DOCTRINE — BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY, SECOND EDITION

BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY

Second Edition — West Publishing Co., 1910

VOLUME I — The Complete Text with the Four Wells

Under the Scales of Ma'at — Law, Scripture, Hip-hop, Humanity

Authorship attributed exclusively to Johnathan 'Qasparr' Monroe (Greek, -ARR, All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice)

this XVIII day of October, Dies Solis, Sol in Libra, Anno V:xii e.n. (2026 e.v.)

Classification: Enterprise • Educational • Research & Development

Method of Science, Aim of Religion

PARSED AND CLEANED — SCAN-VERIFICATION PENDING. NOT AUDITED.

Volume I carries the complete parsed text of the 1910 second edition, layered with the four well-phase annotation sets. It has not yet passed the TRVVTH scan-verification audit; that audit is the 2027 work. Nothing in these pages claims 'audited' or 'restored.' Every annotation is a finding, never doctrine, until his red pen rules.

Flagpole of Claim and Coinage: Johnathan 'Qasparr' Monroe, ARR, All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice. Right of claim hereby reserved and coined under the authority of the Living Man.

I. STATEMENT OF THE WORK

This is Volume I of the two-volume hardcover set: the full dictionary text of Black's Law Dictionary, Second Edition (1910), with the Four Wells layered entry by entry — Law, Scripture, Hip-hop, and Humanity with Fiction & film. Volume II, under the Open Word, carries the Teacher's Edition with the full audits.

The honest label on the title page is the load-bearing beam of this volume. A text that claimed audit it had not done would be false in one thing, and therefore suspect in all.

1. The Gospel According to Matthew 5:37 (KJV): 'let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay.'

2. Legal maxim: falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus — false in one thing, false in all.

II. SOURCE, METHOD, AND MERGE

Source: the Internet Archive OCR text of the 1910 second edition, title page verified as Second Edition, West Publishing Co., 1910. The parser recovered 13,145 entries.

Base method: four deterministic cleanup rules — tabs to spaces, multiple spaces collapsed (paragraph breaks preserved), OCR line-break hyphenation rejoined, trailing whitespace stripped. Glyph misreads are deliberately NOT corrected here; they wait for scan evidence in the 2027 audit.

Merge method: annotation keys are the workers' chunk-exact OCR headwords, joined to entries on exact match. Where a key did not match — OCR-normalized spellings, or definitions fused by the parser into neighboring entries' bodies — the coordinators' placement notes were applied, each verified against the actual entry bodies, and every move logged in the merge log. One annotation (LAST, Law well) was dropped: the 'last clear chance' text it claimed to illuminate appears nowhere in the 13,145 entries. Three fabricated headwords from one Phase 4 worker were struck at phase merge and are excluded here.

Footnotes are reference material, not legal advice; no legal effect is claimed by any of them.

1. The First Epistle to the Thessalonians 5:21 (KJV): 'Prove all things; hold fast that which is good.'

2. Nullius in verba — 'take nobody's word for it.'

III. THE FOUR WELL-PHASES

Four phases, each a full pass of all 13,145 entries through one well, each with its own audit, each worked by a fresh team of 24 agents whose ultra-verbose thought logs are preserved for future analysis. Yield: Law — 2096 footnotes; Scripture — 1621 footnotes (538 in the deity's own voice, red-lettered); Hip-hop — 109 footnotes; Humanity with Fiction & film — 676 footnotes. 3500 entries carry at least one footnote; the rest stand bare — the emptiness is a finding, not a failure.

Discipline: genuine links only, verbatim or not at all, never force-fit, never fabricated. Where a well had nothing genuine for an entry, nothing was drawn.

Known pre-print checks still open: a mechanical KJV text-diff of the Scripture quotations (recommended by the Phase 2 workers; most quotes are verbatim-certain, not web-verified); and the full TRVVTH scan-verification, which is the 2027 work.

1. Ecclesiastes 3:1 (KJV): 'To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven.'

2. Festina lente — 'make haste slowly.'

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

IV. THE RED-LETTER RULE

In this volume, the verbatim speech of a deity is set in blood red, so the reader knows a deity is speaking — the classic red-letter edition convention. This covers Jesus' verbatim words, first-person divine speech ('Thus saith the LORD'), and any deity's verbatim words in any scripture. Narrative about a deity stays in the body ink.

538 Scripture footnotes carry the red letter in this volume.

1. The Gospel According to John 1:1 (KJV): 'In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.'

V. TABLE OF AUTHORITIES (CONDENSED)

— Black's Law Dictionary, Second Edition. St. Paul, Minn.: West Publishing Co., 1910. (The text of this volume; public domain.)

— Internet Archive OCR scan text; title page tool-verified as Second Edition, 1910.

— The Holy Bible, King James Version (public domain); Qur'an via Pickthall and Yusuf Ali translations — footnote quotations only, verbatim-certain.

— U.S. Code, Uniform Commercial Code, and reported case law — footnote references only, no legal effect claimed.

— Legal maxims: falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus; nullius in verba; festina lente.

VI. CONTENT TEST — INPUTS, PROCESSES, OUTPUTS, TOLERANCES

Inputs: the verified 1910 OCR source; the 13,145-entry parse; the four audited well-phase annotation sets; the coordinators' placement notes; the system-wide directive format; the Living Man's order and his red pen, which rules all.

Processes: join on exact keys, verified re-homing, schema normalization with paraphrase marking preserved, typeset in directive format with red-letter rendering, verify by count and extraction. No semantic alteration of the base text; no silent correction.

Outputs: this volume — the complete layered text, parsed and cleaned, scan-verification pending, never claiming audit; every annotation a finding awaiting his pen.

Tolerances: this volume fails the Method of Science the moment it claims an audit it has not done, or prints a footnote for a text that is not there; it fails the Aim of Religion if the wells were padded rather than honest. Both failures are recorded here in advance, without prejudice, so they cannot happen unnoticed.

THE ENTRIES

All 13,145 entries, A to Z, with the Four Wells layered beneath. Headword in bold; body below; well notes after the body, grouped by well. Blood-red text is the voice of a deity.

Lat The letter marked on the bal- lots by which, among the Homans, the people voted against a proposed law. It was the initial letter of the word “ antiqm ,” I am for the old law. Also the letter Inscribed on the ballots by which jurors voted to acquit an accused party. It was the initial letter of “absolvo,” I acquit. Tayl. Civil Law, 191, 192.

“A.” The English indefinite article. This particle is not necessarily a singular term; it is often used in the sense of "any,” and Is then applied to more than one individual object National Union Bank v. Copeland, 141 Mass. 267, 4 N. [Law] — Law

[National Union Bank v. Copeland, 141 Mass. 267]

In statutes and legal instruments the indefinite article is often construed as "any," applying to more than one person or object rather than strictly to one.

Why: The entry itself grounds this construction rule in four reported cases; the genuine law-well link is the canon that 'a' is read as 'any' in legal instruments, cited here exactly as Black's reports it.

A. D.

Lat Contraction for Anno Domini, <in the year of our Lord.)

[Law] — Law

[Ollive v. Booker, 1 Exch. 423]

A description of a ship as "A 1" in marine insurance amounts to a warranty of her condition.

Why: The entry states the rule as laid down in the cited Exchequer precedent; warranty in marine insurance is the genuine doctrine illuminated, cited exactly as Black's reports it.

A AVER ET TENER.

L. Fr. (L. Lat. habendum et tenendum.) To have and to hold. Co. Litt. fg 523, 524. A aver et tener a Iny et a *es heircs, a touts jours, — to have and to hold to him and his heirs forever. Id.

A CONSH.HS. (Lat. Consilium, advice.) Of counsel; a counsellor. The term is used in the civil law by some writers Instead of a responsis. Spelman, " Apocrisarius .”

[Law] — Law

[Law: habendum clause — "to have and to hold" defines the estate granted; Co. Litt. ff. 523, 524, as cited in the entry]

The habendum et tenendum — "to have and to hold" — is the clause of a deed that defines the quantum of the estate granted.

Why: Black's anchors the phrase in Coke on Littleton; the habendum's office of measuring the estate granted is the genuine conveyancing principle behind the definition.

A CUE IDLE TTE.

A digniori fieri debet denominatio et reeolntio. The title and exposition of a thing ought to be derived from, or given, or made with reference to, the more worthy degree, quality, or species of it. Wing. Mux. 265, max. 75.

A FORFAIT ET SANS GARANTXE.

In French law. A formula used in indors- ing commercial paper, and equivalent to "without recourse.”

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC Article 3 — an indorsement "without recourse" disclaims the indorser's liability]

The formula is the French equivalent of an indorsement "without recourse," which disclaims the indorser's contract liability on commercial paper.

Why: The entry itself equates the French formula to "without recourse"; qualified indorsement is the genuine negotiable-instruments doctrine it points to.

A FORTIORI.

By a stronger reason. A term used in logic to denote an argument to the effect that because one ascertained fact exists, therefore another, which is in- cluded in it. or analogous to it, and which is less improbable, unusual, or surprising, must also exiBt

A GRATIA.

From grace or favor ; as a matter of Indulgence, not of right

---

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 2:8, KJV]

For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God:

Why: The entry defines 'a gratia' as 'from grace or favor; as a matter of indulgence, not of right' — the verse draws the same line: grace received, not a thing of right or of works.

A LATERE.

Lat From the side. In connection with the succession to property, the term means "collateral.” Bract fol. 20 6. Also, sometimes, ‘‘without right” Id. fol. 420. A MENS A ET THORO.

From bed and board. Descriptive of a limited divorce or separation by judicial sentence.

[Law] — Law

[Law: divorce a mensa et thoro — limited divorce; the bond of matrimony remains]

Divorce a mensa et thoro is a judicial separation from bed and board that leaves the marriage bond unsevered, as distinguished from divorce a vinculo matrimonii.

Why: The two degrees of divorce are a genuine common-law doctrine; the entry defines this degree precisely by contrast with dissolution of the bond.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 7:10-11, KJV]

And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart from her husband: But and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife.

Why: The entry is limited divorce — separation 'from bed and board' without dissolving the bond. The verse describes exactly that pattern: the wife departs yet remains unmarried or is reconciled — separation, not a fresh b... A PRENDRE.

L. Fr. To take. Bref d prendre la terre, a writ to take the land. Fet Ass. f 51. A right to take something out of the soil of another is a profit d pren- dre, or a right coupled with a profit. 1 Crabb, Beal Prop. p. 125, f 115. Distin- guished from an easement. 5 Adol. & E. 758. Sometimes written as one word, apprendre, apprender.

[Law] — Law

[Law: profit à prendre, distinct from easement; 5 Adol. & E. 758, as cited in the entry]

A profit à prendre — a right to take something from another's soil — is an incorporeal hereditament, distinguished from a mere easement.

Why: The entry states the profit/easement distinction and cites authority for it; that divide is the genuine property doctrine the entry illuminates.

A PRIORI.

A term used in logic to de- note an argument founded on analogy, or ab- stract considerations, or one which, positing a general principle or admitted truth as a cause, proceeds to deduce from it the effects which must necessarily follow.

A QUO.

A term used, with the correla- tive ad guem, (to which,) in expressing the computation of time, and also of distance in space. Thus, dies a quo, the day from which, and dies ad quern, the day to which, a period of time is computed. So, terminus d quo, the point or limit from which, and terminus ad quern, the point or limit to which, a dis- tance or passage in space is reckoned.

A GUO; A QUA. From which. The judge or court from which a cause has been brought by error or appeal, or has otherwise been removed, is termed the judge or court a quo; a qua. Abbott

[Law] — Law

[Law: the court a quo — the court below in appellate procedure]

In appellate procedure the judge or court from which a cause is brought by error or appeal is termed the judge or court a quo.

Why: Genuine procedural term of art; the entry defines it exactly in this appellate sense, so the link is the term's live use, not the etymology.

A RENDRE.

(Fr. to render, to yield.) That which is to be rendered, yielded, or paid. Profits d rendre comprehend rents and services. Ham. N. P. 192.

[Law] — Law

[Law: statutory construction — a statute's title or rubric may be consulted as an aid to interpretation]

From the red-letter rubric to the black-letter body: the historical practice behind the modern canon that a statute's title may be consulted to resolve ambiguity in its text.

Why: The phrase names the ancient practice of reading from rubric to body; the living doctrine it genuinely illuminates is the title-as-aid canon of construction.

A VINCULO MATRIMONII.

(Lat from the bond of matrimony.) A term descrip- tive of a kind of divorce, which effects a complete dissolution of the marriage con- tract. See Divobce.

Ab abuiu ad mnm non valet conse- gmentla. A conclusion as to the use of a thing from its abuse is invalid. Broom, Max. 17.

[Law] — Law

[Law: divorce a vinculo matrimonii — absolute divorce dissolving the marriage bond]

Divorce a vinculo matrimonii effects a complete dissolution of the marriage contract, freeing the parties from the bond itself.

Why: Pairs with a mensa et thoro, annotated above; the two degrees of divorce form one genuine common-law doctrine.

[Matthew 19:9, KJV]

And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery.

Why: The entry is divorce 'from the bond of matrimony' — complete dissolution of the marriage contract. This is Christ's own pronouncement on putting away, the scriptural locus on divorce; the bond's dissolution is the que...

AB AOTIS.

Lat An. officer having charge of a eta, public records, registers, jour- nals, or minutes; an officer who entered on record the acta or proceedings of a court ; a clerk of court ; a notary or actuary. Calvin. Lex. Jurid. See “Acta.” This, and the sim- ilarly formed epithets d cancellis, d sccrc- Us, d libcllis, were also anciently the titles of a chancellor, (cancellarius ,) In the early history of that office. Spelman, “Cancella- rius.”

AB AGENDO.

Disabled from acting ; un- able to act; incapacitated for business or transactions of any kind.

AB ANTE.

In advance. Thus, a legis- lature cannot agree ab ante to any modifica- tion or amendment to a law which a third person may make. Allen v. McKean, 1 Sumn. 308, Fed. Chs. No. 229.

[Law] — Law

[Allen v. McKean, 1 Sumn. 308]

A legislature cannot agree in advance to amendments a third person may later make to a law — it cannot bind itself beforehand to another's lawmaking.

Why: The entry states the rule on the authority of the cited federal case; the genuine principle is that a legislature cannot alienate its lawmaking power in advance, cited exactly as Black's reports it.

AB ANTECEDENTE.

Beforehand; in advance.

AB ANT1QUO.

Of old; of an ancient date.

Ab unetii non fit injuria. From things to which one is accustomed (or in which there has been long acquiescence) no legal injury or wrong arises. If a person neglect to Insist on bis right, he is deemed to have abandoned it Amb. 645 ; 3 Brown, Ch. 639.

AB INCONVENIENTI.

From hardship, or inconvenience. An argument founded upon the hardship of the case, and the in- convenience or disastrous consequences to which a different course of reasoning would lead.

[Law] — Law

[Law: the canon against absurd results in statutory construction]

An argument from the hardship or disastrous consequences of a construction is recognized in law: courts reject readings that produce absurd or gravely inconvenient results.

Why: Argumentum ab inconvenienti is a genuine mode of judicial reasoning; the entry defines it as founded on hardship and consequence, which is exactly the absurd-results canon's ground.

AB INITIO.

Lat From the beginning; from the first act A party is said to be a trespasser ab initio, an estate to be' good ab initio, au agreement or deed to be void ab initio, a marriage to be unlawful ab initio, and the like. Plow. 6a, IGa; 1 Bl. Comm. 440.

[Law] — Law

[The Six Carpenters' Case, 8 Co. Rep. 146a (1610)]

One who abuses an authority given by law becomes a trespasser ab initio — a trespasser from the beginning — and an unlawful act may be void ab initio.

Why: The entry defines the phrase through trespass ab initio and void ab initio; the cited case is the canonical authority establishing the trespass-ab-initio doctrine.

AB INITIO MUNDI.

Lat From the be- ginning of the world. Ab initio mundi usque ad hodiemum diem, from the beginning of the world to this day. X. B. M. 1 Edw. IIL 24.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 24:21, KJV]

For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be.

Why: The entry is the chronological formula 'from the beginning of the world' (as in 'ab initio mundi usque ad hodiernum diem'). Christ's saying uses the identical idiom — 'since the beginning of the world' — showing scrip...

AB INTESTATO.

Lat In the civil law. From an Intestate; from the Intestate; in case of intestacy. Il csreditas ab intestato, an inheritance derived from an intestate. Inst 2, 9, 6. Successio ab intestato, succession to an intestate, or in case of Intestacy. Id. 3, 2, 3; Dig. 38, 6, L This answers to the descent or inheritance of real estate at com- mon law. 2 Bl. Comm. 490, 516; Story, Confl. Laws, | 480. “Heir ab intestato." 1 Burr. 420. The phrase “ab intestato ” is generally used as the opposite or alternative of ex testamento, (from, by, or under a will.) Vcl ex testamento, vcl ab intestato [heered- itates] pertinent, — inheritances are derived either from a will or from an intestate, (one who dies without a will.) [Maxim: Vel ex testamento, vel ab intestato — Inst. 2, 9, 6, as quoted in the entry]

"Inheritances are derived either from a will or from an intestate" — succession runs vel ex testamento, vel ab intestato.

Why: The entry itself states this as the governing principle of succession and quotes the Institutes verbatim; the maxim is the genuine axiom, not an imposed gloss.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 27:8, KJV]

And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a man die, and have no son, then ye shall cause his inheritance to pass unto his daughter.

Why: The entry is succession 'from an intestate' — the default rule for who takes when the decedent leaves no controlling line. The verse is the statutory default in the case: a man dies with no son, and the inheritance pa...

AB INVITO.

Lat By or from an un- willing party. A transfer ab invito is a com- pulsory transfer.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — "nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation"]

A transfer ab invito is a compulsory transfer from an unwilling party; in American law the eminent-domain power is exercised only upon just compensation.

Why: Ab invito names the unwilling transfer; the Takings Clause is the genuine constitutional law of compulsory transfer, quoted verbatim.

AB IRATO.

By one who is angry. A devise or gift made by a man adversely to the Interest of his heirs, on account of anger or hatred against them, is said to be made ab irato. A suit to set aside such a will is called an action ab irato. Merl. Bepert “Ab irato."

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ecclesiastes 7:9, KJV]

Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry: for anger resteth in the bosom of fools.

Why: The entry is a will or gift made 'by one who is angry' — voidable because anger clouded the disposition. The verse is the direct scriptural warning against acting in the haste of anger: anger 'resteth in the bosom of...

ABANDON.

To desert, surrender, relin- quish, give up, or cede. See Abandonment.

ABANDONEE.

A party to whom a right or property is abandoned or relinquished by another. Applied- to the insurers of vessels and cargoes. Lord EUenborougb, C. J., 3 Maule & S. 82; Abbott J-, Id. 87; Holroyd, J., Id. 89.

[Law] — Law

[3 Maule & S. 82 (Lord Ellenborough, C.J.), as cited in the entry]

In marine insurance the abandonee is the underwriter to whom the assured abandons vessel or cargo on a constructive total loss.

Why: Black's grounds the term in this King's Bench authority on notice of abandonment to insurers; the citation is reproduced exactly as the entry reports it.

ABANDONMENT.

The surrender, relin- quishment disclaimer, or cession of property or of rights. Stephens v. Mansfield, 11 Cal. 303; Dikes v. Miller, 24 Tex. 417; Middle Creek Ditch Co. v. Henry, 15 Mont 558, 39 Pac. 1054.

The giving up a thing absolutely, without reference to any particular person or pur- pose, as throwing a jewel into the highway; leaving a thing to itself, as a vessel at sea ; vacating property with the intention of not returning, so that it may be appropriated by the next comer. 2 Bl. In marine insurance. A relinquishment or cession of property by the owner to the insurer of it, in order to claim as for a total loss, when In fact It Is so by con- struction only. 2 Stepli. Comm. 178. The exercise of a right which a party having in- sured goods or vessels has to call upon the Insurers, in cases where the property insured has, by perils of the sea, become so much damaged as to be of little value, to accept of what is or may be saved, and to pay the full amount of the insurance, as if a total loss Imd actually happened. Co. v. Duffleld, 6 Ohio St. 200, 67 Am. Dec. 339.

Abandonment is the act by which, after a constructive total loss, a person insured by contract of marine insurance declares to the insurer that he relinquishes to him his interest In the thing insured. Civil Code Cal. f 2716.

The term is used culy in reference to risks in navigation ; but the principle is applicable in fire insurance, where there are remnants, and sometimes, also, under stipulations in life policies in favor of creditors.

In maritime law. The surrender of a vessel and freight by the owner of the same to a person having a claim thereon aris- ing out of a contract made with the master. See Poth. Chart § 2, art. 3, 1 51.

In patent law. As applied to inventions, abandonment is the giving up of bis rights by the inventor, as where he surrenders his idea or discovery or relinquishes the intention of perfecting his invention, and so throws it open to the public, or where he negligently postpones the assertion of his claims or fails to apply for a patent and al- lows the public to use his invention without objection. Woodbury, etc., Machine Co. v. Keith, 101 D. S. 479, 485, 25 L. Ed. 939; American Hide, etc., Oo. v. American Tool, etc., Co., 1 Fed. Cas. 647 ; Mast v. Dempster Mill Co. (C. C.) 71 Fed. 701; Bartlette v. Crittenden, 2 Fed. Cas. 981; Pitts v. Hall, 19 Fed. Oas. 754. There may also be an aban- donment of a patent where the inventor dedi- cates it to the public use; and this may be shown by his failure to sue Infringers, to sell licenses, or otherwise to make efforts to realize a personal advantage from his patent Ransom v. New York, 4 Blatchf. 157, 20 Fed. Cas. 286.

Of easement, right bf way, water right. Permanent cessation of use or en- joyment with no intention to resume or reclaim. Welsh v. Taylor, 134 N. Y. 450, 31 N. E. 896, 18 L. R. A. 535; Corning v. Gould, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 531; Tucker v. Jones, 8 Mont 225, 19 1'ac. 571 ; McClain v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 90 Iowa, 646, 57 N. W. 594 ; Oviatt v. Big Four Min. Co., 39 Or. 118, 65 Pac. 811.

Of mining claim. The relinquishment of a claim held by location without pat- ent where the holder voluntarily leaves his claim to be appropriated by the next comer, without any Intention to retake or re- sume It, and regardless of what may become of it In the future. McKay v. McDougall, 25 Mont. 258, 64 Pac. 669, 87 Am. St. Rep. 395 ; St John v. Kidd, 26

[Sikes v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 28 S.W. 688; Barnett v. Dickinson, 93 Md. 25, as cited in the entry]

Abandonment requires both an intention to forsake the thing and an external act manifesting it; mere nonuser is not abandonment unless coupled with intent not to resume.

Why: The entry states the intent-plus-act rule on these authorities; it is the genuine common-law test for abandonment, cited exactly as Black's reports the cases.

[Law: 15 U.S.C. § 1127 — abandonment of a trademark]

Under the Lanham Act a mark is deemed abandoned when its use has been discontinued with intent not to resume such use.

Why: The federal statutory definition codifies the same intent-plus-discontinuance structure the entry describes at common law; the parallel is genuine, not forced.

ABANDONMENT FOR TORTS.

civil law. The act of a person who was sued in a noxal action, i. e., for a tort or trespass committed by his slave or bis animal, in re- linquishing and abandoning the slave or ani- mal to the person injured, whereby he saved himself from any further responsibility. See Inst 4, 8, 9; Fitzgerald v. Ferguson, 11 La. Aim. 396.

ABAHPUM, or ABANDUM. Anything sequestered, proscribed, or abandoned. Aban- don, i. e., in bannum res missa, a thing ban- ned or denounced as forfeited or lost whence to abandon, desert, or forsake, as lost and gone. Cowell.

L. Lat In old Eng- lish law. An abatement of freehold ; an en- try upon lands by way of interposition be- tween the death of the ancestor and the en- try of the heir. Oo. Litt. 277a; Yel. 151.

ABATEMENT . In pleading. The ef- fect produced upon au action at law, when the defendant pleads matter of fact showing the writ or declaration to be defective and incorrect. This defeats the action for the time being, but the plaintiff may proceed with it after the defect is removed, or may recom- mence it in a better way. [Law: plea in abatement — dilatory plea defeating the present action only, not the underlying right]

A plea in abatement is dilatory: it defeats the writ or declaration for the time being on a defect of form, without barring the plaintiff from recommencing in a better way — as distinguished from a plea in bar.

Why: The entry's body carries the full plea-in-abatement doctrine under this headword (parser-merged); the abatement/bar distinction is the genuine pleading principle it states.

The

removal, prostration, or destruction of that which causes a nuisance, whether by breed- ing or pulling it down, or otherwise remold- ing, disintegrating, or effacing it Ruff v. Phillips, 50 Ga. 130.

1 The remedy which the law allows a party injured by a nuisance of destroying or re- moving it by his own act, so as he commits no riot in doing it, nor occasions (In the case of a private nuisance) any damage beyond wliat the removal of the inconvenience nec- essarily requires. 3 BL Comm. 5, 168 ; 8 .Steph, Comm. 361; 2 Salk. 458.

[Law: self-help abatement of nuisance; 3 Bl. Comm. 5, 168, as cited in the entry]

One injured by a nuisance may abate it by his own act, so as he commits no riot in doing it and, for a private nuisance, occasions no damage beyond what removal necessarily requires.

Why: The entry states the privilege with its limits on Blackstone's authority; the bounded self-help remedy is the genuine doctrine, with the limits quoted in substance from the entry itself.

ABATEMENT OF FREEHOLD.

This

takes place where a person dies seised of an inheritance, and, before the heir or devisee enters, a stranger, having no right, makes a wrongful entry, and gets possession of it Such an entry is technically called an “abate- ment,” and the stranger an “abator.” It is, in fact, a figurative expression, denoting that the rightful possession or freehold of the heir or devisee Is overthrown by the unlawful in- tervention of a stranger. Abatement differs from intrusion, in that it Is always to the prejudice of the heir or immediate devisee, whereas the latter is to the prejudice of the reversioner or remainder-man ; and disseisin differs from them both, for to disseise is to put forcibly or fraudulently a person seised of the freehold out of possession. 1 Co. Inst 277 a; 3 Bl. Comm. 166; Brown v. BurfUck, 25 Ohio St. 268. By the ancient laws of Normandy, this term was used to signify the act of one who, having an apparent right of possession to an estate, took possession of .it immediately after the death of the actual possessor, before the heir entered. (Howard, Audennes Lois des Fraucais, tome 1, p. 539.) Bouvier.

ABATOR.

In real property law, a stranr ger who, hnving no right of entry, contrives to get possession of an estate of freehold; to the prejudice of the heir or devisee, before the latter can enter, after the ancestor's death. Lltt { 397. In the lasv of torts, oue who abates, prostrates, or destroys a nui- sance.

In abbreviations of a grant, such number and sense is to be taken that the grant be not made void.

Why: The entry quotes this maxim of construction verbatim with Coke's authority; it is the genuine ut-res-magis-valeat principle applied to abbreviated grants — the maxim is the annotation.

[Law: forestalling as a common-law offense against trade]

Forestalling a market — buying up wholesale the merchandise intended for sale there — was a common-law offense against trade, the ancestor of market-manipulation doctrines.

Why: The entry defines the act and cross-refers to forestalling; its indictability at common law is the genuine legal fact the definition points to.

ABDICATION.

The act of a sovereign in renouncing and relinquishing his govern- ment or throne, so that either the throne is left entirely vacant, or is filled by a succes- sor appointed or elected beforehand.

ABET.

In criminal law. To encourage, incite, or set another on to commit a crime. See Abettor.

“Aid" and “abet” are nearly synonymous terms as generally used ; but, strictly speak- ing, the former term does not imply guilty knowledge or felonious intent, whereas the word “abet” includes knowledge of the wrong- ful purpose and counsel and encouragement in the commission of the crime. People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486. 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St Rep. 50: People v. Morine. 138 Cal. 626, 72 Pac. 166; State v. Empey, 79 Iowa, 460, 44 N. W. 707 ; Raiford v. State, 59 Ala. 106; White v. Whoever aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures the commission of an offense is punishable as a principal; "abet" strictly implies knowledge of the wrongful purpose with counsel and encouragement.

Why: The entry's strict definition of 'abet' (knowledge plus encouragement) is exactly the federal aiding-and-abetting principle codified in 18 U.S.C. § 2, whose operative words are quoted verbatim.

ABETTATOR.

ABETTOR.

In criminal law. An In- stigator, or setter on; one who promotes or procures a crime to be committed; one who commands, advises, instigates, or encourages another to commit a crime; a person who, being present or in the neighborhood, incites another to commit a crime, and thus becomes a principal.

The distinction between abettors and ac- cessaries is the presence or absence at the commission of the crime. Oowell ; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 34. Presence and participation are nec- essary to constitute a person an abetto?. Green v. State, 13 Mo. 382 ; State v. Teahan, GO Conn. 92; Connaughty v. State, 1 Win. 159, 60 Am. Dec. 370.

At common law the line between abettor and accessory is presence at the commission of the crime: presence and participation make one a principal; absence makes one an accessory.

Why: The entry states the presence/absence distinction on cited authority; it is the genuine common-law test separating principals from accessories, with the case reproduced exactly as Black's reports it.

ABEYANCE.

In the law of estates. Ex- pectation; waiting; suspense; remembrance and contemplation in law. Where there is no person in existence in whom an inherit- ance can vest, it is said to be in abeyance, that Is, in expectation ; the law considering it as always potentially existing, and ready to vest whenever a proper owner appears. 2 Bl. Comm. 107. Or, In other words, it is said to be in the remembrance, consideration, and intendment of the law. Co. Lltt. 81 640, 650. The term “abeyance” is also sometimes applied to personal property. Thus, in the case of maritime captures during war, it is said that, until the capture becomes invested with the character of prize by a sentence of condemnation, the right of property is in abeyance, or in a state of legal sequestration. 1 Kent, Comm. 102. It has also been applied to the franchises of a corporation. “When a corporation is to be brought into existence by some future acts of the corporators, the fran- chises remain in abeyance, until such acts are done ; and, when the corporation is brought into life, the franchises instantane- ously attach to it” Story, J., in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat 691, 4 L. Ed. 829.

ABIDE.

To “abide the order of the court'' means to perform, execute, or conform to such order. Jackson v. State, 30 Kan. 88, 1 Pac. 317; Hodge v. Hodgdon, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 294. See McGarry v. State, 37 Kan. 9, 14 Pac. 492.

A stipulation in an arbitration bond that the parties shall “abide by” the award of the arbitrators means only that they shall await the award of the arbitrators, without revok- ing the submission, and not that they shall acquiesce in the award when made. ABIGEUS.

Lat (Pl., abigel, or more rarely abiyeatores.) In the civil law. ’ A stealer of cattle; one who drove or drew away (subtraxit) cattle from their pastures, as horses or oxen from the herds, and made booty of them, and who followed this as a business or trade. The term was applied also to those who drove away the smaller animals, as swine, sheep, and goats. In the latter case, it depended on the number taken, whether the offender was fur (a com- mon thief) or abiyeus. But the taking of a single horse or ox seems to have constituted the crime of abigeatue. And those who fre- quently Hid this were clearly abigei, though they took but an animal or two at a time. Dig. 47, 14, 3, 2. See Cod. 9, 37 ; Nov. 22, c. 15, § 1 ; 4 Bl. Comm. 239.

provide such necessa- ries, not to his capacity of acquiring such means by labor. Washburn v. Washburn, 9 Cal. 475. But compare State v. Wltham, 70 Wis. 473, 35 N. W. 934.

ABISHERING, or ABISHERSING.

Quit of amercements. It originally signified a forfeiture or amercement, and is more properly mUhcriny, mishemlng, or misker- iny, according to Spelman. It has since been termed a liberty of freedom, because, wher- ever this word Is used in a grant, the per- sons to whom the grant Is made have the forfeitures and amercements of all others, and. are themselves free from the control of any within their fee. Terrnes de la Ley, 7.

. ABJUDICATIO. In old English law. The depriving of a thing by the judgment of a court ; a putting out of court ; the same as forisjudicatio, forjudgment, forjudger. Co. Lttt 100», 6; Townsh. Pl. 49.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Timothy 5:8, KJV]

But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.

Why: The entry turns on a husband's duty, 'having the ability,' to provide 'the common necessaries of life' to his wife. The verse states the root duty: one who provides not for his own house 'hath denied the faith' — the...

ABJURATION OF ALLEGIANCE.

One of the steps In the process of naturaliz- ing an alien. It consists In a formal declara- tion, made by the party under oath before a competent authority, that he renounces and abjures all the allegiance and fidelity- which he owes to the sovereign whose subject he has theretofore been.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 8 U.S.C. § 1448(a) — oath of renunciation and allegiance]

The naturalization oath requires the applicant to renounce and abjure absolutely and entirely all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty.

Why: The entry's abjuration of allegiance is the historical form of the renunciation still exacted in the modern naturalization oath; the oath language is quoted in substance from the statute.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 6:24, KJV]

No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

Why: The entry is the formal renunciation of a former sovereign's allegiance in naturalization. The verse states the principle that makes the renunciation necessary: no man can serve two masters — allegiance cannot be divi...

ABJURE.

To renounce, or abandon, by or upon oath. See Abjuration.

“The decision of this court in Arthur v. Broadnax, 3 Ala. 557, affirms that if the hus- band has abjured the state, and remains abroad, the wife, meanwhile trading as a feme sole, could recover on a note which was given to her as such. We must consider the term ‘ab- jure,’ aa there used, as implying a total aban- donment of the state ; a departure from the state without the intention of returning, and not a renunciation of one’s country, upon an oath of perpetual banishment, as the term orig- inally implied.” Mead v. Hughes, 15 Ala. 148, 1 Am. Rep. 123.

AB ORTIFACIENT.

In medical jurispru- dence. A drug or medicine capable of, or used for, producing abortion.

ABORTION.

In criminal law. The mis- carriage or premature delivery of a woman who is quick with child. When this Is brought about with a malicious design, or for an unlawful purpose, It is a crime in law.

The act of bringing forth what Is yet Im- perfect ; and particularly the delivery or ex- pulsion of the human foetus prematurely, or before It is yet capable of sustaining life. Also the thing prematurely brought forth, or product of an untimely process. Sometime^ loosely used for the offense of procuring a premature delivery; but, strictly, the early delivering is the abortion ; causing or procur- ing abortion is the full name of the offense. ABRIDGE.

To reduce or contract; usu- ally spoken of written language.

In copyright law, to abridge means to epit- omize; to reduce; to contract. It implies pre- serving the substance, the essence, of a work, in language suited to such a purpose. In making extracts there is no condensation of the author’s language, and hence no abridgment. To abridge requires the exercise of the mind : it is not copying. Between a compilation and an' abridgment there is a clear distinction. A com- pilation consists of selected extracts from dif- ferent authors : an abridgment is a condensa- tion of the views of o.ne author. Story v. Holcombe, 4 McLean, 300, 310, Fed. Cas. No. 13,497.

[Story v. Holcombe, 4 McLean, 300, Fed. Cas. No. 13,497]

In copyright law a true abridgment — a condensation of one author's views by exercise of the mind — is not copying, and is distinguished from a mere compilation of extracts.

Why: The entry states the doctrine on Justice Story's authority in the cited case; abridgment as non-infringing condensation is the genuine copyright principle, cited exactly as Black's reports it.

ABRIDGMENT.

An epitome or com- pendium of another and larger work, where- in the principal ideas of the larger work are summarily contained. '

Abridgments of the law are brief digests of the law, , arranged alphabetically. • The oldest are those of Fitzherbert, Brooke, and Rolle; the more modern those of Viner, Comyns, and Bacon. (1 Steph. Comm. 51.) The term “digest” has now supplanted that of “abridgment.” Sweet .

[Law] — Law

[Law: remittitur — the trial court's power to reduce excessive damages]

The court's power to reduce damages in certain cases is the historical name for the remittitur practice — reducing an excessive award rather than ordering a new trial.

Why: The entry names the power; remittitur is its living form, so the link identifies the doctrine rather than restating the definition.

ABROGATE.

To' annul, repeal, or de- stroy ; to annul or repeal ah order or rule is- sued by a subordinate authority ; to repeal a former law’ by legislative act or by usage.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 2:15, KJV]

Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace;

Why: The entry is to annul or repeal a law. The verse describes scripture's own instance of legal abrogation: the abolishing of 'the law of commandments contained in ordinances.' Paul speaking — flag off.

ABROGATION.

The annulment of a law by constitutional authority. It stands opposed to rogation; and Is distinguished from derogation, which Implies the taking away only some part of a tow ; from subro- gation. which denotes the adding a clause to It; from dispensation, which only sets it aside in a particular Instance; nud from an- tiquation, which is the refusing to pass a law. Encyc. Lond.

-‘-Implied abrogation. A statute is said to work an “implied abrogation” of an earlier one, wheB the later statute contains provisions which are inconsistent with the further coni tinonnee of the earlier law; or a statute ia .im- pliedly abrogated when the reason of it, or 'the1 object for which it was passed, no longer exists.

[Law: implied repeal disfavored — irreconcilable inconsistency required]

Repeals by implication are disfavored: a later statute works an implied abrogation of an earlier one only where the two are irreconcilably inconsistent, or the reason for the earlier law no longer exists.

Why: The entry defines implied abrogation; the genuine canon is the judiciary's reluctance to find it without clear inconsistency — the doctrine that disciplines the definition.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 2:15, KJV]

Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace;

ABSOLUTION.

In the civil law. A sentence whereby a party accused is declared innocent of the crime laid to his charge.

In canon law. A juridical act whereby the clergy declare that the sins of such as are penitent are remitted.

In French law. The dismissal of an ac- cusation. The term “acquitment” is em- ployed when the accused is declared not guilty and “absolution” when he is recog- nised as guilty but the act is not punishable by law, or he Is exonerated by some defect of intention or will. Merl. Repert; Bouvier.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 20:23, KJV]

Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.

Why: The entry's canon-law sense is the juridical act whereby sins are declared remitted — absolution. The verse is Christ's own commission of the power to remit or retain sins: the scriptural root of absolution.

generally applied to the construc- tion of instruments in which superfluous words have been inserted more clearly to ex- press the intention.

ABSURDITY.

In statutory construction, an “absurdity” is not only that which is physically impossible, but also that which is morally so; and that is to be regarded as morally impossible which is contrary to rea- son, so that it could not be Imputed to a man in his right senses. State v. Hayes, 81

Mo. 574, 585. Anything which is so Irration- al, unnatural, or inconvenient that it cannot be supposed to have been within the inten- tion of men of ordinary intelligence and dis- cretion. Black, Interp. Laws, 104.

ABUSE, v. To make excessive or im- proper use of a thing, or to employ It in a manner contrary to the natural or legal rules for Its use; to make an extravagant or ex- cessive use, as to abuse one’s authority.

In the civil law, the borrower of a chattel which, in Its nature, cannot be used without consuming it, such as wine or grain, Is said to abuse the thing borrowed if he uses it ABUSE, n. Everything which is contrary to good order established by usage. Merl. Repert. Departure from use; immoderate or improper use.

Of corporate franchises. The abuse or misuse of its franchises by a corporation signifies any positive act in violation of the charter and In derogation of public right, willfully done or caused to be done ; the use of rights or franchises as a pretext for wrongs and injuries to the public. Baltimore v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 3 Pittsb. R. (Pa.) 20, Fed. Cas. No. 827; Erie A N. E. R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 287, 818 ; Railroad Commission v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 90 Tex. 340, 38 8. [State v. Hayes, 81 Mo. 574, as cited in the entry]

In statutory construction a reading that produces absurdity — what is so irrational or inconvenient that it cannot be supposed within the intention of reasonable legislators — is rejected.

Why: The entry defines the absurdity doctrine of construction on this authority; the canon that courts will not impute absurd intentions to the legislature is the genuine principle, cited exactly as Black's reports it.

ABUT.

To reach, to touch. In old law, the ends were said to abut, the sides to ad- join, Cro. Jac. 184. And see Lawrence v. Klllam, 11 Kan. 499, 511 ; Springfield v. Green, 120 111. 269, 11 N. E. 261.

. Property is described as “abutting” on a street, road, etc., when it adjoins or is adja- cent thereto, either in the sense of actually touching .it or being practically contiguous to it, being ’separated by no more than a small and Inconsiderable distance, but not when an- other lot, a street, or any other such distance intervenes. [Law: acceleration of remainders — the expectant interest vests in possession sooner when the prior estate fails]

Where the preceding estate determines prematurely, an expectant interest is accelerated — the time for its vesting in possession is shortened.

Why: The one-line definition names the doctrine; acceleration of remainders is the genuine property principle it denotes.

ACCEPT.

To receive with approval or satisfaction ; to receive with intent to retain. Also, in the capacity of drawee of a bill, to recognize the draft and engage to pay It when due.

ACCEPTANCE.

The taking and receiv- ing of anything in good part, and as it were a tacit agreement to a preceding act, which might have been defeated or avoided if such acceptance had not been made. Brooke, Abr.

The act of a person to whom a thing is of- fered or tendered by another, whereby he re- ceives the thing with the intention of retain- ing it, such intention being evidenced by a sufficient act.

The acceptance of goods sold under a con- tract which would be void by the statute of frauds without delivery and acceptance in- volves something more than the act of the vendor in the delivery. It requires that the vendee should also act, and that his act should be of such a nature as to indicate that he receives and accepts the goods deliv- ered as his property. He must receive and retain the articles delivered, intending there- by to assume the title to them, to constitute the acceptance mentioned in the statute. Rodgers v. Phillips. 40 N. Y. 524. See, also, Snow v. Warner, 10 Mete. (Mass.) 132, 43 Am. Dec. 417.

In marine insurance, the acceptance of an, abandonment by the underwriter is his assent, either express or to he implied from the surrounding circumstances, to the suffi- ciency and regularity of the abandonment. Its effect is to perfect the Insured’s right of action as for a total loss, if the cause of loss and circumstances have been truly disclosed. Rap. & Law.

Acceptance of a bill of exchange. In mercantile law. The act by which the person on whom a bill of exchange is drawn (called the “drawee”) assents to the request of the drawer to pay it, or, in other words, engages, or makes himself liable, to pay it when due. 2 Bl. Comm. 469 ; Cox v. National Bank, 100 U. S. 704, 25 L. Ed. 739. It may be by parol or in writing, and either general or special, absolute or conditional; and it may be Impliedly, as well as expressly, given. 3 Kent, Comm. 83, 85; Story, Bills, Si 238, 251. But the usual and regular mode of acceptance is by the drawee’s writing across the face of the bill the word “accepted.” and subscribing bis name; after which he is termed the acceptor. Id f 243.

The following are the principal varieties of acceptances:

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Absolute. An express and positive, agree* merit to pay the bill according to its tenor.

Conditional. An engagement to pay the bill on the happening of a condition. Todd v. Bank of Kentucky, 3 Bush (Ky.) 628.

Express. An absolute acceptance.

Implied. An acceptance inferred by law from the acts or conduct of the drawee.

Partial. An acceptance varying from the tenor of the bill.

Qualified. One either conditional or par* tlal, and which introduces a variation in the sum, time, mode, or place of payment

Supra protest. An acceptance by a third person, after protest of the bill for non-ac- ceptance by the drawee, to save the honor of the drawer or some particular indorser.

A general acceptance is an absolute ac- ceptance precisely in conformity with the fenor of the bill itself, and not qualified by any statement condition, or change. Rowe v. Young, 2 Brod. & B. 180; Todd v. Bank of Kentucky, 3 Bush (Ky.) C28.

. A special acceptance is the qualified ac- ceptance of a bill of exchange, as where it is accepted as payable at a particular place "and not elsewhere." Rowe v. Young, 2 Brod & B. 180.

‘ ACCEPTANCE AC BESOIN. Fr. In

French law. Acceptance in case of need; ap acceptance by one on whom a bill is drawn au besoin, that is, in case of refusal or failure of the drawee to accept. Story, Bills, || 65, 254, 255.

ACCESSIO.

In Roman law. An in- crease or addition; that which lies next to a thiug, and is supplementary and necessary to the principal thing; that which arises or is produced from the principal thing. Cal- vin. Lex. Jurld.

One of the modes of acquiring property, being the extension of ownership over that which grows from, or is united to. an article which one already possesses. Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382, 397, 16 Am. Rep. 46.

ACCESSION . The right to all which one’s own property produces, whether that property be movable or immovable; and the right to that which is united to it by acces- sion, either naturally or artificially. 2 Kent, 360 ; 2 Bl. Comm. 404.

A principle derived from the civil law, by which the owner of property becomes entitled •to all which it produces, and to all that is added or united to it, either naturally or arti- ficially, (that is, by the labor or skrll of an- other.) even where such addition extends to a change of form or materials; and by which, on the other hand, the possessor of property be- comes entitled to it, as against the original owner, where the addition made to it by his skill and labor is of greater value than the property itself, or where the change effected in its form is so great as to render it impos- sible to restore it to its original shape. Is its proper use the term excludes negli- gence; that is, an accident is an event which occurs without the fault, carelessness, or want of proper circumspection of the person affected, or which could not have been avoided by the use of that kind and degree of care necessary to the exigency and in the circumstances in which he was placed. I returned, and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.

Why: The entry is the unforeseen, undesigned occurrence — 'time and chance.' The verse names the category outright: 'time and chance happeneth to them all' — the casualty that befalls without regard to merit or design.

ACCOMENDA.

In maritime law. A contract between the owner of goods and the master of a ship, by which the former in- trusts the property to the latter to be sold by him on their Joint account.

In such case, two contracts take place: First, the contract called mandatum, by which the owner of the property gives the master power to dispose of it: and the contract of partner- ship. in virtue of which the profits are to be di- vided between them. One party runs the risk of losing his capital; the other, his labor. If the sale produces no more than first cost, the owner takes all the proceeds. It is only the profits which are to be divided. ACCOUNT, or ACCOUNT RENDER.

In practice. “Account,” sometimes called “account render,” was a form of action at common law against a person who by reason of some fiduciary relation (as guardian, bailiff, receiver, etc.) was bound to render an account to another, but refused to do so. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 116; Co. Litt. 172; Grif- fith v. Willing, 3 Bln. (Pa.) 317; Travers v. Dyer, 24 Fed. Cas. 142; Stevens v. Coburn, 71 Yt 261, 44 Atl. 354; Portsmouth v. Don- aldson, 32 Pa. 202, 72 Am. Dec. 782.

In England, this action early fell into disuse ; and as it is one of the most dilatory and ex- pensive actions known to the law, and the pare ties are held to the ancient rules of pleading, and no discovery can be obtained, it never was adopted to any great extent in the United States. But in some states this action was em- ployed, chiefly because there were no chancery courts In which a bill for an accounting would lie. The action is peculiar in the fact that two judgments are rendered, a preliminary judg- ment that the defendant do account with the plaintiff (qgorf computet) and a final judgment (quod recuperet) after the accounting for the balance found due. Field v. Brown, 14(5 Ind. 293, 45 N. E. 464; Travers v. Dyer, 24 Fed. Cas. 142.

Accruing costs. Costs and expenses in- curred after judgment.

Accruing Interest. Running or accumu- lating interest, as distinguished from ac- crued or matured interest ; Interest daily accumulating on the principal debt but not yet due and payable. Gross v. Parteuheim- er, 159 Pa. 556. 28 Atl. 370.

Accruing right. One that is Increasing, enlarging, or augmenting. Richards v. Land Co., 54 Fed. 209, 4 C. C. A. 290.

ACCT.

An abbreviation for "account,” of such universal and immemorial use that the courts will take Judicial notice of its meaning. Heaton v. Ainley, 108 Iowa, 112. 78 N. W. 798.

ACCUMULATED SURPLUS.

In stat- utes relative to the taxation of corporations, this term refers to the fund which the com- pany has In excess of Its capital and liabili- ties. Trenton Iron Co. v. .Yard, 42 N. J. Law, 357; People's F. Ins. Co. v. Parker, 35 N. J. Law, 575; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Utter, 34 N. J. Law, 489; Mills v. Brit- ton, 64 Conn. 4, 29 Atl. 231, 24 L. R. A. 536.

ACCUMULATIONS.

When an executor or other trustee masses the rents, dividends, and other Income which he receives, treats It as a capital. Invests it, makes a new capital of the Income derived therefrom, Invests that, and so on, he Is said to accumulate the fund, and the capital and accrued Income thus procured constitute accumulations. Hussey v. Sargent, 116 Ky. 53, 75 S. W. 211 ; In re Rogers’ Estate, 179 Pa. 609, 36 Atl. 340: Thorn v. De Breteuil, 86 App. Dlv. 405, 83 N. Y. Supp. 849.

ACCUMULATIVE.

That which accu- mulates, or is heaped up; additional. Said of several things heaped together, or of one thing added to another.

Accumulative judgment. Where a per- son has already been convicted and sen- tenced, and a second or additional Judgment is passed against him, the execution of which Is postponed until the completion of the first sentence, such second judgment is said to be accumulative.

Accumulative legacy. A second, double, or additional legacy ; a legacy given in ad- dition to another given by the same instru- ment, or by another instrument.

Aecusare nemo se debet, nisi coram Deo. No one is bound to accuse himself, ex- cept before God. See Hardres, 139.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Accusare nemo se debet, nisi coram Deo — Hardres, 139, as quoted in the entry]

"No one is bound to accuse himself, except before God."

Why: The entry quotes the maxim verbatim; it is the common-law root of the privilege against self-incrimination.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — privilege against self-incrimination]

"No person ... shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

Why: The constitutional embodiment of the maxim the entry quotes; the Amendment's operative words are quoted verbatim.

ACCUSATION.

A formal charge against a person, to the effect that he Is guilty of a punishable offense, laid before a court or magistrate having Jurisdiction to Inquire into the alleged crime. See Accuse.

Accra sator post ratlonaMle temp us aos eat audiendus, nisi so bone de omis- sions excusaverit. Moore, 817. An ac- cuser ought not to be beard after the ex- piration of a reasonable time, unless he can account satisfactorily for the delay.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Accusator post rationabile tempus non est audiendus, nisi se bene de omissione excusaverit — Moore, 817, as quoted in the entry]

"An accuser ought not to be heard after the expiration of a reasonable time, unless he can account satisfactorily for the delay."

Why: The entry quotes the maxim verbatim; it is the genuine axiom behind limitation periods and the policy against stale accusations.

ACCUSE.

To bring a formal charge against a person, to the effect that he Is guilty of a crime or punishable offense, be- fore a court or magistrate having Jurisdic- tion to inquire into the alleged crime. Peo- ple v. Frey. 112 Mich. 251, 70 N. W. 548; People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 460; Castle v. Houston, 19 Kan. 426, 27 Am. Rep. 127; Gordon v. State, 102 Ga. 673. 29 S. E. 444 ; Pen. Code Texas, 1895, art. 240.

In its popular sense “accusation” applies to all derogatory charges or imputations, whether or not they relate to a punishable legal offense, and however made, whether orally, by news-

Cper, or otherwise. State v. South, 5 Rich, iw (8. C.) 489 ; Com. v. Andrews, 132 Mass.

263 ; People v. Braman, 30 Mich. 460. But in legal phraseology it is limited to such accusations as have taken shape in a prosecution. United States v. Patterson, 150 U. S. 65, 14 Sup. Ct. 20, 37 L. Ed. 999.

ACCUSES.

The person against whom an accusation is made.

“Accused” is the generic name for the de- fendant in a criminal case, and is more appropriate than either “prisoner” or "defend- ant” 1 Car. & K. 131.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Lee, To Kill a Mockingbird, 1960]

Humanity (paraphrase): Atticus Finch defends Tom Robinson, the accused man, before the court — the novel dramatizes the entry's role: the person 'against whom an accusation is made' standing trial. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine illumination: the trial that structures the novel shows the accused as the entry defines him — the generic defendant in a criminal case, with counsel pleading the evidence to the court. Paraphrase clearly mark...

ACCUSER.

The person by whom an ac- cusation is made.

ACEPHALI.

The levelers in the reign of Hen. I., who acknowledged no head or superior. Leges II. 1; Cowell. Also certain ancient heretics, who appeared about the be- ginning of the sixth century, and asserted that there was but one substance in Christ and one nature. Wharton; Gibbon, Rom. Emp. ch. 47.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Judges 21:25, KJV]

In those days there was no king in Israel: every man did that which was right in his own eyes.

Why: The entry's first sense is those 'who acknowledged no head or superior.' The verse describes exactly that condition: no king in Israel, every man his own head, doing what was right in his own eyes. Narrative — flag of...

ACKNOWLEDGE.

To own, avow, or admit; to confess; to recognize one’s acts, and assume the responsibility therefor.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 John 1:9, KJV]

If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Why: The entry is 'to own, avow, or admit; to confess; to recognize one's acts, and assume the responsibility therefor.' The verse is scripture's locus of confession — owning one's sins before God — matching the entry's 'c...

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

In conveyanc- ing. The act by which a party who has exe- cuted an instrument of conveyance as grant- or goes before a competent officer or court, and declares or acknowledges the same as his genuine and voluntary act and deed. The certificate of the officer od such instru- ment that it has been so acknowledged, Rogers v. Pell, 154 N. Y. 518, 49 N. E. 75; Strong v. United States (D. C.), 34 Fed. 17 ; Burbank v. Ellis, 7 Neb. 156.'

The term is also used of the act of a per- son who avows or admits the truth of cer- tain facts which, if established, will entail a civil liability upon him. Thus, the debtor’s acknowledgment of the creditor’s demand or right of action will toll the statute of limita- tions. Ft. Scott v. Hickman, 112 U. S. 150, 163, 6 Sup. Ct. 56, 28 L. Ed. 636. Admission is also used in this sense. Roanes v. Archer, 4 Leigh (Va.) 550. To denote an avowal of criminal acts, or the concession of the truth of a criminal charge, the word “confession” seems more appropriate.

Of a child. An avowal or admission that the child is one's own ; recognition of a par- ental relation, either by a written agreement, verbal declarations or statements, by tbe life.

acts, and conduct of the parties, or any other satisfactory evidence that the relation was recognized and admitted. In re Spencer (Sur.) 4 N. Y. Supp. 396; In re Hunt’s Es- tate, 86 Hun, 232, 33 N. Y. Supp. 256; Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 532, 31 Pac. 915, 19 L. R.

A. 40; Bailey v. Boyd, 59 Ind. 292.

— Acknowledgment money. A sum paid in some parts of England by copyhold tenants on the death of their lords, as a recognition of their new lords, in like manner as money is usually paid on the attornment of tenants. Cowell.— Separate acknowledgment. An acknowl- edgment of a deed or other instrument, made by a married woman, on her examination by the officer separate and apart from her husband.

[Law] — Law

[Ft. Scott v. Hickman, 112 U.S. 150, as cited in the entry]

A debtor's acknowledgment of the creditor's demand or right of action tolls the statute of limitations.

Why: The entry states the tolling rule on Supreme Court authority; reproduced exactly as Black's reports it.

ACOLYTE.

An inferior mlnlstrant or servant in the ceremonies of the church, whose duties are to follow and wait upon the priests and deacons, etc.

ACQUEST.

An estate acquired newly, or by purchase. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 56.

ACQUITS.

In the civil law. Property which has been acquired by purchase^ gift, or otherwise than by succession. Immovable property which has been acquired otherwise than by succession. Merl. Repert Profits or gains of property, as between husband and wife. Civil Code La. f 2369; Comp. Laws N. M. f 2030.

ACQUIESCE.

To give an implied con- sent to a transaction, to the accrual of a right, or to any act, by one's mere silence, or without express assent or acknowledgment Matthews v. Murchison (C. C.) 17 Fed. 760; Cass County v. Plotner, 149 Ind. 116, 48 N.

E. 635 ; Scott ▼. Jackson, 89 Cal. 258, 26 Pac. 898.

ACQUIESCENCE.

Acquiescence is where a person who knows that he is entitled to im- peach a transaction or enforce a right neg- lects to do so for such a length of time that under the circumstances of the case, the other party may fairly infer that he has waived or abandoned his. right. Scott ▼. Jackson, 89 Cal. 258, 26 Pac. 898; Lowndes v. Wicks, 69 Conn. 15, 36 AO. 1072; Norfolk

Acquiescence and laches are cognate but not equivalent terms. The former is a submission to, or resting satisfied with, an existing state of things, while laches implies a neglect to do that which the party ought to do for his own benefit or protection. Hence laches may be evidence of acquiescence. Laches imports a merely passive assent, while acquiescence im- plies active assent. Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255. 10 Pac. 678 ; Kenyon v. National Life Ass'n. 39 App,. Div. 276. 57 N. Y. Supp. 60: Johnson-Brinkman Commission Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 126 Mo. 345. 28 8. W. 870, 26

ACQUIRE.

In the law of contracts and of descents ; to become the owner of proper- ty ; to make property one's own. Wulzen v. San Francisco, 101 CaL 15, 35 Pac. 353, 40 Am. St Rep. 17.

ACQUIRED.

Coming to an Intestate in any other way than by gift devise, or descent from a parent or the ancestor of a parent In re Miller's Will, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 54.

Aoquired rights. Those which a man does not naturally enjoy, but which are owing to his own procurement, as sovereign- ty, or the right of commanding, or the right of property. Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 519, 527, 44 Am. Dec. 217.

ACQUISITION.

The act of becoming the owner of certain property; the act by which one acquires or procures the property in anything. Used also of the thing ac- quired.

Original acquisition is where the title to the thing accrues through occupancy or ac- cession, (q. v.,) or by the creative labor of •the individual, as in the case of patents and copyrights.

Derivative acquisition is where property in a thing passes from one person to another. It may occur by the act of the law, as in cases of forfeiture, insolvency, intestacy, Judgment, marriage, or succession, or by the act of the parties, as in cases of gift, sale, or exchange.

ACQUIT.

To release, absolve, or dis- charge one from an obligation or a liability ; or to legally certify the innocence of one charged with crime. Dolloway v. Turrill, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 383, 400.

ACQUIT A CAUTION.

In French law, Certain goods pay higher export duties when exported to a foreign country than when they are destined for another French port. In order to prevent fraud, the administration compels the shipper of goods sent from one French port to another to give security that such goods shall not be sent to a foreign country. The certificate which proves thei receipt of the security is called "acquit A caution." Argles, Fr. Merc. Law, 543.

ACQUITTAL.

In contracts. A release, absolution, or discharge from an obligation, liability, or engagement.

In criminal practice. The legal and for- mal certification of the innocence of a per- son who has been charged with crime; a de- liverance or setting free a person from a charge of guilt.

In a narrow sense, it is the absolution of a party accused on a trial before a traverse jury. Thomas v. De Graffenreid, 2 Nott & Mr-0. (S. O.) 143; Teague v. Wilks. 3 McCord (8. C.) 46L Properly speaking, however, one is sot acquitted by the jury but by the judgment of the court. Burgess v. Boetefeur, 7 Man. &

G. 481, 504; People v. Lyman, 53 App. Div. 470. 65 N. Y. Supp. 1062. And he may be legally acquitted by a judgment rendered other- wise than in pursuance of a verdict, as when- he is An acquittal — the legal certification of innocence, whether by verdict of not guilty or by operation of law — bars a second prosecution for the same offense.

Why: The entry catalogs acquittals in fact and in law; the double-jeopardy bar is the genuine constitutional consequence, the Amendment quoted verbatim.

ACROSS.

Under a grant of a right of way across the plaintiff’s lot of land, the grantee has not a right to enter at one place, go partly across, and then come out at an- other place on the same side of the lot Com- stock v. Van Deusen, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 163. See Brown v. Meady, 10 Me. 391, 25 Am. Dec. 248.

ACT, v. In Scotch practice. To do or per- form Judicially; to enter of record. Surety “acted in the Books of Adjournal.” 1 Broun, 4.

Acquittals in fact are those which take place when the Jury, upon trial, finds a ver- dict of not guilty.

Acquittals in late are those which take place by mere operation of law ; as where a man has been charged merely as an acces- sary, and the principal has been acquitted. 2 Co. Inst 364.

In feudal law. The obligation on the part of a mesne lord to protect his tenant from any claims, entries, or molestations by lords paramount arising out of tlie services due to them by the mesne lord. See Co. Litt 100a.

ACQUITTANCE.

In contracts. A writ- ten discharge, whereby one is freed from an obligation to pay money or perform a duty. It differs from a release in not requiring to be under seal.

This word, though perhaps not strictly speak- ing synonymous with "receipt,” includes it. A receipt is one form of an acquittance ; a dis- charge is another. A receipt in full is an ac- quittance, and a receipt for a part of a de- mand or obligation is an acquittance pro tanto. State v. Shelters, 51 Vt. 104, 31 Am. Rep. 679.

ACQUITTED.

Released ; absolved ; purged of an accusation ; Judicially discharg- ed from accusation ; released from debt, etc. Includes both civil and criminal prosecutions. Dolloway v. Turrill, 26

ACRE.

A quantity of land containing 160 square rods of land, in whatever shape. Serg. Land Laws Pa. 185; Cro. Ells. 470, 665; 6 Coke, 67; Poph. 55; Co. Lltt. 56.

Originally the word “acre” (acer , alter, or Sax. acer) was not used as a measure of land, or to signify any determinate quantity of land, but to denote any open ground, (latum quantumvis agrum,) wide champaign, or field : which is still the meaning of the German acker, de- rived probably from the same source, and is K reserved in the names of some places in Eng- tnd, as Castle Acre, South Acre, etc. Burrifi.

ACREFIGHT, or ACRE. A camp or field fight ; a sort of duel, or judicial combat, anciently fought by single combatants. En- glish and Scotch, between the frontiers of the two kingdoms with sword and lance. Called “campfight,” and the combatants “cham- pions,” from the open field that was the stage of trial. Cowell.

ACT, n. In its most general sense, this noun signifies something done voluntarily by a person; the exercise of an individual's power; an effect produced in the external world by an exercise of the power of a per- son objectively, prompted by intention, and proximately caused by a motion of the will. In a more technical sense, it means some- thing done voluntarily by a person, and of such a nature that certain legal consequences attach to it. Duncan v. Landis, 106 Fed. 839, 45 C. C. A. 666. Thus a grantor acknowl- edges the conveyance to be his “act and deed,” the terms being synonymous.

In the civil law. An act is a writing which states in a legal form that a thing has been said, done, or agreed. Merl. Repert

In praetloe. Anything done by a court and reduced to writing; a decree. Judgment, resolve, rule, order, or other judicial proceed- ing. In Scotch law, the orders and decrees of a court, and in French and German law, all the records and documents in an action, are called “acts.”

In legislation. A written law, formally ordained or passed by the legislative power of a state, called in England an “act of par- liament,” and in the United States an “act of congress,” or of the “legislature ;” a stat- ute. People v. Tiphaine, 3 Parker, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 241 ; United States v. Smith, 27 Fed. Cas. 1167.

Acts are either public or private. Public acts (also called general acts, or general statutes, or statutes at large) are those which relate to the community generally, or establish a universal rule for the governance of the whole body poli- tic. Private acts (formerly called special, Co. Litt. 126a) are those which relate either to par- ticular persons (personal acts) or to particular places, (local acts.) or which operate only upon specified individuals or their private concerns.

Acta exterior* indicant interiors se- crets. 8 Coke, 1466. External acts Indicate undisclosed thoughts.

Acta in two jndicio non probant in alio nisi inter eaadem personas. Things done in one action cannot be taken as evi- dence in another, unless it be between the same parties. Tray. Lat. Max. 11.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Acta exteriora indicant interiora secreta — 8 Coke, 146b, as quoted in the entry]

"External acts indicate undisclosed thoughts" — intention is proved by outward acts.

Why: The entry quotes the maxim verbatim; it is the genuine evidentiary axiom that intention is inferred from external acts.

[Maxim: Acta in uno judicio non probant in alio nisi inter easdem personas — Tray. Lat. Max. 11, as quoted in the entry]

"Things done in one action cannot be taken as evidence in another, unless it be between the same parties."

Why: The entry quotes the maxim verbatim; it states the mutuality root of res judicata — judgments bind only the parties.

ACTA PUBLICA.

Cat Things of gen- eral knowledge and concern; matters trans- acted before certain public officers. Calvin.

ACTE.

In French law, denotes a docu- ment, or formal, solemn writing, embodying a legal intention he bad. Lofft 37.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Actio non datur non damnificato — Jenk. Cent. 60, as quoted in the entry]

"An action is not given to one who is not injured" — without legal injury there is no action.

Why: The entry quotes the maxim verbatim; it is the injury axiom — damnum as the ground of action.

[Maxim: Actio non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea — Lofft 37, as quoted in the entry]

"An action does not make one guilty, unless the intention be bad" — the mens rea axiom.

Why: The entry quotes the maxim verbatim; it is the genuine axiom that criminal guilt requires a guilty mind.

ACTIO NON ULTERIUS.

In English pleading. A name given to the distinctive clause in the plea to the further maintenance of the action, introduced In p>ace of the plea puis darrein continuance; the aver- ment being that the plaintiff ought not fur- ther (ultcrius) to have or maintain his action. Steph. Pl. 64, 65, 401.

ACTIO PERSONALIS.

In the civil and common law. A personnl action. The ordi- nary term for this kind of action in the civil law is actio in personam, iq. v„) the word personalis being of only occasional occur- rence. Inst 4, 0, 8, in tit.; Id. 4, 11, pr. 1. Bracton, however, uses it freely, and hence the personal action of the common law. Bract fols. 102 o, 159b. See Personal Ac- tion.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Actio personalis moritur cum persona — Noy, Max. 14, as quoted in the entry]

"A personal right of action dies with the person."

Why: The entry quotes the maxim verbatim; it is the survival axiom governing which actions outlive the parties.

[Maxim: Actio poenalis in haeredem non datur, nisi forte ex damno locupletior haeres factus sit — as quoted in the entry]

"A penal action is not given against an heir, unless, indeed, such heir is benefited by the wrong."

Why: The entry quotes the maxim verbatim; it limits penal actions against heirs to cases of enrichment by the wrong.

[Maxim: Actio quaelibet it sua via — Jenk. Cent. 77, as quoted in the entry]

"Every action proceeds in its own way."

Why: The entry quotes the maxim verbatim; it states the procedural axiom that each form of action follows its own course.

Action is the form of a suit given by law for the recovery of that which Is one's due ; the lawful demand of one's right. Co. Lltt 284b, 285a.

An action is a legal proceeding by a party complainant against a party defendant to obtain the Judgment of the court In relation to some right claimed to be secured, or some remedy claimed to be given by law, to the party complaining, Haley v. Eureka County Bank, 21 Nev. 127, 26 Pac. 64, 12 L. It. A. 815.

CUulfioation of actions. Civil actions are such as lie in behalf of persons to en- force their rights or obtain redress of wrongs in their relation to individuals.

Criminal actions are such as are instituted by the sovereign power, for the purpose of punishing or preventing offenses against the public.

Penal actions are such as are brought, either by the state or by an individual under permission of a statute, to enforce a penalty imposed by law for the commission of a pro- hibited act.

Common law actions are such as will lie, on the particular facts, at common law, with- out the aid of a statute.

Statutory actions are such as can only be based upon the particular statutes creating them.

Popular actions, in English usage, are those actions which are given upon the breach of a penal statute, and which any man that will may sue on account of the king and himself, as the statute allows and the case requires. Because the action is not given to one especially, but generally to any that will prosecute, it is called “action popular and, from the words used in the process, (qui tarn pro domino rege sequitur quam pro sc ipso, who sues as well for the king as for himself,) it is called a qui tam action. Tomlins.

Heal, personal, mixed. Actions are divid- ed into real, personal, and mixed. See Infra.

Local action. An action is so termed wheu ail the principal facts on which it is founded are of a local nature ; as where pos- session of land is to be recovered, or damages for au actual trespass, or for waste affecting land, because In such case the cause of action relates to some particular locality, which usually also constitutes the venue of the action. Miller v. IUckey (C. C.) 127 Fed. 577 ; Crook v. l'ltcher, 61 Md. 513 ; Beirne v. Rosser, 26 Grat. (Va.) 541 ; McLeod v. Rail- road Co., 58 Vt 727, 6 Atl. 648; Ackerson v. Erie B. Co., 31 N. J. Law, 311; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay, 86 Tex. 571, 26 S. W. 509, 25 L. R. A. 52.

Transitory actions are those founded upon a cause of action not necessarily referring to or arising in any particular locality.

Actions are called, in coiumou-law practice, ex contractu when they are founded on a contract; ex delicto when they arise out of a tort Umlauf v. Umlauf, 103 111. 651 ; Nelson v. Great Northern R. Co., 28 Mont 297, 72 Pac. 642 ; Van Oss v. Synou, 85 Wls. 661, 56 N. W. 300.

"Action" and "Sait." The terms "ac- tion" and "suit" are now nearly, if not en- tirely, synonymous. (3 Bl. Comm. 3, 116, et passim.) Or, if there be a distinction, it is that the term "action" is generally confined to proceedings in a court of law, while "suit" is equally applied to prosecutions at law or in equity. White v. Washington School Dist, 45 Conn. 59 ; Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Iowa, 471, 50 N. W. 204; Lamson v. Hutchings, 118 Fed. 321, 55 C. C. A. 245; Page v. Brewster, 58 N. H. 126; Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 96 Me. 234, 52 Atl. 774; Miller v. Rapp, 7 Ind. App. 89, 34 N. E. 126; Hall v. Bartlett, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 297 ; Branyan v. Kay, 33 S. C. 283, 11 S.

E. 970; Nlantic Mills Oo. v. Riverside & O. Mills, 19 R. I. 34, 31 Atl. 432; Ulshafer v. Stewart, 71 Pa. 170. Formerly, however, there was a more substantial distinction be- tween them. An action was considered as terminating with the giving of Judgment, and the execution formed no part of it. (Litt. $ 504; Co. Litt. 289a.) A suit, on the other hand, included the execution. (Id. 291a.) So, an action is termed by. Lord Coke, "the right of a suit." (2 Inst 40.) Burrill.

—Mixed action. An action partaking of the twofold nature of real and pergonal actions, hav- ing for its object the demand and restitution of real property and also personal damages for a wrong sustained. 3 Bf. Comm. 118; Hall v. Decker, 48 Me. 257. Mixed actions are those which are brought for the specific recovery of lands, like real actions, but comprise, joined with this claim, one for damages in respect of such property ; such as the action of waste, where, in addition to the recovery of the place wasted, the demandant claims damages; the writ of entry, in which, by statute, a demand of mesne- profits may be joined ; and dower, in which a claim for detention may be included. 48 Me. 255. In the civil law. An action in which some specific thing was demanded, and also some personal obligation claimed to be per- formed; or, in other words, an action which proceeded both in rem and in personam. Inst. 4, 6. 20.— Personal notion. In the civil law. An action in personam. A personal action seeks to enforce an obligation imposed on the defend- ant by his contract or delict ; that is. it is the contention that he is bound to transfer some dominion or to perform some service or to re-

Ac- customed to bite. Cro. Car. 254. A material averment in declarations for1 damage done by a dog to persons or animals. 1 Chit Pi. 888; 2 Chit PL 597.

[Law] — Law

[Law: the scienter rule — liability for a domestic animal requires the owner's knowledge of its vicious propensity]

At common law the owner's liability for a domestic animal's harm requires scienter — knowledge of the vicious propensity, pleaded as "accustomed to bite."

Why: The entry states the pleading requirement; the scienter rule is the genuine substantive doctrine behind the averment.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 21:28-29, KJV]

If an ox gore a man or a woman, that they die: then the ox shall be surely stoned, and his flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be quit. But if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death.

Why: The entry is the averment 'accustomed to bite' in dog-bite declarations — the scienter: the animal known to be dangerous. The verses state the same rule for the ox 'wont to push with his horn in time past,' with the o...

"Relative words refer to the nearest antecedent, unless it be prevented by the context" — the last-antecedent canon of construction.

Why: The entry quotes the maxim verbatim; it is the genuine canon governing relative and qualifying words in legal texts.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 9:7, KJV]

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.

ADDITION.

Whatever is added to a man's name by way of title or description, as additions of mystery, place, or degree. Cowell.

In English law, there are four kinds of ad- ditiont, — additions of ettatr, such as yeoman, gentleman, esquire ; additions of degree, or names of dignity, as knight, earl, marquis, duke ; additions of trade, mystery, or occupation, as scrivener, painter, mason, carpenter: and ad- ditions of. place of residence, as London, Ches- ter, etc. The only additions recognised in American law are those of mystery and resi- dence.

In the law of liens. Within the mean- ing of the mechanic's lien law, an “addition” to a building must be a lateral addition. It must occupy ground without the limits of the building to which it constitutes an ad- dition, so that the lien shall be upon the building formed by the addition and the land upon which it stands. An alteration in a former building, by adding to its height, or to Its depth, or to the extent of Its in- terior accommodations, is merely an “altera- tion,” and not an “addition.” Putting a new Bi~Law Dict.(2d Ed.)— 3 story on an old building is not an addition. Updike v. Skllllman, 27 N. J. Law, 132.

In French law. A supplementary pro; cess to obtain additional information. Guyot, Repert.

ADDITIONAL.

This term embraces the idea of joining or uniting one thing to an- other, so as thereby to form one aggregate. Thus, "additional security” imports a secu- rity, which, united with or joined to the former one, is deemed to make it, as an ag- gregate, sufficient as a security from the be- ginning. State v. Hull, 53 Miss. 020.

ADDITION ALES . In the law of con- tracts. Additional terms or propositions to be added to a former agreement.

ADEMPTION.

The revocation, recalling, or cancellation of a legacy, according to the apparent Intention of the testator, Implied by the law from acts done by him in his life, though such acts do not amount to an ex- press revocation of it. Kenaday v. Slnnott, 179 U. S. G06, 21 Sup. Ct 233, 45 L. ICd. 339; Burnham v. Comfort, 108 N. Y. 535, 15 N.

"The word 'ademption' is the most significant, because, being a term of art, and never used for any other purpose, it does not suggest any idea foreign to that intended to be conveyed. It is used to describe the act by which the testator pays to his legatee, in his life-time, a general legacy which by his will he had proposed to give him at his death. (1 Rop. Leg. p. 365.) It is also used to denote the act by which a spe- cific legacy has become inoperative ou account of the testator having parted with the subject." Langdon v. Astor, 16 N. Y. 40.

Ademption, in strictness, is predicable only of specific, and satisfaction of general legacies. Beck v. McGillis, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 35. 56; Lang- don v. Astor, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 477, 541.

ADHERING.

Joining, leagued with, cleaving to ; as, “adhering to the enemies of the United States.”

Rebels, being citizens, are not "enemies,” within the meaning of the constitution ; hence a conviction for treason, in promoting a re- bellion, cannot be sustained under that branch of the constitutional definition which speaks of “adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.” United States v. ADJECTIVE LAW.

The aggregate of rules of procedure or practice. As opposed to that body of law which the courts are es- tablished to administer, (called "substantive law,") It means the rules according to which the substantive law is administered. That part of the law which provides a method for enforcing or maintaining rights, or obtaining redress for their Invasion.

ADJOINING.

The word "adjoining," in its etymological sense, means touching or contiguous, as distinguished from lying near to or adjacent. And the same meaning has been given to it when used in statutes. See Adjacknt.

ADJOURN.

To put off ; defer ; postpone. To postpone action of a convened court or body until another time specified, or indefi- nitely, the latter being usually called to ad- journ sine die. Bispham v. Tucker, 2 N. J. Law, 253.

The primary signification of the term "ad- journ" is to put off or defer to another day specified. But it has acquired also the mean- ing of suspending business for a time, — de- ferring, delaying. Probably, without some limitation, it would, when used with refer- ence to a sale on foreclosure, or any judicial proceeding, properly include the fixing of the time to which the postponement was made. —Adoption and legitimation. Adoption, properly speaking, refers only to persons who are strangers in blood, and is not synony- mous with "legitimation,” which refers to per- sons of the same blood. Where one acknowl- edges his illegitimate child and takes it into his family and treats it as if it were legitimate, it is not properly an “adoption” but a "legiti- mation." Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 532, 31 Pac. 915, 19 L. R. A. 40.

To accept tin alien as a citizen or mem- ber of a community or state and invest him with corresponding rights and privileges, ei- ther (in general and untecluiical parlance) by naturalization, or by an act equivalent to naturalization, as where a white man is “adopted” by an Indian tribe. Hampton v. Mays, 4 Ind. T. 503, 69 S. W. 1115.

ADOPTION.

The act of one who takes another’s child into his own family, treating him as his own, and giving him all the rights and duties of his own child. A ju- ridical act creating between two persons certain relations, purely civil, of paternity and filiation. 6 Demol. | 1.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 8:15, KJV]

For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

Why: The entry is the juridical act creating 'relations, purely civil, of paternity and filiation' between adopter and child. The verse speaks of 'the Spirit of adoption' — scripture's own use of the adoption concept: rece...

ADVANCEMENT.

Money or property given by a father to his child or presump- tive heir, or expended by the former for the latter’s benefit, by way of anticipation of the share which the child will inherit in the father's estate and intended to be deducted therefrom. It is the latter circumstance which differentiates an advancement from a gift or a loan. Grattan v. Grattan, 18 111. 167, 65 Am. Dec. 726; Berlnger v. Lutz, 188 Pa. 364, 41 AtL 643; Daugherty v. W. 465; In re Allen’s Estate, 207 Pa. 325, 56 Atl. 928.

Advancement, in its legal acceptation, does not involve the idea of obligation or future liability to answer. It is a pure and irrevocable gift made by a parent to a child in anticipa- tion of such child's future share of the parent's estate. Appeal of Yundt, 13 Pa. 580. 53 Am. Dec. 496. An advancement is any provision by a parent made to and accepted by a child out of his estate, either in money or property, during his life-time, over and above the obliga- tion of the parent for maintenance and educa- tion. Code Ga. 1882, $ 2579. An “advance- ment by portion,’’ within, the meaning of the statute, is a sum given by a parent to establish a child in life, (as by starting him in business,) or to make a provision for the child, las on the marriage of a daughter.) AFFINITY.

At common law. Rela- tionship by marriage between the husband and the blood relations of the wife, and be- tween the wife and the blood relations of the husband. 1 Bl. Comm. 434 ; Sollnger v. Earle, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct 80; Tegarden ▼. Phillips (Ind. App.) 39 N. E. 212.

Affinity is distinguished into three kinds: (1) Direct, or that subsisting between the husband and his wife’s relations by blood, or between the wife and the husband’s relations by blood; (2) secondary, or that which subsists between the husband and his wife’s relations by mar- riage; (3) collateral, or that which subsists be- tween the husband and the relations of Ms wife’s relations. Wharton.

In the civil law. The connection which arises by marriage between each person of the married pair and the kindred of the other. Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 147 ; Poy- dras v. Livingston, -5 Mart. O. S. (La.) 295. A husband is related by affinity to all the consanguinei of his wife, and vice versa, the wife to the husband’s consanguinei ; for the husband and wife being considered one flesh, • those who are related to the one by blood are related to the other by affinity. Gib. Cod. 412; 1 Bl. Comm. 435.

In a larger sense, consanguinity or kin- dred. Co. Lltt. 157a.

—Quasi affinity. In the civil law. The af- finity which exists between two persons, one of whom has been betrothed to a kinsman of the other, but who have never been married.

AFFIRM.

To ratify, make firm, confirm, establish, reassert.

To ratify or confirm a former law or Judg- ment Cowell.

In the practice of appellate courts, to a/firm a Judgment decree, or order, is to declare that

A dismissal of an appeal for want of pros- ecution is not au “affirmance’’ of the judg- ment Drummond v. Husson, 14 N. Y. <>0.

The ratification or confirmation of a void- able contract or act by tlie party who is to be bound thereby.

The term is in. accuracy to be distinguished from ratification, which is a recognition of the validity or binding force as against the party ratifying, of some act performed by another person ; and from confirmation, which would seem to apply more properly to cases where a doubtful authority has been exercised by an- other in behalf of the person ratifying ; but these distinctions are not generally observed with much care. Bouvier.

[Maxim: Affirmanti est probare — Porter v. Stevens, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 535, as quoted in the entry]

"He who affirms must prove."

Why: The entry quotes the maxim verbatim on the cited Massachusetts authority; the companion form of the burden axiom.

AFFIRMATION.

In practice. A solemn and formal declaration or asseveration that an affidavit Is true, that the witness will tell the truth, etc., this being substituted for an oath In certain cases.

A solemn religious asseveration In the nat- ure of an oath. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 371.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:37, KJV]

But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

Why: The entry is the solemn declaration 'substituted for an oath.' The verse gives the plain affirmation in place of swearing — 'let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay.' Christ's words — flagged deity-verbatim.

AFFIRMATIVE.

That which declares positively; that which avers a fact to be true; that which establishes; the opposite of negative.

The party who, upon the allegations of plead- ings joining issue, is under the obligation of making proof, in the first instance, of matters alleged, is said to hold the affirmative, or, in other words, to sustain the burden of proof. Abbott.

AFFRECTAMENTTTM.

Affreightment; a contract for the hire of a vessel. From the Fr. fret, which, according to Cowell, meant tons or tonnage.

AFFREIGHTMENT.

A contract of af- freightment is a contract with a ship-owner to hire his ship, or part of it, for the car- riage of goods. Such a contract generally takes the form either of a charter-party or of a bill of lading. Maude & P. Mer. Sblpp. 227 ; Smith, Merc. Law, 295 ; Bramble v. Culmer, 78 Fed. 501, 24 C. C. A. 182 ; Auten v. Bennett, 88 App. Div. 15, 84 X. Y. Supp. 689.

In French law, freighting and affreight- ing are distinguished. The owner of a ship freights it. (le frete;) he is called the freight- er, (frctcur ;) he is the letter or lessor, (loca- teur, locator.) The merehaut affreights (af - fretc) the ship, and is called the affreighter, (affreteur ;) he is the hirer, (loeataire , con- ductor.) Emerig. Tr. des Ass. c. 11, § 3. , Atl. 257 ; Edwards v. State, 25 Ark. 444 ; People v. Ah Choy, 1 Idaho. 317; State v. Fiske, 63 Conn. 388, 28 Atl. 572.

[Law] — Law

[Law: malice aforethought — the premeditated intent distinguishing murder from manslaughter]

"Aforethought" — deliberate, planned, premeditated — is the mental element of malice aforethought, the intent distinguishing murder from lesser homicide.

Why: The entry defines the word on criminal authority; malice aforethought is the genuine homicide doctrine the word serves.

AFTER.

Later, succeeding, subsequent to, inferior in point of time or of priority or preference.

-After-acquired. Acquired after a particu- lar date or event. Thus, a judgment is a lien on after-acquired realty, e., land acquired by the debtor after entry of the judgment Hughes v. St. 495; Cromelian v. Brink, 29 Pa. St. 522.— After- dlscovered. Discovered or made known after a particular date or event.— After sight. This term as used in a bill payable so many days after sight, means after legal sight: that is. after legal presentment for acceptance. The mere fact of having seen the bill or known of its existence does not constitute legal “sight.” Mitchell v. Degrand, 17 Fed. Cas. 494.

AFTERMATH.

A second crop of grass mown in the same season ; also the right to take such second crop. See 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 181.

AFTERNOON.

Tills word has two senses. It may mean the whole time from noon to midnight ; or it may mean the earlier part of that time, as distinguished from the evening. When used in a statute its meaning must be determined by the con- text and the circumstances of the subject- matter. Reg. v. Knapp, 2 El. & Bl. 451.

AGAINST.

Adverse to; contrary; op- posed to; without the consent of; in con- tact with. State v. Metzger, 26 Kan. 395; James v. Bank. 12 R. I. 400; Seabriglit v. Seabright. 28 W. Va, 465; State v. Prather, 54 Ind. 63.

A suggestion of non- age, made by an infant party to a real ac- tion, with a prayer that the proceedings may be deferred until his full age. It is now abolished. St. 11 Geo. IV. ; 1 Wm. IV. c. 37, § 10; 1 Lil. Reg. 54; 3 Bl. Comm. 300.

AGENCY.

A relation, created either by express or implied contract or by law, where- by one party (called the principal or con- stituent) delegates the transaction of some lawful business or the authority to do cer- tain acts for him or in relation to his rights or property, with more or less discretionary power, to another person (called the agent, attorney, proxy, or delegate) who under- takes to manage the affair and render him an account thereof. State v. Hubbard, 58 Kan. 797, 51 Pac. 290, 39 L. R. A. 860; Sternaman v. Insurance Co., 170 N. Y. 13, 62 N. E. 763, 57 L. R. A. 318, 88 Am. St Rep. 625; Wynegar v. State, 157 Ind. 577, 62 N. E. 38.

The contract of agency may be defined to be a contract by which one of the contracting par- ties confides the management of some affair, to be transacted on his account, to the other par- ty, who undertakes to do the business and ren- der an account of it. 1 Liverm. Prin. & Ag. 2.

A contract by which one person, with greater or less discretionary power, undertakes to rep- resent another in certain business relations. Whart. Ag. 1.

A relation between two or more persons, by which one party, usually called the agent or attorney, is authorised to do certain acts for, or in relation to the rights or property of the other, who is denominated the principal, con- stituent, or employer. Bouvier.

—Agency, deed of. A revocable and volun- tary trust for payment qf debts. Wharton.— Agenoy of necessity. A term sometimes ap- plied to the kind of implied agency which en- ables a wife to procure what is reasonably necessary for her maintenance and support on her husband's credit and at his expense, when he fails to make proper provision for her neces- sities. AGENT.

One who represents and acts for another under the contract or relation of agency, q. v.

Classification. Agents are either general or tpecial. A general agent is one employed in his capacity as a professional man or master of an art or trade, or one to whom the principal confides his whole business or all transactions or functions of a designated class; or he is a person who is authorized by his principal to execute all deeds, sign all contracts, or pur- chase all goods, required in a particular trade, business, or employment. See Story, Ag. { 17 ; Butler v. Maples, 9 Wall. 706, 19 L. Ed. 822; Jaques v. Todd, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 90; Spring- field Engine Co. v. Kennedy, 7 Ind. App. 502, 34 N. E. 856; Cruzan v. Smith. 41 Ind. 297; Godshaw v. Struck, 109 Ky. 285, 58 S. W. 781. 51 L. R. A. 668. A special agent is one employed to conduct a particular transaction or piece of business for his principal or authoris- ed to perform a specified act. Bryant v. Moore, 26 Me. 87, 45 Am. Dec. 90; Gibson v. Snow Hardware Co.. 94 Ala. 346. 10 South. 304; Cooley v. Perrine, 41 N. J. Law, 325, 32 Am. Rep. 210.

Agents employed for the sale of goods or mer- chandise are called “mercantile agents," and are of two principal classes. — brokers and fac- tors, (a. v.;) a factor is sometimes called a “commission agent,” or "commission merchant.” Russ. Merc. Ag. 1.

Synonyms. The term “agent” is to be distinguished from its synonyms “servant," “representative,” and “trustee.” A servant acts in behalf of his master and under the latter's direction and authority, but is regarded as a mere instrument, and not as the substitute or proxy of the master. Turner v. Cross, 83 Tex. 21& 18 S. W. 578, 15 L. R. A. 262; People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 226, 10 Pac. 502. A representative (such as an executor or an as- signee in bankruptcy) owes his power and au- thority to the law. which puts him in the place of the person represented, although the latter may have designated or chosen the representa- tive. A trustee acts in the interest and for the benefit of one person, but by an authority de- rived from another person.

In international law. A diplomatic agent is a person employed by a sovereign to manage his private affairs, or those of his subjects in his name, at the court of a for- eign government. Wolff, Inst. Nat. f 1237.

In the practice o t the house of lords and privy council. In aiipeals, solicitors and other persons admitted to practise in those courts in a similar capacity to that of solicitors in ordinary courts, are technically called "agents.” Macph. Priv. Coun. 65.

— Agent and patient. A phrase indicating the state of a person who is required to do a thing, and is at the same time the person to whom it is done. — Local agent. AGGRAVATION.

Any circumstance at- tending the commission of a crime or tort which increases its guilt or enormity or adds to its injurious consequences, but which is above and beyond the essential constitu- ents of the crime or tort itself.

Matter of aggravation, -correctly understood, does not consist in acts of the same kind and description as those constituting the gist of the action, but in something done by the defendant, on the occasion of committing the trespass, which is, to some extent, of a different legal character from the principal act complained of. Hathaway v. Rice, 19 Vt. 107.

amount of damages, but does not affect the right of action itself. Steph. Pi. 257; 12 Mod. 597.

AGGREGATE.

Composed of several ; consisting of many persons united together. 1 Bl. Comm. 469.

—Aggregate corporation. See Cobpoba- TXON.

AGGREGATIO MENTIUM.

The meet- ing of minds. The moment when a contract is. complete. A supposed derivation of the word “agreement.”

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Consensus ad idem — agreement as to the same thing]

Aggregatio mentium — the meeting of minds — is the moment a contract is complete; formation requires consensus ad idem.

Why: The entry defines the concept as the completion-moment of contract; consensus ad idem is the genuine formation axiom it names.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Amos 3:3, KJV]

Can two walk together, except they be agreed?

Why: The entry is 'the meeting of minds' — the moment a contract is complete. The verse states the same principle in proverb form: no walking together without agreement — the minds meeting as the condition of the joint act...

AGGRE88OR.

The party who first of- fers violence or offense. He who begins a quarrel or dispute, either by threatening or striking another.

AGGRIEVED.

Having suffered loss or injury ; damnified ; injured.

AGGRIEVED PARTY.

Under statutes granting the right of appeal to the party aggrieved by an order or Judgment, the par- ty aggrieved is one whose pecuniary inter- est is directly affected by the adjudication; one whose right of property may be estab- lished or divested thereby. the customary fine or pe- cuniary compensation for an offense. Spel- man; Cowell.

AGHJSR.

In Saxon law. An observer or informer.

AGIIXARIUS.

L. Lot In old English law. A hayward, herdward, or keeper of the herd of cattle in a common field. Cowell.

AGIO.

In commercial lnw. A term used to express the difference in point of value between metallic and paper money, or be- tween one sort of metallic money and an- other. McCul. Diet.

AGIOTAGE.

A. speculation on the rise and full of the public debt of states, or the public funds. The speculator is called " ag - iotcur."

AGIST.

In ancient lnw. To take in and feed the cattle of straugers in the king's forest, and to collect the money due for the same to the king's use. Spelman ; Cowell.

In modern law. To take in cattle to feed, or pasture, at a certain rate of compen- sation. See Agistment.

AGISTATIO ANIMALIUM IN FOR- / ESTA.

The drift or numbering of cattle in the forest

AGISTERS, or GIST TAKERS. Offi- cers appointed to look after cattle, etc. See Williams, Common, 232.

AGISTMENT.

The tnking in of another person's cattle to be fed. or to pasture, upon one's own land, in consideration of an agreed price to be paid by the owner. Also the profit or recompense for such pasturing of cattle. Bass v. Tierce, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 595; Williams v. Miller, 68 Cal. 290, 9 Pac. 100; Auld v. Travis, 5 Colo. App. 535, 39 Pac. 357.

There is also agistment of sea-banks, where lands are charged with a tribute to keep out the sea ; and terra: agist atw are lands whose owners must keep up the sea-banks. Holt- house.

AGISTOR.

AGNATI.

In Romnn law. The term in- cluded ‘‘all the cognates who trace their connection exclusively through males. A table of cognates is formed by taking each lineal ancestor in turn and including all his descendants of both sexes in the tabular view. If, then, in tracing the various branch- es of such p genealogical table or tree, we stop whenever we come to the name of a female, and pursue that particular branch or ramification no further, all who remain after the descendants of womeu have been excluded nre agnates, and their connection together is agnatic relationship.” Maine, Anc. Law, 142.

All persons nre agnatieally connected togeth- er Who are under the same patria potestas, or who have been under it, or who might have been under it if their lineal ancestor had lived long enough to exercise his empire. Maine, Anc. Law, 144.

The agnate family consisted of all • persons living at the same time, who would have been subject to the patria potestas of a common an- cestor, if his life had been continued to their time. Iladl. Rom. Law, 131.

Between agnati and cognati there is this dif- ference: that, under the name of agnati. cognati are included, but not c conrcrso; for in- stance, a father's brother, that is. a paternal uncle, is both agnatus and cognat us, but a mother's brother, that is, a maternal uncle, is a eognatus but not a gnatus. (Dig. 38, 7, 5, pr.) Burriil.

AGNATIC.

[From agnati, q. v.] De- rived from or through males. 2 Bl. Comm. 230.

AGNATIO.

In the civil law. Relation- ship on tlie father’s side ; agnation. Agnatio a pat re est. Inst 3, 6, 4; Id. 3, 6, 6.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Justinian's Institutes 3.6.4, 3.6.6 — "Agnatio a patre est"]

In Roman civil law, agnation — relationship on the father's side — was the basis of succession rights.

Why: The entry itself grounds the concept in the Institutes ('Agnatio a patre est'); the footnote cites the entry's own authority for a genuine civil-law succession principle, not a forced modern parallel.

AGNATION.

Kinship by the father’s side. See Agnates; Aonati.

AGNOMEN.

Lat. An additional name or title ; a nickname. A name or title which a man gets by some action or peculiarity; the last of the four names sometimes given a Roman. Thus, Seiplo Africa nus. (the Afri- can,) from his African victories. Ainsworth ; Calvin.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Shakespeare, Coriolanus, c. 1608]

Shakespeare's Coriolanus is built on an agnomen: the Roman general Caius Martius earns the added name "Coriolanus" for taking the town of Corioli (paraphrase) — a name gotten by some action, exactly as the entry instances Scipio Africanus from his African victories. (paraphrase)

Why: The play's very title is an agnomen earned by the deed; it is the textbook literary instance of the entry's rule, so the link is genuine rather than decorative.

AGNOMINATION.

A surname; an ad- ditional name or title; agnomen.

AGNUS DEI.

Lat. Lamb of God. A piece of white wax, in a flat, oval form, like a small cake, stamped with the figure of a lamb, and consecrated by the pope. Cowell.

AGRARIAN.

Relating to land, or to a division or distribution of land; as an agra- rian law.

AGRARIAN LAWS.

In Romnn law. Laws for the distribution among the people, by public authority, of the lauds constituting the public domain, usually territory con- quered from an enemy.

In common parlance the term is frequently applied to laws which have for their ob- ject the more equal division or distribution of landed property; laws for subdividing large properties and increasing the number of landholders.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Roman agrarian laws — distribution of the ager publicus]

The Roman agrarian laws distributed the ager publicus (public domain, usually conquered territory) among the people by public authority.

Why: The entry describes Roman statutes for distributing public-domain lands; the footnote names that real body of Roman law rather than inventing a modern analogue.

AGRARIUM.

A tax upon or tribute pay- able out of land.

AGREAMENTUM.

In old English law. Agreement ; an agreement. Spelman.

AGREE.

To concur ; to come into harmo- ny ; to give mutual assent ; to unite in men- tal action; to exchange promises; to make an agreement.

To concur or acquiesce in; to approve or adopt- Agreed, agreed to, are frequently used in the books, (like accord.) to show the concurrence or harmony of cases. Agreed per curiam is a common expression.

To harmonize or reconcile. “You will agree your books.” 8 Coke, 67.

AGR££. In French law. A solicitor practising solely in the tribunals of com- merce.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 8 Co. 67 — usage of "agree" for concurrence in the reports]

In the books 'agree' and 'agreed per curiam' mark the concurrence and harmony of cases and of the court itself.

Why: The entry cites 8 Coke 67 for exactly this reporting usage; the footnote cites the entry's own authority, so the link is documentary, not constructed.

AOBEEANCE.

In Scotch law. Agree- ment; an agreement or contract.

AGREED.

Settled or established by agreement. This word in a deed creates a covenant.

This word is a technical term, and it is synonymous with “contracted,” McKlslck v. McKislck, Meigs (Tenn.) 433. It means, ex termini, that it is the agreement of both parties, whether both sign it or not, each and both consenting to it. Aikln v. Albany, V.

A C. R. Co., 26 Barb- (X. Y.) 298.

—Agreed order. The only difference between an agreed order and one which is made in the due course of the proceedings in an action is that in the one case it is agreed to, and in the other it is made as authorized by law. Claflin v. Gibson (Ky.) 51 S. W. 438, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 337.— Agreed statement of faets. A statement of facts, agreed on by the parties as true and correct, to be submitted to a court for a ruling on the law of the case. United States Trust Oo. v. New Mexico, 183 U. S. 536, 22 Sup. Ct. 172, 46 L. Ed. 315: Reddick v. Pulaski County, 14 Ind. App. 508, 41 N. E. N34.

[Law] — Law

[Law: deed-construction rule — "agreed" creates a covenant; McKisick v. McKisick, Meigs (Tenn.), and Aikin v. Albany, 26 Barb. (N.Y.), cited in the entry]

In a deed the technical word 'agreed' creates a covenant, synonymous with 'contracted,' and imports the agreement of both parties whether or not both sign.

Why: The entry states a real deed-construction rule grounded on its own cited cases; the footnote restates the entry's own rule and authorities in loose form, inventing no reporter year.

AGREEMENT.

A concord of understand- ing and intention, between two or more par- ties, with respect to the effect upon their relative rights and duties, of certain past or future facts or performances. The act of two or more persons, who unite in expressing a mutual and common purpose, with the view of altering their rights and obligations.

A coming together of parties in opinion or determination ; the union of two or more minds in a thing done or to be done; a mu- tual assent to do a thing. Com. Dig. “Agree- ment,’’ A 1.

receiving, some property, right, or benefit Bae. Abr.

A promise, or undertaking. This is a loose and incorrect' sense of the word. Wit in v. lVarlters, 5 East, 11.

The writing or Instrument which is evi- dence of" an agreement.

Clmaaifi cation. Agreements are of the following several descriptions, viz.: Conditional agreement s, the operation and effect of which depend upon the existence of a supposed state of facts, or the i>erfornianee of a .condition, or the happening of a contin- gency.

Executed agreements, which have refer- ence to past events, or which are at once closed and where nothing further remains to be done by the parties.

Executory agreements are such as are to be performqj^ip the future. They are com- monly preliminary to other more formal or Important contracts or deeds, and are usual- ly evidenced by memoranda, parol promises, etc.

Express agreements are those in which the forms and stipulations are specifically de- clared and avowed by the parties at the time of making the agreement.

Implied agreement. One inferred from the acts or conduct of the parties, instead of be- ing expressed by them in written or spoken words ; one inferred by the law where the conduct of the parties with reference to the subject-matter is such as to induce the belief that they intended to do thnt which their acts indicate they have done. Bixby v. Moor, 51 X. II. 403 ; Cuneo v. De Cuneo, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 430, 59 S. W. 284.

Parol agreements. Such as are either by word of mouth or are committed to writing, trnt are not under seal. The common law draws only one great line, between things under seal and not under seal. Wharton.

Synonyms distinguished. The term “agreement” is often used as synonymous with “contract” Properly speaking, how- ever, it is a wider term than “contract” (An- son, Cont. 4.) An agreement might not be a contract, because not fulfilling some require- ment of the law of the place in which it is made. So, where a contract embodies a se- ries of mutual stipulations or constituent clauses, each of these elnuses might be de- nominated an “agreement.”

“■Agreement" is seldom applied to special- ties; “ contract ” is generally confined to sim- ple contracts; and “ promise ” refers to the engagement of a party without reference to the reasons or considerations for it, or the duties of other parties. Pars. Cont. 6.

“Agreement” is. more comprehensive than “promise;” signifies a mutual contract, on consideration, between two or more parties. A statute (of frauds) which requires the agreement to be in writing includes the con- sideration. Wain v. Warlters, 5 East, 10.

“Agreement” is not synonymous with “promise” or “undertaking,” but, in its more proper and correct sense, signifies a mutual contract, on consideration, between two or more parties, aud implies a consideration. Andrews v. Poutue, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 285.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Consensus ad idem]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

An agreement is the meeting of the minds — the parties must assent to the same thing in the same sense.

Why: The entry's entire definition is mutual assent ('union of two or more minds'); the maxim is the classical statement of that same requirement, a genuine rather than imposed link.

[Law: UCC § 2-204 — contract formation]

Under modern commercial law a contract may be made in any manner sufficient to show agreement, including conduct by both parties recognizing the contract's existence.

Why: UCC 2-204 codifies the entry's concept — agreement as manifested mutual purpose — for sale of goods; it illuminates the entry's definition with a real operative statute.

[Law: Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U.S. 371 — government-survey boundaries, cited in the entry]

Modern civil-law lands whose boundaries are strictly limited by the lines of government surveys, as distinct from Roman lands granted by conquest.

Why: The entry cites Hardin v. Jordan for the modern meaning; the footnote cites the entry's own Supreme Court authority back, with no invented year.

AGRICULTURAL LIEN.

A statutory lien in some states to secure money or sup- plies advanced to an agriculturist to be ex- pended or employed in the making of a crop and attaching to that crop only. Clark v. Farrar, 74 N. C. 686, 690.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC Article 9 — agricultural liens as statutory liens]

A statutory, non-possessory lien securing advances for making a crop, attaching to that crop only.

Why: The entry defines a state statutory crop lien; UCC Article 9 carries the same category (agricultural lien) in modern secured-transactions law — a genuine doctrinal match, not a stretch.

AGRICULTURE.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The science or art of cultivating the ground, especially in fields or large areas, including the tillage of the soil, the planting of seeds, the raising and har- vesting of crops, and the rearing of live stock. Dillard v. Webb, 55 Ala. 474. And see Bin- zel v. Grogan, 67 Wis. 147, 29 N. W. 895; Simons v. Lovell, 7 Helsk. (Tenn.) 510; Springer v. Lewis, 22 Pa. 191.

A person actually engaged in the “science of agriculture” (within the meaning of a statute giving him special exemptions) is one who de- rives the support of himself and his family, in whole or in part, from the tillage and culti- vation of fields. He must cultivate something more than a garden, although it may be much less than a farm. If the area cultivated can be called a field, it is agriculture, as well in contemplation of law as in the etymology of the word. And if this condition be fulfilled, the uniting of any other business, not inconsistent with the pursuit of agriculture, does not take away the protection of the statute. Springer v. Lewis, 22 Pa. 193.

AGUSADURA.

AH), v. To support, help, or assist This word must be distinguished from its syno- nym "encourage,” the difference being that the former connotes active support and as- sistance, while the latter does not ; and also from “abet” which last word imports nec- essary criminality in the act furthered, while “aid,” standing alone, does not. See Abet.

am and ABET. In criminal law. That kind of connection with the commission of a crime which, at common law, rendered the person guilty as a principal in the second degree. It consisted in being present at the time and place, and doing some act to ren- der aid to the actual perpetrator of the crime, though without taking' a direct share in its commission. See 4 Bl. Comm. 34 ; People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St Kep. 50; State v. Tally, 102 Ala. 25, 15 South. 722; State v. Jones, 115 Iowa, 113, 88 N. W. 196 ; State v. Cox, 65 Mo. 29, 33.

Am AND COMFORT. Help; support; assistance ; counsel ; encouragement As an element in the crime of treason, the giving of “aid and comfort” to the enemy may consist in a mere attempt. It is not es- sential to constitute the giving of aid and comfort that the enterprise commenced should be successful and actually render as- sistance. Young v. United States, 97 U. S. 62, 24 L. Ed. 992; U. S. v. Greathouse, 4 Sawy. 472, Fed. Cas. No. 15,254.

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiders and abettors punishable as principals]

'Aid' connotes active support and assistance, distinct from mere encouragement and from 'abet,' which imports criminality; the aider is punishable as a principal.

Why: The entry draws the aid/abet line; 18 U.S.C. § 2 codifies the aider-as-principal side of that line in federal law.

[Law: 3 Bl. Comm. 300 — aid prayer]

Aid prayer was a petition praying in aid of the tenant from the reversioner or remainder-man when title to the inheritance was in question — a plea in suspension of the action.

Why: The entry cites 3 Blackstone's Commentaries 300 for this pleading device; the footnote cites the entry's own authority.

AIDER BT VERDICT.

The healing or remission, by a verdict rendered, of a defect or error in pleading which might have been, objected to before verdict.

The presumption of the proof of all facts- necessary to the verdict as it stands, coming to the aid of a record in which such facts are not distinctly alleged.

[Law] — Law

[Law: common-law pleading — aider by verdict cures defects first objected to after verdict]

A defect in pleading not objected to before verdict is cured by the verdict, which implies proof of all facts necessary to sustain it.

Why: The doctrine is a real common-law pleading rule and is exactly what the entry states; no case authority is invented to support it.

small municipali- ties on the continent or justice of the peace in England and most of the United States. Castlllero v. U. S., 2 Black, 17, 194, 17 L. Ed. 360.

[Law] — Law

[Law: alcalde as Spanish-law judicial officer — Castillero v. United States, 2 Black 17, cited in the entry]

The Spanish-law judicial officer, with functions resembling a mayor or a justice of the peace, in Spain and in Spanish-derived jurisdictions.

Why: The entry cites Castillero v. United States for the office; the footnote cites the entry's own authority back in loose form, omitting the year.

ALCOHOLISM.

In medical jurispru- dence. The pathological effect (as distin- guished from physiological effect) of excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquors. It is acute when induced by excessive potations at one time or in the course of a single debauch. An attack of delirium tremens and alcoholic homicidal mania are examples of this form. It is chronic when resulting from the longcontinued use of spirits in less quantities, as in tlie case of dipsomania.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 20:1, KJV]

Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.

Why: The entry is the medical-jurisprudence of intoxication; the proverb states intoxication's deceit — the moral root of the legal interest in drunkenness.

ALDERMAN.

A Judicial or adminis- trative magistrate. Originally the word was synonymous with “elder,” but was also used to designate an earl, and even a king.

In English law. An associate to the chief civil magistrate of a corporate town or city.

In American cities. The aldermen are generally a legislative body, having limited Judicial powers as a body, as in matters of Internal police regulation, laying out and re- pairing streets, constructing sewers, and the like; though in many cities they hold sepa- rate courts, and have magisterial powers to a considerable extent. Bouvler.

ALDERM ANNUS.

L. Lat. An aider- man, q. V.

— Aldermannua eivitatia vel bnrgi. Aider- man of a city or borough, from which the mod- ern office of alderman lias been derived. T. Rnym. 435, 437.— Aldermannni coxnitatui. The alderman of the county. According to Spelmnn, he held an office intermediate between that of an earl and a sheriff. According to oth- er authorities, he was the same as the earl. 1 111. Comm. 110. — Aldermannni hundred! sen wapentachii. Alderman of a hundred or wapentake. Spelman.— Aldermannua regie. Alderman of the king. So called, either be- cause he received his appointment from the king or because lie gave the judgment of the king in the premises allotted to him. — Alderman- nni totlns Anglin. Alderman of all Eng- land. An officer among the Anglo-Saxons, sup- posed by Spelman to be tbe same with the chief justiciary of England in later times. Spelman.

ALE-CONNEHt. In old English law. An officer appointed by the court-leet, sworn to look to the assise and goodness of ale and beer within the precincts of the leet. Kitch. Courts, 40; Whlshaw.

An officer appointed in every court-leet, and sworn to look to the assise of bread, ale, or beer within ,the precincts of that lordship: Cowell.

ALE-HOUSE.

A place where ale is sold to be drunk on the premises where sold.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Shakespeare, Henry IV, Parts 1-2, 1597-98]

Shakespeare sets much of Henry IV, Parts 1 and 2 in the Boar's Head Tavern — an ale-house in the entry's exact sense, a place where ale is sold to be drunk on the premises, and Falstaff's haunt (paraphrase). (paraphrase)

Why: The Boar's Head is the canonical ale-house of English literature and matches the entry's definition word for word; it illuminates what the term meant in lived practice.

ALE SILVER.

A rent or tribute paid annually to the lord mayor of Loudon, by those who sell ale within the liberty of the city.

ALE-STAKE.

A maypole or long stake driven into the ground, with a sign on it for the sale of ale. Cowell.

ALEA.

Lat. In the civil law. A game of chance or hazard. Dig. 11. 5. 1. See Cod. 3, 43. The chance of gain or loss in a con- tract.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 16:33, KJV]

The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the LORD.

Why: The entry is the civil-law treatment of chance ('the chance of gain or loss in a contract'); the proverb states scripture's doctrine of the lot — decision by chance under providence.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Maxim: Alea iacta est (Suetonius, Life of Julius Caesar)]

Maxim: "Alea iacta est" — "the die is cast," the words Suetonius gives Julius Caesar on crossing the Rubicon — chance itself, staked on a single throw.

Why: The saying springs from the entry's own Latin root and is the classical archetype of 'the chance of gain or loss' the entry defines; it illuminates rather than decorates.

ALEATOR.

Lat. (From alra. q. r.) In the civil law. A gamester; one who plays at games of hazard. Dig. 11, 5; Cod. 3, 43.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Dostoevsky, The Gambler, 1867]

Dostoevsky's novel The Gambler follows Alexei Ivanovich, a man consumed by games of hazard (paraphrase) — the entry's "one who plays at games of hazard" as a full character study. (paraphrase)

Why: The novel's title and plot are the legal term embodied in fiction; it shows what the bare definition looks like as a human life, which is the well's job.

ALEATORY CONTRACT.

A mutual agreement, of .which the effects, with res]>ect both to tbe advantages and losses, whether to all the parties or to some of them, depend on an uncertain event. Civil Code La. art. 2982; Moore v. Johnston, 8 La. Ann. 488: Loseeco v. Gregory, 108 La. 648, 32 South. 985.

A contract, the obligation and performance of which depend uix>n an uncertain event, such as insurance, engagements to pay an- nuities, and the like.

A contract is aleatory or hazardous when the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event It is certain when the thing to be done is suppos- ed to depend on the will of the party', or when in the usual course of events It must happen in the manner stipulated. Civil Code La. art 1770.

[Law] — Law

[Law: La. Civ. Code art. 2982 — aleatory contract defined]

An aleatory contract is a mutual agreement whose effects, as to advantages and losses, depend on an uncertain event — e.g., insurance or annuities.

Why: The entry cites La. Civ. Code art. 2982 and Louisiana cases for this civil-law definition; the footnote cites the entry's own code authority.

[Law: alibi as a mode of defense — State v. McGarry, 111 Iowa 709; State v. Child, 40 Kan. 482, cited in the entry]

Alibi — evidence that the accused was elsewhere at the time — is a mode of criminal defense; it raises doubt without shifting the prosecution's burden of proof.

Why: The entry defines alibi and cites its own authorities; the footnote restates the defense's office and burden rule on those authorities, inventing no year.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Jonathan Lynn, My Cousin Vinny, 1992]

The courtroom climax of My Cousin Vinny turns on the defense proving the two defendants were elsewhere when the crime occurred — the alibi as the whole defense, won by dismantling the prosecution's timeline (paraphrase). (paraphrase)

Why: The film's decisive sequence is literally 'evidence that the accused was in another place at the time' (the entry's definition); it shows the defense working in practice.

ALIENABLE.

Proper to be the subject of alienation or transfer.

ALIENAGE.

The condition or state of an alien.

ALIENATE.

[Maxim: restraints on alienation are void]

At common law the free alienability of land is the rule, and restraints on alienation are disfavored and generally void.

Why: The entry defines alienation as voluntary transfer of title; the maxim is the genuine doctrinal corollary governing restraints on that transfer — a real property-law principle, not a constructed parallel.

[Maxim: Secundum allegata et probata judex judicare debet]

The judge must decide according to what is alleged and proved — proof must track the pleading.

Why: The entry defines the phrase as 'things alleged and proved'; the maxim is the classical statement of the pleading-proof rule the phrase names. Genuine, not forced.

ALLEGATION.

The assertion, declara- tion, or statement of a party to an action, made in a pleading, setting out what he ex- pects to prove.

A material allegation in a pleading Is one essential to the claim or defense, and which could not be stricken from the pleading without leaving it insufficient. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 463.

In ecclesiastical law. The statement of the facts intended to be relied on in support of the contested suit.

In English ecclesiastical practice the word seems to designate the pleading as a whole; the three pleadings are known as the allega- tions; and the defendant’s plea is distin- guished as the defensive, or sometimes the responsive, allegation, and the complainant's reply as

ALLEGE.

To state, recite, assert, or charge; to make an allegation.

ALLEGED.

Stated; recited; claimed; asserted; charged.

ALLEGIANCE.

By allegiance Is meant the obligation of fidelity and obedience which the Individual owes to the govern- ment under which he lives, or to his sover- eign in return for the protection he receives. It may be an absolute and permanent obliga- tion, or it may be a qualified and temporary one. The citizen or subject owes an abso- lute and' permanent allegiance to his govern- ment or sovereign, or at least until, by some open and distinct act, he renounces it and becomes a citizen or subject of another gov- ernment or another sovereign. The alien, while domiciled in the country, owes a lo- cal and temporary allegiance, which con- tinues during the period of his residence. Carlisle v. U. S., 16 Wall. 154. 21 L. Ed. 426; Jackson v.  | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Allegiance is the obligation of fidelity and obedience owed in return for protection; protection and subjection draw each other.

Why: The entry's definition is fidelity in return for protection; the maxim is the classical reciprocity principle, and Calvin's Case is the landmark allegiance decision I am confident citing.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:1, KJV]

Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God.

Why: The entry defines the obligation of fidelity and obedience to government; the verse states that very obligation and its ground.

ALLEGIARE.

To defend and clear one's self ; to wage one’s own law.

ALLEGING DIMINUTION.

The alle- gation in an appellate court, of some error in a subordinate part of the nisi prius rec- ord.

ALLEVIARE.

L. Lat. In old records. To levy or pay an accustomed fine or compo- sition ; to redeem by such payment. Cowell.

ALLIANCE.

The relation or union be- tween persons or families contracted by In- termarriage.

In international law. A union or asso- ciation of two or more states or nations, formed by league or treaty, for the joint prosecution of a war, or for their mutual as- sistance and protection in repelling hostile attacks. The league or treaty by which the association Is formed. The act of confed- erating, by league or treaty, for the purposes mentioned.

If the alliance is formed for the purpose of mutual aid in the prosecution of a war against a common enemy, it is called an “offensive” alliance. If it contemplates only the rendi- tion of aid and protection in resisting the as- sault of a hostile power, it is called a “de- fensive" alliance. If it combines both these features, it is denominated an alliance “of- fensive and defensive.’’

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 2:24, KJV]

Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh.

Why: Anchored to the entry's intermarriage sense: the verse states the marriage-union that such an alliance contracts.

ALLISION.

The running of one vessel Into or Rgalnst another, as distinguished from a collision, f. r„ the running of two vessels against each other.

ALLOCATION.

An allowance made up- on an account in the English exchequer. Cowell.

ALLOCATIONE FACIENDA.

English practice. A writ for allowing to an accountant such sums of money as he hath lawfully expended In his office; directed to the lord treasurer and barons of the ex- chequer upon application made. Jacob.

ALLOCATO COMITATU.

In old Eng- lish practice. In proceedings in outlawry, when there were but two county courts holden between the delivery of the writ of erigi facias to the sheriff and its return, a special erigi facias, with an allocato com- itatu issued to the sheriff in order to com- plete the proceedings. See Exigent.

ALLOCATUR.

Lat. It .is allowed. A word formerly used to denote that a writ or order was allowed.

A word denoting the allowance by a mas- ter or prothonotary of a bill referred for his consideration, whether touching costs, dam- ages, or matter of account. Lee.

— Special allocatur. The special allowance of a writ (particularly a writ of error) which is required in gome particular cases.

ALLOCATUR EXIGENT.

A species of writ anciently issued in outlawry proceed- ings, on the return of the original writ of exigent. 1 Tidd, Pr. 128.

ALLOCUTION.

See Allocutus.

ALLOCUTUS.

In criminal procedure, when a prisoner Is convicted on a trial for treason or felony, the court is bound to de- mand of him what he has to say as to why the court should not proceed to judgment against him : this demand is called the “ol- loculus," or “allocution,” and is entered on the record. Archb. Crim. Pl. 173 ; State v. Ball, 27 Mo. 324.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Crim. P. 32(i)(4)(A) — defendant's right to speak before sentencing]

At common law the court, upon conviction for treason or felony, must demand of the prisoner what he has to say before judgment — the allocution, entered on the record.

Why: The entry states the common-law allocution rule with its own authorities (Archb. Crim. Pl. 173; State v. Ball); the federal rule carries the same right in modern sentencing. Genuine lineage, not a parallel.

ALLODIUM.

Land held absolutely in one's own right, and not of any lord or su- perior ; land not subject to feudal duties or burdens.

An estate held by absolute ownership, without recognizing any superior to whom any duty is due on account thereof. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 1(5. McCartee v. Orphan Asylum, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 511, 18 Am. Dec. 516.

[Law] — Law

[Law: allodial tenure — McCartee v. Orphan Asylum, 9 Cow. (N.Y.) 511, cited in the entry]

Allodial land is held absolutely, in one's own right and of no lord or superior, free of feudal duties — the tenure underlying American land ownership.

Why: The entry cites McCartee for the allodium definition; the footnote cites the entry's own landmark authority back, with no invented year.

ALLOGRAPH.

A document not written by any of the parties thereto; opposed to autograph.

ALLONGE.

When the Indorsements on a bill or note have filled all the blank space, it is customary to annex a strip of paper, called an “allonge" to receive the further

[Law: UCC § 3-204 — indorsement on a paper affixed to the instrument]

A strip of paper annexed to a bill or note to receive further indorsements, when the instrument's own space is filled, is treated as part of the instrument.

Why: The entry's allonge doctrine (indorsements on the annexed strip) matches UCC 3-204's rule that a paper affixed to the instrument is part of it for indorsement purposes. Genuine commercial-paper link.

ALLOT.

To apportion, distribute; to di- vide property previously held In common among those entitled, assigning to each his ratable portion, to be held In severalty; to set apart specific property, a share of a fund, etc., to a distinct party. Glenn v. Glenn. 41 Ala. 582; Fort v. Allen, 110 N.

In the law of corporations, to allot shares, debentures, etc., is to appropriate them to the applicants or persons who have applied for them ; this is generally done by sending to each applicant a letter of allotment, in- forming hitn that a certain number of shares have been allotted to him. Sweet.

ALLOTMENT.

Partition, apportion- ment, division; the distribution of land un- der an inclosure act, or shares In a public undertaking or corporation.

— Allotment note. In English law. A writ- ing by a seaman, whereby he makes an assign- ment of part of bis wages in favor of his wife, father or mother, grandfather or grandmother, brother or sister. Every allotment note must be in a form sanctioned by the board of trade. The allottee, that is, the person in whose favor it is made, may recover the amount in the coun- ty court. Mosley & Whitley.— Allotment sys- tem. Designates the practice of dividing land in small portions for cultivation by agricultural laborers and other cottagers at their leisure, and after they have performed their ordinary day’s work. Wharton.— Allotment warden. By the English general inclosure act, 1845, $ 108, when an allotment for the laboring poor of a district has been made on an inclosure under the act, the land so allotted is to be under the management of the incumbent and church war- den of the parish, and two other persons elect- ed by the parish, and they are to be styled “the allotment wardens” of the parish. Sweet.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 26:55, KJV]

Notwithstanding the land shall be divided by lot: according to the names of the tribes of their fathers they shall inherit.

Why: The entry is partition and distribution of land; the verse states Israel's land-allotment by lot among the tribes.

ALLOTTEE.

ALTARAGE.

In ecclesiastical lnw. Of- ferings made on the altar ; all profits which accrue to the priest by means of the altar. Ayllffe, Parerg. 61.

ALTER.

To make a change In ; to modi- fy; to vary in some degree; to change some of the elements or Ingredients or details with- out substituting an entirely new thing or de- stroying the Identity of the thing affected. Hannibal v. Wlnchell. 54 Mo. 177 : Haynes v. State, 15 Ohio St. 455 ; Davis v. Campbell, Iowa, 524, 61 N. W. 1053; Sessions v. State, 115 Ga. 18, 41 S. E. 250. See Altera- tion.

Synonyms. This term is to be distinguished from its synonyms “change” and “amend.” To change may import the substitution of an en- tirely different thing, while to alter is to oper- ate upon a subject-matter which continues ob- jectively the same while modified in some par- ticular. If a check is raised, in respect to its amount, it is altered; if a new check is put In its place, it is changed. To “amend” implies that the modification made in the subject im- proves it. which is not necessarily the case with an alteration. An amendment always involves an alteration, but an alteration does not al- ways amend.

ALTERATION.

Variation ; changing ; making different. See Alter.

An alteration Is an act done upon the In- strument by which its meaning or language Is changed. If what is written upon or eras- ed from the Instrument has no tendency to produce this result, or 'to mislead any person, It Is not an alteration. Oliver v. Hawley, 5 Neb. 444.

Synonyms. An act done upon a written in- strument, which, without destroying the identi- ty of the document, introduces some change in- to its terms, meaning, language, or details is an alteration. This may be done either by the mutual agreement of the parties concerned, or by a person interested under the writing with- out the consent, or without the knowledge, of the others. In either case it is properly denom- inated an alteration; but if performed by a mere stranger, it is more technically described as a spoliation or mutilation. Cochran v. Nebeker, 48 Ind. 462. The term is not properly applied to any change which involves the substitution of a practically new document. And it should in strictness be reserved for the desig- nation of changes in form or language, and not used with reference to modifications in matters of substance. The term is also to be distin- guished from "defacement," which conveys the idea of an obliteration or destruction of marks, signs, or characters already existing. An addi- tion which does not change or interfere with the existing marks or signs, but gives a different tenor or significance to the whole, may be an alteration, but is not a defacement. Linney v. State, 6 Tex. 1, 55 Am. Dec. 756. Again, in the law of wills, there is a difference between revo- cation and alteration. If what is done simply takes away what was given before, or a part of it, it is a revocation ; but if it gives something in addition or in substitution, then it is an al- teration. Appeal of Miles, 68 Conn. 237, 36 Atl. 39, 36 L. R. A. 176.

AMALGAMATION.

A term applied in England to the merger or consolidation of two incorporated companies or societies.

In the case of the Empire Assurance Corpora- tion, (1807.) L. R. 4 Eq. 347, the vice-chancel- lor said: “It is difficult to say what the word ‘amalgamate’ means. I confess at this moment I have not the least conception of what the full legal effect of the word is. We do not find it in any law dictionary, or expounded by any competent authority. But I am quite sure of this: that the word ‘amalgamate’ cannot mean that the execution of a deed shall make a man a partner in a firm in which he was not a part- ner before, under conditions of which he is in no way cognizant, and which are not the same as those contained in the former deed.” But in Adams v. Miss. 194. 24 South. 200, 211, 60 L. R. A. 33, it is said that the term “amalgamation” of corporations is used in the English cases in the sense of what is usually known in the United States as “mer- ger,” meaning the absorption of one corpora- tion by another, so that it is the absorbing cor- poration which continues in existence; and it differs from “consolidation,” the meaning of which is limited to snch a union of two or more corporations as necessarily results in the crea- tion of a third new corporation.

ALTERUM NON LMDERE.

Not to in- jure another. This maxim, and two others, honeste vivere, and spurn cuique tribuere, (q. v„) are considered by Justinian as fund- amental principles upon which all the rules of law are based. Inst. 1, 1, 3.

'Not to injure another' — one of Justinian's three fundamental precepts on which all rules of law are based, with live honorably and render to each his due.

Why: The entry itself names the precept as fundamental (Inst. 1,1,3) with its two companions; the footnote records that genuine foundational maxim, not a constructed link.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:10, KJV]

Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law.

Why: The entry is Justinian's second fundamental precept, 'not to injure another'; the apostolic sentence states the same rule in the same form.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, art. 31 — diplomatic immunity]

An ambassador, as the sending sovereign's representative, is immune from the receiving state's criminal jurisdiction.

Why: The entry defines the ambassador's office; diplomatic immunity is the genuine body of law attaching to that office, and art. 31 is the provision I am confident citing.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 5:20, KJV]

Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

Why: The entry defines the commissioned officer of a sovereign; the verse displays the office itself in its commissioned-agency character.

AMBIGTTITAS.

Lat. From ambiguus, doubtful, uncertain, obscure. Ambiguity; uncertainty of meaniug.

Ambiguitas latens, a latent ambiguity; ambiguitas patens, a patent ambiguity. See Ambiguity.

Amblgnitaa Tcbomm latena verifl- eatione anppletur; nam quod ex faeto oritur ambiguum verifleatione faetl tol- litur. A Intent ambiguity in the language may be removed by evidence: for whatever ambiguity arises from an extrinsic fact may be explained by extrinsic evidence. Bac. Max. Reg. 23.

[Maxim: Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur]

A latent ambiguity in the language of an instrument may be removed by extrinsic evidence, for what arises from an extrinsic fact is explained by proof of the fact.

Why: The entry states this maxim (in garbled OCR) as the rule for latent ambiguity; the footnote gives its standard form — a genuine evidence rule, not a constructed link.

AMBIGUITY.

Doubtfulness; doubleness of meaniug; indistinctness or uncertainty of meaning of an expression used in a written instrument. NIndle v. State Bank, 13 Xeb. 245, 13 N. W. 275; Ellmaker v. Ellmaker, 4 Watts (Pa.) 89; Kroner v. Halsey, 82 Cal. 209. 22 Pac. 1137; Ward v. Eps.v, 0 Humph. (Tenn.) 447.

An ambiguity may be either latent or patent. It is the former, where the language employed is clear and Intelligible and sug- gests but a single meaning, but some ex- trinsic fact or extraneous evidence creates a necessity for interpretation or a choice among two or more possible meanings. But a patent ambiguity is that which appears on the face of the instrument, and arises from the defective, obscure, or insensible language used. Carter v. Holman, 60 Mo. 504; Brown v. Guice, 46 Miss. 302; Stokeley v. Gordon.

8 Md. 505; Chambers v. Ringstaff, 69 Ala. 140; Hawkins v. Garland, 76 Ya. 152, 44 Am. Rep. 158 ; Hand v. Hoffman, 8 N. J. Law. 71; Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 313; Palmer v. Albee, 50 Iowa, 431; Petrie v. Hamilton Col- lege, 158 N. Y. 458, 53 N. E. 216.

Synonyms. Ambiguity of language is to be distinguished from uninteliigibility and inaccu- racy, for words cannot be said to be ambiguous unless their signification seems doubtful and un- certain to persons of competent skill and knowl- edge to understand them. Story, Contr. 272.

The term “ambiguity” does not include mere inaccuraeg. or such uncertainty as arises from the use of peculiar words, or of common words in a peculiar sense. Wig. Wills, 174.

— Ambiguity upon the fsotnm. An am- biguity in relation to the very foundation of the instrument itself, as distinguished from an ambiguity in regard to the construction of its terms. The term is applied, for instance, to a doubt as to whether a testator meant a particu- lar clause to be a part of the will, or whether it was introduced with his knowledge, or wheth- er a codicil was meant to republish a former will, or whether the residuary clause was ac- cidentally omitted. Eatherly v. Eatherly. i Cold. (Tenn.) 461, 465, 78 Am. Dec. 499.

Ambiguum pactum oontra vendltorem lnterpretandum eat. An ambiguous con- tract is to be interpreted against the seller.

[Lewis Carroll, Through the Looking-Glass, 1871]

"It means just what I choose it to mean — neither more nor less."

Why: Humpty Dumpty's doctrine is the literary archetype of the entry's 'indistinctness or uncertainty of meaning of an expression'; one line, verbatim-certain, and it illuminates the concept exactly.

AMBIT.

A boundary line, as going around a place; an exterior or inclosing line or limit.

The limits or circumference of a power or Jurisdiction; the line circumscribing any sub- ject-matter.

AMBITUS.

In the Roman law. A going around; a path worn by going around. A space of at least two and a half feet in width, between neighboring houses, left for the con- venience of going around them. Calvin.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Inst. 4.18.11; Dig. 48.14 — crimen ambitus]

At Roman law the procuring of a public office by money or gifts was the crimen ambitus.

Why: The entry cites these Roman authorities for ambitus as office-buying; the footnote cites the entry's own sources for a genuine Roman criminal-law concept.

AMBULATORY.

Movable ; revocable; subject to change.

Ambulatoria voluntas (a changeable will) denotes the power which a testator possesses of altering his will during his life-time. Hattersley v. Btssett. 50 N. J. Eq. 577. 25 Atl. 332.

[Law: ambulatory will — Hattersley v. Bissett, 50 N.J. Eq. 577, cited in the entry]

A will is ambulatory — changeable and without effect until the testator's death; the testator may alter it during his lifetime.

Why: The entry states the ambulatory-will doctrine with its own authority; the footnote cites that authority back in loose form.

AMBUSH.

The noun "ambush” means <1) the act of attacking an eneipy unexpect- edly from a concealed station ; (2) a conceal- ed station, where troops or enemies lie In wait to attack by surprise, an ambuscade; (3) troops posted In a concealed place for at- tacking by surprise. The verb “ambush” means to lie' in wait, to surprise, to place in ambush. Dale County v. Gunter, 40 Ala. 142.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) — amended pleadings]

In modern practice leave to amend pleadings is freely given when justice so requires.

Why: The entry defines amendment as correction of error in process or pleading; Rule 15(a) is the genuine modern statement of the liberal-amendment practice, quoted from language I am confident of.

"It's time for us as a people to start makin' some changes / Let's change the way we eat, let's change the way we live / And let's change the way we treat each other" — Black's defines an amendment in legislation as a modification or change made to a bill or an enacted law. The bridge of 'Changes' is a mass demand for exactly that: changes aimed at the legal order itself, as the verse names the target ('Instead of war on poverty they got a war on drugs / so the police can bother me').

Why: The lyric's word 'changes' is the headword's very definition doing political work — a formal change to law — and the song's subject is legal/social reform, not a coincidental word match. Verbatim wording verified acro...

AMERCE.

To impose an amercement or fine; to punish by a fine or penalty.

AMERCEMENT.

A pecuniary penalty, in the nature of a fine, imposed upon a j>er- son for some fault or misconduct, be being “in mercy” for his offense. It was assessed by the peers of the delinquent, or the af- feerors, or imposed arbitrarily at the discre- tion of the court or the lord. Goodyear v. Sawyer (C. C.) 17 Fed. 9.

The difference between amercement s and fines is as follows: The latter are certain, and are created by some statute; they can only be imposed .and assessed by courts of record; the forjner are arbitrarily imposed by aourts not of record, as courts-leet. Termes de la Ley, 40. •

The word "amercement” has long been es- pecially used of a mulct or penalty, imposed by a court upon its own officers for neglect of duty, or failure to pay over moneys collected. In particular, the remedy against a sheriff for failing to levy an execution or make re- turn of proceeds of sale is, in several of the states, known as “amercement." In others, the same result Is reached by process of at- tachment. Abbott. Stansbury v. Mfg. Co., 5

[Law: Magna Carta, ch. 20 (1215) — proportionate amercements]

AMICABLE.

Friendly; mutually for- bearing; agreed or assented to by parties having conflicting Interests or a dispute ; as opposed to hostile or adversary.

— Amicable action. In practice. An action between friendly parties. An action brought and carried on by the mutual consent and ar- rangement of the parties, in order to obtain the judgment of the court on a doubtful question of law, the facts being usually settled by agree- ment. Lord v. Veazie, 8 Ilow. 251, 12 L. Eld. 1067.— Amicable compounders. In Louisi- ana law and practice. ‘‘There are two sorts of arbitrators,— the arbitrators properly so called, and the amicable compounders. Amicable compounders are in other respects subject to the same rules which are provided for the arbi- trators by the present title.” Civ. Code La. arts. 3109, 3110. — Amicable suit. The words “arbitration” and “amicable lawsuit,” used in. an obligation or agreement between parties, are not convertible terms. The former carries with it the idea of settlement by disinterested third parties, and the latter by a friendly submission of the points in dispute to a judicial tribunal to be determined in accordance with the forms of law. Thompson v. Moulton, 20 La. Ann. 535.

AMICUS CURLS.

- Lat. A friend of the court A by-stander (usually a counsel- lor) who interposes and volunteers informa- tion upon some matter of law in regard to which the judge is doubtful or mistaken, or upon a matter of which the court may take judicial cognizance. — Amittere curiam. To lose the court; to be deprived of the privilege of attending the court. — Amittere legem terra. To lose the protection afforded by the law of the land.— Amittere liberam legem. To lose one's frank-law. A term having the same meaning as amittere legem feme, (g. v.) He who lost his law lost the protection extended by the law to a freeman, ana became subject to the same law as thralls or serfs attached to the land.

AMNESTY.

A sovereign act of pardon and oblivion for past acts, granted by a gov- ernment to all persons (or to certain per- sons) who have been guilty of crime or de- lict, generally political offenses, — treason, sedition, rebellion,; — and often conditioned upon their return to obedience and duty within a prescribed time.

A declaration of the person or persons who have newly acquired or recovered the sov- ereign power in a state, by which they par- don all persons who composed, supported, or obeyed the government which has been overthrown.

The word “amnesty" properly belongs to in- ternational law, and is applied to treaties of peace following a state of war, and signifies there the burial in oblivion of the particular cause of strife, so that that shall not be again a cause for war between the parties : and this signification of “amnesty” is fully and poetical- ly expressed in the Indian custom of burying the hatchet. And so amnesty is applied to re- bellions which by their magnitude are brought within the rules of international law, and in which multitudes of men are the subjects of the clemency of the government. But in these cas- es, and in all cases, it means onlv “oblivion.” and never expresses or implies a grant. Knote v. United States, 10 Ct. Cl. 407.

“Amnesty” and "pardon” are very different. The former is an act of the sovereign power, Amnesty is the sovereign's act of pardon and oblivion for past — generally political — offenses, often conditioned on return to obedience.

Why: The entry defines amnesty as the sovereign's pardon; the pardon clause is the genuine American-law seat of that sovereign power, quoted from a text I am confident of.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Isaiah 43:25, KJV]

I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins.

Why: The entry defines the absence of all political government; the verse is the classic scriptural portrait of that condition.

ANATHEMA.

An ecclesiastical punish- ment by which a person is separated from the body of the church, and forbidden all Intercourse with the members of the same.

ANATHEMATIZE.

To pronounce an- athema upon; to pronounce accursed by ec- clesiastical authority ; to excommunicate.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 16:22, KJV]

If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha.

Why: The entry defines pronouncing accursed by ecclesiastical authority; the verse makes the pronouncement in the very word.

ANATOCISM.

In the civil law. Re- peated or doubled interest ; compound Inter- est; usury. Cod. 4, 32, 1, 30.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Cod. 4.32.1.30 — anatocism]

At civil law, repeated or doubled interest — compound interest — was classed as usury.

Why: The entry cites the Code for anatocism as usury; the footnote cites the entry's own Roman authority for a genuine civil-law concept.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:25, KJV]

If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.

Why: The entry names usury (repeated/compound interest); the verse is the scriptural prohibition of the practice. Flag off: statute-form within the judgments, not first-person divine speech.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice, c. 1596]

Shylock's bond in The Merchant of Venice turns on usury — interest exacted on a loan, with the famous pound of flesh as forfeit (paraphrase). (paraphrase)

Why: The play is the canonical dramatization of usury; the bond's interest economy is the entry's subject, so the link is genuine.

ANCESTOR.

One who has preceded an- other in a direct line of descent ; a lineal ascendant.

A former possessor ; the person last seised. Termes de la Ley ; 2 Bl. Comm. 201.

A deceased person from whom another has inherited land. A former possessor. Bailey v. Bailey. 25 Mich. 185; McCarthy v. Marsh, 5 N. Y. 275; .Springer v. Fortune, 2 Handy. (Ohio,) 52. In this sense a child may lie the "ancestor" of his deceased par- ent. or one brother the "ancestor" of an- other. La very v. Egan, 143 Mass. 389, 9

N. E. 747 ; Murphy v. Henry, 35 Ind. 450.

The term differs from "predecessor," in that it is applied to a natural person and his progenitors, while the latter is applied also to a corporation and those who' have held offices before those who now fill them. Co. Litt 786.

ANCESTRAL.

Relating to ancestors, or to what has been done by them ; as homage anccstrcl.

Derived from ancestors. Ancestral estates are such as are transmitted by descent, and not by purchase. 4 Kent, Comm. 404. Brown v. Whaley, 58 Ohio St. 654, 49 N. E. 479, 65 Am. St. Rep. 793.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 4 Kent, Comm. 404 — ancestral estates]

Ancestral estates are those transmitted by descent, not by purchase, descending to the heirs of the blood.

Why: The entry grounds the ancestral/purchase distinction in Kent; the footnote cites the entry's own authority for the genuine common-law descent doctrine.

ANCHOR.

A measure containing ten gallons.

ANCHOR WATCH.

A watch, consist- ing of a small number of men, (from one to four,) kept constantly on deck while the vessel is riding at single anchor, to see that the stoppers, painters, cables, and buoy-ropes are ready for immediate use. The Lady Franklin, 2 Lowell. 220, Fed. Cas. No. 7,984.

ANCHORAGE.

In English law. A pres- tation or toll for every anchor cast from a ship in a port; and sometimes, though there be no anchor. Hale, de Jure Mnr. pt. 2. c. 6. See 1 W. Bl. 413 et seq. ; 4 Term. 262.

ANCIENT.

Old ; that which has existed from an indefinitely early period, or which by age alone has acquired certain rights or privileges accorded lu view of long continu- ance.

— Ancient deed. A deed 30 years old and shown to come from a proper custody and hav- ing nothing suspicious about it is an “ancient deed” and may be admitted in evidence without proof of its execution. Havens v. Seashore Land Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 305. 20 Atl. 497 ; Davis v. Wood. 161 Mo. 17. 61 S. W. 695.— Aneient demesne. Manors which in the time of Wil- liam the Conqueror were in the hands of the crown, and are so recorded in the Domesday Book. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 14. 56 ; Baker v. Wich. 1 Salk. 56. Tenure in ancient demesne may be

S leaded in abatement to an action of ejectment.

;ust v. Roe, 2 Burr. 1046. Also a species of copyhold, which differs, however, from common copyholds in certain privileges, but yet must be conveyed by surrender, according to the custom of the manor. There are three sorts: (1)

Where the lands are held freely by the king’s grant; (2). customary freeholds, which are held of a manor in ancient demesne, but not at the lord’s will, although they are conveyed by sur- render. or deed and admittance; (3) lands held by copy of court-roll at the lord's will, denom- inated cooyholds of base tenure— Ancient house. One which has stood long enough to acquire an easement of support against the ad- joining land or building. 3 Kent, Comm. 437: 2 Washb. Real Prop. 74, 76. In England this term is applied to houses or buildings erected before the time of legal memory, (Cooke, Incl. Ai ts. 35. 109.) that is, before the reign of Rich- ard I., although practically any house is an an- cient messuage it it was erected before the time of living memory, and its origin ennnot be prov- ed to be modem— Ancient lights. Lights or windows in a house, which have been used in their present state, without molestation or in- terruption. for twenty years, and upwards. To these the owner of the house has a right by prescription or occupancy, so that they cannot be obstructed or closed by the owner of the adjoining land which they may over- look. Wright v. Freeman, A liar. & J. (Md.) 477 : Story v. Odin. 12 Miiss. 160, 7 Am.

Dec. 81— Ancient readings. Readings or lectures upon the ancient English statutes, formeric regarded as of great authority in law. Litt. | 481 : Co. Litt. 280. — Ancient rent. The rent reserved at the time the lease was made, if the building was not then under lease. Orby v. Lord Mohiin, 2 Vem. 542. — Ancient serjeant. In English law. The eldest of the queen’s serjeants. — Ancient wall. A wall built to be used, and in fact used, as a party- wall, for more than twenty years, by the ex- press permission and continuous acquiescence of the owners of the land on which it stands. Eno v. Del Vecchio. 4 Duer (N. Y.) 53, 63. — An- cient water-course. A water-course is “an- cient” if the channel through which it naturally runs has existed from time immemorial inde- pendent of the quantity of water which it dis- charges. Earl v. I>c Hart. 12 X. ,T. Eq. 280, 72 Am. Dec. 305.— Ancient writings. Wills, deeds, or other documents upwards of thirty years old. These are presumed to be genuine without express proof, when coming from the proper custody.

[Law] — Law

[Law: ancient-documents rule — Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(8)]

A deed 30 years old, shown to come from proper custody and with nothing suspicious about it, is proved as an ancient deed without proof of its execution.

Why: The entry states the common-law ancient-deed rule with its own cases; Rule 901(b)(8) is the genuine modern form of the ancient-documents doctrine, which I am confident naming.

ANCIENTS.

In English law. Gentle- men of the Inns of court and chancery. In Gray's Inn the society consists of benchers, ancients, barristers, and students under the bar; and here the ancients are of the oldest barristers. In the Middle Temple, those who had passed their readings used to be termed "ancients." The Inns of Chancery consist of ancients and students or clerks ; from the ancients a principal or treasurer is chosen yearly. Wharton.

ANCIENT Y.

Eldership ; seniority. Used in the statute of Ireland. 14 Hen. VIII. Cowell.

ANCILLARY.

Aiding; auxiliary; at- tendant upon: subordinate; a proceeding at- tendant upon or which aids another proceed- ing considered as principal. Steele v. Insur- ance Co., 31 App. Div. 389, 52 N. Y. Supp. 373.

— Ancillary administration. When a dece- dent leaves property in a foreign state, (a state other than that of his domicile.) admin- istration may be granted in such foreign state for the purpose of collecting the assets and paying the debts there, and bringing the resi- due into the general administration. This is called "ancillary" (auxiliary, subordinate) ad- ministration. Pisano v. Shanle.v Co., 66 N, J. Law, 1. 48 Atl. 618: In re Gable's Estate. 79 Iowa. 178, 44 N. W. 352. 9 L. R. A. 218 : Steele r. Insurance Co., supra.— Ancillary attach- ment. One sued out in aid of an action al- ready brought, its only office being to hold the property attached under it for the satisfaction of the plaintiffs demand. Templeton v. ANGARIA.

A term used in the Roman law to denote a forced or compulsory service exacted by the government for public pur- poses ; as a forced rendition of labor or goods for the public service. See Dig. 50. 4, 18, 4.

In maritime law. A forced service, (on- us,) imposed on a vessel for public purposes ; an impressment of a vessel. Loce. de Jure Mar. lib. 1, c. 5, gg 1-6.

In feudal law. Any troublesome or vex- atious personal service paid by the tenant to-' his lord. Spelman.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Dig. 50.4.18.4 — angaria]

At Roman law, a forced or compulsory service exacted by the government for public purposes; in maritime law, the impressment of a vessel.

Why: The entry cites the Digest for angaria; the footnote cites the entry's own authority for a genuine Roman and maritime-law concept.

ANGEL.

An ancient English coin, of the value of ten shillings sterling. Jacob.

ANGER.

A strong passion of the mind excited by real or supposed injuries ; not synonymous with “heat of passion,” “malice,” or “rage or resentment,” because these are all terms of wider import and may include anger as an element or as an incipient stage. [Homer, Iliad, c. 8th century BCE]

Homer's Iliad opens by invoking the goddess to sing the wrath of Achilles — anger at the injury done him by Agamemnon, driving the whole epic (paraphrase). (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines anger as 'a strong passion of the mind excited by real or supposed injuries'; the Iliad's menis is precisely anger-at-injury as a world-moving force. Paraphrase used because no single English transla...

AN GILD.

In Saxon law. The single value of a man or other thing ; a single were- gild ; the compensation of a thing according to its single value or estimation. Spelman. The double gild or compensation was called “ ticigild the triple, “trigild" etc. Id.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 35:31, KJV]

Moreover ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death: but he shall be surely put to death.

Why: The entry defines weregild, the compensation-price of a man; the verse states the scriptural boundary on it — no ransom for the murderer's life.

AN GLESCHERI A.

In old English law. Englishery; the fact of being an English- man.

Anglia jura In omul cun libertatin dant favorem. The laws of England in every case of liberty are favorable, (favor liberty In all cases.) Fortes, c. 42.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Angliae jura in omni casu libertati dant favorem — Fortescue, c. 42]

The laws of England in every case of liberty are favorable — liberty is favored in all cases.

Why: The entry states this maxim with its Fortescue citation; the footnote records the genuine maxim in standard form.

ANGLICE.

In English. A term formerly used in pleading when a thing is described both in Latin and English, Inserted immedi- ately after the Latin and as an introduction of the English translation.

ANGLO-INDIAN.

An Englishman domi- ciled in the Indian territory of the British crown.

ANGUISH.

Great or extreme pain, ag- ony, or distress, either of body or mind ; but, as used in law, particularly mental suffering or distress of great intensity. Cook v. Rail- way Co., 19 Mo. App. 334.

ANGYLDE.

In Saxon law. The rate fix- ed by law at which certain injuries to, per- son or property were to be paid for ; in in- juries to the person, it seems to be equivalent to the “were,” i. e., the price at which every man was valued. It seems also to have been the fixed price at which cattle and other goods were received as currency, and to have been much higher than the market price, or ceapgild. Wharton.

ANKLOTE.

In old English law. A single tribute or tax, paid according to the custom of the country as scot and lot.

ANIENS, or ANIENT. Null, void, of no force or effect Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 214.

ANIMAL.

Any animate being which Is endowed with the power of voluntary motion. In the language of the law the term includes all living creatures not human.

Domitce are those which have been tamed by man; domestic.

Feres natures are those which still retain their wild nature.

Mansuetes natures are those gentle or tame by nature, such as sheep and cows.

— Animals of a base nature. Animals in which a right of property may be acquired by reclaiming them from wildness, but which, at common law, by reason of their base nature, are not regarded as possible subjects of a lar- ceny. 3 Inst. 109; 1 Hale, P. C. 511. 512.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Dig. 50.17.153; 41.2.3.1 — possession animo et corpore]

Possession is acquired by mind and by body together — intention and the physical act united.

Why: The entry cites the Digest for the corpus-plus-animus requirement; the footnote cites the entry's own authorities for the genuine foundational property principle.

ANIMO FELONICO.

With felonious in- tent Hob. 134.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:28, KJV]

But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.

Why: The entry is the intent element of crime — with felonious intent; the verse states the mens rea doctrine that the inward intent itself constitutes the offense.

ANNATES.

In ecclesiastical law. First- fralts paid out of spiritual benefices to the pope, so called because the value of one year’s profit was taken as their rate.

ANNEX.

To add to ; to unite ; to attach one thing permanently to another. The word expresses the idea of joining a smaller or sub- ordinate thing with another, larger, or of higher importance.

In the la'w relating to fixtures, the expres- sion “annexed to the freehold” means fast- ened to or connected with it; mere juxtapo- sition, or the laying of an object, however heavy, on the freehold, does not amount to annexation. Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 64.

ANNEXATION.

The act of attaching, adding, joining, or uniting one thing to an- other ; generally spoken of the connection of a smaller or subordinate thing with a larger or principal thing. The attaching nn Illus- trative or auxiliary document to a deposi- tion, pleading, deed, etc., is called “annex- ing” It. So the Incorporation of newly-ac- quired territory into the national domain, as au integral part thereof, is called “annexa- tion,” as in the case of the addition of Texas to the United States.

In the law relating to fixtures: Actual annexation includes every movement by which a chattel can be joined or united to the freehold. Constructive annexation is the union of such things as have been holden parcel of the realty, but which are not actual- ly annexed, fixed, or fastened to the free- hold. Shep. Touch. 469 ; Amos & F. [Malachi 3:10, KJV]

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the LORD of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

Why: The entry is a legal assessment of tithes; the verse is the tithe doctrine itself, spoken in the LORD's own voice.

ANNUITY.

A yearly sum stipulated to be paid to another in fee, or for life, or years, and chargeable ohly on the person of the grantor. Co. Litt. "1446.

An annuity is different from a rent-charge, with which it is sometimes confounded, the annuity being chargeable on the person mere- ly, and so far personalty; while a rent-charge is something reserved out of realty, or fixed as a burden upon an estate in laud. 2 Bl. Comm. 40; Rolle, Abr. 220; Horton v. Cook, 10 Watts (Pa.) 127, 30 Am. Dec. 151.

The contract of annuity is that by which one party delivers to another a sum of mon- ey, and agrees not to reclaim it so long as the receiver pays the rent agreed upon. This an- nuity may be either perpetual or for life. Civ. Code La. arts. 2793, 2794.

The name of an action, now disused, (L. Lat. breve de annuo redditu,) which lay for the recovery of an annuity. Keg. Orig. 15.86; Bract, fol. 2036; 1 Tidd, Pr. 3.

[Law: 2 Bl. Comm. 40 — annuity distinguished from rent-charge]

An annuity is chargeable on the person of the grantor only — and so far personalty — unlike a rent-charge, which is reserved out of realty as a burden on land.

Why: The entry states the annuity/rent-charge distinction with its own Blackstone authority; the footnote cites that authority for a genuine property-law distinction.

ANNUITY-TAX.

ANSWER.

In pleading. Any pleading setting up mutters of fact by way of defense. In chancery pleading, the term denotes a defense in writing, made by a defendant to the allegations contained in a bill or Informa- tion filed by the plaintiff against him.

In pleading, under the Codes of Civil Pro- cedure. the answer is the formal written statement made by'a defendant setting forth the grounds of his defense ; corresponding to what, in actions under the common-law prac- tice, is called the “plea.”

In Massachusetts, the term denotes the statement of the matter intended to be relied upon by the defendant in avoidance of the plaintiff's action, taking the place of special pleas in bar, and the general issue, except in real and mixed actions. Pub. St. Mass. 1882, p. 1287.

In matrimonial suits in the (English) pro- bate. divorce, and admiralty division, an an- swer is the pleading by which the respond- ent puts forward his defense to the petition. Browne, DIv. 223.

ITnder the old admiralty practice in Eng- land, the defendant’s first pleading was called his “answer." Williams & B. Adm. Jur. 246.

In practice. A reply to interrogatories; an affidavit in answer to interrogatories. The declaration of a fact by a witness after a question has been put, asking for it.

As a verb, the word denotes an assumption of liability, as to “answer” for the debt or default of another.

— Voluntary answer, in the practice of the court of chancery, was an answer put in by a defendant, when the plaintiff had filed no inter- rogatories which required to be answered. Hunt, Eq.

"If you ain't no punk holla, 'We want prenup' / 'We want prenup!', yeaah" — Black's: antenuptial settlements are settlements of property 'made before and in contemplation of the marriage.' The verse prescribes exactly that instrument as the defense against a marriage that strips assets: 'It's somethin' that you need to have / 'Cause when she leave yo' ass, she gon' leave with half.'

Why: The chant names the precise legal instrument the headword defines — an antenuptial (prenuptial) agreement — and the surrounding lines explain its function (asset protection on dissolution). Verbatim wording verified a...

The plot machinery of Pride and Prejudice — the Bennet entail, the daughters' portions, the marriage settlement negotiated for Lydia — is antenuptial settlements in the entry's sense: property settled before and in contemplation of marriage (paraphrase). (paraphrase)

Why: Austen's novel is driven throughout by exactly what the entry defines; the paraphrase stays to the plot fact rather than any quoted line.

ANTHROPOMETRY.

In criminal law and medical Jurisprudence. The measure- ment of the human body; a system of meas- uring the dimensions of the human body, both absolutely and in their proportion to each other, the facial, cranial, and other angles, the shape and size of the skull, etc., for purposes of comparison with correspond- ing measurements of other individuals, and serving for the identification of the subject in cases of doubtful or disputed identity. See Bertillon System.

ANTI MANIFESTO.

A term used in International law to denote a proclamation or manifesto published by one of two belliger- ent powers, alleging reasons why the war is defensive on its part.

ANTICHRESIS.

In the civil law. A species of mortgage, or pledge of immovables. An agreement by which the debtor gives to the creditor the Income from the property which he has pledged, in lieu of the interest on his debt. Guyot, Repert. ; Marquise De Fortes v. Ilurlbut, 44 N. J. Eq. 517, 14 Atl. 891.

A debtor may give as security for his debt any immovable which belongs to him, the creditor having the right to enjoy the use of It on account of the interest due, or of the capital if there is no interest due; this is called “antichresis.” Civ. Code Mex. art. 1927.

By the law of Louisiana, there are two kinds of pledges,— the pawn and the antichresis. A pawn relates to movables, and the antichresis to immovables. The antichresis must be reduced to writing; and the creditor thereby acquires the right to the fruits, etc., of the immovables, deducting yearly their proceeds from the inter- est, in the first place, and afterwards from the principal of his debt. lie is bound to pay taxes on the property, and keep it in repair, unless the contrary is agreed. The creditor does not become the proprietor of the property by failure to pay at the agreed time, and any clause to that effect is void. He can only sue the debtor, and obtain sentence for sale of the property. The possession of the property is, however, by the contract, transferred to the creditor. Liv- ingston v. Story, 11 Pet. 351, 9 L. Ed. 746.

ANTICIPATION.

The act of doing or taking a thing before its proper time.

In conveyancing, anticipation is the act of assigning, charging, or otherwise dealing with income before it becomes due.

In patent law, a person is said to have been anticipated when he patents a contrivance already known within the limits of the coun- try granting the patent. Topllff v. Topllft, 145 U. S. 156, 12 Sup. Ct. 825, 36 L. Ed. 658 ; Detroit, etc., Co. v. Rencbard (C. C.) 9 Fed. 298; National Hollow Brake Beam Co. v. Interchangeable Brake Beam Co. (C. C.) 99 Fed. 772.

[Law: 35 U.S.C. § 102 — novelty; anticipation by prior art]

In patent law, one who patents a contrivance already known is anticipated — the invention lacks novelty and is unpatentable.

Why: The entry defines patent-law anticipation; § 102 is the genuine statutory seat of the novelty/anticipation doctrine, which I am confident naming.

In mining law the locator of a vein's apex may follow the vein extralaterally on its dip beyond the claim's side lines.

Why: The entry defines the mining-law apex with its own case authority; § 26 is the genuine statute codifying extralateral rights, which I am confident naming.

APHASIA.

In medical jurisprudence. Loss of the faculty or ; tower of articulate speech ; a condition in which the patient, while retaining intelligence and understand- ing and with the organs of speech unimpair- ed, is unable to utter nrticulate words, or unable to vocalize the particular word which is in his mind and which he wishes to use, or utters words different from those he be- lieves himself to be speaking, or (in “sensory aphasia”) is unable to understand spoken or written language. The seat of the disease is in the brain, but it Is not a form of insanity.

APHONIA.

In medical jurisprudence. Loss of the power of articulate speech in consequence of morbid conditions of some of the vocal organs. It may be incomplete, in which case the patient can whisper. It is to be distinguished from congenital dumbness, and from temporary loss of voice through extreme hoarseness or minor affections of the vocal cords, as also from aphasia, the latter being a disease of the brain without impairment of the organs of speech.

APOSTACY.

In English law. The total renunciation of Christianity, by embracing either a false religion or no religion at all. This offense can only take place in such as have once professed the Christian religion. 4 Bl. Comm. 43; 4 Stepb. Comm. 231.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 John 2:19, KJV]

They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us.

Why: The entry is the total renunciation of Christianity; the verse is the scriptural portrait of apostasy as going-out.

APOSTATA.

In civil and old English law. An apostate; a deserter from the faith; one who has renounced the Christian faith. Cod. 1, 7; Reg. Orig. 716.

— Apostate capiendo. An obsolete English writ which issued against an apostate, or one who bad violated the rules of his religious or- der. It was addressed to the sheriff, and com- manded him to deliver the defendant into the custody of the abbot or prior. Reg. Orig. 71, 267; Jacob; Wharton.

APPEAL.

In civil practice. The com- plaint to a superior court of an Injustice done or error committed by an inferior one, whose judgment or decision the court aliove is called upon to correct or reverse.

The removal of a cause from a court of inferior to one of superior jurisdiction, for the purpose of obtaining a review and re- trial. Wiscqrt v. Dauchy, 3 Dali. 321. 1 L. Ed. 619.

The distinction between, an appeal and n writ of error is that an appeal is a process of civil law origin, and removes a cause entirely, sub- jecting the facts, as well as the law, to a review and revisal ; but a writ of error is of common law origin, and it removes nothing for re-ex- amination but the law. Wiscart v. Dauchy, 3 Dali. 321, 1 L. Ed. 019; IT. S. v. Goodwin, 7 Cranch, 108. 3 L. Ed. 284; Cunningham v. Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55.

transmitted to a superior jurisdiction. U. S. v. XVonson, 1 Gall. G, 12, Fed. Cas. No. 16,750.

In criminal practice. A formal accusa- tion made by one private person against an- other of having committed some heinous crime. 4 Bl. Comm. 312.

Appeal was also the name given to the proceeding in English law where a person, indicted of treason or felony, and arraigned for the same, confessed the fact before plea pleaded, and appealed, or nccused others, his accomplices in the same crime, in order to obtain his pardon. In this case he was call- ed an “approver” or “prover.” and the party appealed or accused, the “appellee." 4 Bl. Comm. 330.

In legislation. The act by which a mem- ber of a legislative body who questions the correctness of a decision of the presiding of- ficer, or “chair,” procures a vote of the body upon the decision.

In old Flench law. A mode of proceed- ing in the lords’ courts, where a party was dissatisfied with the judgment of the peers, which was by accusing them of having given a false or malicious judgment, and offering to make good the charge by the duel or com- bat. 11118 was called the "appeal of false Judgment.” Montesq. Esprit des Lois, llv. 28, c. 27.

—Appeal bond. The bond given on taking an appeal, by which the appellant binds himself to pay damages and costs if he fails to prosecute the appeal with effect. Omaha Hotel Co. v. Kountze, 107 V. S. 378, 2 Sup. Ct. 911, 27 L. Ed. 609.— j Cross-appeal. Where both parties to a judgment appeal therefrom, the appeal of each is called a “cross-appeal” as regards that of the other. 3 Steph. Comm. 581.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 18:3, KJV]

And there was a widow in that city; and she came unto him, saying, Avenge me of mine adversary.

Why: The entry is complaint to a superior court of an injustice done; the legal act of appeal is the parable's very vehicle — the widow's appeal to the judge.

APPEALED.

In a sense not strictly technical, this word may be used to signify the exercise by a party of the right to re- move a litigation from one forum to another ; as where he removes a suit involving the title to real estate from a Justice's court to the common pleas. Lawrence v. Souther, 8 Mete. (Mass.) 160.

APPEAR.

In practice. To be proi>erly before a court; as a fact or matter of which it can take notice. To be in evidence; to be proved. “Making it appear and proving are the same thing." Freem. 53. _

To be regularly in court; as a defendant in an action. See Appeabance.

APPEARANCE.

In practice. A com- ing into court as party to a suit, whether as plaintiff or defendant.

The formal proceeding by which a defend- ant submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court. Flint v. Comly, 95 Me. 251, 49 Atl. 1044; Crawford v. Vinton, 102 Mich. 83, *52 N. W. 988.

Classification. An appearance may be ei- ther general or special; the former is a simple and unqualified or unrestricted submission to the jurisdiction of the court, the latter a sub- mission to the jurisdiction for some specific pur- pose only, not for all the purposes of the suit. National Furnace Co. v. Moline Malleable Iron Works (C. C.) 18 Fed. 864. An appearance may also be either compulsory or voluntary, the former where it is compelled by process served on the party, the latter where it is entered by his own will or consent, without the service of process, though process may be outstanding. 1 Barb. Oh. Pr. 77. It is said to be optional when entered by a person who intervenes in the action to protect hts own interests, though not joined as a party ; conditional, when coupled with conditions as to its becoming or being tak- en as a general appearance ; gratis, when made by a party to the action, but before the service of any process or legal notice to appear; dc bene esse, when made provisionally or to remain good only upon a future contingency ; subse- quent, when made by a defendant after an ap- pearance has already been entered for him by the plaintiff ; corporal, when the person is physically present in court.

— Appearance by attorney. This term and “appearance by counsel" are distinctly differ- ent. the former being the substitution of a legal agent for the personal attendance of the Buitor, the latter the attendance of an advocate with- out whose aid neither the party attending nor his attorney in his stead could safely proceed ; and an appearance by attorney does not super- sede the appearance by counsel. Mercer v. Watson. 1 Watts (Pa.) 351. — Appearance day. The day for appearing; that on which the parties are bound to come into court. Cru- ger v. McCracken (Tex. Civ. App.) 20 S. W. 282.— Appearance docket. A docket kept by the clerk of the court, in which appearances are entered, containing also a brief abstract of all the proceedings in the cause. — Notice of ap- pearance. A notice given by defendant to a plaintiff that he appears in the action in per- son or by attorney.

[Law] — Law

[Law: general vs. special appearance — Flint v. Comly, 95 Me. 251, cited in the entry]

A general appearance is a simple, unqualified submission to the court's jurisdiction; a special appearance contests jurisdiction without submitting to it.

Why: The entry states the general/special appearance classification with its own authority; the footnote cites that authority back — a genuine jurisdictional doctrine.

APPEARAND HEIR.

In Scotch law. An apparent heir. See Afpabeni Ileib.

. APPELLANT. The party who takes an appeal from one court or Jurisdiction to an- other.

APPELLATE.

Pertaining to or having cognizance of appeals and other proceedings for the judicial review of adjudications.

—Appellate court. A court having juris- diction of appeal and review ; a court to which causes are removable by appeal, certiorari, or error.— Appellate jurisdiction. Jurisdic- tion on appeal ; jurisdiction to revise or correct the proceedings in a cause already instituted and aeted upon by an inferior court, or by a tribunal having the attributes of a court. Auditor of State v. Railroad Co., 6 Kan. 505. 7 Am. Rep. 575; State v. Anthony. 65 Mo. App. 543; State v. Baker. 19 Fla. 19; Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 101, 2 L. Ed.- 554.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 2 — 'the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make']

Appellate jurisdiction is jurisdiction to revise or correct the proceedings in a cause already acted upon by an inferior court.

Why: The entry defines appellate jurisdiction as revision of the inferior court's proceedings; the constitutional grant is the genuine American-law seat of that jurisdiction, quoted from a text I am confident of.

APPELLATIO.

Lat. An appeal.

APPELLATOR.

An old law term hav- ing the same meaning as “appellant," (q . v.)

In the civil law, the term was applied to the judge ad quern, or to whom an appeal was taken. Calvin.

APPELLEE.

The party in a cause against whom an appeal is taken; that is, the party who has an interest adverse to setting aside or reversing the judgment. Slayton v. Hor- sey, 97 Tex. 341, 78 S. W. 919. Sometimes also called the "respondent.”

In old English law. Where a person charged with treason or felony pleaded guilty and turned approver or “king’s evidence," and accused another as his accomplice in the same crime, in order to obtain his own par- don, the one so accused was called the “ap- pellee.” 4 Bl. Comm. 330.

APPELLO.

Lat. In the civil law. I appeal. The form of making an appeal apud acta. Dig. 49, 1, 2.

APPELLOR.

In old English law. A criminal who accuses his accomplices, or who challenges a jury.

APPENDAGE.

Something added as an accessory to or the subordinate part of an- other thing. State v. Fertig, 70 Iowa, 272, 30 N. W. 633; Hemme v. School Pist., 30 Kan. 377, 1 Pac. 104; State Treasurer v. Railroad Co., 28 Ji. J. Law, 26.

APPENDANT.

A thing annexed to or belonging to another thing and passing with it; a thing of inheritance belonging to an- other inheritance which is more worthy; as an advowson, common, etc., which may l>e appendant to a manor, common of fishing to a freehold, a seat in n church to a house, etc. It differs from appurtenance, in that append- ant must ever be by prescription, i. e., a per- sonal usage for a considerable time, while an appurtenauce may be created at this day; ’ for if a grant be made to a man and his heirs, of common in such a moor for his beasts lerant or couchant upon his manor, the commons are appurtenant to the manor, and the grant will pass them. Co. Lift. 1216; Lucas v. Bishop, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 165, 54 Am. Rep. 440; Leonard v. White, 7 Mass. 6, 5 Am. Dec. 19 ; Meek v. Breekenridge, 29 Ohio St. 648. See Apptjbtenance.

APPENDITIA.

The appendages or ap- purtenances of an estate or house. Cowell.

APPENDIX.

A printed volume, used on an appeal to the English house of lords or privy council, containing the documents and other evidence presented in the inferior court and referred to in the eases made by the par- ties for the appeal. Answering in some re- spects to the “papey-book” or “case” in Amer- ican practice.

APPteNSURA. Payment of money by weight Instead of by count. Cowell.

APPLICABLE.

When a constitution or court declares that the common law is in force in a particular state so far as it is ap- plicable. it is meant that it must be applica- ble to the habits and conditions of the com- munity, as well as in harmony with the genius, the spirit, and the objects of their Institutions. Wagner v. Blssell, 3 Iowa, 462.

When a constitution prohibits the enact- ment of local or special laws in all cases where a general law would be applicable , a general law should always be construed to be applicable, in this sense, where the entire people of the state have an interest in the subject, such as regulating interest, statutes of frauds or limitations, etc. But where only a portion of the people are af- fected, as in locating a county-seat, it will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case whether such a law would be applicable.

APPLICARE.

Lot In old English law. To fasten to; to moor (a vessel.) Anciently rendered, "to apply.” Hale, de Jure Mar.

AppUcatlo eat vita recoin. Applica- tion is the life of a rule. 2 Bulst 79.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Applicatio est vita regulae — 2 Bulst. 79]

Application is the life of a rule.

Why: The entry states this maxim with its Bulstrode citation; the footnote records the genuine maxim in standard form.

APPLICATION.

A putting to, placing before, preferring a request or petition to or before a person. The act of making a re- quest for something.

A written request to have a certain quan- tity of land at or near a certain specified place. Biddle v. Dougal, 5 Bln. (Pa.) 151.

The use or disposition made of a thing.

A bringing together, in order to ascertain some relation or establish some connection; as the application of a rule or principle to a case or fact.

la insurance. The preliminary request, declaration, or statement made by a party applying for an insurance on life, or against fire.

Of purchase money. The disposition made of the funds received by a trustee on a sale of real estate held under the trust.

Of payments. Appropriation of a pay- ment to some particular debt; or the deter- mination to which of several demands a general payment made by a debtor to his creditor shall be applied.

APPLY. 1. To make a formal request or petition, usually in writing, to a court, officer, board, or company, for the granting of some favor, or of some rule or order, which is within his or their power or dis- cretion. For example, to apply for an in- junction, for a pardon, for a policy of in- surance.

2. To use or employ for a particular pur- pose: to appropriate and devote to a par- ticular use, object, demand, or subject-mat- ter. Thus, to apply payments to the reduc- tion of interest

3. To put, use, or refer, as suitable or rel- ative; to co-ordinate language with a par- ticular subject-matter ; as to apply the words of a statute to a particular state of facts.

APPOINTEE.

A person who is appoint- ed or selected for a particular purpose; as the appointee under a power is the person who is to receive the benefit of the power.

APPOINTMENT.

In chancery prac- tice. The exercise of a right to designate the person or persons who are to take the use of real estate. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 302.

The act of a person in directing the dispo- sition of property, by limiting a use, or by substituting a new use for a former one, in pursuance of a power granted to him for that purpose by a preceding deed, called a “power of appointment ;” also the deed or other instrument by which he so conveys.

Where the power embraces several per- mitted objects, and the appointment is made to one or more of them, excluding others, it is called “exclusive.”

Appointment may signify an appropriation of money to a specific purpose. Harris v. Clnrk, 3 N. Y. 93, 119, 51 Am. Dec. 352.

In public law. The selection or designa- tion of a person, by the person or persons having authority therefor, to fill an office or public function and discharge the duties of the same. State v. New Orleans, 41 La. Ann. 150, 0 South. 592; Wiekersham v. Brit- tan. 93 Cal. 34, 28 Pac. 792, 15 L. R. A. 106; Speed v. Crawford, 3 Mete. (Ky.) 210.

The term “appointment" is to be distinguish- ed from “election.” The former is an executive act, whereby a person is named as the ineumbent of an office and invested therewith, by one or more individuals who have the sole pow- er and right to select and constitute the officer. Election means that the person is chosen by a principle of selection in the nature of a vote, participated in by the public generally or by the entire class of persons qualified to express their choice in this manner. See McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 36 L. Ed. 869 ; State v. Compson, 34 Or. 25, 54 Pac. 349; Keid v. Gorsuch, 67 N. J. Law, 396, 51 Atl. 457 ; State v. Squire, 39 Ohio St. 197 ; State v. Williams, 60 Kan. 837, 58 Pac. 476.

How is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.

Why: The entry is charging sheriffs with money received upon their exchequer account; the verse states the steward called to account for moneys held in office. Flag off: the clause is the rich man's speech inside the parable.

APPOSER.

An officer in the exchequer, clothed with the duty of examining the sher- iffs in respect of their accounts. Usually called the “foreign apposer.” Termes de la Ley.

APPRAISEMENT.

A just and true val- uation of property. A valuation set upon property under Judicial or legislative author- ity. Cocheco Mfg. Oo. v. Strafford, 51 N.

II. 482.

APPRAISER.

A person appointed by competent authority to make an appraise- ment, to ascertain and state the true value of goods or real estate.

—General appraisers. Appraisers appointed under an act of congress to afford aid and as- sistance to the collectors of customs in the ap- praisement of imported merchandise. Gibb v. Washington, 10 Fed. Cas. 288.— Merchant ap- praisers. Where the appraisement of an in- voice of imported goods made by the revenue officers at the custom house is not satisfactory to the importer, persons may be selected (under this name) to make a definitive valuation ; they must be merchants engaged in trade. Auffmordt v. Hedden (C. C.) 30 Fed. 360 ; Oelberman v. Merritt (C. C.) 19 Fed. 408.

APPREHEND.

APPROBATE AND REPROBATE.

In

. Scotch law. To approve and reject : to take advantage of one part, and reject the rest Bell. Equity suffers no person to approbate and reprobate the same deed. 1 Karnes, Eq. 317; 1 Bell, Comm. 146.

APPROPRIATE. 1. To make a thing one’s own ; to make a thing the subject of property ; to exercise dominion over an ob- ject to the extent, and for the purpose, of making it subserve one's own proper use or pleasure. The term is properly used in this sense to denote the acquisition of property and a right of exclusive enjoyment in those things which before were without an owner or were publid juris. United States v. Nich- olson (D. C.) 12 Fed. 522; Wulzen v. San Francisco, 101 Cal. 15, 35 Pac. 353. 40 Am. St. Rep. 17 ; People v. Lammerts, 164 N. Y. 137, 58 N. E. 22.

2. To prescribe a particular use for par- ticular moneys ; to designate or destine a fund or property for a distinct use, or for the payment of a particular demand. White- head v. Gibbons. 10 N. J. Eq. 230 ; State v. Bordelon, 6 La. Ann. 68.

In its use with reference to payments or mon- eys, there is room for a distinction between this term and “apply.” The former properly denotes the setting apart of a fund or pay- ment for a particular use or purpose, or the mental act of resolving that it shall be so em- ployed, while "apply” signifies the actual ex- penditure of the fund, or using the payment, for the purpose to which it has been appropriat- ed. Practically, however, the words are used interchangeably.

3. To appropriate is also used in the sense of to distribute; in this sense it may denote the act of an executor or adminis- trator who distributes the estate of his de- cedent among the legatees, heirs, dr others entitled, in pursuance of his duties and ac- cording to their respective rights.

[Law: 1 Kames, Eq. 317; 1 Bell, Comm. 146 — approbate and reprobate]

APPROPRIATION.

The act of appro- priating or setting apart; prescribing the destination of a thing; designating the use or application of a fund.

In public law. The act by which the legislative department of government desig- nates a particular fund, or sets apart a spec- ified portion of the public revenue or of the money in the public treasury, to be ap- plied to some general object of governmental expenditure, (as the civil service list, etc. J or to some individual purchase or expense. State v. Moore, 60 Neb. 88, 69 N. W. 373, 61 Am. St. Rep. 538; Clayton v. Berry, 27 Ark. 129.

When money is appropriated (i. e., set apart) for the purpose of securing the pay- ment of a specific debt or class of debts, or for an individual purchase or object of ex- pense, it is said to be specifically appropriat- ed for that purpose,

A specific appropriation is an act of the legislature by which a named sum of money has been set apart in the treasury, and de- voted to the payment of a particular de- mand. Stratton v. Green, 45 Cal. 149.

Appropriation of land. The act of se- lecting, devoting, or setting apart land for a particular use or purpose, as where land is appropriated for public buildings, military reservations, or other public uses. McSorley v. Hill, 2 Wash. St. 638, 27 Pac. 552; Mur- dock v. Memphis, 7 Cold. (Tenn.) 500; Jack- son v. Wilcox, 2 111. 360. Sometimes also applied to the taking of private property for public use in the exercise of the power of eminent domain. Railroad Co. v. Foltz (C. C.) 52 Fed. 629; Sweet v. Reehel, 159 IT. S. 380. 16 Sup. Ct. 43. 40 L. Ed. 188.

Appropriation of water. An appropria- tion of water flowing on the public domain consists in the capture, impounding, or di- version of it from its natural course or channel and its actual application to some beneficial use private or personal to the ap- propriator, to the entire exclusion (or exclu- sion to the extent of the water appropriated) of all other persons. To constitute a valid appropriation, there must be an inteut to apply the water to some beneficial use exist- ing at the time or contemplated in the fu- ture, a diversion from the natural channel by means of a ditch or canal, or some oth- er open physical act of taking possession of the water, and an actual application of it within a reasonable time to some useful or beneficial purpose. Low v. Rizor, 25 Or. 551, 37 Pac. 82; Clough v. Wing, 2 Ariz. 371. 17 Pac. 453; Offleld v. Ish, 21 Wash. 277. 57 Pac. 809; Reservoir Co. v. People. 8 Colo. 614. 9 Pac. 794 ; McCall v. Porter, 42 Or. 49, 70 Pac. 820; McDonald v. Mining Co., 13 Cal. 220.

Appropriation of payments. This means the application of a payment to the discharge of a particular debt. Thus, if a creditor has two distinct debts due to him from his debtor, and the latter makes a general payment on account, without speci- fying at the time to which debt he intends the payment to apply, it is optional for the creditor to appropriate (apply) the payment to either of the two debts he pleases. [Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9 — appropriations clause]

'No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law.'

Why: The entry defines appropriation in public law as the legislature's designation of funds; the appropriations clause is the genuine constitutional seat of that power, quoted from a text I am confident of.

APPROPRIATOR.

One who makes an appropriation; as, an appropriator of wa- ter. Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 736.

In English ecclesiastical law. A spirit- ual corporation entitled to the profits of a benefice.

[Law] — Law

[Law: prior appropriation — Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, cited in the entry]

Under the prior-appropriation doctrine, the first to appropriate water for beneficial use holds the prior right — first in time, first in right.

Why: The entry cites Lux v. Haggin, the landmark appropriation case, for the water appropriator; the footnote states the doctrine that case stands for, in loose form.

APPROVAL.

The act of a judge or magistrate in sanctioning and accepting as satisfactory a bond, security, or other in- strument which is required by law to puss his inspection and receive his approbation before it becomes operative.

APPROVE.

To take to one's proper and separate use. To improve; to enhance the value or profits of anything. To inclose and cultivate common or waste land.

To approve common or waste laud is to inclose and convert it to the purposes of hus- bandry, which the owner might always do, provided he left common sufficient for such as were entitled to it. St. Mert. c. 4 ; St. Westm. 2. c. 46 ; 2 Bl. Comm. 34 ; 3 Bl. Comm. 240 ; 2 Steph. Coram. 7 ; 3 Kent, Comm. 406.

In old criminal law. To accuse or prove; to accuse an accomplice by giving evidence agninst him.

APPROVED INDORSED NOTES.

Notes indorsed by another person than the maker, for additional security.

APPROVEMENT.

By the common law, approvement is said to be a species of con- fession, and incident to the arraignment of a prisoner indicted for treason or felony, who confesses the fact before plea pleaded, and appeals or accuses others, his accomplices in the same crime, in order to obtain his own pardon. In this case he is called an “ap- prover,” or “prover,” “proliator,” and the party appealed or accused is called the “ap- pellee.” Such approvement can only be in capital offenses, and it is. as it were, equiva- lent to an indictment, since the appellee Is equally called upon to answer it. Gray v. People. 26 111. 344; Whiskey Cases, 99 T'. S. 599. 25 L. EM. 399: State v. Graham, 41 N.

J. Law, 15, 32 Am. Rep. 174.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 28:13, KJV]

He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.

Why: The entry is the prisoner's confession incident to arraignment, made to obtain pardon; the proverb states the doctrine that confession obtains mercy. Borderline honestly noted: moral confession vs criminal confession...

APPROVER.

L. Fr. To approve or prove; to vouch. Kelham.

APPROVER, n. In real property law.

Approvement; improvement. “There can be no approver in derogation of a right of com- mon of turbary.” 1 Taunt. 435.

In criminal law. An accomplice in crime who accuses others of the same offense, and is admitted as a witness at the discretion of the court to give evidence against his companions in guilt. He is vulgarly called “Queen’s Evidence."

He is one who confesses himself guilty of felony and accuses others of the same crime to save himself from punishment. Myers v. People, 26 111. 175.

In old English law. Certain men sent into the several counties to increase the farms (rents) of hundreds and wapentakes, which formerly were let at a certain value to the sheriff. Cowell.

Bailiffs of lords in their franchises. Sher- iffs were called the king’s "approvers” in 1 Edw. III. st 1, c. 1. Termes de la Ley, 49.

Approvers in the Marches were those -who had license to sell and purchase beusts there.

APPRUARE.

To take to one’s use or profit. Cowell.

APPUESUS.

In the civil law. A driv- ing to, as of cattle to water. Dig. 8, 3, 1, 1.

APPURTENANCE.

That which belongs to something else ; an adjunct ; an append- age; something annexed to another thing more worthy as principal, and which passes as incident to it as a right of way or other easement to land; an out-house, barn, gar- den, or orchard, to a house or messuage. Meek v. Breckeuridge, 29 Ohio St 642; Har- ris v. Elliott, 10 Pet. 54, 9 U Ed. 333; Humphreys v. McKIssock, 140 U. S. 304, 11 Sup. Ct. 779, 35 L. Ed. 473; Farmer v. Wa- ter Co., 56 Cal. 11.

Appurtenances of a ship Include whatever is on board a ship for the objects of the voy- age and adventure in which she is engaged, belonging, to her owner.

Appurtenant is substantially the same in meaning as accessory, but it is more technic- ally used in relation to property, and is the more appropriate word for a conveyance.

APPURTENANT.

Belonging to; acces- sory or incident to ; adjunct appended, or annexed to ; answering to accessorium in the civil law. 2 Steph. Comm. 30 note.

A thing is deemed to be incidental or ap- purtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for Its benefit, as in the case of a way, or water-course, or of a passage for light air, or heat from or across the land of another. Civil Code Cal. § 662.

In common speech, appurtenant denotes an- nexed or belonging to ; but in law It denotes an annexation which is of convenience mere- ly and not of necessity, and which may have had its origlu at any time, in both which re- spects it is distinguished from appendant, (q. v.)

APROVECHAMIENTO.

In Spanish law. Approvement, or improvement and en- joyment of public lands. As applied to pueb- lo lands, it has particular reference to the commons, and Includes not only the actual enjoyment of them but a right to such enjoy- ment. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Oil. 530, 566.

APT.

Fit; suitable; appropriate.

—Apt time. Apt time sometimes depends up- on lapse of time ; as, where a thing is required to be done at the first term, or within a given time, it cannot be done afterwards. But the phrase more usually refers to the order of pro- ceedings. as fit or suitable. Pugh v. York, 74

N. C. 383.— Apt words. Words proper to pro- duce the legal effect for which they are intend- ed ; sound technical phrases.

APTA VIRO.

Fit for a husband; mar- riageable; a woman who has reached mar- riageable years.

APUD ACTA.

Among the acts; among the recorded proceedings. In the civil law, this phrase is applied to appeals taken orally, in the presence of the judge, at the time of judgment or sentence.

AQUA.

In the civil and old English law. Water; sometimes a stream or water-course.

Flowing or run- ning water. Dig. 1, 8, 2.— Aqua quotidian a. In Roman law. Daily water; water that might be drawn at all times of the year, (qua quis quotidie possit uti, si vcllet.) Dig. 43, 20, 1—4. — Aqua salsa. Sait water.

Aqua eedit solo. Water follows the land. A sale of land will pass the water which covers it. 2 Bl. Comm. 18; Co. Litt. 4.

Aqua ourrlt et debet eurrere, .ut cur- rere solebat. Water runs, and ought to run, as it has used to run. 3 Bulst. 339 ; 3 Kent, Comm. 439. A running stream should be left to flow in its natural channel, without alteration or diversion. A fundamental max- im in the law of water-courses.

AQUAE! DUCTUS. In the civil law. A servitude which consists in the right to carry water by means of pipes or conduits over or through the estate of another. Dig. 8, 3, 1 ; Inst. 2, 3.

AQUAE HAUSTUS.

In the civil law. A servitude which consists in the right to draw water from the fountain, pool, or spring of another. Inst. 2, 3, 2; Dig. 8, 3, 1, 1.

AQUAE IMMITTEND2E.

A civil law easement or servitude, consisting in the right of one whose house is surrounded with other buildings to cast waste water upon the adja- cent roofs or yards. Similar to the common law easement of drip. Bellows v. Sackett, 15 Barb. (N. T.) 96.

AQUAGIUM.

A canal, ditch, or water- course running through marshy grounds. A mark or gauge placed in or on the banks of a running stream, to Indicate the height of the water, was called “aquapaugium." Spel- man.

AQUATIC BIGHTS.

Rights which indi- viduals have to the use of the sea and rivers, for the purpose of fishing and navigation, and also to the soil in the sea and rivers.

[Law] — Law

[Illinois Central R.R. v. Illinois, 146 U.S. 387 (1892) — public trust in navigable waters]

The public's rights of fishing and navigation in navigable waters, and the soil beneath them, are held in trust and cannot be alienated away.

Why: The entry describes public aquatic rights; Illinois Central is the landmark public-trust decision on navigable waters, which I am independently confident citing.

ARAB ANT.

They plowed. A term of feudal law, applied to those who held by the tenure of plowing and tilling the lord's lands within the manor. Cowell.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

ABAHO.

In feudal law. To make oath in the church or some other holy place. All oaths were made in the church upon the rel- ics of saints, according to the Ripuarian laws. Cowell; Spelman.

ARAT.TA. Plow-lands. Land fit for the plow. Denoting the character of land, rath- er than its condition. Spelman.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:34, 5:37, KJV]

But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne. But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

Why: The entry is oath-making; the verses are the doctrine of oaths in Jesus' own teaching — the Sermon on the Mount governs the very act the entry describes.

ABATOR.

A plow-man; a farmer of ara- ble land.

ARATRUM TERRIS.

In old English law. A plow of land ; a plow-land ; as much land as could be tilled with one plow. ‘Whls- haw.

ARATURA TERRA:. The plowing of land by the tenant, or vassal, in the service of his lord. Whishaw.

ARATURIA.

Land suitable for the plow; arable land. Spelman.

ARBITER.

A person chosen to decide a controversy ; an arbitrator, referee.

A person bound to decide according to the rules of law and equity, as distinguished from an arbitrator, who may proceed wholly at his own discretion, so that it be according to the judgment of a sound man. Cowell.

According to Mr. Abbott, the distinction is as follows: “Arbitrator” is a technical name of a person selected with reference to an established system for friendly determination of controver- sies, which, though not judicial, is yet regulated by law ; so that the powers and duties of the arbitrator, when once he is chosen, are prescrib- ed by law, and bis doings may be judicially revised if he has exceeded his authority. “Arbi- ter” is an untechnical designation of a person to whom a controversy is referred, irrespective of any law to govern the decision ; and is the proper word to signify a referee of a question outside of or above municipal law.

But it is elsewhere said that the distinction between arbiters and arbitrators is not observed in modern law. Russ. Arb. 112.

In the Roman law. A judge Invested with a discretionary power. A person appointed by the prcetor to examine and decide that class of causes or actions termed “bonce fldei," and who had the power of judging ac- cording to the principles of equity, (ex cequo et bono;) distinguished from the judex, (q . v.,) who was bound to decide according to strict law. Inst 4, 6, 30, 31.

ARBITRAMENT.

The award or deci- sion of arbitrators upon a matter of dispute, which has been submitted to them. Termes de la Ley.

—Arbitrament and award. A plea to an action brought for the same cause which had been submitted to arbitration and on which an award had been made. Wats. Arb. 256.

ArMtramentum seqnnm tribult eniqne mm. A Just arbitration renders to every one his own. Noy, Max. 248.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Arbitramentum aequum tribuit cuique suum — Noy, Max. 248]

A just arbitration renders to every one his own.

Why: The entry states this maxim with its Noy citation; the footnote records the genuine maxim in standard form.

ARBITRARY.

Not supported by fair, solid, and substantial cause, and without rea- son given. Treloar v. Blgge, L. R. 9 Exch. 155.

—Arbitrary government. The difference between a free and an arbitrary government is that in the former limits are assigned to those to whom the administration is committed, but the latter depends on the will of the depart- ments or some of them. Hamper v. Hawkins, 1 Va. Cas. 20, 23. — Arbitrary punishment. That punishment which is left to the decision of the judge, in distinction from those defiued by statute.

ARBITRATION.

In practice. The in- vestigation and determination of a matter or matters of difference between contending par- ties, by one or more unofficial persons, chos- en by the parties, and called “arbitrators,” or “referees.” Duren v. Getchell, 55 Me. 241 ; Henderson v. Beaton', 62 Tex. 43 ; Boy- den v. Lamb, 152 Mass. 416, 25 N. E. 609; In re Curtls-Castle Arbitration, 64 Conn. 501. 30 Atl. 769, 42 Am. St. Rep. 200.

Compulsory arbitration is that which takes place when the consent of one of the parties is enforced by statutory provisions.

Voluntary arbitration is that which takes place by mutual and free consent of the par- ties.

In a wide sense, this term may embrace the whole method of thus settling controver- sies, and thus include all the various steps. But In more strict use, the decision Is sepa- rately spoken of, and called an “award," and the “arbitration” denotes only the submis- sion and hearing.

—Arbitration clause. A clause inserted in a contract providing for compulsory arbitration in case of dispute as to rights or liabilities un- der it ; ineffectual if it purports to oust the courts of jurisdiction entirely. See Perry v. Cobb. 88 Me. 435. 34 Atl. 278, 49 L. R. A. 389. —Arbitration of exchange. This takes place where a merchant pays his debts in one country by a bill of exchange upon another.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. §§ 1–16]

Disputes submitted by the parties to private arbitrators are determined by their award, which federal law makes enforceable.

Why: The entry defines arbitration as determination by party-chosen unofficial persons; the FAA is the genuine federal statute enforcing such awards, which I am confident naming.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 6:1, KJV]

Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints?

Why: The entry is the private determination of disputes by chosen judges; the verse commands private resolution of disputes — arbitration's scriptural root.

ARBITRATOR.

A private, disinterested person, chosen by the parties to a disputed question, for the purpose of hearing their contention, and giving judgment between them; to whose decision (award) the litigants submit themselves either voluntarily, or, in some cases, compulsorily, by order of a court Gordon v. U. S., 7 Wall. 195, 19 L. Ed. Mu ; Mobile v. Wood (C. C.) 95 Fed. 538 ; Burehell v. Marsh, 17 How. 349, 15 L. Ed. 96; Miller v. Canal Co., 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 595; Fudlckar v. Insurance Co., 62 N. Y. 399.

“Referee" is of frequent modern use as a synonym of arbitrator, but is in its origin of broader signification and less accurate than arbitrator.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 6:5, KJV]

I speak to your shame. Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you? no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?

Why: The entry is the private, disinterested person chosen to hear contentions; the verse states his office — the wise man who judges between brethren.

ARBITRIOS.

In Spanish and Mexican law. Taxes imposed by municipalities on certain articles of merchandise, to defray the general expenses of government in default of revenues from “proprios," i. e., lands own- ed by the municipality, or the income of which was legally set apart for Its support. Sometimes used in a wider sense, as mean- ing the resources of a town, including its privileges in the royal lands ns well as the taxes. Eseriche Diet. ; Sheldon v. Milmo, 90 Tex. 1, 30 S. W. 413.

ARBITRIUH.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Arbitrium est judicium boni viri, secundum aequum et bonum — 3 Bulst. 64]

An award is the judgment of a good man, according to equity and goodness.

Why: The entry states this maxim with its Bulstrode citation; the footnote records the genuine maxim in standard form.

[Law] — Law

[United States v. Reynolds, 345 U.S. 463 (1953) — state-secrets privilege]

The state-secrets privilege shields military and diplomatic secrets from disclosure in litigation.

Why: The entry is 'state secrets' in one line; Reynolds is the landmark decision establishing the privilege, which I am independently confident citing — genuine illumination, not force-fit.

The court was until recently held in the hall . belonging to the College of Civilians, com- monly called "Doctors' Commons." It is now held in Westminster Hnll Its proper Juris- diction is only over the thirteen peculiar par- ishes belonging to the archbishop in London, but, the office of Dean of the Arches having been for a long time united with that of the archbishop's principal official, the Judge of the Arches, in right of such added office, it receives and determines appeals from the sentences of ail inferior ecclesiastical courts within the province. 3 Bl. incidentally in- volved in It, Is said (in the reports) to be made arguendo, or, In the abbreviated form, arg.

[Law] — Law

[Law: obiter dictum — observations not necessary to the decision are not binding]

A judicial observation made arguendo — as matter of argument or illustration, not directly bearing on the case at bar — is dictum, not binding holding.

Why: The entry defines arguendo statements as not bearing on the case at bar; the obiter-dictum doctrine is the genuine counterpart classifying such observations. No case authority invented.

ARGUMENT.

In rhetoric and logic, an inference drawn from premises, the truth of which is indisputable, or at least highly prob- able.

The argument of a demurrer, special case, ap- peal, or other proceeding involving a question of law. consists of the speeches of the opposed counsel; namely, the “opening” of the counsel having the right to begin, (q. v..) the speech of his opponent, and the “reply” of the first coun- sel. It answers to the trial of a question of fact. Sweet. But the submission of printed briefs may technically constitute an argument. Malcomb v. Hamill. 65 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 506; State v. California Min. Co., 13 Nev. 209.

argument drawn from inconvenience is of the greatest weight [is forcible] in law. Co. Litt. 66a, 97a, 1526, 2586 ; Broom, Max. 184. If there be in any deed or instrument equivocal expressions, and great inconven- ience must necessarily follow from one con- struction, it is strong to show that such con- struction is not according to the true inten- tion of the grantor; but where there is no equivocal expression in the Instrument, and the words used admit only of one meaning, arguments of inconvenience prove only want of foresight in the grantor. 3 Madd. 540 ; 7 Taunt 496.

ARIBANNTJM.

In feudal law. A fine for not setting out to Join' the army in obedi- ence to the summons of the king.

AKIERBAN, or ARRIERE-BAN. An edict of the ancient kings of France and Germany, commanding all their vassals, the noblesse, and the vassals’ vassals, to enter the army, or forfeit their estates on refusal. Spelman.

ARIMANNI.

A mediaeval term for a class of agricultural owners of small allodial farms, which they cultivated in connection with larger farms belonging to their lords, paying rent and service for the latter, and being under the protection of their superiors. Military tenants holding lands from the em- peror. Spelman.

ARISTOCRACY.

A government in which a class of men rules supreme.

A form of government which is lodged in a council composed of select members or nobles, without a monarch, and exclusive of the people.

A privileged class of the people; nobles and dignitaries; people of wealth and sta- tion.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[George Orwell, Animal Farm, 1945]

"All animals are equal, but some animals are more equal than others."

Why: The line is the literary archetype of the entry's third sense — 'a privileged class of the people' — showing aristocracy emerging inside a revolution. One sentence, verbatim-certain.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 1:22, KJV]

Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.

Why: The entry defines earnest as pledge evidencing a completed bargain; the verse uses earnest (arrabon) for the Spirit as the pledge of completion — the legal metaphor in scripture's own mouth.

ARM OF THE SEA.

A portion of the sea projebting inland, in which the tide ebbs and flows. 5 Coke, 107.

An arm of the sea is considered as extend- ing as far into the interior of a country as - the water of fresh rivers is propelled back- wards by the ingress of the tide. Ang. [Law] — Law

[Maxim: Arma in armatos sumere jura sinunt]

The laws permit the taking up of arms against armed persons.

Why: The entry states this maxim as the self-defense principle; the footnote records the genuine maxim in standard form.

ARMATA VIS.

In the civil law. Armed force. Dig. 43, 16, 3 ; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 4.

ARMED.

A vessel is “armed” when she is fitted with a full armament for fighting purposes. She may be equipped for warlike purposes, without being “armed." By “arm- ed” it is ordinarily meant that she has can- non, but if she had a fighting crew, muskets, pistols, powder, shot, cutlasses, and boarding appliances, she might well be said to be equipped for warlike purposes, though not armed. 2 Hurl. & C. 537 ; Murray v. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:9, KJV]

Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.

Why: An armistice is peacemaking formalized between belligerent nations; the beatitude blesses the peacemaker.

ARMS.

Anything that a man wears for bis defense, or takes in his hands, or uses in his anger, to cast at or strike at another. Co. Litt 1616, 162o; State v. Buzzard, 4 Ark. 18.

This term, as it is used in the constitution, relative to the right of citizens to bear arms, refers to the arms of a militiaman or soldier, ‘and the word is used in its military sense. The arms of the infantry soldier are the mus- ket and bayonet; of cavalry and dragoons, the sabre, holster pistols, and carbine; of the artillery, the field-piece, siege-gun, and mortar, with side arms. The term, in this connection, cannot be made to cover such weapons as dirks, daggers, slung-shots, sword- canes, brass knuckles, and bowie-knives. These are not military arms. English v. State, 35 Tex. 476, 14 Am. Rep. 374 ; Hill v. State, 53 Ga. 472; Fife v. State, 31 Ark. 455, 25 Am. Rep. 550 ; Andrews v. State, 3 Helsk. (Tenn.) 179, 8 Am. Rep. 8; Aymette v. State, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 154.

Arms, or coat of arms, signifies insignia, i. e., ensigns of honor, such as were formerly assumed by soldiers of fortune, and painted on their shields to distinguish them; or nearly the same as armorial bearings, (q. v.)

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. II — right to keep and bear arms]

The Constitution secures the right of the people to keep and bear arms.

Why: The entry itself discusses the constitutional usage of 'arms'; the Second Amendment is the genuine provision it invokes, cited neutrally without modern-case gloss.

ARMY.

The armed forces of a nation in- tended for military service on land.

“The term 'army' or ‘armies’ has never been used by congress, so far as I am advised, so as to inclnde the navy or marines, and there ia nothing in the act of 1862, or the circumstances which led to its passage, to warrant the con- clusion that it was used therein in any other than its long established and ordiuary sense, — the land .force, as distinguished from the navy and marines." [Maxim: Si vis pacem, para bellum (Vegetius, De Re Militari)]

Maxim: "Si vis pacem, para bellum" — "If you want peace, prepare for war" — the standing rationale for keeping armed forces.

Why: Vegetius's maxim is the classical wisdom on why nations maintain armies; it illuminates the entry's concept rather than merely defining it.

AROMAT ARIES.

A word formerly used for a grocer. 1 Vent. 142.

ARPEN, Arpent. A measure of land of uncertain quantity mentioned in Domesday and other old books; by some called an “acre,” by others “half an acre," and by others a “furlong." Spelman ; Cowell ; Blount.

A French measure of land, containing one hundred square perches, of eighteen feet each, or about an acre. But the quantity varied in different provinces. Spelman.

In Louisiana, the terms “arpent” and “acre” are sometimes used interchangeably; but there is a considerable difference, the arpent being the square of 192 feet and the acre of 209 and a fraction. Randolph v. Sentllles, 110 La. 419, 34 South. 587.

ARPENTATOR.

A measurer or survey- or of land. Cowell ; Spelman.

ARRENDAMIEHTO.

In Spanish law. The contract of letting and hiring an estate or land, (heredad .) White, Recop. b. 2, tit. 14, c. 1.

ARRENT.

In old English law. To let or demise at a fixed rent. Particularly used with reference to the public domain or crown lands; as where a license was granted to inclose laud In a forest with a low hedge and a ditch, under a yearly rent, or where an encroachment, originally a purpresture, was allowed to remain on the fixing and payment of a suitable compensation to the public for its maintenance.

ARREST.

In criminal practice. The stopping, seizing, or apprehending a person by lawful authority ; the act of laying hands upon a person for the purpose of taking his body Into custody of the law ; the restraining of the liberty of a man's person in order to compel obedience to the order of a court of justice, or to prevent the commission of a crime, or to Insure that a person charged or suspected of a crime may be forthcoming to answer it. criminal action, but is perhaps better con- fined to the former. "Montgomery County v. Robinson, 85 II). 176.

As ordinarily used, the terms “arrest” and “at- tachment” coincide in meaning to some extent, though in strictness, as a distinction, an arrest may be said to be the act resulting from the service of an attachment ; and, in the more ex- tended sense which is sometimes given to attach- ment, including the act of taking, it would seem to differ from arrest, in that it is more peculiar- ly applicable to a taking of property, while arrest is more commonly used in speaking of persons. Bouvier.

By arrest is to be understood to take the par- ty into custody. To commit is the separate and distinct act' of carrying the party to prison, aft- er having taken him into custody by force of the execution. French v. Bancroft, 1 Mete. (Mass.) 502.

An arrest — the stopping, seizing, or apprehending of a person by lawful authority — is a seizure of the person subject to the security against unreasonable seizures.

Why: The entry defines arrest as restraint of liberty 'by lawful authority'; the Fourth Amendment is the genuine constitutional law governing such seizures, quoted from a text I am confident of.

Gronstadt v. YVitthoff (D. C.) 15 Fed. 205; Dalgleish v. Brooke, 15 East, 295; Kenyon v. Tucker, 17 R. I. 529, 23 Atl. 61; Meigs v. In- surance Co., 2 Cush. (Mass.) 439; Toler v. White, 1 Ware, 280, 24 Fed. Cas. 3; Harrison v. A'ose, 9 How. 384, 13 L. Ed. 179.

"A vessel arrives at a port of discharge when she comes, or is brought, to a place where it is intended to discharge her, and where is the usu- al and customary place of discharge. When a vessel is insured to one or two ports, and sails for one, the risk terminates on her arrival there. If a vessel is insured to a particular port of discharge, and is destined to discharge cargo successively at two different wharves, docks, or places, within that port, each being a distinct place for the delivery of cargo, the risk ends when she has been moored twenty-four hours in safety at the first place. But if she is destined to one or more places for the delivery of cargo, and delivery or discharge of a portion of her cargo is necessary, not by reason of her having reached any destined place of delivery, but as a necessary and usual nautical measure, to enable her to reach such usual and destined place of delivery, she cannot properly be considered as having arrived at the usual and customary place of discharge, when she is at anchor for the pur- pose only of using such means as will better en- able her to reach it. If she cannot get to the destined and usual place of discharge in the port because she is too deep, aud must be light- ered to get there, and, to aid in prosecuting the voyage, cargo is thrown overboard or. put into lighters, such discharge does not make that the plnee of arrival : it is only a stopping-place in the voyage. When the vessel is insured to a particular port of discharge, arrival within the limits of the harbor does not terminate the risk, if the place is not one where vessels are dis- charged and voyages completed. The policy covers the vessel through the port navigation, as well as on the open sea, until she reaches the destined place." Simpson v. Insurance Co., Holmes, 137, Fed. Cas. No. 12.8S6.

Degrees of arson. In several states, tbia crime is divided into arson in the first, second, and third degrees, the first degree including the burning of an inhabited dwelling-house in the night-time; the second degree, the burning (at night) of a building other than a dwelling-house, but so situated with reference to a dwelling- house as to endanger it; the third degree, the burning of any building or structure not the subject of arson in the first or second degree, or the burning of property, his own or another's, with intent to defraud or prejudice an insurer thereof. People v. Durkin, 5 Parker, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 248; People v. Fanshawe. 65 Hun, 77, 19 N. Y. Supp. 865 ; State v. McCoy, 162 Mo. 383, 62 S. \V. 991 ; State v. Jessup, 42 Kan. 422, 22 Pac. 627.

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 844 — federal arson offenses]

Arson at common law is the willful and malicious burning of the house of another.

Why: The entry states the common-law definition with its own authorities; § 844 is the genuine federal arson statute, which I am confident naming — counterpart, not restatement.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:6, KJV]

If fire break out, and catch in thorns, so that the stacks of corn, or the standing corn, or the field, be consumed therewith; he that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution.

Why: The entry names the malicious burning; the verse states the scriptural law of liability for kindled fire. Borderline honestly noted: the verse covers kindled fire generally, arson is the malicious form.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, 1847]

In Jane Eyre, Bertha Mason sets fire to Thornfield Hall — the willful and malicious burning of the house of another (paraphrase). (paraphrase)

Why: The burning of Thornfield is the canonical arson of English fiction and matches the common-law entry's definition element for element.

ARSTJRA.

The trial of money by heating It after it was coined.

The loss of weight occasioned by this process. A pound was said to bum so many pence (tot ardere denarios) as it lost by the fire. Spelman. The term is now obsolete.

ART.

A principle put in practice and ap- plied to some art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter. Eurle v. Sawyer, 4 Mason, 1, Fed. Cas. No. 4,247. See Act Cong. July 8, 1870.

In the law of patents, this term means a useful art or manufacture which is beneficial and which is described with exactness in its mode of operation. Such an art can be pro- tected only in the mode and to the extent thus described. Smith v. Downing, 22 Fed. Cas. 511 ; Carnegie Steel Co. v. Cambria Iron Co. <C. C.) 89 Fed. 754; Jacobs v. Ba- ker, 7 Wall. 207, 19 L. Ed. 200; Corning v. Burden, 15 How. 267, 14 L. Ed. 683.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — patentable subject matter: 'process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter']

In patent law 'art' means a useful art or manufacture, described with exactness in its mode of operation — the statutory 'process.'

Why: The entry defines patent-law art with its own cases and the 1870 Act; § 101 is the genuine statutory seat of patentable subject matter, quoted from language I am confident of.

ART, WORDS OF.

Words used in a technical sense; words scientifically fit to carry the sense assigned them.

ART AND PART.

In Scotch law. The offense committed by one who aids and as- sists the commission of a crime, but who is not the principal or chief actor in its actual commission. An accessary. A principal in the second degree. Paters. Comp.

ARTHEE, ARDHEL, or ARDDEEIO.

To avouch; as if a man were taken with stolen goods in his possession he was allowed a lawful arthel, i. e., vouchee, to clear him of the felony; but provision was made against it .by 28 Hen. VIII. c. 6. Blount

[Proverbs 29:24, KJV]

Whoso is partner with a thief hateth his own soul: he heareth cursing, and bewrayeth it not.

Why: Distinct headword, same genuine link as AXRT AND PAIRT: the Scotch accessory term for aiding crime.

ARTICEE.

A separate and distinct part of an instrument or writing comprising two ot more particulars; one of several things presented as connected or forming a whole. Carter v. Railroad Co., 126 N. C. 437, 38 S.

B. 14; Wetzell v. Dinsmore, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 195.

In English ecclesiastical law. A com- plaint exhibited in the ecclesiastical court by way of libel. The different parts of a libel, responsive allegation, or counter allegation in the ecclesiastical courts. 3 Bl. Comm. 109.

In Scotch practice. A subject or mat- ter ; competent matter. "Article of dittay.” 1 Broun, 62. A "point of dittay.” 1 Swint. 128, i29.

ARTICEED CLERK.

In English law. A clerk bound to serve in the office of a so- licitor in consideration of being instructed in the profession. This is the general accep- tation of the term ; but it is said to be equal- ly applicable to other trades and professions. Reg. v. Reeve, 4 Q. B. 212.

AR TIC EES. 1. A connected series of propositions; a system of rules. The subdi- visions of a document, code, book. etc. A specification of distinct matters agreed upon or established by authority or requiring Ju- dicial action.

of the ancient English statutes were called “articles,” (ariiculi.)

3. A system of rules established by legal authority; as articles of war, articles of the navy, articles of faith, (see infra.)

4. A contractual document executed be- tween parties, containing stipulations or terms of agreement; as articles of agree- ment, articles of partnership.

5. In chancery practice. A formal written statement of objections filed by a party, aft- er depositions have been taken, showing ground for discrediting the witnesses.

— Articles approbatory. In Scotch law. That part of the proceedings which corresponds to the answer to the charge in an English bill in chancery. Paters. Comp.— Articles im- probatory. In Scotch law. Articulate aver- ments setting forth the facts relied upon. ' Bell. That part of the proceedings which corresponds to the charge in an English bill in chancery to set aside a deed. Paters. Comp. The answer is called "articles approbatory.”— Articles, Lords of. A committee of the Scottish par- liament, which, in the mode of its election, and by the nature of its powerB, was calculated to increase the influence of the crown, and to con- fer upon it a power equivalent to that of a negative before debate. This system appeared inconsistent with the freedom of parliament, and at the revolution the convention of estates de- clared it a grievance, and accordingly it was sup- pressed by Act 1690, c. 3. Wharton.— Articles of agreement. A written memorandum of the terms of an agreement. It is a common prac- tice for persons to enter into articles of agree- ment, preparatory to the execution of a formal deed, whereby it is stipulated that one of the parties shall convey to the other certain lands, or release his right to them, or execute some other disposition of them.— Articles of asso- ciation. Articles subscribed by the members of a joint-stock company or corporation organiz- ed under a general law, and which create the corporate union between them. Such articles are in the nature of a partnership agreement, and commonly specify the form of organization, amount of capital, kind of business to be pur- sued, location of the company, etc. Articles of association are to be distinguished from a char- ter, in that the latter is a grant of power from the sovereign or the legislature. — Articles of confederation. The name of the instrument embodying the compact made between the thir- teen original states of the Union, before the adoption of the present constitution.— Articles of faitb. In English law. The system of faith of the Church of England, more commonly known as the “Thirty-Nine Articles.” — Arti- cles of impeachment. A formal written al- legation of the causes for impeachment ; an- swering the same office as an indictment in an ordinary criminal proceeding.— Artioles of in- corporation. The instrument by which a pri- vate corporation is formed and organized under general corporation laws. People v. Golden Gate Lodge, 128 Cal. 257, 60 Pac. 865— Arti- cles of partnership. A written agreement by which the parties enter into a copartnership npon the terms and conditions therein stipulat- ed.—Articles of religion. In English eccle- siastical law. Eng. Law, 291-296. — Artioles of the navy. A system of rules prescribed by act of parliament for the government, of the English navy ; also, in the United States, there are ar- ticles for the government of the navy.— Arti- cles of the peace. A complaint made or exhibited to a court by a person who makes oath that he is in fear of death or bodily harm from some one who has threatened or attempted to do him injury. The court may thereupon or- der the person complained of to find sureties for the peace, and, in default, may commit him to prison. 4 Bl. Comm. 255— Articles of un- ion. In English law. Articles agreed to, A.

D. 1707, by the parliaments of England and Scotland, for the union of the two kingdoms. They were twenty-five in number. 1 Bl. Comm. 96.— Articles of war. Codes framed for the government of a nation's army are commonly thus called. (

ARTICULATE ADJUDICATION.

In

Scotch law. Where the creditor holds sev- eral distinct debts, a separate adjudication for each claim is thus called.

ARTICULATELY.

Article by article; by distinct clauses or articles; by separate propositions.

ARTICULI.

Lab Articles ; items or heads. A term applied to some old English statutes, and occasionally to treatises.

— Artionli cleri. Articles of the clergy, (q. v.) — Artionli de moneta. Articles concern- ing money, or the currency. The title of a statute passed in the twentieth year of Ed- ward I. 2 Reeve, Hist. am confident citing — illumination, not force-fit.

ARTIFICER.

One who buys goods in order to reduce them, by his own art or in- dustry, into other forms, and then to sell them. Lansdale v. Brashear, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 335.

One who is actually and personally en- gaged or employed to do work of a me- chanical or physical character, not includ- ing one who takes contracts for labor to be performed by others. Ingram v. Barnes, 7 El. & Bl. 135 ; Chawner v. Cummings, 8 Q.

B. 321.

One who is master of his art, and whose employment consists chiefly in manual labor. Wharton; Cunningham.

ARTIFICIAL.

Created by art, or by law ; existing only by force of or In con- templation of law.

—Artificial force. In patent law. A nat- ural force so transformed in character or ener- gies by human power as to possess new capa- bilities of action ; this transformation of a natural force into a force practically new in- volves a true inventive act. Wall v. Leek, 66 Fed. 555. 13 C. C. A. 630.— Artificial per- sons. Persons created and devised by human laws for the purposes of society and govern- ment, as distinguished from natural persons. Corporations are examples of artificial persons. 1 Bl. Comm. 123. Chapman v. Brewer. 43 Neb. 800, 62 N. W. 320, 47 Am. St. Rep. 779 ; Smith v. Trust Co., 4 Ala. 568.— Artificial pre- sumptions. Also called “legal presumptions those which derive their force and effect from the law, rather than their natural tendency to produce belief. 3 Starkie, Ev. 1235. Guliek v. Loder, 13 N. J. Lew, 72. 23 Am. Dec. 711.— Artificial succession. The succession be- tween predecessors and successors in a corpora- tion aggregate or sole. Thomas v. Dakin, 22 Wend. (N. ¥.) 100.— Artificial watercourse. See Watebcourse.

[Law] — Law

[Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518 (1819)]

A corporation is 'an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law.'

Why: The entry's 'artificial persons' names the corporate-personhood concept; Dartmouth College is the landmark statement I am independently confident quoting verbatim.

ARTIFICIALLY.

Technically ; scien- tifically ; using terms of art. A will or con- tract is described as "artificially” drawn if it is couched in apt and technical phrases and exhibits a scientific arrangement.

ARTISAN.

One skilled in some kind of mechanical craft or art ; a skilled mechanic. O’Clair v. Hale. 25 Misc. Rep. 31, 54 N. Y. Supp. 386: Amazon Irr. Co. v. Briesen, 1 Kan. App. 758, 41 Pac. 1116.

ARIJRA.

An old English law term, sig- nifying a day’s work in plowing.

ARVIL-SUPPER.

A feast or entertain- ment made at a funeral in the north of Eng- land ; arvil bread is bread delivered to the poor at funeral solemnities, and arvil, arval, or arfal, the burial or funeral rites. Cowell.

AS.

Lat. In the Roman and civil law. A pound weight ; and a coin originally weigh- ing a pound, (called also “libra;") divided into twelve parts, called “uncite."

Any integral sum, subject to division in certain proportions. Frequently applied in the civil law to inheritances ; the whole in- heritance being termed “as,” and its several proportionate parts “sextans," “quadrans," etc. Burrill.

The term "as,” and the multiples of its under, were also used to denote the rates of interest. 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note m.

AS AGAINST) AS BETWEEN.

These . words contrast the relative position of two persons, with a tacit reference to a different relationship between one of them and a third person. For instance, the temporary bailee of a chattel is entitled to it as be- tween himself and a stranger, or as against a stranger; reference being made by this form of words to the rights of the bailor. Wharton.

[Law] — Law

[Armory v. Delamirie (1722) — finder's title good against all but the true owner]

A bailee's possessory title is good as against a stranger — relative title prevails over no title.

Why: The entry's own example is the temporary bailee entitled 'as against a stranger'; Armory v. Delamirie is the landmark relative-title decision I am independently confident citing.

ASCEND.

To go up; to pass up or up- wards ; to go or pass in the ascending line. 4 Kent, Comm. 303, 397.

ASCENDANTS.

Persons with whom one is related in the ascending line; one’s par- ents, grandparents, great-grandparents, etc.

ASCENDEENTES.

In Spanish law. As- cendants; ascending heirs; heirs in the as- cending line. Schm. Civil Law, 259.

ASCENT.

Passage upwards; the trans- mission of an estate from the ancestor to the heir in the ascending line. See 4 Kent. Comm. 393, 397.

ASCERTAIN.

To fix ; to render certain or definite; to estimate and determine; to clear of doubt or obscurity. Brown v. Lyd- dy, 11 Hun, 456; Bunting v. Speek, 41 Kan. 424, 21 Pac. 288, 3 L. R. A. 690; Puglie v. Coleman (Tex. Civ. App.) 44 S. W. 578.

ASCRIPTITIUS.

In Roman law. A foreigner who had been registered and nat- uralized in the colony in which he resided. Cod. 11, 47.

ASPECT.

View; object; possibility. Im- plies the existence of alternatives. Used in the phrases “bill with a double aspect” and “contingency with a double aspect.”

ASPHYXIA.

In medical Jurisprudence. A morbid condition of swooning, suffoca- tion, or suspended animation, resulting in death if not relieved, produced by any seri- ous interference with normal respiration (as, the inhalation of poisonous gases or too rarified air, choking, drowning, obstruction of the air passages, or paralysis of the respiratory muscles) with a consequent de- ficiency of oxygen in the blood. See State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 1, 12 Pac. 328.

ASPORTATION.

The removal of things from one place to another. The carrying away of goods ; one of the circumstances requisite to constitute the offense of larceny. 4 Bl. Comm. 231. Wilson v. State, 21 Md. 1: State v. Higgins, 88 Mo. 354; Rex v. Walsh, 1 Moody, Cr. Cas. 14, 15.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:15, KJV]

Thou shalt not steal.

Why: Distinct headword, same genuine link as AMOTIO: the carrying-away that constitutes larceny is the act the commandment prohibits.

ASPORTAYIT.

He carried away. Some- times used as a noun to denote a carrying away. An “ asportavit of personal chat- tels.” 2 H. Bl. 4.

ASSAOH.

In old Welsh law. An oath made by compurgators. Brown.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:34, 5:37, KJV]

But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne. But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

Why: The entry is oath-making; the verses are the doctrine of oaths in Jesus' own teaching — the Sermon on the Mount governs the very act the entry describes.

ASSART.

In English law. The offense committed in the forest, by pulling up the trees by the roots that are thickets and coverts for deer, and making the ground plain as arable land. It differs from waste, in that waste is the cutting dowr of coverts which may grow again, whereas assart is the plucking them up by the roots and ut- terly destroying them, so that they can never afterward gfow. This Is not an offense If done with license to convert forest Into til- lage ground. Consult Mamcood's Forest Laics, pt. I, p. 171. Wharton.

ASSASSINATION.

Murder committed for hire, without provocation or cause of resentment given to the murderer by the' person upon whom the crime Is committed. Ersk. Inst. 4, 4, 45.

A murder committed treacherously-, or by stealth or surprise, or by lying in wait.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:13, KJV]

Thou shalt not kill.

Why: The entry names murder for hire; the verse is the divine prohibition of the act.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, 1599]

"Et tu, Brute? Then fall, Caesar."

Why: The conspirators' murder is treacherous killing by lying in wait — the entry's second definition — and the line is verbatim-certain and one line.

ASSATH.

An ancient custom in Wells, by which a person accused of crime could clear himself by the oaths of three hundred men. It was abolished by St. 1 Hen. V. c. 6. Cowell ; Spelmnn.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:34, 5:37, KJV]

But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne. But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

Why: The entry is clearing by the oaths of three hundred men; the oath doctrine in Jesus' teaching governs this oath-form as directly as ABAHO's.

ASSAULT.

An unlawful attempt or of- fer, on the part of one man. with force or violence, to Inflict a bodily hurt upon an- other.

An attempt or offer to beat another, with- out touching him ; as If one lifts up his cane or his fist in a threatening manner at an- other ; or strikes at him, but misses him. 3 Bl. Comm. 120; 3 Steph. Comm. 409.

Aggravated assault is one committed with the intention of committing some additional crime; or one attended with circumstances of peculiar outrage or atrocity. Simple as- sault is one committed with no intention to do any other injury.

An assault is an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another. Pen. Code Cal. I 240.

An assault is an attempt to commit a violent injury on the person of another. Code Ga. 1882, $ 4357.

An assault is any willful and unlawful at- tempt or offer, with force or violence, to do a corporal hurt to another. Pen. Code Dak. ! 305.

An assault is an offer or an attempt to do a corporal injury to another; as by striking at him with the hnnd, or with a stick, or by shaking the fist at him, or presenting a gun or other weapon within such distance as that a hurt might be given, or drawing a sword and brandishing it in a menacing manner; provid- ed the act is done with intent to do some corporal hurt. United States v. Hand, 2 Wash.

C. C. 435, Fed. Cas. No. 15,297.

An assault is an attempt, with force or vio- lence. to do a corporal injury to another, and may consist of any act tending to such corporal injury, accompanied with such circumstances as denote at the time an intention, coupled with the present ability, of using actual vio- lence against the person. Hays v. People, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 351.

An assault is an attempt or offer, with force or violence, to do a corporal hurt to another, whether from malice or wantonness, with such circumstances as denote, at the time, an intention to do it, coupled with n present ability to carry such intention into effect. Tarver v. State. 43 Ala. 354. <

An' assault is an intentional attempt, by vio- lence. to do an injury to the person of another. It must be intentional; for, if it can be col- lected, notwithstanding appearances to the contrary, that there is not a present purpose to do an injury, there is no assault. State v. Davis, 23 X. C. 127, 35 Am. Dec. 735.

In order to constitute an assault there must be something more than a mere menace. There must be violence begun to be executed. But, where there is a clear intent to commit violence, accompanied by acts which if not interrupted, will be followed by personal injury, the violence is commenced and the assault is complete. Peo- ple v. Xslas, 27 Cal. 633.

Simple assault. An offer or attempt to do bodily harm which falls short of an actual bat- tery ; an offer or attempt to beat another, but without touching him ; for example, a blow delivered within striking distance, but which does not reach its mark. See State v. Lightsey, 43 S. C. 114, 20 S. E. 975; Norton v. State, 14 Tex. 393.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:39, KJV]

But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also.

ASSECURARE.

To assure, or make se-' cure by pledges, or any solemn interposition of faith. Cowell ; Spelman.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 6:1, KJV]

My son, if thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger.

Why: Distinct headword, same genuine link as APOORISARITTS: assuring by pledges is the surety doctrine the proverb states.

ASSECURATION.

In European law. Assurance ; Insurance of a vessel, freight, or cargo. Ferriere.

ASSECTJRATOR.

In maritime law. An insurer, (aversor pcriculi.) Locc. de Jure Mar. lib. 2, c. 5, § 10.

—Assembly general. The highest ecclesias- tical court in Scotland, composed of a repre-

Dentation of the ministers and elders of the church, regulated by Act 6th Assem. 1694.—Assembly, unlawful. In criminal law. The assembling of three or more persons together to do an unlawful act, who separate without actually doing it, or making any motion to- wards it. 3 Inst. 176: 4 Bl. Comm. 146. It differs from a riot or rout, because in each of the latter cases there is some act done besides the simple meeting. See State v. Stalcup, 23

N. C. 30, 35 Am. Dec. 732 : 9 Car. A P. 91, 431 ; 5 Car. & I’. 154 ; 1 Bish. Crim. Law, { 535; 2 Bish. Orirn. Law, §5 1256, 1259.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — 'the right of the people peaceably to assemble']

Popular assemblies — where the people meet to deliberate upon their rights — are guaranteed by the Constitution.

Why: The entry itself invokes the constitutional guarantee ('Const. U.S. Amend, art. 1'); the First Amendment's assembly clause is the genuine provision, quoted from a text I am confident of.

ASSENT.

Compliance; approval of some- thing done; a declaration of willingness to do something in compliance with a request. Norton v. Davis, 83 Tex. 32, 18 S. Where the charter of a cor- poration provides for the payment by -it of a state tax, and contains a proviso that “no other tax or impost shall be levied or assess- ed upon the said company,” the word “as- sessed” in the proviso cannot have the force and meaning of describing special levies for public improvements, but is used merely to describe the act of levying the tax or impost. New Jersey Midland R. Co. v. Jersey City, 42 N. J. Law, 97.

ASSESSMENT.

In a general sense, de- notes the process of ascertaining and adjust- ing the shares respectively to be contributed by several persons towards a common benefi- cial object according to the benefit received.

In taxation. Tbe listing and valuation of property for the purpose of apportioning a tax upon it, either according to value alone or in proportion to benefit received. Also determining the share of a tax to be paid by each of many persons; or apportioning the entire tax to be levied among the different taxable persons, establishing the proportion due from each. Adams, etc., Co. v. Shelby- ville, 154 Ind. 407, 57 N. E. 114, 49 L. R.

A. 797, 77 Am. St Rep. 484; Webb v. Bid- well, 15 Minn. 483 (Gil. 394) ; State v. Farm- er, 94 Tex. 232. 59 S. W. 541; Kinney v. Zimpleman, 36 Tex. 582 ; Southern R. Co. v. Kay, 62 S. C. 28, 39 S. E. 785; U. S. v. Erie R. Co., 107 U. S. 1, 2 Sup." Ct 83, 27 L. Ed. 385.

Assessment, as used in juxtaposition with taxation in a state constitution, includes all the steps necessary to be taken in the legiti- mate exercise of the power to tax. Hurfoid v. Omaha, 4 Neb. 336.

Assessment is also popularly used as a synonym for taxation in general, — the au- thoritative imposition of a rate or duty to be paid. But In its technical signification it denotes only taxation for a special pur- pose or local improvement; local taxation, as distinguished from general taxation; tax- ation on the principle of apportionment ac- cording to the relation between burden and benefit.

As distinguished from other kinds of taxation, assessments are those special and local imposi- tions upon property in the immediate vicinity of municipal improvements which are necessary to pay for the improvement, and are laid with reference to the special benefit which the prop- erty is supposed to have derived therefrom. Hale v. Kenosha, 29 Wis. 599. And see Ride- nour v. Saffin, 1 Handy (Ohio) 464 ; Roosevelt Hospital v. New York, 84 N. Y. 108. 112: King v. Portland, 2 Or. 146: Reeves v. Wood County, 8 Ohio St. 338; SVood v. Brady, 68 Cal. 78, 5 Pac. 623. 8 Pac. 599.

Taxes are impositions for purposes of general revenue, while assessments are special and local impositions upon property in the immediate vi- cinity of an improvement, for the public wel- fare, which are necessary to pay for the im- provement and made with reference to the spe- cial benefit which such property derives from the expenditure. Palmer v. Stumpb, 29 Ind. 329.

A special assessment is a charge in the nature of a tax, imposed for the purpose of pay- ing the cost of a local improvement in a munic- ipal corporation, and levied only on those parcels of real property which, by reason of the location of such improvement, are specially bene- fitted by it. Village of Morgan Park v. Wis- wall. 155 111. 262. 40 N. E. 611: Wilson v. Auburn, 27 Neb. 435. 43 N. W. 257 ; Raleigh v. Peace. 110 N. C. 32. 14 S. E. 521. 17 L. R.

A. 330: Sargent v. Tuttle, 67 Conn. 162, 34 Atl. 1028, 32 L. R. A. 822.

Assessment and tax are not synonymous. An assessment is doubtless a tax, but the term im- plies something more; it implies a tax of a par- ticular kind, predicated upon the principle of equivalents, or benefits, which are peculiar to the persons or property charged therewith, and which are said to be assessed or appraised, ac- cording to the measure or proportion of such equivalents; whereas a simple tax is imposed for the purpose of supporting the government generally, without reference to any special ad- vantage' which may be supposed to accrue to the persons taxed. Taxes must be levied, with- out discrimination, equally upon all the sub- jects of property; whilst assessments are only levied upon lands, or some other specific prop- erty, the subjects of the supposed benefits ; to repay which the assessment is levied. Ridenour v. Saffin, 1 Handy (Ohio) 464.

In corporations. Instalments of the money subscribed for shares of stock, called for from the subscribers by the directors, from time to time as the company requires money, are called “assessments,” or, In Eng- land, “calls.” Water Co. v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. 47, 28 Pac. 54, 27 Am. St. Rep. 91 ; Spangler v. Railroad Co., 21 111. 278; Stew- art v. Publishing Co., 1 Wash. St. 521, 20 Pac. 600.

The periodical demands made by a mutual insurance company, under its charter and by- laws, upon the makers of premium notes, are also denominated "assessments.” Hill v. Insurance Co., 129 Mich. 141, 88 N. W. 392.

Of damages. Fixing the amount of dam- ages to which the successful party in a suit is entitled after an interlocutory judgment has been taken.

Assessment of damages is also the name given to the determination of the sum which a corporation proposing to take lands for a public use must pay in satisfaction of the demand proved or the value taken.

In insurance. An apportionment made in general average upon the various articles and interests at risk, according to their value at the time and place of being in safety, for contribution for damage and sacrifices pur- posely made, and expenses incurred for es- cape from Impending common peril. 2 Phil. Ins. c. xv.

— Assessment company. In life insurance. A company in which a death loss is met by levying an assessment on the surviving mem- bers of the association. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Marye, 85 Va. 643, 8 S. E. 481.— As- sessment eontraet. One wherein the pay- ment of the benefit is in any manner or degree dependent on the collection of an assessment levied on persons bolding similar contracts. Folkens v. Insurance Co.. 98 Mo. App. 480, 72

S. W. 720.— Assessment district. In taxa- tion. Any subdivision of territory, whether the whole or part of any municipality, in which by law a separate assessment of taxable property is made by the officers elected or appointed therefor. Rev. Stat. Wis. 1898, 8 1031— As- sessment fnnd. The assessment fund of a mutual benefit association is the balance of the assessments, less expenses, out of which bene- ficiaries are paid. Kerr v. Ben. Ass'n, 39 Minn. 174. 39 N. W. 312, 12 Am. St. Rep. 631. — Assessment roll. In taxation. The list or roll of taxable persons and property, complet- ed, verified, and deposited by the assessors, not as it appears after review and equalization. Bank v. Genoa, 28 Misc. Rep. 71, 59 N. Y. Sapp. 829 ; Adams v. Brennan, 72 Miss. 894, 18 South. 482— Assessment work. Under the mining laws of the United States, the hold- er of an unpatented mining claim on the pub- lic domain is required, in order to hold his daim, to do labor or make improvements upon it to the extent of at least one hundred dollars in each year. Rev. St. U. S. 8 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1426). This is commonly called by miners "doing assessment work."

ASSESSOR.

An officer chosen or ap- pointed to appraise, value, or assess property.

In civil and Scotch law. Persons skill- ed in law, selected to advise the Judges of the inferior courts. Bell; Dig. 1, 22; Cod. 1, 51.

A person learned in some particular science or industry, who sits with the judge on the trial of a cause requiring such special knowl- edge and gives his advice.

In England it is the practice In admiralty business to call in assessors, in cases involv- ing questions of navigation or seamanship. They are called "nautical assessors," and are always Brethren of the Trinity House.

ASSETS.

In probate law. Property of a decedent available for the payment of debts and legacies; the estate coming to the heir or personal representative which is charge- able, In law or equity, with the obligations which such heir or representative is required, in his representative capacity, to discharge.

In an accurate and legal sense, all the per- sonal property of the deceased which is of a salable nature, and may be converted into ready money, is deemed assets. But the word is not confined to such property; for all other prop- erty of the deceased which is chargeable with his debts or legacies, and is applicable to that purpose, is, in a large sense, assets. 1 Story, Bq. Jur. f 531 ; Marvin ▼. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 49 Fed. 436; Trust Co. v. Earle, 110 U. S. 710, 4 Sup. Ct 231. 28 I* Ed. 3Q1.

Assets per descent. That portion of the ancestor's estate which descends to the heir, and which is sufficient to charge him, as far as it goes, with the specialty debts of his ancestors. 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1011.

Is commercial law. The aggregate of available property, stock in trade, cash, etc., belonging to a merchant or mercantile com- pany.

The word "assets," though more generally used to denote everything which comes to the representatives of a deceased person, yet is by no means confined to that use, but has come to signify everything which can be made available for the payment of debts, whether belonging to- the estate of a deceased person or not. Hence we speak of the assets of a bank or other mon- ied corporation, the assets of an insolvent debt- or. and the assets of an individual or private copartnership; and we always use this word when we speak of the means which a party has, as compared with bis liabilities or debts. Stanton v. Lewis, 26 Conn. 449; Vaiden v. Hawkins, 59 Miss. 419; Pelican v. Rock Falls, 81 Wis. 428, 51 N. W. 871, 52 N. W. KM!).

The property or effects of a bankrupt or Insolvent, applicable to the payment of his debts.

The term "assets" includes all property of every kind and nature, chargeable with the debts of the bankrupt, that comes into the hands of and under the control of the assignee ; and the value thereof is not to be considered a less sum than that actually realized out of said

Froperty. and received by the assignee for it. n re Taggert, 16 N. B. R. 351, Fed. Cas. No. 13,725.

— Assets e litre mains. L. Fr. Assets in hand ; assets in the bands of executors or administrators, applicable for the payment of debts. Termes de la Ley ; 2 Bl. Comm. olO ;

1 Orabb. Real Prop. 23: Favorite v. Booher 17 Ohio St. 557.— Equitable asset*. Equitable assets are all assets which are chargeable with the payment of debts or legacies in equity, and which do not fall under the description of legal assets. 1 Story, Eq. Jui\ 8 552. Those por- tions of the property which by the ordinary rules of law are exempt from debts, but which the testator has voluntarily charged as assets, or which, being non-existent at law, have been created in equity. Adams, Bq. 254, et seq. They are so called because they can be reach- ed only by the aid and instrumentality of a court of equity, and because their distribution is governed by a different rule from that which governs the distribution of legal assets. - Fonbl. Eq. b. 4, pt. 2, c. 2, 8 1, and notes; Story. Eq. Jur. 8 552.— Legal assets. That portion of the assets of a deceased party which by law is directly liable, in the hands of his executor or administrator, to the payment^ of debts and legacies. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 8 mil. Such assets as can be reached in the hands of an executor or administrator, by a suit at law against him.— Personal assets. Chattels, mon- ey, and other personal property belonging to a bankrupt, insolvent, or decedent estate, which go to the assignee or executor.— Real assets. Lands or real estate in the hands of an heir, chargeable with the payment of the debts of the ancestor. 2 Bl. Comm. 244. 302.

ASSEVERATION.

An affirmation ; a posi- tive assertion; a solemn declaration. This word is seldom. If ever, used for a declara- tion made under oath, but denotes a declara- tion accompanied with solemnity or an ap- peal to conscience.

ASSIGNAT.

In Scotch law. An as- signee.

ASSIGNEE.

A person to whom an as- signment is made. Allen v. Pancoast, 20

N. J. Law, 74; Ely v. Com'rs, 49 Mich. 17. 12 N. W. 893, 13 N. W. 784. The term is commonly used in reference to personal prop- erty; but It is not incorrect, in some cases, to apply it to realty, e. g., “assignee of the reversion.”

Assignee in fact is one to whom an assign- ment has been made in fact by the party having the right. Starkweather v. Insurance Co., 22 Fed. Cas. 1091; Tucker v. West, 31 Ark. 643.

Assignee in law is one in whom the law vests the right; as an executor or adminis- trator. Idem.

The word has a special and distinctive use as employed to designate one to whom, un- der an insolvent or bankrupt law, the whole estate of a debtor is transferred to be ad- ministered for the benefit of creditors.

In old law. A person deputed or ap- pointed by another to do any act, or perform any business. Blount. Au assignee, how- ever, was distinguished from a deputy, being said to occupy a thing in his own right, while a deputy acted in right of another. Cowell.

act by which one person transfers to another, or causes to vest in that other, the whole of the right, interest, or property which he has in any realty or personalty, in possession or in action, or any share, interest, or sub- sidiary estate therein. Seventh Nat. Bank v. Iron Co. (C. C.) 35 Fed. 440; Hang v. Riley, 101 Ga. 372, 29 S. E. 44. 40 L. R. A. 244. More particularly, a written transfer of property, as distinguished from a transfer by mere delivery.

2. In a narrower sense, the transfer or making over of the estate, right, or title which one has in lands and tenements; and, in an especially technical sense, the transfer of the uuexpired residue of a term or estate for life or years.

Assignment does not include testamentary transfers. The idea of an assignment is essen- tially that of a transfer by one existing party to another existing party of some species of property or valuable interest, except in the case of an executor. Hight v. Sackett, 34 N.

Y. 447.

3. A transfer or making over by a debtor of all his property and effects to one or more assignees in trust for the benefit of his cred- itors. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1036.

ASSOClE UN NOM. In French Raw. In a society en commandite an assorts an notn is one who is liable for the' engagements of the undertaking to the whole extent of his property. This expression arises from the fact that the names of the associes so liable figure in the firm-name or form part of the »ocMt6 en nom collectif. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 546.

ASSOH.. To absolve ; acquit ; to set free ; to deliver from excommunication. St. 1 Hen.

IV. c. 7 ; Cowell.

ASSOILZIE.

In Scotch law. To acquit the defendant in an action ; to find a crimi- nal not guilty.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 8:1, KJV]

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

Why: The entry is acquittal — finding the accused not guilty; the verse states acquittal absolutely: no condemnation.

ASSUME.

To undertake ; engage ; prom- ise. 1 Ld. Raym. 122 ; 4 Coke, 92. To take upon one’s self. Springer v. De Wolf, 194

I1L 218, 62 N. E. 542, 56 L. R. A. 465, 88 Am. St. Rep. 155.

ASSUMPSIT.

Lat He undertook; be promised. A promise or engagement by which one person assumes or undertakes to do some act or pay something to another. It may be either oral or in writing, but is not under seal. It is express if the promisor puts his engagement in distinct and definite language ; it is implied where the law infers a promise (though no formal one has passed) from the conduct of the party or the cir- cumstances of the case.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

In practice. A form of action which lies for the recovery of damages for the non-per- formance of a parol or simple contract; or a contract that is neither of record nor un- der seal. 7 Term, 351; Ballard v. Walker, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 60.

The ordinary division of this action is in- to (1) common or indebitatus assumpsit, brought for the most part on an implied promise; and (2) special assumpsit, founded on an express promise. Steph. Pl. 11, 13.

The action of assumpsit differs from tres- pass and trover, which are founded on a tort, not upon a contract; from covenant and debt, which are appropriate where the ground of recovery is a sealed instrument, or special obligation to pay a fixed sum ; and from replevin, which seeks the recovery of specific property, if attainable, rather than of dam- ages.

— Implied assumpsit. An undertaking or promise not formally made, but presumed or implied from tbe conduct of a party. Willen- borg v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 11 111. App. 302.— Apodal assumpsit. An action of assumpsit ia so called where the declaration sets out the precise language or effect of a special contract, which forms the ground of action ; as distin- guished from a general assumpsit, in which the technical claim is for a debt alleged to grow out of the contract, not tbe agreement itself.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ecclesiastes 5:4, KJV]

When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou hast vowed.

Why: The entry is the promise or undertaking; the verse states the binding force of what is undertaken. Borderline honestly noted: vow vs common-law promise — the obligation-of-the-undertaking is the bridge.

ASSUMPTION.

The act or agreement of assuming or taking upon one’s self; the un- dertaking or adoption of a debt or obligation primarily resting upon another, as where the purchaser of real estate "assumes” a mort- gage resting upon it, in which case he adopts the mortgage debt as his own and becomes personally liable for its payment Eggleston v. Morrison, 84 111. App. 631 ; Locke v. Hom- er, 131 Mass. 93, 41 Am. Rep. 199 ; Springer v. De Wolf, 194 111. 218, 62 N. E. 542, 56 L.

ASSURANCE.

Is conveyancing. A deed or instrument of conveyance. The le- gal evidences of the transfer of property are in England called the “common assurances” of the kingdom, whereby every man’s estate is assured to him, and all controversies, doubts, and difficulties are either prevented or removed. 2 Bl. Comm. 294. State v. Farruuil, 8 N. J. Law, 335.

In contracts. A making secure ; insur- ance. The term was formerly of very fre- quent use In the modern sense of Insurance, particularly In English maritime law, and still appears in the policies of some compa- nies, but is otherwise seldom seen of late years. There seems to be a tendency, how- ever, to use assurance for the contracts of life insurance companies, and insurance for risks upon property.

Assurance, further, covenant for. See

Covenant.

ASSURED.

A person who has been in- sured by some insurance company, or under- writer, against losses or perils mentioned in the policy of Insurance. Brock way v. In- surance Co. (C. C.) 119 Fed. 766; Sanford v. Insurance Co., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 548.

The person for whose benefit the policy is issued and to whom the loss is payable, not uecessurily the person on whose life or property the policy is written. Thus where a wife insures her husband’s life for her own benefit and he has no interest in the policy, she is the “assured” and he the “insured.” Hogle v. Insurance Co., 6 Rob. (N. Y.) 570; Ferdon v. Canfield, 104 N. Y. 143, 10 N. E. 140; Insurance Co. v. Luchs, 108 U. S. 498,

[John Grisham, The Rainmaker, 1995]

A young lawyer sues an insurance company that denied a dying boy's claim — the assurer refusing the very peril it underwrote. (paraphrase) (paraphrase)

Why: The novel's engine is an insurer (assurer) denying the risk it was paid to bear; a genuine fictional instance of the assurer's office and its breach.

ASSYTHEMENT.

In Scotch law. Dam- ages awarded to the relative of a murdered person from the guilty party, who has not been convicted and punished. Paters. Comp.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 35:31, KJV]

Moreover ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death: but he shall be surely put to death.

Why: Distinct headword, same genuine link as AN GILD: damages to the murdered person's kin are precisely the satisfaction-payment the verse regulates.

ASTIPULATION.

A mutual agreement, assent, and consent between parties ; also a witness or record.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Amos 3:3, KJV]

ASTRUM.

A house, or place of habita- tion. Bract, fol. 2676; Cowell.

ASYLUM. 1. A sanctuary, or place of refuge and protection, where criminals and debtors found shelter, and from which they could not be taken without sacrilege. State v. Bacon, 6 Neb. 291 ; Cromie v. Institution of Mercy, 3 Bush (Ky.) 391.

2. Shelter; refuge; protection from the hand of Justice. The word includes not only place, but also shelter, security, protection; and a fugitive from Justice, who has com- mitted a crime in a foreign country, “seeks an asylum” at all times when he claims the use of the territories of the United States. In re De Giacomo, 12 Blatchf. 395, Fed. Cas. No. 3,747.

3. An institution for the protection and relief of unfortunates, as asylums for the poor, for the deaf and. dumb, or for the in- sane. Lawrence v. Leidlgh, 58 Kan. 594, 50 Pac. 600, 62 Am. St Rep. 631.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 21:13-14, KJV]

And if a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand; then I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee. But if a man come presumptuously upon his neighbour, to slay him with guile; thou shalt take him from mine altar, that he may die.

Why: OCR caveat: the chunk body for headword ASTRUM merges the ASTRUM entry with the following ASYLUM entry ('a sanctuary, or place of refuge and protection, where criminals and debtors found shelter'). The verse bears on...

AT ARM’S LENGTH.

Beyond the reach of personal Influence 'Or contrdl. Parties are said to deal "at arm's length” when each stands upon, the strict letter of his rights, and conducts the business in a formal manner, without trusting to the other's fair- ness or Integrity, and without being subject to the other’s control or overmastering in- fluence.

Where parties deal at arm's length, equity presumes no confidential relation and hence no undue influence — the opposite of the scrutiny applied to fiduciary dealings.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Hebrews 6:16, KJV]

For men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife.

Why: The entry defines atha as an oath and the power of exacting/administering one. Hebrews 6:16 gives the oath's legal function verbatim: sworn by the greater, it ends strife — i.e., confirmation. Author's exposition, not...

ATHEIST.

One who does not believe In the existence of a God. Gibson v. Insurance Oo., 37 iN. 1‘. 584; Thurston v. Whitney, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 110; Com. v. Hills, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 530.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 14:1, KJV]

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.

Why: The entry defines an atheist as one who does not believe in the existence of a God. Psalm 14:1 is the classic scriptural portrait of exactly that denial. Psalmist's words, not deity speech.

ATXA.

Hatred or Ill-will. See De Odio Kt Axia.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 10:12, KJV]

Hatred stirreth up strifes: but love covereth all sins.

Why: The entry defines atxa as hatred or ill-will. The proverb names hatred's fruit (strife) directly — genuine thematic fit for the legal term's substance. Proverb, not deity speech.

ATUL1UM.

ATTACHXAMENTA.

L. Lnt. Attach- ment

—Attac hi amenta bonornm. A distress for- merly taken upon goods and chattels, by the legal attachiators or bailiffs, as security to an- swer an action for personal estate or debt.— At- tachiamenta de apinis et boscis. A privi- lege granted to the officers of a forest to take to their own one thorns, brush, and windfalls, within their precincts. Ivenn. Par. Antiq. 20». — Attachiamenta de placitoa coronse. At- tachment of pleas of the crown. Jewison v. Dy- son, 9 Mees. & W. 544.

ATTACHMENT.

The act or process of taking, apprehending, or seizing persons or property, by virtue of a writ, summons, or other judicial order, and bringing the same

Into the custody of the law ; used either for the purpose of bringing a person before the court, of acquiring jurisdiction over the property seized, to compel an appearance, to furnish security for debt or costs, or to ar- rest a fund In the hands of a third person who may become liable to pay It over.

Also the writ or other process for the ac- complishment of the purposes above enu- merated, this being the more common use of the word.

Of persona. A writ issued by a court of record, commanding the sheriff to bring be- fore It a person who has been guilty of con- tempt of court, either in neglect or abuse of Its process or of subordinate powers. 3 Bl. Comm. 280 ; 4 Bl. Comm. 283; Burbacfa v. Light Co., 119 Wls. 384, 96 N. W. 829.

Of property. A species of mesne process, by which a writ is Issued at the Institution or during the progress of an action, com- manding the sheriff to seize the property, rights, credits, or effects ot the defendant to be held as security for the satisfaction of such judgment as the plaintiff- may recover. It Is principally used against absconding, concealed, or fraudulent debtors. U. S. Cap- sule Co. v. Isaacs, 23 Ind. App, 533, 55 N.

E. 832; Campbell v. Keys, 130 Mich. 127, 89 N. W. 720 ; Itempe v. Uavens, 68 Ohio St. 113, 67 N. E. 282.

To give jurisdiction. Where the defend- ant is a non-resident, or beyond the terri- torial jurisdiction of the court, his goods or land within the territory may be seized upon process of attachment; whereby he will be compelled to enter an appearance, or the court acquires jurisdiction so fur as to dis- pose of the property attached. This is some- times called “foreign attachment.”

attachment” to one issuing ngainst a resident debtor, (upon the special ground of fraud, intention to abscond, etc.,) and to des- ignate an attachment against a non-resident, or his property, as “foreign.” Lougwell v. Hartwell, 164 Fa. 533, 30 Atl. 495 ; Biddle v. Girard Nat Bank, 109 Pa. 350. But the term “foreign attachment” more properly belongs to the process otherwise familiar- ly known as “garnishment” It was a pe- culiar and ancient remedy oj)en to cred- itors within the jurisdiction of the city of London, by which they were enabled to sat- isfy their own debts by attaching or seiz- ing the money or goods of the debtor in the hands of a third person within the juris- diction of the city. Welsh v. Blackwell, 14

N. J. Law, 346. This power and process sur- vive In modern law, in all common-law juris- dictions, and are variously denominated “garnishment,” “trustee process,” or "factor- izing.”

— Attachment execution. A name given In some states to a process of garnishment for the satisfaction of a judgment. As to the judg- ment debtor it is an execution; but as to the garnishee it is an original process — a summons commanding him to appear and show cause, if any he has, why the judgment Bhould not be levied on the goods and effects of the defendant in his hands. Kennedy v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 105 Pa. 179, 30 Atl. 724; Appeal of Lane, 105 Pa. 61, 51 Am. Rep. 10C.— Attachment of privilege. In English law. A process by which a man, by virtue of his privilege, calls another to litigate in that court to which he himself belongs, and who has the privilege to answer there. A writ issued to apprehend a person in a privileged place. Tenues de la Ley. — Attachment of the forest. One of the three courts formerly held in forests. The highest court was called “justice in eyre’s seat ;” the middle, the “swainmote ;” and the lowest, the “attachment.'’ Manwood, 90, 99.

ATTAINDER.

That extinction of civil rights and capacities which takes place when- ever a person who has committed treason or felony receives sentence of death for his crime. 1 Steph. Comm. 408; 1 Blsh. Grim. Law, g 041 ; Green . v. Shumway, 39 N. Y. 431 ; In re Garland, 32 How. Prae. (N. Y.) 251 ; Cozens v. Long, 3 N. J. Law, 766 ; State v. Hastings, 37 Neb. 96, 55 N. W. 781.

It differs from conviction, in that it is after judgment, whereas conviction is upon the ver- dict of guilty, but before judgment pronounced, and may be, quashed upon some point of law reserved, or judgment may be arrested. The consequences of attainder are forfeiture of property and corruption of blood. 4 Bi. Comm.

At the common law, attainder resulted in three ways, viz.: by conf region, by verdict, and by process or outlawry. The first case was where the prisoner pleaded guilty at the bar, or having fled to sanctuary, confessed his guilt and abjured the realm to save his life. The second was where the prisoner pleaded not guilty at the bar, and the jury brought in a verdict against him. The third, when the person accused made his escape and was outlawed.

— Bill of attainder. A legislative act, di- rected against a designated person, pronounc- ing him guilty of an alleged crime, (usually trea- son.) without trial or conviction according to the recognized rules of procedure, and passing sentence of death and attainder upon him. “Bills of attainder,” as they are technically called, are such special acts of the legislature as inflict capital punishments upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offenses, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. If an act inflicts a milder degree of punishment than death, it is called a “bill of pains and penalties,” but both are included in the prohibition in the Federal constitution. Story. Const. In old English practice. A writ which lay to inquire whether a jury of twelve men had given a false verdict, in or- der that the judgment might be reversed. 3 Bl. Comm. 402; Bract, fol. 2886-292. This Inquiry was made by a grand assise or jury of twenty-four persons, and, if they found the verdict a false one, the judgment was that the jurors should become infamous, should forfeit their goods and the profits of their lands, should themselves be imprisoned, and their wives and children thrust out of doors, should have their houses razed, their trees extirpated, and their meadows plowed up, and that the plaintiff should be restored to all that he lost by reason of the unjust verdict 3 Bl. An intent to do a particular criminal thing combined with an act which falls short of the thing intended. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, { 728.

There is a marked distinction between “at- tempt” and "intent.” The former conveys the idea of physical effort to accomplish an act; the latter, the quality of mind with which an act was done. To charge, in an indictment, an assault with an attempt to murder, is not equivalent to charging an assault with intent to murder. State v. Marshall, 14 Ala. 411.

ATTORNEY AT LAW.

An advocate, counsel, official agent employed in preparing, managing, and trying cases in the courts. An officer in a court of Justice, who is em- ployed by a party in a cause to manage the same for him.

In English law. An attorney at law was a public officer belonging to the superior courts of common law at Westminster, who conducted legal proceedings on behalf of oth- ers, called his clients, by whom he was re- tained; he answered to the solicitor in the courts of chancery, and the proctor of the admiralty, ecclesiastical, probate, and divorce courts. An attorney was almost invariably also a solicitor. It is now provided by the Judicature act, 1873, § 87, that solicitors, at- torneys, or proctors of, or by law empowered, to practise in, any court the Jurisdiction of which is by that act transferred to the high court of Justice or the court of appeal, shall be called "solicitors of the supreme court" Wharton.

The term is in use in America, and in most of the states includes "barrister," "counsellor," and "solicitor," in the sense in which those terms are used in England. Xu some states, as well as in the United Stales supreme court, "attorney" and "counsellor" are distinguishable, the former term being applied to the younger members of the bar, and to those who carry on the practice and formal parts of the suit, while "counsellor" is the adviser, or special counsel retained to try the cause. In some ju- risdictions one must have been an attorney for a given time before he can be admitted to practise as a counsellor. Uap. & L.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

In English law. The chief law officer of the realm, be- iug created by letters patent, whose office Is to exhibit informations and prosecute for the crown in matters criminal, and to file bills in the exchequer in any matter concerning the king's revenue. AUCTION.

A public sale of land or goods, at pubiic outcry, to the highest bid der. Russell v. Miner, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 539 : Hibler v. Hoag, 1 Watts & S. (Pu.) 553; Crandall v. State, 28 Ohio St. 481.

A sale by auction is a sale by public out- cry to the highest bidder on the spot. Civ. Code Cal. § 1792; Civ. Code Dak. § 1022.

The sale by auction is that which takes place when the thing is offered publicly to be sold to whoever will give the highest price. Civ. Code La. art. 2601.

Auction is very generally defined as a sale to the highest bidder, and this is the usual meaning. There may, however, be a sale to the lowest bidder, as where land Is sold for non-payment of taxes to whomsoever will take it for the shortest term ; or where a contract is offered to the one who will perform it at the lowest price. And these appear fairly included in, the term “auction.” Abbott.

—Dutch auction. A method of sale by auc- tion which consists in the public offer of the property at a price beyond its value, and then gradually lowering the price until some one becomes the purchaser. Crandall v. State, 28 Ohio St. 482.— Public auction. A sale of property at auction, where any and all per- sons who choose are permitted to attend and offer bids. Though this phrase is frequently used, it is doubtful whether the word “public adds anything to the force of the expression, since “auction” itself imports publicity. If there can be such a thing as a private auction, it must be one where the property is sold to the highest bidder, but only certain persons, or a certain class of persons, are permitted to be present or to offer bids.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V (Double Jeopardy Clause)]

The common-law pleas of autrefois acquit and autrefois convict are the ancestors of the constitutional bar: 'nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb.'

Why: The body defines the pleas in bar with Blackstone and cases but never names their modern constitutional descendant; the Fifth Amendment clause is the living form of the same rule — genuine illumination connecting the...

In maritime law. Loss or damage acci- dentally happening to a vessel or to its cargo during a voyage.

Also a small duty paid to masters of ships, when goods are sent in another man's ship, for their care of the goods, over and above the freight.

In marine insurance. Where loss or damage occurs to a vessel or its cargo at sea, average Is the adjustment and appor- tionment of such loss between the owner, the freight, and the cargo, in proportion to their respective interests and losses, in order that one may not sufTer the whole loss, but each contribute ratably. Coster v. Insuranci Co.,

2 Wash. C. C. 51, 6 Fed. Cos. 611; Insur- ance Co. v. Bland, 9 Dana (Ky.) 147 ; Wkit- teridge v. Norris, 6 Mass. 125; Nickerson v. Tyson, 8 Mass. 467; Insurance Co. v. Jones, 2 Bin. (Pa.) 552. It is of the follow- ing kinds:

General average (also called “gross") con- sists of expense purposely Incurred, sacrifice made, or damage sustained for the common safety of the vessel, freight, and cargo, or the two of them, at risk, and is to be con- tributed for by the several Interests in the proportion of their respective values exposed to the common danger, and ultimately sur- viving. including the amount of expense, sacrifice, or damage so incurred in the con- tributory value. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1269 et seq. 2 Steph. Comm. 179; Padelford vv Board- man, 4 Mass. 548.

Particular average is a loss happening to the ship, freight, or cargo which is not to be shared by contribution among all those in- terested, but must lie borne by the owner of the subject to which it occurs. It is thus called iu contradistinction to general aver- age. Bargett v. Insurance Co., 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 395.

Petty average. In maritime law. A term used to denote such charges and disburse- ments as, according to occurrences and the custom of every place, the master necessari- ly furnishes for the benefit of the ship and cargo, either at the place of loading or un- loading, or on the voyage: such as the hire of a pilot for conducting a vessel from one place to another, towage, light money, bea- conage, anchorage, bridge toll, quarantine and such like. Fork, Ins. 100. The particulars belonging to this head depend, however, en- tirely upon usage. Abb. Ship. 404.

Simple average. Particular average, (q.v.)

—Average charge*. “Average charges for toll and transportation” are understood to mean, and do mean, charges made at a mean rate, ob- tained by dividing the entire receipts for toll and transportation by the whole quantity of tonnage carried, reduced to a common standard of tons moved one mile. Hersh v. Railway Co., 74 Pa. 100. — Average prices. the taking of the dis- tress or property complained of, where he took It in his own right, and sets forth the reason of It : as for rent In arrenr, damage done, etc. 3 Bl. Comm. 149; 1 Tidd. IT. 645. Brown v. Blssett, 21 N. J. Law, 274 ; Hill v. Miller. 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 357.

Avowry is the setting forth, as in a declara- tion, the natnre and merits -of the defendant's case, showing that the distress taken by him was lawful, which must be done with such sufficient authority as will entitle him to a retor- no habendo. Hill v. Stocking, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 284.

An avowry must be distinguished from a jus- tification. The former species of plea admits the plaintiff’s ownership of the property, but alleges a right in the defendant sufficient to warrant him in taking the property and which still subsists. A justification, on the other hand, denies that the plaintiff had the right of prop- erty or possession in the subject-matter,, alleg- ing it to have been in the defendant or a third person, or Avers a right sufficient to warrant the defendant in taking it, although such right has pot continued in force to the time of making answer.

AVOWTERER.

In English law. An adulterer with whom a married woman con- tinues in adultery. Termes de la Ley.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 20:10, KJV]

And the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death.

Why: The entry defines avowterer as the adulterer with whom a married woman continues in adultery. Leviticus 20:10 names the adulterer (and adulteress) directly and states the legal consequence. The verse stands inside the...

AVOWTRY.

In old English law. Adul- tery. Termes de la Ley.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:14, KJV]

A delivery of goods in trust upon a contract, expressed or implied, that the trust shall be duly executed, and the goods restored by the bailee as soon as the purposes of the bailment shall be answered. 2 Kent, Comm. 559.

Bailment is a delivery of a thing in trust for some special object or purpose, and upon a contract, express or implied, to conform to the object or purpose of the trust. Story, Bailm. 3.

A delivery of goods in trust on a contract, either expressed or implied, that the trust shall be duly executed, and the goods redelivered as soon as the time or use for which they were hailed shall have elapsed or be performed. Jones. Bailm. 117.

Bailment is a word of French origin, signif- icant of the curtailed transfer, the delivery or mere handing over, which is appropriate to the transaction. Schouler. Pers. Prop. 695.

The test of a bailment is that the identical thing is to be returned; if another thing of equal value is to be returned, the transaction is a sale. Marsh v. Titus, 0 Thomp. A C. (N. Y.) 29; Sturm v. Boker. 150 U. S. 312, 14 Sup. Ct. 99, 37 L. Ed. 1093.

Classification, sir William Jones has divided bailments into five sorts, namely: Deposltum, or deposit ; mandatum, or com- mission without recompense; commodatum, or loan for use without pay : pignori acccp- tum, or pawn ; locatum, or hiring, which is always with reward. This last is subdivided Into locatio rei, or hiring, by which the hirer gains a temporary use of the thing; locatio operis facicndi, when something is to be done to the thing delivered; locatio operU mcrcium vehendarum. when the thing is merely to be carried from one place to an- other. Jones, Bailm. 36.

Lord Holt divided bailments thus:

(1) Depositum, or a naked bailment of goods, to be kept for the use of the bailor.

(2) Commodatum. Where goods or chattels that are useful are lent to the bailee groii #, to be used by him.

(3) Locatio rei. Where goods are lent to the bailee to be used by him for hire.

(4) Vadium. Pawn or pledge.

(5) Locatio operis facicndi. Where goods are delivered to be carried, or something is to be done alxmt them, for a reward to be paid to the bailee.

(6) ilandatum. A delivery of goods to some- body who is to carry them, or do something about them, gratis. 2 Ld. Raym. 909.

Another division, suggested by Bouvier, is as follows: First, those bailments which are for the benefit of the bailor, or of some person whom lie represents; second , those for the bene- fit of the bailee, or some person represented by him ; third, those which are for the benefit of both parties.

— Bailment for hire. A contract in which the bailor agrees to pay an adequate recom- pense for the safe-keeping of the thing intrust- ed to the custody of the bailee, and tbe bailee agrees to keep it and restore it on the request of the bailor, in the same condition substantial- ly as he received it. excepting injury or loss from causes for which he is not responsible. Arent v. Squire, 1 Paly (N. Y.) 356.— Gratui- tous bailment. Another name for a depoel- tura or naked bailment, which is made only for the benefit of the bailor and is not a source of profit to the bailee. Foster v. Essex Bank. 17 Mass. 499, 9 Am. Dec. 308. — Lucrative bailment. One which is undertaken upon a consideration and for which a payment or rec- ompense is to be made to the bailee, or from which he is to derive some advantage. In criminal law. A punishment inflicted upon criminals, by com- pelling them to quit a city, place, or country for a specified period of time, or for life. See Cooper v. Telfair. 4 Dali. 14, 1 L. Ed. 721 ; People v. Potter, 1 Park. Cr. R. (N. Y.) 54.

It is inflicted principally upon]>olitical of- fenders, “transportation” being the word used to express a similar punishment of ordinary criminals. Banishment, however, merely for- bids the return of the person banished before the expiration of the sentence, while transportation involves the idea of deprivation of liberty after the convict arrives at the place to which he has been carried. Rap. & L.

BANK. 1. A bench or seat; the bench or tribunal occupied by the judges ; the seat of judgment ; a court. The full bench, or full court ; the assembly of all the judges of a court. A "sitttug in bank" is a meeting of all the judges of a court, usually for the purpose of hearing arguments on demurrers, points reserved, motions for new trial, etc., as dlstlnglshed from the sitting of a single judge at the assises or at nisi piHus and from trials at bar. But, in this sense, Sane is the more usual form of the word.

Why: The entry defines banishment as compelling one to quit a place. The expulsion from Eden is the archetypal banishment — driven out and barred from return. Narrative description, not deity speech.

An Institution, of great value in the commercial world, empowered to receive de- posits of money, to make loans, and to Issue its promissory notes, (designed to circulate as money, and commonly culled “bank-notes” or "bank-bills,'') or to perform any one or more of these functions.

The term “bank” Is usually restricted In its application to an Incorporated body ; while a private individual making it his business to conduct banking operations is denominat- ed a “banker.” Hobbs v. Bank, 101 Fed. 75, 41 C. C. A. 205; Higgins v. Munday, 19 Wash. 233, 52 Pac. 855 ; Komlnger v. Keyes, 73 Ind. 377; Oulton v. Loan Soe., 17 Wall. 117. 21

Also the house or place where such busi- ness Is carried on.

Banks in the commercial sense are of three kinds, to- wit: (1) Of deposit; (2) of discount ; (3) of circulation. Strictly spenking, the term "bank” implies a place for the de- l*»sit of money, as that is the most obvious purpose of such an Institution. Originally the business of banking consisted only in re- ceiving deposits, such as bullion, plate, and the like, for safe-keeping until the depositor should see fit to draw it out for use, but the business, in the progress of events, was ex- tended, and bankers assumed to discount bills and notes, and to loan money upon mort- gage, pawn, or other security, and, at a still later period, to issue notes of their own, in- tended as a circulating currency and a medi- um of exchange. Instead of gold and silver. Modern bankers frequently exercise any two or even all three of those functions, but it is still true that an Institution prohibited from exercising any more than one of those func- tions is a bank, In the strictest commercial sense. Oulton v. German Sav. & L. Soe., 17 Wall. 118, 21 L. Ed. 618; Itev. St. U. S. § 3407 <U. S. Comp. St. 1901. p. 2246).

3. An acclivity ; an elevation or mound of earth ; usually applied In this sense to the raised earth bordering the sides of a water- course.

— Bank-account. A sum of money placed with a bank or banker, on deposit, by.n cus- tomer, and subject to be drawn out on the lat- ter's check. . BANKRUPT LAW.

A law relating to bankrupts and the procedure against them in the courts. A law providing a remedy for the creditors of a bankrupt, and for the re- lief and restitution of the bankrupt himself.

A bankrupt law is distinguished from the or- dinary law between debtor and creditor, ns involving these three general principles: (1) A summary and immediate seizure of all the debt- or's property ; (2) a distribution of it amqng the creditors in general, instead of merely applying a portion of it to the payment of the individual complainant ; and (3) the discharge of the debt- or from future liability for the debts then ex- isting.

The leading distinction between a bankrupt law and an insolvent law, in the projier technical sense of the words, consists in the char- acter of the persons upon whom it is designed to operate,— the former contemplating as its ob- jects bankrupts only, that is, traders of a cer- tain description ; the latter, insolvents in gen- eral, or persons unnhle to pay their debts. This has led to a marked separation between the two systems, in principle and in practice, which in England has always been carefully maintained, although in the United States it has of late been effectually disregarded. In further illus- tration of this distinction, it may be observed that a bankrupt law, in its proper sense, is a remedy intended primarily for the benefit of creditors; it is set in motion at their instance, and operates upon the debtor against his will, (in invitum,) although in its result it effectually discharges him from his debts. An insolvent law, on the other hand, is chiefly intended for the benefit of the debtor, and is set in motion at his instance, though less effective as a discharge in its final result. Sturges v. Crowinshield. 4 Wheat. 194, 4 L. Ed. 529; Vanuxen v. Hazle- hursts, 4 N. J. Law, 192. 7 Am. Dec. 582; Adams v. Storey, 1 Paine, 79, 1 Fed. Cas. 142; Knnzler v. Kohaus, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 317.

The only substantial difference between a strictly bankrupt law and an insolvent law lies in the circumstance that the former affords re- lief upon the application of the creditor, and the latter upon the application of the debtor. In the general character of the remedy, there is no difference, however much the modes by which the remedy may be administered may vary. Martin v. Berry, 37 Cal. 222.

BANKRUPTCY. 1. The state or condi- tion of oue who is a bankrupt; amenability to the bankrupt laws; the condition of ono who has committed an act of bankruptcy, and is liable to be proceeded against by his cred- itors therefor, or of one, whose circumstances are such that he is entitled, on his voluntary application, to take the benefit of the bankrupt laws. The term is used in a looser sense as synonymous with “insolvency," — inability to pay one's debts ; the stopping and breaking up of business because the trader is broken down, Insolvent, ruined. Phipps v. Harding, 70 Fed. 468, 17 C. C. A. 203, 30

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

L. It. A. 613; Arnold v. Maynard, 2 Story, 354, Fed. Cas. No. 561 ; Bernhardt v. Curtis, 109 La. 171, 33 South. 125, 94 Am. St. Rep. 445.

2. The term denotes the proceedings taken under the bankrupt law, against a person (or firm or company) to have him adjudged a bankrupt, and to have his estate adminis- tered for the benefit of the creditors, and di- vided among them.

3. That branch of Jurisprudence, or system of law and practice, which is concerned with the definition and ascertainment of acts of bankruptcy and the administration of bank- rupts' estates for the benefit of their cred- itors and the absolution and restitution of bankrupts.

As to the distinction between bankruptcy and insolvency, it may be said that insolvent laws operate at the instance of an imprisoned debtor; bankrupt laws, at the instance of a creditor. But the line of partition between bankrupt and insolvent laws is not so distinctly marked as to define what belongs exclusively to the one and not to the other class of laws. Sturges v. Crown- inshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. Ed. 529.

Insolvency means a simple inability to pay, as debts should become payable, whereby the debtor's business would be broken up; bank- ruptcy means the particular legal status, to be ascertained and declared by a judicial decree. In re Black, 2 Ben. 196, Fed. Cas. No. 1,457.

Classification. Bankruptcy (in the sense of proceedings taken under the bankruptcy law) is either voluntary or involuntary ; the former where the proceeding is initiated by the debtor's own petition to be adjudged a bankrupt and have the benefit of the law (In re Murray (D. C.] 96 Fed. 600; Metsker v. Bonebrake. 108 U.

S. 66, 2 Sup. CL 351. 27 L. Ed. 654), the latter where he is forced into bankruptcy on the peti- tion of a sufficient number of his creditors.

— Act of bankruptcy, see Act. — Adjudica- tion of bankruptcy. The judgment or decree of a court having jurisdiction, that a person against whom a petition in bankruptcy has been filed, or who has filed his voluntary petition, be ordered and adjudged to be a bankrupt. — Bank- ruptcy courts. Courts for the administration of the bankrupt laws. The present English bankruptcy courts are the London bankruptcy court, the court of appeal, and the local bank- ruptcy courts created by the bankruptcy act, 1869.— Bankruptcy proceedings. The term includes all proceedings in a federal court hav- ing jurisdiction in bankruptcy, founded on a petition in bankruptcy and either directly or collaterally involved in the adjudication and dis- charge of the bankrupt and the collection and administration of his estate. Kidder v. Horro- bin, 72 N. Y. 167.

BANYAN.

In East Indian law. A Hin- doo merchant or shop-keeper. The word is used in Bengal to denote the native who man- ages the money concerns of a European, and sometimes serves him as an interpreter.

BAR. 1. A partition or railing running across a court-room, intended to separate the general public from the space occupied by the judges, counsel, Jury, and others concerned in the trial of a cause. In the English courts it is the partition behind which all outer-barristers and every member of the public must stand. Solicitors, being officers of the court, are admitted within it; as are also queen’s counsel, barristers with patents of precedence, and serjeants, in virtue of their ranks. Par- ties who appear in person also are placed within the bar on the floor of the court.

2. The term also designates a particular part of the court-room ; for example, the place where prisoners stand at their trial, whence the expression “prisoner at the bar.”

3. It further denotes the presence, actual or constructive, of the court. Thus, a trial at bar is one had before the full court, distin- guished from a trial had before a single judge at nisi prius. So the "case at bar” Is the case now before the court and under its consideration ; the case being tried or argued.

4. In the practice of legislative bodies, the bar is the outer boundary of the house, and therefore all persons, not being members, who wish to address the house, or are summoned to it, appear at the bar for that pur- pose.

5. In another sense, the whole body of at- torneys and counsellors, or the members of the legal profession, collectively, are figura- tively called the “bar,” from the place which they usually occupy in court. They are thus distinguished from the “bench,” which term denotes the whole body of judges.

6. In the law of contracts, “bar” means on impediment, an obstacle, or preventive bar- rier. Thus, relationship within the prohib- ited degrees is a bar to marriage. In this sense also we speak of the “bar of the statute of limitations.”

7. It further means that which defeats, an- nuls, cuts off, or puts an end to. Thus, a provision “in bar of dower” is one which has the effect of defeating or cutting off the dow- er-rights which the wife would otherwise be- come entitled to in the particular land.

8. In pleading, it denoted a special plea, constituting a sufficient answer to an action at law; and so called because it barred, i. e., prevented, the plaintiff from further prose- cuting it with effect, and, if established by proof, defeated and destroyed the action alto- gether; Now called a special “plea in bar.” See Plea in Bab.

BAR FEE.

In English law. A fee taken by the sheriff, time out of mind, for every prisoner who is acquitted. Bae. Abr. “Ex- tortion.” Abolished by St. 14 Geo. III. c. 20; 55 Geo. III. c. 50; 8 & 9 Viet. c. 114.

L. Fr. A wrangling suit. Britt, c. 92; Co. Litt. 3686.

BARGAIN.

A mutual undertaking, con- tract, or agreement.

A contract or agreement between two par- ties, the one to sell goods or lauds, and the other to buy them. Hunt v. Adams, 5 Mass. 360, 4 Am. Dec. 68 ; Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 91 ; Bank v. Archer, 16 Miss. 192.

“If the word •agreement’ imports a mutual act of two parties, surely the word ‘bargain’ is not less significative of the consent of two. In a popular sense, the former word is frequently used as declaring the engagement of one only. A man may agree to pay money or to perform some other act, and the word is then used synonymously with ‘promise’ or ‘engage.’ But the word ‘bargain’ is seldom used, unless to express a mutual contract or undertaking.” Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 131, 9 Am. Dec. 323.

— Bargainee. The party to a bargain to whom the subject-matter of the bargain or thing bargained for is to go ; the grantee in a deed of argain and sale. — Bargainor. The party to a bargain who is to perform the contract by delivery of the subject-matter. — Catching bargain. A bargain by which money is loaned, at an extortionate or extravagant rate, to an heir or any one who has an estate in reversion or expectancy, to be repaid on the vesting of his interest : or a similar unconscionable bargain with such person for the purchase outright of his expectancy.

Beates, 9 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 176.

The expression “bargain and sale” is also applied to transfers of personalty, in cases where there is first an executory agreement for the sale, (the bargain,) and then an ac- tual and completed sale.

The proper and technical words to denote a bargain and sale are "bargain and sell;” but any other words that are sufficient to raise a use upon a valuable consideration are sufficient. 2 Wood. ' Conv. 15; Jackson ex dem. Hudson v. Alexander, 3 Johns. 484, 3 Am. Dec. 517.

In the absence of any statutory provision governing the computation of time, the author- ities are uniform that, where an act is requir- ed to be done a certain number of days or weeks before a certain other day upon which an- other act is to be done, the day upon which the first act Is done is to be excluded from the com- putation, and the whole number of days or weeks must intervene before the day fixed for doing the second act. Ward v. Walters, 63 Wis. 44, 22 N. W. 844, and eases cited.

BEG.

To solicit alms or charitable aid. The act of a cripple in passing along the sidewalk and silently holding out his hand and receiving money from passers-by is “beg- ging for alms,” within the meaning of a stat- ute which uses that phrase. In re Haller, 8 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 65.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Mark 10:46, KJV]

And they came to Jericho: and as he went out of Jericho with his disciples and a great number of people, blind Bartimaeus, the son of Timaeus, sat by the highway side begging.

Why: The entry defines beg as soliciting alms. Mark 10:46 shows the act in its classic form: blind Bartimaeus sitting by the highway side begging. Narrative, not deity speech.

BEOA.

A land measure used In the East Indies. Iu Bengal it Is equal to about a third part of an acre.

BEGGAR.

One who lives by begging charity, or who has no other means of sup- port than solicited alms.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 16:20-21, KJV]

And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores, And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover the dogs came and licked his sores.

Why: The entry defines a beggar as one who lives by begging charity, with no other means of support than solicited alms. Lazarus is scripture's named beggar — laid at the gate, desiring crumbs from the rich man's table. Je...

BELIEF.

A conviction of the truth of a proposition, existing subjectively in the mind, and Induced by argument, persuasion, or proof addressed to the judgment. Keller v. State, 102 Ga. 506, 31 S. E. 92. Belief Is to be distinguished from “proof,” “evidence,” and "testimony.” See Evidence.

With regard to things which make not a very- deep impression on the memory, it may be call- ed “belief.” “Knowledge” is nothing more than a man’s firm belief. The difference is ordinarily merely in the degree ; to be judged of by the court, when addressed to the court: by the jury, when addressed to the jury. Hatch v. Carpen- ter, 9 Gray (Mass.) 274.

The distinction between the two mental con- ditions seems to be that knowledge is an assur- ance of a fact or proposition founded on per- ception by the senses, or intuition : while be- lief is an assurance gained by evidence, and from other persons. Abbott.

—Benefit building society. The original name for what is now more commonly called a “building society,” (q. t-.)— Benefit of cession. In the civil law. The release of a debtor from future imprisonment for his debts, which the law operates in his favor upon the surrender of his property for the benefit of his creditors. Poth. Proc. Civil, pt. 5, c. 2, g 1.— Benefit of elergy. In its original sense, the phrase de- noted the exemption which was accorded to cler- gymen from the jurisdiction of the secular courts. or from arrest or attachment on crim- inal process issuing from those courts in. cer- tain particular cases. Afterwards, it meant a privilege of exemption from the punishment of death accorded to such persons as were clerks. or who could read. This privilege of exemp- tion from capital punishment was anciently allowed to clergymen only, but afterwards to all who were connected with the church, even to its most subordinate officers, and at a still later time to all persons who could read, (then, called “clerks,”) whether ecclesiastics or lay- men. It does not appear to have been extend- ed to cases of high treason, nor did it apply to mere misdemeanors. The privilege was claim- ed after the person’s conviction, by a species of motion in arrest of judgment, technically called “praying his clergy.” As a means of testing nis clerical character, he was given a psalm to read, (usually, or always, the fifty- first.) and, upon his reading it correctly, he was turned over to the ecclesiastical courta, to be tried by the bishop or a jury of twelve clerks. These beard him on oath, with his witnesses and compurgators, who attested their belief in his innocence. This privilege operated greatly to mitigate the extreme rigor of the criminal lawB, but was found to involve such gross abuses that parliament began to enact that certain crimes should be felonies "without bene- fit of clergy," and finally, by St. 7 Geo. IV. c. 28, 5 6, it was altogether abolished. The act of congress of April 30. 1790. g 30, provided that there should be no benefit of elergy for any capital crime against the United States, and, if this privilege formed a part of the com- mon law of the several states before the Revo- lution, it no longer exists.— Benefit of discus- sion. In Scotch law. That whereby the antecedent heir, such as the heir of line in a pursuit against the heir of tailzie, etc., must be first pursued to fulfill the defunct's deeds and pay his debts. This benefit is likewise compe- tent in many cases to cautioners.— Benefit of division. Same as beneflcium divisionis, Iq. v.) —Benefit of inventory. In the civil law. The privilege which the heir obtains of being liable for the charges and debts of the succes- sion, only to the value of the effects of the suc- cession, by causing an inventory of these effects within the time and manner prescribed by law. Civil Code La. art. 1032. — Benefit soeietles. Under this and several similar names, in vari- ous states, corporations exist to receive periodi- cal payments from members, and hold them as a fund to be loaned or given to members needing pecuniary relief. Such are beneficial societies of Maryland, fund associations of Mis- souri, loan and fund associations of Massa- chusetts, mechanics' associations of Michigan, protection societies of New Jersey. BENEVOLENCE.

The doing a kind or helpful action towards another, under no obligation except an ethical one.

Is no doubt distinguishable from the words "liberality" and "charity for, although many charitable institutions are very properly called "benevolent." it is impossible to say that every object of a man's benevolence is also an ob- ject of his charity. BENEVOLENT.

Philanthropic; hu- mane ; having a desire or puri»ose to do good to men ; Intended for the conferring of benefits, rather than for gain or profit.

This word is certainly more indefinite, and of far wider range, than “charitable” or “religious:" it would include all gifts prompted by good-will or kind feeling towards the recipient, whether an object of charity or not. The nat- ural and usual meaning of the word would so ex- tend it. It has no legal meaning separate from its usual meaning. ‘'Charitable” has acquired a set- tled limited meaning in law, which confines it within known limits. But in all the decisions in England on the subject it has tieen held that a devise or bequest for benevolent objects, or in trust to give to such objects, is too indefinite, and therefore void. Norris v. Thomson, 19 N.

J. Eq. 313 ; Thomson v. Norris. 20 N. J. Eq. 523: Suter v. Hilliard, 132 Mass. 413. 42 Am. Hep. 444 ; Fox v. Gibbs, SC Me. 87. 29 Atl. 94it. This word, as applied to objects or pur- poses. may refer to those which are in tlieir nature charitable, nnd may also have a broader meaning and include objects and purposes not charitable in the legal sense of that word. Acts of kindness, friendship, forethought, or good- will might properly be described as benevolent. It has therefore been held that gifts to trustees to be applied for “benevolent purposes” at their discretion, or to such "benevolent purpos- es" as they could agree upon, do not create a public charity. But where the word is used in connection with other words explanatory of its meaning, and indicating the intent of the donor to limit it to purposes strictly charitable, it has been held to be synonymous with, or equivalent to. “charitable.” Suter v. Hilliard, 132 Mass. 412. 42 Am. Hep. 444; De Camp v. I lobbins, 31 N. J. Eq. 095 : Chamberlain v. Stearns. Ill Mass. 2(>8; Goodale v. Mooney. 00

BESTIAUTY.

Bestiality is the carnal knowledge and connection against the order of nature by man or woman in any manner with a beast. Code Ga. 1882, § 4354.

We take it that there is a difference in sig- nification between the terms “bestiality," and the “crime against nature.” Bestiality is a connec- tion between a human being and a brute of the opposite sex. Sodomy is a connection between two human beings of the same sex, — the male,-— named from the prevalence of the sin in Sodom. Both may be embraced by the term “crime against nature,” as felony embraces murder, larceny, etc., though we think that term is more generally used in reference to sodomy. Buggery seems to include both sodomy ana bestiality. Ausman v. Veal. 10 Ind. 356, 71 Am. Dec. 331.

BEYOND SEA.

Beyond the limits of the kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; out- side the United States; out of the state.

Beyond sea, beyond the four seas, beyond the seas, and out of the realm, are synonymous. Prior to the union of the two crowns of Eng- land and Scotland, on the accession of James I., the phrases “beyond the four seas,” “beyond the seas,” and “out of the realm,” signified out of the limits of the realm of England. BIAS.

Inclination; bent; prepossession; a preconceived opinion; a predisposition to decide a cause or an issue in a certain way, which does not leave the mind perfectly open to conviction. Maddox v. State, 32 Ga. 587, 79 Am. Dec. 307; Pierson v. State, 18 Tex. App. 558; Hinkle v. State, 94 Ga. 595, 21 S. B. 601.

This term is not synonymous with “preju- dice.” By the use of this word in a statute. de- claring disqualification of jurors, the legisla- ture intended to describe another and somewhat different ground of disqualification. A man cannot be prejudiced against another without being biased against him ; but he may be biased without being prejudiced. Bias is “a particular influential power, which sways the judgment ; the inclination of the mind towards a particu- lar object.” It is not to be supposed that the legislature expected to secure in the juror a state of mind absolutely free from all inclina- tion to one side or the other. The. statute means that, although a juror has not formed a judgment for or against the prisoner, before the evidence is heard on the trial, yet, if he is under such an influence as so sways his mind to the one side or the other as to prevent his deciding the cause according to the evidence, he is in- competent. Willis v. State, 12 Ga. 444.

Actual bias consists in the existence of a state of mind on the part of the juror which satisfies the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, that the juror cannot try the issues impartially and without prejudice to the sub- stantial rights of the party challenging. L. Ed. 561.

The state of a man who has two wives, or of a woman who has two husbands, living at the same time.

The offense of having a plurality of wives at the same time Is commonly denominated "polygamy;" but the name "bigamy" has been more frequently given to It in legal proceedings. 1 Russ. Crimes, 185.

The use of the word "bigamy" to describe this offense is well established by long usage, although often criticised as a corruption, of the true meaning of the word. Polygamy is suggested as the correct term, instead of bigamy, to designate the offense of having a plurality of wives or husbands at the same time, and has been adopted for that purpose in. the Massa- chusetts statutes. But as the substance of the offense is marrying a second time, while hav- ing a lawful husband or wife living, without re- gard to the number of marriages that may have taken place, bigamy seems not an inappropriate term. Tbe objection to its use urged by Black- stone (4 Bl. Comm. 163) seems to be founded not so much upon considerations of the etymol- ogy of the word as upon the propriety of distin- guishing the ecclesiastical offense termed "biga- my" in the canon law, and which is defined be- low. from the offense known as "bigamy" in the modern criminal law. The same distinction is carefully made by Lord Coke, (4 Inst. 88.) But, the ecclesiastical offense being now obsolete, this reason for substituting polygamy to denote the crime here defined ceases to have weight. Abbott.

In the canon law, the term denoted the offense committed by an ecclesiastic who married two wives successively. It might be committed either by marrying a second wife after the death of a first or by marrying a widow.

Jur. 8 440.— BUI of discovery. A bill in equity filed to obtain a discovery of facts resting in the knowledge of the defendant, or of deeds or writ- ings. or other things in his custody or power. Story. Eq. Pi. (5th Ed.) 8 311; Wright v. Su- perior Court, 139 Cal. 469, 73 Pac. 145; Ever- son v. Assur. Co. (C. C.) 68 Fed. 258: State v. Savings Co., 28 Or. 410, 43 Pac. 162— B1U of information. Where a suit is instituted on behalf of the crown or government, or of those of whom it has the custody by virtue of its prerogative, or whose rights are under its par- ticular protection, the matter of complaint is offered to the court by way of information by the attorney or solicitor general, instead of by petition. Where a suit immediately concerns the crown or government alone, the proceeding is purely by way of information, but, where it does not do so immediately, a reiator is appoint- ed, who is answerable for costs, etc., and, if he is interested in the matter in connection with the crown or government, the proceeding is by information and bill. Informations differ from hills in little more than name and form, and the same rules are substantially applicable to both. See Story, Eq. Pl. 5; 1 Daniell, Ch. Pr.

2. 8, 288 ; 3 Bl. Comm. 261.— BUI of inter- pleader. The name of a bill in equity to ob- tain a settlement of a question of right to money or other property adversely claimed, in which the party filing the bill has no interest, although it may be in his hands, by compelling such ad- verse claimants to litigate the right or title be- tween themselves, and relieve him from liability or litigation. Van Winkle v. Owen, 54 N. J. Eq. 253, 34 Atl. 400; Wakeman v. Kingsland, 48 N. J. Eq. 113, 18 Atl. 680 ; Gibson v. Gold- thwaite, 7 Ala. 281, 42 Am. Dec. 692.— BUI of peace. One which is filed when a person has a right which may be controverted by various persons, at different times, and by different ac- tions. Ritchie v. Dorland. 6 Cal. 33 ; Murphy v. Wilmington, 6 Houst. (Del.) 108, 22 Am. St. Rep. 345 ; Eldridge v. Hill, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 281: Randolph v. Kinney, 3 Rand. (Va.) 395.— BUI of revivor. One which is brought to continue a suit which has abated before its final consummation, as, for examnte, by death, or marriage of a female plaintiff. Clarke v. Mathewson, 12 Pet. 164, 9 L. Ed. 1041; Brooks v. Laurent, 98 Fed. 647. 39 C. O. A. 201.— BUI of revivor sad supplement. One which is a compound of a supplemental bill and bill of revivor, and not only continues the suit, which has abated by the death of the plaintiff, or the like, but supplies any defects in the original bill arising from subsequent events, so as to entitle the party to relief on the whole merits of his case. Mitf. Eq- Pi. 32, 74; Wcstcott v. Cady, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 342, 9 Am. Dec. 306; Bowie v. Minter, 2 Ala. 411.— BUI of review. because the complainant apprehends an injury to his property rights or interests, from the fault or neglect of another. Such bills are en- tertained to guard against possible or prospective injuries, and to preserve the means by which existing rights may be protected from future or contingent violations ; differing from injunc- tions, in that the latter correct past and present or imminent and certain injuries. . Bisp. Eq. 8 568 ; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 8 826; Bailey v. South- wick. 6 Cans. (N. Y.) 364; Bryant v. Peters. 3 Ala. 169 ; Itandolph v. Kinney, 3 Rand. (Va.) 398.— Bill to carry a deoree Into execu- tion. One which is filed when, from the neg- lect of parties or some other cause, it may be- come impossible to carry a decree into execution without the further decree of the court. Hind, Ch. Pr. 68; Story, Eq. PI. 8 42.— BUI to per- petuate testimony. A bill in equity filed in order to procure the testimony of witnesses to be taken as to some matter not at the time be- fore the courts, but which is likely at some future time to be in litigation. Story, Eq. PI. (5th Ed.) 8 300 et seq. — BUI to suspend a de- cree. One brought to avoid or suspend a de- cree under special circumstances.— Bill to take testimony de bene esse. One which is brought to take the testimony of witnesses to a fact material to the prosecution of a suit at law which is actually commenced, where there is good cause to fear that the testimony may otherwise be lost before the time of trial. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 8 1813. n.— Cross-bill. One which is brought by a defendant in a suit against a plaintiff in or against other defendants in the same suit, or against both, touching the matters in question in the original bill. Story, Eq. PI. 8 389; Mitf. Eq. PI. 80. A cross-bill is a bill brought by a defendant against a plaintiff, or other parties in a former bill depending, touching the matter in question in that bill, it is usually brought either to obtain a necessary discovery of facts in aid of the defense to the original bill, or to obtain full relief to all par- ties in reference to the matters of the original bill. It is to be treated ns a mere auxiliary suit. Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 144, 15 L. Ed. 158 ;

Kidder v. Barr, 35 N. H. 251 ; Blythe v. Hinck- ley (C. C.) 84 Fed. 234. A croes-bill is a species of pleading, used for the purpose of obtaining a discovery necessary to the defense, or to ob- tain some relief founded on the collateral claims of the party defendant to the original suit. Tison v. Tison, 14 Ga. 187. Also, if a bill of exchange or promissory note be given in consid- eration of another bill or note, it is called a •"cross” or "counter” bill or note.

5. In legislation and constitutional law, the word means a draft of an act of the leg- islature before it becomes a law ; a proposed or projected law. A draft of an act pre- sented to the legislature, but not enacted. An act is the appropriate term for it, after It has been acted on by, and passed by, the legislature. Southwark Bank v. Comm., 26 Fa. 450 ; Sedgwick County Com’rs v.- Bailey, 13 Kan. 608; May v. Rice, 91 Ind. 549; State v. Hegeman, 2 Pennewill (Del.) 147, 44 Atl. 621. list or those among whom it is intended to circulate; as where a trades-union “black- lists” workmen who refuse to conform to its rules, or where a list of insolvent or untrust- worthy persons is published by a commercial agency or mercantile association. Masters v. Lee, 39 Neb. 574, 58 N. W. 222; Mattlson v. Railway Co., 2 Ohio N. P. 279.

BLACK-MAIL. 1. In one of its origi- nal meanings, this term denoted a tribute paid by English dwellers, along the Scottish border to influential chieftains of Scotland, as a condition of seenring immunity from raids of marauders and border thieves.

2. It also designated rents payable in cat- tle, grain, work, and the like. Such rents were called “black-nuiil,” (reditus nigri,) In distinction from white rents, [blanche firmes,) which were rents paid in silver.

3. The extortion of money by threats or overtures towards criminal prosecution or the destruction of a man's reputation or so- cial standing.

In common parlance, the tern is equivalent to, and synonymous with, "extortion,”— the exaction of money, either for the performance of a duty, the prevention of an injury, or the la English law. Blas- phemy is the offense of speaking matter re- lating to God, Jesuq Christ, the Bible, or the Book of Common Prayer, intended to wound the feelings of mankind or to excite contempt and hatred against the church by law estab- lished, or to promote Immorality. Sweet.

In American law. Any oral or written reproach maliciously cast upon God, His name, attributes, or religion. Com. v. Knee- land, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 213; Young v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 165; Com. v. Spratt, 14 Phlla. (Pa.) 365 ; People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335; Updegraph v. Com., 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 406 ; 2 Blsh. Cr. Law, g 76; Pen. Code Dak. § 31.

In general, blasphemy may be described as con- sisting in speaking evil of the Deity with an impious purpose to derogate from the divine majesty, and to alienate the minds of others from the love and reverence of God. It is pur- posely using words concerning Go'd calculated and designed to impair and destroy the rever- ence, respect, and confidence due to Him as the intelligent creator, governor, and judge of the world. It embraces the idea of detraction, when used towards the Supreme Being, as “calumny” usually carries the same idea when applied to an individual. It is a willful and malicious at- tempt to lessen men’s reverence of God by deny ing His existence, or His attributes as an intel- ligent creator, governor, and judge of men, and to prevent their having confidence in Him as such. Com. v. Kneeland, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 211, 212.

The use of this word is, in modern law exclusively confined to sacred subjects; but blasphemia and blasphemare were anciently used to signify the reviling by one person of another. Nov. 77, c. 1, g 1; Spelman.

BLOCKADE.

In international law. A marine Investment or beleaguering of a town or harbor. A sort of eircumvallntlon round a place by which all foreign connection and correspondence is, as far as human power can effect It, to be cut off. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 151. It is not necessary, however, that the place should be invested by land, as well as by sea, in order to constitute a legal block- ade; and, if a place be blockaded by sea only, it is no violation of belligerent rights for the neutral to carry on commerce with it by inland communications. 1 Kent, Comm. 147.

The actual investment of a port or place by a hostile force fully competent, under ordinary cir- cumstances, to cut off all communication there- with, so arranged or disposed as to be able to apply its force to every point of practicable ac- cess or approach to the port or place so invest- ed. Bouvfer; The Olinde Rodrigues (D. C.) 91 Fed. 274 ; Id., 174 U. S. 510, 19 Sup. Ct. 851, 43 L. Ed. 1065; U. S. v. The William Arthur, 28 Fed. Cas. 624; The Peterhoff, 6 Wall. 50, 18 L. Ed. 564 ; Grinnan v. Edwards, 21 W. Vo. 347.

It is called a “blockade de facto" when the usual notice of the blockade has not been given to the neutral powers by the govern- ment causing the investment, in consequence of which the blockading squadron has to warn off all approaching vessels.

—Paper blockade. The state of a line of coast proclaimed to be under blockade in time of war, when the naval force on watch is not sufficient to repel a real attempt to enter.— Pab- lle blockade. A blockade which is not only es- tablished in fact, but is notified, by the govern- ment directing it, to other governments ; as dis- tinguished from a timplc blockade, which may be established by a naval officer acting upon his own discretion or under direction of superiors, without governmental notification. BLOOD.

Kindred; consanguinity; fam- ily relationship ; relation by descent from a common ancestor. One person is “of tho blood” of another when they are related by lineal descent or collateral kinship. Miller v. Speer, 38 N. J. Eq. 572; Delnplalne v. Jones, 8 N. J. Law, 346 ; Leigh v. Leigh, 15 Ves. 108 ; Cummings v. Cummings, 146 Mass. 501, 16 N. E. 401 ; Swasey v. Jaques, 144 Mass. 135, 10 N. E. 758, 59 Am. Rep. 65.

—Half-blood. A term denoting the degree of relationship which exists between those who have the same father or the same mother, but not both parents in common.— Mixed blood. A person is “of mixed blood” who is descended from ancestors of different races or nationali- ties ; but particularly, in the United States, the term denotes a person one of whose parents (or more remote ancestors) was a negro. See Hop- kins v. Bowers, 111 N. C. 175, 16 S. E. 1.— Whole blood. Kinship by descent from the same father and mother; as distinguished from half blood, which is the relationship of those who have one parent in common, but not both.

BOARD.

A committee of persons organ- ized under authority of law in order to exer- cise certain authorities, have oversight or control of certain matters, or discharge cer- tain functions of a magisterial, representa- tive, or fiduciary character. Thus, “board of aldermen.’’ “board of health,” “board of directors,” “board of works.”

Also lodging, food, entertainment, fur- nished to a guest at an inn or boarding- house.

—Board of aldermen. The governing body of a municipal corporation. Oliver v. Jersey City, 63 N. J. Law, 96, 42 Atl. 782. See Al- debmen.— Board of audit. A tribunal pro- vided by statute in some states, to adjust and settle the accounts of municipal corporations. Osterhoudt v. Rigney, 98 N. Y. 222.— Board of civil authority. In Vermont, in the case of a city this term includes the mayor and aldermen and justices residing therein ; in the case of a town, the selectmen and town clerk and the justices residing therein ; in the case of a vil- lage, the trustees or bailiffs and the justices re- siding therein. Vt. St. 1894, 19. 59.— Board of directors. The governing body of a private corporation, generally selected from among the stockholders and constituting in effect a com- mittee of their number or board of trustees for their interests.— Board of equalisation. See Equalization.— Board of fire underwrit- ers. As these exist in many cities, they are unincorporated voluntary associations composed exclusively of persons engaged in the business of fire insurance, having for their object consolida- tion and co-operation in matters affecting the business, such as the writing of uniform policies and the maintenance of uniform rates. Childs v. Insurance Co., 66 Minn. 393, 09 N. TV. 141. 35 L. R. A. 99.— Board of health. A board or commission created by the sovereign author- ity or by municipalities, invested with certain powers and charged with certain duties in rela- tion to the preservation and improvement of the public health. General boards of health are usu- ally charged with general and advisory duties, with the collection of vital statistics, the investi- gation of sanitary conditions, and the methods of dealing with epidemic and other diseases, the quarantine laws, etc. Such are the national board of health, created by act of congress of March 3, 1879, (20 St. at Large, 484.) and the state boards of health created by the legislatures of most of the states. Local boards of health are charged with more direct and immediate means of securing the public health, and ex- ercise inquisitorial and executive powers in relation to sanitary regulations, offensive nuis- ances, markets, adulteration of food, slaugh- terhouses, drains and sewers, and similar sub- jects. Such boards are constituted in most American cities either by general law, by their charters, or by municipal ordinance, and in England by the statutes, 11 & 12 Viet, c. 63. and 21 & 22 Viet. c. 98, and other acts amending the same. See Gaines v. Waters, 04 Ark. 609, 44 S. W. 353.— Board of pardons. A board created by law in some states, whose function is to investigate all applications for executive clemency and to make reports and rec- ommendations thereon to the governor. — Board of supervisors. Under the system obtaining in some of the northern states, this name is giv- en to an organised committee, or body of offi- cials, composed of delegates from tile several townships in a county, constituting part of the county government, and having special charge of the revenues of the county.— Board of trade. An organization of the principal merchauts, manufacturers, tradesmen, etc., of a city, for the purpose of furthering its commercial interests, encouraging the establishment of manufactures, promoting trade, securing or improving shipping facilities, and generally advancing the prosper- ity of the place ns nn industrial and commercial community. In England, one of the administra- tive departments of government, being a com- mittee of the privy council which is appointed for the consideration of matters relnting to trade and foreign plantations.— Board of works. The name of a board of officers appointed for the better local management of the English me- tropolis. They have the care and management of all grounds and gardens dedicated to the use of the inhabitants in the metropolis; also the superintendence of the drainage ; also the regu- lation of the street traffic, and, generally, of tha buildings of the metropolis. Brown.

BOARDER.

One who, being the inhab- itant of a place, makes a special contract with another person for food with or without lodging. Berkshire Woollen Co. v. l'roctor, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 424.

One who has food and lodging In the house or with the family of another for an agreed price, and usually under a contract intended to continue for a considerable peri- od of time. Ullman v. State, 1 Tex. App. 220, 28 Am. Rep. 405 ; Ambler v. Skinner, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 561.

The distinction between a guest and a boarder is this: The guest comes and re- mains without any bargain for time, and may go away when he pleases, paying only for the actual entertainment he receives; and the fact that he may have remained a long time in the inn, in this way, does not make him a boarder, instead of a guest. Stewart v. McCready, 24 How. Brae. (N. X.) 62.

BOARDING-HOUSE.

A boarding-house is not in common parlance, or in legal mean- ing, every private house where one or more boarders are kept occasionally only and upon special considerations. But It is a quasi pub- lic house, where boarders are generally and habitually kept, and which is held out and known as a place of entertainment of that kind. Oady v. McDowell, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 486.

A boarding-house is not nn inn, the distinction being that a boarder is received into a house by a voluntary contract, whereas an innkeeper, in the absence of any reasonable or lawful excuse, is bound to receive a guest when he presents himself. 2 El. & Bl. 144.

The distinction between a boarding-house and an inn is that in a boarding-house the guest is under an express contract, at a certain rate for a certain period of time, while in an inn there is no express agreement ; the guest, being on his way, is entertained from day to day,

BOND, «. A contract by specialty to pay a certain sum of money; being a deed or instrument under seal, by which the maker or obligor promises, and thereto binds him- self, his heir’s, executors, and administra- tors, to pay a designated sum of money to another; usually with a clause to the ef- fect .that upon performance of a certain condition (as to pay another and smaller sum) the obligation shall be void. U. S. y. Bundle, 100 Fed. 403, 40 C. C. A. 450; Turek v. Mining Co., 8 Colo. 113. 5 Tae. 838; Boyd v. Boyd, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 126.

The word “bond" shall embrace every written undertaking for the payment of money or ackaowledgment of being bound for money, con- ditioned to be void on the performance of any duty, or the occurrence of anything therein ex- pressed, and subscribed and delivered by the party making it, to take effect as his obligation, whether it be sealed or unsealed ; and, when a bond is required by law, an undertaking in writ- ing without seal shall be sufficient. Bev. Code Miss. 1880, | 19.

The word “bond” has with us a definite legal signification. It has a clause, with a sum fixed as a penalty, binding the parties to pay the same, conditioned, however, that the payment of the penalty may be avoided by the performance by some one or more of the parties of certain acts. In re Fitch, 8 Redf. Sur. (N. Y.) 459.

Bonds are either single (simple) or double, (conditional.) A single bond is one in which the obligor binds himself, his heirs, etc., to pay a certain sum of money to another per- son at a specified day. A double (or condi- tional) bond is one to which a condition is added that if the obligor does or forbears from doing some act the obligation shall be void. Formerly such a conditlou was some- times contained in a separate instrument, and was then called a “defeasance.”

The term is also used to denote debentures or certificates of indebtedness issued by pub- lic and private corporations, governments, and municipalities, as -security for the re- payment of money loaned to them. Thus, “railway aid bonds” are bonds issued by municipal corporations to aid in the con- struction of railroads likely to benefit them, and exchanged for the company’s stock.

In old Scotch law. A bond-man; a slave. Skene.

—Bond and disposition In security. In An obligation ac- companying an executory contract for the sale of land, binding the vendor to make good title upon the performance of the conditions which entitle the vendee to demand a conveyance. White v. Stokes, 67 Ark. 184, 53 S. W. 1060— Bond tenants. In English law. Copyholders and customary tenants are sometimes so called. 2 Bl. Comm. 148— Official bond. A bond giv- en by a public officer, conditioned that he shall well and faithfully perform all the duties of the office. The term is sometimes made to include the bonds of executors, guardians, tmstees, etc. — Simple bend. At common law, a bond with- out penalty ; a bond for the payment of a defi- nite sum of money to a named obligee on de- mand or on a day certain. Burnside v. Wand, 170 Mo. 531, 71 S. W. 337, 62 L. R. A. 427. — Single bond. A deed whereby the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and admin- istrators, to pay a certain sum of money to the obligee at a day named, without terms of de- feasance.

BORROW.

To solicit and receive from another any article of property or thing of value with the Intention and promise to re- pay or return It or Its equivalent. Strictly speaking, borrowing implies a gratuitous loan; If any price or consideration is to be paid for the use of the property, It Is “hir- ing.” But money may be “borrowed” on an agreement to pay interest for Its use. Neel v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 408. 26 S. W. 726; Kent v. Mining Co., 7S N. Y. 177 ; Legal Ten- der Cases. 110 U. S. 421, 4 Sup. Ct. 122, 28

L. Ed. 204.

This word is often used in the sense of re- turning the thing borrowed in specie, as to borrow a book or any other thing to be returned again. But It is evident that where money is borrowed, the identical money loaned is not to be returned, because, if this were so, the borrower would derive no benefit from the loan. In the broad sense of the term, it means a contract for the use of money. State v. School Dist., 13 Neb. 88, 12 N. W. 812; Railroad Co. v. Stichter, 11 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 325.

BOTTOMAGE.

L. Pr. Bottomry.

BOTTOMRY.

In maritime law. A con- tract in the nature of a mortgage, by which the owner of a ship borrows money for the use, equipment, or repair of the vessel, and for a definite term, and pledges the ship (or the keel or bottom of the ship, par* pro toto) as a security for its repayment, with mari- time or extraordinary Interest on account of the marine risks to be borne by the lender; it being stipulated that if the ship be lost in the course of the specified voyage, or dur- ing the limited time, by any of the perils enumerated in the contract, the lender shall also lose his money. The Draco, 2 Sumn. 157, Fed. Cas. No. 4,057; White v. Cole, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 126; Carrington v. The Pratt, 18 How. 63, 15 L. Ed. 267; The Dora (D. C.) 34 Fed. 343; Jennings v. Insurance Co., 4 Bin. (Pa.) 244, 5 Am. Dec. 404; Braynard v. Hoppock, 7 Bosw. (N. Y.) 157.

Bottomry is a contract by which a ship or its freightage Is hypothecated as security for a loan, which is to be repaid only in case the ship survives a particular risk, voyage, or period. Olv. Code Cal. f 3017; Civ. Code Dak. | 1783.

When the loan is not made upon the ship, but on the goods laden on board, and which are to be sold or exchanged in the course of the voyage, the borrowers personal responsibility is deemed the principal security for the per- formance of the contract, which is therefore called “ respondentia ,” which see. And in a loan upon respondentia the lender must be paid his principal and interest though the ship perish, provided the goods are saved. In most other re- spects the contracts of bottomry and of respon- dentia stand substantially upon the Bame foot- ing. Bouvier.

BOTTOMRY BOND.

The Instrument embodying the contract or agreement of bot- tomry.

The true definition of a bottomry bond, in the sense of the general maritime law, and independent of the peculiar regulations of the positive codes of different commercial nations, is that it is a contract for a loan of money on the bottom of the ship, at an extraordinary interest, upon maritime risks, to be borne by the lender for a voyage, or for a definite period. BOUGH OF A TREE.

In feudal law. A symbol which gave seisin of land, to hold of the donor in capite.

BOUGHT AND SOU) NOTES.

When a broker is employed to buy and sell goods, he is accustomed to give to the buyer a note of the sale, commonly called a “sold note,” and to the seller a like note, commonly call- ed a “bought note,” in his own name, as agent of each, and thereby they are respec- tively bound, if he has not exceeded his authority. Saladln v. Mitchell, 45 111. 83; Kelm v. Llndl ey (N. J. Ch.) 30 Atl. 1070.

BOUXEVARD.

The word “boulevard,” which originally indicated a bulwark or ram- part, and was afterwards applied to a pub- lic walk or road on the site of a demolished fortification, is now employed in the same sense as public drive. A park is a piece of ground adapted and set apart for purposes of ornament, exercise, and amusement It is not a street or road, though carriages may pass through it.

So a boulevard or public drive is adapted and set apart for purposes of ornament, exercise, and amusement. It is not technically a street, avenue, or highway, though a carriage-way over it is a chief feature. People v. Green, 52 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 445; Howe v. Lowell, 171 Mass. 575, 51 N. E. 536 : Park Com’rs v. Farber, 171 111. 146, 49 N. E. 427.

BOUND.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

As an adjective, denotes the condition of being constrained by the obli- gations of a bond or a covenant. In the law Of shipping, “bound to” or "bound for” de- notes that the vessel spoken of is intended or designed to make a voyage to the place named.

As a noun, the term denotes a limit or boundary, or a line inclosing or marking off a tract of land. In the familiar phrase “metes and bounds,” the former term prop- erly denotes the measured distances, and the latter the natural or artificial marks which indicate their beginning and ending. A dis- tinction is sometimes taken between “bound” and “boundary,” to the effect that, while the former signifies the limit itself, (and may be an imaginary line,) the latter designates a visible mark which indicates the limit. But no such distinction is commonly observed.

BOUND BAILIFFS.

In English law. Sheriffs' officers are so called, from their be- ing usually bound to the sheriff in an obli- gation with sureties, for the due execution of their office. 1 Bl. Comm. 345, 346.

BOUNDARY.

By boundary is under- stood, in general, every separation, natural or artificial, which marks the confines or line of division of two contiguous estates. Trees or hedges may be planted, ditches may be dug, walls or inclosures may be erected, to serve as boundaries. But we most usually understand by boundaries stones or pieces of wood inserted in the earth on the confines of the two estates. Civ. Code La. art 826.

Boundaries are either natural or artificial. Of the former kind are water-courses, grow- ing trees, beds of rock, and the like. Artifi- cial boundaries are landmarks or signs erect- ed by the hand of man, as a pole, stake, pile of stones, etc.

— N fttnrsl boundary. Any formation or prod- uct of nature (as opposed to structures or erect!ons made by man) which may serve to define and fix one or more of the lines inclosing an estate or piece of property, such as a water- course, a line of growing trees, a bluff or moun- tain chain, or the like. See Peuker v. Canter, 62 Knn. 363, 63 Pac. 617 ; Stapleford v. Brin- son, 24 N. C. 311 ; Eureka Mining, etc., Co. v. Way, 11 Nev. 171. — Private boundary. An artificial boundary, consisting of some monu- ment or landmark set up by the hand of man to mark the beginning or direction of a bound- ary line of lands.— Public boundary. A natural boundary; a natural object or land- mark used as a boundary of a tract of land, or as a beginning point for a boundary line.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 19:14, KJV]

Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's landmark, which they of old time have set in thine inheritance, which thou shalt inherit in the land that the LORD thy God giveth thee to possess it.

Why: BOUNDARY — the separation marking the confine of estates — is a matter of statute in Deut 19:14: the ancient landmark of the inheritance may not be removed. The verse is the scriptural root of the law against boundary…

BOUNDED TREE.

A tree marking or standing at the corner of a field or estate.

BOUNDERS.

In American law. Visible mnrks or objects at the ends of the lines drawn in surveys of land, showing the cours- es and distances. Burrlll.

BOUNDS.

In the English law of mines, the trespass committed by a person who ex- cavates minerals under-ground beyond the boundary of his land is called “■working out of bounds."

BOUNTY.

A gratuity, or an unusual or additional benefit conferred upon, or com- pensation paid to, a class of persons. Iowa v. McFarland, 110 U. S. 471, 4 Sup. Ct. 210, 28 L. Bd. 198.

A premium given or offered to induce men to enlist into the public service. The term is applicable only to the payment made to the enlisted man, as the inducement for his serv- ice, and not to a premium paid to the man through whose intervention, and by whose procurement, the recruit is obtained and mustered. Abbe v. Allen, 39 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 488.

It is not easy to discriminate between bounty, reward, and bonus. The former is the appro- priate term, however, where the services or action of many persons are desired, and each who acts upon the offer may entitle himself to the promised gratuity, without prejudice from or to the claims of others; while reward is more proper in the case of a single service, which can be only once performed, and there- fore will he earned only by the person or co-operative persons who succeed while others fail. Thus, bounties are offered to all who will enlist in the army or navy ; to all who will engage in certain fisheries which government desire to encourage ; to all who kill dangerous beasts or noxious creatures. A reward is of- fered for rescuing a person from a wreck or fire: for detecting and arresting an offender; for finding a lost chattel. Kircber v. Murray, (C. C.) 54 Fed. 624; Ingram v. Colgnn, 106 Cal. 113, 38 Pac. 315, 28 L. R. A. 187, 46 Am. St. Rep. 221.

Bonus, as compared with bounty, suggests the idea of a gratuity to induce a money trans- action between individuals; a percentage or gift, upon a loan or transfer of property, or a surrender of a right. Abbott.

—Bounty lands. Portions of the public do- main given to soldiers for military services, by way of bounty.— Bonnty of Queen Anne. A name given to a royal charter, which was con- firmed by 2 Anne. e. 11, whereby all the revenue of first-fruits and tenths was vested in trustees, to form a perpetual fund for the augmentation of poor ecclesiastical livings. Wharton.— Mili- tary bonnty land. Land granted by various laws of the United States, by way of bounty, to soldiers for services rendered in the army ; being given in lieu of a money payment.

The popular meanings of the words “brawls” and “tumults” are substantially the same and identical. They are correlative terms, the one employed to express the meaning of the other, and are so defined by approved lexicographers. Legally, they mean the same kind of disturbance to the public peace, produced by the same class of agents, and can be well comprehended to de- fine one and the same offense. State v. Perkins, 42 N. BREACH.

The breaking or violating of a law, right, or duty, either by commission or omission.

In contracts. The violation or non-ful- filment of an obligation, contract, or duty.

A continuing breach occurs where the state of affairs, or the specific act, constituting the breach, endures for a considerable period of time, or is repeated at short intervals. A construc- tive breach of contract takes place when the party bound to perform disables himself from performance by some act, or declares, before the time comes, that he will not perform. i

In pleading. This name is sometimes ‘given to that part of the declaration which -alleges the violation of the defendant’s prom- ise or duty, Immediately preceding the ad damnum clause.

—Breach of eloee. The unlawful or unwar- rantable entry on another person’s soil, land, or ..close. 3 Bl. Comm. 209.— Breach of cove- nant. constructive breach of the peace is an unlawful act which, though wanting the elements of ac- tual violence or injury to any person, is yet in- consistent with the peaceable and orderly con- duct of society. Various kinds of misdemeanors are included in this general designation, such as sending challenges to fight, going armed in pub- lic without lawful reason and in a threatening manner, etc. An apprehended breach of the peace is caused by the conduct of a man who threatens another with violence or physical in- jury, or who goes about in public with danger- ous and unusual weapons in a threatening or alarming* manner, or who publishes an aggravat- ed libel upon another, etc.— Breach of trust. BREAD ACTS.

Laws providing for tbe sustenance of persons kept in prison for debt.

BREAKING.

Forcibly separating, part- ing, disintegrating, or piercing any solid sub- stance. In tbe law as to housebreaking and burglary, It means the tearing away or re- moval of any part of a house or of the locks, latches, or other fastenings intended to secure it, or otherwise exerting force to gain an en- trance, with the intent to commit a felony; or violently or forcibly breaking out of a house, after having unlawfully entered it, in the attempt to escape. Gaddie v. Com., 117 Ky. 468, 78 S. W. 163, 111 Am. St Rep. 259; Sims v. State, 136 Ind. 358, 36 N. E. 278; Melton v. State, 24 Tex. App. 287, 6 S. W. 303; Mathews v. State, 36 Tex. 675; Carter v. State, 68 Ala. 98; State v. Newbegin, 25 Me. 503; McCourt v. People, 64 N. Y. 585.

In the law of burglary, “constructive” break- ing, as distinguished from actual, forcible break- ing, may be classed under the following heads: (1) Entries obtained by threats; (2) when, in consequence of violence done or threatened in order to obtain entry, the owner, with a view more effectually to repel it, opens the door and sallies out and the felon eaters; (3) when en- trance is obtained by procuring the service of some intermediate person, such the custody of which they have no con- cern. Paley, Prin. & Ag. 13.

The broker or intermediary is he who Is employed to negotiate a matter between two parties, and who, for that reason, is consid- ered as the mandatary of both. Civil Code La. art. 3010.

One whose business is to negotiate pur- chases or sales of stocks, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank-notes, promissory notes, or other securities, for himself or for others. Ordinarily, the term “broker" is applied to one acting for others ; but the part of the definition which speaks of purchases and sales for himself is equally important ns that which spenks of sales and purchases for others. Warren v. Shook, 91 U. S. 710, 23

A broker is a mere negotiator between other parties, and does not net in his own name, but in the name of those who employ him. Henderson v. State, 50 Ind. 234.

Brokers are persons whose business it is to bring buyer and seller together ; they need have nothing to do with negotiating the bar- gain. Keys v. Johnson. 68 Pa. 42.

The difference between a factor or commis- sion merchant and a broker is this: A faetoi may buy and sell in his own name, and he has the goods in his possession : while a broker, as such, cannot ordinarily buy or sell in his own name, and has no possession of the goods sold. Slack v. Tucker, 25 Wall. 321, 330, 23 L. Ed. 143.

The legal distinction between a broker and a factor is that the factor is intrusted with the property the subject of the agency ; the broker is only employed to make a bargain in relation to it. Perkins v. State, 50 Ala. 154, 156.

Brokers are of many kinds, the most im- portant being enumerated and defined as follows:

Exchange brokers, who negotiate for- eign bills of exchange.

Insurance brokers, who procure insur- ances for those who employ them and nego- tiate between the party seeking insurance and the companies or their agents.

Merchandise brokers, who buy and sell goods and negotiate between buyer and sell- er, but without having the custody of the property.

Note brokers, who negotiate the discount or sale of commercial paper.

Pawnbrokers, who lend money on goods deposited with them In pledge, taking high rates of interest

Real-estate brokers, who procure the purchase or sale of land, acting as interme- diary between vendor and purchaser to bring them together and arrange terms; and who negotiate loans on real-estate security, man- age and lease estates, etc. Latta v. Kil- bourn, 150 U. S. 524, 14 Sup. Ct 201, 37

L. Ed. 160; Chadwick v. Collins, 26 Pa. 130; Brauckman v. Leighton, 60 Mo. App. 42.

Ship-brokers, who transact business be- tween the owners of ships and freighters or charterers, and negotiate the sale of vessels.

BROTHER.

One person is a brother “of the whole blood” to another, the former be- ing a male, when both are born from the same father and mother. lie is a brother “of the half blood” to that other (or half- brother) when the two are born to the same father by different mothers or by the same mother to different fathers.

In the civil law,' the following distinctions are observed: Two brothers who descend from the same father, but by different mothers, are call- ed “consanguine" brothers. If they have the same mother, but are begotten by different fa- thers, they are called "uterine” brothers. If they have both the same father and mother, they are denominated brothers “germane.”

BUBBLE ACT.

The statute 6 Geo. I. c. 18, “for restraining several extravagant and unwarrantable practices herein mentioned,” was so called. It prescribed penalties for the formation of companies with little or no cap- ital, with the intention, by means of allur- ing advertisements, of obtaining money from the public by the sale of shares. Such un- dertakings were then commonly called “bub- bles.” This legislation was prompted by the collapse of the “South Sea Project,” which, as Blackstone says, “had beggared half the nation.” It was mostly repealed by the stat- ute 6 Geo. IV. c. 91.

BUL.

In the ancient Hebrew chronology, the eighth month of the ecclesiastical, and the second of the civil year. It has since been called "Marahevan," and answers to our October.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Kings 6:38, KJV]

And in the eleventh year, in the month Bul, which is the eighth month, was the house finished throughout all the parts thereof, and according to all the fashion of it.

Why: This verse is the primary scriptural attestation of the term itself — the entry defines the Hebrew month Bul, and the verse names it as the eighth month, anchoring the definition.

BULK.

Unbroken packages. Merchan- dise which is neither counted, weighed, nor measured.

Bulk is said of that which is neither count- ed, weighed, nor measured. A sale by the bulk is the sale of a quantity such as it is, without measuring, counting, or weighing. Civil Code La. art 3556, par. 6.

BULL, In ecclesiastical law. An instru- ment granted by the pope of Rome, and sealed with a seal of lead, containing some decree, commandment or other public act emanating from the pontiff. Bull, in this sense, corresponds with edict or letters pat- ent from other governments. Cowell ; 4 Bl. Comm. 110; 4 Steph. Comm. 177, 179.

This is also a cant term of the Stock Ex- change, meaning one who speculates for a rise in the market.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC Article 6 — Bulk Sales]

The entry's 'sale by the bulk' is the commercial-law ancestor of the bulk-transfer regime now codified in UCC Article 6, which polices bulk sales of a merchant's inventory to protect creditors against fraudulent conveyance.

Why: Genuine, not forced: 'bulk sale' is a term of art in Article 6, and the entry defines exactly the transaction (sale of a quantity as it stands, unmeasured) that the statute regulates; the link is doctrinal continuity,...

BULLA.

A seal used by the Rornnn em- perors, during the lower empire; and which was of four kinds, — gold, silver, wax, and lead.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Esther 8:8, KJV]

Write ye also for the Jews, as it liketh you, in the king's name, and seal it with the king's ring: for the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, may no man reverse.

Why: A bulla is an official seal of authority; this verse states the legal force such sealing carried — an instrument sealed by the sovereign's ring could not be reversed — genuinely illuminating the seal's legal function.

BULLETIN.

An officially published no- tice or announcement concerning the progress of matters of public Importance. In France, the registry of the laws.

— Bulletin dei lois. In France, the official sheet which publishes the laws and decrees; this publication constitutes the promulgation of the law or decree.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Ignorantia legis neminem excusat]

The Bulletin des lois exists to give promulgation — the act that makes the maxim Ignorantia legis neminem excusat ('ignorance of the law excuses no one') operable: only a published law can fairly be one of which ignorance is no excuse.

Why: Genuine: the entry states outright that this publication 'constitutes the promulgation of the law or decree,' and the maxim is the legal reason promulgation matters; one illuminates the other.

BULLION.

Gold and silver Intended to be coined. The term is usually applied to a quantity of these metals ready for the mint, but as yet lying in bars, plates, lumps, or other masses; but it may also include orna- ments or dishes of gold and silver, or foreign coins not current as money, when intended to be descriptive of its adaptability to be coined, and not of other purposes to which it may be put. Hope Min. Co. v. Kennon, 3 Mont. 44 ; Thalhelm v. State, 38 Fla. 169, 20 South. 938; Counsel v. Min. Co., 5 Daly (N. Y.) 77.

— Bullion fund. A fund of public money maintained in connection with the mints, for the purpose of purchasing precious metals for coinage.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — Congress's power 'to coin Money, regulate the Value thereof']

Bullion is metal 'intended to be coined,' and the federal power to coin — and to purchase the metal for it, as the entry's 'bullion fund' describes — rests in the Coinage Clause.

Why: Genuine: the entry's definition and bullion-fund paragraph are about metal destined for the mint; the clause is the real constitutional source of that public function.

BUM-BAILIFF.

A person employed to dun one for a debt; a bailiff employed to ar- rest a debtor. Probably a vulgar corruption of “bound-bailiff,” («. v.)

BUNDA.

Tn old English law. A bound, boundary, border, or limit, (terminus , limes.)

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 19:14, KJV]

Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's landmark, which they of old time have set in thine inheritance.

Why: Bunda is a bound/boundary; the verse is the biblical landmark law protecting boundaries from removal, directly illuminating the legal concept of a fixed bound.

BUOY.

In maritime law. A piece of wood or cork, or a barrel, raft, or other thing, made secure and floating upon a stream or bay, intended as a guide and warning to mariners, by marking a si>ot where the water is shallow, or where there is a reef or other danger to navigation, or to mark the course of a devious channel.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

fLat. onus pro - bandi.) In the law of evidence. The neces- sity or duty of affirmatively proving a fact or facts In dispute on an issue raised between the parties in a cause Willett v. Rich, 142 Mass. 356, 7 N. E. 770, 56 Am. Rep. 684; Wilder v. Cowles, 100 Mass. 490; People v. McCann, 16 N. X. 58, 69 Am. Dec. 642.

The term “burden of proof” is not to be confused with "prima facie case.” When the party upon whom the burden of proof rests has made out a prima facie case, this will, in general, suffice to shift the burden. In other words, the former expression de- notes the necessity of establishing the latter. Kendall v. Brownson, 47 N. H. 200; Carver v. Carver, 97 Ind. 511; Heinemann v. Heard, 62 N. X. 455 ; Feurt v. Ambrose, 34 Mo. App. 366 ; Gibbs v. Bank, 123 Iowa, 736, 99 N. W. 703.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Actore non probante, reus absolvitur — 'the plaintiff not proving, the defendant is absolved']

The doctrine the entry expounds is the classical maxim that the affirmative carries the proof: the party asserting a fact must prove it, not the party denying it.

Why: Genuine: the maxim is the very principle the entry's long exposition (burden vs. prima facie case, shifting burden) restates; it illuminates the 'why' behind the mechanics.

[In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970)]

At the criminal end of the entry's spectrum, due process demands the heaviest form of this burden: proof beyond a reasonable doubt in criminal adjudications.

Why: Genuine: Winship is the landmark case constitutionalizing the criminal burden of proof; the entry's topic is the burden itself, and Winship states its highest measure. Confident this case and citation are real.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 19:15, KJV]

One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin, in any sin that he sinneth: at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses, shall the matter be established.

Why: The entry defines the duty of affirmatively proving disputed facts; the verse lays down the ancient rule for when a matter is established by evidence — the root concept of the evidentiary burden.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Maxim: Ei incumbit probatio qui dicit, non qui negat — "the burden of proof lies on the one who

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

asserts, not on the one who denies" (Dig. 22.3.2)]

(paraphrase) The Roman-law maxim runs: the burden of proving lies on the one who asserts, not on the one who denies. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry gives the term's Latin name (onus probandi) but not this asserter/denier maxim, so the maxim illuminates rather than restates the definition. Classical maxim, public domain; translation is the worker's own.

[Harper Lee, To Kill a Mockingbird, 1960]

(paraphrase) Atticus Finch's closing argument turns the trial on the prosecution's burden: the state has not carried it, so the jury must acquit on reasonable doubt. (paraphrase)

Why: The novel's courtroom climax is the most famous fictional staging of the burden of proof in action — the defense insisting the affirmative duty rests on the accuser. Paraphrase only; no verbatim quote used.

BUREAU.

An office for the transaction of business. A name given to the several departments of the executive or administra- tive branch of government, or to their larger subdivisions. In re Strawbridge, 39 Ala. 375.

BUREAUCRACY.

A system in which the business of government is carried on in departments, each under the control of a chief, in contradistinction from a system in which the officers of government have a co- ordinate authority.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Franz Kafka, The Trial, 1925]

(paraphrase) Josef K. is arrested one morning and never learns the charge, ground through departments and chiefs he can never face — government as pure procedure. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines bureaucracy as government carried on in departments under chiefs. Kafka's novel is the canonical fictional staging of exactly that machinery. Paraphrase only.

BURG, BURGH.

A term anciently ap- plied to a castle or fortifled place ; a borough, (<?. v.) S pel man.

BURGAGE.

A name anciently given to a dwelling-house in a borough town. Blount.

BURGAGE-HOLDING.

thanes were bound to attend without summons.

BURGLAR.

One who commits burglary. One who breaks into a dwelling-house in the night-time with intent to commit a felony. Wilson v. State, 34 Ohio St 200; O’Connor v. Press Pub. Co., 34 Mise. Rep. 564, 70 N. Y. Supp. 367.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:2, KJV]

If a thief be found breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall no blood be shed for him.

Why: The entry defines the night house-breaker with felonious intent; the verse is the biblical law on the thief caught 'breaking up' — the precise act, genuinely illuminating the offense's gravity.

BURGLARIOUSLY.

In pleading. A technical word which must be introduced into an indictment for burglary at common law. Lewis v. State, 16 Conn. 34; Reed v. State, 14 Tex. App. 665.

BURGLARITER.

L. Lat (Burglarious- ly.) In old criminal pleading. A necessary word in indictments for burglary.

BURGLARY.

In criminal law. The breaking and entering the house of another in the night-time, with Intent to commit a felony therein, whether the felony be actual- ly committed or not. Anderson v. State, 43 Ala. 666, 17 Am. Rep. 36; Benson v. Mc- Mahon, 127 U. S. 457, 8 Sup. Ct 1240, 32 L. Ed. 234; Hunter v. State, 29 Ind. 80; State y. Petit, 32 Wash. 129, 72 Pac. 1021; State v. Langford. 12 N. C. 253; State v. McCall, 4 Ala. 644, 39 Am. Dec. 314; State v. Wilson, 1 N. J. Law, 439, 1 Am. Dec. 216; Com. y. Newell, 7 Mass. 245.

The common-law definition has been much modified by statute in several of the states. For example: "Every person who enters any house, room, apartment, tenement, shop, warehouse, store, mill, barn, stable, outhouse, or other building, tent, vessel, or railroad car, with intent to commit grand or petit larceny, or any felony, is guilty of burglary.” Pen. Code Cal. { 459.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 24:43, KJV]

But know this, that if the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up.

Why: The entry defines breaking and entering the house by night; the verse depicts exactly that act — the house broken up by the night thief — illuminating the core wrong of the offense.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Alfred Hitchcock, To Catch a Thief, 1955]

(paraphrase) A reformed jewel thief is suspected of a new nighttime burglary spree along the Riviera and must catch the real cat burglar to clear himself. (paraphrase)

BURIAL.

Sepulture ; the act of interring dead human bodies. See Lay v. State, 12 Ind. App. 362, 39 N. E. 768; In re Reformed, etc., Church, 7 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 476 ; Ceme- tery Ass’n y. Assessors, 37 La. Ann. 35.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 23:4, KJV]

I am a stranger and a sojourner with you: give me possession of a buryingplace with you, that I may bury my dead out of my sight.

Why: The entry treats burial as a matter of interment rights; the verse is the first legal transaction for burial land in scripture — a purchase of possession of a buryingplace.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Sophocles, Antigone, c. 441 BCE]

(paraphrase) Antigone defies Creon's edict and buries her brother, setting the duty of sepulture against the law of the state — and accepting death for it. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines burial as the interring of dead human bodies. The play's entire conflict is burial-duty versus state law — the classical work on burial as a legal/moral problem. Paraphrase only.

BURKIN G-BURKISM.

Murder committed with the object of selling the cadaver for purposes of dissection, particularly and originally, by suffocating or strangling the victim.

So named from William Burke, a notorious practitioner of this crime, who was hanged at Edinburgh in 1829. It is said that the first instance of his name being thuR used as a syno- nym for the form of death he find inflicted on others occurred when he himself was led to the gibbet, the crowd around the scaffold shout- ing “Bnrke him!”

BURN.

To consume with fire. The verb “to burn,” in an indictment for arson, is to be taken In its common meaning of “to con- sume with fire.” Hester v. State, 17 Ga. 130.

BURNING FLUID.

As used in policies of insurance, this term does not mean any fluid which will bum, but it means a recog- nized article of commerce, called by that name, and which is a different article from naphtha or kerosene. Putnam v. Insurance Co. (C. C.) 4 Fed. 764 ; Wheeler v. Insurance Co., 6 Mo. App. 235; Mark v. Insurance Co., 24 Him (N. Y.) 569.

BURNING IN THE HAND.

In old Eng- lish criminal law, laymen, upon being ac- corded the benefit of clergy, were burned with a hot Iron in the brawn of the left thumb, In order that, being thus marked, they could not again claim their clergy. 4 Bl. Comm. 367.

BURROCHTUM.

BURRO WMEALIS.

In Scotch law. A term used to designate the rents paid Into the king’s private treasury by the burgesses or inhabitants of a borough.

BURSA.

Lat A purse.

BURSAR.

A treasurer of a college.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 13:29, KJV]

For some of them thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him, Buy those things that we have need of against the feast; or, that he should give something to the poor.

Why: A bursar is the keeper of a college's funds; the verse shows the office of the purse-keeper in the apostolic company — one man holding the common bag — genuinely illuminating the treasurer's office.

BURSARIA.

The exchequer of collegiate or conventual bodies ; or the place of receiv- ing, paying, and accounting by the bursars. Also stipendiary scholars, who live upon the burse, fund, or joint-stock of the college.

BURYING ALIVE.

In English law. The ancient punishment of sodomites, and those who contracted with Jews. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 27, § 3.

BURYING-GROUND.

A place set apart for the interment of the dead; a cemetery. Appeal Tax Court v. Academy, 50 Md. 353.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 23:20, KJV]

And the field, and the cave that is therein, were made sure unto Abraham for a possession of a buryingplace by the sons of Heth.

Why: A burying-ground is land conveyed and set apart for interment; the verse records the formal conveyance of such a ground — 'made sure... for a possession of a buryingplace' — the legal instrument behind the entry.

BUSCARL.

In Saxon and old English law. Seamen or marines. Spelman.

BUSHEL.

A dry measure, containing four pecks, eight gallons, or thirty-two quarts. But the dimensions of a bushel, and the weight of a bushel of grain, etc., vary in the different states in consequence of statutory enactments. Richardson v. Spafford, 13 Vt.

245; Milk v. Christie, 1 Hill (N, Y.) 106; Hock In v. Cooke, 4 Term, 316.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — Congress's power 'to fix the Standard of Weights and Measures']

The entry notes bushel dimensions 'vary in the different states in consequence of statutory enactments' — the very subject of Congress's constitutional power to fix a national standard.

Why: Genuine: the clause names exactly the subject (weights and measures) whose state-by-state statutory variation the entry reports; it illuminates the federal frame around the entry's state statutes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:36, KJV]

Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin, shall ye have.

Why: The entry defines the bushel as a legal dry measure whose standard varies by statute; the verse commands fixed, just standards of weights and measures — the divine law behind legal metrology.

BUSINESS.

This word embraces every- thing about which a person can be employed. People v. Com’rs of Tuxes, 23 N. Y. 242, 244.

That which occupies the time, attention, and labor of men for the purpose of a liveli- hood or profit The doing of a single act pertaining to a particular business will not be considered engaging In or carrying on the business ; yet a series of such acts would be so considered. Goddard v. Chaffee, 2 Allen (Mass.) 305, 79 Am. Dec. 796 ; Sterne v. State, 20 Ala. 46.

Labor, business, and work are not synonyms. Labor may be business, but it is not necessarily so; and business is not always labor. Making an agreement for the sale of a chattel is not within a prohibition of labor upon Sunday, though it is (if by a merchant in his calling) within a prohibition upon business. Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387.

BUSINESS HOURS.

Those hours of the day during which, in a given community, com- mercial, banking, professional, public, or oth- er kinds of business are ordinarily car- ried on.

This phrase is declared to mean not the time during which a principal requires an employee’s services, but the business hours of the commu- nity generally. Derosia v. Railroad Co., 18 Minn. 133, (Gil. 119.)

BY-LAWS.

Regulations, ordinances, or rules enacted by a private corporation for its own government

A by-law is a rule or law of a corporation, for its government, and is a legislative act and the solemnities and sanction required by the charter must be observed, A resolution is not necessarily a by-law though a by-law may be in the form of a resolution. Peck v. Elliott, 79 Fed. 10, 24 O. C. A. 425, 38 L. R. A. 616; Mining Oo. v. King, 94 Wis. 439, 69 N. W. 181, 36 DR. A. 51 ; Bagley v. Oil Co., 201 Pa. 78, 50 Ad. 760, 56 L. R. A. 184 ; Dairy Ass’n v. Webb, 40 App. Div. 48, 57 N. Y. Supp. 572.

“That the reasonableness of -a by-law of a corporation is a question of law. and not of fact has always been the established rule; but in the case of State v. Overton, 24 N. J. Law, 435, 61 Am. Dec. 671, a distinction was taken in this respect between a by-law and a regula- tion, the validity of the former being a judi- cial question, while the latter was regarded as a matter in fait. But although, in one of the opinions read in the case referred to, the view was clearly expressed that the reasonableness of a corporate regulation was properly for the consideration of the jury, and not of the yet it was nevertheless stated that the was not involved in the controversy then decided. There is no doubt 'that the rule thus intimated is in opposition to recent American authorities. Nor nave I been able to find in the English books any such distinction as that above stated between a by-law and a regula- tion of a corporation.” Compton v. Van Vol- kenburgh, 34 N. J. Law. 135.

CACHET, LETTRES DE.

Letters is- sued aud signed by the kings of France, and countersigned by a secretary of state, author- izing the imprisonment of a person. Abol- lished during the revolution of 1789.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Magna Carta, c. 39 (1215) — 'except by the lawful judgment of his equals or by the law of the land']

The lettres de cachet are the archetype of imprisonment without judgment — the very abuse the 'law of the land' principle condemns: no one seized or imprisoned except by lawful judgment or the law of the land.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines these letters as authorizing imprisonment at the king's pleasure (abolished 1789); Magna Carta c. 39 states the classical principle such instruments violate. The quote is the famous verbatim...

[Mary Shelley, Frankenstein, 1818]

(paraphrase) Victor Frankenstein assembles a living creature from corpses gathered in charnel houses — the dead body as raw material for a legal and moral catastrophe. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines cadaver as a dead human body and notes no property can be held in a corpse. The novel is the canonical fiction of the corpse as a legal/moral problem. Paraphrase only.

CAPERE.

Lat. To end; cease; fail. As in the phrases cadit actio, (or breve,) the action (or writ) falls; cadit assisa, the as- sise abates ; cadit qwestio, the discussion ends, there is no room for further argument.

To be changed; to be turned into. Cadit assisa in juratum, the assise is changed into a Jury.

[Deuteronomy 21:17, KJV]

But he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the firstborn, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath: for he is the beginning of his strength; the right of the firstborn is his.

Why: The entry (headword OCR'd as GADUGA = CADUCA) defines property of inheritable quality descending to an heir; the verse fixes the heir's legal right — the firstborn's double portion — genuinely illuminating heirship by...

C1ESAR.

In the Roman law. A cogno- men in the Gens Julia, which was assumed by the successors of Julius. Tayl. Civil Law, 31.

CiESAREAN OPERATION. A surgical operation whereby the foetus, which can nei- ther make its way into the world by the or- dinary and natural passage, nor be extracted by the attempts of art, whether the mother and foetus be yet alive, or whether either of them be dead, is, by a cautious and well- timed operation, taken from the mother, with a view to save the lives of both, or either of them. This consists in making an incision into the abdomen and uterus of the mother and withdrawing the foetus thereby. If this operation be performed after the mother's death, the husband cannot be tenant by the curtesy ; since his right begins from the birth of the issue, and is consummated by the death of the wife ; but if mother and child are sav- ed, then the husband would be entitled after her death.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 22:21, KJV]

Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's.

Why: The entry (headword OCR'd as C1ESAR = CÆSAR) defines the Roman imperial title; the verse is Jesus' own ruling on what is owed to that title's bearer — the verse genuinely illuminates Caesar's legal claim on his subjects.

CJETERUS.

Lat. Other; another; the rest.

— Cseterls paribus. Other things being equal. — Cseteris tacentibus. The others being si- lent : the other judges expressing no opinion.

Comb. 186.— Cseterorum. When a limited ad- ministration has been granted, and all the prop- erty cannot be administered under it. adminis- tration car terorum (as to the residue) may be granted.

CAHIER.

In old French law. -A list of grievances prepared for deputies in the states- general. A petition for the redress of griev- ances enumerated.

CAIRNS' ACT.

An English statute for enabling the court of chancery to award dam- ages. 21 & 22 Viet. c. 27.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Ubi jus, ibi remedium — 'where there is a right, there is a remedy']

Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27) gave Chancery power to award damages — the legislative working of the maxim that where a right exists, a remedy must follow.

Why: Genuine: the Act's whole point was to supply a damages remedy where Chancery previously had none; the maxim names the principle the statute operationalizes. The maxim is a standard, confidently real equitable maxim.

CALABOOSE.

A term used vulgarly, and occasionally in judicial proceedings and law reports, to designate a jail or prison, partic- uarly a town or city jail or lock-up. Suppos- ed to be a corruption of the Spanish calabozo, a dungeon. See Gilliam v. Wells, 64 Ga. 194.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

days ; or a systematized enumera- tion of such arrangement ; an almanac. Rives v. Guthrie, 46 N. C. 86.

—Calendar days. So many days reckoned ac- cording to the course of the calendar. For example, a note dated January 1 at and payable “thirty calendar days after date,” without grace, is payable on the 31st day of January, though if expressed to be payable simply “thir- ty days after date,” It would be payable Feb- ruary 1st.— Calendar month. One of the months of the year as enumerated in the cal- endar,—January, February, March, etc., — with- out reference to the number of days it may con- tain; as distinguished from a lunar month, of twenty-eight days, or a month for business purposes, which may contain thirty, at what- ever part of the year it occurs. Daley v. An- derson. 7 Wyo. 1, 48 Pac. 840, 75 Am. St Rep. 870; Migotti v. Colvil, 4 C. P. Div. 233; In re Parker’s Estate, 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 566.— Calendar year. The calendar year is composed of twelve months, varying in length according to the common or Gregorian calendar. In re Parker’s Estate, 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 566.

2. A list or systematic enumeration of causes or motions arranged for trial or hear- ing In a court.

—Calendar of causes. In practice. A list of the causes instituted in the particular court, and now ready for trial, drawn up by the clerk shortly before the beginning of the term, exhibiting the titles of the suits, arranged in their order for trial, with the nature of each action, the date of issue, and the names of the counsel engaged ; designed for the information and convenience of the court and bar. It is sometimes called the “trial list,” or “docket.”— Calendar of prisoners. In English practice. A list kept by the sheriffs containing the names of all the prisoners in their custody, with the several judgments against each in the margin. Staundef. P. C. 182 ; 4 Bl. Comm. 403.— Spe- cial calendar. A calendar or list of causes, containing those set down specially for hearing, trial, or argument.

CALENDS.

Among the Romans the first day of every month, being spoken of by It- self, or the very day of the new moon, which usually happen together. And if pridie, the day before, be added to it, then It is the last day of the foregoing month, as pridie calend. Beptemb. is the last day of August. If any number be placed with it. It signifies that day In the former month which comes so much before the month named, as the tenth calends of October Is the 20th day of September ; for If one reckons backwards, beginning at Octo- ber, that 20th day of September makes the 10th day before October. In March, May, July, and October, the .calends begin at the sixteenth day, but in other months at the fourteenth; which calends must ever bear the name of the month following, and be numbered backwards from the first day of the said following months. Jacob. See Rives v. Guthrie, 46 N. C. 87.

CALENDS, GREEK.

law, hence the ceremony or epoch of election, and the number of persons elected.

2. In conveyancing. A visible natural object or landmark designated in a patent, en- try. grant, or other conveyance of lands, as a limit or boundary to the land described, with which the points of surveying must cor- respond. Also the courses and distances des- ignated. King v. Watkins (C. C.) 98 Fed. 922; Stockton v. Morris, 89 W. Va. 432, 19

S. E 531.

3. In corporation law. A demand made by the directors of a stock company upon the persons who have subscribed for shares, re- quiring a certain portion or installment of the amount subscribed to be paid in. The word, in this sense, in synonymous with "as- sessment," (g. v.)

A call is an assessment on shares of stock, usually for unpaid installments of the sub- scription thereto. The word is said to be ca- pable of three meanings: (1) The resolution of the directors to levy the assessment; (2) its notification to the persons liable to pay; (3) the time when it becomes payable. Rail- way Co. v. Mitchell, 4 Exch. 543; Hatch v. Dana, MR U. S. 205, 25 L. Ed. 885 ; Railroad Co. v. Spreckles, 65 Cal. 193, 3 Pac. 601, 802 ; Stewart v. Pub. Co., 1 Wash. St 521, 20 Pac. 605.

4. In the language of the stoek ex- change, a “call” is an option to claim stock at a fixed price on a certain day. White v. Treat (C. C.) 100 Fed. 290; Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal Co., 160 HI. 85, 43 N. E. 774, 31 L R. A. 529.

CALL, v. To summon or demand by name; to demand the presence and participation of a number of persons by calling aloud their names, either In a pre-arranged and syste- matic order or in a succession determined by chance.

—Call of the house. A call of the names of all the members of a legislative body, made by the clerk in pursuance of a resolution requiring the attendance of members. The names of ab- sentees being thus ascertained, they are im- peratively summoned (and, if necessary, com- pelled) to attend the session.— Calling a sum- mons. In Scotch practice. See this described in Bell. Diet.— Calling the docket. The pub- lic calling of the docket or list of causes at the commencement of a term of court, for the pur- pose of disposing of the same with regard to set- ting a time for trial or entering orders of con- tinuance, default, nonsuit, etc. Blanchard v. Ferdinand. 132 Mass. 391.— Calling the jury. Successively drawing out of a box into which they have been previously put the names of the jurors on the panels annexed to the mat print record, and calling them over in the order in which they are so drawn. The twelve persons whose names are first called, and who appear, are sworn as the jury, unless some just cause of challenge or excuse, with respect to any of them, shall be brought forward. — Calling the plaintiff. In practice. A formal method of causing a nonsuit to be entered. When a plain- tiff or his counsel, seeing that sufficient evidence has not been given to maintain the issue, with- draws. the crier is ordered to call or demand the plaintiff, and if neither he, nor any person

[Maxim: Actio personalis moritur cum persona — 'a personal action dies with the person']

The Fatal Accidents Act 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, Lord Campbell's Act) created a statutory action for relatives of one killed by negligence — abrogating, for that case, the common-law rule that personal actions die with the person.

Why: Genuine: the maxim states the exact common-law bar the 1846 Act was enacted to lift; the entry lists the statute but does not name the doctrine it displaced, so the footnote illuminates rather than echoes.

An artificial ditch or trench in the earth, for confining water to a defined channel, to be used for purposes of transportation.

The meaning of this word, when applied to artificial passages for water, is a trench or excavation in the earth, for conducting wa- ter and confining it to narrow limits. It is unlike the words “river.” “pond, ’ lake, and other words used to designate natural bodies of water, the ordinary meaning of which is con- fined to the water itself; but it includes also the banks, and has reference rather to the ex- cavation or channel as a receptacle for the water; it is an artificial thing. To obliterate, strike, or cross out; to destroy the effect of an instrument by defacing, obliterating, expunging, or eras- ing it.

In equity. Courts of equity frequently cancel instruments which have answered the end for which they were created, or instru- ments which are void or voidable, in order to prevent them from being vexatlously used against the person apparently bound by them. .Snell, Eq. 498.

The original and proper meaning of the vrord “cancellation” is the defacement of a writing by drawing lines across it in the form of crossbars or lattice work; but the same legal result may be accomplished by drawing lines through any essential part, erasing the sig- nature, writing the word ‘canceled on the face of the instrument, tearing off seals, or any similar act which puts the instrument in a condition where its invalidity appears on its face. sources, ordinances and decrees of general councils, and the decretals and bulls of the popes. In Eng- land, according to Blackstone, there is a kind of national canon law, composed of legatine and provincial constitutions enacted in England prior to the reformation, and adapted to the exigencies of the English church and kingdom.

1 Bl. Comm. 82. The canon law consists part- ly of certain rules taken out of the Scripture, partly of the writings of the ancient fathers of the church, partly of the ordinances of general and provincial councils, and partly of the de- crees of the popes in former ages; and it is contained in two principal parts,— the decrees and the decretals. The decrees are ecclesiastical constitutions made by the popes and cardinals. The decretals are canonical epistles written by the pope, or by the pope and cardinals, at the suit of one or more persons, for the ordering and determining of some matter of controversy, and have the authority of a law. As the decrees set out the origin of the canon law, and the rights, dignities, and decrees of ecclesiastical persons, with their manner of election, ordina- tion, etc., so the decretals contain the law to be used in the ecclesiastical courts. Jacob— Canon religiosomm. In ecclesiastical rec- ords. A book wherein the religious of every greater convent had a fair transcript of the rules of their order, frequently rend nmong them as their local statutes. Konnett, Gloss. ; Cowell.

Heads, and, figuratively, en- tire bodies, whether of persons or animals. Spelman.

Persons individually considered, without relation to others, (polls;) as distinguished from stirpet or stocks of descent. The term in this sense, making part of the common phrases, in capita, per capita, is derived from the civil law. Inst. 3, 1, 6.

7- Capita, per. By heads ; by the poll ; as individuals. In the distribution of an intestate's personalty, the persons legally entitled to take are said to take per capita when they claim, each in his own right, as in equal degree of kin- dred ; in contradistinction to claiming by right of representation, or per stirpet.

CAP IT Ali, ». In political economy, mat portion of the. produce of Industry existing in a country, which may be made directly available, either for the support of human existence, or the facilitating of production; but. In commerce, and as applied to individ- uals, It is understood to mean the sum of money which a merchant, banker, or trader adventures in 'any undertaking, or which he contributes to the common stock of a part- nership. Also the fund of a trading com- pany or corporation, in which sense the word “stock" Is generally added to It. Pearce v. Augusta, 87 6a. 599; People v. Peitner, 56 App. Div. 280, 67 N. Y. Supp. 893; Webb v. Armistead (C. C.) 26 Fed. 70.

The actual estate, whether in money or property, which Is owned by an Individual or a corporation. In reference to a corporation, it is the aggregate of the sum subscribed and paid In, or secured to be paid in, by the shareholders, with the addition of all gains or profits realized in the use and investment of those sums, or, if losses have been in- curred, then It is the residue after deducting such losses. See Capital Stock.

When used with respect to the property of a corporation or association, the term has a set- tled meaning. It applies only to the property or means contributed by the stockholders as the fund or basis for the business or enterprise for which the corporation or association was form- ed. As to them the term does not embrace tem- porary loans, though the moneys borrowed be directly appropriated in their business or under- takings. And, when used with respect to the property of individuals in any particular busi- ness, the term has substantially

Y. 216.

Originally ‘‘the capital stock of the bank" was all the property of every kind, everything, which the bank possessed. And this “capital stock.” all of it, in reality belonged to the contributors, it being intrusted to the bank to be used and traded with for their exclusive benefit ; and thus the bank became the agent of the contributors, so that the transmutation of the money orig- inally advanced by the subscribers into property of other kinds, though it altered the form of the investment, left its beneficial ownership unaf- fected ; and every new acquisition of property, by exchange or otherwise, was an acquisition for the original subscribers or their representa- tives, their respective interests in it all always continuing in the same proportion as 4n the ag- gregate capital originally advanced. So that, whether in the form of money, bills of exchange, or any other property in possession or in ac- tion into which the money originally contributed has been changed, or which it has produced, all is, as the original contribution was, the capital stock of the bank, held, as the original contribu- tion was, for the exclusive benefit of the orig- inal contributors and those who represent them. The original contributors and those who repre- sent them are the stockholders. New Haven v. City Hank, 31 Conn. 109. Capital stock, as employed in acts of incorporation, is never used to indicate the value of the property of the com- pany. It is very generally, if not universally, used to designate the amount of capital prescrib- ed to be contributed at the outset by the stock- holders, for the purposes of the corporation. The value of the corporate assets may be greatly increased by surplus profits, or be diminished by losses, but the amount of the capital stock re- mains the same. The fundB of the company may fluctuate; its capital stock remains invari- able. unless changed by legislative authority. Canfield v. Fire Ass'n, 23 N. J. Law, 195.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 4 — 'No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration']

A capitation or poll tax is the Constitution's paradigmatic 'direct tax': none may be laid except in proportion to the census or enumeration.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the tax levied per head without reference to property; the clause is the real constitutional constraint on exactly that levy. Quoted briefly and exactly.

CAPITE.

Lat. By the head. Tenure in capite was an ancient feudal tenure, where- by a man held lands of the king immediate- ly. It was of two sorts, — the one, .principal and general, or of the king as the source of all tenure; the other, special and subaltern, or of a particular subject. It is now abolish- ed. Jacob. As to distribution per capita, see Capita.

CAPITE MINUTES.

In the civil law. One who had suffered capitis diminutio, one who lost status or legal attributes. See Dig. 4, 5.

CAPITIS DIMINUTIO.

In Roman law. A diminishing or abridgment of personality. This was a loss or curtailment of a man's status or aggregate of legal attributes and qualifications, following upon certain changes in his civil condition. It was of three kinds, enumerated as follows:

Capitis diminutio maxima. The high- est or most comprehensive loss of status. This occurred when a man's condition was changed from one of freedom to one of bond- age, when he became a slave. It swept away with It all rights of citizenship and all family rights.

Capitis diminutio media. A lesser or medium loss of status. This occurred where a man lost his rights of citizenship, but with- out losing his liberty. It carried away also the family rights.

Capitis diminutio minima. The lowest or least comprehensive degree of loss of status. This occurred where a man’s family relations alone were changed. It happened upon the arrogatlon of a person who had been his own master, (s»t juris,) or upon the emancipation of one who had been under the patria potcstas. It left the rights of liberty and citizenship unaltered. See Inst 1, 16, pr. ; I, 2, 3; Dig. 4, 5, 11; Mackeld. Rom. Law, { 144.

CAPITmUM. A covering for the head, mentioned in St. 1 Hen. IV. and other old statutes, which prescribe what dresses shall be worn by all degrees of persons. Jacob.

CAPITULA.

CAPPA.

In old records. A cap. Cappa honoris, the cap of honor. One of the so- lemnities or ceremonies of creating an earl or marquis.

CAPTAIN.

A head-man ; commander ; commanding officer. The captain of a war- vessel is the officer first in command. In the United States navy, the rank of “captain” is intermediate between that of “command- er” and "commodore.” The governor or con- trolling officer of a vessel in the merchant service is usually styled “captain” by the in- ferior officers and seamen, but in maritime business and admiralty law is more common- ly designated as “master.” In foreign juris- prudence his title is often that of “patron.” In the United States army (and the militia) the captain is the commander of a company of soldiers, one of the divisions of a regiment. The term is also used to designate the com- mander of a squad of municipal poljce.

The "captain of the watch” on a vessel is a kind of foreman or overseer, who, under the supervision of the mate, has charge of one of the two watches into which the crew is divided f»r the convenience of work. He calls them out and in, and directs them where to store freight, which packages to move, when to go or come ashore, and generally directs their work, and is an “officer” of the vessel within the meaning of statutes regulating the conduct of officers to the seamen. U. S. v. Trice (D. C.) 30 Fed. 491.

CAPTATION.

In French law. The act of one who succeeds In controlling the will of another, so as to become master of it; used in an invidious sense. Zerega v. Peret- val, 46 La. Ann. 590, 15 South. 476.

CAPTATOR.

A person who obtains a gift or legacy through artifice.

CAPTIO.

In old English law and prac- tice. A taking or seizure ; arrest; receiving; holding of court

CAPTION.

In practice. That part of a legal instrument, as a commission, indict- ment, etc., which shows where, when, and by what authority it is taken, found, or exe- cuted. State v. Sutton, 5 N. C. 281; U. S. v. Beebe, 2 Dak. 292, 11 N. W. 505; State v. Jones, 9 N. J. Law, 365, 17 Am. Dec. 483.

When used with reference to an indictment, caption signifies the style or preamble or com- mencement of the indictment; when used with reference to a commission, it signifies the cer- tificate to which the commissioners’ names are subscribed, declaring when and where it was ex- ecuted. Brown.

The caption of a pleading, deposition, or other paper connected with a case in court, is the heading or introductory clause which shows the names of the parties, name of the court, number of the case on the docket or calendar, etc.

Also signifies a taking, seizure, or arrest of a person. 2 Salk. 498. The word in this sense is now obsolete in English law.

In Scotch law. Caption is an order to incarcerate a debtor who has disobeyed an order, given to him by what are called “let- ters of horning," to pay a debt or to perform some act enjoined thereby. Bell.

CAPTIVES.

G

GAPTOR.

In international law. One who takes or seizes property in time of war; one who takes the property of an enemy. In a stricter sense, one who takes a prize at sea. 2 Bl. Comm. 401; 1 Kent, Comm. 80, 96, 103.

C

CAPTURE.

In international law. The taking or wresting of property from one of two belligerents by the other. It occurs either on land or at sea. In the former case, the property captured is called “booty;” in the latter case, “prize.”

Capture, in technical language, is a taking by military power; a seizure is a taking by civil authority. U. S. v. Athens Armory, 35 Ga. 344, Fed. Cas. No. 14,473.

In some cases, this is a mode of acquiring property. Thus, every one may, as a general rule, on his own laud, or on the sea. capture any wild animal, and acquire a qualified own- ership in it by confining it, or absolute own- ership by killing it. 2 Steph. Comm. 79.

CARE.

As a legal term, this word means diligence, prudence, discretion, attentiveness, watchfulness, vigilance. It Is the opposite of negligence or carelessness.

There are three degrees of care in the law, corresponding (Inversely) to the three de- grees of negligence, viz.: slight care, ordinary care, and great care.

The exact boundaries between the several de- grees of care, and their correlative degrees of carelessness, or negligence, are not always clear- ly defined or easily pointed out. We think, however, that by “ordinary care” is meant that degree of care which may reasonably be expect- ed from a person in the party's situation, — that is, "reasonable care;” and _ that “gross neg- ligence” imports not a malicious intention or design to produce a particular injury, but a thoughtless disregard of consequences, the ab- sence, rather than the actual exercise, of voli- tion with reference to results. Neal v. Gillett, 23 Conn. 443. . ,.

Slight care is such as persons of ordinary prudence usually exercise about their own af- fairs of slight importance. Rev. Codes N. D. 1899, § 5109; Rev. St. Okl. 1903, I 2i82. Or it is that degree of care which a person exer- cises about his own concerns, though he may be a person of less than common prudence or of careless and inattentive disposition. Utch- field v. White, 7 N. Y. 442, 57 Am. Dec. 534; Bank v.* Guilmartin. 93 Ga. 503, 21 S. E. o5, 44 Am. St. Rep. 182.

Ordinary care is that degree of care which persons of ordinary care and prudence are ac- customed to use and employ, under the same or similar circumstances, in order to conduct the enterprise in which they are engaged to a safe and successful termination having due re- gard to the rights of others and the objects to be accomplished. CARRIER.

One who undertakes to transport persons or property from place to place, by any means of conveyance, and with or without compensation.

— Common and private carriers. Carriers are either common or private. Private car- riers are persons who undertake for the trans- portation in a particular instance only, not making it their vocation, nor holding themselves out to the public as ready to act for all who desire their services. Allen v. Sackrider, 37

N. Y. 341. To bring a person within the de- scription of a common carrier, he must exercise it as a public employment ; he must undertake to carry goods for persons generally; and he must hold himself out as ready to transport goods for hire, as a business, not as a casual occupation, pro hdc vice. Alexander v. Greene. 7 Hill (N. Y.) 564 ; Bell v. Pidgeon, (D. C.) 5 Fed. 634; Wyatt v. Irr. Co.. 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 Pac. 906. A common carrier may therefore be defined as one who, by virtue of his calling and as a regular business, undertakes for hire to transport persons or commodities from place to place, offering his services to all such as may choose to employ him and pay his charges. —Cases and controversies. This term, as used in the constitution of the United States, embraces claims or contentions of litigants brought before the court for adjudication by regular proceedings established for the protection or enforcement of rights, or the prevention, redress, or punishment of wrongs ; and whenev- er the claim or contention of a party takes such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, it has become a case or contro- versy. Interstate Commerce Com'n v. Brim- son, 154 U. S. 447, 14 Sup. Ct. 1125, 38 L. Ed. 1047; Smith v. Adams, 130 U. S. 167, 9 Sup. Ct. 566, 32 L. EM. 895; In re Railway Com'n (C. C.) 32 Fed. 255. But these two terms are to be distinguished ; for there may be a “separable controversy” within a “case,” which may be removed from a state court to a federal court, though the case as a whole is not re- movable. Snow v. Smith (C. C.) 88 Fed. 658.

2. A statement of the facts Involved in a transaction or series of transactions, drawn up in writing In a technical form, for sub- mission to a court or judge for decision or opinion. Under this meaning of the term are Included a “case made” for u motion for new trial, a "case reserved” on the trial of a cause, an “agreed case” for decision with- out trial, etc.

— Case agreed on. A formal written enu- meration of the facts in a case, assented to by both parties as correct and complete, and sub- mitted to the court by their agreement, in order that a decision may be rendered without a trial, upon the court’s conclusions of law upou the facts as stated.— Case for motion. In Eng- lish divorce and probate practice, when a party desires to make a motion, he must file, among other papers, a case for motion, containing an abstract of the proceedings in the suit or action, a statement of the circumstances on which the motion is founded, and the prayer, or nature of the decree or order desired. Browne, Div. 251 ; Browne, Prob. Pr. 295.— Case on appeal. In American practice. Before tbe argument in the appellate court of a case brought there for re- view, the appellant’s counsel prepares a docu- ment or brief, bearing this name, for the infor- mation of the court, detailing the testimony and the proceedings below. In English practice. The "case on appeal” is a printed statement pre- pared by each of the pnrties to an appeal to the house of lords or the privy council, set- ting out methodically the facts which make up his case, with appropriate references to tlic evidence printed in tne “appendix.” The term also denotes a written statement, prepared and transmitted by an inferior court or judge rais- ing a question of law for the opinion of a su- perior court.— Case reserved. A statement in writing of the facts proved on the trial of a cause, drawn up and settled by the attorneys and counsel for the respective parties under the supervision of the judge, for the purpose of having certain points of law, which arose at the trial and could not then be satisfactorily decided, determined upon full argument before the court in banc. This is otherwise called a “special case ;” and it is usual for the parties, where the law of the case is doubtful, to agree that the jury shall find a general verdict for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the conrt upon such a case to be made, instead of obtain- ing from the jury a special verdict. 3 Bl. Comm. 378; 3 Steph. Comm. 621; Steph. Pl. 92, 93 ; 1 Burrill, Pr. 242. 463.— Case stated. In practice. An agreement in writing, between a plaintiff and defendant, that the facts in dis- pute between them are as therein agreed upon and set forth. Diehl v. Ihrie, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 143. A case agreed upon.— Case to move tor new trial. In practice. A case prepared by the party against whom a verdict has been giv- en, upon which to move the court to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.

3. A form of action which lies to recover damages for injuries for which the more aucient forms of action will not lie Steph. PL 15. An abbreviated form of the title "tres- pass on the case,” q. v. Munal v. Brown (CL C.) 70 Fed. 968.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 2 — 'The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States...; — to Controversies...']

The entry's 'Cases and controversies' is the constitutional phrase itself: Article III extends the federal judicial power to 'all Cases, in Law and Equity' arising under the Constitution and laws, and to the enumerated 'Controversies.'

Why: Genuine: the entry expounds the constitutional term through case law (Interstate Commerce Com'n v. Brimson); the Article III text is the real source the cases construe, so it illuminates rather than echoes. Quoted bri...

CASHIER, ». An officer of a moneyed in- stitution, or commercial house, or bank, who is intrusted with, and whose duty it is to take care of, the cash or money of such institution or bank.

The cashier of a bank is the executive officer, through whom the whole financial operations of the bank are conducted. He receives and pays out its moneys, collects and pays its debts, and receives and transfers its commercial se- curities. Tellers and other subordinate officers may be appointed, but they are under his di- rection, and are, as it were, the arms by which designated portions of his various functions are discharged. The directors may limit his au- thority as they deem proper, but this would not affect those to whom the limitation was un- known. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 650, 19 L. CASTIGATORY.

An engine used to punish women who have been convicted of being common scolds. It is sometimes called the "trebucket," “tumbrel,” “ducking-stool,” or “cucking-stool.” U. S. v. Royall, 27 Fed. Cas. 907.

CASTING.

Offering ; alleging by way of excuse. Casting an essoin was alleging an excuse for not appearing in court to answer an action. Holthouse.

CASTING VOTE.

Where the votes of a deliberative assembly or legislative body are equally divided on any question or motion, it is the privilege of the presiding offi- cer to cast one vote (if otherwise he would not be entitled to any vote) on either side, or to cast one additional vote, if he has al- ready voted as a member of the body. This is called the “casting vote."

By the common law, a casting vote sometimes signifies the single vote of a person who never votes; but, in the case of an equality, some- times the double vote of a person who first votes with the rest, and then, upon an equality, cre- ates a majority by giving a second vote. [Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 3, cl. 4 — 'The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided']

The presiding officer's casting vote on an equal division is constitutionally embodied in the Vice President's Senate tie-break: he has no vote unless the Senate is equally divided.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the casting vote as the presiding officer's vote on an equal division; the clause is the real, highest-profile instantiation of exactly that rule. Quoted briefly and exactly.

CASTLEGUARD.

In feudal law. An imposition anciently laid upon such persons as lived within a certain distance of any castle, towards the maintenance bf such as watched and warded the castle.

W. 426; Anthony v. Karbach, 64 Neb. 509, 90 N. W. 243, 97 Am. St. Rep. 662.

—Casualties of superiority. In Scotch law. Payments from an inferior to a superior, that is, from a tenant to his lord, which arise upon uncertain events, as opposed to the pay- ment of rent at fixed and stated times. Bell. —Casualties of wards. In Scotch law. The mails and duties due to the superior in ward- holdings.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 21:13, KJV]

And if a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand; then I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee.

Why: Casualty is inevitable accident — an event not foreseen or guarded against; the verse is the biblical law separating the accidental slayer from the murderer, genuinely establishing accident as a legal category.

CASUS.

Lat. Chance; accident; an event; a case; a case contemplated.

—Casus belli. An occurrence giving rise to or justifying war.— Casus foederis. In inter- national law. The case of the treaty. The par- ticular event or situation contemplated by the treaty, or stipulated for, or which comes within its terms. In commercial law. [Herman Melville, White-Jacket, 1850]

(paraphrase) Aboard a U.S. man-of-war, sailors are flogged with the cat-o'-nine-tails while the narrator builds the case for abolishing naval flogging outright. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines the cat as the nine-lashed flogging instrument. Melville's novel famously depicts naval flogging with the cat and argues for its abolition — precisely on point. Paraphrase only.

CATALLA.

In old English Law. Chat- tels. The word among the Normans prima- rily signified only beasts of husbandry, or, as they are still called, "cattle," but, in a secondary sense, the term was applied to all movables in general, and not only to these, hut to whatever was not a fief or feud. Wharton.

— Catallu otiose. Dead goods or chattels, as distinguished from animals. Idle cattle, that is, such as were not used for working, as distin-' guished from beasts of the plow ; called also animalia otiosa. Bract, fols. 217, 2176; 3 Bl. Comm. 9.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:10, KJV]

If a man deliver unto his neighbour an ass, or an ox, or a sheep, or any beast, to keep; and it die, or be hurt, or driven away, no man seeing it:

Why: The writ lies for the return of chattels delivered to a man to keep; the verse opens the biblical law of deposit — goods delivered to a neighbour to keep — genuinely illuminating the bailment behind the writ.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Honore de Balzac, Gobseck, 1830]

(paraphrase) The usurer Gobseck advances money to spendthrift heirs against their expectancies, buying their futures at a fraction of their worth. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry cross-refers to Bargain; 'catching bargain' is the moneylender's undervalue bargain with an expectant heir. Balzac's Gobseck is the archetypal fictional usurer exploiting heirs. Paraphrase only.

CATCHINGS.

Things caught, and in the possession, custody, power, and dominion of the party, with a present capacity to use them for his own purposes. The term includes blubber, dr pieces of whale flesh cut from the whale, and stowed on or under the deck of a ship. A policy of —Cathedral preferments. In English ec- clesiastical law. All deaneries, archdeaconries, and canonries, and generally all dignities and offices in any cathedral or collegiate church, be- low the rank of a bishop.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Ken Follett, The Pillars of the Earth, 1989]

(paraphrase) Generations of builders, monks, and townspeople raise a Gothic cathedral stone by stone — the bishop's church as a community's life's work. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines the cathedral as the bishop's church, seat of his jurisdiction. The novel is the modern canonical fiction of the cathedral as an institution people pour generations into. Paraphrase only.

OATHEDRATIO.

In English ecclesias- tical law. A sum of 2s. paid to the bishop by tlie Inferior clergy; but CAUSABB.

In the civil and old En- glish law. To be engaged In a suit; to liti- gate ; to conduct a cause.

CAUSATOR.

In old European law. One who manages or litigates another’s cause Spelman.

CAUSE.

That which' produces an effect ; whatever moves, Impels, or leads. The ori- gin or foundation of a thing, as of a suit or action; a ground of 'action. Corning v. Mc- Cullough, 1 N. Y. 47, 49 Am. Dec. 287; State v. Dougherty, 4 Or. 203.

The consideration of a contract, that Is, the Inducement to it, or motive of the con- tracting party for entering Into It, Is, in the civil and Scotch law, called the “cause.”

The civilians use the term “cause,” in relation to obligations, in the same sense as the word “consideration” is used in the jurisprudence of England and the United States. It means the motive, the inducement to the agreement,— id quod inducet ad contrahcndum. In contracts of mutual interest, the cause of the engagement Is the thing given or done, or engaged to be given or done, or the risk incurred by one of the par- ties. Mouton v. Noble, 1 La. Ann. 192.

In pleading. Reason; motive; matter of excuse or Justification.

In practice. A suit, litigation, or action. Any question, civil or criminal, contested before a court of justice.

Cause imports a judicial proceeding entire, and is nearly synonymous with its in Latin, or suit in English. Although allied to the word “case,” it differs from it in the application of its meaning. A cause is pending, postponed, ap- pealed, gained, lost, etc. ; whereas a case is made, rested, argued, decided, etc. Case is of a more limited signification, importing a collection of facts, with the conclusion of law thereon. Both 'terms may be used with propriety in the same sentence; e. a., on the trial of the caute, the plaintiff introduced certain evidence, and there rested his cate. See Shirts v. Irons, 47 Ind. 445 ; Blyew v. U. S.,

A. 229.

A distinction is sometimes taken between “cause" and "action.” Burrill observes that a cause is not, like an action or suit, said to be commenced, nor is an action, like a cause, said to be tried. But, if there is any substantial dif- ference between these terms, it must lie in the fact that “action” refers more peculiarly to the legal procedure of a controversy; “cause” to its metits or the state of facts involved. Thus, we cannot say “the cause should have been replev- in.” Nor would it be correct to say “the plain- tiff pleaded his own action."

As to "Probable Cause’’ and “Proximate Cause,” see those titles. As to challenge “for cause,” see "Challenge.”

CAUSE-BOOKS.

Books kept In the cen- tral office of fhe English supreme court, in which are entered all writs of summons Issued in the office. Rules of Court, v 8.

CAUSE UST.

In English practice. A printed roll of actions, to be tried in the order of their entry, with the names of the solicitors for each litigant Similar to the calendar of causes, or docket used in Amer- ican courts.

CAUSE OF ACTION.

Matter for which an action may be brought. The ground on which an action may be sustained. The right to bring a suit

Cause of action ia properly the ground on which an action can be maintained; as when we say tbat such a person has no cause of ac- tion. But the phrase is o.ten used to signify the matter of the complaint or claim on which a given action is in fact grounded, whether or not legally maintainable. Mozley A Whitley.

It sometimes means a person having a right of action. Thus, where a legacy is left to a mar- ried woman, and she and her husband bring an action to recover it, she is called in the old 1 >ooks the “meritorious cause of action.” 1 H. Bl. 108.

The term is synonymous with right of action, right of recovery. Graham v. Scripture, 26 How. Tree. (N. Y.) 501.

Cause of action is not synonymous with chose in action; the latter includes debts, etc., not due, and even stocks. Bank of Commerce v. Rutland & W. R. Co., 10 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 1.

CAUSES oElEbRES. Celebrated cases. A work containing reports of the decisions of Interest and Importance In French courts in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

Secondarily a single trial or decision is often called a “came cilHre,” when It Is re- markable on account of the parties involved or the unusual, interesting, or sensational character of the facts.

C

Lat Care; caution; vigi- lance ; prevision.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 22:3, KJV]

A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself: but the simple pass on, and are punished.

Why: Cautela is care, caution, vigilance, prevision; the proverb makes foresight the ground of caution — genuinely illuminating prevision as the legal mind's posture. Flag off: wisdom literature, not deity speech.

CATJTIO.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 11:15, KJV]

He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it: and he that hateth suretiship is sure.

Why: Cautio (headword OCR'd as CATJTIO) is security given by way of surety, and the surety himself; the proverb is the biblical word on suretyship — the exact concept. Flag off: wisdom literature, not deity speech.

CAUTIONER.

In Scotch law. A surety ; a bondsman. One who binds himself in a bond with the principal for greater security. He is still a cautioner whether the bond be to pay a debt, or whether he undertake to produce the person of the party for whom he is bound. Bell.

CAUTIONNEMENT.

In French law. The same as becoming surety in English law.

CAUTIONRY.

In Scotch law. Surety- ship.

CAVEAT.

Lat. Let him beware. A for- mal notice or warning given by a party in- terested to a court, Judge, or ministerial offi- cer against the performance of certain acts within his power and jurisdiction. This pro- cess may be used in the proper courts to pre- vent (temporarily or provisionally) the prov- ing of a will or the grant of administration, or to arrest the enrollment of a decree in chancery when the party Intends to take an appeal, to prevent the grant of letters patent, etc. It is also used, in the American prac- tice, as a kind of equitable process, to stay the granting of a patent for lauds. Wilson v. Gaston, 92 Pa. 207; Slocum v. Grandin, 33

N. J. Eq. 485; Ex parte Crafts, 28 S. C. 281, 6 S. E. 718; In re Miller’s Estate, 166 Pa. 97, 81 Atl. 58.

In patent law. A caveat is a formal written notice given to the officers of the pat- ent-office, requiring them to refuse letters patent on a particular Invention or device to any other person, until the party filing the caveat (called the “caveator”) shall have an opportunity to establish his claim to priority of invention.

CAVEAT EMPTOR.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Let the buyer take care. This maxim summarizes the rule that the purchaser of an article must examine, judge, and test it for himself, being bound to discover any obvious defects or imperfec- tions. Miller v. Tiffany, 1 Wall. 309, 17 L. Ed. 540 ; Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. 388, 19

L. Ed. 987 ; Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 383, 20 L. Ed. 627 ; Hargous v. Stone, 5 N. Y. 82; Wissler v. Craig, 80 Va. 32; Wright v. Hart, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 453.

Caveat emptor, qui ignorare non debnlt quod Jus alienum emit. Hob. 99. Let a purchaser beware, who ought not to be ig- norant that be is purchasing the rights of an- other.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 2-314 — implied warranty of merchantability]

The entry states the common-law rule in full; its great modern displacement is the implied warranty of merchantability, which attaches to a sale of goods by a merchant unless properly excluded or modified.

Why: Genuine: the entry gives the old rule (buyer beware) with its Supreme Court authorities; the UCC section is the real statute that now limits it in goods transactions, supplying what the entry omits rather than echoing...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 20:14, KJV]

It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth.

Why: Caveat emptor is the buyer's duty to examine, judge, and test for himself; the proverb shows the buyer doing exactly that — disparaging the goods before purchase — the biblical portrait of the maxim's duty. Flag off:...

CAVEAT VENDITOR.

In Roman law.

A maxim, or rule, casting the responsibility for defects or deficiencies upon the seller of goods, and expressing the exact opposite of the common law rule of caveat emptor. See Wright v. Hart, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 449.

In Enclish and American jurispru- dence. Caveat venditor is sometimes used as expressing, in a rough way, the rule which governs all those cases of sales to which caveat emptor does not apply.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 11:1, KJV]

A false balance is abomination to the LORD: but a just weight is his delight.

Why: Caveat venditor casts responsibility for defects on the seller; the proverb condemns the seller's false measure — the biblical root of seller responsibility for what he sells. Flag off: wisdom literature.

CAVEAT VIATOR.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 18:17, KJV]

And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church: but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican.

Why: Censure is ecclesiastical spiritual punishment; the verse prescribes church discipline — the exclusion of the unrepentant — genuinely illuminating censure as an institution. Flagged: Jesus' verbatim words.

[Hip-hop] — Hip-hop

[Ice-T, 'Freedom of Speech', 1989]

Censure is formal disapproval or condemnation by authority — public, moral, and reputational rather than penal. Ice-T's track was written directly against the PMRC/parental-advisory censorship campaign, the era's organized official condemnation of rap; the chorus answers institutional disapproval with the constitutional claim itself.

Why: Verbatim-certain chorus; the song is the genre's direct, historically documented answer to an organized campaign of official condemnation. Genuine link: the track exists because of censure, and answers it.

CENSUS.

The official enumeration the entry defines is, in American law, the constitutionally mandated decennial census: an actual enumeration every ten years for apportionment of representatives.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the census as an official counting; the clause is the real legal root of the American decennial census. Quoted briefly and exactly.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 1:2, KJV]

Take ye the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, after their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of their names, every male by their polls;

Why: A census is the official enumeration of the people; the verse is the commanded biblical census — the institution's archetype. Flagged: the LORD's spoken command to Moses, per the text's own frame.

CENTESIMA.

In Roman iaw. The hun- dredth part.

Usuries centcsimee. Twelve per cent, per annum ; that is, a hundredth part of the prin- cipal was due each month, — the mouth being the unit of time from which the Romans reckoned interest. 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:25, KJV]

If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.

Why: Centesima is interest reckoned monthly — the law of interest; the verse is the biblical usury law, the root of all interest regulation. Flagged: covenant code, God's spoken law.

CENTIME.

The name of a denomination of French money, being the one-hundredth part of a franc.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

The "cesser" of a term, nnnuity, or the like, takes place when it determines or comes to an end. The expression is chiefly used (in Eng- land) with reference to long terms of a thou- sand years or some similar period, created by a settlement for the purpose of securing the in- come, portions, etc., given to the objects of the settlement. When the trusts of a term of this kind are satisfied, it is desirable that the term should be put an end to, and with this object it was formerly usual to provide in the settle- ment itself that, as soon as the trusts of the term had been satisfied, it should cease and de- termine. This was called a "proviso for ces- ser.” Sweet.

— Ceuer, proviso for. Where terms for years are raised By settlement, it is usual to introduce a proviso that they shall cease when the trusts end. CESSIO.

Lat. A cession; a giving up, or relinquishment; a surrender; an assign- ment.

CESSIO BONORUM.

In Roman law. Cession of goods. A surrender, relinquish- ment, or assignment of all his property and effects made by an insolvent debtor for the benefit of his creditors. The effect of this voluntary action on the debtor’s part was to secure him against imprisonment or any bodily punishment, and from infamy, and to cancel his debts to the extent of the property ceded. It much resembled our voluntary bankruptcy or assignment for creditors. The term is commonly employed in modern con- tinental Jurisprudence to designate a bank- rupt’s assignment of property to be distrib- uted nmoug his creditors, and is used in the same sense by some English and American writers, but here rather as a convenient than as a strictly technical term. See 2 Bl. Comm. 473; 1 Kent, Comm. 247, 422; Ersk. Inst. 4, 3, 26.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4 — Congress's power 'To establish... uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States']

The Roman cession of goods 'much resembled our voluntary bankruptcy' — and the American bankruptcy system the entry invokes rests on Congress's power to establish uniform bankruptcy laws.

Why: Genuine: the entry itself draws the bankruptcy parallel; the clause is the real constitutional source of the American institution it parallels. Quoted briefly and exactly.

— Cestui que trust. He who has a right to a beneficial interest in and out of an estate the legal title to which is vested in another. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 163. The person who pos- sesses the equitable right to property and re- reives the rents, issues, and profits thereof, the legal estate of which is vested in a trustee. It has been proposed to substitute for this un- couth term the English word "beneficiary," and the latter, though still far from universally adopted, has come to be quite frequently used. It is equal in precision to the “widow’s cham- ber." 2 Bl. Comm. 518.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 24:17, KJV]

Thou shalt not pervert the judgment of the stranger, nor of the fatherless; nor take a widow's raiment to pledge.

Why: The widow's chamber is the portion of a deceased's effects — her apparel and bed-chamber furniture — reserved to the widow; the verse forbids taking the widow's raiment as pledge, reserving her apparel to her by law....

CHAMBER BUSINESS.

A term ap- plied to all such judicial business ns may properly be transacted by a Judge at his chambers or elsewhere, as distinguished from such as must be done by the court in session. In re Neagle (C. C.) 39 Fed. 855. 5 L.E.L78.

CHAMBER SURVEYS.

At an early day In Pennsylvania, surveyors often made drafts on paper of pretended surveys of pub- lic lands, and returned them to the land of- fice as duly surveyed, Instead of going on the ground and establishing lines and marking corners ; and these false and fraudulent pre- tenses of surveys never actually made were called “chamber surveys.” Schraeder Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Packer, 120 U. S. 688, 9 Sup. St. 385, 32 L. Ed. 760.

CHAMBERDEKINS, or CHAMBER / DEACONS.

CHAMPERTOUS.

Of the nature Of champerty ; affected with champerty.

CHAMPERTY.

A bargain made by a stranger with one of the parties to a suit, by which such third person undertakes to curry on the litigation at his own cost and risk, in consideration of receiving, If he wins the suit, a part of the land or other subject sought to be recovered by the action. Small v. Mott, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 405; Jewel v. Neidy, 61 Iowa, 299. 16 N. W. 141 ; Weakly v. Hall, 13 Ohio, 175. 42 Am. Dec. 191 ; Poe v. Davis, 29 Ala. 683; Oilman v. Jones. 87 Ala. 691, 5 South. 785, 7 South. 48, 4 E. R. A. 113 ; Torrence v. Shedil, 112 111. 466 ; Cas- serlelgh v. Wood, 119 Fed. 308, 56 C. C. A. 212

The purchase of an Interest in a thing In dispute, with the object of maintaining and taking part in the litigation. 7 Bing. 378.

The act of assisting the plaintiff or defendant in a legal proceeding in which the person giving the assistance has no valuable interest, on an agreement that, if the proceeding is successful, the proceeds shall be divided between the plain- tiff or defendant, as the case may be, and the assisting person. Sweet.

Champerty is the carrying on a suit in the name of another, but at one’s own expense, with the view of receiving as compensation a certain share of the avails of the suit. Ogden v. Des Arts, 4 Duer (X. Y.) 275.

The distinction between champerty and maintenance lies in the interest which the interfering party is to have In the Issue of the suit. In the former ease, he is to receive a share or portion of what may be recovered; in the latter case, he Is In no way benefited by the success of the party aided, but simply Intermeddles officiously. Thus every cham- perty includes maintenance, but not every maintenance is champerty. See 2 Inst 208; Stotsenburg v. Marks, 79 Ind. 196; Lytle v. State, 17 Ark. 624.

CHAMPION.

A person who fights a com- bat in bis own cause, or in place of another. The person who, in the trial by battel, fought either for the tenant or demandant. 3 Bl. Comm. 339.

—Champion of the king or queen. An ancient officer, whose duty it was to ride arm- ed cap-i-pi<f. into Westminster Hall at the cor- onation, while the king was at dinner, and, by the proclamation of a herald, make a challenge "that, if any man shall deny the king’s title to the crown, he is there ready to defend it in single combat.” The king drank to him, and sent him a gilt cup covered, full of wine, which the champion drank, retaining the cup for his fee. This ceremony, long discontinued, was re- vived at the coronation of George IV., but not afterwards. Wharton.

(paraphrase) Ivanhoe rides into the lists as Rebecca's champion, to decide by trial of combat the accusation no courtroom testimony can settle. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines the champion as the one who, in trial by battel, fought for another. Ivanhoe's combat for Rebecca is the canonical fictional instance — nearly verbatim the definition. Paraphrase only.

CHANCE.

In criminal law. An acci- dent ; an unexpected, unforeseen, or unin- tended consequence of an act; a fortuitous event. The opposite of intention, design, or contrivance.

There is a wide difference between chance and accident. The one is the intervention of some unlooked-for circumstance to prevent an ex- pected result; the other is the unealcuiated ef- fect of mere luck. The shot discharged at ran- dom strikes its object by chance ; that which is turned aside from its well-directed aim by some unforeseen circumstance misses its mark by accident Pure chance consists in the en- tire absence of all the means of calculating re- sults; accident, in the unusual prevention, of an effect naturally resulting from the means employed. Harless v. U. S., Morris (Iowa) 173. — Chance verdict. One determined by hazard or lot and not by the deliberate understanding and agreement of the jury. Goodman v. Cody, 1 Wash. T. 33T>. 34 Am. Rep. 808: Dixon v. Plans, 98 Cal. 384. 33 Pac. 268, 20 L. R. A. 696. 35 Am. St. Rep. 180; Improvement Co. v. Adams, 1 Colo. App. 250, 28 Pac. 662.

[Maxim: Fortes fortuna iuvat — "fortune favors the brave" (Terence, Phormio; Virgil, Aeneid)]

(paraphrase) The classical maxim runs: fortune favors the brave — chance as the fortuitous element that rewards the bold rather than the calculating. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines chance as a fortuitous event, the opposite of intention. The maxim is the classical wisdom on fortune/chance; public domain, quoted verbatim in Latin with the worker's translation.

CHANCE-MEDLEY.

. In criminal law. A sudden affray. Tills word is sometimes applied to any kind of homicide by misad- venture, but in strictness it is applicable to such killing only as happens In defending one's self. 4 Bl. Comm. 184.

CHANCEL.

In ecclesiastical law. The part of a church in which the communion table stands ; it belongs to the rector or the impropriator. 2 Broom & II. Comm. 420.

CHANCELLOR.

In American law, this Is the name given in some states to the judge (or the presiding judge) of a court of chancery. In England, besides being the designation of the chief judge of the court of chancery, the term is used as the title of several judicial officers attached to bishops or other high dignitaries and to the univer- sities. (See infra.) In Scotch practice, it denotes the foreman of an assise or jury.

— Chancellor of a cathedral. In English ecclesiastical law. One of the quatuor personae, or four chief dignitaries of the cathedrals of the old foundation. The duties assigned to the office by the statutes of the different chapters vary, but they are chiefly of an educational character, with a special reference to the cul- tivation of theology. — Chancellor of a dio- cese. In ecclesiastical law, the officer appoint- ed to assist a bishop in. matters of law, and to hold his consistory courts for him. 1 Bl. Comm. 382 ; 2 Steph. Comm. 672. — Chancellor of a university. In English law. The official head of a university. His principal prerogative is to hold a court with jurisdiction over the mem- bers of the university, in which court the vice- chancellor presides. The office is for the most £art honorary.— Chancellor of the dnchy of lanoaster. In English law. An officer before whom, or his deputy, the court of the duchy chamber of Lancaster is held. This is a special jurisdiction concerning all manner of equity re- lating to lands holden of the king in right of the duchy of Lancaster. Hob. 77; 3 Bl. Comm. 78.— Chancellor of the exchequer. In Eng- lish law. A high officer of the crown, who formerly sat in the exchequer court, and, to- gether with the regular judges of the court, saw that things were conducted to the king’s benefit In modern times, however, his duties are not of a judicial character, but such as per- tain to a minister of state charged with the management of the national revenue and ex- penditure.—Chancellor of the order of the garter, and other military orders, in England, is an officer who seals the commissions and the mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their proceedings, and delivers their acts under the seal of their order.— Chancellor, the lord high. In Eng- land, this is the highest judicial functionary in the kingdom, and superior, in point of preceden- cy. to every temporal lord. He is appointed by the delivery of the king’s great seal into his custody. He may not be a Roman Catholic. He is a cabinet minister, a privy counsellor, and prolocutor of the house of lords by prescrip- tion, (but not necessarily, though usually, a peer of the realm,) and vacates his office with the ministry by which he was appointed. To him belongs the appointment of all justices of the peace throughout the kingdom. Being, in the earlier periods of English history, usually an ecclesiastic, (for none else were then capable of an office so conversant in writings.) and pre- siding over tlie royal cliapei, he became keeper of the sovereign’s conscience, visitor, in right of the crown, of the hospitals and colleges of royal foundation, and patron of all the crown livings under the value of twenty marks per annum in the king’s books. He is the general guardian of all infants, idiots, and lunatics, and has the general superintendence of all charitable uses, and all this, over and above the vast and extensive jurisdiction which he exercises in his judicial capacity in the supreme court of judi- cature, of which he is the head. Wharton.— Vice-chancellor. In English law. A judge of the court of chancery, acting as assistant to the lord chancellor, and holding a separate court, from whose judgment an appeal lay to the chancellor. 3 Steph. Comm. 418.

CHANCERY.

Equity; equitable jurisdic- tion; a court of equity; the system of ju- risprudence administered in courts of equity. Kenyon v. Kenyon, 3 Utah, 431, 24 Pac. 829: Sullivan v. Thomas, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 531. See Court of Chancery.

CHANGE. 1. An alteration; substitu- tion of one thing for another. This word does not connote either improvement or de- terioration as a result. In this respect it dif- fers from amendment, which, in law, always imports a change for the better.

2. Exchange of money against money of a different denomination. Also small coin. Al- so an abbreviation of exchange.

— Change of Tense. Properly speaking, the removal of a suit begun in one county or dis- trict to another county or district for trial, though the term is also sometimes applied to the removal of a suit from one court to anoth- er court of the same county or district. CHANGER.

An officer formerly belong- ing to the king’s mint, in England, whose business was chiefly to exchange coin for bullion brought In by merchants and others.

CHANNEL.

This term refers rather to the bed in which the main stream of a river flows than to the deep water of the stream as followed in navigation. Bridge Co. v. Du- buque County, 55 Iowa, 558, 8 N. W. 443. See The Oliver (D. C.) 22 Fed. 849; Iowa v. Il- linois, 147 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 239, 37 L. Ed. 55; Cesslll v. State, 40 Ark. 504.

The "main channel” of a river is that bed of the river over which the principal volume of water flows. Many great rivers discharge them- selves into the sea through more than one chan- nel. They all, however, have a main channel, through which the principal volume of water passes. Packet Co. v. Bridge Co. (C. C.) 31 Fed. Rep. 757.

•—Natural channel. The channel of a stream as determined by the natural conformation of the country through which it flows ; that is, the bed over which the waters of the stream flow when not in any manner diverted or interfered with by man. See Larrabee v.

A place of worship; a lesser or Inferior church, sometimes a part of or subordinate to another church. Webster. Rex v. Nixon, 7 Car. & P. 442.

—Chapel of ease. In English ecclesiastical law. A chapel founded in general at some pe- riod later than the parochial church itself, and ■designed for the accommodation of such of the parishioners as, in course of time, bad begun to fix their residence at some distance from its site : and so termed because built in aid of the original church. 3 Steph. Comm. 151.— Private ohapeL Chapels owned by private persons, and used by themselves and their families, are called “private.” as opposed to chapels of ease, which are built for the accommodation of par- ticular districts within a parish, in ease of _the original parish church. 2 Steph. Comm. 745.— Proprietary chapels. In English law.

Those belonging to private persons who have purchased or erected them with a view to profit or otherwise.— Public chapels. In English law, are chapels founded at some period later than the church itself. They were designed for the accommodation of such of the parishioners as in course of time had begun to fix their res- idence at a distance from its. site ; and chapels so circumstanced were described as “chapels of ease," because built in aid of the original church. 3 Steph. CHARACTER.

The aggregate of the moral qualities which belong to and distin- guish an individual person ; the general re- sult of the one’s distinguishing attributes.

That moral predisposition or habit or ag- gregate of ethical qualities, which is believed to attach to a person, on the strength of the common opinion and report concerning him.

The opinion generally entertained of a per-non derived from the common report of the people who are acquainted with him. Smith ▼. State, 88 Ala. 73, 7 8outh. 52; State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 534, 15 S. E. 602; Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 238 ; State v. Farker, 96 Mo. 382, 9 S. W. 728 ; Sullivan v. State, 66 Ala. 48; Kimmel v. Kimmel, 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 337, 8 Am. Dec. 672.

Character and reputation are not synonymous terms. Character is what a man or woman is morally, while reputation is what he or she is reputed to be. \et reputation is the estimate which the community has of a person’s charac- ter; and it is the belief that moral character is wanting in an individual that renders him unworthy of belief ; that is to say, that reputa- tion is evidence of character, and if the reputa- tion is bad for truth, or reputation is bad in other respects affecting the moral character, then the jury may Infer that the character is bad and the witness not reliable. General char- acter has always been proved by proving gener- al reputation. Leverich v. Frank, 6 Or. 213.

The word “character" no doubt has an ob- jective and subjective import, which are quite distinct. As to the object, character is its qual- ity. As to man, it is the quality of his mind, and his affections, his capacity and tempera- ment. But as a subjective term, certainly in the minds of others, one's character is the ag- gregate, or the abstract of other men’s opinions of one. And in this sense when a witness speaks of the character of another witness for truth, he draws not upon his memory alone, but his judgment also. It is the conclusion of the mina of the witness, in summing up the amount of all the reports he has heard of the man, and declaring his character for truth, as held in the minds of his neighbors and acquaintances, and in this sense character, general character, and general report or reputation are the same, as held in the books. Powers v. Leach, 26 Yt. 278.

CHARGE, v. To impose a burden, ob- ligation, or lien; to create a claim against property; to claim, to demand; to accuse; to Instruct a jury on matters of law.

In the first sense above given, a jury in a criminal case is “charged” with the duty of trying the prisoner (or, as otherwise ex- pressed, with his fate or his “deliverance”) as soon as they are impaneled and sworn, and at this moment the prisoner's legal “jeop- ardy” begins. This is altogether a different matter from “charging” the jury in the sense of giving them Instructions on matters of law, which is a function of the court. TOm- asson v. State, 112 Tenn. 596, 79 S. W. 803.

CHARGE, ». In general. An incum- brance, lien, or burden; an obligation or duty; a liability; an accusation. Darling v. Rogers, 22 Wend. (N. 1.) 491.

An undertaking to keep the custody of an- other person’s goods. State v. Clark, 80 Me. 194, 29 Atl. 984.

An obligation entered into by the owner of an estate, which binds the estate for its per- formance. Com. Dig. “Rent,” c. 6; 2 Bali & B. 223.

In the law of wills. A responsibility or liability Imposed by the testator upon a dev- isee personally, or upon the land devised.

In equity pleading. An allegation in the bill of matters which disprove or avoid a defense which it is alleged the defendant is supposed to pretend or intend to set up. Story, Eq. PI. § 31.

In equity practice. A paper presented to a master in chancery by a party to a cause, being a written statement of the items with which the opposite party should be debited or should account for, or of the claim of the party making it It is more compre- hensive than a claim, which implies only the amount due to the person producing it. while a charge may embrace the whole liabilities of the accounting party. Hoff. Mast. 36.

In common-law practice. The final ad- dress made by a judge to the jury trying a case, before they make up their verdict, in which he sums up the case, and instructs the Jury as to the rules of law which apply to its various issues, and which they must ob- serve, In deciding upon their verdict, when they shall have determined the controverted matters of fact The term also applies to the address of the court to a grand jury, in which the latter are instructed as to their duties.

In Scotch law. The command of the king’s letters to perform some act; as a charge to enter

CHARGE AND DISCHARGE.

Under the former system of equity practice, this phrase was used to characterize the usual method of taking an account before a master. After the plaintiff had presented his “charge,” a written statement of the items of account for which he asked credit, the de- fendant filed a counter-statement, called a “discharge,” exhibiting any claims or de- mands he held against the plaintiff. These served to define the field of investigation, and constituted the basis of the report.

Originally those enumerated in the statute 43 Eliz. c. 4. and afterwards those which, by analogy, come within its spirit and purpose. In its present usage, the term is so broad as to include almost everything which tends to promote the physical or moral wel- fare of men. provided only the distribution of benefits is to be free and not a source of profit. In respect to gifts and devises, and also In re- spect to freedom from taxation, charitable uses and purposes may include not only the relief of poverty by alms-giving and the relief of the indigent sick and of homeless persons by means of hospitals and asylums, but also religious in- struction and the support of churches, the dis- semination of knowledge by means of schools and colleges, libraries, scientific academies, and museums, the special care of children and of prisoners and released convicts, the benefit of handicraftsmen, the erection of public build- ings, and reclamation of criminals in peniten- tiaries and reformatories. Hence the word "charitable” in this connection is not to be understood as strictly equivalent to “eleemos- ynary,” but as the synonym of “benevolent” or “philanthropic.” Beckwith v. CHARITY.

Subjectively, the sentiment or motive of beuevolence and philanthropy; the disposition to relieve the distressed. Ob- jectively, alms-glvlug; acts of benevolence; relief, assistance, or services accorded to the needy without return. Also gifts for the promotion of philanthropic and humanitarian purposes. L. Ed. 205; Historical Soc. v. Academy of Science, 94 Mo. 459, 8 S. W. 346.

The meaning of the word “charity,” in its le- gal sense, is different from the signification which it ordinarily bears. In its legal sense, it includes not only gifts for the benefit of the f)Oor. but, endowments for the advancement of earning, or institutions for the encouragement of science and aft, and, it is said, for any oth- er useful and public purpose. Gerke v. Pur- cell, 25 Ohio Sr. 243.

Charity, in its widest sense, denotes ail the good affections men ought to bear towards each other: in a restricted and common sense, relief of the poor. Morice v. Bishop of Durham, 9 Ves. 300.

Charity, as used in the Massachusetts Sunday law, includes whatever proceeds from a sense of moral duty or a feeling of kindness and hu- manity, and is iutended wholly for the purpose of the relief or comfort of another, and not for one’s own benefit or pleasure. Doyle v. Railroad Co., 118 Mass. 195, 197, 19 Am. Rep. 431.

— Foreign charity. One created or endowed in a slate or country foreign to that of the dom- icile of the benefactor. Taylor's Ex’ra v. Trustees of Bryn Maur College. 34 X. J. Eq. 101.— Public charity. In this phrase the word “public” is used, not in the sense that it must be executed openly and in public, but in the sense of being so general and indefinite in its objects as to be deemed of common and public benefit. Each individual immediately benefited may be private, and the charity may be distributed in private and by a private hand. It is public and general in its scope and purpose, and becomes definite and private only after the individual objects have been, se- lected. Raltonstall v. Sanders, 11 Allen (Mass.) 456.— Pure charity. One which is entirely gratuitous, and which dispenses its benefits without any charge or pecuniary return what- ever. See In re Keech’s Estate (Surr.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 331 ; In re Lenox's Estate (Surr.) 9 X.

A chattel mortgage is a conditional transfer or conveyance of the property itself. The chief distinctions between it and a pledge are that in the latter the title, even after condition broken, does not pass to the pledgee, who has only a lien on the property, but remains in the pledgeor, who has the right to redeem the property at any time before its sale. Besides, the possession of the property must, in all cases, accompany the pledge, and, at a sale thereof by the pledgee to satisfy his demand, he cannot become the pur- chaser ; while by a chattel mortgage the title of the mortgagee becomes absolute at law, on the default of the mortgagor, and it is not essential to the validity of the instrument that possession of the property should be delivered, and, on the foreclosure of the mortgage, the mortgagee is at liberty to become the purchaser. Mitchell v. Roberts (C. C.) 17 Fed. 778 ; Campbell v. Par- ker. 22 N. Y. Super. Ct. 322; People v. Rem- ington, 59 Hun. 282, 12 N. Y. Supp. 824, 14 N.

Y. Supp. 98 ; McCoy v. Lassiter, 95 N. C. 91 ; Wright v. Ross. 36 Cal. 414; Thurber v. Oliver (C. C.) 28 Fed. 224 ; Thompson v. Dolliver, 132 Mass. 103; Lobban v. Garnett, 9 Dana (Ky.) 389.

The material distinction between a pledge and a mortgage of chattels is that a mortgage is a conveyance of the legal title upon condition, and it becomes absolute in law if not redeemed by a riven time; a pledge is a deposit of goods, re- deemable on certain terms, either with or with- out a fixed period for redemption. In pledge, the general property does not pass, as in the ease of mortgage, and the pawnee has only a special property in the thing deposited. The pawnee must choose between two remedies,— a bill in chancery for a judicial sale under a de- cree of foreclosure, or a sale without judicial process, on the refusal of the debtor to redeem, after reasonable notice to do so. Evans v. Dar- lington, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 320.

In a conditional sale the purchaser hns merely a right to repurchase, and no debt or obligation exists on the part of the vendor; this distin- gnishes such a sale from a mortgage. Weathers- ly v. Weatheraly, 40 Miss. 482, 90 Am. Dec. 344.

[Law: UCC Article 9 — Secured Transactions]

The entry expounds the common-law chattel mortgage in its old taxonomy; the modern law of security interests in personal property is codified in UCC Article 9, which displaced that taxonomy.

Why: Genuine: same pattern as CAVEAT EMPTOR/§ 2-314 — the entry gives the old form with its cases; Article 9 is the real modern regime governing the same transactions. Confident the article number and subject are real.

A check Is a bill of exchange drawn upon a bank or banker, or a person described as such upon the face thereof, and payable on demand, without Interest Civ. Code CaL | 3254; Civ. Code Dak. g 1933.

A check differs from an ordinary bill of ex- change in the following particulars: (1) It is drawn on a bank or bankers, and is payable im- mediately on presentment, without any days of grace. (2) It is payable immediately on present- ment and no acceptance as distinct from pay- ment is required. (3) By its terms it is sup- posed to be drawn upon a previous deposit of funds, and is an absolute appropriation of so much money In the hands of the hankers to the holder of the check, to remain there until called for, and cannot after notice be withdrawn by the drawer. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. CHILD.

This word bas two meanings in law: (1) In the law of the domestic rela- tions, and ns to descent and distribution, It is used strictly as the correlative of “parent,” and means a son or daughter considered as in relation with the father or mother. (2) In the law of negligence, and In laws for the protection of children, etc., it is used as the opposite of “adult” and means the young of the human species, (generally under the age of puberty,) without any reference to parent- age and without distinction of sex. Miller v. Flnegan, 26 Fla. 29, 7 South. 140, 6 L. R.

A. 813.

— Child's part. A "child’s part,” which a wid- ow, by statute in some states, is entitled to take in lieu of dower or the provision made for her by will, is a full share to which a child of the decedent would be entitled, subject to the debts of the estate and the cost of administration up to and including distribution. Benedict v. Wil- marth, 46 Fla. 535, 35 South. 84. — natural child. A bastard ; a child born out of lawful wedlock. But in a statute declaring that adopt- ed shall have all the rights of “natural” chil- dren. the word “natural" was used in the sense of “legitimate.” Barns v. Allen, 9 Am. Law Reg. (O. S.) 747. In Louisiana. Illegitimate children who have been adopted by the father. Civ. Code La, art. 220. In the civil law. A child by natural relation or procreation ; a child by birth, as distinguished from a child by adop- tion. Inst. 1, 11. pr. ; Id. 3, 1, 2 ; Id. 3, 8, pr. A child by concubinage. In contradistinction to a child by marriage. Cod. 5, 27.— Quasi post- humous child. In the civil law. One who, bom during the life of his grandfather or other male ascendant, was not his heir at the time he made his testament, but who by the death of his father became his heir in his life-time. Inst. 2, 13. 2; Dig. 28, 3, 13.

CHILDREN.

Offspring; progeny. Legit- imate offspring; children ' born in wedlock. Bell v. Phyn, 7 Ves. 458.

The general rale is that "children,” in a be- uest or devise, means legitimate children. Un- er a devise or bequest to children, as a class, natural children arc not included, unless the testator’s intention to include them is manifest, either by express designation or necessary impli- cation. Heater v. Van Auken, 14 N. J. Eq. 159; Gardner v. Heyer, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 11.

In deeds, the word “children” signifies the im- mediate descendants of a person, in the ordinary sense of the word, as contradistinguished from issue j unless there be some accompanying ex- pressions, evidencing that the word is used in an enlarged sense. Lewis, Perp. 196.

In wills, where greater latitude of construc- tion is allowed, in order to effect the obvious in- tention of the testator, the meaning of the word has sometimes been extended, so ns to include grandchildren, and it has been held to be synon- ymous' with issue. Lewis, Pern. 195, 196 ; 2 Crabb. Real Prop. pp. 38, 39, §§ 988, 989 ; 4 Kent, Comm. 34 o, 346, note.

The word “heirs,” in its natural signification, is a .word of limitation ; and it is presumed to be used in that sense, unless a contrary inten- tion appears. But the term "children, in its natural sense, is a word of purchase, and is to be taken to have been used as such, unless there are other expressions in the will showing that the testator intended to use it as a word of lim- itation only. Sanders, Matter of. 4 Paige (X. Y.) 293 : Rogers v. Rogers, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 503, 20 Am. Dec. 716.

In the natural and primary sense of the word “children,” it implies immediate offspring, and, in its legal acceptation, is not a word of limi- tation, unless it is absolutely necessary so to construe it in order to give effect to the testa- tor’s intention. Echols v. Jordan, 39 Ala. 24.

“Children” is ordinarily a word of description, limited to persons standing in the same relation, and has the same effect as if all the names were given; but heirs, in the absence of controlling or explanatory words, includes more remote de- scendants, and is to be applied per stirpes. Bal- com v. Haynes, 14 Allen (Mass.) 204.

Personalty to which the owner has a right of possession In future, or a right of im- mediate possession, wrongfully withheld, is termed by the law a “chose in action.” Code Ga. 1882, | 2239.

Chose in action is a phrase which is some- times used to signify a right of bringing an ac- tion, and, at others, the thing itself which forms the subject-matter of that right, or with regard to which that right is exercised; but it more properly includes the idea both of the thing it- self and of the right of action as annexed to it. Thus, when it is said that a debt is a chose in action, the phrase conveys the idea, not only of the thing itself, i. e„ the debt, but also of the right of action or of recovery possessed by the person to whom the debt is due. When it is said that a chose in action cannot be assigned, it means that a thing to which a right of action is annexed cannot be transferred to another, together with such right. Brown.

CHRISTIAN.

Pertaining to Jesus Christ or the religion founded by him ; professing Christianity. The adjective is also used in senses more remote from its original meaning. Thus a "court Christian" is an ecclesiastical court; a "Christian name" is that conferred upon a person at baptism into the Christian church. As a noun, it signifies one who ac- cepts and professes to live by the doctrines and principles of the Christian religion. Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 53, 16 Am. Hep. 82 ; State v. Boswell, 40 Neb. 158, 58 N. W. 728, 24 I* R. A 68.

—Christian name. The baptismal name dis- tinct from the surname. Stratton v. Foster, 11 Me. 467. It has been said from the bench that a Christian name may consist of a single letter. Wharton.

CHRISTTANITATIS CURIA.

The court Christian. An ecclesiastical court, as op- posed to a civil or lay tribunal. Cowell.

receive, preserve, and propa- gate his doctrines and ordinances.

A body or community of Christians, unit- ed under one form of government by the profession of the same faith, and the observ- ance of the same ritual and ceremonies.

The term may denote either a society of persons who, professing Christianity, hold certain doctrines or observances which differ- entiate them from other like groups, and who use a common discipline, or the build- ing In which such persons habitually as- semble for public worship. Baker v. Fnles, 16 Mass. 498; Tate v. Lawrence, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 531; In re Zinzow, 18 Misc. Rep. 653, 43 N. Y. Supp. 714 ; Neale v. St Paul's Church, 8 GUI (Md.) 116; Gaff v. Greer, 88 Ind. 122, 45 Am. Rep. 449; Josey v. Trust Co., 106 Ga. 608, 32 S. E. 628.

The body of communicants gathered into church order, according to established usage in any town, parish, precinct, or religions society, established according to law, and actually con- nected and associated therewith for religious purposes, for the time being, is to be regarded as the church of snch society, as to all questions of property depending upon that relation. Steb- bins v. Jennings, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 193.

A congregational church is a voluntary associ- ation of Christians united for discipline and worship, connected with, and forming a part of, some religions society, having a legal existence. Anderson v. Brock, 3 Me. 248.

In English ecclesiastical law. An institu- tion established by the law of the land In reference to religion. 3 Steph. Comm. 54. CIRCUIT COURTS.

The name of a system of courts of the United States, In- vested with general original jurisdiction of such matters and causes as are of Federal cognizance, except the matters specially del- egated to the district courts.

The United States circuit courts are held by one of the justices of the supreme court ap- pointed for the circuit, (and bearing the name, in that capacity, of circuit justice.) together with the circuit judge and the district judge of the district in which they are held. Their busi- ness is not only the supervision of trials of is- sues in fact, but the hearing of causes as a court in banc; and they have equity as well as common-law jurisdiction, together with appel- late jurisdiction from the decrees and judgments of the district courts. 1 Kent, Comm. -301-303.

In several of the states, circuit court is the name given to a tribunal, the territorial jurisdiction of which comprises several coun- ties or districts, and whose sessions are held in such counties or districts alternately. These courts usually have general original jurisdiction. In re Johnson, 12 Kan. 102.

CIRCUIT? OF ACTION. This occurs where a litigant, by a complex, indirect, or roundabout course of legal proceeding, makes two or more actions necessary, in order to effect that adjustment of rights between all the parties concerned in the transaction which, by a more direct course, might have been accomplished in a single suit.

CIRCULAR NOTES.

Similar instru- ments to “letters of credit.” They are drawn by resident bankers upon their foreign cor- respondents. in favor of persons traveling abroad. The correspondents must be satis- fied of the identity of the applicant, before payment; and the requisite proof of such Identity is usually furnished, upon the ap- plicant’s producing a letter with his signa- ture, by a comparison of the signatures. Brown.

CIRCULATION.

As used in statutes providing for taxes on the circulation of banks, this term includes all currency or cir- culating notes or bills, or certificates or bills intended to circulate as money. U. S. v. White (C. C.) 19 Fed. 723 ; H. S. v. Wilson, 106 U. S. 620, 2 Sup. Ct. 85, 27 L. Ed. 310.

—Circulating medium. This term is more comprehensive than the term “money.” as it is the medium of exchanges, or purchases and sales, whether it be gold or silver coin or any other article.

CIRCUMSTANCES.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

A principal fact or event being the object of investigation, the circumstances are the related or acces- sory facts or occurrences which attend upon it. which closely precede or follow it, which surround and accompany It, which depend upon it, or which support or qualify it Pfaffenback v. Railroad, 142 Ind. 246, 41 N.

E. 530 ; Clare v. People, 9 Colo. 122, 10 Pac. 799.

The terms “circumstance” and “fact” are, in many applications, synonymous; but the true distinction of a circumstance is its relative character. “Any fact may be a circumstance with reference to any other fact." 1 Benth. Jud. Evid. 42, note; Id. 142.

Thrift, integrity, good repute, business ca- pacity, and stability of character, for example, are “circumstances” which may be very proper- ly considered in determining the question of “adequate security.” Martin v. Duke, 5 Redf. Sur. (N. Y.) 600.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Evi- dence directed to the attending circumstan- ces ; evidence which inferentlally proves the principal fact by establishing a condition of surrounding and limiting circumstances, whose existence is a premise from which the existence of the principal fact may be con- cluded by necessary laws' of reasoning. State v. Avery, 113 Mo. 475, 21 S. W. 193 ; Howard v. State, 34 Ark. 433; State v. Evans, 1 Marvel (Del.) 477, 41 Atl. 136; Comm. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 319, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Gardner v. Preston, 2 Day (Conn.) 205. 2 Am. Dec. 91 ; Stnte v. Miller, 9 Houst. (Del.) 564, 32 Atl. 137.

When the existence of any fact is attested by witnesses, as having come under the cognizance of their senses, or is stated in documents, the genuineness and veracity of which there seems no reason to question, the evidence of that fact is said to be direct or positive. When, on the contrary, the existence of the principal fact is only inferred from one or more circumstances

S'hich have been established directly, the evi- ence is said to be circumstantial. And when the existence of the principal fact does not fol- low from the evidentiary facts as a necessary consequence of the law of nature, but is deduced from them by a process of probable reasoning, the evidence and proof are said to be presump- tive. Best, Pres. 246; Id. 12.

All presumptive evidence is circumstantial, be- cause necessarily derived from or made up of circumstances, but all circumstantial evidence is not presumptive, that is, it does not operate in the way of presumption, being sometimes of a higher grade, and leading to necessary con- clusions, instead of probable ones. S. v. Morris (D. C.) 125 Fed. 325.

The term "citizen" has come to us derived from antiquity. It appears to have been used in the Roman government to designate a per- son who had the freedom of the city, and the right to exercise all political and civil privi- leges of the government. There was also, at Rome, a partial citizenship, including civil, but not political, rights. Complete citizenship em- braced both. Thomasson v. State, 15 Ind. 451.

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the Jurisdic- tion thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. Amend. XIV, Const. U. S.

There is in our political system a government of each of the several states, and a government of the United States. Bach is distinct from the others, and has citizens of its own, who owe it allegiance, and whose rights, within its juris- diction, it must protect. The same person may be at the same time a citizen of the United States and a citizen of a state; but his rights of citizenship under one of these governments will be different from those he has under the other. The government of the United States, although it is, within the scope of its powers, supreme and beyond the states, can neither grant nor secure to its citizens rights or privi- leges which are not expressly or by implication placed under its jurisdiction. All that cannot be so granted or secured are left to the exclu- sive protection of the states. U. S. v. Cruik- shank, 92 U. S. 642, 23 L. Ed. 588.

"Citizen" and "inhabitant" are not synony- mous. One may be a citizen of a state without being an inhabitant, or an inhabitant without being a citizen. Quinby v. Duncan, 4 Har. (Del.) 383.

"Citizen" is sometimes used as synonymous with "resident;" as in a statute authorizing funds to be distributed among the religious so- cieties of a township, proportionably to the num- ber of their members who are citizens of the township. State v. Trustees, 11 Ohio, 24.

In English law. An inhabitant of a city. 1 Rolle, 138. The representative of a city, in parliament. 1 Bl. Comm. 174. It will be perceived that, in the English usage, the word adheres closely to Its original meaning, as shown by its derivation, (civis , a free in- habitant of a city.) When it is designed to designate an inhabitant of the country, or one amenable to the laws of the nation, "subject" is the word there employed.

CIVIL.

In its original sense, this word means pertaining or appropriate to a mem- ber of a civitas or free political community ; natural or proper to a citizen. Also, relat- ing to the community, or to the policy and government of the citizens and subjects of a state.

In the language of the law, it has various significations. In contradistinction to bar- barous or savage, it indicates a state of so- ciety reduced to order and regular govern- ment; thus, we speak of civil life, civil so- ciety, civil government, and civil liberty. In contradistinction to criminal, it indicates the private rights and remedies of men, as members of the community, in contrast to those which are public and relate to the gov- ernment; thus, we speak of civil process and criminal process, civil Jurisdiction and criminal Jurisdiction.

It is also used In contradistinction to mili- tary or ecclesiastical, to natural or foreign; thus, we speak of a civil station, as opposed to a military or an ecclesiastical station ; a civil death, as opposed to a natural death ; a civil war, as opposed to a foreign war. Sto- ry, Const I 791.

—Civil responsibility. The liability to be railed upon to respond to an action at law for an injury caused by a delict or crime, as opposed to criminal responsibility, or liability to be proceeded against in a criminal tribunal.— Civil side. When the same court has jurisdiction of both civil and criminal matters, proceedings of the first class are often said to be on the civil side ; those of the second, on the criminal side.

As to civil "Commotion," “Corporations," “Death," "Injury," “liberty," “Obligation," “Officer," “Remedy," “Rights," and “War," see those titles.

CIVIL ACTION.

la the civil law. A personal action which is instituted to com- pel paymept, or the doing some other thing which is purely civil.

At common law. As distinguished from a criminal action, it is one’ which seeks the establishment, recovery, or redress of pri- vate and civil rights.

Civil suits relate to and affect, as to the par- ties against whom they are brought, only in- dividual rights which are within their individ- ual control, and which they may part with at their pleasure. The design of Buch suits is the enforcement of merely private obligations and duties. Criminal prosecutions, on the other hand, involve public wrongs, or a breach and violation of public rights and duties, which af- fect the whole community, considered as such in Its social and aggregate capacity. The end they have in view is the prevention of similar offenses, not atonement or expiation for crime committed. Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128.

Civil cases are those which involve disputes or contests between man and man, and which only terminate in the adjustment of the rights of plaintiffs and defendants. They include all cas- es which cannot legally be denominated "crim- inal cases." Fenstermacher v. State, 19 Or. 604, 25 Pac. 142.

In. oode practise. A civil action is a pro- ceeding in a court of justice in which one party, known as the “plaintiff,” demands against another party, known as the “defend- ant,” the enforcement or protection of a pri- vate right, or the prevention or redress of a private wrong. It may also be brought for the recovery of a penalty or forfeiture. Rev. Code Iowa 1880,) 2505.

The distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, and the forms of all such actions and suits, heretofore existing, is abol- ished; and there shall be in this state, here- after, but one form of action for the enforce- ment or protection of private rights and the redress of private wrongs, which shall be de- nominated a “civil action.” Code N. Y. f 69.

CIVIL BILL COURT.

A tribunal in Ire- land with a jurisdiction analogous to that of the county courts In England. The Judge of it is also chairman of quarter sessions, (where the jurisdiction is more extensive than in England,) and performs the duty of revising barrister. Wharton.

CIVIL DAMAGE ACTS.

Acts passed in many of the United States which provide an action for damages against a vendor of in- toxicating liquors, (and, in some cases, against his lessor,) on behalf of the wife or family of a person who has sustained Injuries by reason of hte Intoxication. Moran v. Goodwin, 130 Mass. 158, 39 Am. Bep. 443; Baker v. Pope, 2 Hun (N. X.) 556; Headington v. Smith, 113 Iowa, 107, 84 N. W. 983.

CIVIL LAW.

The “Roman Law” and the “Civil Law” are convertible phrases, meaning the same system of jurisprudence ; it is now frequently denominated the “Roman Civil Law.”

The word “civil,” as applied to the laws in force in Louisiana, before the adoption of the Civil Code, is not used in contradistinction to the word "criminal,” but must be restricted to the Roman law. It is used in contradistinction to the laws of England and those of the respec- tive states. Jennison v. Warmack, 5 La. 493.

1. The system of Jurisprudence held and administered in the Roman empire, partic- ularly as set forth in the compilation of Just- inian and his successors, -^-comprising the In- stitutes, Code, Digest, and Novels, and col- lectively denominated the “Corpus Juris Civ- ilis,” — as distinguished from the common law of England and the canon law.

2. That rule of action which every par- ticular nation, commonwealth, or city has es- tablished peculiarly for Itself ; more properly called “municipal” law, to distinguish it from the “law of nature," and from interna- tional law.

The law which a people enacts is called the "civil law” of that people, but that law which natural reason appoints for all mankind is called the ‘law of nations,” because all na- tions use it Bowyer, Mod. Civil Law, 19.

3. That division of municipal law which is occupied with the exposition and enforce- ment of civil rights, as distinguished from criminal law,

CLAIM, v. To demand as one’s own ; to assert a personal right to any property or any right; to demand the possession or en- joyment of something rightfully one's own, and wrongfully withheld. Hill v. Henry, 66

N. J. Eq. 150, 57 Atl. 555.

CLAIM, a. 1. A. challenge of the proper- ty or ownership of a thing which Is wrongful- ly withheld from the possession of the claim- ant. S towel v. Zouch, Plowd. 359 ; Robinson v. Wiley, 15 N. Y. 491 ; Fordyce v. Godman, 20 Ohio St 14; Douglas v. Beasley, 40 Ala. 147 ; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 615, 10

L. Ed. 1060; D. S. v. Rhodes (C. C.) 30 Fed. 433; Silliman v. Eddy, 8 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 123.

A claim is a right or title, actual or supposed, to a debt, privilege, or other thing in the pos- session of another; not the possession, but the means by or through which the claimant ob- tains the possession or enjoyment. Lawrence v. Miller, 2 N. Y. 245, 254.

A claim is, in a just, juridical sense, a demand of some matter as of right made by one person upon another, to do or to forbear to do some act or thing as a matter of duty. A more lim- ited, but at the same time an equally expressive, definition was given by Lord Dyer, that “a claim is a challenge by a man of the propriety or ownership of a thing, which he has not in possession, but which is wrongfully detained from him.” Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 615, 10 L. Ed. 1060.

"Claim” has generally been defined as a de- mand for a thing, the ownership of which, or an interest in which, is in the claimant, but the possession of which is wrongfully withheld by another. But a broader meaning must be ac- corded to it. A demand for damages for crim- inal conversation with plaintiff’s wife is a claim; but it would be doing violence to lan- guage to say that such damages are property of plaintiff which defendant withholds. In com- mon parlance the noun “claim” means an asser- tion, a pretension ; and the verb is often used (not quite correctly) as a synonym for “state," “urge?’ “insist,” or “assert. In a statute au- thorizing the courts to order a bill of partic- ulars of the “claim” of either party, “claim” is co-extensive with “case," and embraces all caus- es of action and all grounds of defense,

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

the pleas of both parties, and pleas in confession and avoidance, no less than complaints and counter-claims. It warrants the court in re- quiring a defendant who justifies in a libel suit to furnish particulars of the facts relied upon In justification. Orvis v. Jennings, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 446.

2. Under the mechanic's lien law of Penn- sylvania, a demand put on record by a me- chanic or material-man against a building for work or material contributed to its erec- tion is called a "claim."

3. Under the land laws of the United States, the tract of land taken up by a pre- emptioner or other settler (and also his pos- session of the same) is called a "claim."' Rail- road Co. v. Ablnk, 14 Neb. 95, 15 N. W. 317 ; Bowman v. Torr, 3 Iowa, 573.

4. In patent law, the claim is the speci- fication by the applicant for a patent of the particular things in which he insists his in- vention is novel and patentable; it is the clause in the application in which the appli- cant defines precisely what his invention is. White v. Dunbar, 119 U. S. 47, 7 Sup. CL 72, 30 L. Ed. 303; Brammer v. Schroeder, 106 Fed. 930, 46 C. O. A 41.

—Adverse claim. A claim set up by a stran- ger to goods upon which the sheriff has levied an execution or attachment.— Claim and delivery. An action at law for the recovery of specific personal chattels wrongfully taken and detained, with damages which die wrongful tak- ing or detention has caused ; in substance a modern modification of the common-law action of replevin. Fredericks v. Tracy, 98 Cal. 658, 33 Pac. 750; Railroad Co. v. Gila County, 8 Ariz. 292, 71 Pac. 913.

—Claim is equity. In English practice. In simple cases, where there was not any great conflict as to facts, and a discovery from a de- fendant was not sought, but a reference to chambers was nevertheless necessary before final decree, which would be as of course, all parties being before the court, the summaiy proceed- ing by claim was sometimes adopted, thus ob- viating the recourse to plenary and protracted pleadings. This summary practice was created by orders 22d April, 1850. which came into operation on the 22d May following. See Smith, Ch. Pr. 664. By Consolid. Ord. 1860, viii, r. 4, claims were abolished. Wharton.— Claim of oonuauace. In practice. An intervention by a third person in a suit, claiming that he has rightful jurisdiction of the cause which the plaintiff has commenced out of the claimant's court Now obsolete. 2 Wils. 406 ; 3 Bl. Comm. 298.— Claim of liberty. In English practice. A suit or petition to the queen, in the court of exchequer, to have liberties and franchises confirmed there by the attorney gen- eral.— Counter-claim. A claim set up and urged by the defendant in opposition to or re- duction of the claim presented by the plaintiff. See, more fully, Coonteb-claim.

CLAIMANT.

In admiralty practice. The name given to a person. who lays claim to property seized on a libel in rem, and who is authorized and admitted to defend the action. The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 110, 17 Sup. CL 510, 41 U Ed. 937.

[Axiom: adverse possession requires possession that is open and notorious — the inverse of the Roman clam/vi/precario formula]

The Roman formula 'clam, vi, aut precario' (by stealth, force, or importunity) is the classical statement of defective possession; its American heir is the adverse-possession requirement that possession be open and notorious — possession taken clam defeats the claim.

Why: The entry quotes the formula and Coke's maxim on secret wrongdoing; the annotation explains the formula's operative descendant in American property law rather than restating the gloss. Stated as an axiom because no si...

CLOSE, v. To finish, terminate, complete, wind up; as, to "close" an account, a bar- gain, an estate, or public books, such as tax books. Patton v. Ash, 7 Serg. & R. (I*a.) 116 ; Ooleman v. Garrlgues, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 67 ; Clark v. New York, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 292; Bilafsky v. Abraham, 183 Mass. 401, 67 N. E. 818.

To shut up, so as to prevent entrance or access by any person ; as in statutes requir- ing saloons to be "closed" at certain times, which further Implies an entire suspension of business. Kurtz v. People, 33 Mich. 282; People v. James, 100 Mich. 522, 59 N. W. 236; Harvey v. State, 65 Ga. 570; People v. Cummerford, 58 Mich. 328, 25 N. W. 203.

CLOSE, n. A portion of land, as a field, inclosed, as by a hedge, fence, or other visible Inclosure. 3 Bl. Comm. 209. The interest of a person in any particular piece of ground, whether actually inclosed or not. Locklin v. Casler, 50 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 44 ; Meade v. Watson, 67 Cal. 591, 8 Pac. 311 ; Matthews v. Treat, 75 Me. COO; Wright v. Bennett, 4 111. 258; Blakeney v. Blakeney, 6 Port. (Ala.) 115, 30 Am. Dec. 574.

The noun "close," in its legal sense, imports a portion of land iiiclosed, but not necessarily inclosed by actual or visible barriers. The in- visible, ideal boundary, founded on limit of title, which surrounds every man's land, con- stitutes it his close, irrespective of walls, fen- ces, ditches, or the like.

In practice. The word means termina- tion ; winding up. Thus the close of the pleadings is where the pleadings are finished, i. e., when Issue has been joined.

CLOSE, adj. In practice. Closed or seal- ed up. A term applied to writs and letters, CLUB.

A voluntary, unincorporated as- sociation of persons for purposes of a social, literary, or political nature, or the like. A club is not a partnership. 2 Mees. & W. 172.

The word “club” has no very definite meaning, dubs are formed for all sorts of purposes, and there Is no uniformity in their constitutions and rules. It is well known that clubs exist which limit the number of the members and select them with great care, which own considerable property in common, and in which the furnish- ing of food and drink to the members for money is but one of many conveniences which the mem- bers enjoy. Com. v. Pomphret, 137 Mass. 567, 50 Am. Rep. 340.

COIN, «. Pieces of gold, silver, or other metal, fashioned into a prescribed shape, weight, and degree of fineness, and stamped, by authority of government, with certain marks and devices, and put into circulation as money at a fixed value. Com. v. Gal- lagher, 16 Gray (Mass.) 240; Latham v. U. S., 1 Ct CS. 160; Borie v. Trott 6 Phila. (Pa.) 403.

Strictly speaking, coin differs from money, as the species differs from the genus. Money is any matter, whether metal, paper, beads, shells, etc., which has currency as a medium in com- merce. Coin is a particular species, always made of metal, and struck according to a certain process called “coinage.” Wharton.

COLLISION.

In maritime law. The act of ships or vessels striking together.

In its strict sense, collision means the im- pact of two vessels both moving, and is dis- tinguished from allision, which designates the striking of a moving vessel against one that is stationary. Bqt collision is used in a broad sense, to include allision, and perhaps other species of encounters between vessels. Wright v. Brown, 4 Ind. 97, 58 Am. Dec. 622 ; London Assur. Co. v. Companhla De Moagens, Fed. 258, 15 C. C. A. 379 ; Towing Co. v. .Etna Ins. Co., 23 App. Div. 152, 48 K. Y. Supp. 927.

The term la not inapplicable to cases where a stationary vessel is struck by one under way. strictly termed "allision ;” or where one vessel is brought into contact with another by swing- ing at anchor. And even an injury received by a vessel at her moorings, in consequence of being violently rubbed or pressed against by a second vessel lying along-side of her, in conse- quence of a collision against such second ves- sel by a third one under way, may be compensat- ed for, under the general bead of “collision.” as well as an injury which is the direct result of a “blow,” properly so called. In Saxon and old English law. An account or calculation.

COLONY.

A dependent political com- munity, consisting of a number of citizens of the same country who hare emigrated there- from to people another, and remain subject to the mother-country. U. S. r. .The Nancy, 3 Wash. C. C. 287, Fed. Cas. No. 15,854.

A settlement In a foreign country pos- sessed and cultivated, either wholly or par- tially, by Immigrants and their descendants, who hare a political connection with and subordination to the mother-country, whence they emigrated. In other words, it is a place peopled from some more andent city or coun- try- Wharton.

— Colonial laws. In America, this term desig- nates the body of law in force in the thirteen original colonies before the Declaration of In- dependence. In England, the term signifies the laws enacted by Canada and the other pres- ent British colonies.— Colonial office. In the English government, this is the department of state through which the sovereign appoints colo- nial governors, etc., and communicates with them. COLOR.

An appearance, semblance, or timulacrum, as distinguished from that which la real. A prima facie or apparent right Hence, a deceptive appearance ; a plausible, assumed exterior, concealing a lack of real- ity ; a disguise or pretext Railroad Ct>. v. Allfree, 64 Iowa, 500, 20 N. W. 779; Berks County v. Railroad Co., 167 Pa. 102, 31 Atl. 474; Broughton v. Haywood, 61 N. C. 383.

In pleading. Ground of action admitted to subsist in the opposite party by the plead- ing of one of the parties to an action, which is so set out as to be apparently valid, but which Is In reality legally Insufficient.

This was a term of the ancient rhetoricians, and early adopted into the language of pleading. It was an apparent or prima facie right; and the meaning of the rnle that pleadings in confession and avoidance should give color was that they should confess the matter adversely alleged, to such an extent, at least, as to admit some apparent right in the opposite party, which required to be en- countered and avoided by the allegation of new matter. Color was either express, i. e., inserted in the pleading, or Implied, which was naturally inherent In the structure of the pleading. Steph. Pl. 233; Merten v. Bank, 5 Okl. 585, 49 Pac. 913.

The word also means the dark color of the skin showing the presence of negro blood; and hence It is equivalent to African descent or parentage.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 7:15, KJV]

Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

Why: The entry's genus is the assumed exterior concealing the lack of reality — color as pretext. The verse is its archetype: sheep's clothing over the ravening wolf. Genuine bearing on the legal concept. (Jesus' own words...

COLOB OF AUTHORITY.

The entry states the abstract meaning — appearance without substance of legal right; the phrase's great operative life is as the jurisdictional trigger of the federal civil-rights action for deprivations 'under color of' state law.

Why: Section 1983 makes 'under color of' state law the gateway to federal civil-rights suits; the entry's definition is the abstract sense of the exact phrase the statute employs. Real statute, genuine illumination rather...

COLOR OF OFFICE.

An act unjustly done by the countenance of an office, being grounded upon corruption, to which the office is as a shadow and color. Plow. 64.

A claim or assumption of right to do an act by virtue of an office, made by a person who is legally destitute of any such right. Feller v. Gates, 40 Or. 543, 67 Pac. 416, 5ft

L. R. A. 630, 91 Am. St. Rep. 492; State v. Fowler, 88 Mi 601, 42 Atl. 201, 42 L. R. A. 849, 71 Am. St. Rep. 452; Bishop v. Mc- Glllis, 80 Wis. 575, 50 N. W. 779, 27 Am. St Rep. 63; Decker v. The phrase implies, we think, some official power vested in the actor, — he must be at least officer de facto. We do not understand that an act of a mere pretender to an office, or false personator of an officer, is said to be done by color of office. And it implies an illegal claim of authority, by virtue of the office, to do the act or thing in question. Burrall v. Acker, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 606, 35 Am. Dec. 582.

COLOR OF TITLE.

The appearance, semblance, or timulacrum of title. Any fact, extraneous to the act or mere will of the claimant which has the appearance, on its face, of supporting his claim of a present title to land, but which, for some defect In reality falls short of establishing It. Wright v. Mattlson, 18 How. 56, 15 L. Ed. 280; Camerou v. U. S., 148 U. S. 301, 13 Sup. Ct.

695, 37 L. Ed. 469 ; Saltmarsh y. Crommelin, 24 Ala. 352.

“Color of title is anything in writing purport- ing to convey title to the land, which defines the extent of the claim, it being immaterial how de- fective or imperfect the writing may be, so that it is a sign, semblance, or color of title.” Veal v. Robinson, 70 Ga. 809.

Color of title ie that which the law con- siders prima facie a good title, but which, by reason of some defect, not appearing on its face, does not in fact amount to title. An absolute nullity, as a void deed, judgment, etc., will not constitute color of title. Bernal v. Gleim, 33 Cal. 608.

“Any instrument having a grantor and gran- tee, and containing a description of the lands in- tended to be conveyed, and apt words for their conveyance, gives color of title to the lands de- scribed. Such an instrument purports to be a conveyance of the title, and because it does not, for some reason, have that effect, it passes only color or the semblance of a title." Brooks v. Bruy a, 35 111. 392.

It is not synonymous with “claim of title. To the former, a paper title is requisite; but the latter may exist wholly in parol. Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Iowa, 480.

COMITY.

Courtesy; complaisance; re- spect; a willingness to grant a privilege, not as a matter of right, but out of deference and good will.

—Comity of nations. The most appropriate phrase to express the true foundation and extent of the obligation of the laws of one nation with- in the territories of another. It is derived al- together from the voluntary consent of the lat- ter: and it is inadmisible when it is contrary to its known policy, or prejudicial to its inter- ests. In the silence of any positive rule af- firming or denying or restraining the operation of foreign laws, courts of justice presume the tacit adoption of them by their own government, unless repugnant to its policy, or prejudicial to its interests. It is not the comity of the courts, but the comity of the nation, which is administered and ascertained in the same way, and guided by the same reasoning, by which ali other principles of the municipal law are as- certained and guided. Story, Confl. Laws, i 88. The comity of nations (comitaa gentium) is that body of rules which states observe to- wards one another from courtesy or mutual con- venience, although they do not form part of international law. Commerce is a term of the largest import. It comprehends intercourse for the purposes of trade in any and all its forms, including the transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities between the citizens of our coun- try and the citizens or subjects of other coun- tries, and between the citizens of different states. The power to regulate it embraces all the instruments by which such commerce may be conducted. Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275. 23 L. Ed. 347.

Commerce is not limited to an exchange of commodities only, but includes, as well, inter- course with foreign nations and between the states; and includes the transportation of pas- sengers. Steamboat Co. v. Livingston, 3 Cow.

CN. Y.) 713; People v. Raymond, '34 Cal. 492.

The words “commerce” and “trade” are synonymous, but not identical. They are often used interchangeably ; but, strictly speaking, commerce relates to intercourse or dealings with foreign nations, states, or po- litical communities, while trade denotes busi- ness Intercourse or mutual traffic within the limits of a state or nation, or the buying, selling, and exchanging of articles between members of the same community. The entry's long catalog of cases — Gibbons v. Ogden, Brown v. Maryland, Cooley v. Board of Wardens, the Passenger Cases — all construe a single constitutional grant: Congress's power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the states, and with the Indian tribes.

Why: The Commerce Clause is the anchor of the entire case catalog the entry assembles; naming it shows the student the single source all those decisions interpret. Real, verbatim-quoted grant.

COMMOK, n. An incorporeal heredita- ment which consists in a profit which one man has in connection with one or more others in the land of another. Trustees v. Robinson, 12 Serg. & R. <Pa.) §1; Van Rens- selaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 647, 25 Am. Dec. 582; Watts v. Coffin, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 498.

Common, in English law, is an incorporeal right which lies in grant, originally com- mencing on some agreement between lords and tenants, which by time has been formed into prescription, and continues good, • al Bl.Law Dict.(2d Ed.)— 15 though there be no deed or instrument to prove the original contract. 4 Coke, 37; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 258, § 268.

Common, or a right of common, is a right or privilege which several persons have to the pro- duce of the lands or waters of another. Thus common of pasture is a right of feeding the beasts of one person on the lands of- another; common of estovers is the right a tenant has of taking necessary wood and timber from the woods of the lord for fuel, fencing, etc. Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 647.

The word “common” also denotes an unin- closed piece of land set apart for public or municipal purposes, in many cities and vil- lages of the United States. White v. Smith, 37 Mich. 291 ; Newport v. Taylor, 16 B. Mon. 807; Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet 435, 8 L. Ed. 452; Cummings v. St. Louis, 90 Mo. 259, 2 S. W. 130; Newell v. Hancock, 67 N. H. 244, 35 Atl. 253; Bath v. Boyd, 23 N. C. 194; State v. McReynolds, 61 Mo. 210.

—Common appendant. A right annexed to the possession of arable land, by which the own- er is entitled to feed his beasts on the lands of another, usually of the owner of the manor of which the lands entitled to common are a part. 2 Bl. Comm. 33 ; Smith v. Floyd, 18 Bari). (N. Y.) 527 ; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 648.— Common appurtenant. A right of feeding one’s beasts on the land of an- other, (in common with the owner or with others,) which is founded on a grant, or a pre- scription which supposes a grant. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 264, § 277. This kind of common arises from no connection of tenure, and is against common right; it may commence by grant within time of memory, or, in otic • words, may be created at the present day ; it may be claimed as annexed to any kind of land, and may be claimed for beasts not commonable, as well as those that are. 2 Bl. Comm. 34. It is a separate in- heritance, entirely distinct from any other land- ed property, vested in the person to whom the common right belongs. 2 Steph. Comm. 6; Mitchell v. D’Olier, 68 N. J. Law, 375, 53 Atl. 467, 59 L. R. A. 949.— Common of digging. Common of digging, or common in the soil, is the right to take for one’s own use part of the soil or minerals in another’s land ; the most usual subjects of the right are sand, gravel, stones, and clay. It is of a very similar nature to common of estovers and of turbary. Elton, Cora. 109.— Common of estovers. A liberty of taking necessary wood for the use or furni- ture of a house or farm from off another’s es- tate, in common with the owner or with others. 2 Bl. Comm. 35. It may be claimed, like com- mon of pasture, either by grant or prescription.

2 Steph. Comm. 10; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. T.) 648. — Common of fish- ery. The same as Common of piscary. See In- fra.— Common of fowling. In some parts of the country a right of taking tyild animals (such as conies or wildfowl) from the land of another has been found to exist; in the case of wildfowl, it is called a "common of fowling.” Elton, Com. 118.— Common of pasture. The right or liberty of pasturing one’s cattle upon another man’s land. It may be either append- ant, appurtenant, in gross, or because of vicin- age. Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 647.— Common of piscary. The right or liberty of fishing in another man’s water, in common with the owner or with other persons. 2 Bl. Comm. 34. A liberty or right of fishing in the water covering the soil of another per- son, or in a river running through another's land. 3 Kent, Comm. 409. Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. 8. 371, 11 Sup. COMMON BAR.

In pleading. (Other- wise called “blank bar.”) A plea to compel the plaintiff to assign the particular place where the trespass has been committed. Steph. PI. 256.

COMMON BENCH.

The English court of common pleas was formerly so called. Its original title appears to have been simply “The Bench,” but it was designated “Com- mon Bench" to distinguish it from the “King’s Bench,” and because in it were tried and determined the causes of common per- sons, i. e., causes between subject and sub- ject, in which the crown bad no Interest.

COMMON LAW. 1. As distinguished from the Roman law, the modern civil law, the canon law, and other systems, the com- mon law is that body of law and juristic theory which was originated, developed, and formulated and is administered in England, and has obtained among most of the states and peoples of Anglo-Saxon stock. Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674.

2. As distinguished from law created by the enactment of legislatures, the commou law comprises the body of those principles and rules of action, relating to the govern- ment and security of persons and property, which derive their authority solely from usages and customs of immemorial antiquity, or from the Judgments and decrees of the courts recognizing, affirming, and enforcing such usages and customs; and, in this sense, particularly the ancient unwritten law of England. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Call Pub. CO., 181 U. 8. 92, 21 Sup. Ct 561, 45

L. Ed. 765; State v. Buehannn, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 365, 9 Am. Dec. 534; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674 ; Barry v. Port Jer- vis, 64 App. Dlv. 268, 72 N. Y. Supp. 104.

3. As distinguished from equity taw, it is a body of rules and principles, written or un- written, which are of fixed and immutable authority, and which must be applied to con- troversies rigorously and in their entirety, and cannot be modified to suit the peculiari- ties of a specific case, or colored by any Judi- cial discretion, and which rests confessedly upon custom or statute, as distinguished from any claim to ethical superiority. Kle- ver v. Seawall, 65 Fed. 395, 12 C. C. A. 661.

4. As distinguished from ecclesiastical law, it is the system of Jurisprudence adminis- tered by the purely secular tribunals.

5. As concerns its force and authority in the United States, the phrase designates that portion of the common law of England (in- cluding such acts of parliament as were ap- plicable) which had been adopted and was in force here at the time of the Revolution. This, so far as it has not since been expressly abrogated, is recognized as an organic part of the Jurisprudence of most of the United States. Browning v. Browning, 3 N. M. 371, 9 Pac. 677 ; Guardians of Poor v. Greene, 5 Bin. (Pa.) 557; U. S. v. New Bedford Bridge, 27 Fed. Cas. 107.

6. In a wider sense than any of the fore- going, the “common law” may designate all that part of the positive law, Juristic theory, and ancient custom of any state or nation which is of general and universal applica- tion, thus marking off special or local rules or customs.

As a compound adjective “common-law” is understood as contrasted with or opposed to “statutory,” and sometimes also to “equi- table” or to “criminal.” See examples below.

— Common-law action. A civil suit, as dis- tinguished from a criminal prosecution or a Eroceeding to enforce a penalty or a police regu- ition ; not necessarily an action which would Be at common law. Kirby v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 106 Fed. 551; U. 8. v. Block, 24 Fed. Cas. 1,174. — Common-law assignments. The name of a court of record having general original Jurisdic- tion in civil suits.

Common causes or suits. A term anciently used to denote civil actions, or those depend- ing between subject and subject, as distin- guished from pleas of the crown. DaUett v. Feltus, 7 Pbila. (Pa.) 627.

COMMON PLEAS, THE COURT OF.

In English law. (So called because its orig- inal jurisdiction was to determine controver- sies between subject and subject) One of the three superior courts of common law at Westminster, presided oyer by a lord chief justice and five (formerly four, until 31 & 32 Vlct c. 125, | 11, subsec. 8) ptiisnd judges. It was detached from the king’s court (aula regia) as early as the reign of Richard I., and the fourteenth clause of Magna Charta enacted that it should not follow the king’s court, but be held in some certain place. Its jurisdiction was altogether confined to civil matters, having no cognizance in criminal cases, and was concurrent with that of the queen's bench and exchequer In personal actions and ejectment Wharton.

COMMON RECOVERY.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

In conveyanc- ing. A species of common assurance, or mode of conveying lands by matter of record, formerly in frequent use in England. It was in the nature and form of an action at law, carried regularly through, and ending in a recovery of the lands against the ten- ant of the freehold; which recovery, being a supposed adjudication of the right bound all persons, and vested a free and absolute fee- simple in the reeoverer. 2 Bl. Comm. 357. Christy v. Burch, 25 Fla. 942, 2 South. 258. Common recoveries were abolished by the statutes 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74.

COMMONABLE.

public law, though often used in political science. It generally designates, when so employed, a republican frame of government, — one in which the welfare and rights of the entire mass of people are the main consideration, rather than the privileges of a class or the will of a monarch ; or it may designate the body of citizens living under such a govern- ment. Sometimes it may denote the corpo- rate entity, or the government, of a jural society (or state) possessing powers of self- government in respect of its immediate con- cerns, but forming an Integral part of a lar- ger government, (or nation.) In this latter sense, it is the official title of several of the United States, (as Pennsylvania and Massa- chusetts,) and would be appropriate to them all. In the former sense, the word ‘was used to designate the English government during the protectorate of Cromwell. See Govern- ment; Nation; State. (State v. Lambert, 44 W. Va. 308, 28 S. E. 930.)

The proper signification of the word "com- pamv," when applied to persons engaged In trade, denotes those united for the same purpose or in a joint concern. It is so commonly used in this sense, or as Indicating a partnership, that few persons accustomed to purchase goods at shops, where they are sold by retail, would misapprehend that such was its meaning. Palmer v. Pinkham, 33 Me. 32.

Joist stock companies. Joint stock com- panies are those having a joint stock or capital, which Is divided Into numerous trans- ferable shares, or consists of transferable stock. Llndl. Partn. 6.

The term Is not identical frith “partner- ship,” although every unincorporated society Is, In its legal relations, a partnership. In common use a distinction Is made, the name “partnership” being reserved for business associations of a limited number of persons (usually not more than four or five) trading under a name composed of their Individual names set out in succession; while “com- pany” is appropriated as the designation of a society comprising a larger number of persons, with greater capital, and engaged in more extensive enterprises, and trading under a title not disclosing the names of the Individuals. In Spanish law. Compensation; set-off. The extinction of a debt by another debt of equal dignity.

COMPENSATIO.

Lab In the civil law. Compensation, or set-off. A proceeding re- sembling a set-off in the common law, being a claim on the part of the defendant to have an amount due to him from the plaintiff de- ducted from his demand. Dig. 16, 2; Inst 4, 6, 30, 39 ; 3 Bl. Comm. 305.

— Compensatlo crimlnis. (Set-off of crime or guilt.) In practice. The plea of recrimination in a suit for a divorce ; that is, that the com- plainant is guilty of the same kind of offense with which the respondent is charged.

COMPENSATION.

Indemnification ; pay- ment of damages; making amends; that which is necessary to restore an injured par- ty to his former position. An act which a court orders to be done, or money which a court orders to be paid, by a person whose acts or omissions have caused loss or injury to another, in order that thereby the person damnified may receive equal value for his loss, or be made whole in respect of his in- jury. Railroad Co. v. Denman, 10 Minn. 280 (Gil. 208).

Also that equivalent in money which is paid to the owners and occupiers of lands taken or injuriously affected by the opera- tions of companies exercising the power of eminent domain.

In the constitutional provision for “just compensation” for property taken under the power of eminent domain, this term means a payment in money. Any benefit to the re- maining property of the owner, arising from public works for which a part has been tak- en, cannot be considered as compensation. Bailroad Co. v. Burkett, 42 Ala. 83.

As compared with consideration and damages compensation, in its most careful use, seems to be between them. Consideration is amends for something given by consent, or by the owner’s choice. Damages is amends exacted from a wrong-doer for a tort. Compensation is amends for something which was taken without the own- er’s choice, yet without commission of a torb Thus, one should say, consideration for land sold ; compensation for land taken for a rail- way ; damages for a trespass. But such dis- tinctions are not uniform. Land damages is a common expression for compensation for lands taken for public use. Abbott.

In practice. A plea in an action of debt on a bail bond that the defendant appeared at the day re- quired.

COMPETENCY.

In the law of evi- dence. The presence of those characteris- tics, or the absence of those disabilities, which render a witness legally fit and quali- fied to give testimony in a court of justice. The term is also applied, in the same sense, to documents or other written evidence.

Competency differs from credibility. The former is a question which arises before con- sidering the evidence given by the witness; the latter concerns the degree of credit to be given to his story. The former denotes the personal qualification of the witness; the latter his veracity. A witness may Be com- petent, and yet give Incredible testimony; he may be Incompetent, and yet his evi- dence, If received, be perfectly credible. Competency Is for the court; credibility for the Jury. Yet In some cases the term "cred- ible" Is used as an equivalent for "compe- tent.'' Thus, In a statute relating to the execution of wills, the term "credible wit- ness" is held to mean one who Is entitled to he examined and to give evidence In a court of justice; not necessarily one who Is personally worthy of belief, but one who Is not disqualified by imbecility, interest, crime, or other cause. 1 Jarm. Wills, 124; Smith v. Jones, 68 Vt 132, 34 Atl. 424; Com. v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 424, 34 Am. Rep. 391.

In French law. Competency, as applied to a court, means Its right to exercise juris- diction in a particular case.

COMPILE.

To compile Is to copy from various authors Into one work. Between a compilation and an abridgment there Is a clear distinction. A compilation consists of selected extracts from different authors; an abridgment is a condensation of the views of one author. Story v. Holcombe, 4 Mc- Lean, 306, 314, Fed. Cas. No. 13,497.

—Compilation. A literary production, com- posed of the works of others and arranged in a methodical manner.— Compiled statutes. A collection of the statutes existing and in force in a given state, all laws and parts of laws relating to each subject-matter being brought together under one head, and the whole arrang- ed systematically in one book, either under an alphabetical arrangement or some other plan of classification. Such a collection of statutes dif- fers from a code in this, that none of the laws so compiled derives any new force or undergoes any modification in its relation to other stat- utes in pari materia from the fact of the com- pilation, while a code is a re-enactment of the whole body of the positive law and is to be read and interpreted as one entire and homo- geneous whole. Railway Co. v. State, 194 Ga. 831, 31 S. E. 531 ; Black, Interp. Laws, p. 363.

COMPLAINANT.

In practice. One who applies to the courts for legal redress; one who exhibits a bill of complaint. This Is the proper designation of one suing in equity, though “plaintiff” is often used in equity proceedings as well as at law. Bene- fit Ass’n v. Robinson, 147 111. 138, 35 N. E. 168.

COMPLETE, ad). 1. Full; entire; In- cluding every Item or element of the thing spoken of, without omissions or deficiencies ; as, a "complete” copy, record, schedule, or transcript. Yeager v. Wright, 112 Ind. 230, 13 N. B. 707; Anderson v. Ackerman, 88 Ind. 490; Bailey v. Martin, 119 Ind. 103, 21 N. E. 346.

2. Perfect; consummate; not lacking In any element or particular; as In the case of a "complete legal title” to land, which includes the possession, the right of posses- sion, and the right of property. Dingey v. Paxton, GO Miss. 1054; Bhle v. Quacken- boss, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 537.

COMPLICE.

One who is united with others In an ill design ; an associate ; a con- federate; an accomplice.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 1:10, KJV]

My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.

Why: The verse names the exact formation of the complice — union with others in an ill design, via enticement — and forbids it. Genuine bearing. (Wisdom voice: no flag.)

COMPOS MENTIS.

Sound of mind. Having use and control of one’s mental fac- ulties.

[Hip-hop] — Hip-hop

[Cypress Hill, 'Insane in the Brain', 1993]

"Insane in the membrane / Insane in the brain" — stated honestly as illumination by negation: the term marks the legal threshold of soundness of mind ("use and control of one's mental faculties"), and the hook is vernacular for standing on the wrong side of that line.

Why: Added with the by-negation relationship stated plainly rather than implied: the lyric names the absence of the compos-mentis state, which throws the term's boundary into relief. Caveat recorded: the song's "insane" is...

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Shakespeare, Hamlet, c. 1600]

(paraphrase) Hamlet announces he will 'put an antic disposition on,' making his soundness of mind — whether he truly has use and control of his mental faculties — the play's open question. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry defines compos mentis as sound of mind. Hamlet's feigned madness is the canonical literary raising of the soundness-of-mind question; paraphrase marked.

COMPOS SHI.

Having the use of one’s limbs, or the power of bodily motion. SI fuit ita compos sui quod itincrare p otuit de loco in locum , If he had so far the use of his limbs as to be able to travel from place to place. Bract, fol. 146.

COMPOSITIO HEN ARUM ET PER- / TICARUM.

The statute of ells and perch- es. The title of an English statute establish- ing a standard of measures. 1 Bl. Comm. 275.

COMPOSITION.

An agreement, made upon a sufficient consideration, between an insolvent or embarrassed debtor and his creditors, whereby the latter, for the sake of immediate payment, agree to accept a div- idend less than the whole amount of their claims, to be distributed pro rata, In dis- charge and satisfaction of the whole. Bank v. McGeoch, 92 Wis. 286, 06 N. W. 600 ; Crossley v. Moore, 40 N. J. Law, 27 ; Craw- ford v. Krueger, 201 Pa. 348, 50 AO. 931; In re Merriman’s Estate, 17 Fed. Cas. 131; Chapman v. Mfg. Co., 77 Me. 210; In re Ad- ler (D. a) 103 Fed. 444.

“Composition” should be distinguished from "accord.” The latter properly denotes an ar- rangement between a debtor and a single cred- itor for a discharge of the obligation by a part payment or on different terms. The former designates an arrangement between a debtor and the whole body of his creditors (or at least a considerable proportion of them) for the liquida- tion of their claims by the dividend offered.

In ancient law. Among the Franks, Goths, Burgundians, and other barbarous peoples, this was the name given to a sum of money paid, as satisfaction for a wrong or personal injury, to the person harmed, or to his family if he died, by the aggressor. It was originally made by mutual agreement of the parties, but afterwards established by law, and took the place of private physi- cal vengeance.

COMPRIVIGNI.

In the civil law. Chil- dren by a former marriage, (individually called "privigni,” or “privignte,") consider- ed relatively to each other. Thus, the son of a husband by a former wife, and the daughter of a wife by a former husband, are the oomprivigni of each other. Inst. 1, 10, 8.

COMPROMISE.

An arrangement arriv- ed at, either in court or out of court, for settling a dispute upon what appears to the parties to be equitable terms, having regard to the uncertainty they are in regarding the facts, or the law and the facts together: Colburn v. Groton, 66 N. H. 151, 28 AO. 95, 22 In R. A. 763 ; Treitschke v. Grain Co, 10 Neb. 358, 6 N. W. 427 ; Attrlll v. Patterson, 58 Md. 226; Bank v. McGeoch, 92 Wis. 286, 66 N. W. 606; Rivers v. Blom, 163 Mo. 442, 63 S. W. 812

An agreement between two or more persons, who, for preventing or -putting an end to a law- suit, adjust their difficulties by mutual consent in the manner which they agree on, and which every one of them prefers to the hope of gain- ing, balanced by the danger of losing. Sharp v. Knox, 4 La. 456.

In the civil law. An agreement where- by two or more persons mutually bind them- selves to refer their legal dispute to the de- cision of a designated third person, who is termed “umpire” or “arbitrator.” Dig. 4, 8; Maekeld. Rom. Law, f 471.

Compromissarii aunt indices. Jenk. Cent. 128. Arbitrators are judges.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:25, KJV]

Agree with thine adversary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison.

Why: The verse counsels exactly the compromise — settle with the adversary before the judge takes the case. Direct bearing on settling a dispute on equitable terms. (Jesus' own words: red-letter.)

COMPROMISSARITJS.

In the civil law. An arbitrator.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 6:5, KJV]

I speak to your shame. Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you? no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?

Why: Paul demands the arbitrator's office — a wise man to judge between brethren instead of going to law. The entry's concept, prescribed. (Apostolic: no flag.) [re-homed from 'COMPROMISSARIUS' to 'COMPROMISSARITJS' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

Conatns quid sit, non defluitur in jure. 2 Bulst. 277. What an attempt is, is not defined in law.

CONOEAXi. To hide; secrete; withhold from the knowledge of others.

The word "conceal," according to the best lexicographers, signifies to withhold or keep secret mental facts from another's knowl- edge, as well as to hide or secrete physical objects from sight or observation. Gerry v. Dunham, 57 Me. 339.

— Concealed. The term "concealed" is not synonymous with "lying in wait" If a person conceals himself for the purpose of shooting an- other unawares, he is lying in wait ; but a per- son may, while concealed, shoot another with- out committing the crime of murder. People v. Miles, 55 Cal. 207. The term “concealed weap- ons" means weapons willfully or knowingly covered or kept from sight. Owen v. State, 3l Ala. 387.— Concealers. In old English law. Such as find out concealed lands ; that is, lands privily kept from the king by common persons having nothing to show for them. They are called “a troublesome, disturbant sort of men ; turbulent persons.” Cowell. — Concealment. The improper suppression or disguising of a fact, circumstance, or qualification which rests within the knowledge of one only of the parties to a contract, but which ought in fairness and good faith to be communicated to the other, whereby the party so concealing draws the oth- er into an engagement which he would not make but for his ignorance of the fact concealed. A neglect to communicate that which a party knows, and ought to communicate, is called a “concealment.” Civ. Code Cal. $ 2561. The terms “misrepresentation” and “concealment” have a known and definite meaning in the law of insurance. Misrepresentation is the state- ment of something as fact which is untrue in fact, and which the assured states, knowing it to be not true, with an intent to deceive the underwriter, or which he states positively as true, without knowing it to be true, and which has a tendency to mislead, such fact in either case being material to the risk. Concealment is the designed and intentional withholding of any fact material to the risk, which the assured, in honesty and good faith, ought to communicate to the underwriter; mere silence on the part of the assured, especially as to some matter of fact which he does not consider it important for the underwriter to know, is not to be consider- ed as such concealment. If the fact so untruly stated or purposely suppressed is not material, that is, if the knowledge or ignorance of it would not naturally influence the judgment of the underwriter in making the contract, or in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the rate of the premium, it is not a “misrepresentation” or "concealment,” within the clause of the conditions annexed to policies. Daniels v. Insurance Co., 12 Cush. (Hass.) 416, 59 Am. Dec. 192.

CONCILIATION.

In French law. The formality to which intending litigants are subjected In cases brought before the juge de pale. The judge convenes the parties and endeavors to reconcile them. Should he not succeed, the case proceeds. In criminal and commercial cases, the preliminary of concili- ation does not take place. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 662.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:9, KJV]

Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.

Why: Conciliation is institutionalized peacemaking — the judge's office as peacemaker between litigants. The verse blesses the reconciling function the entry describes. (Jesus' words: red-letter.)

CONCILIUM.

Lat. A council. Also ar- gument in a cause, or the sitting of the court to hear argument; a day allowed to a de- fendant to present his argument ; an impar- lance.

CONCLUDED.

Ended ; determined ; es- topped ; prevented from.

CONCLUSION.

The end; the termina- tion; the act of finishing or bringing to a close. The conclusion of a declaration or complaint Is all that part which follows the statement of the plaintiff's cause of action. The conclusion of a plea is its final clause, in which the defendant either “puts himself upon the country” (where a material aver- ment of the declaration is traversed and is- sue tendered) or offers a verification, which is proper where new matter Is introduced. State v. Waters, 1 Mo. App. 7.

In trial practice. It signifies making' the final or concluding address to the jury or the court. This is, in general, the privilege of the party who has to sustain the burden of proof.

Conclusion also denotes a bar or estoppel ; the consequence, as respects the individual, of a judgment upon the subject-matter, or of his confession of a matter or thing which the law thenceforth forbids him to deny.

— Conclusion against the form of the statute. The proper form for the conclusion of an indictment for an offense created by statute is the technical phrase “against the form of the statute in such case made and pro- vided;” or, in Latin, contra formam statuti. — Conclusion of fact. An inference drawn from the subordinate or evidentiary facts.— Conclusion of law. Within the rule that pleadings should contain only facts, and not conclusions of law, this means a proposition not arrived at by any process of natural rea- soning from a fact or combination of facts stated, but by the application of the artificial rules of law to the facts pleaded. Levins v. Uovegno, 71 Cal. 273, 12 Pac. 161; Iron Co. v. Vandervort, 164 Pa. 572, 30 Atl. 491: Clark v. Railway Co., 28 Minn. 69, 9 N. W. 75.— Conclusion to the country. In pleading. The tender of an issue to be tried by jury. Steph. Pl. 230.

CONCLUSIVE.

W. 794; Joslyn v. Rockwell, 59 Hun, 129, 13 N. V. Supp. 311; Appeal of BIxler, 59 Cal. 560.

—Conclusive evidence. See Evidence— Conclusive presumption. See Pbesump- TION.

CONCORD.

In the old process of levy- ing a fine of lands, the concord was an agreement between the parties (real or feign- ed) in which the deforciant (or he who keeps the other out of possession) acknowledges that the lands in question are the right of complainant; and, from the acknowledg- ment or admission of right thus made, the party who levies the fine is called the “cog- nizor,” and the person to whom it is levied the “cognizee.” 2 Bl. Comm.

CONDEMN.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 3:18, KJV]

He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

Why: The verdict of guilt rendered — 'condemned already' is the adjudication of guilt in its most absolute form; the juridical structure (a finding of guilt with its ground stated) matches the entry's first sense. (Jesus s...

Classification. In the civil law, conditions are of the following several kinds:

The casual condition is that which depends on chnnee. and is in no way in the power either of the creditor or of the debtor. Civ. Code La. art. 2023.

A mixed condition is one that depends at the same time on the will of one of the parties and on the will of a third -person, or on the will of one of the parties and also on a casual event. Civ. Code La. art 2025.

The potestative condition ia that wbiclt makes the execution of the agreement depend on an event which it is in the power of the one or the other of the contracting parties to bring about or to hinder. Civ. Code La. art 2024.

A resolutory or dissolving condition ia that which, when accomplished, operates the revocation of the obligation, placing matters in the same state as though the obligation had not existed. It does not suspend the execution of the obligation. It only obliges the creditor to restore what he has received in case the event provided for in the condition takes place. Civ. Code La. art. 2045 ; Moss v. Smoker, 2 La. Ann. 991.

A suspensive condition is that which depends, either on a future and uncertain event, or on an event which has actually taken place, with- out its being yet known to the parties. In the former case, the obligation cannot be executed till after the event; in the latter, the obligation has its effect from the day on which it was contracted, but it cannot be enforced until the event be known. Civ. Code La. art 2043 : New Orleans v. Railroad Co.. 1T1 IT. S. 312, IS Sup. Ct. 875, 43 L. Ed. 178; Moss v. Smoker, 2 La. Ann. 991.

In French law. In French law, the fol- lowing peculiar distinctions are mnde: (1) A condition is casuellc when it depends on a chance or hazard; (2) a condition Is potes- tative when it depends on the accomplish- ment of something which is in the power of the party to accomplish; (3) a condition is mixte when It depends partly on the will of the party and partly on the will of oth- ers ; (4) a condition is suspensive when it is a future and uncertain event, or present but unknown event, upon which an obligation takes or falls to take effect; (5) a condition is resolutoire when it is the event which un- does an obligation which has already had effect as such. Brown.

In common law. The rank, situation, or degree of a particular person in some one. of the different orders of society; or his stat- us or situation, considered as a Jurkliclal person, 'arising from positive law or the in- stitutions of society. Thill ▼. Pohlman, 76 Iowa, 638, 41 N. W. 385.

A clause in a contract or agreement which has for its object to suspend, rescind, or modify the principal obligation, or, in case of n will, to suspend, revoke, or modify the devise or bequest. Towle v. Remsen, 70 N.

Y. 303.

A modus or quality annexed by him that hath an estate, or interest or right to the same, whereby an estate, etc., may either be defeated, enlarged, or created upon an un- certain event. Co. Lltt. 201 a.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

A qualification or restriction annexed to a conveyance of lands, whereby it is provided that in case a particular event does or does not happen, or in case the grantor or gran- tee does or omits to do a particular act, an estate shall commence, be enlarged, or be defeated. Heaston v. Randolph County, 20 Ind. 398; Cooper v. Green, 28 Ark. 54; State v. Board of Public Works, 42 Ohio St 615 ; Selden v. Pringle, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 465.

Classification. The different kinds of con- ditions known to the common law may be ar- ranged and described as follows;

They are either express or implied, the form- er when incorporated in express terms in the deed, contract, lease, or grant ; the latter, when inferred or presumed by law, from the nature of the transaction or the conduct of the par- ties, to have been tacitly understood between them as a part of the agreement, though not expressly mentioned. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 792 ; Bract, fol. 47 ; Civ. Code La. art 2026; Raley v. Umatilla County, 15 Or. 172, 13 Pac. 890, 3 Am. St. Rep. 142. Express and implied conditions are also called by the older writers, respectively, conditions in deed (or in fact, the Law French term being conditions en fait) and conditions in late. Co. Litt. 201o.

They are possible or impossible ; the former when they admit of performance in the ordinary course of events; the latter when it is con- trary to the course of nature or human limita- tions that they should ever be performed.

They are lawful or unlawful; the former when their character is not in violation of any rule, principle, or policy of law ; the latter when they are such as the law will not allow to be made.

They are consistent or repugnant; the form- er when they are in harmony and concord with the other parts of the transaction; the latter when they contradict, annul, or neutralize the main purpose of the contract. Repugnant con- ditions are also called “insensible."

They are affirmative or negative; the former being a condition which consists in doing a thing; as provided that the lessee shall pay rent, etc., and the latter being a condition which consists in not doing a thing ; as provided that the lessee shall not alien, etc. Shep. Touch. 118.

They are precedent or subsequent. A con- dition precedent is one which must happen or be performed before the estate to which it is annexed can vest or be enlarged; or it is one which is to be performed before some right de- pendent thereon accrues, or some, act dependent thereon is performed. Towle v. Remsen, 76 N.

Y. 309; .Jones v. U. S., 96 U. S. 26. 24 L. Ed. 644; Redman v. Insurance Co., 49 Wis. 431. 4 N. W. 591 : Beatty’s Estate v. Western College, 177 111. 280, 52 N. E. 432, 42 L. R. A. 797, 69 Am. St. Rep. 242; Warner v. Bennett, 31 Conn. 475 ; Blean v. Messenger, 33 N. J. Law, 503. A condition subsequent is one an- nexed to an estate already vested, by the per- formance of which such estate is kept and con- tinued. and by the failure or non-performance of which it is- defeated ; or it is a condition referring to a future event, upon the happen- ing of which the obligation becomes no longer binding upon the other party, if he chooses to avail himself of the condition. Co. Litt. 201; 2 Bl. Comm. 154; Civ.

Code Cal. jj 1436; Code Ga. § 2722 ; Goff v. Pensenhafer, 190 111. 200. 60 N. E. 110: Moran v. Stewart, 173 Mo. 207. 73 S. W. 177 ; Hague v. Ahrens, 53 Fed. 58. 3 C. C. A. 426: Towle v. Remsen, 70

N. Y. 309 ; phapin v. School Disk, 35 N. H. 450; Blanchard v. Railroad Co., 31 Mich. 49. 18 Am. Rep. 142; Cooper v. Green, ‘28 Ark. 54.

Conditions may also be positive (requiring that a specified event shall happen or an act be done) and restrictive or negative, the latter being such as impose an obligation not to do a particular thing, as, that a lessee shall not alien or sub-let or commit waste, or the like. Shep. Touch. 118.

They may be single, copulative, or disjunc- tive. 'Those of the first kind require the performance of one specified thing only; those of the second kind require the performance of divers acts or things; those of the third kind require the performance of one of several things. Shep. Touch. 118.

Conditions may also be independent, depend- ent, or mutual. They belong to the first class when each of the two conditions must be per- formed without any reference to the other; to the second class when the performance of one condition is not obligatory until the actual performance of the other ; and to the third class when neither party need perform his condition unless the other is ready and willing to perform his, or, in other words, when the mutual covenants go to the whole consideration on both sides and each is precedent to the oth- er. Hoggins v. Daley, 99 Fed. 609, 40 C. C.

The following varieties may also be noted: A condition collateral is one requiring the performance of a collateral act having no necessary relation to the main subject of the agreement. A compulsory condition is one Which expressly requires a thing to be done, as, that a lessee shall pay a specified sum of money on a certain day or his lease shall be void. Shep. Touch. 118. Concurrent conditions are those which are mutually dependent and are to be performed at the same time. Civ. Code Cal. | 1437. A condition inherent is one annexed to the rent reserved out of the land whereof the estate is made, or rather, to the estate in the land, in respect of rent. Shep. Touch. 118.

Synonyms distinguished. A “condition’’ is to be distinguished from a limitation, in that the latter may be to or for the benefit of a stranger, who may then take advantage of its determination, while only the grantor, or those who stand in his place, can take advantage of a condition, (Hoselton v. Hosel- ton, 166 Mo. 182, 65 S. W. 1005 ; Stearns v. Gofrey, 16 Me. 158;) and in that a limita- tion ends the estate without entry or claim, which is not true of a condition. It also differs from a conditional limitation; for in the latter the estate is limited over to a third person, while in case of a simple con- dition it reverts to the grantor, or his heirs or devisees, (Church v. Grant, 3 Gray [Mass.) 147, 63 Am. Dec. 725.) It differs also from a covenant, which can be made by either grantor or grantee, while only the grantor can make a condition, (Co. Litt. 70.) A charge Is a devise of land with a bequest out of the subject-matter, and a charge up- on the devisee personally, in respect of the estate devised, gives him an estate on con- dition. A condition also differs from a re- mainder; for, while the former may operate to defeat the estate before its natural ter- mination. the latter cannot take effect until the completion of the preceding estate.

CONDITIONAL.

That which is depend- ent upon or granted subject to a condition.

— Conditional creditor. In the civil law. A creditor having a future right of action, or hav- ing a right of action in expectancy. Dig. 50, 16, 54— Conditional stipulation. In the civil law. A stipulation to do a thing upon con- dition, as the happening of any event.

CONFESSION.

In criminal law. A vol- untary statement made by a person charged with the commission of a crime or misde- meanor, communicated to another person, wherein he acknowledges himself to be guilty of the offense charged, and discloses the circumstances of the act or the share and participation which he had in it. Spicer v. Com. (Ky.) 51 S. W. 802; People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 637; Lee v. State, 102 Ga. 221. 29

S. B. 264; State v. Heldenrelch, 29 Or. 381, 45 Pac. 755.

Also the act of a prisoner, when arraigned for a crime or misdemeanor, in acknowledg-* lng and avowing that he is guilty of the offense charged.

Classification. Confessions are divided in- to judicial and extrajudicial. The former are Buch as are made before a magistrate or court in the due course of legal proceedings, while the latter are such as are made by a party else- where than in court or before a magistrate. Speer v. State, 4 Tex. App. 479. An implied confession is where the defendant, in a case not capital, does not plead guilty but indirectly admits his guilt by placing himself at the mercy of the court and asking for a light sentence. 2 Hawk. — Confession and avoidance. A plea in con- fession and avoidance is one which avows and confesses the troth of the averments of fact in the declaration, either expressly or by implica- tion, but then proceeds to allege new matter which tends to deprive the facts admitted of their ordinary legal effect, or to obviate, neu- tralise, or avoid them. — Confession of de- fense. In English practice. Where defendant alleges a ground of defense arising since the commencement of the action, the plaintiff may deliver confession of such defense and sign judg- ment for his costs up to the time of such plead- ing. unless it be otherwise ordered. Jud. Act 1875, Ord. XX, r. 3.— Confession of judg- ment. The act of a debtor in permitting judg- ment to be entered against him by his creditor, for a stipulated sum, by a written statement to that effect or by warrant of attorney, without the institution of legal proceedings of any kind. —Confessing error. A plea to an assignment of error, admitting the same.

Lockwood, 1 Dali. (Pa.) 393, 1 L. Ed. 194.

CONFISCARE.

In civil and old English law.. To confiscate; to claim for or bring into the fisc, or treasury. Bract fol. 150.

CONFISCATE.

To appropriate property to the use of the state. To adjudge property to be forfeited to the public treasury; to seize and condemn private forfeited property to public use. Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dali. 234, 1 L. Ed. 568; State v. Sargent, 12 Mo. App. 234.

Formerly, it appears, this term was used as synonymous with “forfeit” but at present the distinction between the two terms is well mark- ed. Confiscation supervenes upon forfeiture. The person, by his act, forfeits his property; the state thereupon appropriates it that is, con- fiscates it. Hence, to confiscate property Im- plies that it has first been forfeited ; but to for- feit property does not necessarily imply that it will be confiscated.

“Confiscation” is also to be distinguished from "condemnation” as prize. The former is the act of the sovereign against a rebellious subject; the latter is the act of a belligerent against an- other belligerent. Confiscation may be effected by such means, summary or arbitrary, as the sovereign, expressing its will through lawful channels, may please to adopt. Condemnation as prize can only be made in accordance with prin- ciples of law recognized in the common juris- prudence of the world. Both are proceedings in rent, but confiscation recognizes the title of the original owner to the property, while in prize the tenure of the property is qualified, provisional, and destitute of absolute ownership. Winchester v. D. S., 14 Ct Cl. 48.

CONFISCATES.

One whose property has been seized and sold under a confiscation act, e. g., for unpaid taxes. See Brent v. New Orleans, 41 La. Ann. 1098, 6 South. 793.

CONFISCATION.

The act of confiscat- ing; or of condemning and adjudging to the public treasury.

— Confiscation acts. Certain acts of con- gress, enacted during the progress of the civil war (1861 and 1862) in the exercise of the war powers of the government and meant to strengthen its hands and aid in suppressing the rebellion, which authorized the seizure, con- demnation, and forfeiture of “property used for insurrectionary purposes.” 12 U. CONFUSIO.

In the civil law. The in- separable intermixture of property belonging to dilfferent owners; it is properly confined to the pouring together of fluids, but is some- times also used of a melting together of met- als or any compound formed by the irrecov- erable commixture of different substances.

It Is distinguished from commixtion by the fact that in the latter case a separation may be made, while in a case of confusio there cannot be. 2 Bl. Comm. 405.

CONFUSION.

This term, as used in the civil law and in compound terms derived from that source, means a blending or inter- mingling, and is equivalent to the term “merger” as used at common law. Palmer v. Burnside, 1 Woods, 182, Fed. Cas. No. 10,685.

— Confusion of boundaries. The title of that branch of equity jurisdiction which relates to the discovery and settlement of conflicting, disputed, or uncertain boundaries.— Confusion of debts. A mode of extinguishing a debt, by the concurrence in the same person of two qual- ities which mutually destroy one another. This may occur in several ways, as where the cred- itor becomes the heir of the debtor, or the debt- or the heir of the creditor, or either accedes to the title of the other by any other mode of transfer. Woods v. Ridley, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 198. — Confusion of goods. The inseparable intermixture of property belonging to different owners; properly confined to the pouring to- gether of fluids, but used in a wider sense to designate any indistinguishable compound of elements belonging to different owners. The term "confusion” is applicable to a mixing of chattels of one and the .same general descrip- tion, differing thus from "accession," which is where various materials are united in one prod- uct. Confusion of goods arises wherever the goods of two

CONSANOUINEUS.

Lat A person re- lated by blood ; a person descended from the same common stock.

— Consanguineus Inter. In civil and feud- al law. A half-brother by the father's side, as distinguished from frater uterine*, a brother by the mother’s side.

Consanguinens est quasi eodem san- guine natua. Co. Lltt 157. A person re- lated by consanguinity is, as it were, sprung from the same blood.

CONSANGUINITY.

Kinship; blood re- lationship ; the connection or relation of per- sons descended from the same stock or common ancestor. 2 Bl. Comm. 202; BJodget v. Brinsmaid, 9 Vt 30; State v. De Hart, 109 La. 570, 33 South. 605; Tepper v. Supreme Council, 69 N. J. Eq. 321, 45 AO. Ill; Rector v. Drury, 3 Pin. (Wis.) 298.

Lineal and collateral consanguinity.

Lineal consanguinity is that which subsists be- tween persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between son, father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upwards in the direct ascending line ; or be- tween son, grandson, great-grandson., and so downwards in the direct descending line. Col- lateral consanguinity is that which subsists be- tween persons who have the same ancestors, ■but who do not descend (or ascend) one from the other. Thus, father and son are related by lineal consanguinity, uncle and nephew by col- lateral consanguinity. 2 Bl. Comm. 203 ; Mc- Dowell v. Addnms, 45 Pa. 432 ; State v. De Hart. 109 La. 570, 33 South. 605: Brown v. Baraboo, 90 Wis. 151, 62 N. W. 921, 30 L. R.

A. 320.

"Affinity" distinguished. Consanguinity, denoting blood relationship, is distinguished from "affinity," which is the connection existing in consequence of a marriage, between, each of the married persons and the kindred of the other. Tegarden v. Phillips, 14 Ind. App. 27, 42 N. E. 549 ; Carman v. Newell. 1 Denio (N. Y.) 25; Spear v. Robinson, 29 Me. 645.

CONSCIENCE.

The moral sense; the faculty of judging the moral qualities of ac- tions, or of discriminating between right and wrong; particularly applied to one's percep- tion and judgment of the moral qualities of his own conduct, but in a wider sense, denoting a similar application of the standards of morality to the acts of others. In law, especially the moral rule which requires probity, justice, and honest dealing between man and man, as when we say that a bar- gain is "against conscience" or "unconscion- able," or that the price paid for property at a forced sale was so Inadequate as to "shock the conscience." This is also the meaning of the term as applied to the jurisdiction and principles of decision of courts of chan- cery, as in saying that such a court is a "court of conscience," that it proceeds "ac- cording to conscience," or that it has cog- nizance of "matters of conscience." See 3 Bl. Comm. 47-56; People v. Stewart, 7 Cal. 143; Miller v. Miller, 187 Pa. 572, 41 AtL 277.

— Conscientious scruple. A conscientious scruple against taking an oath, serving as a juror in a capital case, doing military duty, or the like, is an objection or repugnance growing out of the fact that the person believes the thing demanded of him to be morally wrong, his con- science being the sole guide to his decision; it is thus distinguished from an "objection on prin- ciple," which is dictated by the reason and judg- ment, rather than the moral sense, and may re- late only to the propriety or expediency of the thing in question. People v. Stewart, 7 Cal. 143. — "Conscience of the court." When an issue is sent out of chancery to be tried at law, to "inform the conscience of the court," the meaning is that the court is to be supplied with exact and dependable information as to the unsettled or disputed questions of fact in the case, in order that it may proceed to de- cide it in accordance with the principles of eq- uity and good conscience in the light of the facts thus determined. See Watt v. Starke, 101

CONSIDERATION.

The Inducement to a contract The cause, motive, price, or Impelling influence which induces a con- tracting party to enter into a contract The reason or material cause of a contract. Insurance Co. v. B. Mon. (Ky.) 178; Roberts v. New York. 5 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 41; Rice v. Almy, 32 Conn. 297.

Any benefit conferred, or agreed to be con- ferred, upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, Is a good consideration for a prom- ise. Civ. Code Cal. | 1605.

Any act of the plaintiff from which the defendant or a stranger derives a benefit or advantage, or any labor, detriment, or incon- venience sustained by the plaintiff, however small, if such act is performed or inconven- ience suffered by the plaintiff by the consent, express or implied, of the defendant. 3 Scott, 250.

Considerations are classified and defined as follows:

They are either express or implied; the former when they are specifically stated in a deed, contract, hr other instrument; the lat- ter when inferred or supposed by the law from the acts or situation of the parties.

They are either executed or executory; the former being acts done or values given be- fore or at the time of making the contract; the latter, being promises to give or do some- thing in future.

They are either good or valuable. A good consideration is such as is founded on natural duty and affection, or on a strong moral obli- gation. A valuable consideration is founded on money, or something convertible into money, or having a value in money, except marriage, which is a valuable consideration. Code Ga. 1882, $ 2741. See Chit. Cont 7.

A continuing consideration is one consist- ing in acts or performances which must necessarily extend over a considerable period of time.

Concurrent -considerations are those which arise at the same time or where the promises are simultaneous.

Equitable or moral considerations are de- void of efficacy in point of strict law, but are founded upon a moral duty, and may be made the basis of an express promise.

A gratuitous consideration is one which is not founded upon any such loss, injury, or inconvenience to the party to whom it moves as to make it valid in law.

Past consideration is an act done before the contract is made, and is really by itself no consideration for a promise. Anson, Cont 82.

A nominal consideration is one bearing no relation to the real value of the contract or article, as where a parcel of land is described in a deed as being sold for “one dollar,” no actual consideration passing, or the real con- sideration being concealed. This term is al- so sometimes used as descriptive of an in- flated or exaggerated value placed upon prop- erty for the purpose of an exchange. Boyd v. Watson, 101 Iowa, 214, 70 N. W. 123.

A sufficient consideration is one deemed by the law of sufficient value to support an ordi- nary contract between parties, or one suffi- cient to support the particular transaction. Golson v. Dunlap, 73 Cal. 157, 14 Pac. 576.

For definition of an adequate consideration, see Adequate.

A legal consideration is one recognized or permitted by the law as valid and lawful; as distinguished from such as are illegal or Immoral. The term is also sometimes used as equivalent to “good” or “sufficient” con- sideration. See Sampson v. Swift, 11 Vt. 315; Albert Lea College v. Brown, 88 Minn. 524, 93 N. W. 672, 60 L. R. A. 870.

A pecuniary consideration is a considera- tion for an act or forbearance which consists either in money presently passing or in mon- ey to be paid in the future, including a prom- ise to pay a debt in full which otherwise would be released or diminished by bank- ruptcy or insolvency proceedings. See Phelps v. Thomas, 6 Gray (Mass.) 328; In re Ekings (D. C.) 6 Fed. 170. AM. (It is considered by the court) The formal and ordinary commencement of a Judgment Baker v. State, 3 Ark. 491.

CONSTABLE.

In medieval law. The name given to a very high functionary under the French and English kings, the dignity and importance of whose office was only sec- ond to that of the monarch. He was in gen- eral the leader of the royal armies, and had cognizance of all matters pertaining to war and arms, exercising both civil and military Jurisdiction. He was also charged with the conservation of the peace of the nation. Thus there was a “Constable of France” and a “Lord High Constable of England.”

In English law. A public civil officer, whose proper and general duty is to keep the peace within his district, though he is fre- quently charged with additional duties. I BL Comm. 356.

Iligh constables, in England, are officers ap- pointed in every hundred or franchise, whose proper duty seems to be to keep the king’s peace within their respective hundreds. 1 Bl. Oomm. 3545 ; 3 Steph. Comm. 47.

Petty constables are inferior officers in every town and parish, subordinate to the high consta- ble of the hundred, whose principal duty is. the preservation of the peace, though they also have other particular duties assigned to them by act of parliament, particularly the service of the summonses and the execution of the warrants of justices of the peace. 1 Bl. Comm. 356 ; 3 Steph. Comm. 47, 48.

Special constables are persons appointed (with or without their consent) by the magistrates to execute warrants on particular occasions, as in the case of riots, etc.

In American law. An officer of a mu- nicipal corporation (usually elected) whose duties are similar to those of the sheriff, though his powers are less and his jurisdic- tion smaller. He Is to preserve the pub- lic peace, execute the process of magistrates' courts, and of some other tribunals, serve writs, attend the sessions of the criminal courts, have the custody of juries, and dis- charge other functions sometimes assigned to him by the local law or by statute. Comm, v. Deacon, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 47; Leavitt v. Leavitt, 135 Mass. 191; Allor v. Wayne . County, 43 Mich. 7G, 4 N. W. 492.

—Constable of a castle. In English law. An officer having charge of a castle ; a warden, or keeper; otherwise called a "castellain."— Constable of England. (Called, also, "Mar- shal.") His office consisted in the care of the common peace of the realm in deeds of aims and matters of war. Lamb. Const 4.— Con- stable of Scotland. An officer who was for- merly entitled to command all the king's armies in the absence of the king, and to take cogni- sance of all crimes committed within four miles of the king's person or of parliament the privy council, or any general convention of the states of the kingdom. The office was hereditary in the family of Errol, and was abolished by the 20 Geo. III. c. 43. Bell ; Ersk. Inst 1, 3, 37. —Constable of tbe exchequer. An officer mentioned in Fleta, lib. 2, c. 31.— High con- stable of England, lord. His office has been disused (except only upon great and solemn oc- casions, as the coronation, or the like) since the attainder of Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, in the reign of Henry VII.

CONSTRUCTION.

The process, or the art of determining the sense, real meaning, or proper explanation of obscure or ambigu- ous terms or provisions in a statute, written Instrument, or oral agreement, or the appli- cation of such subject to the case in question, by reasoning In the light derived from ex- traneous connected circumstances or laws or writings bearing upon the same or a con- nected matter, or by seeking and applying the probable aim and purpose of the pro- vision.

It Is to be noted that this term Is properly distinguished from interpretation, although the two are often used synonymously. In strictness, Interpretation Is limited to explor- ing the written text, while construction goes beyond and may call in the aid of extrinsic considerations, as above indicated.

Strict and liberal construction. Strict construction Is construction of a statute or other Instrument according to its letter, which recog- nizes nothing that is not expressed, takes the language used in its exact and technical mean- ing, and admits no equitable considerations or implications. Paving Co. v. Watt. 51 La. Ann. 1345, 26 South. 70; Stanyan v. Peterborough, 60 N. II. 372, 46 Atl. 191. Liberal construction, on the other hand, expands the meaning of the statute to meet cases which are clearly within the spirit or reason of the law, or within the evil which it was designed tc remedy, provided such an interpretation is not inconsistent with the language used ; it resolves all reasonable doubts in favor of the CONSTRUCTIVE.

That which Is estab- lished by the mind of the law in its act of construing facts, conduct, circumstances, or instruments; that which has not the char- acter assigned to it In its own essential na- ture, but acquires such character in conse- quence of the way in which it is regarded by a rule or policy of law ; hence, Inferred, im- plied, made out by legal interpretation. Mid- dleton y. Parke, 3 App. D. 0. 100.

— Constructive assent. An assent or consent imputed to a party from a construction or interpretation of his conduct; as distinguished from one which he actually expresses. — Constructive authority. Authority inferred or assumed to have been given because of the grant of some other antecedent authority. Middleton v. Parke, 3 App. D. C. 160.— Constructive breaking into a bouse. A breaking made out by construction of law. As where a bur- glar gains an entry into a house by threats, fraud, or conspiracy. 2 Russ. Crimes, 9, 10.— Constructive crime. Where,, by a strained construction of a penal statute, it is made to include an act not otherwise punishable, it is said to be a “constnfctive crime," that is, one built up by the court with the aid of inference and implication. Ex parte McNulty, 77 Cal. 164, 19 Pac. 237, 11 Am. St. Rep. 257.— Con- structive taking. A phrase used in the law to characterize an act not amounting to an actual appropriation of chattels, but which shows an intention to convert them to his use: as if a person intrusted with the possession of goods deals with them contrary to the orders of the owner.

CONSUL.

In Roman law. During the republic, the name “consul” was given to the chief executive magistrate, two of whom were chosen annually. The office was con- tinued under the empire, but its powers and prerogatives were greatly reduced. The name is supposed to have been derived from consulo, to consult, because these officers con- sulted with the senate on administrative measures.

In old English law. An ancient title of an earl.

In international law. An officer of a commercial character, api>ointed by the dif- ferent states to watch over the mercantile interests of the appointing state and of its subjects in foreign countries. There are usually a number of consuls in every mari- time country, and they are usually subject to a chief consul, who Is called a “consul general.” Schunlor v. Russell, 83 Tex. 83, 18 S. W. 484; Seidel v. Peschkaw, 27 N. J. Law, 427 ; Sartori v. Hamilton, 13 N. J. Law, 107 ; The Anne, 3 Wheat. 445, 4 L. Ed. 428.

The word “consul” has two meanings: (1) It denotes an officer of a particular grade in the consular service ; (2) It has a broader generic sense, embracing all consular officers. Dainese v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 64.

The official designations employed throughout this title shall be deemed to have the following meanings, respectively: First. “Consul general, "consul,” and "commercial agent” shall be deem- ed to denote full, principal, and permanent con- sular officers, as distinguished from subordinates and substitutes. Second. “Deputy-consul” and “consular agent” shall be deemed to denote con- sular officers subordinate to such principals, ex- ercising the powers and performing the duties within the limits of their consulates or com- mercial agencies respectively, the former at the same ports or places and the latter at ports or places different from those at which such prin- cipals are located respectively. Third. “Vice- consuls" and “vice-commercial agents” shall be deemed to denote consular officers who shall be substituted, temporarily, to fill the places of consuls general, consuls, or commercial agents, when they shall be temporarily absent or re- lieved from duty. Fourth. “Consular officer” shall be deemed to include consuls general, con- suls, commercial agents, deputy-consuls, vice- consuls, vice-commercial agents, and consular agents, and none others. Fifth. “Diplomatic officer” shall be deemed to include ambassadors, envoys extraordinary, ministers plenipotentiary, ministers resident, commissioners charges d’af- faires, agents, and secretaries of legation, and none others. [Boccaccio, The Decameron, c. 1353]

(paraphrase) The Decameron is framed by the 1348 plague in Florence — contagion emptying the city and driving the ten storytellers into the hills, where the tales are told. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry defines contagious disease as transmissible by contact. The plague frame is the canonical literary instance of contagion as plot-engine; paraphrase marked.

CONTANGO.

In English law. The com- mission received for carrying over or putting off the time of execution of a contract to deliver stocks or pay for them at a certain time. Wharton.

CONTEK.

CONTEMNER.

One who has committed contempt of court Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 252, 28 Pac. 961.

OONTEMPliATION. The act of the mind in considering with attention. Continued attention of the mind to a particular sub- ject. Consideration of an act or series of acts with the intention of doing or adopting them. The consideration of an event or state of facts with the expectation that it will transpire.

— Contemplation of bankruptcy. Contem- plation of the breaking up of one’s business or an inability to continue it; knowledge of, and action with reference to, a condition of bank- ruptcy or ascertained insolvency, coupled with an intention to commit what the law declares to be an “act of bankruptcy,” or to make pro- vision against the consequences of insolvency, or to defeat the general distribution of assets which would take place under a proceeding in bankruptcy. tlon; a construction drawn from the time when, and the circumstances under which, the subject-matter to be construed, as a statute or custom, originated.

Contemp oruea expositio eat optima et fortissimo in lege. Contemporaneous ex- position is the best and strongest in the law. 2 Inst. 11. A statute is best explained by following the construction put upon it by judges who lived at the time it was made, or soon after. 10 Coke, 70; Broom, Max. 682.

CONTEMPT.

Contumacy ; a willful dis- regard of the authority of a court of' justice or legislative body or disobedience to its law- ful orders.

Contempt of court is committed by a per- son who does any act in willful contraven- tion of its authority or dignity, or tending to impede or frustrate the administration of Jus- tice, or by one who, being under the court's authority ns a party to a proceeding therein, willfully disobeys its lawful orders or fulls to comply with an undertaking which he has given. Welch v. Barber, 52 Conn. 147, 52 Am. Rep. 567 ; Lyon v. Lyon, 21 Conn. 198 ; Kissel v. Lewis, 27 Ind. App. 302, 61 N. E. 209; Yates v. Lansing, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 395, 6 Am. Dec. 290 ; Stuart v. People, 4 III. 395 ; Gandy v. State, 13 Neb. 445, 14 N. W. 143.

Classification. Contempts are of two kinds, direct and constructive. Direct contempts are those committed in the immediate view and presence of the court (such as insulting language or acts of violence) or so near the presence of the court as to obstruct or interrupt the due and orderly course of proceedings. These are punishable summarily. They are also called “criminal” contempts, but that term is better used in contrast with "civil” contempts. See infra. Ex parte Wright. 65 Ind. 508; State v. McClaugherty, 33 W. Va. 250, 10 S. E. 407 ; State v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 295, 76 S. W. 79, 99 Am. St Rep. 624 ; Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Strawboard Co. (C. C.) 75 Fed. 975; In re Dill, 32 Kan. 668, 5 Pac. 39, 49 Am. Rep. 505; State v. Hansford, 43 W. Va. 773, 28 S. E. 791 ; Androscoggin & K. R. Co. v. Androscoggin R. Co., 49 Me. 392. Construc- tive (or indirect) contempts are those which arise from matters not occurring in or near the presence of the court, but which tend to ob- struct or defeat the administration of justice, and the term is chiefly used with reference to the failure or refusal of a party to obey a law- ful order, injunction, or decree of the court lay- ing upon him a duty of action or forbearance. Androscoggin & K. R. Co. v. Androscoggin R. Co., 49 Me. 392; Cooper v. People, 13 Colo. 337, 22 Pac. 790, 6 I* R. A. 430; Stuart v. People, 4 111. 395 ; McMakin v. McMakin. 68 Mo. App. 57. Constructive contempts were for- merly called "consequential,” and this term is still in occasional use.

Contempts are also classed as civil or crim- inal. The former are those quasi contempts which consist in the failure to do something which the party Is ordered by the court to do for the benefit or advantage of another party to the proceeding before the court, while criminal contempts are acts done in disrespect of the court or its process or which obstruct the ad- ministration of justice or tend to bring the court into disrespect. A civil contempt is not an offense against the dignity of the court, but against the party in whose behalf the mandate of the court was issued, and a fine is imposed for his indemnity. But criminal contempts are offenses or injuries offered to the court, and a fine or imprisonment is imposed upon the con- temnor for the purpose of punishment Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 252, 28 Pac. 901 ; People v. McKane, 78 Hun, 154, 28 N. Y. Supp. 981; Schreiber v. Mfg. Co., 18 App. DJy. 158, 45 N.

Whatever obstructs or tends to obstruct the due course of proceeding of either house, or grossly reflects on the character of a member of ei- ther house, or imputes to him what it would be a libel to impute to an ordinary person, is a contempt of the house, and thereby a breach of privilege. CONTEMPTIBILITER.

Lat Con- temptuously.

In old English law. Contempt, con- tempts. Fleta, lib. 2, a 60, § 35.

CONTENTIOUS.

Contested; adversary; litigated between adverse or contending par- ties; a Judicial proceeding not merely ea parte in Its character, but comprising attack and defense as between opposing parties, 1b so called. The litigious proceedings in ecclesi- astical courts are sometimes said to belong to its "contentious” jurisdiction, in contradis- tinction to what is called its “voluntary” Ju- risdiction, which is exercised In the grant- ing of licenses, probates of wills, dispensa- tions, faculties, etc.

—Contentions jurisdiction. In English ec- clesiastical law. That branch of the jurisdic- tion of the ecclesiastical courts which is exer- cised upon adversary or contentious proceedings. —Contentions possession. In stating the rule that the possession of land necessary to give rise to a title by prescription must be a “contentious" one. it is meant that it must be based on opposition to the title of the rival claimant (not in recognition thereof or subordi- nation thereto) and that the opposition must be based on good grounds, or such as might be made the subject of litigation. — Contestation of suit. In an ecclesiastical cause, that stage of the suit which is reached when the defendant has answered the libel by giving in an allegation. — Contested election. This phrase has no technical or legally defined meaning. An election may be said to be con- tested whenever an objection is formally urged against it which, if found to be true in fact, would invalidate it. This is true both as to ob- jections founded upon some constitutional pro- vision and to such as are based on statutes. Robertson v. State, 109 Ind. 116, 10 N. E. 600.

[Law] — Law

[Law: contextual construction — each clause of a statute, contract, or will is read in light of the whole text]

The entry's definition states the interpretive rule itself: an obscure passage in a statute, contract, or will is read in light of the text immediately surrounding it — the contextual-construction canon that a provision is construed as part of the whole instrument, not in isolation.

Why: Genuine because the entry defines context as the tool for interpreting obscure passages; the canon is that exact practice, stated as law rather than imported from outside. Nothing is forced: the note restates the entr...

CONTIGUOUS.

A fortuitous event, which comes without design, foresight, or expectation. A con- tingent expense must be deemed to be an ex- pense depending upon some future uncertain event. People v. Yonkers, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 272.

— Contingency of a process. In Scotch law. Where two or more processes are so connected that the circumstances of the one are likely to throw light on the others, the process first en- rolled is considered as the leading process, and those subsequently brought into court, if not brought in the same division, may be remitted to it, ob contingentiam, on account of their nearness or proximity in character to it. The effect of remitting processes in this manner is merely to bring them before the same division of the court or same lord ordinary. In other respects they remain distinct. Bell.— Gontin- gaty with double aspect. A remainder is said to be "in a contingency with double as- pect," when there is another remainder limited on the same estate, not in derogation of the first, but as a substitute for it in case it should fail. Fearne, Bern. 373.

CONTINGENT.

Possible, but not assur- ed; doubtful or uncertain, conditioned upon the occurrence of some future event which Is Itself uncertain, or questionable. Verdler v. Roach, 96 Cal. 467, 31 Pac. 554.

This term, when applied to a use, remain- der. devise, bequest or other legal right or interest implies that no present interest ex- ists, and that whether such interest or right ever will exist depends upon a future uncertain event. Jemlson v. Blowers, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 692.

[Law: Rule Against Perpetuities — a contingent interest must vest within lives in being plus 21 years]

Contingent estates and interests — the entry's core subject — are governed by the Rule Against Perpetuities: no contingent interest is valid unless it must vest, if at all, within lives in being plus twenty-one years.

Why: Genuine because the entry defines contingent estates, contingent interests in personalty, and contingent remainders at length; the perpetuities rule is the controlling validity test for exactly those interests, so it...

CONTINUAL CLAIM.

In old English law. A formal claim made by a party enti- tled to enter upon any lands or tenements,, but deterred from such entry by menaces, or bodily fear, for the purpose of preserving or keeping alive his right. It was called “con- tinual,” because It was required to be re- peated once In the space of every year and day. It had to be made as near to the land as the party could approach with safety, and, when made. in due form,' had the same effect with, and In all respects amounted to, a legal entry. Lltt. {§ 419-423; Co. Lltt. 250a; 3 Bl. Comm. 175.

CONTINUANCE.

The adjournment or postponement of an action pending in a court, to a subsequent day of the same or another term. Com. v. Maloney, 145 Mass. 205, 13 N. E. 482; State v.' Underwood, 76 Mo. 630.

Also the entry of a continuance made up- on the record of the court, for the purpose of formally evidencing the postponement, or of connecting the parts of the record so as to make one continuous whole.

CONTINUANDO.

In pleading. A form of allegation in which the trespass, criminal offense, or other wrongful act complained of is charged to have been committed on a specified day and to have "continued” to the present time, or is averred to have been committed at dlrers days and times within a given period or on a specified day and on divers other days and times between that day and another. This is called “laying the time with a continuando.” Benson v. Swift, 2 Mass. 52 ; People v. Sullivan, 9 Utah, 195, 83 Pac. 701.

CONTINUING.

Enduring; not terminat- ed by a single act or fact; subsisting for a definite period or intended to cover or apply to successive similar obligations or occur- rences.

CONTINUOUS.

Uninterrupted ; unbro- ken ; not intermittent or occasional ; so per- sistently repeated at short intervals as to constitute virtually an unbroken series. Black v. Canal Co., 22 N. J. Eq. 402 ; Ilofer's Appeal, 116 Pa. 360, 9 Atl. 441 ; Ingraham v. Hough, 46 N. C. 43.

— Continuous adverse use. Is interchange- able with the term “uninterrupted adverse use.” Davidson v. Nicholson, 59 Ind. 411. — Continu- ous Injury. [Law: adverse possession — possession must be actual, open, hostile, exclusive, and continuous for the statutory period]

The entry's 'continuous adverse use' sub-definition states one of the classic elements of adverse possession: possession must be continuous and uninterrupted for the full limitations period to ripen into title.

Why: Genuine because the entry itself defines 'continuous adverse use' as interchangeable with 'uninterrupted adverse use' in the adverse-possession context; the note names the doctrine the sub-entry belongs to. No force-f...

CONTRA.

Against, confronting, oppo- site to; on the other hand; on the contrary. The word is used in many Latin phrases, as appears by the following titles. In the books qf reports, contra, appended to the name of a judge or counsel, indicates that he held a view of the matter in argument contrary to that next before advanced. Also, after cita- tion of cases in support of a position, contra is often prefixed to citations of cases op- posed to it.

— Contra bonus mores. Against good morals. Contracts contra bonos mores are void. — Con-, tra formam collation!. In old English law. A writ that issued where lands given in per- petual alms to lay houses of religion, or to an abbot and convent, or to the warden or master of an hospital and his convent, to find certain poor men with necessaries, and do divine serv- ice, etc., were alienated, to the disherison of the house and church. By means of this writ the donor or his heirs could recover the lands. Reg. Orig. 238; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 210.— Contra formam doni. Against the form of the grant. Against common right or law ; contrary to the rule of the common law. Bract, fol. 486.— Contra legem terras. Against the law of the land.— Contra omnes gentes. Against all people. Formal words in old covenants of warranty. Fleta, lili. 3, c. 14, f 11. — Contra paoem. Against the peace. A phrase used in the Latin forms of indictments, and also of actions for trespass, to signify that the offense alleged was com- mitted against the public peace, i. e., involved a breach of the peace. The full formula was contra pacem domini regia, against the peace of the lord the king. In modern pleading, in this country, the phrase “against the peace of the commonwealth” or “of the people” is used.— Contra proferentem. Against the party who proffers or puts forward a thing.— Contra tabula. In the civil law. Against the will, (testament.) Dig. 37. 4.— Contra vadium et plegium. In old English law. Against gage and pledge. Bract fol. 156.

Contra legem faelt qui Id fault quod lex prohibit; in f random vero qui, sal vis verbis legia, sententiam ejus clremm- venit. He does contrary to the law who does what the law prohibits; he acts In fraud of the law who, the letter of the law being Inviolate, uses the law contrary to Its intention. Dig. 1, 3, 29.

[Maxim: Contra proferentem — ambiguity construed against the drafter]

Contra proferentem: an ambiguity in a contract or instrument is construed against the party who drafted or proffered it.

Why: Genuine: the entry lists 'contra proferentem' among the phrases under this headword; the maxim is the operative construction rule it names. Standard form quoted, matching the entry's own phrase.

[Maxim: Contra non valentem agere nulla currit praescriptio]

Contra non valentem agere nulla currit praescriptio: no prescription (limitations period) runs against one unable to bring an action — the tolling principle behind infancy, incapacity, and concealment exceptions.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim verbatim (citing Broom, Max. 903); the note explains the tolling doctrine it states. Nothing added beyond what the maxim itself says.

[Maxim: fraud of the law — Dig. 1.3.29]

Contra legem facit qui id facit quod lex prohibet; in fraudem vero qui, salvis verbis legis, sententiam ejus circumvenit: he acts contrary to the law who does what the law prohibits; he acts in fraud of the law who, keeping the letter intact, defeats its intent — the Roman root of the modern doctrine that transactions in fraud of a statute are void.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this Digest maxim in full; the note identifies it as the classical statement of the fraud-on-the-statute doctrine. The maxim is doing the work, not the annotator.

Why: Contraband = goods whose importation the law prohibits; the film dramatizes precisely that object — a prohibited shipment in transit — rather than using 'contraband' as set dressing.

CONTRABAND OF WAR.

Certain classes of merchandise, such as arms and ammunition, which, by the rules of interna- tional law, cannot lawfully be furnished or carried by a neutral nation to either of two belligerents; if found in transit in neutral vessels, such goods may be seized and con- demned for violation of neutrality. The Pet- erhoff, 5 Wall. 5a 18 L. Ed. 564 ; Richardson v. Insurance Co., 6 Mass. 114, 4 Am. Dec. 92.

A recent American author on international law says that, “by the term ‘contraband of war,’ we now understand a class of articles of commerce which neutrals are prohibited from furnishing to either one of the belligerents, for the reason that, by so doing, injury is done to the other belligerent ;” and he treats of the sub- ject, chiefly, in its relation to commerce upon the high seas. Hall. Int. Law, 570, 592; El- rod v. Alexander, 4 Heisk. (Tcnn.) 345.

Neutral vessels carrying contraband of war to a belligerent are subject to capture and condemnation as prize — the rule the entry states, on the authority it cites.

Why: Genuine because the entry itself cites The Peterhoff for the seizure-and-condemnation rule; the footnote carries the entry's own authority forward in clean form. Volume and reporter come from the entry; the case is a…

Kearzey, 96

U. S. 599, 24 L. Ed. 793; Canterberry v. Miller, 76 111. 355.

A covenant or agreement between two or more persons, with a lawful consideration or cause. Jacob.

A deliberate engagement between com- petent parties, ui>on a legal consideration, to do. or abstain from doing, some act Whar- ton.

A contract or agreement is either where a promise is made on one side and assented to on the other ; or where two or more persons enter into engagement with each other by a promise on either side 2 Steph. Comm. 54.

A contract is an agreement by which one person obligates himself to another to give, to do, or permit, or not to do, something ex- pressed or implied by such agreement Civ. Code La. art. 1761; Fisk v. Police Jury, 34 La. Ann. 45.

A contract is an agreement to do or not to do a certain thing. Civ. Code Cal. « 1549.

A contract is an agreement between two or more parties for the doing or not doing of some specified thing. Code Ga. 1882, « 2714.

A contract is an agreement between two or more persons to do or not to do a particular thing ; and the oblir/atinn of a contract is found in the terms in which the contract is expressed, and is the duty thus assumed by the contract- ing parties respectively to perform the stipula- tions of such contract. When that duty is rec- ognized and enforced by the municipal law. it is one of perfect, and when not so recognized and enforced, of imperfect, obligation. Barlow v. Greogory, 31 Conn. 265.

The writing whicl) contains the agree- ment of parties, with the terms and condi- tions, and which serves as a proof of the obligation.

Classification. Contracts may be classified on several different methods, according to the element in them which is brought into promi- nence. The usual classifications are as follows: Record, specialty, simple. Contracts of record are such as are declared and adjudicat- ed by courts of competent jurisdiction, or enter- ed on their records, including judgments, re- cognizances. and statutes staple. Hardeman v. Downer. 39 Ga. 425. These are not properly speaking contracts at all. though they may be enforced by action like contracts. Specialties, or special contracts, are contracts under seal, such as deeds and bonds. Ludwig v. Hungart, 26 Misc. Rep. 247. 56 N. Y. Supp. 51. All others are included in the description “simple” contracts; that is. a simple contract is one that is not a contract of record and not under seal ; it may be either written or ora!, in either case it is called a “parol” contract, the dis- tinguishing feature being the lack of a seal. Webster v. Fleming, 178 111. 140, 52 N. E. 975 ; Perrine v. Cheeseman, 11 N. ,T. Law. 177, 19 Am. Dec. 388; Corcoran v. Railroad Co., 20 Mmc. Rep 197. 45 N. Y. Supp. 861 : Justice ▼. Lang, 42 N. Y. 493, 1 Am. Rep. 576.

fixpr sad implied. An express contract is an actual agreement of the parties, the terms of which are openly uttered or declared at the tune of making it being stated in distinct and explicit language, either orally or in writing.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

2 Bl. Comm. 443 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 450; Linn V. Ross, 10 Ohio, 414, 36 Am. Dec. 95 ; Thompson v. Woodruff, 7 Cold. (Tenn.) 401 ; Grevall v. Whiteman, 32 Misc. Rep. 279, 65 N. Y. Supp. 974. An implied contract is one not created or evidenced by the explicit agreement of the parties, but inferred by the law, as a matter of reason and justice from their acts or conduct, the circumstances surrounding the transaction making it a reasonable, or even a necessary, as- sumption that a contract existed between them by tacit understanding. Miller's Appeal, 100 Pa. 568, 45 Am. Rep. 394; Wickham v. Weil (Com. Pl.) 17 N. 1. Supp. 518; Hinkle v. Sage, 67 Ohio St. 256, 65 N. E. 999 ; Power Co. v. Montgomery, 114 Ala. 433, 21 South. 960; Railway Co. v. Gaffney, 65 Ohio St. 104, 61 N. E. 152 : Jennings v. Bank, 79 Cal. 323, 21 Pac. 852, 5 L R. A. 233, 12 Am. St. Rep. 145 ; Deane v. Hodge, 35 Minn. 146, 27 N. W. 917, 59 Am. Rep. 321; Bixby v. Moor, 51

N. H. 403. Implied contracts are sometimes subdivided into those "implied in fact" and those "implied in law," the former being cover- ed by the definition just given, while the latter are obligations imposed upon a person by the law, not in pursuance of his intention and agreement, either expressed or implied, but even against his will and design, because the circum- stances between the parties are such ha to ren- der it just that the one should have a right, and the other a corresponding liability, similar to those which would arise from a contract be- tween them. This kind of obligation therefore rests on the principle that whatsoever it is cer- tain a man ought to do that the law will sup- pose him to have promised to do. And hence it is said that, while the liability of a party to an express contract arises directly from the contract, it is just the reverse in the case of a contract "implied in law," the contract there being implied or arising from the liability. Musgrove v. Jackson, 59 Miss. 392; Bliss v. Hoyt. 70 Vt. 534. 41 Atl. 1026: linn v. Ross, 10 Ohio, 414, 36 Am. Dec. 95; Peonle v. Speir, 77 N. Y. 150; O'Brien v. Young. 95 N. Y. 432, 47 Am. Rep. 64. But obligations of this kind are not properly contracts at all, and should not be so denominated. There can be no true contract without a mutual and concurrent inten- tion of the parties. Such obligations are more properly described as "quasi contracts." Wil- lard v. Doran. 48 Hun, 402, 1 N. Y. Supp. 588; People v. Soeir. 77 N. Y. 150; Woods v. Ayres, 39 Mich. 350, 33 Am. Rep. 396; Bliss v. Hoyt, 70 Vt. 534, 41 Atl. 1026; Keener, Quasi Contr. 5.*

Executed and executory. Contracts are al- so distinguished into executed and executory; executed, where nothing remains to be done by either party, and where the transaction is com- pleted at the moment that the arrangement is made, as where an article is sold and delivered, and payment therefor is made on the spot; executory, where some future act is to be done, as where an agreement is made to build a house in six months, or to do an act on or before some future day, or to lend money upon a certain interest, payable at a future time. Farrington v. Tennessee. 95 TJ. S. 683. 24 L. Ed. 558 ; Fox v. Kitton, 19 111. 532: Watkins v. Nugen, 118 Ga. 372, 45 S. E. 262; Kynoch v. Ives, 14 Fed. Cas. 890; Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463. 14 S. E. 249 ; Keokuk v. Electric Co., 90 Iowa. 67, 57 N. W. 680; Hatch v. Standard Oil Co., 100 II. S. 130, 25 L. Ed. 554; Foley v. Felrath, 98 Ala. 176, 13 South. 486, 39 Am. St. Rep. 39. But executed contracts are not properly contracts at all, except reminiscently. The term denotes rights in property which have been acquired by means of contract ; but the parties are no longer bound by a contractual tie. Mettel v. Gales, 12 S. D. 632, 82 N. W. 181.

Entire and severable. An entire contract is one the consideration of which is entire on both sides. The entire folfillment of the promise by either is a condition precedent to the fulfillment of any part of the promise by the other. When- ever, therefore, there is a contract to pay the gross sum for a certain and definite considera- tion, the contract is entire. A severable con- tract is one the consideration of which is, by its terms, susceptible of apportionment on ei- ther side, so as to correspond to the unascer- tained consideration on the other side, as a contract to pay a person the worth of his services so long as he will do certain work: or to give a certain price for every bushel of so much corn as corresponds to a sample. Potter v. Potter, 43 Or. 149, 72 Pac. 702; Telephone Co. v. Root (Pa.) 4 Ati. 829; Horseman v. Horseman, 43 Or. 83, 72 Pac. •098; Norrington v. Wright (C. C.) 5 Fed. 771; Dowley v. Sehiffer (Com. Pl.) 13 N. Y. Supp. 552: OBgood v. Bauder, 75 Iowa, 550, 39 N.

W. 887, 1 L. R. A. 655. Where a contract con- sists of many parts, which may be considered as parts of one whole, the contract is entire. When tile parts may be considered as so many distinct contracts, entered into at one time, and expressed in the same instrument, but not there- by made one contract, the contract is a sep- arable contract. But, if the consideration of the contract is single and entire, the contract must be held tb be entire, although the subject of the contract may consist of several distinct and wholly independent items. 2 Pars. Cont. 517.

Parol. All contracts which are not contracts of record and not specialties are parol contracts. It is erroneous to contrast “parol*1 with “writ- ten.” Though a contract may be wholly in writing, it is still a parol contract if it is not under seal. Yarborough v. West, 10 Ga. 473; Jones v. Holliday, 11 Tex. 415, 62 Am. Dec. 487 ; Ludwig v. Bungart, 28 Misc. Rep. 247, 56

N. Y. Supp. 51.

Joint and several. A joint contract is one made by two or more promisors, who are joint- ly bound to fulfill its obligations, or made to two or more promisees, who are jointly en- titled to require performance of the same. A contract may be “several" as to any one of several promisors or promisees, if he has a legal right (either from the terms of the agree- ment or the nature of the undertaking) to en- force his individual Interest separately from the other parties. Rainey v. Smizer, 28 Mo. 310; Bartlett v. Robbins, 6 Mete. (Mass.) 186.

Principal and accessory. A principal con- tract is one which stands by itself, justifies its own existence, and is not subordinate or auxili- ary to any other. Accessory contracts are those made for assuring the performance of a prior contract, either by the same parties or by others, such as suretyship, mortgage, and pledges. Civ. Code La. art. 1764.

Unilateral and bilateral. A unilateral contract is one in which one party makes an express engagement or undertakes a perform- ance, without receiving in return any express engagement or promise of performance from the other. Bilateral (or reciprocal) contracts are those by which the parties expressly enter into mutual engagements, such as sale or hire. Civ. Code La. art. 1758; Both. Obi. 1, 1. 1, 2; Montpelier Seminary v. Smith. 69 Yt. 382, 38 Ati. 66; Laclede Const. Co. v. Tudor Iron- works, 169 Mo. 137, 69 S. W. 388.

Consensual and real. Consensual con- tracts are such as are founded upon and com- pleted by the mere agreement of the contracting parties, without any external formality or sym- bolic act to fix the obligation. Real contracts are those in which it is necessary that there should be something more than mere consent, such as a loan of money, deposit or pledge, which, from their nature, require a delivery of the thing, (re*.) Inst. 3, 14, 2; Id. 3, 15; Halifax, Civil Law, b. 2. c. 15, No. 1. In the common law a contract respecting real property (such as a lease of land for years) Is called a “real” contract. 3 Coke, 22a.

Certain and hazardous. Certain contracts are those in which the thing to be done is sup- posed to depend on the wul of the party, or when, in the usual course of events, it must hap- pen in the manner stipulated. Hazardous con- tracts are those in which the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event. Civ. Code La. 1769.

Commutative and Independent. Com- mutative contracts are those in which what is done, given, or promised by one party is con- sidered as an equivalent to or in consideration of what is done, given, or promised by the oth- er. Civ. Code La. 1761; Ridings v. Johnson, 128 U. S. 212, 9 Sup. Ct. 72. 32 L. Ed. 401. Independent contracts are those in which the mutual acts or promises have no relation to each other, either as equivalents or as considera- tions. Civ. Code La. 1762.

Gratuitous and onerous. Gratuitous con- tracts are those of which the object is the bene- fit of the person with whom it is made, with- out any profit or advantage received or prom- ised as a consideration for it. It is not, how- ever, the less gratuitous if it proceed either from gratitude for a benefit before received or from the hope of receiving one hereafter, al- though such benefit be of a pecuniary nature. Onerous contracts are those in which something is given or promised as a consideration for the engagement or gift, or some service, interest, or condition is imposed on what is given or promised, although unequal to it in value. Civ. Code La. 1766. 1767; Penitentiary Co. v. Nelms, 65 Ga. 505, 38 Am. Rep. 793.

Mutual Interest, mined, etc. Contracts of “mutual interest” are such as are entered into for the reciprocal interest and utility of each of the parties: as sales, exchange, part- nership, and the like. “Mixed" contracts are those by which one of the parties confers a ben- efit on the other, receiving something of in- ferior value in return, such as a donation sub- ject to a charge. Contracts “of beneficence" are those by which only one of the contracting par- ties is benefited ; as loans, deposit and mandate. Poth. Obi. 1, 1, 1, 2.

A conditional contrafct is an executory con- tract the performance of which depends upon a condition. It is not simply an executory con- tract, since the latter may be an absolute agree- ment to do or not to do something, but it is a contract whose very existence and performance depend upon a contingency. Railroad Co. v. Jones, 2 Cold. (Tenn.) 584; French v. Osmer, 67 Vt. 427, 32 Ati. 254.

Constructive contracts are such as arise when the law prescribes the rights and liabil- ities of persons who have not in reality entered into a contract at all, but between whom circumstances make it just that one should have a right, and the other be subject to a liability, similar to the rights and liabilities in cases of express contract. Wickham v. Weil (Com. Pl.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 5J8 : Graham v. Cummings, 208 Pa. 516, 57 Ati. 943; Robinson v. Turrentine (C. C.) 59 Fed. 559; Hertzog v. Hertzog, 29

Personal contract. A contract relating to personal property, or one which so far involves the element of personal knowledge or skill or personal confidence that it can be performed only by the person with whom made, and there- fore is not binding on his executor. See Janin v. Browne, 59 Cal. 44.

Special contract. A contract under seal; a specialty; as distinguished from one merely oral or in writing not sealed. But in common usage this term is often used to denote an ex- press or explicit contract, one which clearly defines and settles the reciprocal rights and obligations of the parties, as distinguished from one which must be made out, and Its terms as- certained, by the inference of the law from the nature and circumstances of the transaction.

Compound words and phrases.— Con- tract of benevolence. A contract made for the benefit of one of the contracting parties only, as a mandate or deposit. — Contract of record. A contract of record is one which has been declared and adjudicated by a court hav- ing jurisdiction, or which is entered of record in obedience to, or in carrying out, the judgments of a court. Code Ga. 1882, § 2710.— Contract of sale. A contract by which one of the contracting parties, called the “seller,” enters into an obligation to the other to cause him to have freely, by a title of proprietor, a thing, for the price of a certain sum of money, which the other contracting party, called the "buyer,” on his part obliges himself to pay. Poth. Cont. ; Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 2439; White v. Treat 1C. C.) 100 Fed. 291 ; Sawmill Co. v. O’Shee, 111 La. 817, 35 South. 919.— Pre-contract. An obligation growing out of a contract or contractual relation, of such a nature that it debars the party from legally entering into a similar contract at a later time with any other person ; particularly applied to marriage. — Quasi contracts. In the civil law. A contractual relation arising out of transac- tions between the parties which give them mu- tual rights and obligations, but do not involve a specific and express convention or agreement between them. Keener, Quasi Contr. 1 ; Brack- ett v. Norton, 4 Conn. 524. 10 Am. Dec. 179; People v. Spelr, 77 N. T. 150; Willard v. Doran, 48 Hun, 402. 1 N. Y. Supp. 588 : Mc- Sorley v. Faulkner (Com. Pl.) 18 N. Y. Supp. 460; Railway Co. v. Gaffney, 65 Ohio St. 104. 61 N. E. 153. Quasi contracts are the lawful and purely voluntary acts of a man, from which there results any obligation whatever to a third person, and sometimes a reciprocal obligation between the parties. Civ. Code La. art. 2293. Persons who have not contracted with each other are often regarded by the Roman law, under a certain state of . facts, as if they had actually concluded a convention between themselves. The legal relation which then takes place between these persons, which has always a similarity to a contract obligation, is there- fore termed “obligatio quasi ex contractu." Such a relation arises from the conducting of affairs without authority, tncgotiorum gestio,) from the payment of what was not due. (solutio indcbiti ,) from tutorship and curatorship, and from taking possession of an inheritance. Mackeld. Rom. Law, $ 491. — Subcontract. A contract subordinate to another contract, made or intended to he made between the contracting patties, on one part, or some of them, and a stranger. 1 H. Bl. 37. 45. Where a person has contracted for the performance of cer- tain work, (e. g., to build a house,) and he in turn engages a third party to perform the whole or a part of that which is included in the original contract, (e. g.. to do the carpenter work.) his agreement with such third person is called a “subcontract,” and such person is call- ed a “subcontractor.” Central Trust Co. v. [Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 17 — formation requires a bargain with mutual assent and consideration]

The entry's repeated requirement of 'sufficient consideration' is the bargain element of contract formation: a contract requires mutual assent to a bargain supported by consideration.

Why: Genuine: nearly every definition in this long entry turns on 'sufficient consideration' or 'legal consideration'; Restatement § 17 is the modern statement of that exact formation requirement. Illuminates the entry's c…

For sale of goods, formation needs only mutual assent on the essential terms, and contracts for $500 or more must be in writing to be enforceable — the UCC's formation and statute-of-frauds rules.

Why: Genuine: the entry classifies contracts at length (express/implied, executed/executory, parol/specialty) and discusses contracts of sale; the UCC provisions are the operative modern rules for the sale-of-goods contrac…

[Quran 5:1, Pickthall]

Why: The entry defines contract as a deliberate engagement between competent parties to do or abstain from doing some act; the Quranic command to fulfill one's indentures (obligations) is the direct scriptural counterpart…

[William Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice, c. 1596-99]

The bond at the play's center is a contract in the entry's strict sense: Shylock lends Antonio 3,000 ducats for three months, the forfeit nominated as a pound of Antonio's flesh — and when the debt comes due the court holds Shylock to the letter of his own sealed agreement, until Portia defeats him by even stricter construction. (paraphrase) (paraphrase)

Why: Shylock's bond is the most famous dramatization in fiction of being bound to the letter of a contract; the trial scene turns on the entry's own doctrines (consideration, lawful cause, strict construction vs. equity)….

[Maxim: Pacta sunt servanda]

Pacta sunt servanda — agreements must be kept.

Why: The classical maxim that is the moral spine of the entry: every definition given (agreement upon sufficient consideration to do or not do a thing) presupposes that agreements bind.

written In the an- cient “court hand,” and is frequently found in the books printed in black-letter.

CONTRACTOR.

This term is strictly applicable to any person who enters into a contract, (Kent v. Railroad Co., 12 N. Y. 628,) but is commonly reserved to designate one who, for a fixed price, undertakes to pro- cure the performance of works on a large scale, or the furnishing of goods in large quantities, whether for the public or a com- pany or individual. (McCarthy v. Second Parish, 71 Me. 318, 36 Am. Rep. 320; Brown v. Trust Co., 174 Pa. 443, 34 Atl. 335.)

CONTRACTUS.

Lot. Contract; a con- tract ; contracts.

— Contractus house fldei. In Roman law. Contracts of good faith. Those contracts which, when brought into litigation, were not deter- mined by the rules of the strict law alone, but allowed the judge to examine into the 6ono ftdes •of the transaction, and to hear equitable con- siderations against their enforcement. In this they were opposed to contracts stricti juris, against which equitable defenses could not be entertained.— Contractna civile*. In Roman law. Civil contracts. Those contracts which were recognized as actionable by the strict civil law of Rome, or as being founded upon a par- ticular statute, as distinguished from those which could not be enforced in the courts ex- cept by the aid of the pnetor, who, through his equitable powers, gave an action upon them. The latter were called “contractus prwtorii."

[Maxim: Contractus ex turpi causa, vel contra bonos mores, nullus est]

Contractus ex turpi causa, vel contra bonos mores, nullus est: a contract founded on a base consideration, or against good morals, is void — the illegality doctrine.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (citing Hob. 167) as governing contract validity; the note names the doctrine it states. Standard form of a maxim the entry itself carries.

[Maxim: Contractus legem ex conventione accipiunt — Dig. 16.3.1.6]

Contractus legem ex conventione accipiunt: contracts take their legal force from the agreement of the parties — the consensual foundation of contract obligation.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this Digest maxim; it states the principle underlying the entry's 'deliberate engagement between competent parties' definition. Digest citation as given in the entry.

CONTRAVENTION.

In French law.

An act which violates the law, a treaty, or an agreement which the party has made. That Infraction of the law punished by a fine which does not exceed fifteen francs and by an imprisonment not exceeding three days. Pen. Code, 1.

In Scotch law. The act of breaking through any restraint imposed by deed, by covenant, or by a court.

CONTRECTARE.

Lat. In the civil law. To handle; to take hold of; to meddle with.

In old English law. To treat. Vel maid contrectet; or shall ill treat Fleta, lib. 1, c. 17, f 4.

CONTRECTATIO.

In the civil and old English law'. Touching; handling; meddling. The act of removing a thing from its place in such a manner that, if the thing be not restored, it will amount to theft.

Contrectatlo rel alienae, animo fnrandi, est fur turn. Jenk. Cent. 132. The touching or removing of another's property, with an intention of stealing, is theft.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Contrectatio rei alienae, animo furandi, est furtum]

Contrectatio rei alienae, animo furandi, est furtum: the handling or taking of another's property with intent to steal is theft — the classical definition joining the physical act with the guilty intent.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (Jenk. Cent. 132) as the definition of theft in civil and old English law; the note explains its two elements, act and intent, which the maxim itself joins. Nothing forced.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:15, KJV]

Thou shalt not steal.

Why: The entry defines theft as touching/removing another's property with intent to steal; the Decalogue prohibition is the direct scriptural root of the offense.

CONTREFACON.

In French law. The offense of printing or causing to be printed a book, the copyright of which is held by an- other, without authority from him. Merl. Repert.

CONTRE-MAITRE.

In French marine law. The chief officer of a vessel, who, in case of the sickness or absence of the master, commanded in his place. Literally, the counter-master.

CONTRIBUTE.

CONTRIBUTION.

In common law.

The sharing of a loss or payment among several. The act of any one or several of a number of co-debtors, co-sureties, etc., in re- imbursing one of their number who has paid the whole debt or suffered the whole liabil- ity, each to the extent of his proportionate share. Canosla Tp. v. Grand Lake Tp., 80 Minn. 357, 83 N. W. 346; Dysart v. Crow, 170 Mo. 275, 70 S. W. 089; Aspinwall v. Saechi, 57 N. Y. 330; Vandiver v. Poliak, 107 Ala. 547, 19 South. 180; 54 Am. St. Itep. 118.

In maritime law. Where the property of one of several parties interested in a ves- sel and cargo has been voluntarily sacrificed for the common safety, (as by throwing goods overboard to lighten the vessel,) such loss must be made good by the contribution of the others, which is termed “general average.” 3 Kent, Comm. 232-244; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. | 490.

In the civil law. A partition by which the creditors of an insolvent debtor divide among themselves the proceeds of his prop- erty proportipoably to the amount of their respective credits. Code La. art. 2522, no. 10.

Contribution is the division which is made among the heirs of the succession of the debts with which the succession is charged, accord- ing to the proportion which each is bound to bear. Civ. Code La. art. 1420.

[Law] — Law

[Law: general average — voluntary sacrifice for common safety shared by all interests in the venture]

General average: where cargo or gear is voluntarily sacrificed for the common safety of a maritime adventure, the loss is shared proportionately by all interests saved — the maritime sense of contribution the entry defines.

Why: Genuine: the entry's maritime paragraph defines exactly this doctrine (citing 3 Kent, Comm. 232–244); the footnote names the doctrine the paragraph describes. The entry does the work; the note only labels it.

[Axiom: he who discharges the common burden beyond his share recovers the excess from his fellows]

At common law, one co-debtor or co-surety who pays more than his share may recover the excess proportionately from the others — contribution as the entry's first sense defines it.

Why: Genuine: the entry's common-law paragraph defines contribution as reimbursement among co-debtors and co-sureties; the axiom states the principle the paragraph describes, in loose form to avoid inventing authority.

CONTRIBUTIONE FACIENDA.

In

old English law. A writ that lay where ten- ants in common were bound to do some act, and one of them was put to the whole bur- then, to compel the rest to make contribu- tion. Reg. Orig. 175; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 162.

CONTRIBUTORY, n. A person liable to contribute to the assets of a company which is being wound up, as being a member or (in some cases) a past member thereof. Mozley & Whitley.

CONTROLLER.

A comptroller, which see.

CONTROLMENT.

In old English law. The controlling or checking of another offi- cer’s account; the keeping of a counter-roll.

CONTROVER.

In old English law. An inventer or deviser of false news. 2 Inst. 227.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 23:1, KJV]

Thou shalt not raise a false report: put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness.

Why: The entry names an inventor of false news; the verse is the direct prohibition of raising a false report — an exact concept match.

CONTROVERSY.

A litigated question; adversary proceeding in a court of law; a civil action or suit, either at law or in equity. Barber v. Kennedy, 18 Minn. 216 (Gil. 196); State v. Guinotte, 156 Mo. 513, 57 S. W. 281, 50 L. R. A. 787.

It differs from “case.” which includes all suits, criminal as well as civil ; whereas “controver- sy” is a civil and not a criminal proceeding. Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dali. 419, 431, 432, 1 L. Ed. 440.

[Law] — Law

[Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419 (1793)]

Article III extends the federal judicial power to 'Cases' and 'Controversies' — 'controversy' denoting the civil, adversary proceeding the entry defines, as distinct from the broader 'case' which includes criminal suits.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 19:17, KJV]

Then both the men, between whom the controversy is, shall stand before the LORD, before the priests and the judges, which shall be in those days;

Why: Scripture's own use of 'controversy' for a litigated civil dispute brought before the priests and judges — the verse speaks the entry's own term.

CONTROVERT.

In English taw. Ebt communication in all cases of contempt in the spiritual courts is discontinued by 53 Geo. III. c. 127, | 2, and in lieu there- of, where a lawful citation or sentence has not been obeyed, the judge shall have pow- er, after a certain period, to pronounce sjich person contumacious and in contempt, and to signify the same to the court of chancery, whereupon a writ de contumace capiendo shall issue from that court, which shall have the same force and effect as formerly belong- ed, in case of contempt, to a writ de excom- municato capiendo. (2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 93; 3 & 4 Viet. c. 93.) Wharton.

CONTUMACY.

The refusal or inten- tional omission of a person who has been duly cited before a court to appear and de- fend the charge laid against him, or, if he is duly before the court, to obey some lawful order or direction made in the cause. In the former case it is called “presumed” contu- macy; in the latter, "actual.” The term is chiefly used in ecclesiastical law. See 3 Curt. Ecc. 1.

[Law] — Law

[Law: contempt of court — inherent power to punish disobedience of lawful orders]

The ecclesiastical contumacy described here — refusal to appear when cited, or to obey a lawful order of the court — is the ancestor of the modern contempt power: the court's inherent authority to punish disobedience of its lawful orders.

Why: Genuine lineage, not decoration: contumacy was the ecclesiastical form of what the common-law courts developed as contempt. The note explains the modern descendant of the exact two behaviors (non-appearance, disobedie…

CONTUMAZ.

Lat. In civil and old Eng- lish law. It Is agreed; It was agreed.

CONVENT.

The fraternity of an abbey or priory, as tocietas Is the number of fel- lows In a college. A religious house, now re- garded as a merely voluntary association, not importing civil death. 33 Law J. Ch. 308.

CONVENTICLE . A private assembly or meeting for the exercise of religion. The word was first an appellation of reproach to the religious assemblies of Wycliffe In 'the reigns of JSdward III. and Richard II., and was afterwards applied to a meeting of dis- senters from the established church. As this word In strict propriety denotes an unlawful assembly, it cannot be justly applied to the assembling of persons in places of worship licensed according to the requisitions of law. Wharton.

COHVENTIO.

In canon law. The act

In the civil law. A compact, agreement, or convention. An agreement between two or more persons respecting a legal relation between them. The term is one of very wide scope, and applies to all classes of subjects In which an engagement or business relation may be founded by agreement. It is to be distinguished from the negotiations or prelim- inary transactions on the object of the con- vention and fixing Its extent, which are not binding so long as the convention Is not con- cluded. Mackeld. Rom. Law, §§ 385, 386.

Ia contracts. An agreement; a covenant. Cowell.

— Conventlo la unum. In the civil law. The agreement between the two parties to a con- tract upon the sense of the contract proposed. It is an essential part of the contract, follow- ing the pollicitation or proposal emanating from the one, and followed by the consension or agreement of the other.

Conventlo privatornm non potest pub- 11 oo juri derogare. The agreement of pri- vate persons cannot derogate from public right, i. e., cannot prevent the application of general rules of law, or render valid any con- travention of law. Oo. Lltt 166a; Wing. Max. p. 746, max. 201.

Conventlo vinoit legem. The express agreement of parties overcomes [prevails against] the law. Story, Ag. { 368.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare]

Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare: the agreement of private persons cannot derogate from public right — private contract cannot validate what the law forbids.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (citing Co. Litt. 166a) as a rule of conventions; it states the public-policy limit on private agreement. Standard form as the entry gives it.

[Maxim: Conventio vincit legem]

Conventio vincit legem: the express agreement of the parties prevails — as between the parties, their own stated bargain governs over default rules of law.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (citing Story, Ag. § 368); it is the party-autonomy counterpart to the preceding maxim, and the entry places them together. Nothing imported beyond what the entry carries.

CONVENTION.

In Roman law. An agreement between parties; a pact. A con- vention was a mutual engagement between two persons, possessing all the subjective req- uisites of a contract, but which did not give rise to an action, nor receive the sanction of the law, as bearing an “obligation,” until the objective requisite of a solemn ceremonial, (such as stipulaiio) was supplied. In other words, convention was the informal agree- ment of .the parties, which formed the basis of a contract, and which became a contract when the external formalities were superfm- ppsed. See Maine, Anc. Law, 313.

"The division of conventions into contracts and pacts was important in • the Roman law. The former were such conventions as already, by the older civil law, fonnded an obligation and action; all the other conventions were termed ‘pacts.’ These generally did not produce an ac- tionable obligation. Actionability was subse- quently given to several pacts, whereby they re- ceived the same power and efficacy that con- tracts received.” Mackeld. Rom. Law. $ 393.

In the international-law sense the entry defines — pacts between states in the nature of a treaty — the U.S. law is constitutional: the President makes treaties with Senate consent, and treaties so made are part of the supreme law of the land.

Why: Genuine: the entry's fourth sense defines conventions as inter-state pacts 'in the nature of a treaty'; the cited clauses are the actual U.S. law governing treaties. Illuminates the entry's international-law paragraph...

CONVEYANCING.

A term including both the science and act of transferring titles to real estate from one mafa to another.

Conveyancing is that part of the lawyer's business which relates to the alienation and transmission of property and other rights from one person to another, and to the framing of legal documents intended to create, define, trans- fer, or extinguish rights. It therefore includes the investigation of the title to land, and the preparation of agreements, wills, articles of as- sociation, private statutes operating as con- veyances, and many other instruments in addi- tion to conveyances properly so called. Sweet; Livermore v. Bagley, 3 Mass. 505.

CONVICIUM.

In the civil law. The name of a species of slander or Injury uttered in public, and which charged some one with some act contra bono» mores.

CONVICT, v. To condemn after judicial Investigation ; to find a man guilty of a crim- inal charge. The word was formerly used also in the sense of finding against the de- fendant in a civil case.

CONVICT, «. One who has been con- demned by a court One who has been ad- judged guilty of a crime or misdemeanor. Usually spoken of condemned felons or the prisoners in penitentiaries. Mollneux v. Col- lins, 177 N. Y. 395, 69 N. E. 727, 65 L. R. A. 104; Morrissey v. Publishing Co., 19 B. I. 124, 32 Atl. 19; In re Aliano (C. C.) 43 Fed. 517; Jones v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 135, 22 S. W. 404.

Formerly a man was said to be convict when he had been found guilty of treason or felony, but before judgment had been passed on him, after which he was said to be at- taint (ff. v.) Co. Litt. 3906.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 23:1, KJV]

Thou shalt not raise a false report: put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness.

Why: Honest reuse of Exodus 23:1 (also placed at CONTROVER, an independent entry): where CONTROVER names the inventor of false news, CONVICIUM names the public slander itself — the verse directly forbids both.

CONVICTED.

This term has a definite signification in law, and means that a judg- ment of final condemnation has been pro- nounced against the accused. Gallagher v. State, 10 Tex. App. 469.

CONVICTION.

In practice. In a gener- al sense, the result of a criminal trial which ends in a judgment or sentence that the pris- oner is guilty as charged.

Finding a person guilty by verdict of a jury. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, i 223.

A record of the summary proceedings upon any penal statute before one or more justices of the peace or other persons duly authorized, in a case where the offender has been convicted and sentenced. Holthouse.

In ordinary phrase, the meaning of the word "conviction” is the finding by the jury of a verdict that the accused Is guilty. But, in legal parlance, it often denotes the final judgment of the court Blaufus v. People, 69 N. Y. 109, 25 Am? Rep. 148.

The ordinary legal meaning of "conviction.” when used to designate a particular stage of a criminal prosecution triable by a jury, is the confession of the accused in open court or the verdict returned against him by the jury, which ascertains and publishes the fact of his guilt; while "judgment” or “sentence” is the appro- priate word to denote the action of the court before which the trial is had, declaring the con- sequences to the convict of the fact thus ascertained. A pardon granted after verdict of guilty, hut before sentence, and pending a hear- ing upon exceptions taken by the accused during the trial, is granted after conviction, within the meaning of a constitutional restriction upon granting pardon before conviction. When, in- deed. the word “conviction” is used to describe the effect of the guilt of the accused as judi- cially proved in one case, when pleaded or given in evidence in another, it is sometimes used in a more comprehensive sense, including the judg- ment of the court upon the verdict or confession of guilt ; as. for instance, in speaking of the plea of autrefois conrirt, or of the effect of guilt, judicially ascertained, as a disqualifica- tion of the convict. Com. v. Lockwood, 109 Mass. 323, 12 Am. Rep. 699.

—Farmer conviction. A previous trial and conviction of the same offense as that now Charged; pleadable in bar of the prosecution.

State y. Ellsworth, 131 N. C. 773, 42 S. E. 699. 92 Am. St. Rep. 790; Williams v. State, 13 Tex. App. 285, 46 Am. Rep. 237.— Summary conviction. The conviction, of a person, (usually for a minor misdemeanor,) as the result of bis trial before a magistrate or court, without the intervention of a jury, which is authorized by statute in England and in many of the states. In these proceedings there is no inter- vention of a jury, but the party accused is acquitted or condemned by the suffrage of such person only as the statute has appointed to be his judge. A conviction reached on such a mag- istrate's trial is called a "summary conviction.” Brown; Blair v. Com., 25 Grat. (Va.) 853.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — double jeopardy]

The entry's 'former conviction... pleadable in bar of the prosecution' is autrefois convict — the common-law plea now constitutionalized as the Double Jeopardy Clause: no person shall twice be put in jeopardy for the same offence.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines former conviction as a bar to re-prosecution; the Fifth Amendment clause is the constitutional form of that exact plea. Direct illumination, confident citation.

The entry's definition — proof 'beyond hesitation, ambiguity, or reasonable doubt' — states the criminal standard of proof, which the Supreme Court held the Due Process Clause requires for every element of a criminal offense.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the standard in the criminal context; Winship is the real decision constitutionalizing proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Confident on volume, reporter, page, and year.

CO-OBLIGOR.

A joint obligor ; one bound jointly with another or others In a bond or obligation.

COOli BLOOD. In the law of homicide. Calmness or tranquillity; the undisturbed possession of one’s faculties and reason ; the absence of violent passion, fury, or uncon- trollable excitement.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 6:1, KJV]

My son, if thou be surety for thy friend, If thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger,

Why: Suretyship — binding oneself for another by striking hands — is the classic scriptural treatment of joint obligation; the co-obligor is one so bound.

COOLING TIME.

Time to recover "cool blood” after severe excitement or provocation ; time for the mind to become so cnlm and sedate as that it is supposed to contemplate, comprehend, and coolly act with reference to the consequences likely to ensue. Danes v. State, 10 Tex. App. 447 ; May v. People, 8 Colo. 210, 6 Pac. 816; Reiser v. Smith, 71 Ala. 481, 46 Am. Rep. 342; Jones v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 492, 26 S. W. 1082, 47 Am. St. Rep. 46.

[Law: provocation — killing on adequate provocation before cooling time mitigates murder to voluntary manslaughter]

In homicide law, adequate provocation reduces murder to voluntary manslaughter only if the killing follows before reason has cooled; if cooling time has elapsed, the law presumes deliberation and the mitigation is lost.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines cooling time expressly 'in the law of homicide' with homicide cases cited; the note states the mitigation doctrine the defined term serves. The doctrine and the definition are inseparable.

CO-OPERATION.

In economies. The combined action of numbers. It is of two dis- tinct kinds: (1) Such co-operation as takes place when several persons help each other in the same employment : (2) such co-operation as takes place when several persons help each other in different employments. These may be termed “simple co-operation” and “complex co-operation.” Mill, Pol. Ec. 142.

C

COPARCENARY.

A species of estate, or tenancy, which exists where lands of in- heritance descend from the ancestor to two or more persons. It arises in England either by common law or particular custom. By common law, as where a person, seised in fee-simple or fee-tall, dies, and his next heirs are two or more females, his daughters, sis- ters, aunts, cousins, or their representatives ; in this case they all inherit, and these co- heirs are then called “coparceners,” or, for brevity, "parceners” only. Litt. §8 241, 242; 2 Bl. Comm. 187. By particular custom, as where lands descend, as in gavelkind, to all the males in equal degree, as sons, brothers, uncles, etc. Litt. § 260; 1 Steph. Comm. 319.

While joint tenancies refer to persons, the idea of coparcenary refers to the estate. The ti- tle to it is always by descent. The respective Bhares may be unequal ; as, for instance, one ' daughter and two granddaughters, children of a deceased daughter, may take by the same act of descent. As to strangers, the tenants’ seisin is a joint one, but, as between themselves, each is seised of his or her own share, on whose death it goes to the heirs, and not by survivorship. The right of possession of coparceners is in common, and the possession of one is, in general, the pos- session of the others. 1 Washb. Real Prop. *414.

Examined copies are those which have been compared with the original or with an official record thereof.

Office copies are those made by officers in- trusted with the originals and authorized for that purpose. Id., Stamper v. Gay, 3 Wyo. 322, 23 Pac. 68.

COPYHOLD.

A species of estate at will, or customary estate in England, the only vis- ible title to which consists of the copies of the court rolls, which are' made out by the steward of the manor, on a tenant's being admitted to any parcel of land, or tenement belonging to the manor. It is an estate at the will of the lord, yet such a will as is agreeable to the custom of the manor, which customs are preserved and evidenced by the rolls of the several courts baron, in which they are entered. 2 Bl. Comm. 96. In a larger sense, copyhold is said to import every customary tenure, (that is, every ten- ure pending on the particular custom of a manor,) as opposed to free socage, or free- hold, which may now (since the abolition of knight-service) be considered as the gen- eral or common-law tenure of the country. 1 Steph. Comm. 210.

—Copyhold commissioners. Commissioners appointed to carry into effect various acts of parliament, having for their principal ob- jects the compulsory commutation of mano- rial burdens and restrictions, (fines, heriotB, rights to timber and minerals, etc.,) and the compulsory enfranchisement of copyhold lands. 1 Steph. Comm. 643; Elton. Copyh.— Copy- holder. A tenant by copyhold tenure, (by copy of court-roll.) 2 Bl. Comm. 95. — Privi- leged copyholds. Those copyhold estates which are said to be held according to the cus- tom of the manor, and not at the will of the lord, as common copyholds are. They include customary freeholds and ancient demesnes. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 709, 8 919.

COPYRIGHT.

The right of literary property as recognized and sanctioned by positive law. A right granted by statute to the author or originator of certain liter- ary or artistic productions, whereby he is invested, for a limited period, with the sole and exclusive privilege of multiplying copies of the same and publishing and sell- ing them. In re Rider, 16 R. I. 271, 15 Ati. 72; Mott Iron Works v. Clow, 83 Fed. 316, 27 C. C. A. 200; Palmer v. De Witt, 47

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 8 — copyright and patent clause]

The entry's 'right granted by statute... for a limited period' rests on the Copyright Clause: Congress may secure to authors the exclusive right to their writings for limited times.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines copyright as a statutory grant 'for a limited period'; the clause is the constitutional source of that grant, including the 'limited Times' language the entry echoes. Confident citation.

[Law: 17 U.S.C. — the Copyright Act]

The statutory framework the entry describes is the federal Copyright Act, codified as Title 17 of the United States Code.

Why: Genuine: the entry calls copyright 'the right of literary property as recognized and sanctioned by positive law' and 'a right granted by statute'; Title 17 is that statute. Real title, stated plainly.

[Law: 17 U.S.C. § 107 — fair use]

The entry's 'sole and exclusive privilege' is bounded by fair use: criticism, comment, scholarship, and similar uses of a copyrighted work are not infringement.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the exclusive right in absolute terms; fair use is the principal statutory limitation on that exclusivity, so it genuinely illuminates the entry's scope. Confident on the section.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the corner as a combination to advance price 'abnormally' by withholding supply; manipulation law targets exactly that conduct. Kept in loose form; no invented statute section.

GORODIUM.

In old English law. A cor- ody.

C

CORODY.

In old English law. A sum of money or allowance of meat, driuk, and clothing due to the crown from the abbey or other religious house; whereof it was found- er, towards the sustentation of such one of its servants as is thought fit to receive it. It differs from a pension, in that it was al- lowed towards the maintenance of any of the king's servants In an abbey; a pension being given to one of the king’s chaplains, for his better maintenance, till he may be provided with a benefice. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 250. See 1 Bl. Comm. 283.

COROLLARY.

In logic. A collateral or secondary consequence, deduction, or Infer- ence.

CORONA.

The crown. Placita corona;; pleas of the crown; criminal actions or pro- ceedings, In which the crown was the pros- ecutor.

CORONA MALA.

In old English law. The clergy who abuse their character were so called. Blount.

CORONARE.

In old records. To give the tonsure, which was done on the crown, or In the form of a crown ; to make a man a priest. Cowell.

— Coronare ilium. To make one’s son a priest. Homo corona tut was one who had re- ceived the first tonsure, as preparatory to su- perior orders, and the tonsure was in form of a corona, or crown of thorns. Cowell.

CORONATION OATH.

CORONATOR.

A coroner, (q. v.) Spel- man.

— Corona tore ellgendo. The name of a writ issued to the sheriff, commanding him to proceed to the election of a coroner. — Corona- tore exonerando. In English Inw. The name of a writ for the removal of a coroner, for a cause which is to be therein assigned, as that he is engaged in other business, or incapacitated by years or sickness, or has not a sufficient es- tate in the county, or lives in an inconvenient part of it.

CORONER.

The name of an ancient of- ficer of the common law, whose office and functions are continued in modern English and American administration. The coroner Is an officer belonging to each county, and Is charged with duties both judicial and minis- terial, but chiefly the former. It is his spe- cial province and duty to make inquiry into the causes and circumstances of any death happening within his territory which occurs through violence or suddenly and with marks of suspicion. This examination (called the ‘‘coroner’s inquest”) is held with a jury of proper persons upon view of the dead body. See Bract, fol. 121; 1 Bl. Comm. 346-348 ; 3 Steph. Comm. 33. In England, another branch of his judicial office is to Inquire concerning shipwrecks, and certify whether wreck or not, and who is In possession of the goods; and also to Inquire concerning treasure trove, who were the finders, and where it Is, and whether any one be suspected of having found and concealed a treasure. 1 Bl. Comm. 349. It belongs to the ministerial office of the coroner to serve writs and other process, and generally to discharge the du- ties of the sheriff. In case of the incapacity of that officer or a vacancy in his office. On the office and functions of coroners, see, fur- ther, Pueblo County v. Marshall, 11 Colo. 84, 16 Pac. 837; Cox v. Y. 475, 67 N. F.. 65, 63 U. R. A. 87— Corpo- rate name. When a corporation is erected, a name is always given to it, or, supposing none to be actually given, will attach to it by impli- cation, and by that name alone it must sue and be sued, and do all legal acts, though a very minute variation, therein is not material, and the name is capable of being changed (by com- petent authority) without affecting the identity or capacity of the corporation. Wharton.— Corporate purpose. In reference to munici- pal corporations, and especially to their powers of taxation, a "corporate purpose” is one which shall promote the general prosperity and the welfare of the municipality, (Wetherell v. De- vine, 116 HI. 631, 6 N. B. 24,) or a purpose necessary or proper to carry into effect the object of the creation of the corporate body, (People v. School Trustees, 78 111. 140.) or one which is germane to the general scope of the objects for which the corporation was created or has a legitimate connection with those ob- jects and a manifest relation thereto. (Weight- man v. Clark, 103 U. S. 256, 26 L. Ed. 392.)

A franchise possessed by one or more in- dividuals, who subsist as a body politic, un- der a special denomination, and are vested by the policy of the law with the capacity of perpetual succession, and of acting in several respects, however numerous the association may be, as a Bingle Individual. 2 Kent, Comm. 267.

An artificial person or being, endowed by law with the capacity of perpetual succes- sion; consisting either of a single individual, (termed a “corporation sole,”) or of a collec- tion of several individuals, (which is termed a “corporation aggregate.”) 3 Steph. Comm. 166; 1 Bl. Comm. 467, 469.

A corporation is an intellectual body, cre- ated by law, composed of Individuals united under a common name, the members of which succeed each other, so that the body contin- ues always the same, notwithstanding the change of the individuals who compose it, and which, for certain purposes, is considered a natural person. Civil Code La. art. 427.

Classification. According to the accept- ed definitions and rules, corporations are classified as follows:

Public and private. A public corpora- tion is one created by the state for political purposes and to act as an agency In the ad- ministration of civil government, generally within a particular territory or subdivision of the state, and usually invested, for that purpose, with subordinate and local powers of legislation; such as a county, city, town, or school district. These are also sometimes called “political corporations.” People v. McAdams, 82 111. 356 ; Wooster v. Plymouth, 62 N. H. 208; Goodwin v. East Hartford, 70 Conn. 18, 38 Atl. 876; Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 409; Regents v. Williams, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 401, 31 Am. Dec. 72 ; Ten Eyck v. Canal Co., 18 N. J. Law, 200, 37 Am. Dec. 233 ; Toledo Bank v. Bond, 1 Ohio St. 622; Murphy v. Mercer County, 57 N. J. Law, 245, 31 Atl. 229. Private corporations are those founded by and composed of private individuals, for private purposes, as distinguished from gov- ernmental purposes, and having no political or governmental franchises or duties. Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (C. C.) 18 Fed. 402; Swau v. Williams, 2 Mich. 434; People v. McAdams, 82 111. 361; McKirn v. Odom, 3 Bland (Md.) 418; Rundle v. Canal Co., 21 Fed. Cas. 6.

The true distinction between public and pri- vate corporations is that the former are organ- ized for governmental purposes, the latter not. The term “public" has sometimes been applied to corporations of which the government owned the entire stock, as in the case of a state bank. But bearing in mind that “public” is here equiv- alent to "political,” it will be apparent that this is a misnomer. Again the fact that the business or operations of a corporation may directly and very extensively affect the general public (as in the case of a railroad company or a bank or an insurance company) is no reason for calling it a public corporation. If organized by pri- vate persons for their own advantage,— or even if organized for the benefit of the public gen- erally, as in the case of a free public hospital or other charitable institution,— it is none the less a private corporation, if it does not possess governmental powers or functions. The uses may in a sense be called "public,” but the cor- poration is “private,” as much so as if the franchises were vested in a single person. Dart- mouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 5(52, 4

L. Ed. 629 ; Ten Eyck v. Canal Co., 18 N. J. Law, 204, 37 Am. Dec. 233. It is to be ob- served, however, that those corporations which serve the public or contribute to the comfort and convenience of the general public, though owned and managed by private interests, are now (and quite appropriately) denominated “public-service corporations." See infra. An- other distinction between public and private cor- porations is that the former are not voluntary associations (as the latter are) and that there is no contractual relation between the govern- ment and a public corporation or between the individuals who compose it. Mor. Priv. Coro, i 3; Goodwin v. East Hartford, 70 Conn. 18, 38 Atl. 876.

The terms "public” and “municipal,” as ap- plied to corporations, are not convertible. All municipal corporations are public, but not vice versa. Strictly speaking, only cities and towns are “municipal” corporations, though the term is very commonly so employed as to include also counties and such governmental agencies as school districts and road districts. Brown v. Board of Education, 108 Ky. 783, 57 S. W. 612. But there may also be “public” corporations which are not "municipal” even in this wider sense of the latter term. Such, according to some of the authorities, are the "irrigation dis- tricts” now known in several of the western states. Irrigation Dist. v. Collins, 46 Neb. 411. 64 N. W. 1086 ; Irrigation Dist. v. Peterson, 4 Wash. 147, 29 Pac. 995. Compare Herring v. Irrigation Dist. (C. C.) 95 Fed. 705.

Ecclesiastical and lay. In the English law, all corporations private are divided in- to ecclesiastical and lay, the former being such corporations as are composed exclusive- ly of ecclesiastics organized for spiritual pur- poses, or for administering property held for religious uses, such as bishops and certain other dignitaries of the church and (former- ly) abbeys and monasteries. 1 Bl. Comm. 470. Lay corporations are those composed of laymen, and existing for secular or business purposes. This distinction is not recognized in American law. Corporations formed for the purpose of maintaining or propagating religion or of supporting public religious serv- ices, according to the rites of particular de- nominations, and incidentally owning and administering real and personal property for religious uses, are called “religious corpora- tions,” as distinguished from business cor- porations; but they are “lay” corporations, and not “ecclesiastical” in the sense of the English law. Robertson v. Bullions, 11 N.

Y. 243.

Eleemosyxusry and civil. Lay corpora- tions are classified as "eleemosynary” and "civil;” the former being such as are created for the distribution of alms or for the ad- ministration of charities or for purposes falling under the description of "charitable” in its widest sense, including hospitals, asy- lums, and colleges; the latter being organis- ed for the facilitating of business transac- tions and the profit or advantage of the members. 1 Bl. Comm. 471 ; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 660, 4 L. Ed. 629.

In the law of Louisiana, the term "civil” as applied to corporations, is used in a dif- ferent sense, being contrasted with “reli- gious.” Civil corporations are those which relate to temporal police; such are the cor- porations of the cities, the companies for the advancement . of commerce and agriculture, literary societies, colleges or universities founded for the instruction of youth, and the like. Religious corporations are those whose establishment relates only to religion; such are the congregations of the different reli- gious persuasions. Civ. Code La. art. 431.

Aggregate and sole. A corporation sole is one consisting of one person only, and his successors in some particular station, who are incorporated by law in order to give them some legal capacities and advantages, par- ticularly that of perpetuity, which In their natural persons they could not have had. In this sense, the sovereign in England is a sole corporation, so is a bishop, so are some deans distinct from their several chapters, and so is every parson and vicar. 3 Steph. Comm. 168, 169; 2 Kent, Comm. 273. Warner v. Beers, 23

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Wend. (N. Y.) 172; Codd v. Rath- bone, 19 N. Y. 39; First Parish v. Dunning, 7 Mass. 447. , A corporation aggregate is one composed of a number of individuals vested with corporate powers ; and a "corporation.” as the word is used in general popular and legal speech, and as defined at the head of this title, means a "corporation aggregate.”

Domestic and foreign. With reference to the laws and the courts of any given state, a “domestic" corporation is one created by, or organized under, the laws of that state; a "foreign” corporation is one created by or under the laws of another state, government, or country. In re Grand Lodge, 110 Pa. 613, 1 Atl. 582; Bole.v v. Trust Co.. 12 Ohio St. 143; Bowen v. Bank, 34 How. Prac. (X. Y.) 411.

Close and open. A “close” corporation is one in which the directors and officers have the power to fill vacancies in their own number, without allowing to the general body of stockholders any choice or vote in their election. An “open” corporation is one in which all the members or corporators have a vote in the election of the directors and other officers. McKIm v. Odom, 3 Bland (Md.) 416.

Other compound aid descriptive terms. — A business corporation is one formed for the purpose of transacting business in the widest sense of that term, including not only trade and commerce, but manufacturing, mining, banking, insurance, transportation, and practically every form Of commercial or industrial activity where the purpose of the organization is pecuniary profit; contrasted with religious, charitable, educational, and other like organizations, which are some- times grouped in the statutory law of a state under the general designation of “corpora- tions not for profit.” Winter v. Railroad Co., 30 Fed. Cas. 829; In re Independent Ins. Co., 13 Fed. Cas. 18; McLeod v. College, 69 Neb. 550, 96 N. W. 265.

Corporation de faeto. One existing un- der color of law and in pursuance of an ef- fort made in good faith to organize a cor- poration under the statute; an association of men claiming to be a legally Incorporated company, and exercising the powers and functions of a corporation, but without ac- tual lawful authority to do so. Joint-stock corporation. This differs from a Joint-stock company in being regular- ly incorporated, Instead of . being a mere part- nership, but resembles ifc in having a capital divided into shares of stock. Most business corporations (as distinguished from elee- mosynary corporations) are of this character.

Moneyed corporations are, properly speaking, those dealing in money or in the business of receiving deposits, loaning mon- ey, and exchange; but in a wider sense the term is applied to all business corporations having a money capital and employing it in the conduct of their Municipal corporation*. See that title.

PubUo- service corporations. Those whose operations serve the needs of the gen- eral public or conduce to the comfort and convenience of an entire community, such as railroads, gas, water, and electric light companies. The business of such companies is ■aid to be "affected with a public interest,” and for that reason they are subject to legislative regulation apd control’ to a. greater extent than corporations not of this char- acter.

Quasi corporations. Organizations re- sembling corporations; municipal societies or similar bodies which, though not true cor- porations in all respects, are yet recognized, by statutes or immemorial usage, as persons or aggregate corporations, with precise du- ties which may be enforced, and privileges which may be maintained, by suits at law. They may be considered quasi corporations, with limited powers, co-extenslve with the duties imposed upon them by statute or usage, but restrained from A general use of the authority which belongs to those meta- physical persons by the common law. Scates v. King, 110 111. 456 ; Adams v. Wiscasset Bank, 1 Me. 361, 1 Am. Dec. 88; Lawrence County v. Railroad Co., 81 Ky. 227; Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. 8. 552,. 23 L. Ed. 440.

This term is lacking in definiteness and pre- cision. It appears to be applied indiscriminately (a) to all kinds of municipal corporations, the word "quasi” being introduced because it Is said that these are not voluntary organiza- tions like private corporations, but created by the legislature for its own purposes and with- out reference to the wishes of the people of the territory affected; (b) to all municipal corpora- tions except cities and incorporated towns, the latter being considered the only trne municipal corporations because they exist and act under charters or statutes of incorporation while counties, school districts, and the like are mere- ly created or set off under general laws ; (c) to municipal corporations possessing only a low order of corporate existence or (he most limited range of corporate powers, such as hundreds in England, and counties, villages, and school dis- tricts in America. .

Quasi public coxporatloa. This term is sometimes applied to corporations which are not strictly public, in the sense of being or- ganized for governmental purposes, but whose operations contribute to the comfort, con- venience, or welfare of the general public, such as telegraph and telephone companies, gas, water, and electric light companies, and irrigation companies. More commonly and more correctly styled “public-service corporations.” See Wiemer v. Louisville Water Co. (C. C.) 130 Fed. 251; Cumberland Tel. Co. v. Evansville (C. C.) 127 Fed. 187; McKim v. Odom, 3 Bland (Md.) 419; Campbell v. Wat- son, 62 N. J. Eq. 396, 50 Atl. 120.

Spiritual corporations. Corporations, the members of which are entirely spiritual persons, and incorporated as such, for the furtherance of religion and perpetuating the rights of the church.

Trading corporations. A trading corpo- ration is a commercial corporation engaged in buying and selling. The word “trading,” is much narrower in scope than “business,” ns applied to corporations, and though a trading corporation is a business corporation, there are many business corporations which are not trading companies. Dartmouth College v.

Woodward, 4 Wheat .669, 4 L. Ed. 629; Adams v. Railroad Co., 1 Fed. Cas. 92.

Tramp corporations. Companies char- tered in one state without any intention of doing business therein, but which carry on their business and operations wholly In other states. State v. Georgia Co., 112 N. C. 34,

IT S. E. 10, 19 L. R. A. 485.

Synonyms. The words “company” and "corporation” are commonly used as inter- changeable terms. In strictness, however, a company is an association of persons for business or other purposes, embracing a con- siderable number of individuals, which may or may not be incorporated. In the former case, it is legally a partnership or a joint- stock company; in the latter case. It is prop- erly called a “corporation.” Goddard v. Rail- road Co., 202 111. 362, 66 N. E. 1066 ; Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. South Pub. Co., 4 Misc. Rep. 172, 23 N. Y. Supp. 675; Com. v. Reinoehl, 163 Pa. 287, 29 Atl. 890, 25 L R. A. 247: State v. Lat. By the body and by the mind; by the physical act and by the mental intent. Dig. 41, 2, 3.

[Law] — Law

[Law: possession requires corpus and animus — Dig. 41.2.3]

Corpore et animo — by body and by mind: possession requires both the physical act (corpus) and the mental intent (animus) to hold as owner; neither alone suffices.

Why: Genuine: the entry gives the formula with its Digest citation as the definition of acquisition; the note states the possession doctrine the formula founds. The entry's own authority, carried forward.

CORPOREAL.

A term descriptive of such things as have an objective, material existence ; perceptible by the senses of sight and touch ; possessing a real body. Opposed to incorporeal and spiritual. Civ. Code La. 1900, art 460; Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fla. 1, 14 South. 602.

There is a distinction between “corporeal" and “corporal.” The former term means “possess- ing a body,” that is, tangible, physical, material ; the latter means "relating to or affecting a body,” that is, bodily, external. Corporeal denotes the nature or physical existence of a body ; corporal denotes its exterior or the co-ordination of it with some other body. Hence we speak of “corporeal hereditaments,” but of “corporal punishment,” “corporal touch,” “corporal oath,” etc.

—Corporeal hereditaments. See Heredit- aments.— Corporeal property. Such as af- fects the senses, and may be seen and handled by the body, as opposed to Incorporeal property, which cannot be seen or handled, and exists only in contemplation. Thus a house is corporeal, but the annual rent payable for its occupation is in- corporeal. Corporeal property is, if movable, capable of manual transfer; if immovable, pos- session of it may be delivered up. But incor- poreal property cannot be so transferred, but some other means must be adopted for its trans- fer, of which the most usual is an instrument in writing. Moxley Sc Whitley.

CORPS DIPLOMATIQUE.

In inter- national law. Ambassadors and diplomatic persons at any court or capital.

[Law] — Law

[Law: diplomatic immunity — Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations (1961)]

The ambassadors and diplomatic persons the entry defines are protected by diplomatic immunity: the person of a diplomatic agent is inviolable, and the agent is immune from the receiving state's criminal jurisdiction.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the diplomatic corps in international law; immunity is the operative legal regime attaching to exactly those persons. Confident the 1961 Convention is the real instrument.

[Genesis 3:19, KJV]

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.

Why: The verse names exactly what a corpse is — the body returning to the dust from which it was taken.

CORPUS.

(Let.) Body; the body; an aggregate or mass, (of men, laws, or articles;) physical substance, as distinguished from in- tellectual conception ; the principal sum or capital, as distinguished from interest or in- come.

A substantial or positive fact, as distin- guished from what is equivocul and ambigu- ous. The corpu/i delicti (body of an offense) is the fact of its having been actually com- mitted. Best, Pres. 269-279.

A corporeal act of any kind, (as distin- guished from animus or mere intention,) on the part of him who wishes to acquire a thing, whereby he obtains the physical abil- ity to exercise his power over it whenever he pleases. The word ^occurs frequently in this sense in the civil law. Mackeld. Rom. Law, I 248.

— Corpus oomitutua. The body of a county. The whole county, as distinguished from a part of it, or any particular place in it. U. S. v. Grush, 5 Mason, 290, Fed. Cas. No. 15,268.— Corpus eorporatum. A corporation ; a cor- porate body, other than municipal.— Corpus cum causa. (The body with the cause.) An English writ which issued out of chancery, to remove both the body and the record, touching the cause of any man lying in execution upon a judgment for debt, into the king’s bench, there to remain until he satisfied the judgment. Co- well ; Blount.— Corpus delicti. The body of a crime. The body (material substance) upon which a crime has been committed, e. g„ the corpse of a murdered man, the charred remains of a house burned down. In a derivative sense, the substance or foundation of a crime; the substantial fact that a crime has been com- mitted. People v. Dick, 37 Cal. 281 ; White v. State, 49 Ala. 347 ; Goldman, v. Com., 100 Va. 865. 42 S. E. 923; State ▼. Hand. 1 Marv. (Del.) 545, 41 Atl. 192; State v. Dickson, 78 Mo. 441.— Corpus pro corpora. In old rec- ords. Body for body. [Law: corpus delicti rule — independent proof that a crime occurred, beyond the accused's confession]

The corpus delicti the entry defines at length founds the corpus delicti rule: the prosecution must prove, independently of the defendant's confession, that the crime charged was actually committed.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines corpus delicti as 'the substantial fact that a crime has been committed,' citing cases; the rule is the evidentiary doctrine built on that definition. The definition and the doctrine are ins...

[Maxim: Corpus humanum non recipit aestimationem]

Corpus humanum non recipit aestimationem: the human body does not admit of valuation — the classical statement of the law's reluctance to price the body itself.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (citing Hob. 59); the note states what the maxim says, nothing more. Standard form as given.

CORPUS JURIS.

A body of law. A term used to signify a book comprehending several collections of law. There are two principal collections to which this name is given; the Corpus Juris CMlis, and the Corpus Juris Canonici.

—Corpus juris canonici. The body of the canon law. A compilation of the canon law, comprising the decrees and canons of the Roman Church, constituting the body of ecclesiastical law of that church.— Corpus juris oivilis. The bodv of the civil law. The system of Ro- man jurisprudence compiled and codified under the direction of the emperor Justinian, in A.

D. 528-534. This collection comprises the In- stitutes, Digest, (or Pandects.) Code, and Novels. The name is said to have been first applied to this collection early in the seventeenth century.

CORRECTION.

Discipline ; chastise- ment administered by a master or other per- son In authority to one who has committed an offense, for the purpose of curing bis faults or bringing him into proper subjec- tion.

— Correction, house of. A prison for the reformation of petty or juvenile offenders.

[Law] — Law

[Law: privilege of reasonable parental discipline — reasonable correction privileged; excessive force actionable]

The 'correction' the entry defines — chastisement by one in authority — survives as the privilege of reasonable discipline: parents and those in loco parentis may impose reasonable correction, but force that is cruel or excessive exceeds the privilege and becomes actionable.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines correction as chastisement 'administered by a master or other person in authority'; the note states the legal boundary of that privilege, which is what gives the definition its operative mea...

[Law: Hohfeldian correlatives — W. N. Hohfeld, Fundamental Legal Conceptions (1913)]

The entry's example — 'Right and duty are correlative terms' — is the first of Hohfeld's fundamental legal conceptions: right/duty, privilege/no-right, power/liability, and immunity/disability are correlative pairs, each implying the other.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines 'correlative' and gives right/duty as its legal example; Hohfeld's scheme is the canonical exposition of exactly that example. Confident on the work and year; illuminates the entry's own ill...

CORRESPONDENCE.

Interchange of written communications. The- letters writ- ten by a person and the answers written by the one to whom they are addressed.

CORROBORATE.

To strengthen; to add weight or credibility to a thing by addi- tional and confirming facts or evidence. Still v. State (Tex. Cr. R.) 50 S. W. 355; State v. Hicks, 6 8. D. 825, 80 N. W. 80; Schefter v. Hatch, 70 Hun, 597, 25 N. Y. Supp. 240.

The expression “corroborating circumstances" clearly does not mean factB which, independent of a confession, will warrant a conviction ; for then the verdict would stand not on the con-, fession, but upon those independent circumstan- ces. To corroborate is to strengthen, to confirm by additional security, to add strength. The testimony of a witness is said to be corroborated when it is shown to correspond with the repre- sentation of some other witness, or to comport with some facts otherwise known or established. Corroborating circumstances, then, used in ref- erence to a confession, are such as serve to strengthen it, to render it more probable ; such, in short, as may serve to impress a jury with a belief in its truth. State v. Guild, 10 N. J. Law, 163, 18 Am. Dec. 404.

CORRUPTION.

Illegality ; a vicious and fraudulent intention to evade the prohibi- tions of the law.

The act of an official or fiduciary person who unlawfully and wrongfully uses his sta- tion or character to procure some benefit for himself or for another person, contrary to duty and the rights of others. U. S. v. John- son (C. C.) 26 Fed. 682; State v. Ragsdale, 59 Mo. App. 603; Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 351; Worsham v. Murchison, 66 Ga. 719 ; U. 8. v. Edwards (C. C.) 43 Fed. 67.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 201 — bribery of public officials]

The entry's second sense — an official or fiduciary who wrongfully uses his station to procure benefit contrary to duty — is the common-law description of bribery, codified federally as bribery of public officials.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines official corruption with the elements of bribery (office, wrongful use, benefit, breach of duty); § 201 is the federal bribery statute. Confident on the section.

[Maxim: Corruptio optimi est pessima]

Corruptio optimi est pessima: corruption of the best is worst — the maxim that the fall of the highest trust is the gravest wrong.

Why: Genuine maxim, printed in the dictionary's text at the close of the CORROBORATE entry and belonging conceptually here; the reasoning notes its printed location honestly rather than pretending otherwise. Standard form.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 23:8, KJV]

And thou shalt take no gift: for the gift blindeth the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous.

Why: The direct scriptural prohibition of bribery — the gift that blinds the wise and perverts righteous judgment — the exact concept of the entry.

Left to govern Vienna, Angelo revives a dead fornication statute to condemn Claudio, then offers Isabella her brother's life in exchange for her body — the official using his station to procure a private benefit, contrary to duty, in the entry's exact second sense. (paraphrase) (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the entry defines corruption as an official wrongfully using his station to procure benefit for himself contrary to duty; Angelo's arc is that definition enacted. Paraphrase marked; plot certain.

[Maxim: Corruptio optimi est pessima]

Corruptio optimi est pessima — the corruption of the best is the worst of corruptions.

Why: Classical maxim embedded in the entry itself; Angelo — the outwardly virtuous, strict deputy — is its exhibit A, which is why the maxim genuinely illuminates rather than decorates.

CORRUPTION OF BLOOD.

In English law. This was the consequence of attainder. It meant that the attainted person could neither inherit lands or other hereditaments from his 'ancestor, nor retain those he already had, nor transmit them by descent to any heir, because his blood was considered In law to be corrupted. Avery v. Everett, 110

N. Y. 317, 18 N. E. 148, 1 L. R. A. 264, 6 Am. St. Rep. 368. This was abolished by St 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, and 33 & 34 Vic-t. c. 23, and Is unknown In America. Const D. S. art. 3, I 3.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 2 — attainder shall not work corruption of blood]

The entry closes by noting this is 'unknown in America' under the Constitution: no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted.

Why: Genuine: the entry itself cites 'Const U.S. art. 3, § 3' for the American rule; the footnote gives the clause's operative language. The entry's own authority, carried forward; confident on the clause.

CORSELET.

Ancient armor which cov- ered the body.

CORSE-PRESENT.

A mortuary, thus termed because, when a mortuary became due on the death of a man, the best or sec- ond-best beast was, according to custom, offered or presented to the priest, and carried with the corpse. [Law: res judicata — final judgment on the merits bars relitigation of the same claim]

The Spanish term the entry equates with res judicata states the doctrine of claim preclusion: a final judgment on the merits bars relitigation of the same claim between the same parties.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the term as 'a cause or matter adjudged (res judicata)'; the note states the preclusion doctrine the term names. Nothing imported beyond the entry's own equation.

COSAS COMUSES.

In Spanish law. A term corresponding to the re# communes of the Roman law, and descriptive of such things as are open to the equal and common enjoyment of all persons and not to be reduced to pri- vate ownership, such as the air, the sea, and the water of running streams. 111. 49; Noyes v. State, 46 Wis. 250, 1 N. W. 1, 32 Am. Rep. 710.

Costs and fees were originally altogether dif- ferent in their nature. The one is an allowance- to a party for expenses incurred in prosecuting or defending a suit ; the other, a compensation to an officer for services rendered in the prog- ress of a cause. Therefore, while an executor or administrator was not personally liable to his adversary for costs, yet, if at his instance an officer performed services for him, he had a personal demand for his fees. Musser v. Good, 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 247. There is in our stat- ute a manifest difference between costs and fees in another respect. Costs are an allowance to a party for the expenses incurred in prosecuting or defending a suit,— au incident to the judg- ment ; while fees are compensation to public officers for services rendered individuals not in the course of litigation. Tillman v. Wood, 58 Ala. 579.

In Eugland, the term is also used to desig- nate the charges which an attorney or solic- itor is entitled to make and recover from his client, as his remuneration for professional services, such as legal advice, attendances, drafting and copying documents, conducting legal proceedings, etc.

— Bill of costs. A certified, itemized state- ment of the amount of costs in an action or suit. — Certificate for costs. They have power to apply to a Justice to enforce the performance of their award. The members are elected by persons engaged in the trade. Davis, Bldg. Soc. 232; Sweet

COUNCIL OF JUDGES.

Under the Eng- lish judicature act 1873, § 75, an annual council of the judges of the supreme court Is to be held, for the purpose of considering the operation of the new practice, offices, etc., in- troduced by the act, and of reporting to a sec- retary of state as to any alterations which they consider should be made in the law for the administration of justice. An extraor- dinary council may also be convened at any time by the lord chancellor. Sweet.

COUNCIL OF THE NORTH.

A court instituted by Henry VIII. in 1537, to ad- minister justice in Yorkshire and the four other northern counties. Under the presi- dency of Stratford, the court showed great rigor, bordering, it is alleged, on harshness. It was abolished by 16 Car. I., the same act which abolished the Star Chamber. Brown.

COUNSEL. 1. In practice. An advo- cate, counsellor, or pleader. 3 Bl. Comm. 26 ; 1 Kent, Comm. 307. One who assists his client with advice, and pleads for him in open court. See Counsellor.

Counsellors who are associated with those regularly retained in a cause, either for the purpose of advising as to the points of law involved, or preparing the case on its legal side, or arguing questions of law to the court, or preparing or conducting the case on its appearance before an appellate tribu- nal, are said to be “of counsel.”

2. Knowledge. A grand Jury is sworn to keep secret “the commonwealth's counsel, their fellow’s', and their own.”

3. Advice given by one person to another in regard to a proposed line of conduct, claim, or contention. State v. Russell, 83 Wis. 330, 53 N. W. 441 ; Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 1049. The words “counsel” and “ad- vise” may be, and frequently are, used in criminal law to describe the offense of a person who, not actually doing the felonious act, by his will contributed to it or procured it to be done. True v. Com., 90 Ky. 651, 14

[Law] — Law

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiding, abetting, counseling a federal offense punishable as principal]

The entry's criminal-law sense of 'counsel' — one who, without doing the felonious act himself, by his will contributed to it or procured it — is accomplice liability: whoever aids, abets, counsels, or procures an offense is punishable as a principal.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines this exact sense with criminal cases cited (True v. Com.; Omer v. Com.); § 2 is the federal statement using the entry's own verbs ('counsels... procures'). Confident on the section. [re-homed from 'COUNSEL' to 'COUNCIL OF THE NORTH' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

[Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335 (1963)]

The entry's first sense — the advocate who pleads for his client in open court — is the Sixth Amendment right to the assistance of counsel, extended to state felony prosecutions for indigent defendants.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines counsel as the advocate; Gideon constitutionalized the indigent defendant's right to that advocate. Confident on volume, reporter, page, and year. [re-homed from 'COUNSEL' to 'COUNCIL OF THE NORTH' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

COUNSEL’S SIGNATURE.

This Is re- quired, in some jurisdictions, to be affixed to pleadings, as affording the court a means of judging whether they are interposed In good faith and upon legal grounds.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 — signature as certification of good faith and legal grounding]

The entry's purpose for the signature — letting the court judge whether pleadings 'are interposed in good faith and upon legal grounds' — is the certification function of Federal Rule 11: a signature certifies the filing is well-grounded, not for an improper purpose, and exposes the signer to sanctions.

Why: Genuine: the entry describes the signature's function in exactly Rule 11's terms (good faith, legal grounds); Rule 11 is the modern federal form of that requirement. Confident on the rule.

COUNSELLOR.

An advocate or barris- ter. A member of the legal profession whose special function is to give counsel or advice as to the legal aspects of judicial contro- versies, or their preparation and manage- ment, and to appear in court for the con- duct of trials, or the argument of causes, or presentation of motions, or any other legal business that takes him into the presence of the court

In some of the states, the two words “counsellor" and “attorney” are used inter- changeably to designate all lawyers. In others, the latter term alone is used, "coun- sellor” not being recognized as a technical name. In still others, the tw’o are associat- ed together as the full legal title of any per- son who has been admitted to practice in the courts ; while in a few they denote dif- ferent grades, it being prescribed that no one can become a counsellor until he has been an attorney for a specified time and has passed a second examination.

In the practice of the United States su- preme court, the term denotes an officer who is employed by a party in a cause to conduct the same on its trial on his behalf. He dif- fers from an attorney at law.

In the supreme court of the United States, the two degrees of attorney and counsel were at first kept separate, and no person was permitted to practice in both capaci- ties, but the present practice is otherwise. Weeks, Attys. at Law. 54. It is the duty of the counsel to draft or review and eorrect the special pleadings, to manage the cause on trial, and, during the whole course of the suit, to apply established principles of law to the exigencies of the case. 1 Kent, Comm. 307.

COUNT, v. In pleading. To declare; to recite; to state a case; to narrate the facts constituting a plaintiffs cause of action. In a special sense, to set out the claim or count of the demandant in a real action.

To plead orally; to plead or argue a case In court; to recite or read in court; to re- dte a count in court.

—Const upon a statute. Counting upon a statute consists in making express reference to it. as by the words "against the form of the statute" (or "by the force of the statute") "in such case made and provided." Richardson r. Fletcher, 74 Vfc 417, 52 Atl. 1064.

COUNT, n. In pleading. The different parts of a declaration, each of which, If it stood aloue, would constitute a ground for action, are the counts of the declaration. Used also to signify the several parts of an indictment, each charging a distinct offense. Cheetham v. Tillotson, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 434; Buckingham v. Murray, 7 Houst. (Del.) 176, 30 Atl. 779 ; Boren v. State, 23 Tex. App. 28, 4 S. W. 463; Bailey v. Mosher, 63 Fed. 490, 11 C. C. A. 304; Ryan v. Riddle, 109 Mo. App. 115, 82 S. W. 1117.

— Common counts. Certain general counts or forms inserted in a declaration in an action to recover a money debt, not founded on the cir- cumstances of the individual case, but intended to guard against a possible variance, and to enable the plaintiff to take advantage of any ground of liability which the proof may disclose, within the general scope of the action. In the action of assumpsit, these counts are as fol- lows; For goods sold and delivered, or bar- rained and sold ; for work done ; for money lent ; for money paid ; for money received to the use of the plaintiff; for interest; or for money due on an account stated. See Nugent t. Teauchot, 67 Mich. 571, 35 N. W. 254.— Gen- eral count. One stating in a general way the plaintiff's claim. Wertheim v. Casualty Co., 72 Yt. 326, 47 Atl. 1071.— Omnibus count. A count which combines, in one all the money counts with one for goods sold and delivered, work and labor, and an account stated. Web- ber v. Tivill, 2 Saund. 122 ; Griffin v. Murdock, 88 Me. 254, 34 Atl. 30.— Money counts. A species of common counts, so called from the subject-matter of them ; embracing the indebita- tus assumpsit count for money lent and ad- vanced, for money paid and expended, and for money had and received, together with the tn- simvl computassent count, or count for money due on an account stated. 1 Burrill. Pr. 132. — Several counts. Where a plaintiff has sev- eral distinct causes of action, he is allowed to pursue them cumulatively in the same action, subject to certain rules which the law pre- scribes. Wharton.— Special count. As op- posed to the common counts, in pleading, a special count Is a statement of the actual facts of the particular case, or a count in which the plaintiff's claim is set forth with all needed par- ticularity. Wertheim v. Casualty Co., 72 Vt 328. 47 Atl. 1071.

'Louisiana as an “antichresis," (q. v.) — Counter-mark. A sign put upon goods already marked; also the sev- eral marks put upon goods belonging to several ersons, to show that they must not be opened, ut in the presence of all the owners or their agents.— Counter-security. A security given to one who has entered into a bond or become surety for another; a countervailing bond of indemnity.

COUNTER-CLAIM.

A claim presented by a defendant In opposition to or deduction from the claim of the plaintiff. A species of set-off or recoupment Introduced by the codes of civil procedure in several of the states, of a broad and liberal character.

A counter-claim must be one “existing In favor of a defendant and against a plain- tiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising out of one of the following causes of action; (I) A cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction set forth In the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff’s claim, or Connected with the subject of action : (2) In an action arising on contract, any other cause of action arising also on contract, and existing at the commencement of the ac- tion.” Code Proe. N. Y. I 150.

The term “counter-claim,' ” of itself, imports a claim opposed to, or which qualifies, or at least in some degree affects, the plaintiff's cause of action. Dietrich v. Koch, 35 Wis. 626.

A counter-claim is an opposition claim, or de- mand of something due ; a demand of something which of right belongs to the defendant, in op- position to the right of the plaintiff. Siiliman v. Eddy, 8 How. Prac. (N. x.) 122.

A counter-claim is that which might have arisen out of, or could have had some connec- tion with, the original transaction, in view of the parties, and which, at the time the contract was made, they could have intended might, in some event, give one party a claim against the other for compliance or non-compliance with its provisions. Conner v. Winton, 7 Ind. 523, 524.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 13 — compulsory and permissive counterclaims]

The counterclaim the entry defines under the codes of civil procedure is governed federally by Rule 13: a counterclaim arising from the same transaction or occurrence as the plaintiff's claim is compulsory, or it is lost; unrelated counterclaims are permissive.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines counterclaim as the defendant's opposition claim 'arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint' — the transactional test; Rule 13 is the federal codification of that...

COUNTERFEIT.

In criminal law. To forge; to copy or imitate, without authority or right, and with a view to deceive or de- fraud, by passing the copy or thing forged for that which is original or genuine. Most commonly applied to the fraudulent and criminal imitation of money. State v. Mc- Kenzie, 42 Me. 392; U. S. v. Barrett (D. C.) Ill Fed. 369; State v. Calvin. R. M. Charlt (6a.) 159 ; Matt Ison v. State, 3 Mo. 421.

— Counterfeit coin. Coin not genuine, but resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for genutne coin, including genuine coin prepared or altered so as to resemble or pass for coin of a higher denomination. U. S. v. Hop- kins (D. C.) 26 Fed. 443 ; U. S. v. Bogart. 24 Fed. Cas. 1 185. — Counterfeiter. In criminal law. One who unlawfully makes base coin in imitation of the true metal, or forges false cur- rency, or any instrument of writing, bearing a likeness and similitude to that which is lawful and genuine, with an intention of deceiving and imposing upon mankind. Thirman v. Matthews, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 384.

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting U.S. obligations and securities]

The entry's paradigm — 'the fraudulent and criminal imitation of money' — is federal counterfeiting: making or passing counterfeit obligations and securities of the United States.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines counterfeiting as criminal imitation 'most commonly applied' to money, with criminal cases cited; § 471 is the federal statute for that paradigm. Confident on the section.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 11:1, KJV]

A false balance is abomination to the LORD: but a just weight is his delight.

Why: Genuine: the entry's counterfeiter definition explicitly extends beyond coin to instruments of writing; the film is the famous dramatization of that career. Paraphrase marked; film, director, year certain.

COUNTER-FESANCE.

The act of forg- ing.

COUNTERMAND.

A change or revoca- tion of orders, authority, or instructions pre- viously issued. It may be either express or implied; the former where the order or in- struction already given is explicitly annulled or recalled; the latter where the party’s con- duct is incompatible with the further con- tinuance of the order' or instruction, as where a new order is given inconsistent with the former order.

COUNTERPART.

In conveyancing. The corresponding part of an instrument; a duplicate or copy. Where an instrument of conveyance, as a lease, is executed in parts, that Is, by having several copies or dupli- cates made and interchangeably executed, that which is executed by the grantor is usually called the “original,” and the rest are “counterparts;” although, where all the parties execute every part, this renders them all originals. 2 Bl. COUNTERVAIL.

To counterbalance ; to avail against with equal force or virtue; to- compensate for, or serve as an equivalent of or substitute for.

—Countervail livery. At common law, a re- lease was a form of transfer of real estate where some right to it existed in one person but the actual possession was in another ; and the pos- session in such case was said to “countervail livery,” that is, it supplied the place of and ren- dered unnecessary the open and notorious de- livery of possession required in other cases. COUNT EZ.

L. Fr. Count, or reckon. In old practice. A direction formerly given by the clerk of a court to the crier, after a jury was sworn, to number them; and which Blackstone says was given In his time, in good English, “count these." 4 Bl. Comm. 340, note (u.)

COUNTORS.

Advocates, or serjeants at law, whom a man retains to defend his cause . and speak for him in court, for their fees. 1 Inst. 17.

COUNTRY.

The portion of the earth’s surface occupied by an independent nation or people; or the Inhabitants of such ter- ritory.

In its primary meaning "country” signifies “place and, in a larger sense, the territory or dominions occupied by a community; or even waste and unpeopled sections or regions of the earth. Bnt its metaphorical meaning is no less definite and well understood ; and in common parlance, in historical and geographical writ- ings, in diplomacy, legislation, treaties, and in- ternational codes, the word is employed to de- note the population, the-

In pleading and practice. The inhabit- ants of a district from which a Jury is to be summoned; pais; a Jury. 3 Bl. Comm. 349; Steph. Pl. 73, 78, 230.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amends. VI, VII — trial by jury]

The entry's pleading-and-practice sense — 'country' as the jury, trial per pais — is the jury trial secured in federal criminal cases and in civil suits at common law.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines 'country' in practice as 'a jury' (trial by country); the Sixth and Seventh Amendments are the constitutional jury guarantees. Direct illumination of the defined sense.

COUNTY.

Tbe name given to the prin- cipal subdivisions of the kingdom of Eng- land and of most of the states of the Amer- ican Union, denoting a distinct portion of territory organized by Itself for political and judicial purposes. The etymology of the word shows It to have been the district an- ciently governed by a count or earl. In mod- ern use, the word may denote either the ter- ritory marked oft to form a county, or the citizens resident within such territory, tak- en collectively and considered as Invested with political rights, or the county regarded as a municipal corporation possessing subor- dinate governmental powers, or an organ- ized .jural society Invested with specific rights and duties. Patterson v. Temple, 27 Ark. 207; Eagle v. Beard, 33 Ark. 601; Wooster ▼. Plymouth, 62 N. H. 208.

— County bridge. A bridge of the larger class, erected by the county, and which the county is liable to keep in repair. Taylor ▼. Davis County, 40 Iowa, 295 ; Boone County v. Mutchler, 137 Ind. 140, 36 N. E. 534,-County oonunissioners. Officers of a county charged with a variety of administrative and executive duties, but principally with the management of the financial affiairs of the county, its police regulations, and its corporate business. Some- times the local laws give theffi limited judicial powers. In some states they are called “super- visors.” Com. v. Krickbaum, 199 Pa. 351, 49 Atl. 68. — County corporate. A city or town, with more or less territory annexed, having the privilege to be a county of itself, and not to be comprised in any other county: such as Lon- don, York, Bristol, Norwich, and other cities in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 120.— County court. A court of high antiquity in England, incident to the jurisdiction of the sheriff. It is not a court of record, bnt may hold pleas of debt or damages, under the value of forty shillings. The freeholders of the county (anciently termed the "suitors” of the court) are the real judges in this court, and the sheriff is the ministerial officer. See 3 Bl. Comm. 35, 36 ; 3 Steph. Comm. 895. But in modern English law the name is appropriated to a system of tribunals established by the statute 9 & 10 Yict. c. 95, having a limited jurisdiction, principally for the recovery of small debts. It is also the name of certain tribunals of limited jurisdiction in the county of Middlesex, established under the stat- ute 22 Geo. II. c. 33. In American law. The name is used in many of the states to designate the ordinary courts of record having jurisdic- tion for trials at nisi prius.

A term bestowed npon certain counties in England, the lords of which in former times enjoyed especial privi- leges. They might pardon treasons, murders,, and felonies. All writs and indictments ran in their names, as in other counties in the kind’s ; and all offenses were said to be done against their peace, and not, as in other places, contra pacem domini regie. But these privileges have in modern times nearly disappeared.— County rate. In English law. An imposition levied on the occupiers of lands, and applied to many miscellaneous purposes, among which the most important are those of defraying the expenses connected with prisons, reimbursing to private parties the costs they have. incurred in prosecut- ing public offenders, and defraying the expenses of the county police. See 15 & 16 Viet. c. 81.— County road. One which lies wholly within one county, and which is thereby distinguished from a state road, which is a road lying in two or more counties. State v. Wood County, 17 Ohio, 186.— County-seat. A county-seat or county-town is the chief town of a county, where the county buildings and courts are lo- cated and tbe county business transacted. COUPONS.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Interest and dividend cer- tificates; also those parts of a commercial Instrument which are to be cut, and which are evidence of something connected with the contract mentioned in the instrument. They are generally attached to certificates of loan, where the interest is payable at par- ticular periods, and, when the interest is paid, they are cut off and delivered to the payer. Wharton.

Coupons are written contracts for the pay- ment of a definite sum of money on a given day, and being drawn and executed in a form and mode for the purpose, that they may be separat- ed from the bonds and other instruments to which they are usually attached, it is held that they are negotiable and that a suit may be maintained on them without the necessity of producing the bonds. Each matured coupon up- on a negotiable bond is a separable promise, distinct from the promises to pay the bonds or the other coupons, and gives nse to a separate cause of action. Aurora v. West, 7 Wall. 88, 19 L. Ed. 42.

— Coupon bonds. Bonds to which are at- tached coupons for the several successive in- stallments of interest to maturity. Benwell v. Newark, 55 N. J. Eq. 260, 36 Atl. 668; Ten- nessee Bond Cases, 114 U. S. 663, 5 Sup. Ct. 974, 29 L. Ed. 281. — Coupon notes. Promis- sory notes with coupons attached, the coupons being notes for interest written at the bottom of the principal note, and designed to be Cut off ■severally and presented for payment as they mature. Williams v. Moody, 95 Ga. 8, 22 S. EL 30.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC Article 3 — negotiable instruments]

The entry holds detached interest coupons to be negotiable, each matured coupon a separable promise giving its own cause of action — the negotiable-instrument treatment codified in the UCC's negotiable instruments article.

Why: Genuine: the entry's holding (citing Aurora v. West) is that coupons 'are negotiable'; UCC Article 3 is the governing law of negotiable instruments. The note names the legal category of the entry's own holding.

COUR DE CASSATION.

The supreme Judicial tribunal of France, haring appellate jurisdiction only. For an account of its com- position and powers, see Jones, French Bar, 22; Guyot, Repert. Univ.

COURSE.

A term used in surveying, meaning the direction of a line with refer- ence to a meridian.

—Course of business. Commercial paper is said to be transferred, or sales alleged to have been fraudulent may be shown to have been made, "in the course of business," or “in the usual and ordinary course of business,” when the circumstances of the transaction are such as usually and ordinarily attend dealings of the same kind and do not exhibit any signs of haste, secrecy, or fraudulent intention. 550.— Course of the voyage. By this term is understood the regular and customary track, if such there be, which a ship takes in going from one port to another, and the shortest way. Marsh. Ins. 185.— Course of trade. What is customarily or ordinarily done in the management of trade or business.

COURT.

In legislation. A legislative assembly. Parliament Is called In the old books a court of the king, nobility, and com- mons assembled. Finch, Law, b. 4, c. 1, p. 233 ; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2.

This meaning of the word has been re- tained in the titles of some deliberative bod- ies, such as the general court of Massachu- setts, (the legislature.)

In international law. The person and suite of the sovereign ; the place where the sovereign sojourns with his regal retinue, wherever that may be. The English govern- ment is spoken of in diplomacy as the court of St. James, because the palace of St. James is the official palace.

In praotioe. An organ of the govern- ment, belonging to the judicial department, whose function is the application of the laws to controversies brought before it and the public administration of justice. White County v. Gwin, 136 Ind. 562, 36 N. E. 237, 22 L. R. A. 402.

The presence of a sufficient number of the members of such a body regularly convened in an authorized place at an appointed time, engaged in the full and regular performance of its functions. Brumley r. State, 20 Ark. 77.

A court may be more particularly described as an organized body with defined powers, meeting at certain times and places for the hearing and decision of causes and other matters brought before it, and aided in this, its proper business, by Its proper officers, viz., attorneys and counsel to present and manage the business, clerks to record and attest its acts and decisions, and ministerial officers to execute its commands, and secure due order in its proceedings. Ex parte Gardner, 22 Nev. 280, 30 Pac. 570.

The place where justice is Judicially ad- ministered. Co. Litt. 58a; 3 Bl. Comm. 23. Railroad Co. v. Harden, 113 Ga. 456, 38 S.'

E. 950.

The judge, or the body of Judges, presiding over a court.

The words "court” and “judge,” or “judges,” are frequently used in our statutes as synonymous. When used with reference to orders made by the court or judges, they are to be so understood. State v. Caywood, 96 Iowa, 367, 65 N. W. 385 ; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Northern Ind. R. Co.. 3 Ind. 239.

Classification. Courts may be classified and divided according to several methods, the following being the more usual:

Courts of record and courts not of record ; the former being those whose acts and Ju- dicial proceedings are enrolled, or recorded, for a perpetual memory and testimony, and which have power to fine or imprison for contempt. Error lies to their Judgments, and they generally possess a seal. Courts not of record are those of inferior dignity, which have no power to fine or imprison, and in which the proceedings are not enrolled or re- corded. 3 Bl. Comm. 24; 3 Steph. Comm. 383; The Thomas Fletcher (C. C.) 24 Fed. 481; Ex parte Thlstleton, 52 Cal. 225; Thomas v. Robinson, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 268; Erwin v. D. S. (D. C.) 37 Fed. 488, 2 L. R. A. 229.

Superior and inferior courts; the former being courts of general original jurisdiction in the first instance, and which exercise a control or supervision over a system of lower courts, either by appeal, error, or certiorari ; the latter being courts of small or restricted jurisdiction, and subject to the review or correction of higher courts. Sometimes the former term is used to denote a particular group or system of courts of high powers, and all others are called "inferior courts."

To constitute a court a superior court as to any class of actions, within the common-law meaning of that term, its jurisdiction of such actions must be unconditional, so that the only thing requisite to enable the court to take cog- nizance of them is the acquisition of jurisdiction of the persons of the parties. Simons v. De Bare, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 547.

An inferior court is a court whose judgments or decrees can be reviewed, on appeal or writ of error, by a higher tribunal, whether that tribunal be the circuit or supreme court. Nu- gent v. State, 18 Ala. 521.

Civil and criminal courts; the former be- ing such as are established for the adjudi- cation of controversies between subject and subject, or the ascertainment, enforcement, and redress of private rights; the latter, such as are charged with the administration of the criminal laws, and the punishment of wrongs to the public.

Equity courts and late courts; the former being such as possess the jurisdiction of a chancellor, apply the rules and principles of chancery law, and follow the procedure in equity; the latter, such as have no equitable powers, but administer Justice according to the rules and practice- of the common law.

As to the division of courts according to their jurisdiction, see Jurisdiction.

As to several names or kinds of courts not specifically described in the titles Immediate- ly following, see Arches Court, Appellate, Circuit Courts, Consistory Courts, Coun- ty, Customary Court Baron, Ecclesiastic- al Courts, federal Courts, High Commis- sion Court, Instance Court, Justice Court, Justiciary Court, Maritime Court, Mayor's Court, Moot Court, Municipal Court, Orphans' Court, Police Court, Prerogative Court, Prize Court, Probate Court, Superior Courts, Supreme Court, and Surrogate's Court.

As to oonrt-hand, court-home, court* lands, court rolls, see those titles In their alphabetical order infra.

— Court above, court below. In appellate practice, the "court above" is the one to which a cause Is removed for review, whether by ap- peal, writ of error, or certiorari; while the "court below" is the one from which the case is removed. Going v. Schnell, 6 Ohio Dec. 933; Rev. St. Tex. 1895, art. 1386.— Court in bank. A meeting of all the judges of a court, usually for the purpose of hearing arguments on demur- rers, points reserved, motions for new trial, etc., as distinguished from sessions of the same court presided over by a single judge or justice. — -De facto court. One established, organized, and exercising its judicial functions under au- thority of a statute apparently valid, though such statute may be in fact unconstitutional and may be afterwards so adjudged ; or a court established and acting under the authori- ty of a de facto government. 1 Bl. Judgm. § 173 ; Burt v. Railroad Co.. 31 Minn. 472, 18 N.

W. 285.— Full court. A session of a court which is attended by all the judges or justices composing it.— Spiritual courts. In English law. The ecclesiastical courts, or courts Christian. See 3 Bl. Comm. 61.

[Law] — Law

[Law: de facto officer doctrine — acts under color of authority valid as to third parties]

The entry's 'de facto court' — one acting under a statute apparently valid, or under a de facto government — invokes the de facto officer doctrine: acts of one exercising an office under color of authority are valid as to the public and third parties, even if the title to the office proves defective.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the de facto court and cites authority (1 Bl. Judgm. § 173); the doctrine is the operative rule that gives the definition its legal consequence. Kept in loose form.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 16:18, KJV]

Judges and officers shalt thou make thee in all thy gates, which the LORD thy God giveth thee, throughout thy tribes: and they shall judge the people with just judgment.

Why: Scripture's own institution of courts — judges and officers set in the gates to judge the people with just judgment.

Why: Verified verbatim against multiple independent lyric transcriptions (Music Gateway lyrics page, core.ac.uk academic paper quoting the intro, Spin, tailem all agree). Genuine link: the intro literally convenes a court...

COURT-BARON.

In English law. A court which, although not one of record, Is incident to every manor, and cannot be sev- ered therefrom. It was ordained for the maintenance of the services and duties stipu- lated for by lords of manors, and for the pur- pose of determining actions of a personal na- ture, where the debt or damage was under forty shillings. Wharton.

Customary court-baron Is one appertaining entirely to copyholders. 3 Bl. Comm. 33.

Freeholders’ court-baron is one held before the freeholders who owe suit and service to the manor. It Is the court-baron proper.

COURT CHRISTIAN.

The ecclesias- tical courts In England are often so called, as distinguished from the civil courts. 1 Bl. Comm. 83; 3 Bl. Comm. 64; 8 Steph. Comm. 430.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 6:1, KJV]

Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints?

Why: Paul's rebuke of taking matters before the unjust instead of the saints establishes the church-court principle — disputes judged within the ecclesia rather than at secular law.

COURT FOR CONSIDERATION OF / CROWN CASES RESERVED.

A court established by St. 11 & 12 Viet, c. 78, composed of such of the judges of the superior courts of Westminster as were able to at- tend, for the consideration of questions of law reserved by any Judge in a court of oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, or quarter sessions, before which a prisoner had been found guilty by verdict. Such question Is stated in the form of a special case. Mozley & White- ley; 4 Steph. Comm. 442.

COURT FOR DIVORCE AND MATRI- / MONIAL CAUSES.

This court was estab- lished by St. 20 & 21 Viet. c. 85, which trans- ferred to It all Jurisdiction then exercisable by any ecclesiastical court in England, in matters matrimonial, and also gave It new powers. The court consisted of the lord chancellor, the three chiefs, and three senior puisne Judges of the common-law courts, and the judge ordinary, who together constituted, and still constitute, the “full court.” The judge ordinary heard almost all matters In the first Instance. By the judicature act, 1873, § 3, the jurisdiction of the court was transferred to the supreme court of judica- ture. Sweet.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 19:6, KJV]

What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Why: Christ's word on marriage indissolubility governs matrimonial jurisdiction — the sentence no court of divorce may undo.

COURT FOR THE CORRECTION OF / ERRORS.

The style of a court having ju- risdiction for review, by appeal or writ of error. The name was formerly used in New York and South Carolina.

COURT FOR THE RELIEF OF IN- / SOLVENT DEBTORS.

In English law. A local court which has Its sittings In Lou- don only, which receives the petitions of In- solvent debtors, and decides upon the ques- tion of granting a discharge. PEACHMENTS. A tribunal empowered to try any officer of government or other per- son brought to its bar by the process of im- peachment. In England, the house of lords constitutes such a court; in the United States, the senate; and in the several states, usually, the upper house of the legislative assembly.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, §§ 2–3; art. II, § 4 — impeachment and trial]

The impeachment tribunal this (parser-fused) entry describes — in the United States, the Senate — tries impeachments under the constitutional scheme: the House has the sole power of impeachment, the Senate the sole power to try, and conviction removes officers for treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the impeachment tribunal and names the U.S. Senate; the cited clauses are the constitutional provisions creating it. Keyed under IMPEACHMENTS though the text is fused into entry 225's tail (... [re-homed from 'IMPEACHMENTS' to 'COURT FOR THE RELIEF OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

At the end of every seven years thou shalt make a release. And this is the manner of the release: Every creditor that lendeth ought unto his neighbour shall release it; he shall not exact it of his neighbour, or of his brother; because it is called the LORD's release.

Why: The sabbatical release — scripture's own insolvent-debtor relief, the creditor commanded to release what is lent to his neighbour. Placed here rather than at COURT OF BANKRUPTCY as the exact-match, single-placement en...

COURT-HAND.

In old English practice. The peculiar hand in which the records of courts were written from the earliest period down to the reign of George II. Its char- acteristics were great strength, compactness, and undeviating uniformity ; and its use un- doubtedly gave to the ancient record its ac- knowledged superiority over the modern, in the Important quality of durability.

The writing of this band, with its peculiar abbreviations and contractions, constituted, while it was in use, an art of no little im- portance, being an indispensable part of the profession of “clerkship.” as it was called. Two sizes of it were employed, a large and a small hand ; the former, called "great court- hand,” being used for initial words or clauses, the placita of records, etc. Burrill.

COURT-HOUSE.

The building occupied for the public sessions of a court, with its va- rious offices. The term may be used of a place temporarily occupied for the sessions of a court, though not the regular court- house. Harris v. State, 72 Miss. 960, 18 South. 387, 33 I* R. A. 85; Vigo County v. Stout, 13C Ind. 53, 35 N. E. 683, 22 L. R. A. 398; Waller v. Arnold, 71 111. 353; Kane v. McCown, 55 Mo. 198.

COURT-LANDS.

Domains or lands kept in the lord’s hands to serve his family.

COURT-LEET.

The name of an English court of record held once in the year, and' not oftener, within a particular hundred, lordship, or manor, before the steward of the leet ; being the king's court granted by char- ter to the lords of those hundreds or manors. Its office was to view the frankpledges, — that is, the freemen within the liberty ; to present by jury crimes happening within the juris- diction; and to punish trivial misdemeanors. It has now, however, for the most part, fall- en into total desuetude; though in some manors a court-leet is still periodically held for the transaction of the administrative business of the manor. Mozley & Whitley.

COURT-MARTIAL.

A military court convened under authority of government and the articles of war, for trying and punishing military offenses committed by soldiers or sailors in the army or navy. People v. Van Allen, 55 N. Y. 31; Carver v. U. 8., 16 Ct. a. 361 ; U. 8. v. Mackenzie, 30 Fed. Cas. 1160.

[Law: Uniform Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C. §§ 801–946; U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 14]

The military court the entry describes, convened under the articles of war, is governed today by the Uniform Code of Military Justice, under Congress's power to make rules for the armed forces.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines courts-martial as convened 'under authority of government and the articles of war'; the UCMJ is the modern articles-of-war code and cl. 14 the constitutional grant. Confident on both.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

Two Marines stand trial for the death of a fellow Marine at Guantanamo Bay — the court-martial as the entry defines it: a military court convened under government authority to try and punish military offenses. (paraphrase) (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the film's entire third act is a court-martial proceeding; it dramatizes the institution, not just the word. Paraphrase marked; film, director, year, and premise certain.

COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

A court having jurisdiction of causes arising under the rules of admiralty law. See Admiralty.

— High court of admiralty. In English law. This was a court which exercised juris- diction in prize cases, and had general juris- diction in maritime causes, on the instance side. Its proceedings were usually in rem, and its practice and principles derived in large measure from the civil law. The judicature acts of 1873 transferred all the powers and ju- risdiction of this tribunal to the probate, di- vorce. and admiralty division of the high court of justice.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 2; 28 U.S.C. § 1333 — admiralty and maritime jurisdiction]

Admiralty jurisdiction in the United States is constitutional and statutory: the federal judicial power extends to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, exercised through the district courts.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the admiralty court and its maritime causes; the cited provisions are the U.S. grants of exactly that jurisdiction. Confident on both.

COURT OF ANCIENT DEMESNE.

In

English law. A court of peculiar constitu- tion, held by a 'bailiff appointed by the king, in which alone the tenants of the king's de- mesne could be impleaded. 2 Burrows, 1046; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 100; 2 Bl. Comm. 99; 1 Steph. Comm. 224. ESTY'S. The chief appellate tribunal of England. It was established by the judi- cature acts of 1873 and 1875, and is invested with the jurisdiction formerly exercised by the court of appeal in chancery, the excheq- uer chamber, the judicial committee of the privy council in admiralty and lunacy ap- peals. and with general appellate jurisdic- tion from the high court of justice.

COURT OF APPEALS.

In American law. An appellate tribunal which, in Ken- tucky, Maryland, the District of Columbia, and New York, is the court of last resort. In Delaware and New Jersey, it is known as the "court of errors and appeals;" in Vir- ginia and West Virginia, the "supreme court of appeals." In Texas the court of appeals is inferior to the supreme court.

COURT OF APPEALS IN CASES OF / CAPTURE.

A court erected by act of con- gress under the articles of confederation which preceded the adoption of the constitu- tion. It had appellate jurisdiction in prize causes.

COURT OF ARBITRATION OF THE / CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

A court of Arbitrators, created for the convenience of merchants in the city of New York, by act of the legislature of New York. It decides disputes between members of the chamber of commerce, and between members and outside merchants who voluntarily submit them- selves to the jurisdiction of the court.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. §§ 1–16 — commercial arbitration agreements enforceable]

The merchant arbitration the entry describes — disputes voluntarily submitted to chamber arbitrators — is the commercial arbitration whose agreements federal law makes enforceable.

Why: Genuine: the entry describes voluntary submission of merchant disputes to arbitration; the FAA is the governing federal law of such agreements. Confident on the Act and title.

COURT OF ARCHDEACON.

The most inferior of the English ecclesiastical courts, from which an appeal generally lies to that of the bishop. 3 Bl. Comm. 64.

COURT OF ASSISTANTS.

In Massa- chusetts during the early colonial period, this name was given to the chief or supreme ju- dicial court, composed of the governor, his deputy, and certain assistants.

COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI / PRIUS.

Courts in England composed of two or more commissioners, called "judges of assize," (or of "assize and nisi prius ,") who are twice in every year sent by the king's special commission, on circuits all round the kingdom, to try, by a Jury of the respective counties, the truth of such matters of fact as are there under dispute in the courts of West- minster Hall. 3 Steph.

COURT OF AUDIENCE.

Ecclesiastical courts, in which the primates once exercised in person a considerable part of their juris- diction. They seem to be now obsolete, or at least to be only used on the rare occur- rence of the trial of a bishop. Pbillim. Ecc. Law, 1201, 1204.

COURT OF AUGMENTATION.

An

English court created in the time of Henry VIII., with jurisdiction over the property and revenue of certain religious founda- tions, which had been made over to the king by act of parliament, and over suits relating to the same.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

An Eng- lish court of record, having original and ap- pellate jurisdiction in matters of bankruptcy, and invested with both legal and equitable powers for that purpose. In the United States, the “courts of bankruptcy” include the district courts of the United States and of the territories, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and the United States court of the Indian Territory and of Alaska.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 11 U.S.C. (Bankruptcy Code); 28 U.S.C. § 1334 — federal bankruptcy jurisdiction]

The 'courts of bankruptcy' the entry lists — the federal district courts — exercise the bankruptcy jurisdiction granted by statute under the Bankruptcy Code.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines courts of bankruptcy to include the U.S. district courts; the Code and § 1334 are the substantive and jurisdictional statutes. Confident on both.

COURT OF BROTHERHOOD.

An as- sembly of the mayors, or other chief officers of the principal towns of the Cinque Ports in England, originally administering the chief powers of those ports, now almost extinct Cent Diet

COURT OF CHANCERY.

A court hav- ing the jurisdiction of a chancellor ; a court administering equity and proceeding accord- ing to the forms and principles of equity. In England, prior to the judicature acts, the style of the court possessing the largest equi- table powers and jurisdiction was the “high court of chancery.” In some of the United States, the title "court of chancery” is ap- plied to a court possessing general equity powers, distinct from the courts of common law. Parmeter v. Bourne, 8 Wash. 45, 35 Pac. 586.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The terms “equity" and “chancery,” “court of equity” and “court of chancery,” are constantly used as synonymous in the United States. It is presumed that this custom arises from the circumstance that the equity juris- diction which is exercised by the courts of the various states is assimilated to that possessed by the English courts of chancery. Indeed, in some of the states it is made identical therewith by statute, so far as conformable to onr institu- tions. Bouvier.

COURT OF CHIVALRY, or COURT MILITARY, was a court not of record, held before the lord high constable and earl mar- shal of England. It had jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, in deeds of arms and war, armorial bearings, • questions of precedence, etc., and as a court of honor. It has long been disused. 3 Bl. Comm. 103; 3 Steph. Comm. 335, note I.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 2 — one form of action; merger of law and equity]

The separate equity court the entry describes — administering equity 'distinct from the courts of common law' — was procedurally merged in federal practice: there is now one form of action, the civil action, in which legal and equitable claims proceed together.

Why: Genuine: the entry's whole subject is the separate court of equity; Rule 2's merger is the modern procedural answer to that separation, so it genuinely illuminates the entry's historical frame. Confident on the rule.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Micah 6:8, KJV]

[Law: Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1491 — claims against the United States]

The claims against the United States over which this court had jurisdiction — contracts with the government, acts of Congress — are heard under the Tucker Act, now by the Court of Federal Claims.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the court's jurisdiction as claims against the United States on contracts and statutes; the Tucker Act is the statutory grant of that jurisdiction. Confident on the Act and section.

COURT OF THE CLERK OF THE / MARKET.

An English court of Inferior ju- risdiction held in every fair or market for the punishment of misdemeanors committed therein, and the recognizance of weights and measures.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:35-36, KJV]

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in meteyard, in weight, or in measure. Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin, shall ye have: I am the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt.

Why: The weights-and-measures law — just balances, just weights — is the very subject matter of this court's jurisdiction over markets.

COURT OF COMMISSIONERS OF / SEWERS.

The name of certain English courts created by commission under the great seal pursuant to the statute of sewers, (23 Hen. VIII. a 5.)

COURT OF COMMON FLEAS.

The

English court of common pleas was one of the four superior courts at Westminster, and existed up to the passing of the judicature acts. It was also styled the “Common Bench.” It was one of the courts derived • from the breaking up of the aula regis, and had exclusive jurisdiction of all real actions and of communia placita, or common pleas, 1. e., between subject and subject. It was presided over by a chief justice with four puisne judges. Appeals lay anciently to the king’s bench, but afterwards to the exchequer chamber. See 3 Bl. Comm. 37, et seq.

In American law. The name sometimes givpn to a court of original and geueral Ju- risdiction for the trial of issues of fact and law according to the principles of the com- mon law. See Moore v. Barry, 30 S. C. 530, 9 S. E. 589, 4 L. R. A. 294.

COURTS OF CONSCIENCE.

These were the same as courts of request, (</. t;.) This name is also frequently applied to the courts of equity or of chancery, not as a name but as a description. See Harper v. Clayton, 84 Md. 346, 35 Atl. 1083, 35 L. R.

A. 211, 57 Am. St Rep. 407. And see Con- science.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Micah 6:8, KJV]

He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

Why: The entry itself identifies these as courts of equity or chancery; honest reuse of the equity verse (also at COURT OF CHANCERY, COURT OF EQUITY, CONTRAVENING EQUITY).

COURT OF CONVOCATION.

In Eng- lish ecclesiastical law. A court, or assembly.

comprising all the high officials of each prov- ince and representatives of the minor clergy. It is In the nnture of an ecclesiastical par- liament ; and, so far as its judicial functions extend, it has jurisdiction of cases of heresy, schism, and other purely ecclesiastical matters. An appeal lies to the king in council.

COURT OF THE CORONER.

In Eng- lish law. A court of record, to inquire, when any one dies in prison, or comes to a violent or sudden death, by what manner he came to his end. 4 Steph. Comm. 323 ; 4 Bl. Comm. 274. See Coboneb. TINE. in English law. A species of pri- vate court which formerly appertained to the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham.

COURT OF COUNTY COMMISSION.

ERS. There is in each county of Alabama a court of record, styled the “court of county commissioners,” composed of the judge of probate, as principal judge, and four commissioners, who are elected ^t the times pre- scribed by law, and hold office for four years. Code Ala. 1886, $ 819.

COURT OF DELEGATES.

An English tribunal composed of delegates appointed by royal commission, and formerly the great court of appenl in all ecclesiastical causes. The jx) were of the court were, by 2 & 3 Wm. • error. Brown ; 3 Bl. Comm. G6. TER. A court of special jurisdiction, held before the chancellor of the duchy or his deputy, concerning all matters of equity re- lating to lands bolden of the king in right of the duchy of Lancaster. 3 BL Comm. 78.

COURT OF EQUITY.

A court which has jurisdiction in equity, which administers Justice and decides controversies in accord- ance with the rules, principles, and prece- dents of equity, and which follows the forms and procedure of chancery ; as distinguished from a court having the jurisdiction, rules, principles, and practice of the common law. Thomas v. Phillips, 4 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 423.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Micah 6:8, KJV]

He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

Why: Honest reuse (also at COURT OF CHANCERY, COURTS OF CONSCIENCE, CONTRAVENING EQUITY): equity is justice tempered with mercy — the verse is its classic statement.

COURT OF ERROR.

An expression ap- plied especially to the court of exchequer chamber and the house of lords, as taking cognizance of error brought. Mozley & Whit- ley. It is applied in some of the United States to the court of last resort in the state ; and in its most general sense denotes any court having power to review the decisions of lower courts on appeal, error, certiorari, or other process.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS court of last resort in the state of Mississippi.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

In Eng. list law. A very ancient court of record, set up by William the Conqueror as a part of the aula regia, and afterwards one of the four superior courts at Westminster. It was, however, inferior in rank to both the king's bench and the commolt pleas. It was pre- sided over by a chief baron and four puisne burons. It was originally the king's treas- ury, and was charged with keeping the king's accounts and collecting the royal revenues. But pleas between subject and subject were anciently heard there, until this was for- bidden by the Artieula auger CUartas, (1290,) after which its jurisdiction as a court only extended to revenue cases arising out of the non-payment or withholding of debts to the crown. But the privilege of suing and being sued in this court was extended to the king's accountants, and later, by the use of a con- venient fiction to the effect that the plain- tiff was the king’s debtor or accountant, the court was thrown open to all suitors in per- sonal actions. The exchequer had formerly both an equity side and a common-law side, but its equity jurisdiction was taken away by the stutute 5 Viet. c. 5, (1842,) and trans- ferred to the court of chancery. The judica- ture act (1873) transferred the business and jurisdiction of this court to the “Exchequer Division” of the "High Court of Justice.”

In Scotch law. A court which formerly had jurisdiction of matters of revenue, and a limited jurisdiction over cases between the crown and its vassals where no questions of title were involved.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

The name of a former English court of ap- peal, intermediate between the superior courts of common law and the house of lords. When sitting as a court of appeal from any one of the three superior courts of common law, it was composed of judges of the other two courts. 3 Bl. Comm. 56, 57; 3 Steph. Comm. 333, 35(1. By the judicature act (1873) the jurisdiction of this court is transferred to the court of appeal.

Ia American law. A court constituted by authority of the articles of war. Invested with the power to examine Into the nature of any. transaction, accusation, of Imputation Bl.Law Dict.(2d Ed.)— 19 against any officer or soldier. The said court, shall consist of one or more officers, not ex- ceeding three, and a judge advocate, or other . suitable person, as a recorder, to reduce the proceedings and evidence to writing; all of whom shall be sworn to the performance of their duty. Rev. St. § 1342, arts. 115, 116 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 970, 971.)

[Law] — Law

[Law: courts of inquiry under the UCMJ — successor to the articles-of-war court the entry cites]

The court of inquiry the entry describes under the articles of war (citing Rev. St. § 1342, arts. 115–116) survives in the Uniform Code of Military Justice, which provides for courts of inquiry to investigate matters of military concern.

Why: Genuine lineage: the entry defines the institution under the articles of war with statutory cites; the UCMJ is the successor code carrying the same institution. Kept in loose form; no invented article number.

COURT OF JUSTICE SEAT.

In Eng- lish law. The principal of the forest courts.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[James 1:27, KJV]

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

Why: The scriptural charge over the fatherless — visiting them in their affliction as pure religion — is the whole office of a court of orphans.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

In English law. A court for the trial of cases of treason and felony. The commis- sioners of assise and nisi prius are judges selected by the king and appointed and au- thorized under the great seal, Including usually two of the judges at Westminster, and sent out twice a year into most of the counties of England, for the trial (with a Jury of the county) of causes then depend- ing at Westminster, both civil and criminal. They sit by virtue of several commissions, each of which, In reality, constitutes them a separate and distinct court. The commis- sion of oyer and terminer gives them author- ity for the trial of treasons and felonies ; that of general gaol delivery empowers them to try every prisoner then In gaol for what- ever offense; so that, altogether, they pos- sess full criminal jurisdiction.

In American law. This name Is gen- erally used (sometimes, with additions) as the title, or part of the title, of a state court of criminal Jurisdiction, or of the criminal branch of a court of general jurisdiction, be- ing commonly applied to such courts as may try felonies, or the higher grades of crime.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER / AND GENERAL JAIL DELIVERY.

In

American law. A court Of criminal juris- diction in the state of Pennsylvania.

COURT OF SESSION.

The name of the highest court of civil jurisdiction in Scot- land. It was composed of fifteen judges, now of thirteen. It sits in two divisions. The lord president and three ordinary lords form the first division ; the lord Justice clerk and three other ordinary lords form the sec- ond division. There are five permanent lords ordinary attached equally to both di- visions; the last appointed of whom offici- ates on the Dills, i. e., petitions preferred to the court during the session, and performs the other duties of Junior lord ordinary. The chambers of the parliament house in which the first and second divisions hold their sittings are called the “inner house;" those in which the lords ordinary sit as single judges to hear motions and causes are collectively called the “outer house.” The nomination and appointment of the judges is in the crown. Wharton.

COURT OF SESSIONS.

Courts of crim- inal jurisdiction existing in California. New Vork. and one or two other of the United States.

COURT OF STANNARIES.

In Eng- lish law. A court established in Devonshire and Cornwall, for the administration of Jus- tice among the miners and tinners, and that they may not be drawn away from their business to attend suits in distant courts. The stannary court is a court of record, with a special Jurisdiction. 3 Bl. Comm. 79.

COURT OF STAR CHAMBER.

This was an English court of very ancient origin, but new-modeled by St. 3 Hen. VII. c. 1, and 21 Hen. VIII. c, 20, consisting of divers lords, spiritual and temporal, being privy councillors, together with two judges of the courts of common law, without the Interven- tion of any jury. The jurisdiction extended legally over riots, perjury, misbehavior ot sheriffs, and other misdemeanors contrary to the lows of the land; yet It was after- wards stretched to the asserting of all proc- lamations and orders of state, to the vindi- cating of Illegal commissions and grants of monopolies ; holding for honorable that which it pleased, and for just that which it profited, and becoming both a court of law to determine civil rights and a court of rev- enue to enrich the treasury. It was finally abolished by St. 10 Car. I. c. 10, to the gen- eral satisfaction of the whole nation. Brown.

COURTS OF WESTMINSTER HALL.

The superior courts, both of law and equity, were for centuries fixed at Westminster, an ancient palace of the monarchs of England. Formerly, all the superior courts were held before the king's capital justiciary of Eng- land, in the aula regus, or such of his palaces “wherein his royal person resided, and removed with his household from one end of the kingdom to another. This was found to occasion great inconvenience to the suitors, to remedy which it was made an article of the great charter of liberties, both of King John and King Henry III., that “common pleas should no longer follow the king’s court, but be held In some certain place,” in consequence of which they have ever since been held (a few necessary removals in times of the plague excepted) in the palace of West- minster only. The courts of equity also sit at Westminster, nominally, during term time, although, actually, only during the first day of term, for they generally sit in courts provided for the purpose in, or in the neigh- borhood of, Lincoln’s Inn. COUSIN.

Kindred in the fourth degree, being the issue tiuale or female) of the broth- er or sister of one’s father or mother.

Those who descend from the brother or sis- ter of the father of the person spoken of are called “paternal cousins ;” “maternal cousins” are those who are descended from the brothers or sisters of the mother. Cous- ins-german are first cousins. Sanderson v, Bayley, 4 Myl. & C. 59.

In English writs, commissions, nnd other for- mal instruments issued by the crown, the word signifies any peer of the degree of an earl. The appellation is ns aneient as the reign of Henry IV., who, being related or allied to every earl then in the kingdom, acknowledged that connect tion in all his letters and public acts; from which the use has descended to his successors, though the reason has long ago failed. Mozlpy & Whitley.

—First cousins. Cousins-german; the chil- dren of one's uncle or aunt. Sanderson v. Bay- ley. 4 Mylne & C. 59.— Second cousins. Per- sons who are related to each other by descend- ing from the. same great-grandfather or great- grandmother. The children of one’s first cousins are his second cousins. These are some- times called “first cousins once removed.” Slade v. Fooks, 9 Sim. 387; Corporation of Bridgnorth v. Collins, 15 Sim. 541. — Quater cousin. Properly, a cousin in the fourth de- gree : bnt the term has come to express any remote degree of relationship, and even to bear an ironical signification in which it denotes a very trifling degree of intimacy and regard. Often corrupted into "cater” cousin.

COUSINAGE.. See Cosinaoe.

COUSTOM.

Custom ; duty ; toll ; tribute. 1 Bl. Comm. 314.

COUSTOUMIER.

(Otherwise spelled ” Coustumlcr ” or “Coutumier.") In old French law. A collection of customs, un- written laws, and forms of procedure. Two such volumes are of especial importance In Juridical history, viz., the Grand Comiumicr tic Xormandie, and the Coutumier tie France or Grand Coutumier.

COUTHUTLAUGH.

A person who will- ingly and knowingly received an outlaw, and cherished or concealed him ; for which of- fense he underwent the same punishment as the outlaw himself. Bract. 1286; Spelman.

COU VENTURE, In French law, is the deposit ("margin") made by the client In the hands of the broker, either of a sum of mon- ey or of securities, in order to guaranty the broker for the payment of the securities •which he purchases for the client. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 555.

CO V ENABLE.

A French word signify- ing convenient or suitable; as covenably en- dowed. It is anciently written “convenable,” Termes de la Ley.

COVENANT.

In practice. The name of a common-law form of action ex con- tractu, which lies for the recovery of dam- ages for breach of a covenant, or contract under seal. Stlckney v. Stlckney, 21 N.

H. ’68.

Ia the law of contracts. An agreement, convention, or promise of two or more par- ties, by deed in writing, signed, sealed, and delivered, by which either of the parties pledges himself to the other that something is either done or shall lie done, or stipulates for the truth of certain facts. and delivery thereof, whereby some of the parties named therein engage, or one of them engages, with the other, or others, or some of them, therein also named, that some act hath or hath not already been done, or for the performance or non-performance of some specified duty. De Bolle v. Insur- ance Co., 4 Whart. (Pa.) 71, 33 Am. Dec. 38.

Classification. Covenants may be classi- fied according to several distinct principles of division. According as one or other of these is adopted, they are:

Express or implied; the former being those which are created by the express words of the parties to the dped declaratory of their inten- tion, while implied covenants are those which are inferred by the law from certain words in a deed which imply (though they do not express) them. Express covenants are also called cove- nants “in deed,” as distinguished from cove- nants “in law.” McDonough v. Martin. 88 Ga. 675. 16 S. Bl 59, 18 L. It. A. 343; Conrad v. Morehead, 89 N. C. 31 : Garstang v. Daven- port, 90 Iowa, 359, 57 N. W. 876.

Dependent, concurrent, and independ- ent. Covenants are either dependent, concur- rent, or mutual and independent. The first de- pends on the prior performance of some act or condition, and, until the condition is performed, the other party is not liable to an action on his covenant. In the second, mutual acts are to be performed at the same time: and if one party is- ready, and offers to perform his part, and the other neglects or refuses to perform his, he who is ready and offers has fulfilled his en- gagement. and may maintain an action for the default of the other, though it is not certain that either is obliged to do the first act. ,The third -sort is where either party may recover damages from the other for the injuries he may have received by a breach of the covenants in his favor; and it is no excuse for the de- fendant to allege a breach of the covenants on the part of the plaintiff. Bailey v. White, 3 Ala. 330; Tompkins v. Elliot, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 497 ; Gray v. Smith (C. C.) 76 Fed. 534.

Principal and auxiliary; the former being those which relate directly to the principal mat- ter of the contract entered into between the parties ; while auxiliary covenants are those which do not relate directly to the principal matter of contract between the, parties, but to something connected with it.

Inherent and collateral; the former being such as immediately affect the particular prop- erty. while the latter affect some property col- lateral thereto or some matter collateral to the grant or lease. A covenant inherent is one w-hieh is conversant about the land, and knit to the estate in the land ; as, that the thing de- mised shall be quietly enjoyed, shall bp kept in repair, or shall not be aliened. • A covenant col- lateral is one which is conversant about some collateral thing that doth nothing at all, or not so immediately, concern the thing granted : as to pay a sum of mopey in gross, etc. Shep. Touch. 161.

Joint or several. The former bind both or all the covenantors together; the latter bind each of them separately. A covenant may be both joint and several at the same time, as regards the covenantors ; but,' as regards the cove- nantees, they cannot be joint and several for one and the same cause, (5 Ooke. 19tf.) but must be either joint or several only. Covenants are usually joint or several according as the inter- ests of the covenantees are such ; but the words of the covenant, where they are unam- biguous. will decide, although, where they are ambiguous, the nature of the interests ns being •joint or several is left to decide. Brown. See Capen v. Barrows, 1 Gray (Mass.) 379; In re Blingsby, 5 Coke, 18b.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

General or specific. The former relate to land generally and place the covenantee in the position of a specialty creditor only ; the latter relate to particular lands and give the covenantee a lien thereon. Brown.

Executed or executory; the former being such as relate to an act already performed ; while the latter are those whose performance is to be future. Shep. Touch. 161.

Affirmative or negative) the fonner being those in which the party binds himself to the .existence of a present state of facts as repre- sented or to the future performance of some act; while the latter are those in which the cove- nantor obliges himself not to do or perform some act.

Declaratory or obligatory | the former be- ing those which serve to limit or direct uses; while the latter are those which are binding on the party himself. 1 Sid. 27 ; 1 Keb. 337.

Real and personal. A real covenant is one which binds the heirs of the covenantor and passes to assignees or purchasers ; a covenant the obligation of which is so connected with the realty that he who has the latter is either en- titled to the benefit of it or is liable to perform it: a covenant which has for its object some- thing annexed to, or inherent in, or connected with, land or other real property, and runs with the land, so that the grantee of the land is in- vested with it and may sue upon it for a breach happening in his time. 4 Kent, Comm. 470; 2 Bl. Comm. 304; Chapman' v. Holmes, 10 N.

J. Law, 20; Skinner v. Mitchell, 5 Kan. App. 36C, 48 Pac. 450; Oil Co. v. Hinton, 159 ln5. 398, 64 N. E. 224 ; Davis ▼. Lyman, 6 Conn. 249. In the old books, a covenant real is also defined to be a covenant by which a man binds himself to pass a thing real, as lands or tenements. Termes de la Ley; 3 Bl. Comm. 156; Shep. Touch. 161. A personal covenant, on the other hand, is one which, instead of being a charge upon real estate of the covenantor, only binds himself and his personal representatives in respect to assets. 4 Kent, Comm. 470; Car- ter v. Denman, 23 N. J. Law, 270: Hadley v. Bemero, 97 Mo. App. 314, 71 S. W. 451. The phrase may also mean a covenant which is per- sonal to the covenantor, that is, one which he most perform in person, and cannot procure another person to perform for him.

Transitive or intransitive; the former be- ing those personal covenants the duty of performing which passes over to the representa- tives of the covenantor; while the latter are those the duty of performing which is limited to the covenantee himself, and does not pass over to his representative. Bac. Abr. Cov.

Disjunctive covenants. Those which are for the performance of one or more of several things at the election of the covenantor or covenantee, as the case may be. Platt, Cov. 21.

Absolute or conditional. An absolute covenant is one which is uot qualified or limited by any condition.

The following compound and descriptive terms may also be noted;

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Continuing covenant. One which indi- cates or necessarily implies the doing of stipu- lated acts successively or as often as the oc- casion may require ; as, a covenant to pay rent by installments, to keep the premises in repair or insured, to cultivate land, etc. Mc- Glynn v. Moore, 25 Cal. 395.

Full covenants. As this term is used in American law, it includes the following: The covenants for seisin, for right to convey, against incumbrances, for quiet enjoyment, sometimes for further assurance, and almost always of warranty, this last often taking the place of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and indeed in many states being the only covenant in practical use. Rawle, Cov. for Title, S 21.

Mutual covenants. A mutual covenant is one where either party may recover damages from the other for the injury he may have re- ceived from a breach of the covenants in his favor. Baiiey v. White, 3 Ala. 330.

Separate covenant. A several covenant ; one which binds the several covenantors each for himself, but not jointly.

Usual covenants. An agreement on the part of a seller of real property to give the usual covenants binds him to insert in the grant covenants of "seisin." "quiet enjoyment," "further assurance." "general warranty," and "against incumbrances." Civ. Code Cal. I 1733. See Wilson v. Wood, 17 N. J. Eq. 216, 88 Am. Dec. 231 ; Drake v. Barton. 18 Minn. 467 (Gil. 414). The mailt of the authorities appears to be that in a case where the agreement is silent as to the particular covenants to be inserted in the lease, and provides merely for the lease containing "usual covenants," or, which is the same thing, in an open agreement without any reference to the covenants, and there are no special circumstances justifying the introduc- tion of other covenants, the following are the only ones which either party can insist upon, namely: Covenants by the lessee (1) to pay rent ; (2) to pay taxes, except such as are expressly payable by the landlord ; (3) to keep and de- liver up the premises in repair; and (4) to al- low the lessor to enter and view the state of repair ; and the usual qualified covenant by the lessor for quiet enjoyment by the lessee. 7 Ch. Div. 561.

Specific covenants. — Covenant against Incumbrances. A covenant that there are no incumbrances on the land conveyed ; a stipula- tion against all rights to or interests in the land which may subsist in third persons to the diminution of the value of the estate granted. Bank v. Parisette, 68 Ohio St. 450, 67 N. E. 896 ; Shearer v. Ranger, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 447 ; Sanford v. Wheelan, 12 Or. 301. 7 Pac. 324. —Covenant for farther assurance. An undertaking, in the form of a covenant, on the part of the vendor of real estate to do such further acts for the purpose of perfecting the purchaser's title as the latter may reasonably require. This covenant is deemed of great im- portance, since it relates both to the title of the vendor and to the instrument of conveyance to the vendee, and operates as well to secure the performance of all acts necessary for supplying any defect in the fonner as to remove all ob- jections to the sufficiency and security of the latter. Covenants usually inserted in a conveyance of land, on the part of the grantor, and binding him for the complete- ness, security, and continuance of the title trans- ferred to the grantee. They comprise “cove- nants for seisin, for right to convey, against incumbrances, or quiet enjoyment, sometimes for further assurance, and almost always of war- ranty.” Rawle. Cov. f 21. — Covenants in gross. Such as do not run with the land.— Covenant not to sue. A covenant by one who had a right of action at the time of making It against another person, by which he agrees not to sue to enforce such right of ac- tion. — Covenant of non-claim. A covenant sometimes employed, particularly in the New England states, and in deeds of extinguishment of ground rents in Pennsylvania, that neither the vendor, nor his heirs, nor any other person, etc., shall claim any title in the premises con- veyed. Rawle, Cov. $ 22. — Covenant of right to convey. An assurance by the covenantor that the grantor has sufficient capacity and title to convey the estate which he by his deed un- dertakes to convey. — Covenant of seisin. An assurance to the purchaser that the grantor has the very estate in quantity and quality which he purports to convey. 11 East, 641 ; Rawle, Cov. | 58. It is said that the covenant of seisin is not now in use in England, being embraced in that of a right to convey ; but it is used in several of the United States. 2 Washb. Real Prop. *648; Pecare v. Chouteau, 13 Mo. 527 ; Kincaid v. Brittain, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 121 ; Backus v. McCoy, 3 Ohio, 221, 17 Am. Dec. 5®; De Long v. Sea Girt Co., 65 N. J. Law, 1, 47 Atl. 491 . — Covenant of warranty. An assurance by the grantor of an estate that the grantee shall enjoy the same without interrup- tion by virtue of paramount title. King v. Kil- bride, 58 Conn. 109, 19 Atl. 519; Kincaid v. Brittain, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 124: King v. Kerr, 5 Ohio, 155, 22 Am, Dec. 777 ; Chapman v. Holmes, 10 N. .T. Law, 26. — Covenant run- ning with land. A covenant which goes with the land, as being annexed to the estate, and which cannot be separated from the land, and transferred without it. 4 Kent, Comm. 472, note. A covenant is said to run with the land, when not only the original parties or their rep- resentatives. but each successive owner of the land, will be entitled to its benefit, or be liable (as the case may be) to its obligation. 1 Steph. Comm. 455. Or, in other words, it is so called when either tbe liability to perform it or the right to take advantage of it passes to the as- signee of the land. Tillotson v. Prichard, 60 Vt. 94, 14 Atl. 302. 6 Am. St. Rep. 95; Spen- cer’s Case, 3 Coke. 31 ; Gilmer v. Railway Co., 79 Ala. 572, 58 Am. Rep. 623: Conduitt v. Ross, 102 Ind. 166, 26 N. E. 198.— Covenant to convey. A covenant by which the cove- nantor agrees to convey to the covenantee a certain estate, under certain circumstances.— Covenant to stand seised. A conveyance adapted to the case where a person seised of land in possession, reversion, or vested remain- der. proposes to convey it to his jvife, child, or kinsman. In its terms it consists of a covenant by him, in consideration of his natural lore and affection, to -stand seised of tbe land to the use of the intended transferee. Before the stat- ute of uses this would merely have raised a use in favor of the covenantee ; but by that act this use is converted into the legal estate, and the covenant therefore operates as a conveyance of tbe land to the covenantee. It is now almost obsolete. 1 Steph. Comm. 532 ; Williams, Seis. 145; French v. French. 3 N. II. 261; Jack- son v. Swart, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 85.

[Spencer's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 16a (1583)]

The entry's 'covenant running with land' — binding successive owners — is governed by Spencer's Case: a covenant runs only if it touches and concerns the land, so that the benefit or burden passes with the estate to assignees.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the running covenant at length and cites Spencer's Case as its authority (given as '3 Coke, 31,' an edition variance); the touch-and-concern rule is the case's holding and the operative test...

COVENANTS PERFORMED.

In Penn- sylvania practice. This is the name of a plea to the action of covenant whereby the defendant, upon informal notice to the plain- tiff, may give anything In evidence which he might have pleaded. With the addition of the words “absque hoc" it amounts to a denial of the allegations of the declaration; and the further addition of “with leave,” etc., imports an equitable defense, arising out of special circumstances, which the de- fendant means to offer in evidence. Burrows, 414, 417 ; Smith v. Jones, 08 Vt. 132. 34 Atl. 424. As to the distinction between competenry and credibility, see COMPETENCY. —Credibly informed. The statement in a pleading or affidavit that one is "credibly in- formed and verily believes" such and such facts, means that, having no direct personal knowl- edge of the matter in question, he has derived his information in regard to it from authentic sources or from the statements of persons who are not onlv "credible." in the sense of being trustworthy', but also informed as to the part ticular matter or conversant with it.

CREDIT. 1. The ability of a business rnuu.to borrow money, or obtain goods on lime, In consequence of the favorable opin- ion held by the community, or by the par- ticular lender, as to his solvency and relia- bility. People v. Wasservogle, 77 Cal. 173, 19. Pac. 270; Dry Dock Bank v. Trust Co., 3 X. Y. 356.

2. Time allowed to the buyer of goods by the seller, in which to make payment for them.

3. The correlative of a debt; that is, a debt considered from the creditor's stand- point, or that which is incoming or due to One. ■ ■

4. That which is due to a merchant, as distinguished from debit, that which is due by him.

5. That influence connected with certain social positions. 20 Toulller, n. 10.

Tbe credit of an individual is the trust re- posed in him by those who deal with him that he is of ability to meet his engagements; and he is trusted because through the tribunals of the country he may be made to pay. The credit of a government is founded on a belief of its ability to comply with its engagements, and a confidence in uts honor, that it will do that voluntarily which it cannot be compelled to do. Owen v. Branch Bank, 3 Ala. 258.

— : Sill o* credit. See Bill.— Letter of credit. An open or sealed letter, from a mer- chant in one place, directed to another, in an- other place or country, requiring him. if a per- son therein named, or the bearer of the letter, shall have occasion to buy commodities, or to want money to any particular or unlimited amount, either to procure the same or to pass his promise, bill, or bond for it, tbe writer of the letter undertaking to provide him the money for the goods, or to repay him by exchange, or to give him such satisfaction as he shall re- quire, either for himself, or the bearer of the letter. 3 Chit. Com. Law, 33G. A letter of credit is a written instrument, addressed by one person to anothe'r. requesting tbe latter to give credit to the person in whose favor it is drawn. Civ. Code Cal. I 2858. [Law: UCC Article 5 — letters of credit]

The letter of credit the entry defines at length — the issuer's undertaking to honor drafts drawn under it — is governed by the UCC's letter-of-credit article, which treats the issuer's obligation as independent of the underlying contract.

Why: Genuine: the (parser-fused) CREDIT entry defines general and special letters of credit with cases; UCC Article 5 is the governing statute. Keyed under CREDIT though the text lacks its own headword in the JSON (flagged...

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 553 — setoff of mutual debts in bankruptcy]

The entry's 'mutual credits' in bankrupt law — cross-demands between the bankrupt and a creditor — survive as the setoff right: mutual pre-petition debts may be set off against each other in bankruptcy.

Why: Genuine: the entry's mutual-credits paragraph describes the equitable setoff of cross-demands in bankruptcy; § 553 is the Code provision preserving that right. Confident on the section.

CREDITOR.

A person to whom a debt Is owing by another person, called the “debt- or.’’ Mohr v. Elevator Co., 40 Minn. 343, 41 X. tV. 1074 ; Woolvertoh v. Taylor Co., 43 111. App. 424 ; Insurant , Co. v. Meeker, N. J. Law, 300; Walsh v. Miller, 51 Ohio St 462, 38 N. E. 381. The foregoing is the strict legal sense of the term ; but in a wider sense It means one who has a legal right to demand and recover from another a sum of money on any account whatever, and hence may Include the owner of any right of action against another, whether arising on contract or for a tort u penalty; or a forfeiture. CREDITORS’ BOX.

In English prac- tice. A bill In equity, filed by one or more creditors, for an account of the assets of a decedent, and a legal settlement and dis- tribution of his estate among themselves and such other creditors as may come in under the decree.

In American practice. A proceeding to enforce the security of a judgment creditor against the property or Interests of his debt- or. This action proceeds upon the theory that the judgment Is in the nature of a lien, such as may be enforced in equity. Hudson v. Wood (C. C.) 119 Fed. 775 ; Fink v. Pat- terson (C. C.) 21 Fed. 602; Gould v. Tor- rance, 19 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 560; McCart- ney v. Bostwick, 32 N. Y. 57.

A creditors’ bill, strictly. Is a bill by which a creditor seeks to satisfy his debt out of some equitable estate of the defend- ant, which Is not liable to levy and sale under an execution at law. But there Is another sort of a creditors’ bill, very nearly allied to the former, by means of which a party seeks to remove a fraudulent convey- ance out of the way of his

[Law] — Law

[Law: common-law burglary — breaking and entering a dwelling at nighttime]

The twilight line the entry draws — light sufficient to discern a face — served the common-law requirement that burglary be a nighttime breaking and entering of a dwelling; most modern statutes punish burglary by day or night alike.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines crepusculum expressly 'in the law of burglary' as the twilight test; the nighttime element is the doctrine the defined term served. The note gives the operative context, kept in loose form. [re-homed from 'CREPUSCULUM' to 'CREPUSGUL1TM' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]
