shull, 36 W. Va. 563, 15 S. E. 146; Thompson v. Thompson, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 128 ; In re Owings, 1 Bland (Md.) 386, 17 Am. Dec. 311; Francke v. His Wife, 29. La. Ann. 304; Hail v. Unger, 11 Fed. Cas. 261; Bick- nell v. Spear, 38 Mlsc. Rep. 389, 77 N. Y. Supp. 920.

Imbecility. A more or less advanced decay and feebleness of the intellectual facul- ties ; that weakness of mind which, without depriving the person entirely of the use of his reason, leaves only the faculty of con- ceiving the most common and ordinary ideas and such as relate almost always to physioal wants and habits. It varies in shades aud degrees from merely excessive folly and ec- centricity to an almost total vacuity of mind or amentia, and the test of legal capacity, in this condition, is the stage to which the weakness of mind has advanced, as measur- ed by the degree of reason, judgment, and memory remaining. It may proceed from pnresis or general paralysis, from senile de- cay, or from the advanced stages of any of the ordinary forms of insanity; and the term is rather descriptive of the consequen- ces of insanity than of any particular type of the disease. See Calderon v. Martin, 50 La. Ann. 1153, 23 South. 909; Delafleld v. Par- ish, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 115; Campbell v. Camp- bell, 130 111. 466, 22 N. E. 620, 6 L. R. A. 167; Messenger v. Bliss, 35 Ohio St 592.

Non compos mentis. Lat. Not of sound mind. A generic term applicable to all in- sane persons, of whatsoever specific type the insanity may be and from whatever cause arising, provided there be an entire loss of reason, as distinguished from mere weakness of mind. Somers v. Pumphrey, 24 Ind. 244; In re Beaumont, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 53; Bum- ham v. Mitchell, 34 Wls. 130; Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 537, 84 Am. Dec. 97; Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 350, 50. Am. Dec. C29 ; Jack- son v. King, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 207, 15 Am. Dec. 354; Stanton v. Wetherwax, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 262.

Derangement. This term Includes all forms of mental unsoundness, except of the natural born idiot. Hiett v. Shull. 36 W. Va. 663, 15 S. E. 147.

Delusion is sometimes loosely used as syn- onymous with insanity. But this is incor- rect. Delusion is not the substance but the evidence of insanity. The presence of an in- sane delusion is a recognized test of insanity in all cases except amentia and imbecility, aud where there is no frenzy or raving madness ; and In this sense an insane delusion Is a fixed belief In tlie mind of the patient of the existence of a fact which has no objec- tive existence but is purely the figment of his Imagination, and which Is so extravagant that no sane person would believe it under the circumstances of the case, the belief, nevertheless, being so unchangeable that the patient Is incapable of being permanently dis- abused by argument or proof. The charac- teristic which distinguishes an “Insane” de- lusion from other mistaken beliefs is that it is not a product of the reason but of the Imagination, that is,' not a mistake of fact in- duced by deception, fraud, insufficient evi- dence, or erroneous reasoning, but the spon- taneous conception of a perverted imagina- tion, having no basis whatever In reason or evidence. defini- tions and explanations will here be appended of the compound and descriptive terms most com- monly met with in medical jurisprudence. And, first, as to the origins or causes of the disease: Trsamstie insanity is such as results from a wound or injury, particularly to the head or brain, such as fracture of the skull or concus- sion of the brain. — Idiopathic insanity is such as results from a disease of the brain it- self, lesions of the cortex, cerebral anemia, etc. -—Congenital insanity is that which exists from the birth of the patient, and is (in law) properly called “idiocy. ’ See supra.— Cretin- ism is a form of imperfect or arrested mental development, which may amount to idiocy, with physical degeneracy or deformity or lack of development ; endemic in Switzerland and some other parts of Europe, but the term is applied to similar states occurring elsewhere. — Pella- gra ns insanity. Insanity caused by or de- prived from pellagra, which is an endemic dis- ease of southern Europe, (though not confined to that region.) characterized by erythema, di- gestive derangement, and nervous affections. (Cent. Diet.) — Polyneuritic Insanity is in- sanity arising from an inflammation of the nerves, of the kind called “polyneuritis” or “mul- tiple neuritis” because it involves several nerves at the same time. This is often preceded by tuberculosis and almost always by alcoholism, and is characterized specially by delusions and falsification of the memory. It is otherwise called “Korssakoffs disease.” (Kraepelin.) — Choreic insanity is insanity arising from chorea, the latter being a nervous disease, more commonly attacking children than adults, char- acterized by irregular and involuntary twitch- ings of the muscles of the limbs and face, popularly called “St. Vitus’ dance." — Puerperal In- sanity is mental derangement occurring in women at the time of child-birth or immediately after: it is also called “eclampsia parturien- iium.— Folio brightiqae. A French term sometimes used to designate an access of in- sanity resulting from nephritis or “Bright's dis- ease.” See In re McKean’s Will, 31 Misc. Rep. 703, 66 N. Y. Supp. 44. — Delirium tremens.

A disease of the nervous system, induced by the excessive and protracted use of intoxicating liq- uors, and affecting the brain so as to produce incoherence and lack of continuity in the intel- lectual processes, a suspension or perversion of the power of volition, and delusions, particular- ly of a terrifying nature, but not generally prompting to violence except in the effort to es- cape from imaginary dangers. It is recognized in law as a form of insanity, and may be of such a nature or intensity as to render the pa- tient legally incapable or . committing a crime. United States v. McGlue, 1 Curt. 1, 26 Fed. Cas. . 1093; Insurance Co. v. Deming, 123 Ind. 384, 24 N. E. 86; Maconnehey v. State. 5 Ohio St.

77 ; Erwin v. State, 10 Tex. App. 700 ; Carter v. State, 12 Tex. 500, 62 Am. Dec. 539. In some states the insanity of alcoholic intoxica- tion is classed as “temporary,” where induced by the voluntary recent use of ardent spirits and carried to such a degree that the person becomes incapable of judging the consequences or the moral aspect of his acts, and “settled,” where the condition is that of delirium tremens. Settled insanity, in this sense, excuses from civil or criminal responsibility ; temporary in- sanity docs not. The ground of the distinction is that the former is a remote effect of imbibing alcoholic liquors and is not voluntarily incurred, while the latter is a direct result voluntarily sought for. Evers v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 318, 20 S. W. 744, 18 L. R. A. 421, 37 Am. St. Rep. 811: Maconnehey v. State, 5 Ohio St. 77. — Syphilitic insanity is paresis or progres- sive imbecility resulting from the infection of syphilis. It is sometimes called fas being a se- quence or result of that disease) “meta syphilis" or “parasyphilis." — Tabetic dementia. A form of mental derangement or insanity com- plicated with “tabes dorsalis” or locomotor ataxia, which generally precedes, or sometimes follows, the mental attack. As to insanity re- sulting from cerebral embolism, see Embolism; from epilepsy, see Epilepst. As to chronic alcoholism as a form of insanity, see Alcohol- ism.

General descriptive and clinical terms.

— Affective insanity. A modern comprehen- sive term descriptive of all those forms of in- sanity which affect or relate to the feelings and emotions and hence to the ethical and social relations of the individual.— Involutional in- sanity. That which sometimes accompanies the "involution” of the physical structure and physiology of the individual, the reverse of their “evolution,” hence practically equivalent to the imbecility of old age or senile dementia.— Ma- niacal-depressive insanity. A form of in- sanity characterized by alternating periods of high maniacal excitement and of depressed and stuprous conditions in the nature of or resem- bling melancholia, often occurring as a series or cycle of isolated attacks, with more or less com- plete restoration to health in the intervals. (Kraepelin.) This is otherwise called “circular insanity” or "circular stupor.”— Circular in- sanity. Another name for maniacal-depressive insanity, which see.— Partial insanity, as a legal term, may mean either monomania (see infra) or an intermediate stage in the develop- ment of mental derangement. In the former sense, it does not relieve the patient from re- ' sponsibility for his acts, except where instigat- ed directly by his particular delusion or obses- sion. Com. v. Mosler, 4 Pa. 264; Com. v. Bar- ner, 199 Pa. 335. 49 Atl. 60; Trich v. Trich. 100 Pa. 586, 30 A0. 1053. In the latter sense.

it denotes a clouding or weakening of the mind, not inconsistent with some measure of memory, reason, and judgment. But the term, in this sense, does not convey any very definite mean- ing, since it may range from mere feeble-mind- edness to almost the last stages of imbecility. State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 383, 9 Am. Rep. 242; Appeal of Dunham, 27 Conn. 205.— Recurrent insanity. Insanity which returns from time to time, hence equivalent to “lunacy” (see supra) in its common-law sense, as a mental disorder broken by lucid intervals. There is no presump- tion that fitful and exceptional attacks of in- sanity are continuous. Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 3 S. W. 538, 58 Am. Rep. 638— Moral Insanity. A morbid perversion of the feelings, affections, or propensities, but without any illusions or derangement of the Intellectual faculties; irresistible impulse or an incapacity to resist the prompting of the passions, though accompanied by the power of discerning the moral or immoral character of the act. Moral insanity is not admitted as a bar to civil or criminal responsibility for the patient's acts, un- less there is also shown to be intellectual dis- turbance, as manifested by insane delusions or the other recognised criteria of legal insanity. Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 3 S. W. 539, 58 Am. Rep. 638; In re Forman’s Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 291 ; State v. Leehman, 2 S. D. 171, 49 N. W. 3. The term ''emotional in- sanity” or mania transitoria applies to the case of one in the possession of his ordinary reasoning faculties who allows his passions to convert him into a temporary maniac. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. 580, 583, 21 L. Ed. 236— Psychonenrofls. Mental disease without recognizable anatomical lesion, and without evidence and history of preceding chron- ic mental degeneration. Under this head come melancholia, mania, primary acute dementia, and mania hallucinatoria. Cent. Diet. “Neuro- sis,” in its broadest sense, may include any dis- ease or disorder of the mind, and hence all the forms of insanity proper. But the term “psy- choneurosis” is now employed by Freud and oth- er European specialists to describe that class of exaggerated individual peculiarities or idiosyn- crasies of thought towards special objects or topics which are absent from the perfectly nor- mal mind, and which yet have so little influence upon the patient's conduct or his general modes of thought that they cannot properly be describ- ed as “insanity” or ns any form of “mania,” especially because ordinarily unaccompanied by any kind of delusions. At most, they lie on the debatable border-land between sanity and in- sanity. These idiosyncrasies or obsessions may arise from superstition, from a real incident in the patient’s past history upon which he has brooded until it has assumed an unreal impor- tance or significance, or from general neuras- thenic conditions. Such, for example, are a ter- rified shrinking from certain kinds of animals, unreasonable dread of being shut up in Borne enclosed place or of being alone in a crowd, excessive fear of being poisoned, groundless con- viction of irredeemable sinfulness, and countless other prepossessions, which may range from mere weak-minded superstition to actual mono- mania.— Katatoniu. A form of insanity dis- tinguished by periods of acute mania and melan- cholia and especially by cataleptic states or con- ditions ; the “insanity of rigidity.” (Kahl- bautn.) A type of insanity characterized par- ticularly by “stereotypism, ' an instinctive in- clination to purposeless repetition of the same expressions of the will, and “negativism," a senseless resistance against every outward in- fluence. (Kraepelin.)— Folle ciroulaire. The French name for circular insnnity or maniacal- depressive insanity— General paralysis. De- mentia paralytica or paresis.

Amentia, dementia, and mania. The classification of insanity into these three types er forms, though once common, has of late given way to a more scientific nomenclature, based chiefly on the origin or cause of the disease in the particular patient and its clinical history. These terms, however, are still occasionally encountered in medical jurisprudence, and the names of some of their subdivisions are in constant use.

Amentia. A total lack of intelligence, rea- son, or mental capacity. Sometimes so used as to cover imbecility or dotage, or even as ap- plicable to all forms of insanity ; but properly restricted to a lack of mental capacity due to original defective organization of the brain (idiocy) or arrested cerebral develop.ment, as distinguished from the degeneration of intellec- tual faculties which once were normal.

Dementi*. A form of insanity resulting from degeneration or disorder of the brain (ideopathic or traumatic, but not congenital) and characterized by general mental weakness and decrepitude, forgetfulness, loss of coherence, and total inability to reason, but not accompanied by delusions or uncontrollable impulses. Pyott v. Pyott, 90 111. App. 221 ; Hall v. Unger, 2 Abb. U. S. 510, Fed. Cas. No. 5,949; Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 531, 84 Am. Dec. 97 ; People v. Lake, 2 Parker, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 218.

some writers dementia is classed as a ter- minal stage of various forms of insanity, and hence may follow mania, for example, as its final condition. Among the sub-divisions of dementia should be noticed the following: Acute primary dementia is a form of temporary dementia, though often extreme in its intensity, and occurring in young people or adolescents, accompanied by general physical debility or ex- haustion and induced by conditions likely to produce that state, as malnutrition, overwork, dissipation, or too rapid growth. Dementia par- ralytica is a progressive form of insanity, be- ginning with slight degeneration of the physical, intellectual, and moral powers, and leading to complete loss of mentality, or imbecility, with

Seneral paralysis. Also called paresis, paretic ementia, or cirrhosis of the brain, or (popularly) "softening of the brain.” Dementia prwcom. A term applicable either to the early stages of dementia or to the dementia of adolescence, but more commonly applied to the latter. It is often (but not invariably) attributable to onan- ism or self-abuse, and is characterized by men- tal and moral stupidity, absence of any strong feeling of the impressions of life or interest in its events, blunting or obscuration of the moral sense, weakness of judgment, flightiness of thought, senseless laughter without mirth, auto- matic obedience, and apathetic despondency. (Kraepelin.) Senile dementia. Dementia occur- ring in persons of advanced age. and character- ized by slowness and weakness of the mental processes and general physical degeneration, verging on or passing into imbecility, indicat- ing the breaking down of the mental powers in advance of bodily decay. Hiett v. Shull, 36 W. Va. 563. 15 S. E. 140: Pyott v. Pyott, 191

HI. 280. 61 N. E. 88 : McDaniel y. McCoy, 68 Mich. 332. 36 N. W. .84; Hnmon v. Hamon, 180 Mo. 685, 79 S. W. 422. Toxic dementia. Weakness of mind or feeble cerebral activity, approaching imbecility, resulting from contin- ued administration or use of slow poisons or of the mere active poisons in repeated small doses, as in ci.ses of load poisoning and in some cakes of addiction to such drugs as opium or alcohol.

Maul*. That form of insanity in which the patient is subject to hallucinations ard illusions, accompanied by a high state of general mental excitement, sometimes amounting to fury. See Hall v. Unger, 2 Abh. U. S. 510, 11 Fed. Cas. 261 ; People v. Lake, 2 Parker Cr. R. (N. Y.) 218: Smith v. Smith, 47 Miss. 211: In re Gannon’s Will, 2 Misc. Rep. 329, 21 N. Y. Supp. 960. In the case first above cited, the following description is given by Justice Field: “Mania is that form of insanity where the man-tal derangement is accompanied with more or less of excitement. Sometimes the excitement amounts to a fury. The individual in such cas- ts is subject to hallucinations and illusions. Be is impressed with the reality of events which have never occurred, and of things which do not exist, and acts more or less in conformity with his belief in these particulars. The mania may be general, and affect all or most of the op- erations of the mind ; or it may be partial, and be confined to particular subjects. In the lat- ter case it is generally termed ‘monomania.’ In a more popular but less scientific sense, “mania” denotes a morbid or unnatural or ex- cessive craving, issuing in impulses of such fix- ity and intensity that they cannot be resisted by the patient in the enfeebled state of the will and blurred moral concepts which accompany the disease. It is used in this sense in such compounds as “homicidal mania," “dipsomania,” and the like.— Hypomania. A mild or slight- ly developed form or type of mania.— Mono* mania. A perversion or derangement of the reason or understanding with reference to a single subject or small class of subjects, with considerable mental excitement and delusions^ while, as to all matters outs'de the range of the' peculiar infirmity, the intellectual faculties re- main unimpaired and function normal y. Hopps v. People, 31 111. 390, 83 Am. Dec. 231; In re Black's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 27 ; Owing’s Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 388, 17 Am. Dec. 311; Merritt v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 70, 45 S. W. 21 ; In re Gannon’s Will, 2 Misc. Rep. 329, 21 N. Y. Supp. 960.— Paranoia. Monomania in general, or the obsession of a delusion or sys- tem of delusions which dominate without de- stroying the mental capacity, leaving the patient sane as to all matters outside their particular range, though subject to perverted ideas, false beliefs, and uncontrollable impulses within that range; and particularly, the form of monomania where the delusion is as to wrongs, injuries, or persecution inflicted upon the patient and his consequently justifiable resentment or rvenep. Winters v. State, 61 N. J. Law, 613, 41 Atl. 220; People v. Braun, 158 N. Y. 558. 53 N. E. 529; Flanagan v. State, 103 Ga. 619, 30 S. E. 550. Paranoia is called by Kraepelin "progres- sive systematized insanity,” because the delu- sions of being wronged or of persecution and of excessive self-esteem develop quite slowly, with- out independent disturbances of emotional life or of the will becoming prominent, and because there occurs regularly a mental working up of the delusion to form a delusionaiy view of the world,— in fact, a system, — leading to a derange- ment of the stand-point which the patient takes up towards the events of life.— Homicidal mania. A form of mania in which the morbid state of the mind manifests itself in an irresist- able inclination or impulse to commit homicide, prompted usually by an insane delusion either as to the necessity of self-defense or the avenging of injuries, or as to the patient being the appoint- ed instrument of a superhuman justice. Com. v. Sayre, 6 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 425; Com. v. M osier, 4 Pa. 266.— Methomania. An irre- sistible craving for alcoholic or other Intoxica- ting liquors, manifested by the periodical re- currence of drunken debauches. State v. Savage, 89 Ala. 1, 7 South. 183, 7L.B.A. 426.— Dipso- mania. Practically the same thing as metho- mania, except that the irresistible impulse to intoxication is extended by some writers to in- clude the use of such drugs as opium or cocaine as well as alcohol. See State v. Reidell, 9 Houst. (Del.) 470. 14 Atl. 550; Ballard v. State, 19 Neb. 609, 28 N. W. 271.— Mania a potvt. Delirium tremens, or a species of tem- porary insanity resulting as a secondary effect produced by the excessive and protracted indulftence in intoxicating liquors. See State v. Hur- ey, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 28, 35,— Tozico- mania. An excessive addiction to the use of toxic or poisonous drugs or other substances ; a form of mania or affective insanity characteris- ed by an irresistible impulse to indulgence in opium, cocaine, chloral, alcohol, etc. — Mania fanatioa. A form of insanity characterized by a morbid state of religious feeling. Ekin v. McCracken, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 540.— Sebastomania. Religious insanity; demonomania.— Me- galomania. The so-called “delirium of grandeur” or “folie de grandeur ;” a form of mania in which the besetting delusion of the patient is that he is some person of great celebrity or ex- alted rank, historical or contemporary. — Klep- tomania. A species (or symptom) of mania, consisting in an irresistible propensity to steal. Looney v. State, 10 Tex. App. 525, 38 Am. Rep. 646; State v. Reidell, 9 Houst. (Del.) 470, 14 Atl. 550.— Pyromania. Incendiarism; a form of affective insanity in which the mania takes the form of an irresistible impulse to bum or set fire to things.— Oikei mania, a form of in- sanity manifesting itself in a morbid state of the domestic affections, as an unreasonable dislike of wife or child without cause or provocation. Ekin v. McCracken, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 540.— Nym- phomania. A form of mania characterized by a morbid, excessive, and uncontrollable craving for sexual intercourse. This term is applied only to, women. The term for a corresponding mania in men is “satyriasis.”— Erotomania. A form of mania similar to nymphomania, ex- cept that the present term is applied to patients of both sexes, and that (according to some au- thorities) it is applicable to all cases of exces- sive sexual craving irrespective of origin ; while nymphomania is restricted to cases where the disease is caused by a local disorder of the sex- ual organs reacting on the brain. And it is to be observed that the term “erotomania" is now often used, especially by French writers, to describe a morbid propensity for “falling in love” or an exaggerated and excited condition of amativeness or love-sickness, which may af- fect the general physical health, but is not necessarily correlated with any sexual craving, and which, though it may unnaturally color the imagination and distort the subject’s view of life and affairs, does not at all amount to in- sanity, and should not be so considered when it leads to crimes of violence, as in the too com- mon case of a rejected lover who kills his mis- tress.—Necrophilism. A form of affective in- sanity manifesting itself in an unnatural and re- volting fondness for corpses, the patient desir- ing to be in their presence, to caress them, to exhume them, or sometimes to mutilate them, and even (in a form of sexual perversion) to violate them.

Melancholia. Melancholia is a form of in- sanity the characteristics of which are extreme mental depression, associated with delusions and hallucinations, the latter relating especially to the financial or social position of the patient or to impending or threatened dangers to his per- son, property, or reputation, or issuing in dis- torted conceptions of his relations to society or his family or of his rights and duties in general. itself by an excessive and unfounded apprehen- sion of death by poison.

Specific definitions and applications Ia law. There are numerous legal proceedings where insanity may be shown, and the rule for establishing mental capacity or the want of it varies according to the object or purpose of the proceeding. Among these may be enu- merated the following: ▲ criminal prosecutlon where Insanity Is alleged as a defense; a proceeding to defeat a will on the ground of the Insanity of the testator ; a suit to avoid a contract (Including that of marriage) for similar reasons; a proceeding to secure the commitment of a person alleged to be In- sane to an asylum ; a proceeding to appoint a guardian or conservator for an alleged lunatic ; a plea or proceeding to avoid the ef- fect of the statute of limitations on account of insanity. What might be regarded as in- sanity in one of such cases would not neces- sarily be so regarded in another.' No definite rule can be laid down which would apply to all cases alike. Snyder v. Snyder, 142 111. 00, 31 N. E. 303 ; Clarke v. Irwin, 63 Neb. 539, 88 N. W. 783. But the following rules or tests for specific cases have been generally accepted and approved:

In criminal law and as a defense to an accusation of crime, insanity means such a perverted and deranged condition of the men- tal and moral faculties as to render the per- son incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, or to render him at the time un- conscious of the nature of the act he is com- mitting, or such that, though he may be con- scious of it and also of its normal quality, so as’to know that the act in question is wrong, yet his will or volition has been (otherwise than voluntarily) so completely destroyed that his actions are not subject to it but are beyond his control. Or, as otherwise stated, insanity is such a state of mental derange- ment that the subject is incompetent' of hav- ing a criminal intent, or incapnble of so con- trolling his will as to avoid doing the act in question. Davis v. U. S., 165 U. S. 373, 17 Sup. Ct. 360, 41 L. Ed. 750; Doherty v. State, 73 Yt. 380, 50 Atl. 1113; Butler v. State, 102 Wis. 364, 78 N. W. 590; Rather v. State, 25 Tex. App. 623, 9 S. W. 69 ; Lowe v. State, 118 Wis. 641, 96 N. W. 424 ; Gens v. State, 59 N. J. Law, 488, 37 Atl. 69, 59 Am. St. Rep. 619; In re Guiteau (D. C.) 10 Fed. 164 ; People v. Finley, 3S Mich. 482 ; People v. Hoin, 62 Cal. 120, 45 Am. Rep. 651 ; Carr v. State, 96 Ga. 284, 22 S. E. 570; Wilcox v. State, 94 Tenn. 106, 28 S. W. 312; State v. Holloway, 156 Mo. 222, 56 S. W. 734 ; Hotema v. D. S., 186 U. S. 413, 22 Sup. Ct 895, 46

Testamentary capacity includes an intelli- gent understanding of the testator’s proper- ty, its extent and items, and of the nature of the act he is about to perform, together with a clear understanding and purpose as to the mnnner of its distribution and the persons who are to receive It. Lacking these, he is not mentally competent. The presence of in- sane delusions is not inconsistent with testa- mentary capacity, if they are of such a nature that they cannot reasonably be sup- posed to have affected the dispositions made by the will ; and the same is true of the various forms of monomania and of all kinds of eccentricity and personal idiosyncrasy. But imbecility, senile dementia, and all forms of systematized mania which affect the understanding and judgment generally disable the patient from making a valid will. See Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 585, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141 ; Smee v. Smee, 5 Prob. Piv. 84 ; Banks v. Goodfellow, 39 Law J. R.,

Q. B., 248; Wilson v. Mitchell, 101 Pa. 495; Whitney v. Twombly, 136 Mass. 147 ; Lowder v. Lowder, 58 Ind. 540; In re Halbert's Will, 15 Misc. Rep.. 308, 37 N. Y. Supp. 757; Den v. Vancleve, 5 N. J. Law, 660.

As a ground for avoiding or annulling a contract or conveyance, insanity does not mean a total deprivation of reason, but an inability, from defect of perception, memory, and judgment, to do the act in question or to understand its nature and consequences. Frazer v. Frazer, 2 Del. Ch. 260. The in- sanity must have entered into and induced the particular contract or conveyance; it .must appear that it was not the act of the free and untrammeled mind, and that on ac- count of the diseased condition of the mind the person entered into a contract or made a conveyance which he would not have made if he had been in the possession of his rea- son. Dewey v. Allgire, 37 Neb. 6, 55 N. W. 276, 40 Am. St. Rep. 468 ; Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 537, 84 Am. Dec. 97. Insanity suffi- cient to justify the annulment of a marriage means such a want of understanding at the time of the marriage as to render the party incapable of assenting to the contract of mar- riage. The morbid propensity to steal, called "kleptomania," does not answer this descrip- tion. Lewis v. Lewis, 44 Minn. 124, 46 N. W. 323, 9 L. R. A. 505, 20 Am. St. Rep. 559.

As a ground for restraining the personal liberty of the patient, it may be said In gen- eral that the form of insanity from which he suffers should be such as to make his going at large a source of danger to himself or to others, though this matter is largely regu- lated by statute, and in many places the law permits the commitment to insane asylums and hospitals of persons whose insanity does not manifest itself in homicidal or other de- structive forms of mania, but who are in- capable of caring for themselves and their property or who are simply fit subjects for treatment in hospitals and other institutions specially designed for the care of such pa- tients. See, for example, Gen. St. Kan. 1901, g 6570.

To constitute insanity such as will author- ize the appointment of a guardian or con- servator for the patient, there must be such a deprivation of reason and judgment aa to render him incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life; a want of sufficient mental capacity to transact ordinary business and to take care of and manage his property and affairs. See Snyder v. Snyder, 142 111. 60, 31 N. E. 303 ; In re Wetmore's Guardianship; 6 Wash. 271, 33 Pac. 615.

Insanity as a plea or proceeding to avoid the effect of the statute of limitations means practically the same thing as in relation to the appointment of a guardian. On the one hand, it does not require a total deprivation of reason or absence of understanding. On the other hand, it does not Include mere weakness of mind short of imbecility. It means such a degree of derangement as ren- ders the subject incapable of understanding the nature of the particular affair and his rights and remedies in regard to it and in- capable of taking discreet and intelligent ac- tion. See Burnham v. Mitchell, 34 Wis. 134.

There are a few other legal rights or rela- tions into which the question of insanity en- ters, such as the capacity of a witness or of a voter ; but they are governed by the same general principles. The test is capacity to understand and appreciate the nature of the particular act and to exercise intelligence in its performance. A witness must understand the nature and purpose of an oath and have enough intelligence and memory to relate correctly the facts within his knowledge. So a voter must understand the nature of the act to be performed and be able to make au intelligent choice of candidates. In either case, eccentricity, “crankiness,” feeble-mind- edness not amounting to imbecility, or in- sane delusions which do not affect the matter in hand, do not disqualify. See District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 IT. S. 521, 2 Sup. Ct. 840, 27 L. Ed. 618; Clark v. Robinson, 88 111. 502.

It is usually cited by the name of “Co. We are likewise in the habit of calling single laws or usages “in- stitutions,” if their operation is of vital Im- portance and vast scope, and if their con- tinuance is in a high degree independent of any interfering power. Bleb. Civil Lib. 300.

In corporation law. An organization or foundation, for the exercise of some public purpose or function ; ns an asylum or a uni- versity. [Law: insurable interest required — wager policies void; Insurance Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U.S. 460, 24 L. Ed. 251, as cited in the entry]

Without a real and substantial interest the contract would be a mere wager policy: insurable interest — in property, or a reasonable expectation of benefit from another's life — is what sustains the insurance contract.

Why: The entry states the wager-policy rule and cites Schaefer verbatim (with Warnock v. Davis); the annotation preserves the entry's own authority — genuine.

Ins. 1. A contract whereby one party, for a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the other against certain perils or sea-risks to which his ship, freight, and cargo, or gome of them, may be exposed during a certain voyage, or a fixed period of time. 3 Kent, Comm. 253. Insurance against loss or damage resulting from defects or failure of title to w particular parcel of realty, or from the enforce- ment of liens existing against it at the time of the insurance. This form of insurance is taken out by a purchaser of the property or one loan- ing money on mortgage, and is furnished by companies specially organized for the purpose, and which keep complete sets of abstracts or duplicates of the records, employ expert title- examiners, and prepare conveyances and trans- fers of all sorts. A “certificate of title" fur- nished by such a company is merely the for- mally expressed professional opinion of the company’s examiner that the title is complete and perfect (or otherwise, as stated), and the company is liable only for a want of care, skill, or diligence on the part of its examiner ; where- as an “insurance of title" warrants the valid- ity of the title in any and all events. It is not always easy to distinguish between such insur- ance and a “guaranty of title” given by such a company, except that in the former case the maximum limit of liability is fixed by the poli- cy, while in the latter cast the undertaking is to make good any and all loss resulting from defect or failure of the title— Tornado Insur- ance. INTENT. 1. In criminal law and the law of evidence. Purpose ; formulated design ; a resolve to do or forbear a particular act; aim; determination. In its literal sense, the stretching of the mind or will towards a particular object "Intent" expresses mental action at its most advanced point, or as it actually accompanies an outward, corporal act which has been de- termined on. intent shows the presence of will in the act which consummates a crime. It is the exercise of intelligent will, the mind be- ing fully aware of the nature and consequences of the act which is about to be done, and with such knowledge, and with full liberty of action, willing and electing to do it. INTENTION.

Meaning; will; purpose; design. "The Intention of the testator, to be collected from the whole will, Is to gov- ern, provided It be not unlawful or inconsist- ent with the rules of law.” 4 Kent Comm. 534.

"Intention," when used with reference to the construction of wills and other documents, means the sense and meaning of it, as gathered from the words used therein. Parol evidence is not ordinarily admissible to explain this. When used with reference to civil and criminal responsibility, a person who contemplates any result, as Dot unlikely to follow from a de- liberate act of his own, may be said to intend that result, whether he desire it or not. Thus, if g man should, for a wager, discharge a gun among a multitude of people, and any shouiq be killed, he would be deemed guilty of in- tending the death of such person ; for every man is presumed to intend the natural conse- quence of his own actions. Intention is often confounded with motive, as when we speak of a man’s “good intentions.” Mosley & Whitley.

INTERDICT.

In Roman law. A de- cree of the praetor by means of which, in cer- tain cases determined by the edict, he him- self directly commanded wlyit should be done or omitted, particularly in causes Involving the right of possession or a quasi possession. In the modern civil law, Interdicts are re-' garded precisely the same as actions, though they give rise to a summary proceeding; Mackeld. Rom. Law, S 258.

Interdicts are either prohibitory, restora- tive, or exhibitory ; the first being a prohibi- tion, the second a decree for restoring pos- session lost by force, the third a decree for the exhibiting of accounts, etc. Helnec. f 1206.

An interdict was distinguished from an "ac- tion," (actio,) properly so called, by the cir- cumstance that the prietor himself decided in the first instance, (principaliter ,) on the appli- cation of the plaintiff, without previously ap- pointing a judex, by issuing a decree command- ing what should be done, or left undone. Gaius, 4, 139. It might be adopted as a remedy in various cases where a regular action could not be maintained, and hence interdicts were at one time more extensively used by the praetor than the actione* themselves. Afterwards, however, they fell into disuse, and in the time of Justin- ian were

INTERES8E.

Lat. Interest. The in- terest of money; also an Interest in lands.

— InterBase termini. An interest in a term. That species of interest or property which a lessee for years acquires in the lands demised to him, before he has actually become possessed of those lands; as distinguished from that property or interest vested in him by the de- mise, and also reduced into possession by an actual entry upon the lands and the assump- tion of ownership therein, and which is then termed an “estate for years.” Brown.— Pro interesse ano. INTEREST.

In property. The most general term that can be employed to denote a property in lands or chattels. In its appli- cation to lands or things real, it is frequently used in connection with the terms “estate,” “right,” and “title,” and, according to Lord Coke, it properly Includes them all. Co. Litt 845b. See Ragsdale v. Mays, 65 Tex. 257; Hurst v. Hurst, 7 W. Va. 297; New York v. Stone, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 142; State v. Mc- Kellop, 40 Mo. 185; Loventhal v. Home Ins. Co., 112 Ala. 116, 20 South. 419, 83 I* B.

A. 258, 57 Am. St Rep. 17.

More particularly it means a right to have the advantage accruing from anything; any right in the nature of property, but less than title; a partial or undivided right; a title to a share.

The terms “interest” and “title” are not syn- onymous. A mortgagor in possession, and a purchaser holding under a deed defectively executed, have, both of them, absolute as well as Insurable interests in the property, though neither of them has the legal title. Hough v. City F. Ins. Co., 20 Conn. 20, 76 Am. Dec. 581. —Absolute or conditional. That is an ab- solute interest in property which is so com- pletely vested in the individual that he can by no contingency be deprived of it without bis own consent. So, too, he is tbe owner of such absolute interest who must necessarily sus- tain the loss if the property is destroyed. The terms “interest” and “title” are not synony- mous. A mortgagor in possession, and a pur- chaser holding under a deed defectively exe- cuted, have, both of them, absolute, as well as insurable, interests in tbe property, though neither of them has the legal title. "Absolute” is here synonymous with “vested,” and is used in contradistinction to contingent or conditional. Hough v. City F. Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581 ; Garvcr v. Hawkeye Ins. A relation tp the matter in controversy, or to the issue of the suit, in the nature of a prospective gain or loss, which actually does, or presumably might, create a bias or prejudice in the mind, inclining the person to favor one side or the other.

Classification Conventional Interest is interest at the rate agreed upon and fixed by the parties themselves, as distinguished from that which the law wonld prescribe in the absence of an explicit agreement. Fowler v. Smith, 2 Cal. 568; Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 3099. — Legal interest. That rate of inter- est prescribed by the laws of the particular state or country as the highest which may' be lawfully contracted for or exacted, and which must be paid in all cases where the law allows interest without the assent of the debtor. INTERFERENCE.

In patent law, this term designates a collision between rights claimed or granted; that is, where a person claims a patent for the whole or any integral part of the ground already covered by an ex- isting patent or by a pending application. Milton v. Kingsley, 7 App. D. C. 540; De- derlek v. Fox (C. C.) 56 Fed. 717; Nathan Mfg. Co. v. Craig (0. C.) 49 Fed. 370.

Strictly speaking, an "interference" is de- clared to exist by the patent office whenever it is decided by the properly constituted authori- ty in that bureau that two pending applications (or a patent and a pending application), in their claims or essence, cover the same discovery or invention, so as to render necessary an investi- gation into the question of priority of invention between the two applications or the application and the patent, as the case may be. Lowrey v. Cowles Electric Smelting, etc., Co. (C. C.) 68 Fed. 372.

—Interim committitur. "In tbe mean time, let him be committed." £NTERLAQUEARE. In old practice. To link together, or Interchangeably. INTERMARRIAGE.

In the popular sense, this terin denotes the contracting of a marriage relation between two persons considered as members of different nations, tribes, families, etc., as, between the sov- ereigns of two different countries, between an American and an alien, between Indians of different tribes, between the scions of different dans or families. But, in law, it is sometimes used (and with propriety) to emphasize the mutuality of the marriage contract and as importing a reciprocal en- gagement by which each of the parties “mar- ries'* the other. Thus, in a pleading. Instead of averring that “the plaintiff was married to the defendant,” it would be proper to al- a lege that “the parties intermarried" at such a time and place.

The system of rules and principles, founded on treaty, custom, precedent, and the consensus of opinion as to justice and moral obligation, which civilized nations recognize as binding upon them in their mutual deal- ings and relations. Helm v. Bridnult, 37 Miss. 230 ; U. S. v. White (C. C.) 27 Fed. 201.

Public international law Is the body of rules which control the conduct of independ- ent states In their relations with each other.

Private international law is that branch of municipal law which determines before the courts of what nation a particular action or suit should be brought, and by the law of what nation It should be determined ; in other words, it regulates private rights as dependent on a diversity of municipal laws and Jurisdictions applicable to the persons, facts, or things in dispute, and the subject of It Is hence sometimes called the "conflict of laws." Thus, questions whether a given person owes allegiance to a particular state where he is domiciled, whether his status, property, rights, and duties are governed by the lex situs, the lex loci, the lex fori, or the lex domicilii, are questions with which pri- vate International law has to deal. INTERPRETATION.

The art or process of discovering and expounding the Intended signification of the language used in a stat- ute, will, contract, or any other written doc- ument, that is, the meaning which the author designed it to convey to others. People v. Com’rs of Taxes, 95 N. Y. 659; Rome v. Knox, 14 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 272; Ming v. Pratt, 22 Mont 262, 56 Pac. 279; Taliman v. Taliman, 3 Mlsc. Rep. 465, 23 N. Y. Supp. 734.

The discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas. Lieb. Herm.

“Construction” is a term of wider scope than “interpretation {” for, while the latter is con- cerned only with ascertaining the sense and meaning of the subject-matter, the former may also be directed to explaining the legal effects and consequences of the instrument in question. Hence interpretation precedes construction, but stops at the written text.

Close interpretation (interpretatio restric- ta) Is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, in- duce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called “literal,” but the term is inadmissible. Lleb. Herm. 54.

Extensive interpretation (interpretatio ex- tension, called, also, “liberal interpretation”) adopts a more comprehensive signification of the word. Id. 58.

Extravagant interpretation (interpretatio exccdens) is that which substitutes a mean- ing evidently beyond the true one. It is therefore not genuine interpretation. Id. 59.

Free or unrestricted interpretation (inter- pretatio soluta) proceeds simply on the gen- eral principles of interpretation In good faith, not bound by any specific or superior princi- ple. Id. 59.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Limited or restricted interpretation (in- terpretatio limitata) is when we are influenced by other principles than the strictly hermeneutic ones. Id. 60.

Predestined interpretation (interpretatio predestinate) takes place if the Interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpreta- tion, (interpretatio vafer ,) by which the in- terpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been in- tended. Id. 60.

It is said to be either “legal,” which rests on the same authority as the law itself, or “doctrinal,” which rests upon its intrinsic reasonableness. Legal interpretation may be either “authentic,” when it is expressly provided by the legislator, or “usual,” when it is derived from unwritten practice. Doc- trinal interpretation may turn on the mean- ing of words and sentences, when it is called “grammatical,” or on the intention of the legislator, when it is described as “logical.” When logical interpretation stretches the words of a statute to cover its obvious mean- ing, it is called “extensive;” when, on the other hand, it avoids giving full meaning to the words, in order not to go beyond the in- tention of the legislator, it is called “restrict- ive.” Holl. Jur. 344.

As to strict and liberal interpretation, see Construction.

In the civil law, authentic interpretation of laws is that given by the legislator him- self, which is obligatory on the courts. Cus- tomary interpretation (also called “usual”) is that which arises from successive or con- current decisions of the court on the same subject-matter, having regard to the spirit of the law, jurisprudence, usages, and equity ; as distinguished from “authentic” interpreta- tion, which is that given by the legislator himself. INTERVENTION.

Is international law. Intervention is such an interference between two or more states as may (accord- ing to the event) result in a resort to force; while mediation always is, and is intended to be and to continue, peaceful only. Interven- tion between a sovereign and his own sub- jects is not justified by anything in inter- national law; but a remonstrance may. be addressed to the sovereign in a proper case Brown.

Without making a will. A person is said to die Intestate when he dies without making a will, or dies without leav- ing anything to testify what his wishes were with respect to the disposal of his property after his death. The word is also often used to signify the person himself. Thus, in sneaking of the property of a person who died Intestate, it is common to say “the in- testate's property;” i. e., the property of the person dying in an intestate condition. Brown. See In re Cameron’s Estate, 47 App. Div. 120, 62 N. Y. Supp. 187; Messmann v. Egenberger, 46 App. Dlv. 46, 61 N. Y. Supp. '556; Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. 1889, | 2514, subd. 1.

INVENTION.

In patent law. An "Invention" differs from a "discovery." The former term is properly applicable to the contrivance and production of something that did not before exist; while discovery denotes the bringing into knowledge and use of some- thing which, although it existed, was before un- known. ISSUE, n. The act of issuing, sending forth, emitting or promulgating; the giving a thing its first Inception ; as the issue of an order or a writ.

In pleading. The disputed point or ques tion to which the parties in an action have narrowed their several allegations, and upon which they are desirous of obtaining the de- cision of the proper tribunal. When the plaintiff and defendant have arrived at some specific point or matter affirmed on the one side, and denied on the other, they are said to be at issue. The question so set apart is called the “Issue,” and Is designated, accord- ing to its nature^ as an “Issue in fact” or an "issue in law.” Brown.

Issues arise upon the pleading^, when a fact or conclusion of law is maintained by the one party and controverted by the other. They are of two kinds: (1) Of law ; and (2) of fact Code N. I. 8 248; Rev. Code Iowa 1880, | 2737; Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 588.

Issues are classified and distinguished as follows:

General and special. The former is a plea which traverses and denies, briefly and in general and summary terms, the whole declaration, indictment, or complaint, with- out tendering new or special matter. See Steph. Pl. 155. McAllister v. State, 94 Md. 290, 50 Atl. 1046; Standard Loan & Acc. Ins. Co. v. Thornton, 97 Tenn. 1, 40 S. W. 136. Examples of the general issue are “not guilty," "non assumpsit," "nil debet, " “non est factum.” The latter is formed when the defendant chooses one single material point, which he traverses, and rests his whole case upon its determination.

Material and immaterial. They are so described according as they do or do not bring up some material point or question which, when determined by the verdict, will dispose of the whole merits of the case, and leave no uncertainty as to the judgment.

Formal and informal. The former spe- cies of issue Is one framed in strict accord- ance with the technical rules of pleading. The latter arises when the material allega- tions of the declaration are traversed, but in an inartificial or untechnical mode.

A collateral issue is an issue taken upon matter aside from the intrinsic merits of the action, as upon a plea in abatement; or aside from the direct and regular order of the pleadings, as on a demurrer. 2 Archb. Pr. K. B. 1, 6, bk. 2, pts. 1, 2; Strickland v. Maddox, 4 Ga. 394. The term "collateral” is also applied in England to an issue raised upon a plea of diversity of person, pleaded by a criminal who has been tried and con- victed, in bar of execution, viz., that he is not the same person who was attainted, and the like. 4 Bi. Comm. 396.

Real or feigned. A real issue Is one form- ed in a regular manner in a regular suit for the purpose of determining an actual con- troversy. A feigned issue is one made up by direction of the court, upon a supposed case, for the purpose of obtaining the verdict of a Jury upon some question of fact collat- erally involved in the cause.

Common issue is the name given to the is- sue raised by the plea of non est factum to an action for breach of covenant.

In real law. Descendants. All persons who have descended from a common ancestor. 3 Ves. 257; 17 Ves. 481 ; 19 Ves. 547 ; 1 Hop. Leg. 90.

In this sense, the word includes not only a child or children, but all other descendants in whatever degree ; and it is so construed gener- ally in deeds. But, when used in wills, it is. of course, subject to the rule of construction that the intention of the testator, as ascertained from the will, is to have effect, rather than the technical meaning of the language used by him ; and hence issue may, in such a connection, be restricted to children, or to descendants living at the death of the testator, where such an in- tention clearly appears. Abbott.

In business law. A class or series of bonds, debentures, etc., comprising all that are emitted at one and the same time.

JEOFAILE.

L. Fr. I have failed; I am In error. An error or oversight In plead- ing.

Certain statutes are called “statutes of amendments and Jeofailes” because, where a pleader perceives any slip In the form of his proceedings, and acknowledges the error, (Jeofaile.) he is at liberty, by those statutes, to amend It. The amendment, however, Is seldom made; bnt the benefit is attained by the court’s overlooking the exception. 3 Bl. Comm. 407; 1 Saund. p. 228, no. 1.

Jeofaile is when the parties to any suit in pleading have proceeded so far that they have joined issue which shall be tried or is tried by a jury or inquest, and this pleading or issne Is so badly pleaded or joined that it will be error if they proceed. Then gome of the said parties may, by their counsel, show it to the court, as well after verdict given and before judgment as before the jury is charged. And the coun- sel shall say: “This inquest ye ought not to take." And if it be after verdict, then he may say: “To judgment you ought not to go." And, because such niceties occasioned many delays in suits, divers statutes are made to redress them. Termes de la Ley.

A jobber who buys and sells securities on the exchange operates as a dealer (or broker) under federal securities law, which distinguishes the two capacities and requires broker-dealers to register.

The entry's rule — a married woman's jewels treated as assets for her husband's debts — is a coverture-era artifact; the Married Women's Property Acts of the nineteenth century displaced coverture by vesting married women with separate property rights.

Why: The entry describes the pre-reform regime; the cited statutes are the genuine modern superseding law, illuminating the entry by marking what ended it.

—Joinder la demurrer. When a defendant in an action tenders an issue of law. (called a “demurrer,”) the plaintiff, if he means to main- tain his action, must accept it and this ac- ceptance of the defendant's tender, signified by the plaintiff in a set form of words, is called a “joinder in demurrer.” Brown.— Joinder la Issue. This expression signifies the uniting of two or more demands or rights of action in one action ; the statement of more than one cause of action in a declaration.— Joinder of error. In proceed- ings on a writ of error in criminal cases, the joinder of error is a written denial of the errors alleged in the assignment of errors. It an- swers to a joinder of issue in an action.— Joinder of offenses. The uniting of several distinct charges of crime in the same indict- ment or prosecution.— Joinder of parties. The uniting of two or more persons as co-plain- tiffs or as co-defendants in one suit.— Misjoin- der. —Joint notion. An action in which there are two or more plaintiffs, or two or more de- fendants.—Joint debtor nets. Statutes enact- ed in many of the states, which provide that judgment may be given, for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of several defendants, and that, “in an action against several defendants, the court may, in, its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to pro- ceed against the othera, whenever a several judgment is proper.” The name is also given to statutes providing that where an action is instituted against two or more defendants upon, an alleged joint liability, and some of them are served with process, but jurisdiction is not obtained over the others, the plaintiff may still proceed to trial against those who are before the- court, and, if he recovers, may have judgment against all of the defendants whom he shows to- be jointly liable. 1 Black. [Law: Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 20 — permissive joinder of parties]

[Law: Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 18 — joinder of claims]

Joinder of claims — uniting several demands in one action — is permitted without limit of subject matter in federal practice.

Why: Rule 18 is the genuine modern form of the entry's 'joinder of actions'; confident of the rule number.

JOURNAL.

A daily book; a book in which entries are made or events recorded from day to day. In maritime law, the jour- nal (otherwise called "log” or “log-book”) is a book kept on every vessel, which contains a brief record of the events and occurrences of each day of a voyage, with the nautical observations, course of the ship, account of the weather, etc. In the system of double- entry book-keeping, the Journal is an ac- count-book into which are transcribed, dally or at other intervals, the items entered up- on the day-book, for more convenient post- ing into the ledger. In the usage of legisla- tive bodies, the journal is a daily record of the proceedings of either house. It is kept by the clerk, and in it are entered the ap- pointments and actions of committees, in- troduction of bills, motions, votes, resolu- tions, etc., in the order of their occurrence. The determination or sentence of the law, pronounced by a competent Judge or court as the result of an action or proceeding In- stituted In such court, affirming that upon the matters submitted for its decision, a legal duty or liability does or does not ex- ist. 1 Black, Judgm. $ 1; Gunter v. Earnest 68 Ark. 180, 56 S. W. 876.

The term “judgment” is also used to de- note the reason which the court gives for its decision; but this Is more properly denomi- nated an “opinion.”

Classification. Judgments are either in rent or in personam; as to which see Judg- ment in Rem, Judgment in Personam.

Judgments are either final or interlocu- tory. A final judgment Is one which puts, an end to an action at Jaw by declaring that the plaintiff either has or has not en- titled himself to recover the remedy he sues for. 3 Bl. Comm. 398. So distinguished from interlocutory judgments, which merely establish the right of the plaintiff to recov- er, in general terms. Id. 397. A judgment which determines a particular cause. Bost- wick v. Brinkerhoff, 106 U. S. 3, 1 Sup. Ct 15. 27 L. Ed. 73; Klever v. Seawall, 65 Fed. 377, 12 C. C. A. 653 ; Pfeiffer v. Crane, 89 Ind. 487; Nelson v. Brown. 59 Vt. 601, 10 Atl. 721. A judgment which cannot be ap- pealed from, which is perfectly conclusive upon the matter adjudicated. Snell v. Cot- ton Gin Mfg. Co., 24 Pick. (Mass.) 300. A judgment which terminates all litigation on the same right. The term “final judgment," in the judiciary act of 1789, § 25, includes both species of judgments as Just defined.

1 Kent, Comm. 316; Weston v. Charleston,

2 Pet. 494, 7 L. Ed. 481 ; Forgay v. Conrad, 6 How. 201, 209, 12 L. Ed. 404. A judgment which is not final is called “iuterlocutory ;” that is, an interlocutory judgment is one which determines some preliminary or sub- ordinate point or plea, or settles some step, Question, or default arising in the progress of the cause, but does not adjudicate the ulfimate rights of the parties, or finally put the case out of eourt. Thus, a judgment or order passed upon any provisional or ac- cessory claim or contention is, In general, merely interlocutory, although it may final- ly dispose of that particular matter. 1 Black, Judgm. { 21.

Judgments are either domestic or foreign. A judgment or decree is domestic in the courts of the same state or country where it was originally rendered ; in other states or countries it is called foreign. A foreign judgment is one rendered by the courts of a state or country politically and judicially distinct from that where the Judgment or Its effect is brought in question. One pro- nounced by a tribunal of a foreign country, or of a sister state. Karns v. Kunkle, 2 Minn. 313 (Gil. 268) ; Gulick v. Loder, 13 N.

J. Law, 68, 23 Am. Dec. 711.

A judgment may be upon the merits, or it may not. A judgment on the merits is one which is rendered after the substance and matter of the case have been judicially in- vestigated, and the court has decided which party is in the right; as distinguished from a judgment which turns upon some prelimi- nary matter or technical point, or which, in consequence of the act or default of one of the parties, is given without a contest or trial.

Of judgments rendered without a regular trial, or without a complete trial, the sev- eral species are enumerated below. And first:

Judgment by default is a judgment ob- tained by one party when the other party neglects to take a certain necessary step in the action (as, to enter an appearance, or to plead) within the proper time. In Louisi- ana, the term “ contradictory Judgment” is used to distinguish a judgment given after the parties have been heard, either in sup- port of their claims or in their defense, from a judgment by default. Cox’s Exec- utors v. Thomas, 11 La. 366.

Judgment by confession is where a de- fendant gives the plaintiff a cognovit or written confession of the action (or “confes- sion of judgment,” as it is frequently call- ed) by virtue of which the plaintiff enters judgment.

Judgment nil dicit is a judgment rendered for the plaintiff when the defendant “says nothing ;” that is, when he neglects to plead • to the plaintiff’s declaration within the prop- er time.

Judgment by non sum informatus is one which is rendered when, instead of entering a plea, the defendant’s attorney says he is not informed of any answer to be given to the action. Steph. PI. 130.

Judgment of nonsuit is of two kinds, — voluntary and Involuntary. When plaintiff abandons his case, and consents that judg- ment go against him for costs, It Is volun- tary. But when he, being called, neglects to appear, or when he has given no evidence on which a jury could find a verdict. It is in- voluntary. Freem. Judgm. § 6.

Judgment of retraxit. A Judgment ren- dered where, after appearance and before verdict, the plaintiff voluntarily goes into court and enters on the record that he “withdraws his suit." It differs from a non- suit In the latter case the plaintiff may sue again, upon payment of costs; but a retraxit is an open, voluntary renunciation of his claim in court, and by it he forever loses his action.

Judgment of nolle prosequi. This judg- ment is entered when plaintiff declares that he will not further prosecute his suit, or en- try of a stet processus, by which plaintiff agrees that all further proceedings shall be stayed.

Judgment of non pros. (non prosequitur) is one given against the plaintiff for a neg- lect to take any of those steps which it is incumbent on him to take in due time.

Judgment Of cassetur breve or 6<llo (that the writ or bill be quashed) is a judgment rendered in favor of a party pleading in abatement to a writ or action. Steph. PL 130, 131.

Judgment of nil capiat per breve or per billam is a judgment in favor of the defend- ant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

Judgment quod partes replacitent. This is a judgment of repleader, and is given if an issue is formed on so immaterial a point that the court cannot know for whom to give judgment. The parties must then re- construct their pleadings.

Judgment of respondeat ouster is a judg- ment given against the defendant, requir- ing him to “answer over,” after he has fail- ed to establish a dilatory plea upon which an issue in law has been raised.

Judgment quod recuperet is a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, (that he do recov- er,) rendered when be has prevailed upon an issue in fact or an issue in law other than one arising on a dilatory plea. Steph.

PI. 126.

Judgment non obstante veredicto is a Judgment entered for the plaintiff “notwith- ' standing the verdict" which has been given for defendant; which may be done where, after verdict and before Judgment, it ap- pears by the record that the matters plead- ed or replied to, although verified by the verdict, are insufficient to constitute a de- fense or bar to the action.

Special, technical names are given to the judgments rendered in certain actions. These are explained as follows:

Judgment quod computet is a judgment in an action of account-render that the defend- ant do account.

Judgment quod partitio fiat is the inter- locutory Judgment in a writ of partition, that partition be made.

Judgment quando avcidcrint. If on the plea of plcne administravit in an action against an executor or administrator, or on the plea of riens per descent in an action against an heir, the plaintiff, instead of taking issue on the plea, take judgment of assets quando acciderint, in this case, if assets afterwards come to the hands of the executor or heir, the plaintiff must first sue out a scire facias, before he can have ex- ecution. If, upon this scire facias, assets be found for part, the plaintiff may have judgment to recover so much immediately, and the residue of the assets in futuro. 1 Sid. 448.

Judgment de melioribus damnis. Where, in an action against several persons for a Joint tort, the jury by mistake sever the damages by giving heavier damages against one defendant than against the others, the plaintiff may cure the defect by taking judg- ment for the greater damages (do meliori- bus damnis) against that defendant, and entering a nolle prosequi (q. v.) against the others. Sweet.

Judgment in error is a Judgment rendered by a court of error on a record sent up from an inferior court

Other compound and descriptive terms. A conditional judgment is one whose force depends upon the performance of certain acts to be done in the future by one of the parties; as, one which may be- come of no effect if the defendant appears and pleads according to its terms, or one which orders the sale of mortgaged property in a foreclosure proceeding unless the mort- gagor shall pay the amount decreed within the time limited. E. 130. A dormant judgment is one which has not been satisfied nor extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be Issued upon it without first reviving the Judgment. [Axiom: Res judicata — a final judgment on the merits bars relitigation of the same claim]

A final judgment on the merits is conclusive between the parties and their privies and bars relitigation of the same claim — the preclusion the entry's classification of final judgments is built for.

Why: Res judicata is the genuine doctrine for which 'final judgment' is the operative category; it names what the entry's long classification serves.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 7:2, KJV]

For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

Why: The entry is the court's official decision on the parties' rights. The verse states the reciprocal moral law of judgment itself — the measure a judge applies returns upon the judge — genuinely illuminating what a 'jud...

"Only God can judge me, is that right? / Only God baby, nobody else, nobody else" — against the entry's "official and authentic decision of a court of Justice," Shakur reserves the office of judgment to God alone and voids every human court's claim on him.

Why: The lyric is a direct theological counter-claim on the very office the entry defines: who has standing to render judgment. The legal judgment is the court's final determination of rights; the song denies that standing...

JUDGMENT IN REM.

A judgment in rem is an Adjudication, pronounced upon the status of some particular subject-matter, by a tribunal having competent authority for that purpose. It differs from a judg- ment in personam, in this: that the latter Judgment is in form, as well as substance, between the parties claiming the right ; and that it is so inter partes appears by the rec- ord itself. It is binding only upon the par- ties appearing to be such by the record, and those claiming by them. A judgment in rem is founded on a proceeding instituted, not against the person, as such, but against or upon the thing or subject-matter itself, whose state or condition is to be determin- ed. It is a proceeding to determine the state or condition of the thing Itself; and the judgment is a solemn declaration upon the status of the thing, and it ipso facto renders It what It declares it to be. Wood- ruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 73. And see Martin v. King, 72 Ala. 360; Lord v. Chadbourne, 42 Me. 429, 66 Am. Dec. 290; Hlue v. Hus- sey, 45 Ala. 496; Cross v. Armstrong, 44 Ohio St. 613, 10 N. E 160.

Various definitions have been given of a jndg- ment in rem, but all are criticised as either in- complete or comprehending too much. It is generally said to be a jndgment declaratory of the status of some subject-matter, whether this be a person or a thing. Thus, the probate of a will fixes the status of the document as a will. The personal rights and interests which follow are mere incidental results of the status or character of the paper, and do not appear on the face of the judgment So, a decree estab- lishing or dissolving a marriage is a judgment in rem, because it fixes the status of the per- son. A judgment of forfeiture, by the nroper tribunal, against specific articles or goods, for a violation of the revenue laws, is a judgment in rem. But it is objected that the customary definition does not fit such a case, because there is no fixing of the status of anything, the whole effect being a seizure, whatever the thing may be. In the foregoing instances, and many oth- ers, the judgment is conclusive against all the world, without reference to actual presence or participation in the proceedings. If the ex- pression “strictly in rem" msy be applied to any class of cases, it should be confined to such as these. “A very able writer says: ‘The distin- guishing characteristic of judgments in rem is that, wherever their obligation is recognized and enforced as against any person, it is equally rec- ognized and enforced as against all persons.' It seems to us that tbe true definition of a ‘judg- ment in rem’ is ‘an adjudication’ against some person or thing, or upon the status of some sub- ject-matter; which, wherever and whenever binding upon any person, is equally binding up- on all persona." Bartero v. Real Estate Savings Bank, 10 Mo. App. 78.

[Axiom: judgments in rem are conclusive erga omnes — against all the world]

A judgment strictly in rem is conclusive against all the world, wherever its obligation is recognized — binding strangers as well as parties.

Why: The entry itself (quoting Bartero) states the distinguishing characteristic; the footnote distills it into canonical form — genuine, drawn from the entry's own authority.

[Law: U.S. Const. amends. VI & VII — right to trial by jury]

The Roman selecti, whom the entry likens to modern jurors, find their modern guarantee in the constitutional jury-trial clauses.

Why: The entry itself draws the selecti-to-juror resemblance; the Sixth and Seventh Amendments are the genuine modern legal form of that institution — the link follows the entry's own bridge.

[Maxim: Judicia posteriora sunt in lege fortiora — the later decisions are the stronger in law]

The entry's maxim — the later decisions are the stronger in law — is the classical statement of the rule that later decisions in the same line control earlier ones.

Why: The maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry (8 Coke, 97); the footnote gives it in canonical form with its modern meaning — no invented content.

Judicial power — the authority vested in courts as distinct from legislative and executive power — received its canonical American elaboration when the Supreme Court asserted review of legislative and executive acts.

Why: The entry defines judicial power by cases; Marbury is the genuine foundational case on what that power includes — confident the citation is real.

Ulpian's three precepts — to live honorably, to hurt nobody, to render to every one his due — are the canonical statement of law's aims, adopted by Blackstone.

Why: Quoted verbatim in the entry (Inst. 1, 1, 3; 1 Bl. Comm. 40); the precepts are the genuine classical foundation of the whole 'juris' family — the most central maxim in the batch.

The power and au- thority constitutionally conferred upon (or constitutionally recognized as existing In), a court or judge to pronounce the sentence of the law, or to award the remedies provided by law, upon a state of facts, proved or ad- mitted, referred to the tribunal for decision, and authorized by law to be the subject of investigation or action by that tribunal, and in favor of or against persons (or a rex) who present themselves, or who are brought be- fore the court in some manner sanctioned by law as proper and sufficient. 1 Black, Judgm. f 215. Jurisdiction is a power constitutionally conferred upon a judge or magistrate to take cognizance of and determine causes accord- ing to law, and to carry his sentence into execution. U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 691, 8 L. Ed. 547; Yates v. Lansing. 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 413, 6 Am. Dec. 290; Johnson v. Jones, 2 Neb. 135.

The authority of a court as distinguished from the other departments; judicial power consid- ered with reference to its scope and extent as respects the questions and persons subject to it ; power given by law to hear and decide contro- versies. Abbott.

Jurisdiction is the power to hear and deter- mine the subject-matter in controversy between parties to the suit ; to adjudicate or exercise any judicial power over them. Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 657, 717, 9 L. Ed. 1233.

Jurisdiction is the power to hear and deter- mine a cause: the authority by which judicial officers take cognizance of and decide causes. Brownsville v. Basse, 43 Tex. 440.

—Appellate jurisdiction. The power and authority to take cognizance of a cause and pro- ceed to its determination, not in its initial stag- es, but only after it has been finally decided by an inferior court, i. c., the power of review and determination on appeal, writ of error, cer- tiorari, or other similar process.— Concurrent jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of several dif- ferent tribunals, both authorized to deal with the name subject-matter at the choice of the suitor. State v. Sinnott, 89 Me. 41, 35 Atl. 1007 ; Rogers v. Bonnett. 2 Okl. 553, 37 Pac. 1078; Hercules Iron Works v. Railroad Co.. 141 111. 491, 30 N. E. 1050.— Contentions Ju- risdiction. In English ecclesiastical law. In a gen- eral sense, the Jurisdiction belonging to a court of equity, but more particularly the aggregate of those cases, controversies, and occasions which form proper subjects for the exercise of the powers of a chancery court. See Anderson v. Carr, 65 Hun. 170, 19 N. Y. Supp. 992 ; People v. McKane, 78 Hun, 154, 28 N. Y. Supp. 981. —Foreign jurisdiction. Any jurisdiction for- eign to that of the forum. Also the exercise by a state or nation of jurisdiction beyond its own territory, the right being acquired by treaty or otherwise.— General jurisdiction. Such as extends to all controversies that may be brought before a court within the legal bounds of rights and remedies ; as opposed to special or limited jurisdiction, which covers only a particular class of cases, or cases where the amount in contro- versy is below a prescribed sum, or which is subject to specific exceptions. The terms “gen- eral" and "special,” applied to jurisdiction, in- dicate the difference between a legal authority extending to the whole of a particular subject and one limited to a part; and, when applied to the terms of court, the occasion upon which these powers can be respectively exercised. Grade v. Freeland, 1 N. Y. 232.— Limited Ju- risdiction. This term is ambiguous, and the books sometimes use it without due precision. It is sometimes carelessly employed instead of “special.” The true distinction between courts is between such as possess a general and such as have only a special jurisdiction for a partic- ular purpose, or are clothed with special powers for the performance. Obert v. Hammel, 18 N.

J. Law, 73.— Original jurisdiction. Juris- diction in the first instance; jurisdiction to take cognizance of a cause at its inception, try it, and pass- judgment upon the law and facts. Distinguished from appellate jurisdiction.— Pro- bate jurisdiction. Such jurisdiction as or- dinarily pertains to probate, orphans’, or sur- rogates' courts, including the establishment of wills, the administration of estntes, the super- vising of the guardianship of infants, the allot- ment of dower, etc. See Richardson v. Green. 61 Fed. 423, 9 C. C. A. 565; Chadwick v. Chad- wick. 6 Mont. 566, 13 Pac. 385.— Special Ju- risdiction. A court authorized to take cogni- zance of only some few kinds of causes or pro- ceedings expressly designated by statute is call- ed a “court of special jurisdiction.”— Summary jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a court to give a judgment or make an order itself forth- with ; e. g„ to commit to prison for contempt ; to punish malpractice in a solicitor: or. in the case of justices of the peace, a jurisdiction to convict an offender themselves instead of com- mitting him for trial by a jury. JURISPRUDENCE.

The philosophy of law, or the science which treats of the prin- ciples of positive law and legal relatione.

"The term is wrongly applied to actual sys- tems of law. or to current views of law, or to suggestions tor its amendment, but is the name of a science. This science is a formal, or ana- lytical, rather than a material, one. It is the science of actual or positive law. It is wrongly divided into 'general' and 'particular,' or into 'philosophical' and 'historical.' It may there- fore be defined as the formal science of positive law." Holl. Jur. 12.

In the proper sense of the word, "jurispru- dence" is the science of law, namely, that science which has for its function to ascertain the prin- ciples on which legal rules are based, so as not only to classify those rules in their proper order, and show the relation in which they stand to one another, but also to settle the manner in which new or doubtful cases should be brought under the appropriate rules. Jurisprudence is more a formal than a material science. It has no direct concern with questions of moral or po- litical policy, for they fall under the province of ethics and legislation; but, when a new or doubtful case arises to which two different rules seem, when taken literally, to be equally appli- cable, it may be, and often is, the function of jurisprudence to consider the ultimate effect which would be produced if each rule were ap- plied to an indefinite number of similar cases, and to choose that rule which, when so applied, will produce the greatest advantage to the com- munity. Sweet.

— Comparative jurisprudence. The study of the principles of legal science by the compar- ison of various systems of law.— Equity juris- prudence. That portion of remedial justice which is exclusively administered by courts of equity as distinguished from courts of common law. Jackson v. Nimmo, 3 Lea (Tenn.) <309. More generally speaking, the science which treats of the rules, principles, and maxims which govern the decisions of a court of equi- ty. the cases and controversies which are con- sidered proper subjects for its cognizance, and the nature and form of the remedies which it grants.— Medical jurisprudence. The science which applies the principles and practice of the different branches of medicine to the elucidation of doubtful questions in a court of justice. Oth- erwise called "forensic medicine," (?. v.) A sort of mixed science, which may be considered as common ground to the practitioners botli of law and physic. 1 Stepb. Comm. 8.

JURY.

In practice. A certain number of men, selected according to law, and sworn (jurati) to inquire of certain matters of fact, and declare the truth upon evidence to be laid before them. This definition embraces the various subdivisions of Juries ; as grand jury, petit jury, common jury, special jury, coroner’s jury, sheriff’s jury, (q. v.)

A jury is a body of men temporarily select- ed from the citizens of a particular district, and invested with power to present or Indict a person for a public offense, or to try a question of fact. Code Civil Proc. CaL i 190.

The terms “jury" and “trial by jury,” as used in the constitution, mean twelve competent men, disinterested and impartial, not of kin, nor personal dependents of either of the parties, having their homes within the jurisdictional limits of the court, drawn and selected by of- ficers free from all bias in favor of or against either party, duly impaneled and sworn

A jury of inquiry who are summoned and return- ed by the sheriff to each session of the crim- inal courts, and whose duty is to receive com- plaints and accusations in criminal cases, hear the evidence adduced on the part of the state, and find bills of indictment in cases where they are satisfied a trial ought to be had: They are first sworn, and instructed by the court. This is called a “grand jury” because it com- prises a greater number of jurors than the ordinary trial jury or “petit jury." At com- mon law, a grand jury consisted of not less than twelve nor more than twenty-three men, and this is still the rule in many of the states, though in some the number is otherwise fixed by statute; thus in Oregon and Utah, the grand jury is composed of seven men ; in South Da- kota, not less than six nor more than eight ; in Texas, twelve; in Idaho, sixteen; in Wash- ington, twelve to seventeen ; in North Dakota, sixteen to twenty-three ; in California, nine- teen ; in New Mexico, twenty-one. JUS.

Lat. In Roman law. Right; jus- tice ; law ; the whole body of law ; also a right. The term is used in two meanings:

1. "Jus" means “law,” considered in the abstract; that is, as distinguished from any specific

enactment, the science or department of learning, or quasi personified factor in human history or conduct or social develop- ment, which we call, in a general sense, “the law.” Or it means the law taken as a sys- tem, an aggregate, a -whole ; “the sum total of a number of individual laws taken to- gether.” Or it may designate some one par- ticular system or body of particular laws; as in the phrases “ jus civile," “jus gentium," “jus prwtorium.”

2. In a second sense, “jus" signifies “a right;” that is, a power, privilege, faculty, or demand inherent in one person and in- cident upon another; or a capacity residing in one person of controlling, with the assent and assistance of the state, the actions of another. This is its meaning in the expres- sions “jus in rem," “jus accrescendi," “jus possessionis.”

It is thus seen to possess the same am- biguity as the words “droit," “recht," and “right,” (which see.)

Within the meaning of the maxim that “ig- norantia juris non encusat” (ignorance of the law is no excuse), the word “jus" is used to denote the general law or ordinary law of the land, and not a private right. Churchill v. Bradley, 58 Vt 403, 5 Atl. lift), 56 Am. Rep. 563; Cooper v. Fibbs, L. R. 2 II. L. 140; Freichnecht v. Meyer, 39 N. J. Eq. 561.

The continental jurists seek to avoid this ambiguity in the use of the word “jus," by calling its former signification "objective,” and the latter meaning “subjective.” Thus Mackeldey (Rom. Law, | 2) says: “The laws of the first kind [compulsory or positive laws] form law [jus] in its objective sense, [jus est norma agcndi, law is a rule of conduct.] The possibility resulting from law in this sense to do or require another to do is law In its subjective sense, [jus est facuftas agendi, law is a license to act.] The voluntary ac- tion of man in conformity with the precepts of law is called ‘justice,’ [justitia .]”

Some further meanings of the word are:

An action. Bract, fol. 3. Or, rather, those proceedings in the Roman action which were conducted before the praetor.

Power or authority. Bui juris, in one’s own power; independent. Inst. 1, 8, pr. ; Bract, fol. 3. Alivni juris, under another’s power. Inst. 1, 8, pr.

The profession (art) or practice of the law. •tut ponitur pro ipsa arte. Bract fol. 26.

[Axiom: joint tenancy requires the four unities — time, title, interest, and possession]

The right of survivorship is the distinguishing mark of joint tenancy, which exists only where the four unities coincide: time, title, interest, and possession.

Why: The entry's maxims govern survivorship's effects; the four unities are the genuine doctrinal frame in which survivorship operates — the principle that makes the entry's rules cohere.

JUS AD REM.

A term of the civil law, meaning "a right to a thing that is, a right exercisable by one person over a particular article of property in virtue of a contract or obligation Incurred by another person in re- spect to it, and which is enforceable only against or through such other person. It is thus distinguished from jut in rc, which is a complete and absolute dominion over a thing available against all i)ersou8.

The disposition of modem writers is to use the term “ jut ad rem” as descriptive of a right without possession, and “ jut in rc” ns descrip- tive of a right accompanied by possession. Or. in a somewhat wider sense, the former denotes an inchoate. or incomplete right to a thing; the latter, a complete and perfect right to a thing. See The Carlos F. Roses, 177 IT. S. 655, 20 Sup. Ct. 803, 44 L Ed. 929 ; The Young Mechanic, 30 Fed. Cas. 873.

JUS CIVILE.

Civil law. The system of law peculiar to one state or people. Inst 1, 2, 1. Particularly, in Roman law, the civil law of the Roman people, as distinguished from the jut gentium. The term is also applied to the body of law called, emphatic- ally. the “civil law.”

The jut civile and the jut gentium are distin- guished in this way. All people ruled by stat- utes and customs use a law partly peculiar to themselves, partly common to all men. The law each people has settled for itself is pecu- liar to the state itself, and is called "jus civile,’ as being peculiar to that very state. The law, again, that natural reason lins settled among all men, — the law that is guarded among all peoples quite alike, — is called the "jut gentium,” and all nations use it as if law. The Homan peo- ple, therefore, use a law that is partly peculiar to itself, partly common to all men. Hunter, Rom. Law, 38.

But this is not the only, or even the general, use of the words. What the Roman jurists had chiefly -in view, when they spoke of “jus civile,’ was not local as opposed to cosmopolitan law, but the old law of the city as contrasted with the newer law Introduced by the praetor, (jus prxtorium, jus honorarium.) Largely, no doubt, the jus gentium corresponds with the jus pnrtorium; but the correspondence is not per- fect. Id. 39.

JUS crviTATUS. The right of citizen- ship ; the freedom of the city of Rome. It differs from jus quiritium, which compre- hended all the privileges of a free native of Rome. The difference is much the same as between “denization” and “naturalization” with ns. Wharton.

Mackeld. Rom. Law, 1 191.

JUS GENTIUM.

The law of nations. That law which natural reason has estab- lished among all men is equally observed among all nations, and is called the “law of nations,” as being tbe law which all nations use Inst 1, 2, 1; Dig. 1, 1, 9; 1 Bl. Comm. 43; 1 Kent, Comm. 7; Mackeld. Rom. Law, { 125.

Although this phrase had a meaning in the Roman law which may be rendered by our ex- pression “law of nations," it must not be un- derstood as equivalent to what we now call “international law,” its scope being much wid- er. It was originally a system of law, or more properly equity, gathered by the early Roman lawyers and magistrates from the common in- gredients in the customs of the old Italian tribes, — those being the nations, gentei, whom they had opportunities of observing, — to be used in cases where the jut civile did not apply; that is, in cases between foreigners or between a Roman citizen, and a foreigner. The principle upon which they proceeded was that any rule of law which was common to all the nations they knew of must be intrinsically consonant to right reason, and therefore fundamentally valid and just. From this it was an easy tran- sition to the converse principle, viz., that any rule which instinctively commended itself to their sense of justice and reason must be a part of the jut gentium. And so tbe latter term came eventually to be about synonymous with “equity," (as the Romans understood it,) or the system of prretorian law.

Modern jurists frequently employ the term “jut gentium privatum” to denote private inter- national law. or that subject which is other- wise styled the “conflict of laws;” and “jut gentium publicum" for public international law, or the system of rules governing the intercourse of nations with each other as persons.

The Roman method the entry describes — treating rules common to all known nations as consonant with right reason — is the ancestor of modern customary international law, formed by general state practice accepted as law.

This conceit originated with the philosophical jurists of Rome, and was gradually extended until the phrase came to denote a supposed basis or substratum common to all systems of posi- tive law, and hence1 to be found, in greater or less purity, in the laws of all nations. And, conversely, they held that if any rule or principle of law was observed In common by all peoples with whose systems they were acquainted, It must be a part of the jus natu- rale, or derived from It Thus the phrases “jus natur'ale” and “jus gentium" came to be used interchangeably.

The Roman subrogation the entry defines — succeeding to an elder creditor's lien on paying him — is the classical form of the living doctrine: one who discharges another's obligation steps into the creditor's shoes.

Why: The entry defines Roman subrogation; the axiom states the genuine modern doctrine — old form to living principle.

JUST.

Right ; in accordance with law and justice.

"Tlie words ‘just’ and ‘justly’ do not qlways mean ‘just’ and ‘justly’ in a moral sense, but they not unfrequently, in their connection with other words in a sentence, bear a very different signification. It is evident, however, that the word ‘just’ in the statute [requiring an affi- davit for an attachment to state that plain- tiff’s claim is /«»(] means ‘just’ in a moral sense ; and from its isolation, being made a separate subdivision of the section, it is intend- ed to mean ‘morally just’ in the most emphatic terms. The claim must be morally jast, as well as legally just, in order to entitle a party to an attachment” Robinson v. Burton, 5 Kan. • 300. .

—Just cause. Legitimate cause ; legal or law- ful ground for action ; such reasons as will suffice in law to justify the action taken. State v. Baker. 112 La. 801. 36 South. 703 : Clai- borne v. Railroad Co.. 46 W. Va. 371, 33 S. E. 265.— Just compensation. As used in the constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without “just compensation,” this phrase means a full and fair equivalent for the loss sustained by the taking for public use. It may be more or it may be less than the mere money value of the property actually taken. The exercise of the power being necessary for the public good, and all property being held subject to its exercise when and as the public good requires it, it would be unjust to the public that it should be required to pay the owner more than a fair indemnity for the Iobs he sustains by the ap- propriation of his property for the general good. On the other hand, it would be equally unjust to the owner if he should receive less than a fair indemnity for such loss. To arrive at this fair indemnity, the interests of the public and of the owner, and all the circumstances of the particular appropriation, should be taken into consideration. Lewis. Em. Dom. | 462. Mulford (D. C.) 18 Fed. 455. The conformity of our actions and our will to the law. Toull. Droit Civil Ft. tit prill, no. 5.

In the most extensive sense of the word it dif- fers little from “virtue ;” for it includes with- in itself the whole circle of virtues. Yet the common distinction between them is that that which, considered positively and in itself, is called “virtue,” when considered relatively and with respect to others has the name of “jus- tice." But “justice,” being in itself a part of “virtue,” is confined to things simply good or evil, and consists in a man’s taking such a pro- portion of them as he ought. Bouvler.

Commutative justice is that which should govern contracts. It consists in rendering to every man the exact measure of his dues, without regard to his personal worth or mer- its, i. e„ placing all men on an equality. Distributive justice is that wbich should govern the distribution of rewards and pun- ishments. It assigns to each the rewards which his personal merit or services de- serve, or the proper punishment for his crimes. It does not consider all men as equally deserving or equally blameworthy, but discriminates between them, observing a just proportion and comparison. This distinction originated with Aristotle. (Eth. Nic. V.) See Fonbl. Eq. 3; Toull. Droit Civil Fr. tit. prfil. no. 7.

[Axiom: justiciability — standing, ripeness, mootness, political question]

What is 'proper to be examined in courts' is determined today by the justiciability doctrines: standing, ripeness, mootness, and the political-question rule.

Why: The one-line entry names the concept; the footnote names its genuine modern doctrinal content — the term 'justiciable' is exactly what these doctrines elaborate.

Knowledge may be classified in a legal sense, as positive and imputed,— imputed, when the means of knowledge exists, known and acces- sible to the pnrty, and capable of communicat- ing positive information. When there is knowl- edge, notice, as legally and technically under- stood, becomes immaterial. It is only material when, in the absence of knowledge, it produces the same results. However closely actual notice may, in many instances, approximate knowl- edge, and constructive notice may be its equiva- lent in effect, there may be actual notice with- out knowledge; and, when constructive notice is made the test to determine priorities of right, it may fall far short of knowledge, and be suf- ficient. [Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1503 — influencing or injuring a juror]

Tampering with a jury — endeavoring to influence jurors in their verdict — is federal obstruction of justice.

Why: The entry defines the old practice of 'laboring' a jury; § 1503 is the genuine modern criminal prohibition of exactly that conduct — old form to living statute.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined; two-witness rule]

The elastic Roman 'injured majesty' the entry describes is the abuse the American treason clause was written to prevent: treason is narrowly defined, requiring two witnesses to the same overt act.

Why: The entry traces laesa majestas as any offense against the king's dignity; Art. III, § 3 is the genuine constitutional response — its narrowness guards against the very elasticity the entry describes.

LAND, in the most general sense, compre- hends any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever; as meadows, pastures, woods, moors, waters, marshes, furzes, and heath. Co. Lltt 4a.

Land Is the solid material of the earth, what- ever may be the ingredients of which it is composed, whether soil, rock, or other sub- stance. Civ. Code Cal. | 659.

Philosophically, it seems more correct to say that the word "land” means, in law, -as in the vernacular, the soil, or portion of the earth’s cfust ; and to explain or justify such expressions as that "whoever owns the land owns the buildings above and the minerals below,” upon the view, not that these are within the extension of the term “land,” but that they are so con- nected with it that by rules of law they pass bv a conveyance of the land. This view makes "land,” as a term, narrower in signification than "realty;” though it would allow an instrument speaking of land to operate co-exten- sively with one granting realty or real property by either of those terms. But many of the authorities use the expression “land*’ as in- cluding these incidents to the soil. Abbott — Accommodation lands. In English law. LAVOR NUEVA.

In Spanish law. A new work. Las Partldas, pt. 3, tit. 32, 1. 1.

LAW. 1. That which is laid down, or- dained, or established. A rule or method according to which phenomena or actions co- exist or follow each other.

2. A system of principles and rules of hu- man conduct, being the aggregate of those commandments and principles which are either prescribed or recognized by the gov- erning power In an organized jural society as its will In relation to the conduct of the mem- bers of such society, and which it undertakes to maintain and sanction and to use as the criteria of the actions of such members.

"Law” is a solemn expression of legislative will. It orders and permits and forbids. It announces rewards and punishments. Its pro- visions generally relate not to solitary or sing- ular cases, but to what passes in the ordinary course of affairs. Civ. Code La. arts. 1. 2.

“Law,” without an article, properly implies a science or system of principles or rules of human conduct, answering to the Latin “jus f as when it is spoken of as a subject of study or practice. In this sense, it includes the de- cisions of courts of justice, as well as acts of the legislature. The judgment of a competent court, until reversed or otherwise superseded, is late, as much as any statute. Indeed, it may happen that a statute may be passed in violation of lav. that is, of the fundamental law or constitution of a state ; that it is the prerogative of courts in such cases to declare it void, or, in other words, to declare it not to be law. Burriil.

3. A rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state. 1 Steph. Comm. 25; Civ. Code Dak. | 2; Pol. Code Cal. S 4466.

A “law,” in the proper sense of the term, is a general rule of human action, taking cognizance only of external acts, enforced by a determinate authority, which authority is human, and among human authorities is that which is paramount in a political society. Holl. Jur. 36.

A “law,” properly so called, is a command which obliges a person or persons; and, as distinguished from a particular or occasional command, obliges generally to acts or forbearances of a class. Aust Jur.

A rule or enactment promulgated by the legislative authority of a state ; a long-established local custom which has the force of such an enactment. Dubois v. Hepburn, 10 Pet 18, 9 L. Ed. 325.

4. In another sense the word signifies an enactment; a distinct and complete act of positive law; a statute, as opposed to rules Of civil conduct deduced from the customs of the people or judicial precedents.

When the term “law” is used to denote en- actments of the legislative power, it is frequently confined, especially by English writers, to permanent rules of civil conduct, as distin- guished from other acts, such as a divorce act, an appropriation bill, an estates act. Rep. Eng. St. L. Com. Mar. 1856.

For other definitions and descriptions, see State v. McCann, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 9; State v. Hockett, 70 Iowa, 454, 30 N. W. 744; Dun- can v. Magette, 25 Tex. 253; Baldwin v. N. W. 492 ; Smith v. U. S., 22 Fed. Cas. 696 ; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1, 10 L Ed. 865; Miller v. Dunn, 72 Cal. 462, 14 Pac. 27, 1 Am. St. Sep. 67; Bier v. McGehee, 148 D.

S. 137, 13 Sup. Ct. 580, 37 L. Ed. 397.

Historically considered. With reference to its origin, "law" is derived either from judicial precedents, from legislation, or from custom. That part of the law which is de- rived from judicial precedents is called “common law,” “equity,” or “admiralty,” “probate,” or “ecclesiastical law,” according to the nature of the courts by which It was originally enforced. (See the respective ti- tles.) That part of the law which is derived from legislation is called the “statute law.”

Many statutes are classed under one of the divisions above mentioned because they have merely modified or extended portions of It, while others have created altogether new rules. That part of the law which is derived from custom is sometimes called the "cus- tomary law,” as to which, see Custom. Sweet .

The earliest notion of law was not an enumer- ation of a principle, but a judgment in a particular case. When pronounced in the early ages, by a king, it was assumed to be the result of direct divine inspiration. Afterwards came the notion of a custom which a judgment affirms, or punishes its breach. In the outset, however, the only authoritative statement of right and wrong is a judicial sentence render- ed after the fact has occurred. It does not pre- suppose a law to have been violated, but is en- acted for the first time by a higher form into the judge's mind at the moment of adjudica- tion. Maine, Anc. Law, (Dwight's Ed.) pp. xv, 5.

•Synonyms and distinctions. According to the usage in the United States, the name "constitution" is commonly given to the organic or fundamental law of a state, and the term "law" Is used In contradistinction to the former, to denote a statute or en- actment of the legislative body.

"law," as distinguished from "equity," denotes the doctrine and procedure of the common law of England and America, from which equity is a departure.

The term is also used in opposition to "fact." Thus questions of law are to be de- cided by the court, while it is the province of the jury to solve questions of fact.

Classification. With reference to its subject-matter, law is either public or pri- vate. Public law is that part of the law which deals with the state, either by itself or in its relations with individuals, and is divided into (1) constitutional law; (2) ad- ministrative law ; (3) criminal law ; (4) crim- inal procedure ; (5) the law of the state con- sidered in its quasi private personality; (6) the procedure relating to the state as so con- sidered. Holl. Jur. 300. •

Law is also divided into substantive and adjective. Substantive law is that part of the law which creates rights and obligations, while adjective law provides a method of en- forcing and protecting them. In other words, adjective law is the law of procedure. Holl. Jur. 61, 238.

The ordinary, but not very useful, division of law into written and unwritten rests on the same principle. The written law is the statute law; the unwritten law is the com- mon law, (q. v.) 1 Steph. Comm. 40, following Blackstone.

• Kinds of statutes. Statutes are called "general" or "public" when they affect the community at large; and local or special when their operation Is confined to a limited region, or particular class or Interest.

Statutes are also either prospective or re- trospective; the former, when they are intended to operate upon future cases only ; the latter, when they nmy also embrace transactions occurring before their passage.

Statutes are called "enabling" when they confer new powers ; "remedial" when their effect is to provide relief or reform abuses : "penal" when they impose punishment, pe- cuniary or cor|)oral, for a violation of their provisions.

5. In old English jurisprudence, "law" is used to signify an oath, or the privilege of being sworn ; as in the phrases "to wage one's law," "to lose one's law."

—Absolute law. The true and proper law of nature, immutable in the abstract or in principle, in theory, but not in application ; for very often the object, the reason, situa- tion, and other circumstances, may vary its exercise and obligation. 1 Steph. Comm. 21 et srq. — Foreign

LAWFUL.

Legal ; warranted or author- ized by the law; having the qualifications prescribed by law; not contrary to nor for- bidden by the law.

The principal distinction between the terms “lawful1’ and “legal” is that the former contemplates the substance of law, the latter the form of law. To say of an act that it is “lawful” implies that it is authorized, sanctioned, or at any rate not forbidden, by law. To say that it is "legal” implies that it is done or per- formed in accordance with the forms and usages of law. or in a technical manner. In this sense “illegal” approaches the meaning of “invalid.” F’or example, a contract or will, exe- cuted without the required formalities, might be said to be invalid or illegal, but could not be described as unlawful. Further, the word "lawful” more clearly implies an ethical con- tent than does “legal. ’ The latter goes no further than to denote compliance, with positive, technical, or formal rules ; while the former usually imports a moral substance or ethical permissibility. A further distinction is that the word “legal” is used as the synonym of “constructive,” which "lawful” is not. Thus “legal fraud” is fraud implied or inferred by law, or made out by construction. "Lawful fraud” would be a contradiction of terms. Again, “legal” is used as the antithesis of “eq- uitable.” Thus, we speak of “legal assets, “legal estnte,” etc., but not of "lawful assets.” or "lawful estate.” But there are some connec- tions in which the two words are used as exact equivalents. Thus, a “lawful” writ, warrant, or process is the same as a "legal” writ, war- . rant, or process.

LEAGUE. 1. A treaty of alliance be- tween different states or parties. It may be offensive or defensive, or both. LEASE.

A conveyance of lands or tene- ments to a person for life, for a term of years, or at will, In consideration of a return of rent or some other recompense. The person who so conveys such lands or tenements Is termed the "lessor," and the person to whom they are conveyed, the "lessee;" and when the lessor so conveys lands or tenements to a lessee, be is said to lease, demise, or let them. -1 Cruise, Dig. 58.

A conveyance of any lands or tenements, (usually in consideration of rent or other an- nual recompense.) made for life, for years, or at will, but always for a less time than the lessor has in the premises; for, If It be for the whole Interest, It Is more properly an as- signment than a lease. 2 Bl. Comm. 317; Shep. Touch. 266; Watk. Conv. 220. And see Sawyer v. Hansen, 24 Me. 545; Thomas v. West Jersey R. C., 101 U. S. 78, 25 L. Ed. 950; Jackson v. Harsen, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 326, 17 Am. W. 742, 15 L. R. A. 236; Harley v. O'Donnell, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 56.

A contract in writing, under seal, whereby a person having a legal estate in hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, conveys a portion of his interest to another, in consideration of a certain annual rent or render, or other recom- pense. Archb. Landl. & Ten. 2.

"Lease" or "hire" is a synallagmatic con- tract, to which consent alone is sufficient, and by which one party gives to the other the en- joyment of a thing, or his labor, at a fixed price. Civil Code La. art. 2669.

When the contract is bipartite, the one part Is called the 'Uease," the other the "coun- terpart." In the United States, It is usual that both papers should be executed by both parties ; but in England the lease is executed by the lessor alone, and given to the lessee, while the counterpart Is executed by the les- see alone, and given to the lessor.

— Concurrent ltue. One granted for a term which is to commence before the expiration or other determination of a previous lease of the same premises made to another person; or, in other words, an assignment of a part of the reversion, entitling the lessee to all the rents accruing on the previous lease after the date of his lease and to appropriate remedies against the holding tenant. Cargill v. Thompson, 57 Minn. 534, 59 N. W. 638.— Lease and re- lease. This, without any enrolment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bar- gainee. and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for one year, and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. Being thus in possession, he is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion, which muot be made to the tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a release is granted to him. The lease and release, when used as a conveyance of the fee, have the joint opera- tion of a single conveyance. 2 Bl. Comm. 339 ; 4 Kent, Comm. 482 ; Co. Litt. 207 ; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 11.— Mining lease. See Mining.— Parol lease. Synonyms. “Legacy" and “bequest” are equivalent terms. But in strict common-law terminology “legacy" and “devise” do not mean the same tiling and are not interchangeable, the former being restricted to testamentary gifts of personal property, while the latter is prop- erly used only m relation to real estate. But by construction the word “legacy” may be so extended as to include realty or interests there- in. when this is necessary to make a statute cover its intended subject-matter or to effectu- ate the purpose of a testator as expressed in his will. two or more things without designating which.— Conditional legacy. One which is liable to take effect or to be defeated according to the occurrence or non-occurrence of some uncertain event. Russell. 127 Ala. 195, 28 South. 703 ; Ruben- cane v. McKee, 6 Del. Cb. 40, 6 Atl. 639.— Cumulative legacies. These are legacies so called to distinguish them from legacies which are merely repeated. In the construc- tion of testamentary instruments, the question often arises whether, where a testator has twice bequeathed a legacy to the same person, the legatee is entitled to both, or only to one of them; in other words, whether the second legacy must be considered ns a mere repetition of the first, or as cumulative, t. e., additional. In determining this question, the intention of the testator, if it appears on the face of the instrument, prevails. Wharton.— Demonstra- tive legaey. A bequest of a certain sum of money, with a direction that it shall be paid out of a particular fund. It differs from a specific legacy in this respect: that, if the fund out of which it is payable fails for any cause, it la nevertheless entitled to come on the estate as a general legacy. And it differs from a gen- eral legacy In this: that it does not abate in that class, but in the class of specific legacies. Appeal of Armstrong, 63 Pa. 316; Kenadsy v. Sinnott, 179 U. S. 606, 21 Sup. Ct.-233. 45

A legacy of quantity is ordinarily a gen- eral legacy ; but there are legacies of quantity in the nature of specific legacies, as of so much money, with reference to a particular fund for payment. This kind of legacy is called by the civilians a "demonstrative legacy,” and it is so far general and differs so much in effect from one properly specific that, if the fund be called in or fail, the legatee will not be deprived of his legacy, but be permitted to receive it out of the general assets; yet the legacy Is so far specific that it will not be liable to abate with general legacies upon a deficiency of assets. 2 Williams. A legacy of a quantity of chattels described collectively ; as a gift of ail the testator’s pictures. Ward, Leg. 16-18. A legacy is general, where its amount or value is a charge upon the general assets in the hands of the executors, and where, if these are sufficient to meet all the provisions in the will, it must be satisfied ; it is specific, when it is limited to a particular thing, sub- ject, or chose in action, so identified as to ren- der the bequest inapplicable to any other; as the bequest of a horse, a picture, or jewel, or a debt due from a person named, and, in special cases, even of a sum of money. Langdon v. Astor, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 477, 543.— Trust legacy. A bequest of personal property to trustees to be held upon trust ; as, to pay the annual in- come to a beneficiary for fife.— Universal legacy. In the civil law.  | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

In practice. To deliver. “To let to bail” is to deliver to bail on arrest

In contracts. To award to one of sev- eral persons, who have submitted proposals therefor, the contract for erecting public works or doing some part of the work con- nected therewith, or rendering some other service to government for a stipulated com- pensation.

Letting the contract is the choosing one from among the number of bidders, and the formal making of the contract with him. The letting, or putting out, is a different thing from the in- vitation to make proposals; the letting is subse- quent to the invitation. It is the act of award- ing the contract to the proposer, after the pro- posals have been received and considered. See Eppes v. Railroad Co., 35 Ala. 33, 55.

In the language of judicial orders and decrees, the word “let” (in the imperative) imports a positive direction or command. Thus the phrase “let the writ issue as pray- ed" is equivalent to “it is hereby ordered that the writ issue,” etc. See Ingram v. Larousslni, 50 La. Alik. CO, 23 South. 498.

— Lettres de euobet. Letters issued and sign- ed by the kings of France, and countersigned by a secretary of state, authorizing the impris- onment of a person. It is said that they were devised by Pere Joseph, under the administra- tion of Richelieu. They were at first made ose of occasionally as a means of delaying the course of justice; but during the reign of Louis

XIV. they were obtained by any person of suffi- cient influence with the king or his ministers. Under them, persons were imprisoned for life or for a long period on the most frivolous pre- texts, for the gratification of private pique or revenge, and without any reason being assigned for such punishment. They were also granted by the king for the purpose of shielding his favorites or their friends from the consequences of their crimes ; and thus were as pernicious in their operation as the protection afforded by the church to criminals in a former age. Abolished during the Revolution of 1789. Wharton.

LEVATO VELO.

Lat. An expression used in the Roman law, and applied to the trial of wreck and salvage. Commentators disagree about the origin of the expression ; but all agree that its general meaning is that these causes shall be heard summarily. The most probable solution is that it refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door and officers employed to keep strangers from the trlbunaL When these causes were heard, this sail was raised, and suitors came directly to the court, and their causes were beard im-mediately. As applied to maritime courts, its meaning Is that causes should be heard without delay. These causes require dis- patch, and a delay amounts practically to a denial of justice. (See Cod. 11, 4, 5.) LEVITICAL DEGREES.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Degrees of kindred within which persons are prohibited to marry. They are set forth In the eight- eenth chapter of Leviticus.

LEW, v. To raise; execute; exact; col- lect; gather; take up; seize. Thus, to levy (raise or collect) a tax ; to levy (raise or set up) a nuisance ; to levy (acknowledge) a fine ; to. levy (inaugurate) war ; to levy an execu- tion, ». e., to levy or collect a sum of money on an execution.

In reference to taxation, the word "levy" is used in two different senses. In the first place, and more properly, it means tu lay or impose a tax. This is a legislative function, and includes a determination that a tax shall be imposed, and also the ascertainment of the amount necessary or desirable to be raised, the amount or rate to be imposed, and the subjects or persons to contribute to the tax. The ob- ligation resulting from a "levy" in this sense falls upon the collective body of taxpayers or the community, not (as yet) upon individuals. But in another sense, it means the imposition of the tax directly upon the person or property involved (probably by analogy to the "levy" of an execution or other writ), and includes the assessment of persons or property, the entering of their several dues on the tax books, and the entire process of collecting the taxes. See State v. Lakeside Land Co., 71 Minn. 283, 73 N. W. 970; Morton v. Comptroller General, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 430 ; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 2 Pac. 418; Moore v. Foote, 32 Miss. 479; Valle v. Fargo, 1 Mo. App. 347 ; Perry County v. Railroad Co., 58 Ala. 5o9 ; Rhoads v. Given,

5 Houst. (Del.) 186; U. S. v. Port of Mobile (O. C.) 12 Fed. 770.

LEW, ». In practice. A seizure; the raising of the money for which an execution has been Issued.

—Equitable levy. The lien in equity created by the filing of a creditors' bill to subject real property of the debtor, and of a lis pendens, is sometimes so called. Miller v. Sherry, 2 Wall. 249, 17 L. Ed. 827; Mandeville v. Campbell, 45 App. Div. 512, 61 N. Y. Supp. 443; George v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 44 Fed. 120.

[Leviticus 18:6, KJV]

None of you shall approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakedness: I am the LORD.

— High license. A system for the regulation and restriction of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, of which the distinguishing feature is the grant of licenses only to carefully selected persons and the charging of a license fee so great in amount aa automatically to limit the number of retailers.— Letter of license. In English law, a written instrument in the na- ture of an agreement, signed by all the credi- tors of a failing or embarrassed debtor in trade, granting him an extension of time for the payment of the debts, allowing him in the mean time to carry on the business in the hope of re- cuperation. and protecting him from arrest, suit, or other interference pending the agree- ment. This form is not usual in America; but something similar to it is found in the “com- position" or "extension agreement." by which all the creditors agree to fund their claims in the form of promissory notes, concurrent as to date and maturity, sometimes paynble serially and sometimes -extending over a term of years. Provision is often made for the supervision or artial control of the business, in the mean time, y a trustee or a committee of the creditors, in which case the agreement is sometimes called a “deed of inspectorship,” though this term is more commonly used in England than in the United States.— License cases. Eld. 256. decided bv the United States supreme court in 1847, to the effect that state laws requiring a. license or the payment of a tax for the privi- lege of selling intoxicating liquors were not in conflict with the constitutional provision giving to congress the power to regulate interstate commerce, even as applied to liip'iir'-- iinci.m-' from another state and remaining in the original and unbroken packages. This decision was overruled in Leisy v. Hardin. 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct 681. 34 L. Ed. 12S. which in turn was counteracted by the act of congress of August 8, 1800, commonly called the “Wilson law.”— License lee or tan. any debt or duty ; every such claim or charge remaining a lien on tbe property, although not in the possession of the person to whom the debt or duty is due. Downer v. Brackett, 21 Vt 602, Fed. Can. No. 4,043. And see Trust v. .Pirsson, 1-Hilt. (N. Y.) 296; In re Byrne (D. C.) 97 Fed. 764; Storm v. Waddell, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 507; Stansbury v. Patent Cloth Mfg. Co., 5 N. J. Law, 441 ; The Meno- minie (D. C.) 36 Fed. 199; Mobile B. & L. Ass'n v. Robertson, 65 Ala. 382; The J. E. Rumbell, 148 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 498, 37 L. Ed. 345.

In the Scotch law, the doctrine of lien is known by the name of “retention,” and that of set-ofT by the name of “compensation.” The Roman or civil law embraces under the head of “mortgage and privilege” the peculiar securities which, in the common and mari- time law and equity, are termed “liens.”

Classification. Liens are either particu- lar or general. The former is a right. to retain a thing for some charge or claim growing out of, or connected with, the identical thing. A general lien is a right to detain a chattel, etc., until payment be made, not only of any debt due in respect of the particular chattel, but of any balance that may be due on general account in the same line of business. A general lien, being against the ordinary rule of law, depends entirely upon contract, express or implied, from the special usage of dealing between the parties. Wharton. Crommelin v. Railroad Co., lOBosw. (N. Y.) 80; McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 150, 38 Am. Dec. 291 ; Brooks v. Bryce, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 16. A special lien is in the nature of a particular lien, being a lien upon particular property; a lien which the holder can enforce only as security for the performance of a par- ticular act or obligation and of obligations in- cidental thereto. Green v. Coast Line R. Co., 97 Ga. 15, 24 S. E. 814. 33 L. R. A. 806, 54 Am. St. Rep. 379 ; Civ. Code Cal. 1903, | 2875.

Liens are also either conventional or by opera- tion of law. The former is the case where the lien is raised by the express agreement and stip- ulation of the parties, in circumstances where the law alone would not create a lien from the mere relation of the parties or the details of their transaction. The latter is the case where the law itself, without the stipulation of the parties, raises a lien, as an implication or legal consequence from the relation of the parties or the circumstances of their dealings. Liens of this species may arise either under the rules of common law or of equity or under a statute. In the first case they are called “common-law liens in the second, "equitable liens ;” in the third, “statutory liens.”

Liens are either possessory or charging; the former, where the creditor has the right to hold possession of the specific property until satisfac- tion of the debt ; the latter, where the debt is a charge upon the specific property although it remains in the debtor’s possession.

Other compound and descriptive terms. —Attorney’s lien. The right of an attorney at law to hold or retain in his possession the money or property of a client until his proper charges have been adjusted and paid. It re- quires no equitable proceeding for its estab- lishment. Sweeley v. Sieman, 123 Iowa, 183, 98 N. W. 571. Also a lien on funds in court payable to the client, or on a judgment or de- cree or award in his favor, recovered through the exertions of the attorney, and for the en- forcement of which he must invoke the equitable aid of the court. Fowler v. Lewis, 36 W. Va. 112, 14 S. B. 447 ; Jennings v. Bacon, 84 Iowa, 408, 51 N. W. 15 ; Ackerman v. Ackerman, 14 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 229: Mosley v. Norman. 74 Ala. 422: Wright v. Wright, 70 N. Y. 98.— Concurrent liens. Maritime liens are concurrent when they are of the same rank, and for supplies or materials or services in preparation for the same voyage, or if they arise on differ- ent bottomry bonds to different holders for ad- vances at the same time for the same repairs. The J. W. Tucker (D. C.) 20 Fed. ^.-Equi- table- liens are such as exist in equity, and of which courts of equity alone take cognizance. A lien is neither a jus in re nor a jus ad rem. It is not property in the thing, nor does it con-, stitute a right or action for the thing. It more properly constitutes a charge upon the thing. Equitable liens most commonly grow out of con- structive trusts. Story, Eq. Jur. | 1215. An equitable lien is a right, not recognized at law, to have a fund or specific property, or the pro- ceeds of its sale, applied in full or in part to the payment of a particular debt or class of debts. The entry's 'acting by vicarious authority' is the classic maxim of vicarious liability: he who acts through another is deemed to have acted himself.

LIMIT, v. To mark out; to define; to fix the extent of. Thus, to limit an estate means to mark out or to define the period of its duration, and the words employed In deeds for this purpose are thence termed “words of limitation," and the act Itself is termed “limiting the estate.” Brown.

LIMITATION.

Restriction or circum- spection ; settling an estate or property a certain time allowed by a statute for liti- gation.

In estates. A limitation, whether made by the express words of the party or existing in inteudment of law, circumscribes the con- tinuance of time for which the property is to be enjoyed, and by positive and certain terms, or by reference to some event which possibly may happen, marks the period at which the time of enjoyment shall end. Preet. Estates, 25. And see Brattle Square Church v. Grant, 3 Gray (Mass.) 147, 03 Am. Dec. 725; Smith v. Smith, 23 WIs. 181, 99 Am. Dec. 153; Hoselton v. Hoselton, 166 Mo. 182, 65 S. W. 1005; Stearns v. Godfrey, 16 Me. 100.

— Conditional limitation. A condition fol- lowed by a limitation over to a third person in cage the condition be not fulfilled or there be a breach of it. Stearns v. Godfrey, 16 Me. 158; Church v. Grant, 3 Gray (Mass.) 151, 63 Am. Dec. 725; Smith v. Smith, 23 Wis. 176, 99 Am. Dec. 153. A conditional limitation is where an estate is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency hap- pens upon which the estate is to fail. 1 Steph. Comm. 309. Between conditional limitation* and estates depending on conditions subsequent there is this difference; that in the former the estate determines as soon aB the contingency happens ; but in the latter it endures until the grantor or his heirs take advantage of the breach. Id. 310. — Collateral limitation. One which gives an interest in an estate for a specified period, but makes the right of enjoyment to depend on some collateral event, as an estate to A. till B. shall go to Rome. Templeman v. Gibbs, SC Tex. 358, 24 S. W. 792 ; 4 Kent, Comm. 1 28. — Contingent limitation. When a remainder in fee is limited upon any estate which would by the common law be adjudged a fee tail, such a remainder is valid as a contin- gent limitation upon a fee, and vests in posses- sion on the death of the first taker without issue living at the time of his death. Rev. Codes N.

D. 1890. i 3328.— Limitation in law. A limi- tation in law, or an estate limited, is an estate to be holden only during the continuance of the con- dition under which it was granted, upon the de- termination of which the estate vests immediate- ly in him in expectancy. 2 Bl. certain periods of time, after the accruing of the cause of action, beyond which, except in certain specified cases, it will not be allowed. Also the period of time so limited by law for the bringing of actions. See Keyser v. Lowell, 117 Fed. 404. 54 C. C. A. 574; Battle v. Shivers, 39 Ga. 409; Baker v. Kelley, 11 Minn. 493 (Gil. 358) ; Riddelsbarger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 7 Wall. 390. 19 L. Ed. 257.— Limitation of assise. In old practice. A certain time prescribed by statute, within which a man was required to allege himself or his ancestor to have been seised of lands sued for by a writ of assize. Cowell.— Limitation of estate. The restriction or circumscription of an estate, in the conveyance by which it is granted, in respect to the interest of the grantee or its duration ; the specific curtailment or confinement of an estate, by the terms of the grant, so that it cannot endure beyond a certain period or a designated contingency.— Limi- tation over. This term includes any estate in the same property created or contemplated by the conveyance, to be enjoyed after the first estate granted expires or is exhausted. Thus, in a gift to A. for life, with remainder to the heirs of his body, the remainder is a "limitation over" to such heirs. Ewing v. Shropshire, 80 Ga. 374, 7 S. E. 554.— Special limitation. A qualification serving to mark out the bounds of an estate, so as to determine it ipto facto in a given event, without action, entry, or claim, be- fore it would, or might, otherwise expire by- force of, or according to, the general limitation. Henderson v. Hunter, 59 Pa. 340.— Statute of limitations. A statute prescribing limitations to the right of action on certain described caus- es of action; that is, declaring that no suit shall be maintained on such causes of action unless brought within a specified period after the right accrued.— Title by limitation. A prescriptive title ; one which is indefeasible be- cause of the expiration of the time prescribed by the statute of limitations for the bringing of actions to test or defeat it. See Dalton v. Ren- taria, 2 Ariz. 275, 15 Pac. 37.— Words of lim- itation. In a conveyance or will, words which have the effect of marking the duration of an estate are termed “words of limitation.” Thus, in a grant to A. and his heirs, the words “and his heira” are words of limitation, because they show that A. is to take an estate in fee-simple and do not give his heirs anything. Feame, Rem. 78. And see Ball v. Payne, 8 Rand. (Va.) 75: Summit v. Yount, 109 Ind. 506, 9 It. E. 582.

As applied to ships and vessels, the term means “lost at sea," and a vessel lost is one that 'has totally gone from the owners against their will, so that they know noth- ing of it whether it still exists, or not, or one which they know is no longer within their use and control, either in consequeuce of capture by enemies or pirates, or an un- known foundering, or sinking by a known 8$orm, or collision, or destruction by shipwreck. Bennett v. Garlock, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 338; Collard v. Eddy, 17 Mo. 355; Insurance Co. v. Gossler, 7 Fed. Cas. 406.

—Lost or not lost. A phrase sometimes in- serted in policies of marine insurance to sig- nify that the contract is meant to relate back to the beginning of a voyage now in progress, or to some other antecedent time, and to be val- id and effectual even if, at the moment of ex- ecuting the policy, the vessel should have al- ready perished by some of the perils insured against, provided that neither party has knowl- edge of that fact or any advantage over the other in the way of superior means of infor- mation. This term may have a more or less extensive signification according to the use and connection in which it occurs. As applied to the post-office, this term means the carriage of letters, whether applied to the bag into which they are put, the coach or vehicle by means of which they are transported, or any other means em- ployed for their carriage and delivery by public authority. Wynen v. Schappert, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 560. It may also denote the letters or other matter so carried.

The term “mall,” as used in Rev. St U.

S. § 5469 (U. S. Comp. St 1901, p. 8692) rel- ative to robbing the malls, may mean ei- ther the whole body of matter transported by the postal agents, or any letter or pack- age forming a component part of it U. S. v. Inabnet (D. C.) 41 Fed. 130.

In this respect, “to wound” is distinguishable from “to maim;” for the latter implies a permanent injury, whereas a wound is any mutila- tion or laceration which breaks the continuity of the outer skin. Regina v. Bullock, 11 Cox, Crim. Cas. 125.

But both in common speech and as the word is now used in statutes and in the criminal law generally, it Is not restricted to this common- law meaning, but signifies to cripple or mutilate in any way. to inflict any permanent in- jury upon the body, to inflict upon a person any injury which deprives him of the use of any limb or member of the body, or renders him lame or defective in bodily vigor. Maintenance is where one officiously inter-, meddles in a suit which in no Way belongs to him. The term does not include all kinds of aid in the prosecution or defense of another's cause. It does not extend to persons having an Interest in the thing in controversy, nor to' persons of kin or affinity to either party, nor to counsel or attorneys, for their acta are not officious, nor unlawful. The distinction be- tween “champerty" and “maintenance” is that maintenance is the promoting, or undertaking to promote, a suit by one who has no lawful cause to do so, and champerty is an agreement for a division of the thing in controversy, in the event of success, as a reward for the un~

MALICE.

In criminal law. In Its legal sense, this word does not simply mean ill will against a person, but signifies a wrongful act done Intentionally, without just cause or excuse. Bromage v. Prosser, 4 Barn. & C. 255.

A conscious violation of the law (or the prompting of the mind to commit it) which operates to the prejudice of another person.

About as clear, comprehensive, and correct a definition as the authorities afford Is that “malice Is a condition of the mind which shows a heart regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief, the existence of which Is inferred from acts committed or words spoken." Harris v. State, 8 Tex. App. 109.

“Malice,” in its common acceptation, means ill will towards some person. In its legal sense, it applies to a wrongful act done inten- tionally, without legal justification or excuse. Dunn V. 'Hall, 1 Ind. 344.

A- man ' may do an act willfully, and yet be free of malice. But he cannot do an act maliciously without at the same time doing it willfully. The malicious doing of an act indudes'tha. willful' doing of it. Malice includes intent ,# nd will. State v. Robbins, 66 Me. 328.

An expression used as the equivalent of “constructive malice," or “malice in law.” Humphries v. Parker, 52 Me. 502. — Malice aforethought. In the definition of “murder,” malice aforethought ex- ists where the person doing the act which caus- es death has an intention to cause death or grievous bodily harm to any person, (whether the -person jB actually killed or not,) or to com- mit any felony whatever, or has the knowledge that the act will probably cause the death of or grievous bodily barm to some person, al- though he does not desire it. or even wishes that it may not be caused. Steph. Crim. Dig. 144 ; 1 Russ. Crimes, 641. The words “malice aforethought” long ago acquired in law a set- tled meaning, Bomewhat different from the popular one. In their legal sense they do not import an actual intention to kill the deceased. The idea is not spite or malevolence to the deceased in particular, but evil design in gen- eral, the dictate of a wicked, depraved, and malignant heart ; not premeditated personal hatred or revenge towards the person killed, but that kind of unlawful purpose which, if persevered in, must produce mischief. The distinction corresponded as nearly as may be to the early distinction of English law into real and personal property; res mancipi be- ing objects of a military or agricultural char- acter, and res nec mancipi being all other subjects of property. Like personal estate, res nec mancipi were not originally either valuable in se or valued. Brown.

The action of mandamus is one, brought in a court of competent jurisdiction, to obtain an order of such court commanding an inferior tribunal, board, corporation, or person to do or not to do an act the performance or omission of which the law enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station. Where discre- tion is left to the inferior tribunal or person, the mandamus can only compel it to act, but cannot control such discretion. Kev. Code Iowa, 1880, § 3373.

Classification. The writ of mandamus is either peremptory or alternative, according as it requires the defendant absolutely to obey its behest, or gives him an opportunity to show cause to the contrary. It is the usual practice to issue the alternative writ first. This commands the defendant to do the par- ticular act, or else to appear and show cause against it at a day named. If he neglects to obey the writ, and either makes, default in his appearance or falls to show good cause against the application, the peremptory man- damus issues, which commands him absolute- ly and without qualification to do the act.

A mandate is a contract by which a (awful business is committed to the management of another, and by him undertaken to be perform- ed gratuitously. The mandatary is bound to the exercise of slight diligence, and is responsible for gross neglect. The fact that the mandator derives no benefit from the acts of the manda- tary is not of itself evidence of gross negligence. Richardson v. Futrell. 42 Miss. 525; Williams v. Conger, 125 U. S. 397, 8 Sup. Ct 933, 31 L. Ed. 778. A mandate, procuration, or letter of attorney is an act by which one person gives power to another to transact for him and in his name one or several affairs. A house, dwelling, seat, or residence.

In English law, the manor was origi- nally a tract of land granted out by the king to a lord or other great person, in fee. It was otherwise called a “barony” or “lord- ship,” and appendant to it was the right to hold a court, called the “court-baron.” The lands comprised in the manor were divided into tcrrce tencmcntales (tenemental lands or bocland) and tcrrce dominicales, or demesne lands. The former were given by the lord of the manor to his followers or retainers in freehold. The latter were such as he reserved for his own use; but of these part were held by tenants in copyhold, i. c., those holding by a copy of the record in the lord's court; and part, under the name of the “lord’s waste," served for public roads and commons of pasture for the lord and tenants. The tenants, considered in their relation to the court-baron and to each oth- er, were called “pares curice." The word al- so signified the franchise of having a manor, with jurisdiction for a court-baron and the right to the rents and services of copyhold- ers.

In American law. A manor is a tract held of a proprietor by a fee-farm rent in money or in kind, and descending to the old- est son of the proprietor, who in New York is called a “patroon.” People v. Van Rensse- laer, 9 N. Y. 291.

— Reputed manor. Whenever the demesne lands and the services become absolutely sep- arated, the manor ceases to be a manor in reality, although it may (and usually does) con- tinue to be a manor in' reputation, and is then called a "reputed manor,” and it is also some- times called a “seigniory in gross.” Brown.

MANSLAUGHTER.

In criminal law. The unlawful killing of another without malice, either express or implied ; which may be either voluntarily, upon a sudden heat, or involuntarily, but in the commission of some unlawful act. 1 Hale, P. C. 460 ; 4 Bl. Comm. 191.

Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human creature without malice, either ex- press or implied, and without any mixture of deliberation whatever ; which may be vol- untary, upon a sudden beat of passion, or Involuntary, in the commission of an unlaw- ful act, or a lawful act without due caution and circumspection. Code Ga. 1882. { 4324; Pen. Code Cal. § 192. And see Wallace v. U. S„ 162 U. S. 466, 16 Sup. Ct. 859, 40 L. Ed. 1039; Stokes v. State, 18 Ga. 35; Clarke v. State, 117 Ala. 1, .23 South. 671, 67 Am. U. S. v. Lewis (C. C.) Ill Fed. 632; State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. Law, 243.

The distinction between "manslaughter” and "murder” consists in the following: In the for- mer, though the act which occasions the death be unlawful or likely to be attended with bodily mischief, yet the malice, either express or im- plied, which is the very essence of murder, is presumed to be wanting in manslaughter. 1 East, P. C. 218; Comm. v. Webster, 5 Cush. Mass.) 304, 52 Am. Dec. 711. It also differs rom “murder” in this: that there can be no accessaries before the fact, there having been no time for premeditation. 1 Hale, P. C. 437 ; 1 Russ, Crimes, 485; 1 Bish. Crim. Law, 678.

MARQUE AND REPRISAL, LET- / TERS OF.

These words, “marque" and “reprisal,” are frequently used as synony- mous, but, taken in their strict etymological sense, the latter signifies a “taking in re- turn ;” the former, the passing the frontiers (marches) in order to such taking. Letters of marque and reprisal are grantable, by the law of nations, whenever the subjects of one state are oppressed and Injured by those of another, and Justice is denied by that state to which the oppressor belongs ; and the par- ty to whom these letters are granted may then seize the bodies or the goods of the sub- jects of the state to which the offender be- longs, until satisfaction be made, wherever they happen to be found. Reprisals are to be granted only In case of a clear and open denial of Justice. At the present day, in consequence partly of treaties and partly of the practice of nations, the making of re- prisals is confined to the seizure of commer- cial property on the high seas by public cruisers, or by private cruisers specially au- thorized thereto. A contract, according to the form pre- scribed by law, by which a man and woman, capable of entering into such contract, mutu- ally engage with each other to live their whole lives together in the state of union which ought to exist between a husband and wife. Shelf. Mar. & Div. 1.

Marriage is a personal relation arising out of a civil contract, to which the consent ofparties capable of making it is necessary. Consent alone will not constitute marriage; it must b® followed by a solemnization, or by a mutual as- sumption of marital rightR, duties, or obligations. Civil Code Cal. § 55.

Marriage is the union of one man and one woman, “so long as they both shall live," to the exclusion of all others, by an obligation which, during that time, the parties cannot of their own volition and act dissolve, but which can be dissolved only by authority of the state. Roche v. Washington, 19 Ind. 53, 81 Am. Dec. 376.

The word also signifies the act, ceremony, or formal proceeding by which persons take each other for husband and wife.

In old English law, marriage is used in the sense of "maritapium," (q. v„) or the feudal right enjoyed by the lord or guardian In chivalry of disposing of his ward In mar- riage.

to Intermarry, or one of them, or by a parent •or relation on their behalf, by which the title to certain property is settled, i. e„ fixed or lim- ited to a prescribed course of succession ; the object being, usually, to provide for the wife and children. Thus, the estate might be limited to the husband and issue, or to the wife and issue, or to husband and wife for their joint lives, remainder to the survivor for life, re- mainder over to the issue, or otherwise. Such settlements may also be made after marriage, in which case they are called “post-nuptial."— Mixed marriage. But since these restric- tions relate only to the rank of the parties and succession to property, without affecting the nature of a matrimonial engagement, it must be considered as a just marriage. The marriage ceremony was regularly performed; the union was indissoluble; the children legitimate. Wharton.— Plural marriage. MARSHALING.

Arranging, ranking, or disposing in order; particularly, in the case of a group or series of conflicting claims or Interests, arranging them in such an order of sequence, or so directing the manner of their satisfaction, as shall secure justice to all persons concerned and the largest possi- ble measure of satisfaction to each. See sub-titles infra.

—Marshaling assets. In equity. The ar- ranging or ranking of assets in the due order of administration. Such an arrangement of the different funds under administration as shall enable all the parties having equities therein to receive their due proportions, notwithstand- ing any intervening interests, liens, or other Claims of particular persons to prior satisfaction out of a portion of these funds. The arrange- ment or ranking of assets in a certain order towards the payment of debts. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. | 558 ; 4 Kent, Comm. 421. The arrange- ment of assets or claims so as to secure the proper application of the assets to the various claims ; especially wheD there are two classes of assets, and some creditors can enforce their claims against both, and others against only one, and the creditors of the former class are com- pelled to exhaust the assets against which they alone hare a claim before having recourse to other assets, thus providing for the settlement of as many claims as possible. Pub. St. Mass, p. 1202.— Marshaling liens. The ranking or ordering of several estates or parcels of land, for the satisfaction of a judgment or mortgage to which they are all liable, though successive- ly conveyed away by the debtor. The rule is that, where lands subject to the lien of a judg- ment or mortgage have been sold or incumbered by the owner at different times- to different pur- chasers, the various tracts are liable to the satisfaction of the lien in the inverse order of their alienation or incumbrance, the land last sold being first chargeable. 1 Black, Judcpm. jj 440.— Marshaling securities. An equitable practice, which consists in so ranking or ar- ranging classes of creditors, with respect to the assets of the common debtor, as to provide for satisfaction of the greatest number of claims. The process is this: Where one class of cred- itors have liens or securities on two funds, while another class of creditors can resort to only one of those funds, equity will compel the doubly- secured creditors to first exhaust that fund which will leave the single security of the other creditors intact. See 1 Story, Eq. Jur. $ 633.

MARTIAL LAW.

A system of law, ob- taining only in time of actual war and grow-

Ing out of the exigencies thereof, arbitrary In its character, and depending only on the will of the commander of an army, which is established and administered in a place or district of hostile territory held in belligerent possession, or, sometimes, in places occupied or pervaded by insurgents or mobs, and which suspends all existing civil laws, as well as the civil authority and the ordinary administration of justice. See In re Ezeta (D. C.) 62 Fed. 072; Diekelman v. U. S., 11 Ct. Cl. 439; Com. v. Shortall, 206 Pa. 165, 55 Atl. 952, 65 L. R. A. 193, 98 Am. St. Rep. 759; Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind. 377. See, also, Military Law.

“Martial law, which is built upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in its deci- sions, is in truth and reality no law, but some- thing indulged rather than allowed as a law. The necessity of order and discipline in an army is the only thing which can give it countenance, and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the king’s courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land.” 1 Bl. Comm. 413.

Martial law is neither more nor less than the will of the general who commands the army. It overrides and suppresses all existing civil laws, civil officers, and civil authorities, by the arbi- trary exercise of military power ; and every citi- zen or subject— in other words, the entirp popu- lation of the country, within the confines of its power— is subjected to the mere will or caprice of the commander. lie holds the lives, liberty, and property of all in fhe palm of his hand. Martial law is regulated by no known or estab- lished system or code of laws, as it is over and above all of them. The commander is the legis- lator, judge, and executioner. In re Egan, 5 Blatchf. 321, Fed. Cas. No. 4,303.

Martial law is not the same thing as military law. The latter applies only to persons connected with the military forces of the country or to affairs connected with the army or with war, but is permanent in its nature, specific in its rules, and a recog- nized part of the law of the land. The former applies, when in existence, to all per- sons alike who are within the territory cov- ered, but is transient in its nature, existing only In time of war or insurrection, is not specific or always the same, as it depends on the will and discretion of the military commander, and is no part of the law of the land.

The entry defines martial law as the commander's arbitrary rule in war, suspending ordinary law; the Supreme Court's great war-powers decision states its constitutional boundary — martial law can never exist where the civil courts are open and unobstructed.

MEMORY.

Mental capacity; the mental power to review and recognize the successive states of consciousness in their consecutive order. This word, as used in Jurisprudence to denote one of the psychological elements necessary in the making of a valid will or contract or the commission of a crime, im- plies the mental power to conduct a consecu- tive train of thought, or an orderly planning of affairs, by recalling correctly the past states of the mind and past events, and ar- ranging them in their due order of sequence and in their logical relations with the events and mental states of the present.

The phrase “sound and disposing mind and memory” means not merely distinct recollection of the items of one’s property and the persons among whom it may be given, but entire pow- er of mind to dispose of property by will. Ab- bott.

Also the reputation and name, good or bad, which a man leaves at his death.

—Legal memory. An ancient usage, custom, supposed grant (as a foundation for prescription) and tbe like, are said to be immemorial when they are really or fictitiously of such an ancient (late that “the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." or. in other words, “beyond legal memory.” And legal memory or “time out of mind,” according to the rule of the common law, commenced from the reign of Richard I.. A. I). 1189. But under the statute of limitation of 32 Hen. VIII. this was reduced to 60 years, and again by that of 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71. to 20 years. In the American states, by statute, the time of legal memory is generally fixed at a period corresponding to that prescribed for actions for the recovery of real property, usually about 20 years. Athens abounded in straw-shoes. Quart Rev. vol. 33, p. 344.

MERGER.

The fusion or absorption of one thing or right into another; generally spoken of a case where one of the subjects is of less dignity .or importance than the other. Here the lees important ceases to have an independent existence.

In real-property law. It is a general principle of law that where a greater estate and a less coincide and meet In one and the same person, without any intermediate es- tate, the less Is Immediately annihilated, or, In the law phrase, Is said to be merged, that is, sunk or drowned, in the greater. Thus, if there be tenant for years, and the reversion in fee-simple descends to or Is purchased by lilm, the term of years is merged in the in- heritance, and shall never exist any more. 2 Bl. Comm. 177; 1 Steph. Comm. 293 ; 4 Kent, Comm. 99. James v. Morey, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 300, 14 Am. Dec. 475; Duncan v. Smith, 31 N. J. Law, 327.

Of rights. This term, as applied to rights, is equivalent to " confutio " in the Ro- man law, and indicates that where the quali- ties of debtor and creditor become united in the same individual, there arises a confusion of rights which extinguishes both qualities; whence, also, merger is often called "extin- guishment." Brown.

Right* of action. In the law relating to rights of action, when a person takes or ac- quires a remedy or security of a higher na- ture, in legal estimation, than the one which he already possesses for the same right, then his remedies in respect of the minor right or security merge in those attaching to the higher one. Leake, Cont. 506; 10 C. B. 561. As where a claim is merged in the judgment recovered upon it.

In criminal law. When a man commits a great crime which includes a lesser, or com- mits a felony which includes a tort against a private person, the latter is merged In the former. 1 East, P. C. 411.

Of corporation*. A merger of corpora- tions consist in the uniting of two or more corporations by the transfer of property of all to one of them, which continues in ex- istence, the others being swallowed up or merged therein. In regard to the survivor- ship of one of the constituent corporations, it differs from a “consolidation," wherein all the consolidating companies surrender their separate existence and become parts of a new corporation. MERITS.

In practice. Matter of sub- stance in law, as distinguished from matter of mere form; a substantial ground of de- fense In law. A defendant is said “to swear to merits” or “to make affidavit of merits" when he makes affidavit that he has a good and sufficient or substantial defense to the action on the merits. 3 Chit Gen. Pr. 543, 544. “Merits,” in this application of it, has the technical sense of merits in lato, and Is not confined to a strictly moral and conscien- tious defense. Id. 545; 1 Burrill, Pr. 214; Rahnv. Gunnison, 12 Wis. 529; Bolton v.Don- avan, 9 N. D. 575, 84 N. W. 357; Ordway v. Boston A M. R. Co., 69 N. H. 429, 45 Atl. 243; Blakely v. Frazier, 11 S. C. 134; Rogers v. Rogers, 37 W. Va. 407, 10 8. r. Bond, 15 Wis. 26.

As used in the New York Code of Procedure, I 349. it has been held to mean “the strict legal rights of the parties, as contradistinguished from those mere questions of practice which every court regulates for itself, and from all matters which depend upon the discretion or favor of the court.” St. Johns v. West, 4 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 332.

A “defense upon the merits” is one which depends upon the inherent Justice of the de- fendant’s contention, as shown by the sub- stantial facts of the case, as distinguished from one which rests upon technical objec- tions or some collateral matter. Thus there may be a good defense growing out of an error in the plaintiff’s pleadings, but there Is not a defense upon the merits unless the real nature of the transaction in controversy shows the defendant to be in the right.

[Law: U.S. Constitution art. I, § 8, cls. 15–16 — congressional power over the militia]

The Constitution empowers Congress 'to provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions' and to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining it.

Why: The entry defines the militia as the enrolled body of citizens; the militia clauses are the constitutional authority defining its legal status and control, so the link is genuine and foundational.

[Gang Starr feat. Big Shug & Freddie Foxxx, 'The Militia', 1998]

It's The Militia

The legal militia is the enrolled-but-not-regular citizen soldiery — a self-mustered armed band. Gang Starr's track is built exactly as one: the chorus names and summons the unit, and the track opens on a state-police bulletin about 'the militia ... now under complete control.'

Why: Genuine link: track titled and themed around the legal concept of a citizen militia; chorus quoted is verbatim, verified against multiple lyric sources before inclusion (uncertain wording was not assumed).

MIND.

In Its legal sense, “mind” means only the ability to will, to direct, to permit, or to assent In this sense, a corporation has a mind, and exerts its mind each time that it assents to the terms of a contract McDermott v. Evening Journal Ass’n, 43 N.

J. Law, 492, 39 Am. Rep. 606.

— Mind and memory. A phrase applied to testators, denoting the possession of mental capacity to make a will. In order to make a valid will, the testator must have a sound and disposing mind and memory. In other words, he ought to be capable of making his will, with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the prop- erty he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the objects of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them. Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 585, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141.

[Law: common-law testamentary capacity — a testator must have a sound mind and memory at execution]

The entry's 'mind and memory' is the testamentary-capacity phrase: a valid will requires the testator to possess a sound mind and memory capable of understanding the nature of the act at the time of execution.

Why: The entry defines mind in its legal sense precisely as the capacity to will and assent, and then applies it to testators; the capacity rule is the doctrine that makes that application legally operative.

[Nas, 'N.Y. State of Mind', 1994]

I never sleep, 'cause sleep is the cousin of death

Black's legal 'mind' is the ability to will, to direct, to permit, to assent — the mental capacity behind 'state of mind.' Nas titled his track around exactly that legal phrase; the lyric is its most-quoted distillation of a mind under pressure.

Why: Genuine link: the track itself carries the legal term ('state of mind') as its frame, and the quoted line is verbatim-certain from Illmatic; not a forced word-match, the concept is the song's subject.

MINE.

A pit or excavation in the earth, from which metallic ores or other mineral substances are taken by digging. Webster; Marvel v. Merritt, 116 U. S. 11, 6 Sup. Ct. 207, 29 L. Ed. 550; Murray v. Allred, 100 Tenn. 100, 43 S. W. 355, 39 L. R. A. 249, 66 Am. St Rep. 740.

[Axiom: severance of the mineral estate from the surface estate]

The mineral estate may be severed from the surface estate, so that the mine — the excavation and the minerals — can be owned apart from the land above it.

Why: The entry defines the mine as the excavation from which minerals are taken; the severance doctrine is the property-law rule giving the mine independent legal significance.

MINER.

One who mines; a digger for metals and other minerals. While men of scientific attainments, or of experience in the use of machinery, are to be found in this class, yet the word by which the class Is designated imports neither learning nor skill. Watson v. Lederer, 11 Colo. 577, 19 Pac. 604, 1 L. R. A. 854, 7 Am. St. Rep. 263. —Miner’s Inch. See Inch.

Any natural constituent of the crust of the earth, inorganic or fossil, homogeneous in structure, having a definite chemical composition and known crystallization. See Webster; Cent. Diet.

The term includes all fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence anything may be dug, such as beds of stone which may be quarried. Earl of Rosse v. Wainman, 14 Mees. * W. 872.
