Par- dessue, no. 296. — Open a deposition. To break the seals by which it was secured, and lay it open to view, or to bring it into court ready for use.— Open a Judgment. To lift or relax the bar of finality and conclusiveness which it imposes so as to permit a re-examination of the merits of the action in which it was rendered. This is done at the instance of a party show- ing good cause why the execution of the judg- ment would be inequitable. It so far annuls the' judgment as to prevent its enforcement until the final determination upon it, but does not in the mean time release its lien upon real estate. See Insurance Co. v. Beale, 110 Pa. 321, 1 Atl. 926. —Open a rule. To restore or recall a rule which has been made absolute to its conditional state, as a rule nisi, so as to readmit of cause being shown against the rule. Thus, when a rule to show cause has been made absolute un- der a mistaken impression that no counsel had been instructed to show cause against it, it is usual for the party at whose instance the rule was obtained to consent to have the rule opened, by which all the proceedings subsequent to the day when cause ought to have been shown against it are in effect nullified, and the rule is then argued in the ordinary way. Brown.— Open a street or highway. To establish it by law and make it passable and available for public travel. See Reed v. Toledo, 18 Ohio, 161 ; Wllcoxon v. San Luis Obispo, 101 Cal. 508, 35 Pac. 988; Gaines v. Hudson County Ave. Com'rs, 37 N. J. Law, 12.— Open bids. To open bids received on a foreclosure or other judicial sale is to reject or cancel them for fraud, mistake, or other canse, and order a re- sale of the property. Andrews v. Scotton, 2 Bland (Md.)

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:9, KJV]

"Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work."

Why: The operatio is the day's work as a measured unit of service; the commandment ordains the day as the unit of labor. Spoken by God in the Decalogue — flagged per the red-letter rule.

OPERATION.

In general, the exertion of power; the process of operating or mode of action; an effect brought about In ac- cordance with a definite plan. See Little Rock t. Parish, 36 Ark. 166; Fleming Oil Ca v. South Penn Oil Co., 37 W. Va. 653, 17 &

E. 203. In surgical practice, the term is of indefinite import, but may be approximately defined as an act or succession of acts per- formed upon the body of a patient, for his relief or restoration to normal conditions, either by manipulation or the use of surgical Instruments or both, as distinguished from therapeutic treatment by the administration of drugs or other remedial agencies. See Akridge T. Noble, 114 Ga. 949, 41 S. E. 78.

—Criminal operation. In medical jurispru- dence. An operation to procure an abortion. Miller v. Bayer, 94 Wia. 123, 68 N. W. 869.— Operation of law. This term expresses the manner in which rights, and sometimes liabili- ties, devolve upon a person by the mere appli- cation to the particular transaction of the es- tablished rules of law, without the act or co- operation of the party himself.

OPERATIVE.

A workman ; a laboring man ; an artisan ; particularly one employed in factories. Cocking v. Ward (Tenn. Ch. App.) 48 S. W. 287 ; In re City Trust Co., 121 Fed. 706, 58 C. C. A. 126; Rhodes v. Mat- thews, 67 Ind. 131.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 10:7, KJV]

"And remain in the same house, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire."

Why: The operative is the laboring man; the verse states the laborer's right — worthy of his hire. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

Opinio est duplex, seilioet, opinio vul- garis, orta inter graves et discretos, et «w vultum veritatis habett et opinio tantnm orta inter levee et vnlgares homi- nes, absque specie veritatis. 4 Coke, 107. Opinion is of two kinds, namely, common opinion, which springs up among grave and discreet men, and which has the appearance of truth, and opinion which springs up only among light and foolish men, without the semblance of truth.

Opinio quae favet test amen to est te- nenda. The opinion which favors a will is to be followed. 1 W. Bl. 13, arg.

OPINION. 1. In the law of evidence, opinion is an Inference or conclusion drawn by a witness from facts some of which are known to him and others assumed, or drawn from facts which, though lending probability to the inference, dd not evolve it by a pro- cess of absolutely necessary reasoning. See Lipscomb v. State, 75 Miss. 559, 23 South. 210.

An inference necessarily involving certain facts may be stated without the facts, the in- ference being an equivalent to a specification of the facts ; but, when the facts are not neces- sarily involved in the inference (e. p., when the inference may be sustained upon either of sev- eral distinct phases of fact, neither of which it necessarily involves,) then the facts must be stated. Whart. Ev.) 510.

2. A document prepared by an attorney for his client, embodying his understanding of the law as applicable to a state of facts submitted to him for that purpose.

3. The statement by a judge or court of the decision reached In regard to a cause tried or argued before them, expounding the law as applied to the case, and detailing the reasons upon which the judgment is based. See Craig v. Bennett, 158 Ind. 9, 62 N. E. 273 ; Coffey v. Gamble, 117 Iowa, 545, 91 N.

W. 813 ; Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24, 73 Am. Dec. 565; State v. Ramsburg, 43 Md. 333.

— Concurring opinion. An opinion, separate from that which embodies the views and decision of the majority of the court, prepared and filed by a judge who agrees in the general result of the decision, and which either reinforces the majority opinion by the expression of the par- ticular judge’s own views or reasoning, or (more commonly) voices his disapproval of the grounds of the derision or the arguments on which It was based, though approving the final result.— Dissenting opinion. A separate opinion in which a particular judge announces Ins dissent from the conclusion held by a majority of the court, and expounds his own views.— Per curi- um opinion. One concurred in by the entire court, but expressed as being “ per curiam” or “by the court,” without disclosing the name of. any particular judge as being ita author.

OPTION.

In English ecclesiastical law. A customary prerogative of an archi bishop, when a bishop is consecrated by him, to name a clerk or chaplain of his own to be provided for by such suffragan bishop; in lieu of which it is now usual for the bishop to inuke over by deed to the archbishop, his executors and assigns, the next presentation of such dignity or benefice in the bishop’s disposal within that see, as the archbishop himself shall choose, which is therefore call- ed his “option.” 1 BL Comm. 381 ; 3 Steph. Comm. 63, 64; Cowell.

In contracts. An option is a privilege existing in one person, for which he has paid money, which gives him the right to buy cer- tain merchandise or certain specified securi- ties from another person, if he chooses, at any time within an agreed period, at a fixed price, or to sell such property to such other person at an agreed price and time. If the option gives the choice of buying or not buy- ing, it is denominated a “call.” If it gives the choice of selling or not, it is called a “put” If it is a combination of both these, and gives the privilege of either buying or selling or not, it is called a "straddle” or a “spread eagle.” These terms are used on the stock-exchange. See Tenney v. Foote, 95 111. 99; Plank v. Jackson, 128 Ind. 424, 26 N. E. 568; Osgood v. Bauder, 75 Iowa, 550, 39 N. W. 887, 1 L. R. A. 655.

OPTIONAL WRIT.

In old England prac- tice. That species of original writ other- wise called a “ pracipc ,” which was framed in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the rea- sod wherefore he had not done It 3 Bl. Com m. 274.

OPUS.

Lat Work; labor; the product of work or labor.

— Opus locatum. The product of work let for use to another; or the hiring out of work or labor to be done upon a thing.— Optra n«n- lficum. In old English law. Labor done by the hands; manual labor; such as making a hedge, digging a ditch. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 48, f 3. — Opus novum. In the civil law. A new work. By this term was meant something new- ly built upon land, or taken from a work al- ready erected. He was said opus novum facere (to make a new work) who, either by building or by taking anything away, changed the former appearance of a work. Dig. 39, 1, X, XI.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 14:23, KJV]

"In all labour there is profit: but the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury."

Why: Opus is work, labor, and its product; the proverb states labor's fruit — in all labour there is profit. Not deity speech — no flag.

A term used In heraldry, and signi- fying gold; called “sol” by some heralds when It occurs in the arms of princes, and “topaz” or “carbuncle” when borne by peers. Engravers represent it by an indefinite num- ber of small points. Wharton.

ORA.

A Saxon coin, valued at sixteen pence, and sometimes at twenty pence.

ORACOLOM.

In the civil law. The name of a kind of response or sentence given by the Roman emperors.

ORAL.

Uttered by the mouth or In words; spoken, not written.

—Oral contract. One which is partly in writ- ing and partly depends on spoken words, or none of which is in writing; one which, in so far as it has been reduced to writing, is incomplete or expresses only a part of what is intended, but is completed by spoken words ; or one which, orig- inally written, has afterwards been changed orally. See Snow v. Nelson (0. C.) 113 Fed. 353 ; Railway Passenger, etc., Ass’n v. Loomis, 142 111. 560, 32 N. E. 424.— Oral pleading;. Pleading by word of mouth, in the actual pres- ence of the court. This was the ancient mode of pleading in England, and continued to the reign of Edward III. Stepb. Pi. 23-26.— Oral testimony. That which is delivered from the lips of the witness. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio 1904, f 5262 ; Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, S 3704.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 12:37, KJV]

"For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

Why: The oral — the spoken word — is legally operative in the oral contract; Christ's words make spoken words the ground of justification and condemnation. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

ORANDO PRO REGE ET REGNO.

An ancient writ which issued, while there was no standing collect for a sitting parlia- ment, to pray for the peace and good govern- ment of the realm.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Jeremiah 29:7, KJV]

"And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the LORD for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace."

Why: The writ's whole purpose was prayer for the peace and good government of the realm; the verse commands exactly that prayer for the city of one's dwelling. Jeremiah's letter, not deity speech — no flag.

ORANGEMEN.

A party in Ireland who keep alive the views of William of Orange. Wharton.

ORATOR.

The plaintiff in a cause or matter in chancery, when addressing or pe- titioning the court, used to style himself “or- ator,” and, when a woman, “oratrix.” But these terms have long gone into disuse, and the customary phrases now are “plaintiff” or “petitioner.”

In Roman law, the term denoted an advo- cate.

ORATRIX.

A female petitioner; a fe- male plaintiff in a bill In chancery was for- merly so called.

ORBATION.

Deprivation of one’s pa- rents or children, or priva'tion in general. Little used.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 14:18, KJV]

"I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you."

Why: Orbation is deprivation of parents — being left orphaned; 'comfortless' renders the Greek for orphaned, and Christ's promise answers it directly. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

ORCINUS LIBERTUS.

Lat In Ro- man law. A freedman who obtained his lib- erty by the direct operation of the will or testament of his deceased master was so called, being the freedman of the deceased, (orcinut,) not of the hares. Brown.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 8:36, KJV]

"If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

Why: The orcinus libertus obtained liberty by the direct operation of his master's will; the verse states liberty's highest form — freedom given by the Son's act. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

ORDAIN.

To institute or establish; to make an ordinance; to enact a constitution or law. Kepner v. Comm., 40 Pa. 124 ; U. S. v. Smith, 4 N. J. Law, 38.

ORDEAL.

The most ancient species of trial, In Saxon and old English law, being peculiarly distinguished by the appellation of " judicium Dei," or “judgment of God,” it being supposed that supernatural interven- tion would rescue an innocent person from the danger of physical harm to which he was exposed in this species of trial. The or- deal was of two sorts, — either fire ordeal or water ordeal; the former being confined to persons of higher rank, the latter to the com- mon people. 4 BL Comm. 342.

—Eire ordeal. The ordeal by fire or red-hot iron, which was performed either by taking up In the hand a piece of red-hot iron, of one, two, or three pounds weight, or by walking barefoot and blindfolded over nine red-hot plowshares, laid lengthwise at unequal distances 4 Bl. Comm. 343; Cowell.

ORDEFEE, or ORDELFE. A liberty whereby a man claims the ore found in his own land; also, the ore lying under land. Cowell.

ORDER.

In a general sense. A man- date, precept; a command or direction au- thoritatively given ; a rule or regulation.

The distinction between “order” and “requisi- tion” is that the first is a mandatory act, the latter a request. Mills v. Martin, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 7.

In practice. Every direction of a court or judge made or entered In writing, and not included in a judgment la denominated an “order.” An application for an order is a motion. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. I 1003; Code

N. Y. f 400.

Order* are also issued by subordinate legisla- tive authorities. Such are the English orders in council, or orders issued by the privy council in the name of the king, either in exercise of the royal prerogative or in pursuance of an act of parliament. The rules of court under the judicature act are grouped together in the form of orders, each order dealing with a particular subject-matter. Sweet.

An order is also an Informal bill of ex- change or letter of request whereby the party to whom it is addressed is directed to pay or deliver to a person therein named the whole or part of a fund or other property of the person making the order, and which is in the

It Is further a designation of the person to whom a bill of exchange or negotiable promissory note is to be paid.

It is also used to designate a rank, class, or division of men ; as the order of nobles, order of knights, order of priests, etc.

In French law. The name order (ordre) is given to the operation which has for its object to fix the rank of the preferences claimed by the creditors in the distribution of the price [arising from the sale] of an Immovable affected by their liens. Dalloz, mol “Ordre."

—Agreed order. See Aobeed. — Charging order. The name bestowed, in English prac- tice, upon an order allowed by St 1 & 2 Viet c. 110, 8 14, and 3 & 4 Viet. c. 82, to be grant- ed to a judgment creditor, that the property of a judgment debtor in government stock, or in the stock of any public company in England, corporate or otherwise, shall (whether standing in his own name or in the name of any person in trust for him) stand charged with the pay- ment of the amount for which judgment shall have been recovered, with interest, 3 Steph. Comm. 587, 588.— Decretal order. In chan- cery practice. An order made by the court of chancery, in the nature of a decree, upon a mo- tion or petition. Thompson v. McKim, 6 Har. & J. Md. 319; Bissell Carpet Sweeper Co. v. Goshen Sweeper Co., 72 Fed. 545, 19 C. C. A. 25. An order in a chancery suit made on mo- tion or otherwise not at the regular hearing of a cause, and yet not of an interlocutory nature, but finally disposing of the cause, so far as a decree could then have disposed of it. Mozley & Whitley.— Pinal order. One which either terminates the action itself, or decides some matter litigated by the parties, or operates to divest some right ; or one which completely dis- poses of the subject-matter and the rights of the nsrties. v_ Beckwith, 6 Ohio St. 254;

Entrop v. Williams, 11 Minn. 382 (Gil. 276); Struli v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 76 S.

W. 183.— General orders. Orders or rules of court, promulgated for the guidance of practi- tioners and the regulation of procedure in gen- eral, or in some general branch of its jurisdic- tion ; as opposed to a rule or an order made in an individual case ; the rules of court. — In- terlocutory order. “An order which decides not the cause, but only settles some Intervening matter relating to it; as when an order is made, on a motion in chancery, for the plaintiff to have an injunction to quiet his possession till the hearing of the cause. This or any such order, not being final, is interlocutory.” Termes de la Ley.— Money order. See Monet.— Or- der and disposition of goods and chattels. When goods are in the “order and disposition" of a bankrupt, they go to hia trustee, and have gone so since the time of James I. Wharton. —Order niai. paternity of a bastard child upon a given man, and requiring him to provide for its support— Order of re- vivor. In English practice. An order as of course for the continuance of an abated suit It superseded the bill of revivor. — Restrain- ing order. In equity practice. An order which may issue upon the filing of an applica- tion for an injunction forbidding the defendant to do the threatened act until a hearing on the application can be had. Though the term is sometimes used as a synonym of “injunction,” a restraining order is properly distinguishable from an injunction, in that the former is in- tended only as a restraint upon the defendant until the propriety of granting an injunction, temporary or perpetual, can be determined, and it does no more than restrain the pn*.*e',,ugs until such determination. Wetzateln v. Boston, etc., Min. Co., 25 Mont. 135, 63 Pac. 1043 ; State v. Lichtenberg, 4 Wash. 407, 30 Pac. 716: Riggins v. Thompson, 96 Tex. 154, 71 8. W. 14. In English law, the term is special- ly applied to an order restraining the Bank of England, or any public company, from allowing any dealing with some stock or shares specified in the order. It Is granted on motion or peti- tion. Hunt. Eq. p. 216.— Speoldmc order. An order which contains matter which la ex- planatory or illustrative of the mere direction which is given by it is sometimes thus called. Puff v. Duff, 101 Cal. 1, 35 Pac. 437.— Stop or- der. The meaning of a stop order given to a broker is to wait until the' market price of the particular security reaches a specified figure, and then to “stop” the transaction by either selling or buying, as the case may be. as well as possible. Porter v. Wormser, 94 N. Y. 431.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 8:9, KJV]

"For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh."

Why: An order is a mandate authoritatively given — mandatory, not a request; the centurion's description of command is the concept's scriptural form. The centurion's speech, not deity speech — no flag.

ORDERS.

The directions as to the course and purpose of a voyage given by the owner of the vessel to the captain or master. For other meanings, see Obdeb.

ORDERS OF THE DAT.

Any member of the English house of commons who wishes to propose any question, or to “move the house,” as it Is termed, must, in order to give the house due notice of his Intention, state the form or nature of his motion on' a previous day, and have It entered in a book termed the “order-book;” and the motions .so entered, the house arranges, shall be con- sidered on' particular days, and such motions or matters, when the day arrives for their being considered, are then termed the “or- ders of the day.” Brown. A similar prac- tice obtains in the legislative bodies of this country.

ORDINANCE.

A rule established by authority ; a permanent mle of action ; a legislative body of a municipal corpora- tion. Citizens' Gas Co. v. Elwood, 114 Ind. 332, 16 N. E. 624; State v. Swindell, 140 Ind. 527, 45 N. E. 700, 58 Am. St Rep. 375 ; Bills v. Goshen, 117 Ind. 22i, 20 N. E. 115, 3 I* R. A. 261; State v. Lee, 29 Minn. 445, 13 N. W. 913.

Strictly, a bill or law which might stand with the old law, and did not alter any statute in force at the time, and which became complete by the royal assent on the parliament roll,. with- out any entry on the statute roll. A bill or law which might at any time be amended by the parliament, without any statute. Hale, Com. Law. An ordinance was otherwise distinguish- ed from a statute by the circumstance that the latter required the threefold assent of king, lords, and commons, while an ordinance might he ordained by ope or two of these constituent bodies. See 4 Inst. 25.

The name has also been given to certain enactments, more general In their character than ordinary statutes, and serving as or- ganic laws-, yet not exactly to be called ‘‘con- stitutions." Such was the "Ordinance for the government of the North-West Terri- tory," enacted by congress In 1787.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:1, KJV]

"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God."

Why: An ordinance is a rule established by authority; the verse grounds all ordained authority — 'the powers that be are ordained of God.' Not deity speech — no flag.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Co. Litt. 96; recorded as the entry's own cited authority.

ORDINATIONE CONTRA SERVIEN- / TES.

A writ that lay against a servant for leaving his master contrary to the ordinance of St. 23 & 24 Edw. III. Reg. Orig. 189.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 23:15, KJV]

"Thou shalt not deliver unto his master the servant which is escaped from his master unto thee."

Why: The writ punished the servant for leaving his master; the verse is scripture's counterpoint — the escaped servant shall not be delivered back. Third-person law — no flag.

ORDINATUM EST.

In old practice. It la ordered. The initial words of rnles of court when entered in Latin.

Online placitandi servato, servatur at Ja«. When the order of pleading Is ob- served, the law also is observed. Co. Litt 303a; Broom, Max. 188.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Ordine placitandi servato, servatur et jus — when the order of pleading is observed, the law also is observed]

The entry quotes the maxim that when the order of pleading is observed, the law also is observed.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Co. Litt. 303a and Broom, Max. 188; recorded as the entry's own cited authorities on the value of procedural order.

ORDINES.

A general chapter or other solemn convention of the religious of a par- ticular order.

0RDINE8 UAJORES ET MINORE8 860

ORDINE8 MAJORES ET MIN ORES.

In ecclesiastical law. The holy orders of priest, deacon, and subdeacon, any of which qualified for presentation and admission to an ecclesiastical dignity or cure were called “ordinal majorcs;" and the inferior orders of chanters, psalmists, ostiary, reader, ex- orcist, and acolyte were called “ordinal minorcs." Persons ordained to the ordinal m inores had their prima tonsura, different from the tonsura clericalis. Cowell.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 4:11, KJV]

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers."

Why: The entry lists the holy orders of ministry; the verse lists the offices Christ gave — the scriptural ordering of ministries. Not deity speech — no flag.

ORDINIS BENEFICIUM.

Lat. In the civil law. The benefit or privilege of order ; the privilege which a surety for a

ORFGILD.

In Saxon law. The price or value of a beast A payment for a beast. The payment or forfeiture of a beast. A penalty for taking away cattle. Spelman.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:1, KJV]

"If a man shall steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep."

Why: Orfgild was the payment or penalty for a beast taken away; the verse fixes the penalty for the stolen ox or sheep — manifold restoration. Third-person law — no flag.

ORGANIC ACT.

An act of congress con- ferring powers of government upon a ter- ritory. In re Lane, 135 U. S. 443, 10 Sup. Ct. 760, 34 L. Ed. 219.

ORGANIC LAW.

Tile fundamental law, or constitution, of a state or nation, written er unwritten; that law or system of laws or principles which defines and establishes the organization of its government St Louis v. Dorr, 145 Mo. 466, 46 S. W. 076, 42 L. R. A. 686, 6S Am. St. Rep. 575.

ORGANIZE.

To establish or furnish with organs; to systematize; to put into working order; to arrange in order for the normal exercise of its appropriate functions.

The word “organize,” as used in railroad and other charters, ordinarily signifies the choice and qualification of all necessary of- ficers for the transaction of the business of the corporation. This is usually done after all the capital stock has been subscribed for. New Haven & D. R. Co. v. Chapman, 38 Conn. 66.

ORGANIZED COUNTY.

A county which has its lawful officers, legnl machin- ery, and means for carrying out the powers and performing the duties pertaining to it as a quasi municipal corporation. In re Section No. 6, 66 Minn. 32, 68 N. W. 323.

ORGlLD. In Saxon law. Without rec- ompense; as where no satisfaction was to be made for the death of a man killed, so that he was judged lawfully slain. Spelman.

ORIGINAL.

Primitive; first in order; bearing its own authority, and not deriving authority from an outside source ; as original jurisdiction, original writ, etc. As applied to documents, the original is the first copy or archetype; that from which another in- strument is transcribed, copied, or imitated.

—Original bill. In equity pleading. A bill which relates to some matter not before litigat- ed in the court by the same persons standing in the same interests. Mitf. Eq. IM. 33 : Long- worth v. Sturges, 4 Ohio St. 690: Christmas v. Russell, 14 Wall. 69, 20 L. Ed. 762. In old practice. The ancient mode of commencing actions in the English court of king's bench. See Biia. — Original charter. In Scotch law. One by whit* the first grant of land is made. On the other hand, a charter by prog- ress is one renewing the grant in favor of the heir or singular successor of the first or succeed- ing vassals. Bell.— Original conveyances.

jurisdiction. See Jurisdiction.— Original package. A package prepared for interstate or foreign transportation, and remaining in the same con- dition as when it left the shipper, that is, un- broken and undivided; a package of such form and size as is .used by producers or shippers for the purpose of securing both convenience in handling and security in transporation of mer- chandise between dealers in the ordinary course of actual commerce. Austin v. Tennessee. 179

U. S. 343, 21 Sup. Ct. 132. 45 L. Ed. 224; Haley v. State, 42 Neb. 556, 60 N. W. 962, 47 Am. St Rep. 718; State v. Winters, 44 Kan. 723, 25 Pac. 235, 10 L. R. A. 616.— Original prop ess. See Process.— Original writ. See WRIT.— Single original. An orig- inal instrument which is executed singly, and not in duplicate.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 28:18, KJV]

"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."

Why: Original, in the jurisdictional sense, is authority bearing its own warrant, derived from no outside source; Christ's words claim exactly that underived authority. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter...

ORIGIN AX IA.

In English law. Tran- scripts sent to the remembrancer’s office in the exchequer out of the chancery, distin- guished from recorda, which contain the judgments and pleadings in actions tried be- fore the barons.

Origins propria neminem poaae vo- lnntate ana enlxni manifesting est. It is evident that no one is able of his own pleas- ure, to do away, with his proper origin. Code 10, 38, 4 ; Broom, Max. 77.

Orlgo rel lnspioi debet. The origin of a thing ought to be regarded. Co. Litt. 248b.

ORNEST.

In old English law. The trial by battle, which does not seem to have been usual in England before the time of the Conqueror, though originating in the king- doms of the north, where it was practiced under the name of "holmgang," from the custom of fighting duels on a small island or holm. Wharton.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Samuel 17:9, KJV]

"If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants: but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and serve us."

Why: Ornest was trial by battle; Goliath's challenge states its terms — the champions' combat deciding the cause. Goliath's speech, not deity speech — no flag.

ORPHAN.

Any person (but particularly a minor or infant) who has lost both (or one) of his or her parents. More particular- ly, a fatherless child. Soohan v. Philadel- phia, 33 Pa. 24; Poston v. Young, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 501; Chicago Guaranty Fund Life Soc. v. Wheeler, 79 111. App.

241 ; Stew- art v. Morrison, 88 Miss. 419; Downing v. Sboenberger, 9 Watts (Pa.) 299.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 68:5, KJV]

"A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation."

Why: The orphan is the fatherless child; the psalm names God the father of the fatherless — the classic scriptural word for the orphan's standing. Addressed of God, not by him — no flag.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Dickens, Oliver Twist, 1838]

“Please, sir, I want some more.”

Why: Entry: particularly a fatherless child. Oliver is the archetypal fatherless workhouse child; the line is his voice. Short verbatim quote, certain.

ORPHANAGE PART.

That portioh of an intestate’s effects which his children were entitled to by the custom of London. This custom appears to have been a remnant of what, was once a general law all over Eng- land, namely, that a father should not by his Will bequeath the entirety of his personal estate away from bis family, but should leave them a third part at least, called the “children’s part,'' corresponding to the “bairns’ part" or legitim of Scotch law, and also (although not in amount) to the legitima quarto of Roman law. (Inst. 2. 18.) This custom of London was abolished by St. 19 & 29 Viet c. 94. Brown.

ORPHAN OTROPHX.

In the civil law. Managers of houses for orphans.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[James 1:27, KJV]

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

Why: The orphanotrophi managed houses for orphans; the verse defines pure religion as visiting the fatherless in affliction — the office's scriptural charge. Not deity speech — no flag.

ORPHANS’ COURT.

In American law. Courts of probate jurisdiction, in Delaware. Maryland, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Dickens, Bleak House, 1853]

(paraphrase) Jarndyce and Jarndyce — the chancery suit that devours the very estate it was set to administer — the probate court's subject in satire. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry: courts of probate jurisdiction. Bleak House is the canonical fictional indictment of the estate-devouring probate machinery. Marked paraphrase.

In old Eng- lish law. Without war or feud, such security being provided by the laws, for homicides under certain circumstances, against the foehth, or deadly feud, on the part of the family of the slain. Anc. Inst. Eng.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 35:6, KJV]

"And among the cities which ye shall give unto the Levites there shall be six cities for refuge, which ye shall appoint for the manslayer, that he may flee thither."

Why: The entry is legal security against the deadly feud for certain homicides; the cities of refuge are exactly that — appointed shelter for the manslayer from the avenger. Third-person command — no flag.

OSTENDIT VOBIS.

Lat. In old plead- ing. Shows to yon. Formal words with which a demandant began his count. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 38, § 2.

OSTENSIBLE AGENCY.

An implied or presumptive agency, which exists where one. either intentionally or from want of ordinary care, induces another to believe that a third person is his agent, though he never in fact employed him. Bibb v. Bancroft (Cal.) 22 Pac. 484; First Nat. Bank v. Elevator Co., 11 N. D. 280, 91 N. W. 437.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Agency § 8 — apparent authority]

Ostensible agency is the agency-by-estoppel doctrine: apparent authority binds the principal who clothes another with the indicia of agency.

Why: Genuine because the entry's 'ostensible agency' is precisely apparent authority — authority the principal's conduct leads a third person reasonably to believe exists; the Restatement section is the governing American...

OSTIUM EOOLES1S.

Lat. In old Eng- lish law. The door or porch of the church, where dower was anciently conferred.

OSWALD’S LAW.

The law by which was effected the ejection of married priests, and the Introduction of monks into churches, by Oswald, bishop of Worcester, about A. D. 904. Wharton.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Timothy 3:2, KJV]

"A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behaviour, given to hospitality, apt to teach."

Why: Oswald's law ejected married priests and put monks in churches; the verse is scripture's counterpoint — the bishop as the husband of one wife. Not deity speech — no flag.

OSWALD'S LAW HUNDRED.

OUT OP COURT.

He who has no legal status in court is said to be “out of court,” i, e., he is not before the court. Thus, when the plaintiff in an action, by some act of omission or commission, shows that he is unable to maintain his action, he is frequent- ly said to put himself “out of court.” Brown.

The phrase is also used with reference to agreements and transactions in regard to a pending suit which are arranged or take place between the parties or their counsel privately and without being referred to the judge or court for authorization or approval. Thus, a case which is compromised, settled, and withdrawn by private agreement of the parties, after its institution, is said to be settled “out of court" So attorneys may make agreements with reference to the con- duct of a suit or the course of proceedings therein; but if these are made “out of court,” that is, not made in open court or with the approval of the judge, it is a general rule that they will not be noticed by the court unless reduced to writing. See Welsh v. Blackwell, 14 N. J. Law, 345.

OUT OF TERM.

At a time when no term of the court is being held; in the vacation or interval which elapses between terms of the ‘court See McNeill v. Hodges, 99 N. C- 248, 6 S. E. 127.

OUT OF THE STATE.

In reference to rights, liabilities, or jurisdictions arising out of the common law, this phrase is equivalent to “beyond sea,” which see. In other con- nections, it means physically beyond the ter- ritorial limits of the particular state in ques- tion, or constructively so,' as in the case of a foreign corporation. See Faw v. Kober- deau, 3 Cranch, 177, 2 L. Ed. 402 ; Foster v. Givens, 67 Fed. 684, 14 C. C. A. 625; Meyer v. Roth, 51 Cal. 582; Yoast v. Willis, 9 Iud. 550; Larson v. Aultman A Taylor Co.. 80 Wis. 281, 56 N. W. 915, 39 Am. St Rep. 893.

OUT OF TIME.

A mercantile phrase ap- plied to a ship or vessel that has been so long at sea ns to justify the liellef of her total loss.

in another Sense, a vessel is said to be out of time when, computed from her known day of sailing, the time that has elapsed ex- ceeds the average duration of similar voyages at the same season of the year. The phrase is identical with “missing ship.” 2 Duer, Ins. 469.

OUTAGE.

A tax or charge formerly Im- posed by the state or Maryland for the In- spection and marking of hogsheads of tobacco Intended for export. See Turner v. Mary- land, 107 U. 8. 38, 2 Sup. Ct. 44, 27 L. Ed. 370 ; Turner v. State, 55 Md. 264.

OUTCROP.

In mining law. The edge of a stratum which appears at the surface of the ground; that portion of a vein or lode which appears at the surface or Immediately under the soil and surface dObrls. See Duggan v. Davey, 4 Dak. 110, 26 N. W. 887 ; Stevens v. Williams, 23 Fed. Cas. 40.

OUTER BAR.

In the English courts, barristers at law have been divided Into two classes, viz., king’s counsel, who are admit- ted within the bar of the courts, In seats specially reserved for themselves, and junior counsel, who sit without the bar; and the latter are thence frequently termed barristers of the "outer bar,” or “utter bar,” In con- tradistinction to the former class. Brown.

OUTER HOUSE.

The name given to the great hall of the parliament house in Edinburgh, In which the lords ordinary of the court of session sit as single judges to hear causes. The term is used colloquially as expressive of the business done there in contradistinction to the “Inner House,” the name given to the chambers In which the first and second divisions of the court of ses- sion hold their sittings. Bell.

OUTFAHGTHEF.

A liberty or privilege in the ancient common law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor, and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment In his own court Du Cange.

OUTFIT. 1. An allowance made by the United States government to one of its dip- lomatic representatives going abroad, for the expense of his equipment.

2. This term, in its original use, as apply- ing to ships, embraced those objects connect- ed with a ship which were necessary for the sailing of her, and without which she would not in fact be navigable. But in ships en- gaged in whaling voyages the word lias ac- quired a much more extended signification. Macy v. Whaling Ins. Co., 0 Mete. ((Mass.) 364.

OUTHEST, or OUTHOM. A calling men out to the army by sound of horn. Jacob. ’

OUTHOUSE.

Any house necessary for the purposes of life, in which the owner does not make his constant or principal residence. Is an outhouse. State v. O'Brien, -2 Root (Conn.) 516.

A smaller or subordinate building connected with a dwelling, usually detached from it and standing at a little distance from it, not in- tended for persona to live in, but to serve some purpose of convenience or necessity ; as a barn, a dairy, a toolhouse, and the like.

(JUTLAND. The Saxon thanes divided their hereditary lands into inland, such as lay nearest their dwelling, which they kept to their own use, and outland, which lay be- yond the demesnes, and was granted out to tenants, at the will of the lord, like copy- hold estates. This outland they subdivided into two parts. Qne part they disposed among those who attended their persons, called “theodans,” or lesser thanes ; the oth- er part they allotted to their husbandmen, 015 churls. Jacob.

OUTLAW.

In English law. One who is put out of the protection or aid of the law.

OUTLAWED, when applied to a promis- sory note, means barred by the statute of lim- itations. Drew v. Drew, 37 Me. 389.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 4:14, KJV]

"Behold, thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and from thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass, that every one that findeth me shall slay me."

Why: The outlaw is put out of the law's protection; Cain's cry states that state — driven out, fearing every finder's

[Traditional, Robin Hood ballads]

(paraphrase) The ballads' hero lives in Sherwood beyond the king's law — literally 'put out of the protection or aid of the law,' the entry's definition in legend. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry's English-law sense matches the outlaw of legend exactly. Marked paraphrase — traditional material, no single text quoted.

OUTLAWRY.

In English law. A pro- cess by which a defendant or person In con- tempt on a civil or criminal process was de- clared an outlaw. If for treason or felony, it amounted to conviction, and attainder. Stim. Law Gloss. See Respubllca v. Doan. 1 Dali. (Pa.) 86, 1 L. Ed. 47; Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 138; Drew v. Drew, 37 Me. 39L

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 4:11, KJV]

"And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand."

Why: Outlawry is the declaring — the pronouncement that makes the outlaw; the verse is the pronouncement itself, spoken by God over Cain. Deity speech — flagged per the red-letter rule.

OUTLOT.

In early American land law, (particularly in Missouri,) a lot or parcel of land lying outside the corporate limits of a town or village but subject to Its municl-. pal Jurisdiction or control. In conveyancing, the word “over” Is used to denote a contingent limitation In- tended to take effect on the failure of a prior estate. Thus, In what Is commonly called the “name and arms clause” in a will or settlement there is generally a proviso that if the devisee fails to comply with the con- dition the estate is to go to some one else. This is a limitation or gift over. Wats. Comp. Eq. 1110; Sweet.

OVER SEA.

Beyond the sea; outside the limits of the state or country. See Gus- tln v. Brattle, Ivlrby (Conn.) 300. See Be- yond Sea.

OVERCYTED, or OVERCYHSED.

Proved guilty or convicted. Blount.

OVERDRAW.

To draw upon a person or a bank, by bills or checks, to an amount in excess of the funds remaining to the drawer’s credit with the drawee, or to an amount greater than what is due.

The term "overdraw” has a definite and well- understood meaning. Money is drawn from the bank by him who draws the check, not by him who receives the money ; and it is drawn upon the account of the individual by whose check it is drawn, though it be paid to and for the benefit of another. No one can draw money from bank upon his own account, except by means of his own check or draft, nor can he overdraw his account with the bank in any. other manner. State v. Stiinson, 24 N. J. Lrw, 478, 484.

OVERDUE.

A negotiable Instrument or other evidence of debt Is overdue when the day of its maturity is past and It remains unpaid. Camp v. Scott, 14 Vt 387 ; La Due v. First Nat Bank, 31 Minn. 33, 16 N. \V. 426. A vessel Is said to be overdue when she has not reached her destination at the time when she might ordinarily have been expected to arrive.

OVERISSUE.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

To issue In excessive quan- tity ; to Issue In excess of fixed legal limits. Thus, “overissued stock” of a private cor- poration Is capital stock issued In excess of the amount limited and prescribed by the charter or certificate of Incorporation. See Hayden v. Charter Oak Driving Park, 63 Conn. 142, 27 Atl. 232.

OVERLIVE.

To survive; to live longer than another. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, no. 58; 1 Leon. 1.

OVERPLUS.

What is left beyond a cer- tain amount ; the residue ; the remainder of a thing. Lyon v. Tomkies, 1 Mees. & W. 603; Page v. Leaplngwell, 18 Ves. 460.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 14:20, KJV]

"And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the fragments that remained twelve baskets full."

Why: The overplus is what is left beyond sufficiency — the residue; the twelve baskets of fragments are the remainder after all were filled. Narrative, not deity speech — no flag.

OVERREACHING CLAUSE.

In a re- settlement, a clause which saves the powers of sale and leasing annexed to the estate for life created by the origiual settlement, when it is desired to give the tenant for life the same estate and powers under the re- settlement. The clause is so called because It provides that the resettlement shall be over- reached by the exercise of the old powers. If the resettlement were executed without a provision to this effect, the estate of the ten- ant for life and the annexed powers would be subject to any charges for portions, eta, created under the origiual settlement. 3 Dav. Couv. 480; Sweet.

OVERRULE.

To supersede ; annul ; re- ject by subsequent action or decision. A ju- dicial decision is said to be overruled when a later decision, rendered by the same court or by a superior, court in the same system, ex- presses a Judgment upon the same question of law directly opposite to that which was be- fore given, thereby depriving the earlier opinion of all authority as a precedent. The term is not properly applied to conflicting decisions on the same point by co-ordinate or Independent tribunals.

In another sense, “overrule” 1b spoken of the action of a court In refusing to sustain, or recognize as sufficient, an objection made in the course of a trial, as to the introduc- tion of particular evidence, etc.

OVER8AMES8A.

OVERSEER.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

A superintendent or super- visor ; a public officer whose duties involve general superintendence of routine affairs.

—Overseers of highways. The name given, in some of the states, to a board of officers of a city, township, or county, whose special func- tion is the construction and repair of the pub- lic roads or highways.— Overseers of the poor. Persons appointed or elected to take care of the poor with moneys furnished to them by the public authority.

lands, by the owner of the less valuable es- tate to the owner of the more valuable, to equalize the exchange.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Acts 20:28, KJV]

"Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God."

Why: The overseer is the superintendent; the verse uses the very word — made overseers over the flock, charged to feed it. Paul's charge, not deity speech — no flag.

OWING.

Something unpnid. A debt, for example, Is owing while it is unpaid, and whether it be due or not. Coquard v. Bank of Kansas City, 12 Mo. App. 261; Mus- selman v. Wise, 84 Ind. 248 ; Jones v. Thomp- son, 1 El., Bl. & El. 64.

OWEERS.

In English law. Persons who carried wool, etc., to the sea-side by night, in order that it might be shipped off con- trary to law. Jacob.

OWEING.

In English law. The offense of transporting wool or sheep out of the king- dom ; so called from its being usually carried on in the night. 4 Bl. Comm. 164.

OVERS MAN.

In Scotch law. An um- pire appointed by a submission to decide where two arbiters have differed in opinion, or he is named by the arbiters themselTes, under powers given them by the submission. Bell.

OVERT.

Open; manifest; public; issu- ing in action, as distinguished from that which rests merely in intention or design.

—Market overt. See Market.— Overt act. Jn criminal law. An open, manifest act from Which criminality may be implied. An open act, which must be manifestly proved. 3 Inst. 12. An overt act essential to establish an at- tempt to commit a crime iB an act done to carry out the intention, and it must be such as would naturally effect that result unless pre- vented by some extraneous cause. People v. Mills 178 N. Y. 274, 70 N. E. 786, 67 L. R. ■“•131. In reference to the crime of treason, and the provision of the federal constitution that a person

An open, plain word, not to be misunderstood. Cowell.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason; conviction only on testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or confession in open court]

In treason, conviction requires the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act.

Why: Genuine because the entry's 'overt act' discussion (3 Inst. 12) concerns the proof of treason; Article III, § 3 constitutionalizes the overt-act requirement for treason convictions.

OVERTURE.

An opening ; a proposal.

OWELTY.

Equality. This word Is used In law in several compound phrases, as fol- lows:

1. Owelty of partition is a sum of money paid by one of two coparceners or co-tenants to the other, when a partition has been ef- fected between them, but, the land not be- ing susceptible of division into exactly equal shares, such payment is required to make the portions respectively assigned to them of equal value.

2. In the feudal law, when there is lord, mesne, and tenant, and the tenant holds the mesne by the same service that the mesne holds over the lord above him, this was called “owelty of services.” Tomlins.

3. Owelty of exchange is a sum of mon- ey given, when two persons have exchanged

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 8:14, KJV]

"But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want: that there may be equality."

Why: Owelty is equality effected by a money payment between coparceners; the verse ordains equality by mutual supply — 'that there may be equality.' Not deity speech — no flag.

OWNER.

The person in whom is vested the ownership, dominion, or title of property ; proprietor. Garver v. Ilawkeye Ins. Co., 69 Iowa, 202, 28 N. W. 555; Turner v. Cross, 83 Tex. 218, 18 S. W. 578, 15 L. R. A. 262; Coombs v. People, 198 111. 586, 64 N. E. 1656 ; Atwater v. Spalding, 86 Minn. 101, 90 N.

permits, unless he be prevented by some agreement or covenant which restrains his right. Bouvier.

—Equitable owner. One who is recognized in equity as the owner of property, because the real and beneficial use and title belong to him, although the bare legal title is vested in another, e. g., a trustee for his benefit.— General owner. The general owner of a thing is he who has the primary or residuary title to it: as distinguished from a special owner, who has a special interest in the same thing, amounting to a qualified ownership, such, for example, as a bailee's lien. Farmers' & Mechanics' Nat. Bank v. Logan, 74 N. Y. 581.— Joint owners. Two or more persons who jointly own and hold title to property, e. g., joint tenants. — Legal own- er. One who is recognized and held respon- sible by the law as the owner of property. In a more particular sense, one in whom the legal title to real estate is vested, but who holds it in trust for the benefit of another, the latter being called the "equitable" owner.— Part own- ers. Joint owners ; co-owners ; those who have shares of ownership in the same thing, particularly a vessel.— Reputed owner. He who has the general credit or reputation of be- ing the owner or proprietor of goods is said to be the reputed owner. See Santa Cruz Rock Pav. Co. v. Lyons (Cal.) 43 Pae. 601. This phrase is chiefly used in English bankruptcy practice, where the bankrupt is styled the "re- puted owner" of goods lawfully in his possession, though the real owner may be another person. The word "reputed" has a much weaker sense than its derivation would appear to warrant : importing merely a supposition or opinion de- rived or made up from outward appearances, and often unsupported by fact. The term "re- puted owner" is frequently employed in this sense. 2 Steph. Comm. 206. — Riparian own- er. See Riparian.— Special owner. One who has a special interest in an article of prop- erty, amounting to a qualified ownership of it, such, for example, as a bailee's lien ; as distin- guished from the general owner, who has the primary or residuary title to the same thing. Frazier v. State, 18 Tex. App. 44L

[Haggai 2:8, KJV]

"The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the LORD of hosts."

Why: The owner is he in whom dominion is vested; the verse states ownership's ultimate form — the LORD's 'mine' over silver and gold. First-person divine speech — flagged per the red-letter rule.

OWNERSHIP.

The complete dominion, title, or proprietary right in a thing or claim. See Property.

The ownership of a thing is the right of one or more persons to possess and use it to the exclusion of others. In this Code, the thing of which there may be ownership is called "property." Civ. Code Cal. f 634.

Ownership is the right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular, to the ex- clusion of all other persons. Civ. Code La. art. 488.

Ownership is divided into perfect and imper- fect. Ownership is perfect when it is perpetual, and when the thing is unincumbered with any real right towards any other person than the owner. On the contrary, ownership is imper- fect when it is to terminate at a certain time or on a condition, or if the thing which is the object of it, being an immovable, is charged with any real right towards a third person ; as a usufruct, use, or servitude. When an immovable is subject to a usufruct, the owner of it is said to possess the naked ownership. Civ. Code La. art. 490: Maestri v. Board of Assessors, 110 La. 517, 34 South. 658.

[Deuteronomy 10:14, KJV]

"Behold, the heaven and the heaven of heavens is the LORD's thy God, the earth also, with all that therein is."

Why: Ownership is complete dominion and proprietary right; the verse ascribes that completeness to the LORD — heaven, earth, and all therein. Moses' speech, third person — no flag.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Paci sunt maxime contraria vis et injuria — violence and injury are the things chiefly hostile to peace]

The entry quotes the maxim that violence and injury are the things chiefly hostile to peace.

Why: Quoted in the entry from Co. Litt. 161 with the entry's own English gloss; the entry's Latin is OCR-garbled, so the standard form is recorded with the gloss rather than presented as verbatim from a clean text.

PACIFI&ATION.

The act of making peace between two hostile or belligerent states ; re-establishment of public tranquility.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:9, KJV]

"Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God."

Why: Pacification is the making of peace between belligerents; the beatitude blesses the peacemakers — the makers of peace. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

PARAMOUNT.

Above; upwards. That which is superior; usually applied to the highest lord of the fee of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as distinguished from the metne (or intermediate) lord. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 135.

In the law of real property, the term "paramount title” properly denotes one which is superior to the title with which it is compared, in the sense that the former is the source or origin of the latter. It Is, however, frequently used to denote a title which is simply better or stronger than an- other, or will prevail over It But this use is scarcely correct, unless the superiority consists in the seniority of the title spoken of as “paramount.” See Hoopes v. Meyer, 1 Nev. 444.

The separate property of the wife is di- vided into dotal and extradotal. Dotal prop- erty is that which the wife brings to the husband to assist him in bearing the ex- penses of the marriage establishment. Ex- tradotal property, otherwise called “paraphernal property,” is that which forms no part of the dowry. Civ. Code La. art. 2335.

The wife's paraphernalia shall not be sub-, ject to the debts or contracts of the hus- band, and shall consist of the apparel of her- Self and her children, her watch, and orna- ments suitable to her condition in life, and all such articles of personalty as have been given to her for her own use and comfort Code Ga. 1882, | 1773.

In English law. Those goods which a woman is allowed to have, after the death of her husband, besides her dotcer, .consist- ing of her apparel and ornaments, suitable to her rank and degree. 2 Bl. Comm. 436.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 31:16, KJV]

"She considereth a field, and buyeth it: with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard."

Why: Paraphernalia is the wife's separate property beyond her dowry; the virtuous woman buying a field with the fruit of her hands is the wife's separate economic agency in scriptural form. Not deity speech — no flag.

Why: Parcenary is joint heirship — holding by parceners together; 'joint-heirs with Christ' is the concept's scriptural form. Not deity speech — no flag.

PARENS.

Lat. In Roman law. A par- ent; originally and properly only the father or mother of the person spoken of ; but also, by an extension of its meaning, any relative, male or female, in the line of direct ascent.

—Parens patriae. Parent of the country. In England, the king. In the United States, the state, as a sovereign, is the parent patriot.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:12, KJV]

"Honour thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee."

Why: Parens is the parent — father or mother; the commandment honors both by name. Spoken by God in the Decalogue — flagged per the red-letter rule.

“Pardon’’ is to be distinguished from “amnes- ty.” The former applies only to the individual, releases him from the punishment fixed by law for his specific offense, but does not affect the criminality of the same or similar acts when performed by other persons or repeated by the same person. The fatter term denotes an act of grace, extended by the government to all per- sons who may come within its terms, and which obliterates the criminality of past acts done, and declares that they shall not be treated as pun- ishable.

—Conditional pardon. A conditional pardon is one granted on the condition that it shall only endure until the voluntary doing of some act by the person pardoned, or that it shall be revoked by a subsequent act on his part, as, that he shall leave the state and never return. Ex parte Janes, 1 Nev. 319; State v. Wolfer, 53 Minn. 135, 54 N. W. 1065, 19 L. R. A. 783, 39 Am. St. Rep. 582; State v. Barnes. 32 S.

PARENT.

The lawful father or the mother of a person. Appeal of Gibson, 154 Mass. 378, 28 N. E. 296. This word 'is dis- tinguished from “ancestors” in including only the immediate progenitors of the per- son, while the latter embraces his more re- mote relatives in the ascending line.

PARENTELA, or de parentela se tollere, in old English law, signified a renunciation of one’s kindred and family. This was, ac- cording to ancient custom, done in open court, before the Judge, and in the presence of twelve men, who made oath that they believed it was done for a Just cause. We read of it In the laws of Henry I. After such abjuration, the person was incapable of inheriting anything from any of his re- lations, etc. Enc. Lond.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 6:1, KJV]

"Children, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right."

Why: The entry is the lawful father or mother; the verse states the child's duty to parents — 'this is right.' Not deity speech — no flag.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Shakespeare, King Lear, 1606]

“How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is / To have a thankless child!”

— Parish apprentice. In English law. The children of parents unable to maintain them may, by law, be apprenticed, by the guardians or overseers of their parish, to such persons as may be willing to receive them as apprentices. Such children are called "parish apprentices.", 2 Steph. Comm. 230.— Parish church. This expression has various significations. It is ap-' plied sometimes to a select body of Christians, forming a local spiritual association, and some- times to the building in which the public wor- ship of the inhabitants of a parish is celebrat- ed; but the true legal notion Of a parochial church is a consecrated place, having attached to it the rights of burial and the administration of the sacraments. Story.L, Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Crunch. 326, 3 L. Ed.. 735.— Farlsh clerk. In English law. An Officer, in tonner times often in holy orders, and appointed to officiate* at the altar; now his duty consists chiefly in. making responses in church tp the minister.. By common law he has a freehold in his office, but it seems now to be falling into desuetude. ' 2 Steph, Comm. 700 ; Mozley & Whitley.— Par- ish constable. A petty constable exercising ' his functions within a given parish. PARSONAGE.

A certain portion of lands, tithes, and offerings, established by law, for the maintenance of the minister who has the cure of souls. Tomlins.

The word is more generally used for the house set apart for the residence of the minister. Mosley & Whitley. See Wells' Estate v. Congregational Church, 63 Vt 118, 21 Atl. 270; Everett v. First Presbyterian Church, 53 N. J. Eq. 500. 32 Atl. 747 ; Beeves v. Reeves, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 644.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 9:14, KJV]

"Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

Why: The parsonage is the provision established by law for the minister's maintenance; the verse ordains that very maintenance — they which preach should live of the gospel. Not deity speech — no flag.

PART.

A portion, share, or purpart One of two duplicate originals of a convey- ance or covenant, the other being called “counterpart.” Also, In composition, partial or Incomplete; as part payment part per- formance. Cairo v. Bross, 9 111. App. 406.

—Part and pertinent. In the Scotch law of conveyancing. Formal words equivalent to the English “appurtenances.” Bell.

As to part “Owner,” “Payment” and "Per- formance,” see those titles.

PARTAGE.

In French law. A division made between co-proprietors of a particular estate held by them In common. It is the operation by means of which the goods of a succession are divided among the co-heirs ; while licltation (q. v.) Is an adjudication to the highest bidder of objects which are not divisible. Duverger.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 15:12, KJV]

"And the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living."

Why: Partage is the division of the estate among co-heirs; the parable opens on exactly that division — the living divided between the sons. Christ's verbatim parable words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

PARTE XNAUDITA.

Lat. One side be- ing unheard. Spoken of any action which Is taken ex parte.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Audi alteram partem — hear the other side]

Against ex parte action stands the rule that the other side must be heard.

Why: Genuine because the entry defines action taken 'parte inaudita' — one side unheard; audi alteram partem is the foundational maxim of procedural fairness that the definition presupposes.

PARTE NON COXPARENTE.

Let. The party not having appeared. The con- dition of a cause called “default.”

Parte quacumque integrants (nblata, ‘ tollitor to tom. An Integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away. 8 Coke, 41.

Partem aliqnam reete lntelligere ne- mo potest, anteqnam totnm, iternm at-, que iternm, perlegerit. 3 Coke, 52. No one can rightly understand any part until he has read the whole again and again.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Parte quacumque integrante sublata, tollitur totum — an integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away]

The entry quotes Coke's maxim that an integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 8 Coke, 41; recorded as the entry's own cited authority.

[Maxim: Partem aliquam recte intelligere nemo potest, antequam totum, iterum atque iterum, perlegerit — no one can rightly understand any part before he has read the whole, again and again]

The entry quotes Coke's hermeneutic rule that no one can rightly understand a part before reading the whole again and again.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 3 Coke, 52; it states the whole-instrument rule of construction, recorded as the entry's own cited authority.

PARTES FINES NIHIL HAB TJERTTNT .

In old pleading. The parties to the fine had nothing; that Is, had no estate which could be conveyed by It. A plea to a fine which' had been levied by a stranger. 2 Bl. Comm. 857; 1 P. Wins. 520.

PARTIAL.

Relating to or constituting a part; not complete; not entire or universal;

— Partial account. An account of an exec- utor, administrator, guardian, etc., not exhibit- ing his entire dealings with the estate or fund from his appointment to final settlement, but covering only a portion of the time or of the estate. See Marshall v. Coleman, 187 111. 556, 58 N. E. 628.— Partial average. Another name for particular average. See Average. And see Peters v. Warren Ins. Co., 19 Fed. Caa. 370.— Partial evidence. insanity. Mental unsoundness al- ways existing, although only occasionally mani- fest; monomania. 3 Add. 79.— Partial loss. See Loss.— Partial verdict. See Verdict.

FARTTARTUS.

Lat In Roman law. A legatee who was entitled, by the directions of the will, to receive a share or portion of the inheritance left to the heir. ,

PARTIGEPS.

Lat. A participant; a sharer ; anciently, a part owner, or parcener. — Partlceps oriminis. A participant in a crime; an accomplice. One who shares or co-operates in a cnminal offense, tort, or fraud. Alberger v. White, 117 Mo. 347, 23 S. W. 92; State v. Fox, 70 N. J. Law, 353. 57 Atl. 270.

Partloipes plures sunt quasi unum corpus in eo quod unum jus habent, et oportet quod corpus sit integrum, et quod in nulla parte sit delectus. Co.

Lltt. 4. Many parceners are as one body, inasmuch as they have one right, and it is necessary that the body be perfect, and that there be a defect in no part.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 1:32, KJV]

"Who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them."

Why: The particeps criminis shares in the crime; the verse condemns not only the doers but those who take pleasure in the doing — participation itself. Not deity speech — no flag.

PARTIOULA.

A small piece of land.

PARTICULAR.

This term, as used In law, Is almost always opposed to “general,” and means eltber Individual, local, partial, special, or belonging to a single person, place, or thing.

—Particular statement. This term, in use in Pennsylvania, denotes a statement which a Stiff may be required to file, exhibiting in the items of his claim, 4or its nature, if single,) with the dates and sums. It is a spe- cies of declaration, but is informal and not nuired to be methodical. Dixon v. Sturgeon, ierg. A R. (Pa.) 28. — Particular tenant. The tenant of a particular estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 274. See Estate.

PARTICULARITY, in a pleading, affida- vit, or the like, is the detailed statement of particulars.

PARTICULARS.

The details of a claim, or the separate Items of an account. When these are stated In an orderly form, for the Information of a defendant, the statement Is called a “bill of particulars," (g . v.)

— Particulars of breaches and objections.

In an action brought, in England, for the in- fringement of letters patent, the plaintiff is bound to deliver with his declaration (now with his statement of claim) particulars (i. e., de- tails) of the breaches which he complains of. Sweet. — Particulars of criminal charges. A prosecutor, when a charge is general, is fre- quently ordered to give the defendant a state- ment of the acts charged, which is called, in England, the “particulars” of the charges.— Particulars of sale. When property such as land, houses, shares, reversions, etc., is to be sold by auction, it is usually described in a doc- ument called the “particulars,” copies of which are distributed among intending bidders. They should fairly and accurately describe the prop- erty. Dart, Vend. 113; 1 Dav. Conv. 511.

PARTIES.

The persona who take part in the performance of any act, or who are directly interested in any affair, eontract, or conveyance, or who are actively concerned in the proeeeution and defense of any legal proceeding. U. S. v. Henderlong (C. C.) 102 Fed. 2; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 672, 18

L. Ed. 427; Green v. Bogue, 158 U. S. 478, 15 Sup. Ct. 975, 39 L. Ed. 1061; Hughes v. Jones, 116 N. Y. 67. 22 N. E. 446, 5 L. R. A 637, 15 Am. St. Rep. 386. See also Babtt.

In the Roman civil law. the parties were designated as “actor" and “rcu».” In the com- mon law, they are called "plaintiff" and “defend- ant ;” in real actions, “demandant” and “ten- ant;” in equity, “complainant” or “plaintiff" and “defendant;” in Scotch law, “pursuer" and “defender;” in admiralty practice, “libelant" and “respondent ;” in appeals, “appellant” and “respondent," sometimes, “plaintiff in error” and "defendant in error; in criminal proceed- ings, “prosecutor” and “prisoner.” Classification. Formal parties are those who have no interest in the controversy between the immediate litigants, but have an interest in the subject-matter which may be conveniently settled in tbe suit, and thereby prevent further litigation; they may be made parties or not, at the option of the complainant. Clmdbourne v. Coe, 51 Fed. 479, 2 C. C. A. 327.— Acces- sary parties are those parties who have such an interest in the subject-matter of a suit in equity, or whose rights are so involved in the contro- versy, that no complete and effective decree can be made, dispopiqg of the matters in issue and dispensing complete justice, unlew they are be- fore the court in such a manner as to entitle them to be heard in vindication or protection of their interests. See Chandler v. Ward, 188 111. 322, 58 N. E. 919; Phoenix Nat. Bank v. Cleveland Co., 58 Hun, 606, 11 N. Y. Supp. 873; Chadbourne v. Coe, 51 Fed. 480, 2 C.

C. A. 327; Burrill v. Garst, 19 R. I. 38. 31 Atl. 436; Castle v. Madison, 113 Wis. 346, 89 N. W. 156; Iowa County Sup'rs v. Mineral Point R. Co., -24 Wis. 132. Nominal parties are those who are joined as plaintiffs or de- fendants. not because they have any real in- terest in tbe subject-matter or because any relief is demanded as against them, but merely because tbe technical rules of pleading require their presence on the record. It should be noted that some courts make a further distinction between “necessary" parties and “indispensable” parties. Thus, it is said that the supreme court of the United States divides parties in equity suits into three different classes: (1) Formal parties, who have no interest in the controversy between the immediate litigants, but have such an interest in the subject-matter as may be conveniently settled in the suit, and thereby prevent further litigation ; (2) necessary par- ties, who have an interest in the controversy, but whose interests are separable from those or the parties before the court, and will not be directly affected by a decree which does com- plete and full justice between them; (3) in- dispensable parties, who not only have an in- terest in the subject-matter of the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting their interests or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Ilieklin v. Marco. 56 Fed. 552, 6 C. C. A. 10. citing Shields v. Barrow. 17 How. 139, 15 L. Ed. 158; Ribon v. Railroad Co.,. 16 Wall. 450. 21 L. Ed. 367; Williams v. Bankhead, 19 Wall. 571. 22 L. Ed. 184; Kendig v. Dean, 97 U. S. 425, 24 L. Ed. 1061. —Parties and privies. Parties to a deed or contract are those with whom the deed or con- tract is actually made or entered into. By the term “privies,” as applied to contracts, is fre- quently meant those between whom the contract is mutually binding, although not literally par- ties to such contract. Thus, in the case of a lease, the lessor and lessee are both parties and privies, the contract being literally made be- tween the two, and also being mutually bind- ing; but, if the lessee assign his interest to a third party, then a privity arises between the assignee and tbe original lessor, although such assignee is not literally a party to the original lease. Brown.

PARTITIO.

Lat. In the civil law. Par- tition; division. This word did not always signify dimidium, a dividing into halves. Dig. 50, 16, 164, 1.

—Partitio legata. A testamentary partition. This took place where the testator, in his will, directed the heir to divide the inheritance and deliver a designated portion thereof to a named legatee. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, $§ 781, 785.

L. Ed. 256.

—Owelty of partition. See Owelty. Par- tition, deed of. In conveyancing. A species of primary or original conveyance between two or more joint tennnts. coparceners, or tenants in common, by which they divide the lands so held among them in severalty, each taking a distinct part. 2 HI. Comm. 323, 324.— Partition of a ■accession. The partition of a succession is the division of the effects of which the succes- sion is composed, among all the co-heirs, ac- cording to their respective rights. Partition is Voluntary or judicial. It is voluntary when it is made among all the co-heirs present and of age, and by their mutual consent. It is ju- dicial when it is made by the authority of the court, and according to the formalities prescrib- ed by law. Every partition is either definitive or provisional. Definitive partition is that which is made in a permanent and irrevocable manner. Provisional partition is that which is made provisionally, either of certain things be- fore the rest can be divided, or even of every- thing that is to be divided, when the parties are not In a situation to make an irrevocable par- tition. Civ. Code La. art. 1293, ef »cq.

[Numbers 33:54, KJV]

"And ye shall divide the land by lot for an inheritance among your families: and to the more ye shall give the more inheritance, and to the fewer ye shall give the less inheritance."

Why: Partition is the dividing of lands held jointly into distinct portions; the verse is the Torah's partition rule — division by lot, to each according to number. Third-person command — no flag.

—Dormant partners. Those whose names are not known or do not appear as partners, but who nevertheless are silent partners, and partake of the profits, and thereby become partners, either absolutely to all intents and pur- poses, or at all events in respect to third parties. Dormant partners, in strictness of lan- guage, mean those who are merely passive in the firm, whether known or unknown, in con- tradistinction to those who are active and conduct the business of the firm, as principals. See Story, Partn. g 80; Rowland v. Estes, 190 Pa. Ill, 42 Atl. 528; National Bank of Salem v. Thomas, 47 N. Y. 15: Metcalf v. Officer (C. C.) 2 Fed. 640; Pooley v. Driver, 5 Ch. Div. 458; Jones v. Fcgety, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 1.— Liquidating partner. The partner who, upon the dissolution or insolvency of the firm, is appointed to settle its accounts, collect assets, adjust claims, and pay debts.— Nominal partner. One whose name appears in con- nection with the business as a member of the firm, but who has no real interest in it.— Os- tensible partner. One whose name appears to the world as such, or who is held out to all persons having dealings with the firm in the character of a partner, whether or not he has any real interest in the firm. Civ. Code Ga. g 1889.— Quasi partners. Partners of lands, goods, or chattels who are not actual partners are sometimes so called. Poth. de So- cigtg, App. no. 184.— Silent partner, sleep- ing partner. Popular names for dormant partners or special partners.— Special part- ner. A member of a limited partnership, who furnishes certain funds to the common stock, and whose liability extends no further than the fund furnished. A partner whose responsibility is restricted to the amount of his investment. 3 Kent, Comm. 34.— Surviving partner. The partner who, on the dissolution of the firm by the death of his copartner, occupies the position of a trustee to settle up its affairs.

PARTNERSHIP.

A voluntary contract between two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor, and skill, or some or all of them, In lnwful commerce or business, with the understanding that there shall be a proportional sharing of the profits and losses between them. Story, Partn. g 2; Colly. Partn. g 2; 3 Kent, Comm. 23.

Partnership Is the association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together, and dividing its profits between them. Civ. Code Cal. g 2395.

Partnership is a synallagmatic and com- mutative contract made between two or more persons for the mutual participation in the profits which may accrue from property, credit, skill, or Industry, furnished in deter- mined proportions by the parties. Civ. Code La. art 2801.

Partnership is where two or more persons agree to carry on any business or adventure together, upon the terms of mutual partici- pation in its profits and losses. Mozley & Whitley. And see Macomber v. Parker, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 181; Bucknam v. Barnum, 15 Conn.

— General partnership. A partnership in which' the parties carry on ail their trade and business, whatever it may be, for the joint ben- efit and profit of ail the parties concerned, whether tne capital stock be limited or not, or the contributions thereto be equal or un- equal. Storv, Partn. g 74; Bigelow v. Elliot, 3 Fed. Cas. 351; Kldridge v. Troost. 3 Abb. Prnc., N. S. (N. Y.) 23. — Limited partner- ship. A partnership consisting of one or more general partners, jointly and severally respon- sible as ordinary partners, and by whom the business is conducted, and one or more special partners, contributing in cash payments a spe- cific sum as capital to the common stock, and who are not liable for the debts of the part- nership beyond the fund so contributed. 1 Rev. St. N. Y. 764. And see Moorhead v. Seymour (City Ct. N. Y.) 77 N. Y. Supp. 1054 ; Taylor v. Webster, 39 N. J. Law, 104. — Mining part- nership. See Mining.— Particular part- nership. One existing where the parties have united to share the benefits of a single individ- ual transaction or enterprise. Spencer v. Jones (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 665.— Partnership assets. Property of any kind belonging to the firm as such (not the separate property of the individual partners) and available to the recourse of the creditors of the firm in the first instance .—Partnership at will. One designed to continue for no fixed period of time, but only during the pleasure of the par- ties, and which may be dissolved by any part- ner without previous notice. — Partnership debt. One due from the partnership or firm as such and not (primarily) from one of the in- dividual partners.— Partnership in eommen- dam. Partnership in commendam is formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership, a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and exiienses to the amount furnished and no more. Civ. Code La. art. 2839.— Secret partnership. One where the existence of certain persons as partners is not avowed to the public by any of the partners. Deering v. Flnnders, 49 N. It. 225.— Special partnership. At common law. One formed for the prosecution of a special branch of business, as distinguished from the general business of the parties, or for one par- ticular venture or subject. Bigelow v. Elliot, 3 Fed. Cas. 351. Under statutes. A limited partnership, (q. t>.)— Smbptrtaerihip. One formed where one partner in a firm makes a stranger a partner with him in his share of the profits of that firm. — Universal partner- ship. One in which the partners jointly agree to contribute to the common fund of the part- nership the whole of their property, of what- ever character, and future, as well as present. Poth. The act of giving birth

[John 16:21, KJV]

"A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world."

Why: Parturition is the act of giving birth; the verse describes the travail and the delivery — sorrow turned to joy at the child's birth. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

PARTUS.

Lat Child; offspring; the child just before it is born, or immediately after its birth.

[Maxim: Partus sequitur ventrem — the offspring follows the mother]

The entry quotes the status maxim that the offspring follows the mother.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry; it states the real Roman-law rule of status (the child's condition follows the mother's), recorded as the entry's own cited maxim.

PARUM.

Lat Little; but little.

Parum cavet nstura. Nature takes lit- tle heed. Vandenheuvel v. United Ins. Co., 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 127, 166.

PARTY.

A person concerned or having or taking part in any affair, matter, transac- tion, or proceeding, considered Individually. See Pasties.

The term “parties” includes all persons who are directly interested in the subject-matter in issue, who have a right to make defense, control the proceedings, or appeal from the judgment Strangers are persons who do not possess these rights. Hunt v. Haven, 52 N. H. 162.

"Party” is a technical word, and has a pre- cise meaning in legal parlance. By it is under- stood he or they by or against whom a suit is brought, whether in law or equity ; the party plaintiff or defendant, whether composed of one or more individuals, and whether natural or legal persons, (they are parties in the writ, and parties on the record ;) and all others who may be affected by the suit, indirectly or consequen- tially, are persons interested, but not parties. Merchants’ Bank v. Cook, 4 Pick. 405.

—Party and party. This phrase signifies the contending parties in an action ; i. e.. the plain- tiff and defendant, as distinguished from the at- torney and his client. It is used in connection with the subject of costs, which are differently taxed between party and party and between at- torney and client. Brown.— Real party. In statutes requiring suits to be brought in the name of the, “real party in interest,’ this term means the person who is actually and substan- tially interested in the subject-matter, as dis- tinguished from one who has only a nominal, formal, or technical interest in it or connection with it. [Acts 12:4, KJV]

"And when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him; intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people."

Why: Pascha is Easter in old English law and practice; the verse uses the very word — 'after Easter' — for the feast's date. Narrative, not deity speech — no flag.

P ASCII A.

A particular meadow or pas- tore land set apart to feed cattle.

PASCtJA SILVA. In the civil law. A feeding wood; a wood devoted to the feeding of cattle. Dig. 50, 16, 30, 5.

PASCUAGE.

The grazing or pasturage of cattle.

PASS, f. 1. In practice. To utter or pro- nounce; as when the court pastes sentence upon a prisoner. Also to proceed ; to be ren- dered or given; as when judgment is said to pass for the plaintiff in a suit.

2. In legislative parlance, a bill or resolu- tion is said to pass when it is agreed to or enacted by the house, or when the body has sanctioned its adoption by the requisite ma- jority of votes; in the same circumstances, the body is said to pass the bill or motion.

3. When an auditor appointed to examine into any accounts certifies to their correct- ness, he is said to pass them; i. e., they pass through the examination without being detained or sent back for inaccuracy or im- perfection. Brown.

4. The term also means to examine into anything and then authoritatively determine the disputed questions which it involves. In this sense a jury is said to pass upon the rights or issues in litigation before them.

5. In the language of conveyancing, the term means to move from one person to an- other; to be transferred or conveyed from one owner to another; as in the phrase “the word ‘heirs’ will pass the fee.”

6. To publish; utter; transfer; circulate; impose fraudulently. This is the meaning of the word when the offense of passing coun- terfeit money or a forged paper Is spoken of.

“Pass,” “utter,” "publish.” and “sell” are in some respects convertible terms, and. in a given case, “pass” may include utter, publish, and sell. The words “uttering” and “passing,” qsed of notes, do not necessarily import that they are transferred as genuine. The words include any delivery of a note to another for value, with in- tent that it shall be put into circulation as money. U. S. v. Nelson, 1 Abb. (U. 8.) 135, Fed. Cas. No. 15,861.

Passing a paper is putting it off in payment or exchange. Uttering it is a declaration that it is good, with an intention to pass, or an offer to pass it.

PASS, n. Permission to pass; a license to go or come; a certificate, emanating from authority, wherein it is declared that a des- ignated person is permitted to go beyond certain boundaries which, without such author- ity, he could not lawfully pass. Also a ticket issued by a railroad or other transportation company, authorizing a designated person to travel free on its lines, between certain points or for a limited time.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 23:2, KJV]

"He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters."

Why: Pascuage is the grazing or pasturage of cattle; the psalm's green pastures are pasturage itself — the flock fed. Addressed of God, not by him — no flag.

PASS-BOOK.

A book in which a bank or banker enters the deposits made by a cus- tomer, and which is retained by the latter. Also a book in which a merchant enters the items of sales on credit to a customer, and which the latter carries or keeps with him.

PASSAGE.

A way over water; an ease- ment giving the right to pass over a piece of private water.

Travel by sea ; a voyage over water; the carriage of passengers by water ; money paid for such carriage.

Enactment; the act of carrying a bill or resolution through a legislative or delibera- tive body in accordance with the prescribed forms and requisites; the emergence of the bill in the form of a law, or the motion in the form of a resolution.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 14:22, KJV]

"And the children of Israel went into the midst of the sea upon the dry ground: and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left."

Why: Passage in its first sense is a way over water; the crossing of the sea on dry ground is the archetypal way over water. Narrative, not deity speech — no flag.

PASSAGE COURT.

An ancient court of record in Liverpool, once called the “may- or's court of paps sage," but now usually called the “court of the passage of the bor- ough of Liverpool.” This court was for- merly held before the mayor and two bailiffs of the borough, and had jurisdiction in ac- tions where the amount in question exceeded forty shillings. Mozley & Whitley.

PASSAGE MONEY.

PATER.

Lat. A father; the father. In the civil law, this word sometimes Included ovus, (grandfather.) Dig. 50, 16, 201.

—Pater patriae. Father of the country. See Pabens Patbiae.

Pater is est qnem nnptise demonstrant.

The father is he whom the marriage points out. 1 Bl. Comm. 446; Tate v. Penne, 7 Mart (N. 8. La.) 548, 553; Dig. 2, 4, 5; Broom, Max. 516.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Pater is est quem nuptiae demonstrant — the father is he whom the marriage points out]

The entry quotes the paternity presumption: the father is he whom the marriage points out.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 1 Bl. Comm. 446, Tate v. Penne, and the Digest; it states the presumption of paternity for children born in wedlock, recorded as the entry's own cited authorities.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 6:9, KJV]

"After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name."

Why: Pater is the father; the Lord's Prayer opens on the Father — the name's highest invocation. Christ's verbatim

(paraphrase) Leontes doubting his paternity of the newborn Perdita and denying her — the living drama of the entry's maxim 'pater is est quem nuptiae demonstrant' (the father is he whom the marriage points out). (paraphrase)

Why: The entry's paternity presumption is the hinge of Leontes's jealousy. Marked paraphrase.

PATERFAMILIAS.

The father of a family.

In Roman law. The bead or master of a family.

This word is sometimes employed, in a wide sense, as equivalent to aui juria. A person aui juris is called “ paterfamiliaa ” even when under the age of puberty. In the narrower and more common use, a paterfamiliaa is any one invest- ed with poteataa over any person. It is thus as applicable to a grandfather as to a father. Hunter, Rom. Law, 49.

[Joshua 24:15, KJV]

"And if it seem evil unto you to serve the LORD, choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but as for me and my house, we will serve the LORD."

Why: The paterfamilias is the head and master of the family, deciding for the house; Joshua's declaration — 'as for me and my house' — is that headship exercised. Joshua's speech, not deity speech — no flag.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Coppola, The Godfather, 1972]

(paraphrase) The don of the Corleone family ruling his household with the Roman paterfamilias's potestas — absolute authority over children and dependents. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry: the head or master of a family, invested with potestas over persons. The Godfather's don is the modern screen image. Marked paraphrase.

PATERNA PATERNIS.

Lat. Pater- nal estates to paternal heirs. A rule of the French law, signifying that such portion of a decedent’s estate as came to him from his father must descend to his heirs on the fa- ther’s side.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 36:7, KJV]

"So shall not the inheritance of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe: for every one of the children of Israel shall keep himself to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers."

Why: Paterna paternis sends paternal estates to paternal heirs; the verse keeps each inheritance to the tribe of the fathers — the paternal line preserved. Third-person command — no flag.

PATERNAL.

That which belongs to the father or comes from him.

—Paternal power. The authority lawfully exercised by parents over their children. This phrase is also used to translate the Latin "pa- tria poteataa ,” (q . v.)— Paternal property. That which descends or comes to one from his father, grandfather, or other ascendant or col- lateral on the paternal side of the house.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 6:4, KJV]

"And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

Why: Paternal power is the authority lawfully exercised by parents; the verse states its scriptural measure and bound — nurture, not provocation. Not deity speech — no flag.

PATERNITY.

The fact of being a fa- ther; the relationship of a father.

The Latin “patcrnitas" Is used in the can- on law to denote a kind of spiritual relation- ship contracted by baptism. Hetnecc. Elem. lib. 1, tit. 10, 1 161, note.

PATHOLOGY.

In medical jurispru- dence. The science or doctrine of diseases. That part of medicine which explains the nature of diseases, their causes, and their symptoms. See Bacon v. U. 8. Mut. Acc. Ass’n, 123 N. Y. 304, 25 N. E. 399, 9 L. R. Ai 617, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748.

PATXBULATED.

Hanged on a gibbet.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Esther 7:10, KJV]

"So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. Then was the king's wrath pacified."

Why: Patibulated is hanged on the gibbet; the hanging of Haman is scripture's most famous gibbet. Narrative, not deity speech — no flag.

PATIBULUM.

In old English law. A gallows or gibbet. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 3, § 9.

[Maxim: Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori]

Horace's line — 'it is sweet and fitting to die for one's country' — is the classical world's supreme utterance on patria as the country that commands duty; it illuminates the entry's 'country' sense.

Why: The entry defines patria as 'the country.' The Horatian maxim is the single most famous classical statement containing the word, and it genuinely illuminates patria-as-country as an object of obligation. Latin quoted...

PATRIA POTESTAS.

Lat In Roman law. Paternal authority; the paternal pow- er. This term denotes the aggregate of those peculiar powers and rights which, by the civil law of Rome, belonged to the head of a family In respect to his wife, children, (nat- ural or adopted,) and any more remote de- scendants who sprang from him through males only. Anciently, It was of very ex- tensive reach, embracing even the power of life and death, but was gradually curtailed, until finally It amounted to little more than a right In the paterfamilias to hold as his own any property or acquisitions of one un- der his power. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 589.

Patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocit&te, eonaiatere. Paternal power should ponsist [or be exercised] In affection, not in atrocity.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 1:8, KJV]

"My son, hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother."

Why: Patria potestas is the aggregate of the father's powers over his children; the proverb states its first exercise — the father's instruction heard. Not deity speech — no flag.

PATRIARCH.

The chief bishop over several countries or provinces, as an arch- bishop Is of several dioceses. Godb. 20.

Wal- b ridge, 153 Mo. 194, 54 S. W. 447.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Isaiah 62:6, KJV]

"I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night."

Why: The patrolman is the officer set to watch a district; the verse sets watchmen upon the walls — the watch kept day and night. First-person divine speech ('I have set') — flagged per the red-letter rule.

[Exodus 21:35-36, KJV]

And if one man's ox hurt another's, that he die; then they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money of it, and the dead ox also they shall divide. Or if it be known that the ox hath used to push in time past, and his owner hath not kept him in; he shall surely pay ox for ox; and the dead shall be his own.

Why: Pauperies is Roman noxal liability: injury done by an irrational animal, for which the owner must make compensation. The Mosaic ox-goring law is its direct legal ancestor — same fact pattern, same rule of compensation...

PAVE.

To pave is to cover with stones or brick, or other suitable material, so as to make a level or convenient surface for horses, carriages, or foot-passengers, and a sidewalk is paved when it is laid or flagged with flat stones, as well as when paved with brick, as is frequently done. In re Phillips, 60 N. Y. 22; Buell v. Ball, 20 Iowa, 282; Harrisburg v. Segelbaum, 151 Pa. 172, 24 Atl. 1070, 20

L. R. A. 834.

PAWN, v. To deliver personal property to another in pledge, or as security for a debt or sum borrowed.

PAWN, n. A bailment of goods to a cred- itor, as security for some debt or engage- ment; a pledge. Story, Bailm. g 7; Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 913; Barrett v. Cole, 49 N. O. 40; Surber v. McClintic, 10 W. Va. 242; Commercial Bank v. Flowers, 116 Ga. 219, 42 S. E. 474.

Pawn, or pledge, is a bailment of goods by' a debtor to his creditor, to be kept till the debt is discharged. Wharton.

Also the specific chattel delivered to the creditor in this contract.

In the law of Louisiana, potcn Is known as one species of the contract of pledge, the other being antiokrent; but the word “pawn" is sometimes used as synonymous with “pledge,” thus including both species. Civ. Code La. art 3101.

PAWNBROKER.

A person whose busi- ness is to lend money, usually in small sums, on security of personal property deposited with biih or left in pawn. Little Rock v. Barton, 33 Ark. 444; Schaul v. Charlotte, 118

[Law: UCC Article 9 — security interests in personal property; state pawnbroker licensing statutes]

A pawn is a pledge of personal property as security for a debt — the common-law bailment now governed in commercial law by UCC Article 9 (security interests in goods), alongside state pawnbroker-licensing statutes.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the pawnbroker's business as lending on deposited personal property, which is precisely the Article 9 pledge/secured-transaction structure, and pawnbrokers are in fact a licensed trade under...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 35:11, KJV]

Then ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person at unawares.

Why: Pax ecclesiae is the church's peace as sanctuary — a privileged refuge. The Mosaic cities of refuge are scripture's sanctuary institution: the direct legal ancestor of ecclesiastical sanctuary. Filed as the LORD's spe...

PAX REGIS.

Lat. .The peace of the king; that is, the peace, good order, and se- curity for life and property which it is one of the objects of government to maintain, and which the king, as the personification of the power of the state, is supposed to guaranty to all persops within the protection of the law.

This name was also given, in ancient times, to a certain privileged district or sanctuary. The pax regls, or verge of the court, as it was afterwards called, extended from the palace- gate to the distance of three miles, three fur- longs, three acres, nine feet, nine palms, and nine barleycorns. The king's peace — the public order the state guarantees — is the ancestor of the modern common-law and statutory offense of breach of the peace (disorderly conduct).

Why: Genuine lineage: the entry itself names the pax regis as the peace government maintains; breach of that peace is the direct doctrinal descendant, still charged today.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Timothy 2:2, KJV]

For kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.

Why: Pax regis is the sovereign's guaranteed public peace — the security of life and property under law. The apostolic instruction names exactly that peace (a quiet and peaceable life under authority) as the thing to seek....

PAY.

To pay is to deliver to a creditor the value of a debt, either in money or in goods, for his acceptance, by which the debt is discharged. Beals v. Home Ins. Co., 36 N, Y. 522.

PAYABLE.

A sum of money is said to be payable when a person is under an obliga- tion to pay It. “Payable” may therefore sig- nify an obligation to pay at a future time, but, when used without qualification, “pay- able" means that the debt is payable at once, as opposed to “owing.” Sweet And see First Nat. Bank v. Greenville Nat Bank, 84 Tex. 40, 19 S. W. 334; Easton v. Hyde, 13 Minn. 91 (Gil. 83).

[Law: UCC § 3-108 — payable on demand vs. payable at a definite time]

The entry distinguishes 'payable' (due now) from 'owing' (due in future); negotiable-instruments law codifies exactly this as 'payable on demand' versus 'payable at a definite time.'

Why: Genuine and direct: the entry's whole point is the timing distinction, and UCC § 3-108 is the statute that draws it for notes and drafts. No hop.

PAYEE.

In mercantile law. The per- son in whose favor a bill of exchange, prom- issory note, or check is made or drawn; the- person to whom or to whose order a bill, note, or check is made payable. 3 Kent, Comm. 75.

PAYEB, ox PAYOR. One who pays, or who is to make a payment; particularly the person who is to make payment of a bill or note. Correlative to “payee.”

PEACE.

As applied to the affairs of a state or nation peace may be either external or Internal. In the former case, the term denotes the prevalence of amicable relations and mutual good will between the particu- lar society and all foreign powers. In the latter case, it means the tranquility, securi- ty, nnd freedom from commotion or disturb- ance which is the sign of good order and harmony and obedience to the laws among all the members of the society. In a some- what technical sense, pence denotes the quiet, security, good order, and decorum which Is guarantied by the constitution of civil soci- ety and by the laws. People v. Why: Genuine: the entry gives 'trial by a jury of his peers' as the meaning; the Sixth Amendment and Magna Carta c. 39 are its legal homes. PEERS OF FEES left bare as the feudal-historical twin.

[Magna Carta, 1215]

(paraphrase) Magna Carta's clause 39 guarantees that no free man shall be deprived of standing 'except by the lawful judgment of his equals' — the root of trial by a jury of peers, and the direct ancestor of the entry's feudal 'judges of their co-vassals, as being each other's equals.' (paraphrase)

Why: The entry's core is judgment by one's equals. Magna Carta 1215 is the genuine historical root of that principle. Paraphrase used because English translations of clause 39 vary; the substance is stated, not quoted.

PEERS OF FEES.

Vassals or tenants of the same lord, who were obliged to serve and attend him In his courts, being equal in function. These were termed “peers of fees,” because holding fees of the lord, or because their business in court was to sit and judge, under their lords, of disputes arising upon fees ; but, if there were too many In one lord- ship, the lord usually chose twelve, who had the title of peers, by way of distinction; whence, it is said, we derive our common juries and other peers. PEEVE FORTE ET DURE.

L. Fr. In

old English law. A special form of punish- ment for those who, being arraigned for fel- ony, obstinately “stood mute;” that is, re- fused to plead or to put themselves upon trial. It Is described as a combination of solitary confinement, slow starvation, and crushing the naked body with a great load of Iron. This atrocious punishment was vulgarly called “pressing to death.” See 4 Bl. Comm. 324-328; Britt, cc. 4, 22; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 134; CoWell.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(a)(4) — failure or refusal to plead; plea of not guilty entered]

Pressing-to-death for standing mute is extinct; the modern rule is that a defendant who refuses to plead has a plea of not guilty entered for him.

Why: Genuine illumination: the entry describes the punishment for standing mute, and Rule 11(a)(4) is the living rule that replaced it — mute now means not-guilty, not death.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Arthur Miller, The Crucible, 1953]

The headword as printed is the OCR rendering of 'peine forte et dure' — the old English punishment of pressing to death under iron for standing mute. Miller stages it exactly: Giles Corey, pressed for refusing to plead, answers only 'More weight.'

Why: Body confirms: punishment for those who 'stood mute,' 'pressing to death' under iron. Giles Corey's 'More weight' is verbatim-certain (among the most famous lines in American drama) and depicts precisely this punishme...

But the women, and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the spoil thereof, shalt thou take unto thyself; and thou shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies, which the LORD thy God hath given thee.

Why: Pelfre is booty — spoil of war. The verse is the law of war's own rule of spoil: what may be taken and eaten. Filed as God's spoken command, hence deity verbatim.

PELLAGE.

The custom or duty paid for skins of leather.

PEKAL.

Punishable; Inflicting & pun- ishment; containing a penalty, or relating to a penalty.

—Penal action. In practice. An action up- on a penal statute; an action for the recoveij of a penalty given by statute. 3 Steph. 535, 536. Distinguished from a popular or gui tam action, in which the action is brought by the informer, to whom part of the penalty goes. A penal action or information is brought by an officer, and the penalty goes to the king. 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 25, note; 2 Archb. Pr. 188. But in American law, the term includes actions brought by informers or other private persons, as well as those instituted by governments or public officers. In a broad sense, the term has been made to include all actions in which there may be a recovery of exemplary or vindictive damages, as suits for libel and slander, or in which special, double, or treble damages are given by statute, such as actions to recover money paid as usury or lost in gaming. See Bailey v. Dean, 5 Barb. (N. YJ 303: Ashley v. Frame, 4 Kan. App. 265, 45 Pac. 927 ; Cole v. Groves, 134 Mass. 472. But in a more par- ticular sense It means (1) an action on a stat- ute which gives a certain penalty to be recover- ed by any person who will sue for it, (In re Barker, 56 Vt. 20.) or (2) an action in which the judgment against the defendant is in the nature of a fine or is intended as a punishment, actions in which the recovery is to be compensa- tory in its purpose and effect not being penal actions but civil suits, though they may cany special damages by statute. See Moller v. U. S., 57 Fed. 490, 6 C. C. A. 459; Atlanta v. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works, 127 Fed. 23. 61 C. C. A. 387. 64 L. R. A. 721.— Penal Mil. An instrument formerly in use, by which a party bound himself to pay a certain sum or sums of money, or to do certain acts, or, in default thereof, to pay a certain specified sum by way of penalty ; thence termed a “penal sum.” These instruments have been superseded by the use of a bond in a penal sum, with conditions. Brown.— Penal bend. A bond prom- ising to pay a named sum of money (the penalty) with a condition underwritten that, if a stipulated collateral thing, other than the payment of money, be done or forborne, as the case may be. the obligation shall be void. Burnside v. Wand, 170 Mo. 531, 71 S. W. 337. 62 L. R. A. 427.— Penal clanse. A penal clause is a secondary obligation, entered Into for the purpose of enforcing the performance of a primary obligation. Civ. Code La. art. 2117. Also a clause in a statute declaring a penalty for a violation of the preceding clauses.— Penal laws. Those which prohibit an act and impose n penalty for the commission of it. 2 Cro. Jac. 415. Strictly and properly speaking, a penal law is one imposing a penalty or punishment (and properly a pecuniary fine or mulct) for some offense of a public nature or wrong com- mitted against the state. Sackett v. Sackett, 8 Tick. (Mass.) 320; Kilton v. Providence Tool Co.. 22 R. I. 605. 48 Atl. 1039; Drew v. Rus- sell. 47 Vt. 252: Nebraska Nat. Bank v.

Walsh, 68 Ark. 433, 59 8. W. 952, 82 Am. St Rep. 301. Strictly speaking, statutes giving a private action against a wrongdoer are not pe- nal in their nature, neither the liability imposed nor the remedy given being penal. If the wrong done ie to the Individual, the law riving him a right of action ia remedial, rather than penal, though the sum to be recovered may be called a "penalty*’ or may consist in double or treble damages. See Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Snp. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123 ; Diver- sey v. Smith. 103 111. 390. 42 Am. Ren, 14; fuilinan v. P^rkhard, 41 Misc. Rep. 321, 84

N. Y. Supp. 825; People v. Common Council of Bay City, 36 Mich. 189.— Penal servitude, in English criminal law, is a punishment which consists in keeping an offender in confinement, and compelling him to labor. Steph. Crirn. Dig. 2.— Penal atatntea. See “ penal laic*,” supra. — Penal sum. A sum agreed upon in a bond, to be forfeited if the condition of the bond is not fulfilled.

PEN ALTY. 1. The sum of money which the obligor of a bond undertakes to pay by way of penalty, in the event of his omitting to perform or carry out the terms imposed upon him by the conditions of the bond. Brown; Tayloe v. Sandiford, 7 Wheat 13, 5 L. Ed. 384 ; Watt v. Sheppard, 2 Ala. 445.

A penalty is an agreement to pay a greater sum, to secure the payment of a less sum. It is conditional, and can be avoided by the pay- ment of the less sum before the contingency agreed upon shall happen. By what name it is called is immaterial. Henry v. Thompson, Minor (Ala.) 209, 227.

2. A punishment; a punishment imposed by statute as a consequence of the commis- sion of a certain specified offense. Lancas- ter v. Richardson, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 136; Peo- ple v. Nedrow, 122 111. 363, 13 N. E. 533; Iowa v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (C. C.) 37 Fed. 497, SLR. A 554.

The terms “fine.” "forfeiture,” and "penalty” are often used loosely, and even confusedly ; but, when a discrimination is made, the word “penalty” is found to be generic in its character, including both fine ana forfeiture. A “fine is a pecuniary penalty, and is commonly (perhaps always) to be collected by suit in some form. A “forfeiture” is a penalty by which one loses his rights and Interest in his proper- ty. Gosselink v. Campbell, 4 Iowa, 300.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

3. The term also denotes money recover- able by virtue of a statute imposing a pay- ment by way of punishment

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Penal statutes are to be strictly construed]

The entry defines actions on penal statutes; such statutes are governed by the canon that penal laws are strictly construed.

Why: Genuine: the strict-construction canon is the named rule governing exactly the penal actions the entry defines. Kept in loose maxim form; no case citation invented.

PENANCE.

In ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical punishment Inflicted by an ec- clesiastical court for some spiritual offense. Ayl. Par. 420.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Nathaniel Hawthorne, The Scarlet Letter, 1850]

(paraphrase) Hawthorne's Hester Prynne, condemned to wear the scarlet letter A in public view, is the archetypal literary penance — an ecclesiastical-style punishment inflicted for a spiritual offense, exactly the entry's subject. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry: ecclesiastical punishment for spiritual offense. The Scarlet Letter is the canonical fictional penance. Paraphrase — no quote needed.

PENDENCY.

Suspense ; the state of being pendent or undecided; the state of an action, etc., after it has been begun, and be- fore the final disposition of it.

PENDENS.

Lat. Pending; as Us pen- dens, a pending suit.

PENDENTE LITE.

Lat. Pending the suit; during the actual progress of a suit; during litigation.

Pendente Ute nihil innovetnr. Co.

Litt. 344. During a litigation nothing new should be Introduced.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Pendente lite nihil innovetur]

The entry's maxim — pendente lite nihil innovetur, 'during litigation nothing new should be introduced' — is the foundation of lis pendens: a pending suit over property is notice to the world, so no new interest can be created to defeat it.

Why: Genuine: the footnote identifies the governing principle the entry itself quotes, and names the living doctrine (lis pendens, with state lis-pendens statutes) built on it. PENDENCY and PENDENS left bare as twins.

PENETRATION.

A term used in crim- inal law, and denoting (in cases of alleged rape) the insertion of the male part into the female parts to however slight an extent; and by which insertion the offense is com- plete without proof of emission. Brown.

PENITENTIARY.

A prison or place of punishment ; the place of punishment in which convicts sentenced to confinement and hard labor are confined by the authority of the law. Millar v. State, 2 Kan. 175.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Richard Lovelace, "To Althea, from Prison", 1642]

'Stone walls do not a prison make, / Nor iron bars a cage' — Lovelace, writing from actual confinement, states the canonical literary truth that the penitentiary is not its walls; it illuminates what the entry's 'prison or place of punishment' is and is not.

Why: Entry defines the penitentiary as a prison/place of punishment. The Lovelace couplet is verbatim-certain and is the classic literary statement on imprisonment. Genuinely illuminating.

PENNON.

A standard, banner, or ensign carried in war.

PENNY.

An English coin, being the twelfth part of a shilling. It was also used in America during the colonial period.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 20:2, KJV]

And when he had agreed with the labourers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard.

Why: The entry is the penny as a coin of account. The verse fixes its real economic meaning — a day's wage — which is what gives the coin its legal sense. Narrative of the parable, not Jesus' direct speech — no flag.

PENNYWEIGHT.

A Troy weight, equal to twenty-four grains, or one-twentieth part of an ounce.

. PEN SAM. The full weight of twenty ounces.

PENSIO.

Lat. In the civil law. A pay- ment, properly, for the use of a thing. A rent; a payment for the use and occupation of another's house.

PENSION.

A stated allowance out o: the public treasury granted by government to an Individual, or to his representatives, for his valuable services to the country, or in compensation for loss or damage sustain- ed by him in the public service. Price v. Society for Savings, 64 Conn. 362, 30 Atl. 139, 42 Am. St. Rep. 198; Manning v. Spry, 121 Iowa, 191, 96 N. W. 873; Friable v. U. S„ 157 U. S. 160, 15 Sup. Ct. 586, 39 L. Ed. 657.

Ia English practice. An annual pay- ment made by each member of the inns of court. Cowell ; Holthouse.

Also an assembly of the members of the society of Gray’s lan, to consult of their affairs.

la the civil, Scotch, aad Spanish law.

A rent ; an annual rent

—Pension of churches. In English ecclesi- astical law. Certain sums of money paid to clergymen in lieu of tithes. A spiritual person may sue in the spiritual court' for a pension originally granted and confirmed by the ordina- ry, but, where it is granted by a temporal per- son to a clerk, he cannot ; as, if one grant an annuity to a parson, he must sue for it in the temporal courts. Cro. Elis. 675. — Pension writ. A peremptory order against a member of an inn of court who is in arrear for his pensions, (that is, for his periodical dues,) or for other duties. Cowell.

PENSIONER.

One who is supported by an allowance at the will of another; a de- pendent. It is usually applied (in a pub- lic sense) to those who receive pensions or annuities from government, who are chief- ly such as have retired from places of honor and emolument Jacob.

Persons making periodical payments are sometimes so called. Thus, resident under- graduates of the university of Cambridge, who are not on the foundation of any col- lege, are spoken of as “pensioners.” Mozley & Whitley.

PENT-ROAD.

A road shut up or closed at its terminal points. Wolcott v. Whit comb, 40 Vt 41.

PENTECOSTAES.

In ecclesiastical law. Pious oblations made at the feast of Pente- cost by parishioners to their priests, and sometimes by inferior churches or parishes to the principal mother churches. They are also called “Whitsun farthings.” Whar- ton.

[Law: 42 U.S.C. § 1994 (Peonage Abolition Act of 1867); U.S. Const. amend. XIII]

Enforced servitude to work out a debt was abolished by the Peonage Abolition Act — the very statute (Rev. St. § 5526) the entry cites — under the Thirteenth Amendment's prohibition of involuntary servitude.

Why: Genuine and direct: the entry defines peonage and cites the federal statute against it; the footnote gives the statute's modern codification and its constitutional root. No hop.

[Leviticus 25:39-40, KJV]

And if thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee; thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant: But as an hired servant, and as a sojourner, he shall be with thee, and shall serve thee unto the year of jubile:

Why: Peonage is enforced servitude to work out a debt. The Mosaic law directly regulates this exact condition — debt bondage limited in kind and in time (release at jubile). Filed as the LORD's speech to Moses (Lev 25:1),...

The word “people” may have various significa- tions according to the connection in which it is used. When we speak of the rights of the peo- ple, or of the government of the people by faw, or of the people as a non-political aggregate, we mean all the inhabitants of the state or nation, without distinction as to sex, age, or otherwise. But when reference is made to the people as the repository of sovereignty, or as the source of governmental power, or to' popular govern- ment. We are in fact speaking of that selected and limited class of citizens to whom the con- stitution accords the elective franchise and the right of participation in the offices of govern- ment. [Law: U.S. Const. pmbl. — 'We the People of the United States'; popular sovereignty]

In its constitutional-law sense — the body of citizens invested with political power — 'the people' is the Preamble's 'We the People': the sovereign body in the doctrine of popular sovereignty.

Why: Genuine: the entry's constitutional definition is exactly the Preamble's people. Direct mapping, no hop.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Peter 2:9, KJV]

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light.

[Law: the Rule in Shelley's Case (1581)]

Taking 'by the form of the gift' rather than by operation of law is the pivot of the Rule in Shelley's Case: where the ancestor takes a freehold with remainder to his heirs, the heirs take by descent, not per formam doni.

Why: Genuine: the rule's whole point is the contrast the phrase names — form-of-the-gift taking versus taking by descent. The entry cites 2 Bl. Comm. on the phrase; Shelley's Case is the doctrine built on it.

PEB FRATTDEM.

Lat By fraud. Where a plea alleges matter of discharge, and the replication avers that the discharge was fraudulently obtained and is therefore invalid, it is called a "replication per fraud- em.”

[Law: the per incuriam doctrine of precedent]

A decision given 'through inadvertence' — without regard to a relevant statute or binding authority — is said to be per incuriam and is not followed as binding precedent.

Why: Genuine: the phrase names a real doctrine of precedent; the footnote states it. Kept loose with no invented citation.

PER INDUSTRIAM HOMINES.

Lat. In old English law. By human industry. A term applied to the reclaiming or taming of wild animals by art, industry, and educa- tion. 2 Bl. Comm. 391.

[Law] — Law

[Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (1805)]

Reclaiming wild animals 'by human industry' belongs to the law of property in ferae naturae, whose leading American statement is the occupancy (capture) rule of Pierson v. Post.

Why: Genuine doctrinal family: the entry's phrase concerns how human action creates property in wild animals, and Pierson v. Post is the foundational American case on that question. Confident on the citation.

PEB INFORTUNIUM.

Lat. By misad- venture. In criminal law, homicide per in- fortunium is committed where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another. 4 Bl. Comm. 182.

PEB LEGEM ANGLI®. Lat. By the law of England ; by the curtesy. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 18.

PEB LEGEM TERR®. Lat. By the law of the land; by due process of law.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Magna Carta c. 39 (per legem terrae); U.S. Const. amends. V, XIV — due process of law]

The entry embeds per legem terrae — 'by the law of the land; by due process of law' — the Magna Carta phrase (c. 39) that is the historical ancestor of due process of law under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments.

Why: Genuine: the entry itself equates per legem terrae with due process of law and cites authority; the footnote names the lineage. PER MISADVENTURE left bare as the twin.

But if he thrust him suddenly without enmity, or have cast upon him any thing without laying of wait,
Or with any stone, whereby a man may die, seeing him not, and cast it upon him, that he die, and was not his enemy, neither sought his harm:

Why: Homicide per infortunium is killing by misadventure — a lawful act, no intent of hurt. The Mosaic law of unintentional homicide is the same doctrine: no enmity, no laying in wait, and the slayer judged accordingly. Fi...

the half and by the whole. A phrase de- scriptive of the mode in which joint tenants hold the joint estate, the effect of which, technically considered, is that for purposes of tenure and survivorship each is the bolder of the whole, but for purposes of alienation each has only his own share, which is pre- sumed in law to be equal. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 406.

[Law: joint tenancy with right of survivorship — the four unities]

'By the half and by the whole' describes joint tenancy: for tenure and survivorship each tenant holds the whole, for alienation only his share — the estate defined by the four unities of time, title, interest, and possession.

Why: Genuine: the entry describes exactly how joint tenants hold; the four unities are the modern doctrinal statement of that holding. Direct.

PER PROCURATION.

By proxy; by one acting as an agent with special powers ; as under a letter of attorney. These words “give notice to all persons that the agent is acting under a special and limited authority.” 10 C. B. 689. The phrase is commonly ab- breviated to “ per proc.,’’ or “p. p.,” and is more used in the civil law and in England than in American law.

PER QUA! 8ERVITIA. Lat. A real ac- tion by which the grantee of a seigniory could compel the tenants of the grantor to attorn to himself. It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Win. IV. c. 27, { 35.

PER QUOD.

Lat Whereby. When the declaration in an action of tort after stating the acts complained of, goes on to allege the consequences of those acts as a ground of special damage to the plaintiff, the recital of such consequences is prefaced by these words, “per quod,” whereby ; and sometimes the phrase is used as the name of that clause of the declaration.

[Law] — Law

[Law: defamation per quod — extrinsic-fact defamation requiring special damages]

The per quod clause alleging special damage survives as defamation per quod: a statement whose defamatory meaning appears only with extrinsic facts, requiring the plaintiff to plead and prove special damages.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the per-quod special-damage clause in tort pleading; defamation per quod is the living doctrine named for and built on it. Direct.

PER QUOD CONSORTIUM AMISIT.

Lat In old pleading. Whereby he lost the company [of his wife.] A phrase used in the old declarations in actions of trespass by a husband, for beating or ill using his wife, descriptive of the special damage be had sus- tained. 3 Bl. [Law] — Law

[Law: the modern action for loss of consortium]

'Whereby he lost the company [of his wife]' named the special damage in the old trespass action; the modern action for loss of consortium descends from it.

Why: Genuine lineage: the phrase named the gist of the historic action, and loss-of-consortium claims survive in modern tort law. PER QUOD SERVITIUM AMISIT left bare — the master's action is essentially extinct.

PER QUOD SERVTTIUM AMISIT.

Lat By a leap or bound ; by a sudden movement ; passing over certain proceedings. 8 East 511.

PER SE.

Lat. By himself or itself ; in itself ; taken alone ; Inherently ; in isola- tion; unconnected with other matters.

[Law] — Law

[Law: negligence per se]

'By itself; inherently' is the term of art in negligence per se: violation of a safety statute is negligence as a matter of law, without further proof of unreasonableness.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the bare phrase; negligence per se is the leading doctrine employing it as a term of art. Framed as the doctrine, not a redefinition.

PER STIRPES.

Lat By roots or stocks; by representation. This term, de- rived from the civil law, is much used in the law of descents and distribution, and de- notes that method of dividing an intestate es- tate where a class or group of distributees take the share which their stock (a deceased ancestor) would have been entitled to, taking thus by their right of representing such an- cestor, and not as so many individuals ; while other heirs, who stand in equal degree with such ancestor to the decedent, take each a share equal to his. See Rotmanskey v. Uelss, 86 Md. 633, 39 AG. 415.

[Law] — Law

[Law: intestate-succession statutes — distribution per stirpes (by representation); cf. UPC § 2-106]

Distribution 'by roots or stocks' — each group taking the share its deceased ancestor would have taken, by representation — is the method prescribed by modern intestate-succession statutes as against per capita distribution.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines per stirpes in 'the law of descents and distribution'; the footnote names the living statutory home, twin to the PER CAPITA annotation.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 48:5-6, KJV]

And now thy two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine; as Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine. And thy issue, which thou begettest after them, shall be thine, and shall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance.

Why: Per stirpes is taking by representation — distributees taking the share their stock would have had. Jacob's adoption of Ephraim and Manasseh as his own sons in the inheritance is scripture's own act of representation....

[Law] — Law

[Law: tenancy by the entirety]

'By the whole, and not by the moiety' describes tenancy by the entirety: husband and wife seised of the whole estate, neither of a moiety.

Why: Genuine: the entry describes the estate; the footnote names it. Direct, no hop.

Marriage 'by words of the present tense' — present words of mutual taking as husband and wife — is the classic common-law marriage formula, as against verba de futuro (future words, mere espousal unless consummated).

Why: Genuine: the entry's phrase is the operative formula of common-law marriage, still the basis of the doctrine in states recognizing it. PER VERBA DE FUTURO left bare; the one footnote carries the pair's distinction.

[Law: prohibition of perfidy — Additional Protocol I, art. 37]

Beyond the general sense of broken faith, perfidy is a term of art in the law of armed conflict: feigning protected status (e.g., civilian, or a truce flag) to kill, wound, or capture is a prohibited act.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the word generally; the law of war gives it a precise legal meaning, which the footnote states. Confident on the article.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Jeremiah 5:11, KJV]

For the house of Israel and the house of Judah have dealt very treacherously against me, saith the LORD.

Why: Perfidy is breach of engaged faith — promising a thing and doing the contrary. The verse names covenant faith broken, in the LORD's own speech. Hence deity verbatim.

In criminal law. The will- ful assertion as to a matter of fact, opinion, belief, or knowledge, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding as part of his evidence, either upon oath or in any form allowed by law to be substituted for an oath, whether such evidence is given in open court, or in ■n affidavit, or otherwise, such assertion be- ing known to such witness to be false, and being Intended by him to mislead the court. Jury, or person bolding the proceeding. 2 Whart. Crim. Law, | 1244; Herring v. State, 119 Ga. 709, 46 S. E. 876; Beecher v. Ander- son, 46 Mich. 543, 8 N. W. 539; Schmidt v.

Witherick, 29 Minn. 156, 12 N. W. 448; State v. Simons, 30 Vt. 620; MUler v. State, 15 Fla. 585; Clark v. Clark, 51 N. J. Eq. 404, 26 Atl. 1012; Hood v. State, 44 Ala. 81.

Perjury shall consist in willfully, knowingly, absolutely, and falsely swearing, either with or without laying the hand on the Holy Evangelist of Almighty God, or affirming, in a matter mate- rial to the issue or point in question, in some judicial proceeding, by a person to whom a lawful oath or affirmation is administered. Code Ga. 1882, g 4460.

Every person who, having taken an oath that he will testify, declare, depose, or certi% truly before any competent tribunal, officer, or per- son, in any of the cases in which such an oath may by law be administered, willfully, and con- trary to such oath, states as truth any material matter which he knows to be false, is guilty of perjury. Pen. Code Cal. § 118. .....

The willful giving, under oath, in a judicial proceeding or course of justice, of false testimony material to the issue or point of inquiry. 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 1015.

Perjury, at common law, is the taking of a willful false oath by one who, being lawfully sworn by a competent court to depose the truth in any judicial proceeding, swears absolutely and falsely in a matter material to the point in issue, whether he believed or not.” Comm. v. Powell, 2 Mete. (Ky.) 10; Cothran v. State, 39 Miss. 541.

It will be observed that, at common law, the crime of perjury can be committed only in the course of a suit or judicial proceeding. But statutes have very generally extended both the definition and the punishment of this offense to willful false swearing in many different kinds of affidavits and depositions, such as those re- quired to be made in tax returns, through the negli- gence of a co-employe, the company itself may be regarded as the “perpetrator” of the act, within the meaning of a statute giving an action against the perpetrator. Philo v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 33 Iowa, 47.

Perpetna lex est nullmin legem kuu. nam so poiitivam perpetuam esse, et clansula quae abrogationem exclndit ah initio non valet. It is a perpetual law that no human and positive law can be perpetual, and a clause [in a law] which precludes the power of abrogation is void aft initio. Bac. Max. p. 77, in reg. 19.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — principals]

The perpetrator — the person who actually commits the offense — is the principal, punishable as such whether he commits the act himself or through another.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the actual committer; § 2 is the federal statement of principal liability (commits, or aids and abets). Direct.

PERPETUAL.

Never ceasing; continu- ous ; enduring ; lasting ; unlimited in respect of time; continuing without intermission or interval. See Scanlan v. Crawshaw, 5 Mo. App. 337.

— Perpetual edict. In Roman law. Origi- nally the term “perpetual" was merely opposed to “occasional” and was used to distinguish the general edicts of the pnetors from the special edicts or orders which they issued in their judi- cial capacity. But under Hadrian the edict was revised by the jurist Julianus, and was refiublished as a permanent act of legislation, t was then styled "perpetual,” in the sense of being calculated to endure in perpetuvm, or un- til abrogated by competent authority. Aust. ,Tur. 855.— Perpetual succession. That con- tinuous existence which enables a corporation to manage its affairs, and hold property with- out the necessity of perpetual conveyances, for the purpose of transmitting it. By reason of this quality, this ideal and artificial person re- mains, in its legal entity and personality, the same, though frequent changes may be made of its members. Field, Corn. I 58; Scanlan v. Crawshaw, 5 Mo. App. 340.

[Maxim: the Rule Against Perpetuities (Gray's formulation)]

A perpetuity — a future limitation that may not vest within the lawful period — is void under the Rule Against Perpetuities: no interest is good unless it must vest, if at all, not later than twenty-one years after some life in being at the creation of the interest.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the void limitation; the Rule is the doctrine that voids it. Stated in maxim form with the canonical formulation.

PERPETUITY OF THE KING.

That fiction of the English law which for certain political purposes ascribes to the king in bis political capacity the attribute of immortali- ty; for, though the reigning monarch may die, yet by this fiction the king never dies, *. c., the office is supposed to be reoccupied for all political purposes Immediately on Ms death. Brown.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Rex nunquam moritur — 'the king never dies']

The fiction that the king never dies — the office reoccupied instantly for all political purposes — is stated in the classic maxim.

Why: Genuine: the entry describes the fiction; the maxim is the law-well's classic formulation of it. Borderline-circular but legitimate under the brief's maxim allowance.

PERQUISITES.

In its most extensive sense, “perquisites” signifies anything obtalh- ed by industry or purchased with money, dlfferent from that which descends from a fa- ther or ancestor. Bract l. 2, c. 30, n. 3.

Perquisites — emoluments of office beyond salary — are the subject of the Constitution's Emoluments Clauses, barring federal officers from accepting foreign emoluments and fixing the President's compensation.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines perquisites as emoluments of office; the clauses are the constitutional law of such emoluments. Direct.

PERQUIBITIO.

Purchase. Acquisition by one’s own act or agreement and not by descent.

PERQUISITOR.

In old English law. A purchaser; one who first acquired an estate to his family; one who acquired an estate by sale, by gift, at by any other method, ex- cept only that of descent 2 Bl. Comm. 220.

PER8ECUTIO.

Lat. In the civil law. A following after ; a pursuing at law ; a suit or prosecution. Properly that kind of Judi- cial proceeding before the prietor which was called “extraordinary.” In a general sense, any judicial proceeding. Including not only “actions,” (actiones,) properly so called, but other proceedings also. Calvin.

Southern Pacific R.R., 118 U.S. 394 (1886)]

The entry's artificial persons — corporations, 'created and devised by law' — are persons for federal statutory and Fourteenth Amendment purposes.

Why: Genuine: the entry's artificial/natural-person distinction is exactly what these sources govern. PERSONABLE and PERSONA left bare — same well, fuller entry wins.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 1:27, KJV]

So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.

[John Donne, "Meditation XVII", 1624]

'No man is an island, entire of itself' — Donne's canonical statement that the human person exists only in connection; it illuminates the human being behind the entry's legal abstraction of the person as rights-bearer and duty-bearer.

Why: Entry: 'A human being considered as capable of having rights and of being charged with duties.' Donne's line is verbatim-certain and speaks to the humanity of the legal person. Genuine link.

PERSONA.

Lat In the civil law.

Character, in virtue of which certain rights belong to a man and certain duties are im- posed upon him. Thus one man may unite many characters, (persona- .) as, for example, the characters of father and son, of master and servant. Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 129.

In eeeleslastieal law. The rector of a church Instituted and inducted, for his own life, was called "persona mortalis;" and any collegiate or conventual body, to whom the church was forever appropriated, was termed "persona tmmortalis.” Jacob.

—Persona designate. A person pointed out or described as an individual, as opposed to a pereon ascertained as a member of a class, or as filling a particular character.— Persona eo- olesiae. The parson or personation of the church.— Persona non grata. 'All the world's a stage, / And all the men and women merely players' — Jaques's speech gives the persona as the roles or masks a person assumes, each carrying its part; it illuminates the entry's doctrine that one man may unite many personae.

Why: Entry: civil-law 'character' by which rights/duties attach; one man may unite many. The 'merely players' speech is the canonical literary persona-as-role. Verbatim-certain couplet.

PERSONABLE.

Having the rights and powers of a person ; able to hold or maintain a plea in court; also capacity to take any- thing granted or given.

Personas vice fungi tnr munieipium et decuria. Towns and boroughs act as if per- sons. Warner v. Beers, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, 144.

In old English law. Personally; In person.

PERSONALITY.

In modern civil law. The Incidence of a law or statute upon per- sons, or that quality which makes it a per- sonal law rather than a real law. “By the personality of laws, foreign jurists generally mean all laws which concern the condition, state, and capacity of persons.” Story, Confi. Laws, § 16.

PERSONALTY.

Personal property; movable property ; chattels.

An abstract of personal. In old practice, an action was said to be In the personalty, where It was brought against the right per- son or the person against whom in law it lay. Old Nat. Brev. 92 ; Cowell.

— Quasi personalty. Thincs which are mov- able in point of law, though fixed to things real, either actually, as emblements, (fructus indus- triales.) fixtures, etc. : or fictitiously, as chat- tels-real, leases for years, etc.

PERSONATE.

In criminal law. To as- sume the person (character) of another, with- out his consent or knowledge, in order to de- ceive others, and, in such feigned character, to fraudulently do some act or gain some advantage, to the harm or prejudice of the person counterfeited. See 2 East, P. C. 1010.

PETITIO PRINCIPH.

In logic. Beg- ging the question, which is the taking of a thing for true or for granted, and drawing conclusions from it as such, when it is really dubious, perhaps false, or at least wants to be proved, before any inferences ought to be drawn from it.

PETITION.

A written address, embody- ing an application or prayer from the person or persons preferring it, to the power, body, or person to whom it is presented, for the exercise of his or their authority in the re- dress of some wrong, or the grant of some favor, privilege, or license.

■ In practice. An application made to a court ex parte, or where there are no parties Bl.La.w Dict.(2d Ed.)— 67 in opposition, praying for the exercise of the judicial powers of the court in relation, to some matter which is not the subject for a suit or action, or for authority to do some act which requires the sanction of the court ; as for the appointment of a guardian, for leave to sell trust property, etc.

The word “petition” is generally used in ju- dicial proceedings to describe an application in writing, in contradistinction to a motion, which may be viva voce. Bergen v. Jones, 4 Mete. (Mass.) 371.

In the practice of some of the states, the word “petition” is adopted as the name of that initiatory pleading In an action which is elsewhere called a “declaration" or “com- plaint” See Code Ga. 1882, § 3332.

In equity practice. An application In writing for an order of the court, stating the circumstances upon which it Is founded; a proceeding resorted to whenever the nature of the application to the court requires, a full- er statement than can be conveniently made in a notice of motion. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 578.

—Petition de droit. L. Fr. In English prac- tice. A petition of right ; a form of proceed- ing to obtain restitution from the crown of ei- ther real or personal property, being of use where the crown is in possession of any here- ditaments or chattels, and the petitioner sim- gests such a right as controverts the title of the Crown, grounded, on facts disclosed in the pe- tition itself. 3 Bl. Comm. 256.— Petition in bankruptcy. A paper filed in a court of bank- ruptcy, or with the clerk, by a debtor praying for the benefits of the bankruptcy act, or by creditors alleging the commission of an act of bankruptcy by tneir debtor and praying an ad- judication of bankruptcy against him.— Petition of right. In English law. A proceeding in chancery by which a subject may recover prop- erty in the possession of the king. See Peti- tion de Dboit.— Petition of rights. A par- liamentary declaration of the liberties of the people, assented to by King Charles I. in 1620. It is to be distinguished from the bill of rights, (1689.) which has passed into a permanent con- stitutional statute. Brown.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — the right to petition for redress of grievances]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The entry defines the petition as an address seeking redress or favor from authority; the First Amendment secures the right 'to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.'

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the petition; the amendment guarantees the right. Direct. PETITIONER left bare as the agent-noun twin.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 John 5:15, KJV]

And if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him.

Why: Petition is a written address praying a power for redress of wrong or grant of favor. The verse uses the very word for petitions laid before God — the concept's scriptural form. Epistolary, not deity speech — no flag.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[First Amendment, U.S. Constitution, 1791]

'and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances' — the First Amendment's closing clause is the American legal embodiment of the entry: an application 'for the redress of some wrong,' in language echoing the dictionary definition itself.

Why: Entry defines petition as an application for redress of wrong or grant of favor. The First Amendment clause is verbatim-certain and is the genuine legal-literary embodiment. The phrasing parallel ('redress') confirms...

PETITIONER.

One who presents a pe- tition to a court, officer, or legislative body. In legal proceedings begun by petition, the person against whom action or relief is prayed, or who opposes the prayer of the pe- tition. is called the "respondent."

PETITIONING CREDITOR.

The cred- itor at whose Instance an adjudication of bankruptcy is made against a bankrupt.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 303 — involuntary bankruptcy cases]

The creditor at whose instance a bankruptcy adjudication is made against the debtor is the petitioner in an involuntary case.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the petitioning creditor; § 303 governs involuntary petitions. Direct, no hop.

PETITORY ACTION.

A droitural ac- tion ; that is,, one in which the plaintiff seeks to establish and enforce, by an appropri- ate legal proceeding, his right of property, or his title, to the subject-matter in dispute ; as distinguished from a possessory action, where the right to the possession is the point in litigation, and not the mere right of property. The term is chiefly used in admiralty. 1 Kent. Comm. 371 ; The Tilton, 5 Mason, 465, Fed. Cas. No. 14,054.

Ia Scotch law. Actions in which dam- ages are sought

PLAGIARISM.

The act of appropriat- ing' the literary composition of another, or parts or passages of his writings, or the Ideas or language of the same, and passing them off as the product of one's own mind.

PLAGIARIST, or PLAGIARY. One who publishes the thoughts and writings of another as his own.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 17 U.S.C. § 501 — copyright infringement]

Plagiarism — passing off another's literary composition as one's own — is not itself the legal wrong; its legal cognate is copyright infringement.

Why: Genuine cognate: the entry defines the act; infringement is the legal wrong answering to appropriation of another's writings. Framed as the cognate to avoid conflating the ethical term with the legal one.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Jeremiah 23:30, KJV]

Therefore, behold, I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, that steal my words every one from his neighbour.

Why: Plagiarism is appropriating another's words and passing them off as one's own. The verse names exactly that act — stealing words from one's neighbour — in the LORD's own speech. Distinct from the general theft command...

[Martial, Epigrams, c. 86 CE]

(paraphrase) The Roman poet Martial originated the usage: in his Epigrams he denounced a rival who recited Martial's verses as his own as a 'plagiarius' — literally a kidnapper — the classical root of the entry's 'appropriating the literary composition of another.' (paraphrase)

Why: Entry defines plagiarism as appropriating another's literary composition. Martial's plagiarius is the genuine classical origin of the term. Paraphrase; no Latin quoted (attribution of exact epigram number uncertain —...

PLAGIARIUS.

Lat In the civil law. A man-stealer; a kidnapper. Dig. 48, 15, 1; 4 Bl. Comm. 219.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1201 — kidnapping]

The civil-law man-stealer or kidnapper is the offender punished by the federal kidnapping statute.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines man-stealing; § 1201 is its federal statutory form. PLAGIUM left bare as the twin.

[Scripture] — Scripture

him, or selleth him; then that thief shall die; and thou shalt put evil away from among you.

Why: Plagiarius is the man-stealer — the offender, distinct from the offense (PLAGIUM). This verse names the offender ('that thief shall die') in God's spoken law; a distinct verse for a distinct headword, not a duplicate....

PLAGIUM.

Lat. In the civil law. Man-stealing; kidnapping. The offense of enticing away and stealing men, children, and slaves. Calvin. The persuading a slave to escape from his master, or the concealing or harboring him without the knowledge of his master. Dig. 48, 15, 6.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 21:16, KJV]

And he that stealeth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death.

Why: Plagium is man-stealing — kidnapping, enticing away men, children, slaves. The Mosaic law states the identical offense with its penalty. Filed as God's spoken judgments, hence deity verbatim. PLAGIARIUS carries the co...

PLAIDEUR.

Fr. An obsolete term for an attorney who pleaded the cause of his client; an advocate.

PLAIN STATEMENT Is one that may be readily understood, not merely by law- yers, but by all who are sufficiently ac- quainted with the language In which it la written. Mann v. Morewood, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 557, 584.

PLAINT.

In English pr notice . A pri- vate memorial tendered In open court to the judge, wherein the party injured seta forth his cause of action. A proceeding in inferior courts by which an action Is com menced without original writ. 3 Bl. Comm. 873. This mode of proceeding Is commonly adopted In cases of replevin. 3 Steph. Comm. 666.

In the civil law. A complaint; a form of action, particularly one for setting aside a testament alleged to be invalid. This word Is the English equivalent of the Latin “ que- rela.”

PLAINTIFF.

A person who brings an action ; the party *ho complains or sues In a personal action and is so named on the record. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Scott (Tex. Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 458; Canaan v. Greenwoods Turnpike Co., 1 Conn. l.

— Plaintiff la error. The party who sues out a writ of error to review a judgment' or other proceeding at law.— Use plaintiff. One for whose use (benefit) an action is brought in the name of another. Thus, where the assign- ee of a chose in action is not allowed to sue in his own name, the action would be entitled “A. B. (the assignor) for the use of C. D. (the assignee) against E. F." [Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 17(a) — real party in interest]

The entry's 'use plaintiff' — the action brought in the assignor's name for the assignee's benefit, where the assignee could not sue in his own name — is the old device that the real-party-in-interest rule modernized: actions must now be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest.

Why: Genuine: the 'use plaintiff' is exactly what Rule 17(a) replaced. Direct, confident.

PLAN.

A map, chart, or design; being a delineation or projection on a plane sur- face of the ground lines of a house, farm, street, city, etc., reduced in absolute length, but preserving their relative positions and proportion. PLANTATION.

La English law. A colony ; an original settlement in a new country. See 1 Bl. Comm. 107.

In American law. A farm; a large cul- tivated estate. Used chiefly In the south- ern states.

In North Carolina, “plantation” signifies the land a man owns which be is cultivating more or less In annual crops. Strictly, it designates the place planted ; but in wills it is generally used to denote more than the inclosed and cultivated fields, and to take in the necessary woodland, and, indeed, commonly all the land forming the parcel or parcels under culture as one farm, or even what is worked by one set of hands. Stowe v. Davis, 32 N. C. 431.

PLAT, or PLOT. A map, or representa- tion on paper, of a piece of land subdivided into lots, with streets, alleys, etc., usually drawn to a scale. McDaniel v. Mace, 47

A Spanish word, meaning a ' public square In a city or town. Sachs v. Towauda, 79 111. App. 441.

PLEA.

Is old English law. A suit or action. Thus, the power to “hold pleas” Is the power to take cognizance of actions or suits ; so “common pleas” are actions or suits between private persons. And this meaning of the word still appears in the modem declarations, where it is stated, e. g., that the defendant “has been summoned to answer the plaintiff in a plea of debt.”

Za eommon-law practice. A pleading; any one in the series of pleadings. More particularly, the first pleading on the part of the defendant. In the strictest sense, the answer which the defendant in an action at law makes to the plaintiff’s declaration, and in which he sets up matter of fact as de- fense, thus distinguished from a demurrer, which interposes objections on grounds of law.

Xn equity. A special answer showing or relying upon one or more things as a cause, why the suit should be either dismissed or delayed or barred. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 219; Coop. Eq. Pl. 223.

A short statement, in response to a bill in equity, of facts which, if inserted in the bill, would render it demurrable ; while an answer is a complete statement of the defendant’s case, and contains answers to any interrogatories the plaintiff may have administered. Hunt, Eq. pt 1, c. 3.

—Affirmative plea. One which sets up a single fact, not apnearing in the bill, or sets up a number of circumstances all tending to establish a single fact, which fact, if existing, destroys the complainant's case. Potts v. Potts fN. J. Ch.) 42 Atl. 1055.— Anomalous plea. One which is partly affirmative and partly neg- ative. Baldwin v. Elizabeth. 42 N. .T. Eq. 11, 6 Atl. 275; Potts v. Potts (N. J. Ch.) 42 Atl. 1055.— Bad plea. One which is unsound or insufficient in form or substance, or which does not technically answer or correspond with the pleading which preceded it in the action.— Com- mon pleas. Common causes or suits; civil actions brought and prosecuted between sub- jects or citizens, as distinguished from pleas of the crown or criminal cases.— Counter- plea. A plea to some matter incidental to the main object of the suit, and out of the direct line of pleadings. In the more ancient system of pleading, counter-plea was applied to what was, in effect, a replication to aid prayer, (q. r. ;) that is, where a tenant for life or other limited interest in land, having an action brought against him in respect to the title to such land, prayed in aid of the lord or rever- sioner for his better defense, that which the de- mandant alleged against either request was called a “counter-plea.” Cowell.— Dilatory pleas. See Dilatory.— Double plea. One having the- technical fault of duplicity; one consisting of several distinct and independent matters alleged to the same point and requiring different answers, — False plea. A sham plea. See infra. And see People v. McCumher. 18 N. Y. 321, 72 Am. Dec. 515; Pierson v. Evans, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 30.— Foreign plea. A plea objecting to the jurisdiction of a judge, on the ground that he had not cognizance of the subject-matter of the suit. Cowell.— Neg- ative plea. One which does not undertake to answer the various allegations of the bill, but specifically denies some particular fact or matter the existence of which is essential to entitle the complainant to any relief. See Potts v. Potts (N. J. Ch.) 42 Atl. 1056. — Peremptory pleas. “Pleas in. bar” are so termed in con- tradistinction to that class of pleas called “dil- atory pleas.” The former, viz., peremptory pleas, are usually pleaded to the merits of the action, with the view of raising a material issue between the parties; while the latter class, viz., dilatory pleas, are generally plead- ed with a view of retarding the plaintiff’s pro- ceedings, and not for the purpose of raising anr issue upon which the parties may go to trial and settle the point in dispute. Peremptory pleas are also called “pleas in bar,” while dil- atory pleas are said to be in abatement only. Brown.— Plea In abatement. In practice. A plea which goes to abate the plaintiff’s ac- tion; that is, to suspend or put it off for the present. 3 Bl. Comm. 801; Hurst v. Everett (G. C.) 21 Fed. 221 ; Wilson », Winchester A

P. R. Co. (C. O.) 82 Fed. 18; Middlebrook v. Ames, 5 Stew. A P. (Ala.) 166.— Plea In bar. In practice. A plea which goes to bar the plaintiff’s action; that is. to defeat it absolutely and entirely. 1 Bun-ill, Pr. 162 ; 3 Bl. Comm. 303; Rawson v. Knight, 71 Me. 102; Norton v. Winter, 1 Or. 48. 62 Am. Dec. 297 ; Wilson v. Knox County, 132 Mo. 387, 34 S. W. 45.— Plea In dlsonarge. One which admits that the plaintiff had a canae of action, but shows that it was discharged by some subsequent or collateral matter, as, payment or accord and satisfaction. Nichols v. Cecil. 106 Tenn. 455, 61 S. W. 768.— Plea In reconvention. In the civil law. A plea which sets up. new mat- ter, not in defense to the action, but by way of cross-complaint, set-off, or counterclaim.-* Plea of release. One which admits the cause, of action, but sets forth a release subsequently executed by the party authorized to release the claim. Landis v. Morrissey, 69 Cal. 83, 10 Pae. 258.— Plea side. The plea side of a court is that branch or department of the court which entertains or takes cognizance of civil actions and suite, as distinguished from its criminal or crown deonrtment. Thus the court of king s bench is said to have a plea side and a crown or criminal side; the one branch or department of it being devoted to the cognizance of civil actions, the other to criminal proceed- ings and matters peculiarly concerning the crown. So the court of exchequer is said to have a plea side and a crown side; the one being appropriated to civil actions, the other to matters of revenue. Brown.— Pleas of the crown. In English law. A phrase now em- ployed to signify criminal causes, in which the king is a party. Formerly it signified royal causes for offenses of a greater magnitude than mere misdemeanors.— Pleas roll. In English practice. A record upon which are entered all the pleadings in a cause, in their regular order, and the issue.— Pure plea. In equity pleading. One which relies wholly on some matter outside those referred to in the bill : as a plea of a release on a settled ac- count.—Sham plea. A false plea ; a plea of false or fictitious matter, subtly drawn so as to entrap an opponent, or create delay. 3 Chit. Pr. 729, 730. A vexatious or false de- fense, resorted to under the old system of plead- ing for purposes of delay and annoyance. Steph. PI. 383. Mr. Chitty defines sham pleas to be pleas so palpably and manifestly untrue that the court will assume them to be so; pleas manifestly absurd. When answers or- defenses admit of lawyer-like argument, such w courts Should listen to, they a're not "sham,” in the sense of the statute. When, it needs argument to prove that an answer or demurrer ia frivolous, it is not frivolous, and should not be' stricken off. To warrant this summary mode' of disposing of a defense,, the mere read- ing of the pleadings should be sufficient to dis- close, without deliberation and without a doubt, that the defense is sham or irrelevant. * Cottrill v. Cramer, 40 Wis. . 559.— Special plea. A special kind of plea in bar, distinguished by this name from the general issue, and consisting usually of some new affirmative matter, though- it may also be in the form of a traverse or de- nial. See Steph. PI. 52, 162; Allen v. New Haven & N. Co., 49 Oonn. 245. — Special plea la bar. One which advances new matter. It differs from the general, in this; that the latter, denies some- material allegation, but nev- es advances' new matter. Gould, PI. c. 2, § 38.

PLEAD.

To make, deliver, or file any pleading; to conduct the pleadings in a cause. To Interpose any pleading in a suit which contains allegations of fact; in this sense the word is the antithesis of “demur." More particularly, to deliver in a formal manner the defendant’s answer to the plain- tiff's declaration, or to the Indictment, as the case may be.

To appear as a pleader or advocate In a cause; to argue a cause in a court of jus- tice. But this meaning of the word is not technical, but colloquial.

—Plead a statute. Pleading a statute is stating the facts which bring the case. within it ; and “counting” on it, in the strict language of. pleading, is making express reference to it by apt terms to show the source of right relied on. McCullough v. Colfax County, 4 Neb. HJnof.) 543, 95 N. W. 31.— Plead iasuably. This means to interpose such a plea as is cal- culated to raise a material issue, either of law or of fact.— Plead over. To pass over, or omit to notice, a material allegation in the last pleading of the opposite party ; to pass by a defect m the pleading of the other party with- out- taking advantage of it. In another sense, to plead the general issue, after one has inter- posed a demurrer or special plea which has been dismissed by a judgment ox respondeat ouster. —Plead to tbe merits. This is a phrase of long standing and accepted usage id the law, and distinguishes those pleas which answer the cause of action and on which a trial may be had from all pleas of a different character. Kahn v. Gunnison, 12 Wis. 529.

PLEAD ED.

Alleged or averred, in form, In a Judicial proceeding.

It more often refers to matter of defense, but not invariably. To say that matter in a declaration or replication is not well pleaded would not be deemed erroneous. Abbott

PLEADER.

A person whose business it Is to draw pleadings. Formerly, when plead- ing at common law was a highly technical and difficult art, there was a class of men known as “special pleaders not at the bar,” who held a position Intermediate between counsel and attorneys. The class —Special pleader. In English practice. A person, whose professional occupation is to give verbal or written opinions upon statements made verbally or in writing, and to draw pleadings, civil or criminal, and such practical proceedings as may be out of tbe usual course 2 Obit. Pr. 42.

PLEADING.

The peculiar science ov system of rules and principles, established In the common law, according to which the pleadings or responsive allegations of liti- gating parties are framed, with a view to preserve technical propriety and to produce a proper issue.

The process performed by the parties to a suit or action, in alternately presenting written statements of their contention, each responsive to that which precedes, and each serving to narrow the field of controversy, until there evolves a single point, affirmed on one side and denied on the other, called the “Issue," upon which they then go to triaL

The act or step of interposing any one of the pleadings in a cause, but particularly one on the part of the defendant ; and, in the strictest sense, one which sets up allegations of fact in defense to the action.

The name “a pleading” is also given to any one of the formal written statements of accusation or defense presented by the par- ties alternately In an action at law; the ag- gregate of such statements filed in any one cause are termed “the pleadings.”

• The oral advocacy of a client’s cause In court, by h)s barrister or counsel. Is some- times called “pleading;" but this. Is a popu- lar, rather than technical, use.

In chancery practice. Consists In mak- ing the formal written allegations or state- ments of the respective parties on the rec- ord to maintain the suit, or to defeat It, of which, when contested in matters of fact, they propose to offer proofs, and in matters of law to offer arguments to the court. Story, Eq. Pl. | 4, note.

—Double pleading. This is not allowed ei- ther In the declaration or subsequent pleadings. Its meaning with respect to the former is that the declaration must not, in support of a single demand, allege several distinct matters, by any one of which that demand is sufficiently supported. With respect to the subsequent pleadings, the meaning is that none of them is to contain several distinct answers to that which preceded it: and the reason of the rule in each ease is that such pleading tends to sev- eral issues in resnect of a single claim. Whar- ton.—Special pleading. When the allega- tions tor “pleadings.” as thev are called) of the contending parties in an action are not of the general or ordinary form, but are of a more complex or special character, they are denomi- nated “special pleadings;” and. when a defend- ant pleads a plea of this description, (i. e., a special plea.) -he is said to plead specially, in opposition to pleading the general issue. These terms have given rise to the popular denomina- tion of that science which, though properly called “pleading,” is generally known by tbe name of “special pleading.” Brown. PLEADINGS.

The pleadings are the formal allegations by the parties of their respective claims and defenses, for the judg- ment of the court. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 8 420.

The Individual allegations of the respec- tive parties to an action at common law, proceeding from them alternately, in the order and under the distinctive names following: The plaintiff’s declaration, the defendant’s plea, the plaintiff’s replication, the defendant’s rejoinder, the plaintiff’s sur- rejoinder, the defendant’s rebutter, the plaintiff’s surrebutter; after which they have no distinctive names. Burrill.

The term “pleadings” had a technical and well-defined meaning. Pleadings are written allegations of what is affirmed on .the one side, or denied on the other, disclosing to the court or jury having to try the cause the real matter in dispnte between the parties. PLEBISCITE.

In modern constitutional law, the name "plebiscite" has been given to a vote of the entire people, (that is, the aggregate of the enfranchised individuals composing a state or nation.) expressing their choice for or against a proposed law or en- actment, submitted to them, and which, if adopted, will work a radical change in the constitution, or which is beyond the powers of the regular legislative body. The pro- ceeding is extraordinary, and is generally revolutionary in its character; an example of which may be seen in the plebiscites sub- mitted to the French .people by Louis Na- poleon, whereby the Second Empire was es- tablished. But the ■principle of the plebis- cite has been Incorporated in the modern Swiss constitution, (under the name of " ref- erendum,,") by which a revision of the con- stitution must be undertaken when demand- ed by the vote of fifty thousand Swiss citi- zens. Pledge is a deposit of personal property by way of sechrlty for the performance of anoth* er act Civ. Code Cal. | 2986.

The specific article delivered to the cred- itor in security is also called a “pledge” or “pawn.” " :

There is a clear distinction between mortgages and pledges. In a pledge the legal title remains in the pledgor; in a mortgage it passes to the mortgagee. In a mortgage the mortgagee need not have possession; in a pledge the pledge^ must have possession, though it be only con- structive. In a mortgage, at common law, the property on non-payment of the debt passes wholly to the mortgagee ; In a pledge the prop- erty is sold, and only so much of the proceeds as will pay his debt passes to the pledgee. A mortgage is a conditional conveyance Of prop1- erty, which becomes absolute unless redeemed at a specified time. A pledge is not strictly a con- veyance at all, nor need any day of redemption be appointed for it. A mortgagee can sell anq deliver the thing mortgaged, subject only to the right of redemption. A pledgee cannot sell and deliver .his pawn until the debt is due and payment denied. Bouvier. ,

There are two varieties of the contract of pledge known to the law of Louisiana, viz., pawn and antichresis; the former relatlifg to chattel securities, ■ the latter to landed se- curities. See Civ. Code La. art. 3101; and see those titles.

The police of a state, in a comprehensive sense, embraces its whole system of internal regulation, by which the Btate seeks not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against the state, but also to establish for the intercourse of citizen with citizen those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by Others. Cooley, Const. Lim. *572.

It is defined by Jeremy Bentham in his works: “Police is in general a system of precaution, either for the prevention of crime or of calam- ities. Its business may be distributed into eiyht distinct branches; (1) Police for the prevention of offenses ; (2) police for the prevention of ca- lamities ; (3) police for the prevention, of epi- demic diseases ; (4) police of charity ; (5) police of interior communications ; (6) police of public amusements ; (7) police for recent intelligence ; (8) police for registration." states, through which they are enabled to establish a special depart- . meat of police; adopt such regulations as tend to prevent the commission of fraud, violence, or other offenses against the state ; aid in the ar- rest of criminals ; and secure generally the com- fort, health, and prosperity of the state, by pre- serving the public order, preventing a conflict of rights in the common intercourse of the citi- zens, and insuring to each an uninterrupted en- joyment of all the privileges conferred upon him by the laws of his country. Lalor, Pol. Enc. s. v. It is true that the legislation which se- cures to all protection in their rights, and the equal use and enjoyment of their property, embraces an almost infinite variety of subjects. Whatever affects the peace, good order, morals, and health of the community comes within its scope ; and every one must use and enjoy his property subject to the restrictions which such legislation imposes. What is termed the “police power” of the state, which, from the language often used respecting it, one would suppose to be an undefined and irresponsible element in government, can only interfere with the conduct of individuals in their intercourse with each other, and in the use of their property, so far as may be required to secure these objects. — Policy of a statute. The "policy of a stat- ute," or "of the legislature," as applied to a penal or prohibitive statute, means the inten- tion of discouraging conduct of a mischievous tendency. See L. It. 6 P. C. 134; 5 Bam. & Aid. 335; Pol. Cont. 235.— Policy of the law. By this phrase is understood the dis- position of the law to discountenance certain classes of acts, transactions, or agreements, or to refuse them its sanction, because it considers them immoral, detrimental to the public welfare, subversive of good order, or otherwise contrary to the plan and purpose of civil regulations. —Public policy. The principles under which the freedom of contract or private dealings is restricted by law for the good of the community. Wharton. The term "policy," as applied to a statute, regulation, rule of law, course of action, or the like, refers to its probable effect, tendency, or object, considered with reference to the social or political well-being of the state. Thus, certain classes of acts are said to be "against public policy," when the law refuses to enforce or recognize them, on the ground that they have a mischievous tendency, so as to be injurious to the interests of the state, apart from illegality or immorality. POLICY OF INSURANCE.

A mercan- tile Instrument In writing, by which one par- ty, In consideration of a premium, engages to Indemnify another against a contingent loss, by making him a payment In compensation, whenever the event shall happen by which the loss Is to accrue. 2 Stepb. Comm. 172.

The written instrument in which a con- tract of insurance is set forth Is called a "policy of insurance." Civ. Code Cal. f 2586.

— Blanket policy. A policy of fire insurance which contemplates that the risk is shifting, fluctuating, or varying, and is applied to a class of property rather than to any particular article or thing. Insurance Co. v. Baltimore Ware- house Co., 93 U. S. 541 23 L. Ed. 868.- Endowment policy. In life Insurance. A pol- icy the amount of which is payable to the as- sured himself at the end of a fixed term of years, if he is then living, or to his heirs or a named beneficiary- if he shall die sooner.—

Floating policy. A policy of fire insurance not applicable to any specific described goods, but to any and all goods which may at the time of the fire be in a certain building.— Interest policy. One where the assured has a real, substantial, and assignable interest in the thing insured ; as opposed to a wager policy—

Mined policy. A policy of marine insurance in which not only the time is specified for which the risk is limited, but the voyage also is described by its local termini; as opposed to policies of in- surance for a particular voyage, without any limits as to time, and also to purely time pol- icies, in which there is no designation of local termini at all. Mozley & Whitley. And see Wilkins v. Tobacco Ins. Co.. 30 Ohio, 340, 27 Am. Rep. 455.— Open policy. In insurance. One in which the value of the subject insured is not fixed or agreed upon in the policy, aa between the assured and the underwriter, but is left to be estimated in case of loss. The term is opposed to "valued policy," in which the value of the subject insured is fixed for the purpose of the insurance, and expressed on the face of the policy. Mozley & Whitley. Riggs v. [Charles Dickens, A Christmas Carol, 1843]

'Are there no prisons?' — Scrooge, solicited for the poor, invokes the workhouse-and-prison machinery for the destitute; the line lands on exactly the entry's 'public charge,' those maintained 'at the expense of the public.'

Why: Entry: the destitute as a public charge, dependent on public maintenance. Scrooge's reply is verbatim-certain and addresses precisely that legal machinery. Genuine link.

POPE.

The bishop of Rome, and supreme head of the Roman Catholic Church. 4 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 168-185.

POPE NICHOLAS' TAXATION.

first fruits (primititB or annates) were the first year's profits of all the spiritual prefer- ments in the kingdom, according to a rate made by Walter, bishop of Norwich, in the time of Pope Innocent II., and afterwards advanced in value in the time of Pope Nich- olas IV. This last valuation was begun A.

D. 1288, and finished 1292, and is still pre- served in the exchequer. The taxes were regulated by it till the survey made in the twenty-sixth year of Henry VIII. 2 Steph. Comm. 567.

POPERY.

The religion of the Roman Catholic Church, comprehending doctrines and practices.

POPULACE, or POPCLACY. The vul- gar ; the multitude.

POPULAR ACTION.

An action for a statutory penalty or forfeiture, given to any such person or persons as will sue for it; an action given to the people in general. 3 Bl. Comm. 160.

[Law] — Law

[Law: qui tam actions — e.g., the federal False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729–3733]

An action for a statutory penalty 'given to the people in general' — to whoever will sue for it — survives as the qui tam action.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the popular action; qui tam is its living form. Direct.

POPULAR SENSE.

In reference to the construction of a statute, this term means that sense which people conversant with the subject-matter with which the statute is dealing would attribute to it 1 Exch. Div. 248.

[Maxim: statutes are construed according to the ordinary (popular) sense of their words — the plain-meaning rule]

The 'popular sense' — the sense conversant persons would attribute to statutory words — is the heart of the plain-meaning rule of statutory construction.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the term for statutory construction; the plain-meaning rule is the canon it serves. Borderline kept, framed as the canon's home.

POPULISCITUM.

Lat. In Roman law. A law enacted by the people; a law passed by an assembly of the Roman people, in the comitia centuriata, on the motion of a sena- tor; differing from a plebiscitum, in that the latter was always proposed by one of the tribunes.

POPULUS.

Lat. In Roman law. The people; the whole body of Roman citizens, including as well the patricians as the ple- beians.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Maxim: Vox populi, vox Dei]

'The voice of the people is the voice of God' — the classical maxim on the people as a collective authority, directly on-point for the entry's 'the whole body of Roman citizens.'

Why: Entry: the people as a whole body. Vox populi, vox Dei is the canonical classical utterance on that collective. Latin verbatim-certain; no translation offered.

PORCION.

In Spanish law. A part or portion; a lot or parcel; an allotment of legal state, inasmuch as it leads to ownership, through usucapio. Accordingly, the word ‘ possessto, which required no qualification so long as there- was no other notion attached to possessto, re- quires such qualification when detention be- comes a legal state. This detention, then, when it has the conditions necessary to usucapio, is called “ possessio civilis and all other posses- sto as opposed to civilis is naturalts. Sandars, Just. Inst. 274. Wharton.

Possession of real property is said to be "open" when held with- out concealment or attempt at secrecy, or with- out being covered up in the name of a third person, or otherwise attempted to be withdrawn from sight, but in such a manner that any per- son interested can ascertain who is actually in possession by proper observation and inquiry. See Bass v. Pease, 79 111. App. 318.— Peace- able possession. See Peaceable. — Posses- sion money. In English law. The man whom the sheriff puts in possession of goods taken under a writ of fieri facias is entitled, while he continues so in possession, to a certain sum. of money per diem, which is thence termed "pos- session money." The amount is 3s. 6d. per day if he is boarded, or 5s. per day if he is not boarded. Brown. — Possession, writ of.

Where the judgment in an action of ejectment is for the delivery of the land claimed, or its possession, this writ is used to put the plaintiff m possession. It is in the nature of execution. —Quasi possession is to a right what posses- sion is to a thing; it is the exercise or enjoy- ment of the right, not necessarily the continu- ous exercise, but such an exercise as shows an intention to exercise it at any time when de- sired. Sweet.— Scrambling possession. By this term is meant a struggle for possession on the land itself, not such a contest as is waged in the courts, or possession gained by an act of trespass, such as building a fence. Spiers v. Possession is nine-tenths of the law.

This adage is not to be taken as true to the full extent, so as to mean that the person in possession can only be ousted by one whose title is nine times "better than his, but it places in a strong light the legal truth that every claimant must succeed by the strength of his own title, and not by the weakness of his antagonist’s. Wharton.

POSSESSION VATJT TITHE.

Fr. In

English law, as in most systems of jurispru- dence, the fact of possession raises a prima facie title or a presumption of the right of property in the thing possessed. In other words, the possession is as good as the title (about.) . Brown.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Possession vaut titre — 'possession is (about) as good as title']

Possession raises a prima facie title — the possessor is presumed owner until the contrary appears — stated in the classic form of the maxim.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the rule; the maxim is its classic formulation. Kept on the PENDENTE LITE pattern.

POSSESSOR.

One who possesses; one who has possession.

— Possessor bona fide. He is a bona fide possessor w-ho possesses as owner by virtue of an' act sufficient in terms to transfer property, the defects of which he was ignorant of. He ceases to be a bona fide possessor from the moment these defects are made known to him, or are declared to him by a suit instituted for the recovery of the thing by the owner. Civ. Code La. art. 503.— Possessor mala fide. The possessor in bad faith is be who possesses as master, but who assumes this quality, when he. well knows that he has no title to the thing, or that his title is vicious and defective. Civ. -Code La. art. 3452.

POSSESSORY.

Relating to possession; founded on possession; contemplating or claiming possession.

— Possessory action. See next title.— Pos- sessory claim. The title of a pre-emptor of public lands who has filed his declaratory state- ment but has not paid for the land. Enoch v.

; Spokane Falls & N. Ry. Co., 6 Wash. 393, 33 Pac. 966. — Possessory judgment. In Scotch practice. A judgment which entitles a person who has uninterruptedly been in possession for seven years to continue his possession until the question of right be decided in due course of law. Beil.— Possessory lien. One which at- taches to such articles of another's as may be at the time in the possession of the lienor, as, ..for example, an attorney’s lien on the papers and documents of the client in his possession. POSSIBILITY.

An uncertain thing which may happen. A contingent interest in real or personal estate. Klnzle v. Win- ston; 14 Fed. Cas. 651 ; Bodenhamer ' v. Welch, 89 N. C. 78; Needles v. Needles, 7 Ohio St. 442, 70 Am. Dec. 85.

It is either near, (or ordinary,) as where an estate is limited to one after the death of another, or remote, (or extraordinary.) as where it is limited to a man, provided he marries a certain woman, and that she shall die and he shall marry another.

—Bare possibility. The same as a "naked" possibility. See infra.— Naked possibility. A bare chance or expectation of acquiring a property or succeeding to an estate in the fu- ture, but without any present right in or to it which the law would recognize as an estate or interest. See Rogers v. Felton, 98 Ky. 148, 32

S. W. 406.— Possibility coupled with an interest. An expectation recognized in law as an estate or interest, such as occurs in execu- tory devises and shifting or springing uses ; such a possibility may be sold or assigned.— Possi- bility of reverter. This term denotes no es- tate. but only a possibility to have the estate at a future time. Of such possibilities there are several kinds, of which two are usually denoted by the term under consideration, (1) the pos- sibility that a common-law fee may return to (he grantor by breach of a condition subject to which it was granted. (2) the possibility that a common-law fee other than a fee simple may . revert to the grantor by the natural deteyminatlon of the fee. Carney v. Kain, 40 W. Va. 758, 23 S. E. 650.— Possibility on a possi- bility. A remote possibility, as if a remain- der be limited in particular to A.’s son John, or Edward, it in bad if he have no son of that name, for it is too remote a possibility that he should not only have a son, but a son of that particular name. 2 Coke, 51.

POSSIBLE.

Capuble of existing or hap- pening ; feasible. In another sense, the word denotes extreme improbability, without excluding the idea of feasibility. It is also sometimes equivalent to “practicable” or "reasonable,” as in some cases where action is required to be taken “ns soon as possible” See Palmer v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 44 Wis. 208.

POST.

[Herodotus, Histories, c. 440 BCE]

(paraphrase) Herodotus praised the Persian imperial courier system — riders carrying dispatches, stationed at fixed intervals — the direct ancestor of the entry's 'conveyance for letters or dispatches' kept 'at fixed stations,' later paraphrased in the famous post-office inscription. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry derives 'post' from horses 'kept or placed at fixed stations.' Herodotus's account of the Persian system is the genuine classical root. Paraphrase used — the inscription's wording has variant forms, so no verbat…

POST.

A conveyance for letters or dis- patches. The word is derived from “positi," the horses carrying the letters or dispatches being kept or placed at fixed stations. The word is also applied to the person who con- veys the letters to the houses where he takes up and lays down his charge, and to the stages or distances between house and house. Hence the phrases, post-boy, post-horse, post- house, etc. Wharton.

POST-AGT.

An after-act; an act done afterwards.

POST CON QUESTGM.

After the Con- quest Words inserted in the king’s title by King Edward I., and constantly used in the time of Edward III. Tomlins.

POST-DATE.

To date an instrument as of a time later than that at which it is really made.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 3-113 — date of instrument]

Dating an instrument later than its making is governed by the rule that an instrument may be antedated or postdated.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines postdating; § 3-113 governs the dating of instruments. Direct.

POST DIEM.

After the day; as, a plea of payment post diem, after the day when the money became due. Com. Dig. “Plead- er,” 2.

In old practice. The return of a writ after the day assigned. A fee paid in such ease. Cowell.

POST DISSEISIN.

In English law. The name of a writ which lies for him who. having recovered lands and tenements by force of a novel disseisin, is again disseised by a former disseisor. Jacob.

POST ENTRY.

When goods are weighed or measured, and the merchant has got an account thereof at the custom-house, and finds his entry already made too small, he must make a post or additional entry for the surplusage, in the same manner as the first was done. As a merchant is always in time, prior to the clearing of the vessel, to make his poet, he should take care not to over-enter, to avoid as well the advance as the trouble of getting back the overplus. McCul. Diet.

Post exec ut tone m status lex bob pa- titur possibilitatem. 3 Bulst. 106. After the execution of the estate the law suffers not a possibility.

POST FACTO.

After the fact See Ex post Facto.

POST-FACTUM, or POSTFACTUM.

An after-act; an act done afterwards; a post-act.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 3; art. I, § 10, cl. 1 — no ex post facto law]

'After the fact' points to ex post facto laws — retroactive criminal punishments — which the Constitution prohibits to both Congress and the states.

Why: Genuine: the entry cross-refs ex post facto; the clauses are the prohibition. Direct.

POST-FINE.

In old conveyancing. A fine or sum of money, (otherwise called the "king’s silver”) formerly due on granting the licentia concordandi, or leave to agree, in levying a fine of lands. It amounted to three-twentieths of the supposed annual value of the land, or ten shillings for every five marks of land. 2 Bl. Comm. 350.

POST HAC.

Lat After this ; after this time; hereafter.

POST LITEM MOTAM.

Lat. After suit moved or commenced. Depositions in rela- tion to the subject of a suit, made after liti- gation has commenced, are sometimes so termed. 1 Starkle, Ev. 319.

POST-MARK.

A stamp or mark put on letters received at the post-office for trans- mission through the malls.

POST-MORTEM.

After death. A term generally applied to an autopsy or examina- tion of a dead body, to ascertain the cause of death, or to the Inquisition for that purpose by the coroner. See Wehle v. United States Mut Acc. Ass'n, 11 Misc. Rep. 36, 31 N. Y. Supp. 865 ; Stephens v. People, 4 Parker Cr.

R. (N. Y.) 475.

POST NATUS.

Born afterwards. A term applied by old writers to a second or younger son. It is used in private Interna- tional law to designate a person who was born after some historic event, (such as the American Revolution or the act of union be- tween England and Scotland.) and whoee rights or status will be governed or affected by the question of his birth before or after such event.

POST-NOTES.

A species of bank-notes payable at a distant period, and not on de- mand.

They are a species of obligation resorted to by banks when the exchanges of the countiy, and especially of the banks, have become em- barrassed by excessive speculations. Much con- cern is then felt for the country, and through the newspapers it is urged that post-notes be issued by the banks "for aiding domestic and foreign exchanges," as a "mode of relief," or a "remedy for the distress," and "to take the place of the southern and foreign exchanges."

And so presently this is done. Post-notes are therefore intended to enter into the circulation of the country as a part of its medium of ex- changes; the smaller ones for ordinary busi- ness, and the larger ones for heavier operations. They are intended to supply the place of de- mand notes, which the banks cannot afford to issue or reissue, to relieve the necessities of commerce or of the banks, or to avoid a compul- sory suspension. They are under seal, or with- out seal, and at long or short dates, at more or less interest, or without interest, as the necessi- ties of the bank may require. Appeal of Hogg, 22 Pa. 488.

POST-NUPTIAL.

After marriage. Thus, an agreement entered Into by a father after the marriage of his daughter, by which he engages to make a provision for her, would be termed a "post-nuptial agreement" Brown.

-Post-nuptial settlement. A settlement made after marriage upon a wife or chil- dren; otherwise called a “voluntary” settle- ment. 2 Kent, Comm. 173.

[Law] — Law

[Law: fraudulent conveyances — voluntary settlements vs. creditors (Statute 13 Eliz. c. 5)]

A post-nuptial settlement — made after marriage, hence 'voluntary' rather than for consideration of the marriage — carries the classic vulnerability of voluntary settlements to the claims of creditors as fraudulent conveyances.

Why: Genuine: the entry calls the settlement voluntary (2 Kent); vulnerability to creditors is the classic doctrine for voluntary settlements. Kept loose.

POST OBIT BOND.

A bond given by an expectant, to become due on the death of a person from whom he will have property. A bond or agreement given by a borrower of money, by which he undertakes to pay a larger sum, exceeding the legal rate of inter- est, on or after the death of a person from whom he has expectations, In case of surviv- ing him. Crawford v. Russell, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 92; Boynton v. Hubbard, 7 Mass. 119.

[Hebrews 9:16-17, KJV]

For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth.

Why: A post-obit bond is an expectation of property ripening only at another's death. The verse states the principle of death-contingent expectations — a testament has no force while the testator lives. Epistolary teaching...

POST-OFFZCB.

A bureau or department of government, or under governmental super- intendence, whose office Is to receive, trans- mit, and deliver letters, papers, and other mall-matter sent by post Also the office established by government In any city or town for the local operations of the postal system, for the receipt and distribution of mall from other places, the forwarding of mail there deposited, the sale of postage stamps, etc.

—Post-office department. The name of one of the departments of the executive branch of the government of the United States, which has charge of the transmission of the mails and the general postal business of the country.— Post- offiee order. A letter of credit furnished by the government, at a small charge, to facilitate the transmission of money.

POST TERMTNUM.

After term, or post- term. The return of a writ not only after the day assigned for Its return, but after the term also, for which a fee was due. Cowell.

POST, WRIT OF ENTRY IN.

pro- vided that wheu the number of alienations or descents exceeded the usual degrees, a new writ should be allowed, without any mention of degrees at all.

POSTAGE.

The fee charged by law for carrying letters, packets, and documents by the public malls.

—Postage stamp. A ticket issued by govern- ment, to be attached to mail-matter, and repre- senting the postage or fee paid for the transmis- sion of such matter through the public mails.

POSTAL.

Relating to the malls; pertain- ing to the post-office.

—Postal currency. During a brief period following soon after the commencement of the civil war in the United States, when specie change was scarce, postage stamps were popu- larly used as a substitute; and the first issues of paper representatives of parts of a dollar. Issued by authority of congress, were called “postal currency.” This issue was soon merged in others of a more permanent character, for which the later and more appropriate name is “fractional currency.” Abbott.

POBTEA.

In the common-law practice, a formal statement, Indorsed on the ni»i priua record, which gives an account of the pro- ceedings at the tr^al of the action. Smith, Act. 107.

POSTED WATEBS.

In Vermont Wa- ters flowing through or lying upon inclosed or cultivated lands, which are preserved for the exclusive use of the owner or occupant by his posting notices (according to the stat- ute) prohibiting all persons from shooting, trapping, or fishing thereon, under a prescrib- ed penalty. See State v. Theriault, 70 Vt. 617, 41 Atl. 1030, 43 L. R. A. 290, 67 Am. St. Rep. 695.

POSTEBIOBES.

Lot. This term was used by the Romans to denote the descend- ants In a direct line beyond the sixth degree.

POST PROLEM SUSCITATAM.

After Issue born, (raised.) Co. Litt. 196.

POST ROADS.

The roads or highways, by land or sea, designated by law as the ave- nues over which the malls shall be transport- ed. Railway Mall Service Cases, 13 Ct. Cl. 204. A “post route,” on the other hand, Is the appointed course or prescribed line of transportation of the mail. U. S. v. Koch- ersperger, 20 Fed. Cas. 803; Blackham v. Gresham (C. C.) 16 Fed. 611.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 7]

The roads designated by law for carrying the mails rest on Congress's constitutional power to establish post offices and post roads.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines post roads; the clause is their constitutional basis. Direct.

POSTERIORITY.

This Is a word of comparison and relation In tenure, the cor- relative of which is the word “priority.” Thus, a man who held lands or tenements of two lords was said to hold of his more an- cient lord by priority, and of his less ancient lord by posteriority. Old Nat. Brev. 94. It has also a general application In law con- sistent with its etymological meaning, and. as so used, It is likewise opposed to priority. Brown.

POST-TERMINAL SITTINGS.

tings after term. See Sittings.

Sit- POSTERITY. All the descendants of a person In a direct line to the remotest generation. Breckinridge v. Denny, 8 Bush (Ky.) 527.

POSTHUMOUS CHILD.

One born after the death of its father; or, when the Csesa- \ rean operation is performed, after that of the mother.

Fosthumus pro nato habetur. A post- humous child is considered as though born, [at the parent's death.] Hall v. Hancock, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 258, 26 Am. Dec. 598.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Posthumus pro nato habetur — 'a posthumous child is considered as though born']

A posthumous child is considered as though born at the parent's death — and so inherits, under intestacy statutes, as an afterborn heir as if born in the parent's lifetime.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the maxim; the footnote gives its legal effect — inheritance rights of afterborn children. Direct.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[William Shakespeare, Cymbeline, c. 1611]

(paraphrase) Shakespeare's hero is literally named Posthumus because he was born after his father's death — the entry's definition ('one born after the death of its father') dramatized as a character's name. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry and character name encode the identical definition. The link is direct and illuminating. Paraphrase; no quote needed.

POSTLIMINIUM.

Lat. In the civil law. A doctrine or fiction of the law by which the restoration of a person to any status or right formerly possessed by him was considered as relating back to the time of his original loss or deprivation; particu- larly In the case of one who, having been taken prisoner in war, and having escaped and returned to Borne, was regarded, by the aid of this fiction, as having never been abroad, and was thereby reinstated in all hlS rights. Inst. 1, 12, 5.

POSTMASTER.

An officer of the United States, appointed to take charge of a local post-office and transact the business of re- ceiving and forwarding the mails at that point, and such other business as is commit- ted to him under the postal laws.

—Postmaster general. The head of the post-office department. He is one of the presi- dent's cabinet.

POSTNATI.

Those born after. See Post Natus.

POSTPONE.

To put off; defer; delay; continue; adjourn; as when a hearing is postponed. Also to place after; to set be- low something else; as when an earlier lien is for some reason postponed to a later lien.

The word “postponement,” in Bpeaking of legal proceedings, is nearly equivalent to "con- tinuance ;” except that the former word is gen- erally preferred when describing an adjourn- ment of the cause to another day during the same term, and che latter when the case goes over to another term. See State v. Underwood, 7(1 Mo. (K19 ; State v. Nathaniel, 5® La. Ann. 558, 26 South. 1008.

POWER.

In real property law. A power is an authority to do some act in re- lation to real property, or to the creation or revocation of an estate therein, or a charge thereon, which the owner granting or reserving such power might himself per- form for any purpose. Civ. Code Dak. | 298 ; How. St. Mich. | 5591.

“Power” is sometimes used in the same sense as “right,” as when we speak of the powers of user and disposition which the owner of prop- erty has over it, but, strictly speaking, a pow- er is that which creates a special or exceptional right, or enables a person to do something which he could not otherwise do. Sweet.

Technically, an authority by which one person enables another to do some act for him. 2 Lil. Abr. 339.

An authority enabling a person to dispose, through the medium of the statute of uses, of an interest, vested either in himself or in another person. Sugd. Powers, 82. —General and special powers. A power is general when it authorizes the alienation in fee, by means of a conveyance, will, or charge, of the lands embraced in the power to any alienee whatsoever. It is special (1) when the persons or class of persons to whom the dis- position of the lands under the power is to be made are designated, or (2) when the power authorizes the alienation, by means of a con- veyance, will, or charge, of a particular estate or interest less than a fee. is designated as entitled to the proceeds or any portion of the proceeds or other benefits to result from the alienation. A special power is in trust (1) when the disposition or charge which it authorizes is limited to be made to any person or class of persons other than the bolder of the power, or (2) when any person or class of persons other than the holder is designated as entitled to any benefit from the disposition or charge authorized by the power. phrase is meant a right or power to do some act, together with an in- terest In the subject-matter on which the power is to be exercised. It is distinguished from a naked power, which Is a mere au- thority to act, not accompanied by any inter- est of the donee In the subject-matter of the power.

Is it an interest in the subject on which the power is to be exercised, or is it an interest in that which is produced by the exercise of the power? We hold it to be clear that the inter- est which can protect a power after the death of a person who creates It must be an interest in the thing itself. In other words, the power must be engrafted on an estate ' in the thing. The words themselves would seem to import this meaning. “A power coupled with an in- terest” is a power which accompanies or is connected with an interest. The power and the interest are united in the same person. But, if we are to understand by the word inter- est” an interest in. that which is to be produc- ed by the exercise of the power, then they are never united. The power to produce the in- terest must be exercised, and by its exercise is extinguished. The power ceases when the in- terest commences, and therefore cannot, in accurate law language, be said to be coupled with it Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. 2(M, 5 L. Ed. 589. And see Missouri v. The legal entry defines power as authority — the right to do acts the owner might himself perform. The lyric names 'the powers that be': power held by others as the thing to be fought — power as a lived relation rather than an abstraction.

Why: Added because 'the powers that be' is the idiom for institutional authority, exactly the legal sense of power the entry defines. The chorus is verbatim-certain; quoting the hook only.

[Lord Acton, letter to Bishop Mandell Creighton, 1887]

'Power tends to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely.' Acton's maxim is the most quoted wisdom on power in English, and it illuminates the concept the entry defines — authority to act — by naming its moral gravity.

Why: Entry defines power as authority to do some act. Acton's sentence is verbatim-certain and is the canonical maxim on power as such. Genuine classical-wisdom link.

POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

A pow- er or authority conferred by one person by deed or will upon another (called the ‘‘do- nee’’) to appoint, that is, to select and nom- inate, the person or persons who are to re- ceive and enjoy an estate or an income there- from or from a fund, after the testator's death, or the donee's death, or after the ter- mination of an existing right or Interest. See

AO. 707.

Powers are either: Collateral, which are giv- en to strangers ; i. e., to persons who have neither a present nor future estate or interest in the land. These are also called simply ‘collateral,” or powers not coupled with an in- terest, or powers not being interests. These terms have been adopted to obviate the confu- sion arising from the circumstance that powers in gross have been by many called powers collat- eral. Or they are powers relating to the land. These are called “appendant” or "appurtenant,’ because they strictly depend upon the estate lim- ited to the person to whom they are given. Thus, where an estate for life is limited to a man, with a power to grant leases in posses- sion, a lease granted under the power may operate wholly out of the life-estate of the party executing it, and must in every case have its operation out of his estate during his life. Such an estate must be created, which will at- tach on an interest actually vested in himself. Or they arc called "in gross,” if given to a person who had an interest in the estate at the execution of the deed creating the power, or to whom an estate is given by the deed, but which enabled him to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him. Of necessity, therefore, where a man seised in fee settles his estate on others, re- serving to himself only a particular power, the power is in gross. A power to a tenant for lue to appoint the estate after his death among his children, a power to jointure a wife after his death, a power to raise a term of years to com- mence from his death, for securing younger children’s portions, are all powers in gross. An important distinction is established between cieneral and particular powers. By a general power we understand a right to appoint to whomsoever the donee pleases. By a particular power it is meant that the donee is restricted to some objects designated in the deed creating the power, as to his own children. Wharton.

We have seen that a general power is of- ficial when no person other than the grantee has, by the terms of its creation, any interest in its execution. A general power is t» truat when any person or class of persons, other than the grantee of such power, is dwtenn1®^ as entitled to the proceeds, or any portion of the proceeds, or other benefits to result from the alienation. PRE8UMPTIO.

Lat Presumption; a presumption. Also intrusion, or the unlaw- ful taking of anything.

— Prwsumptio fortior. A strong presump- tion; a presumption of fact entitled to great weight. One which determines the tribunal in its belief of an alleged fact, without, however, excluding the belief of the possibility of its be- ing otherwise; the effect of which is to shift the burden of proof to the opposite party, and, if this proof be not made, the presumption is held for truth. Hub. Prsel. J. C. lib. 22, tit. 3. n. 16; Burrill, Circ. Ev. 66.— Prasamptio homlmls. The presumption of the man or in- dividual ; that is, natural presumption unfet- tered by strict rule.— Praesnmptio Juris. A legnl presumption or presumption of law : that is, one in which the law assumes the existence of something until it is disproved by evidence ; a conditional, inconclusive, or rebuttable pre- sumption. Best, Ev. § 43. — ■ Prassnmptlo juris et de jure. A presumption of law and of right ; a presumption which the law will not suffer to be contradicted ; a conclusive or ir- rebuttable presumption.— Praesumptio at- eiaaa. In Roman law. [Law: pretermitted-heir statutes — omitted children take an intestate share (cf. UPC § 2-302)]

The testator's silent passing-over of an heir has its modern form in pretermitted-heir statutes: a child omitted from the will takes an intestate share.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the Roman passing-over; the statutes are its modern form. Kept loose.

PREVARICATOR.

Lat In the civil law. One who betrays his trust, or is un- faithful to his trust. An advocate who aids the opposite party by betraying his client's cause. Dig. 47, 15, 1.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 41:9, KJV]

Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me.

Why: A prevaricator is one who betrays his trust — the advocate who aids the opposite party against his client. The verse is the archetype of betrayed trust: the familiar friend in whom one trusted, lifting his heel. David...

PREAPPOINTED EVIDENCE.

The

kind and degree of evidence prescribed in advance (as, by statute) as requisite for the proof of certain facts or the establishment of certain Instruments. It is opposed to casual evidence, which is left to grow nat- urally out of the surrounding circumstances.

PREAUDIENCE.

The right of being heard before another. A privilege belonging to the English bar, the members of which are entitled to be heard in their order, ac- cording to rank, beginning with the king’s attorney general, and ending with barristers at large. 3 Steph. Comm. 387, note.

PREBEND.

In English ecclesiastical law. A stipend granted in cathedral church- es; also, but Improperly, a prebendary. A simple prebend is merely a revenue; a pre- bend with dignity has some jurisdiction at- tached to it. The term “prebend” is general- ly confounded with "canonicnte ;” but there is a difference between them. The former is the stipend granted to an ecclesiastic in consideration of his officiating and serving in the church ; whereas the eanonicate is a mere title or spiritual quality which may exist independently of any stipend. 2 Steph. Comm. 674, note.

PREBENDARY.

An ecclesiastical per- son serving on the staff of a cathedral, and receiving a stated allowance or stipend from the income or endowment of the cathedral, in compensation for his services.

PRECARIOUS . Liable to be returned or rendered up at the mere demand or re- quest of another; hence held or retained only on sufferance or by permission ; and by an extension of meaning, doubtful, uncertain, dangerous, very liable to break, fail, or ter- minate.

— Precarious circumstances. The circum- stances of an executor are precarious, within the meaning and intent of a statute, only when his character and conduct present such evi- dence of improvidence or recklessnss in the management of the trust-estate, or of his own, as in the opinion of prudent and discreet men endangers its security. Shields v. Shields, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 56. — Precarious loan. A bail- ment by way of loan w'hieh is not to continue for any fixed time, but may be recalled at the mere will and pleasure of the lender. — Precari- ous possession. In modem civil law. posses- sion is called “precarious" which one enjoys by the leave of another and during his pleas- ure. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 3556. — Precari- ous right. The right which the owner of a thing transfers to another, to enjoy the same until it shall please the owner to revoke it— Precarious trade. In international law. Such trade as may be carried on by a neutral between two belligerent powers by the mere sufferance of the latter.

PRECARIUM.

Lat. In the civil law. A convention whereby one allows another the use of a thing or the exercise of a right gra- tuitously till revocation. The bailee acquires thereby the lawful possession of the thing, except In certain cases. The bailor can re- demand the thing at any time, even should be have allowed it to the bailee for a design Dated period. Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 447.

PRECATORY.

Having the nature of prayer, request, or entreaty; conveying or embodying a recommendation or advice or the expression of a wish, but not a positive command or direction.

— Precatory trust. A trust created by cer- tain words, which are more like words of en- treaty and permission than of command or cer- tainty. Examples of such words, which the courts have held sufficient to constitute a trust, are “wish and request,” “have fullest confi- dence,” “heartily beseech,” and the like. Ra- palje & Lawrence. PRECIPITIN TEST.

Precipltlns are formations in the blood of an animal In- duced by repeated injections into its veins of the blood-serum of an animal of another species; and their importance In diagnosis lies in the fact that when the blood-serum of an animal so treated is mixed with that of any animal of the second species (or a closely related species) and the mixture kept Bl.Law Dict.(2d Bn.)— 59 at a temperature of about 98 degrees for several hours, a visible precipitate will re- sult, but not so if the second ingredient of the mixture is drawn from an animal of ai) entirely different species. In medico-legai practice, therefore, a suspected .stain or clot having been first tested by other meth- ods and demonstrated to be blood, the ques- tion whether it is the blood of a human being or of other origin is resolved by mix- ing a solution of it with a quantity of blood- serum taken from a rabbit or some other small animal which has been previously prepared by injections of human blood- serum. After treatment as above described, the presence of a precipitate will furnish strong presumptive evidence that the blood tested was of human origin. The test is not absolutely conclusive, for the reason that blood from an anthropoid ape would produce thtf same result, in this experiment, as hu- man blood. But if the alternative hypo- thesis presented attributed the blood in ques- tion to some animal of an unrelated species (as, a dog, sheep, or horse) the precipitin test could be fully relied on, as also in the case where no precipitate resulted.

PRiCIPUT. In French law. A portion of an estate or inheritance which falls to one of the co-heirs over and above his equal share with the rest, and which is to be taken out before partition is made.

PRECLUDI NON.

Lat. In pleading. PREJUDICE.

A forejudgment; bias; preconceived opinion. A leaning towards one side of a cause for some reason other than a conviction of its justice. Willis v. State, 12 Ga. 419; Uungerford ▼. Cushing, 2 Wls. 405; State y. Anderson, 14 Mont. 541, 87 Pac. 1; Hinkle v. State, 94 Ga. 595, 21 S.

E. 595; Keen v. Brown, 46 Fla. 487, 35 South. 401.

The word “prejudice” seemed to imply nearly the same thing as “opinion," a prejudgment of the case, and not necessarily an enmity or ill will against either party. Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 297, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

“Prejudice’’ also means injury, loss, or damnification. Thus, where an offer or ad- mission is made “without prejudice,” or a motion is denied or a bill in equity dismissed “without prejudice," it is meant as a declara- tion that no rights or privileges of the party concerned are to be considered as thereby waived or lost, except in so far as may be expressly conceded or decided.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 41 — effect of dismissal]

The entry's 'without prejudice' sense is the procedural one: under Fed. R. Civ. P. 41 a dismissal 'without prejudice' is not an adjudication on the merits, so the party's rights are preserved and the claim may be refiled.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines 'without prejudice' as a declaration that no rights are waived or lost; Rule 41 is the federal rule that gives that phrase its operative meaning for dismissals.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:15, KJV]

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment: thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honour the person of the mighty: but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour.

[Axiom: premeditation and deliberation distinguish first-degree murder from lesser homicide]

Premeditation and deliberation — thinking of the act beforehand, contriving and designing it — are the elements that elevate an intentional killing to murder in the first degree.

Why: Genuine: the entry's long string of murder cases all turn on exactly this distinction; the axiom states the principle those cases apply, without inventing any citation.

[Scripture] — Scripture

he that smote him shall surely be put to death; for he is a murderer

Why: Premeditation is contriving beforehand — the core of malice aforethought in homicide. Numbers 35 draws scripture's own distinction between the deliberate striker (vv. 20-21) and the unpremeditated killing (vv. 22-23).

and from them the conclusion is deduced. So, in pleading, - the expression “in consideration of the premises” frequently occurs, the meaning being “ia consideration of the matters hereinbefore stated.” See Teutonia F. Ins. Co. v. In conveyancing. That part of a’ deed which precedes the habendum, in which are set forth the names of the parties with their titles and additions, and in which are recited such deeds, agreements, or matters of fact as are necessary to explain the reasons upon which the present transaction Is founded; and it Is here, also, the consideration on which it is made is set down and the cer- tainty of the thing granted. 2 Bl. In estates. Lands and tenements ; an es- tate ; the subject-matter of a conveyance.

The term “premises” is used in common par- lance to signify land, with its appurtenances; but its usual and appropriate meaning in a conveyance is the thing demised or granted by the deed. Why: Prepense means forethought, premeditated — the same concept as premeditate. Same verse, same reasoning: scripture's deliberate-vs-accidental killing distinction.

PREPONDERANCE.

This word means something more than ' “weight ;” it denotes a superiority of weight, or outweighing. The words are not synonymous, but substantial- ly different. There is generally a “weight” of • evidence on each side in case of con- tested facts. But Juries cannot properly act upon the weight of evidence, in favor of the one having the onus, unless it overbear, in some degree, the weight upon the other side. Shinn v. Tucker, 37 Ark. 688. In English law. That special pre-emi- nence which the king (or queen) has over and above all other persons, in right of his (or her) regal dignity. A term used to de- note those rights and capacities which the sovereign enjoys alone, in contradistinction to others. 1 Bl. Comm. 239.

—Prerogative court. In English • law. A court established for the trial of all testamen- tary causes, where the deceased left bona nota- bilta within two different dioceses; in which case the probate of wills belonged to the arch- bishop of the province, by way of special prerog- ative. PRESCRIPTION . A mode of acquiring title to Incorporeal hereditaments grounded on the fact of immemorial or long-continued enjoyment. See Lucas v. Turnpike Co., 36

W. Va. 427, 15 S. E. 182; Gayetty v. Betbune, 14 Mass. 52, 7 Am. Dec. 188; Louisville &

N. R. Co. v. Hays, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 388, 47 Am. Rep. 291; Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 667, 66 Pac. 10; Alhambra Addition Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 598, 14 Pac. 379; Stevens v. Dennett, 51 N. H. 329.

Title by prescription is the right which a possessor acquires to property by reason of the continuance of his possession for a period Of time fixed by the laws. Code Ga. 1882, f 2678.

"Prescription" is the term usually applied to incorporeal hereditaments, while "adverse possession" Is applied to lands. Hindley v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 42 Misc. Rep. 56, 85 N. X. Supp. 561.

In Louisiana, prescription is defined as a manner of acquiring the ownership of prop- erty, or discharging debts, by the effect of time, and under the conditions regulated by law. Each of these prescriptions has its special and particular definition. The prescription by which the ownership of proper- ty is acquired, is a right by which a mere pos- sessor acquires the ownership of a thing, which he possesses by the continuance of his possession during the time fixed by law. The prescription by which debts are released, is a peremptory and perpetual bar to every species of action, real or personal, when the' creditor has been silent for a certain time without urging his claim. Civ. Code T-a. arts. 3457-3459. In this sense of the term it is very nearly equivalent to what Is else- where expressed by "limitation of actions," or rather, the "bar of the statute of limita- tions."

"Prescription" and "custom" hre frequently confounded in common parlance, arising perhaps1 from the fact that immemorial usage was es- sential to both of them; but, strictly, they ma- terially differ from one another, in that custom is properly a local impersonal usage, such as borough-English, or postremogeniture, which is annexed to a given eslv.te, while prescription is Bimply personal, as that a certain man and his ancestors, or those whose estate be enjoys, have immemorialiy exercised a right of pasture-com- mon in a certain parish. Again, prescription, has its ■ origin, in a grant, evidenced by usage,, and is allowed on account of its loss, either ac-; tual or supposed, and therefore only those things, can be prescribed for which could be raised by, a grant previously to 8 A>9 Viet. c. 106, | 2;, but this principle does not necessarily bold in. the case of a custom. Wharton.

The difference between "prescription," "cus- tom," and "usage" is also thus Btated: "Pre-, scription hath respect to a certain person who, by intendment, may have continuance forever, as, for instance, he and all they whose estate he hath in such a thing, — this is a prescription;, while custom is local, and always applied to a certain place, and is common to all ; while usage differs from both, for it may be either to persons or places." Jacob.

A claim of prescription based on the immemorial enjoyment of the right claim- ed. by the claimant and those former owners "whose estate" he has succeeded to and holds.- See Donnell v. Clark, 19 Me. 182.— Time of prescription. The length of time necessary to establish a right claimed by prescription or a title by prescription. Before the act of 2 Sc 3 Wm. IV. c. 71, the possession required to constitute a prescription must have existed "time out of mind" or "beyond the memory of man." that is, before the reign of Richard I.; but the time of prescription, in certain cases, was much shortened by that act. 2 Steph.' Comm. 35.

Liberative prescription — the peremptory bar the entry equates with the statute of limitations — rests on the equitable rationale that the law aids those who assert their rights promptly, not those who sleep on them.

Why: Genuine: the entry itself reduces liberative prescription to 'a peremptory and perpetual bar' when the creditor 'has been silent'; the maxim states the rationale behind that bar rather than inventing a new doctrine.

Constructive presence — being near enough, or actively cooperating with one actually present — grounds accomplice liability: one who aids or abets an offense, though not on the very spot, is punishable as a principal.

In its limited sense, a presentment is a state- ment by the grand Jury of an offense from their own knowledge, without any bill of indictment laid before them, setting forth the name of the party, place of abode, and the offense committed. Informally, upon which the officer of the court afterwards frames an indictment. Collins v. State, 13 Fla. 651, 663.

The difference between a presentment and an inquisition is this: that the former is found by a grand jury authorized to inquire of offenses

The grand-jury presentment the entry defines is constitutionally embedded: no person may be held for a capital or otherwise infamous crime 'unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury.'

Why: Genuine: the Fifth Amendment names presentment alongside indictment as the required accusatory instrument; the entry defines the instrument, the Amendment gives it constitutional force.

[Law: UCC Article 3 — negotiable instruments: presentment and dishonor]

The entry's second sense — production of a bill or note to the drawee or party liable for acceptance or payment — is the presentment regime codified for negotiable instruments, including the rules on dishonor and notice of dishonor.

Why: Genuine: Article 3 is the uniform statute governing exactly the presentment-for-acceptance-or-payment procedure the entry describes; citing the article rather than a section number avoids overclaiming.

PRESERVATION.

Keeping safe from harm ; avoiding injury, destruction, or decay. This term always presupposes a real or ex- isting danger. See Gribble r. Wilson, 101 Term. 612, 49 S. W. 730 ; Neuendorff v. Dur- yea, 62 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 269.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 121:7, KJV]

The LORD shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul.

Why: Preservation is keeping safe from harm, avoiding injury or destruction. The verse speaks directly of being preserved from evil and harm.

PRESIDE.

To preside over a court la to “hold" it — to direct, control, and govern it as the chief officer. A judge may “preside” whether sitting as a sole judge or as one of several Judges. Smith v. People, 47 N. Y. 334.

PRESIDENT.

One placed in authority over others; a chief officer; a presiding or managing officer; a- governor, ruler, or di- rector.

The chairman, moderator, or presiding offi- cer of a legislative or deliberative body, ap- pointed to keep order, manage the proceed- ings, and govern the administrative details of their business.

The chief officer of a corporation, company, board, committee, etc., generally having the mats direction and administration of their concerns. Roe v. Bank of Versailles, 167 Mo. 406, 67 8. W. 303.

The chief executive magistrate of a state or nation, particularly under a democratic form of government; or of a province, col- ony, or dependency.

In English law. A title formerly given to the king’s lieutenant in a province ; as the president of Wales. Cowell.

This word Is also an old though corrupted form of “precedent” (Q. v.,) used both as a French and English word. Le president eat rare. Dyer, 136.

—President of the council. In English law. A great officer of State; a member of the cab- inet. He attends on the sovereign, proposes business at the council-table, and reports to the sovereign the transactions there. 1 Bi. Comm. 230. — President of the United States. The official title of the chief executive officer of the federal government in the United States.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 1]

The chief executive magistrate the entry defines holds the office created by the vesting clause: 'The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America.'

Why: Genuine: the entry's American sense ('chief executive magistrate') is defined by Article II's vesting clause, quoted verbatim.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

A body of electors chosen In the different states, whose sole duty It is to elect a president and vice-president of the United States. Each state appoints. In such manner as the legis- lature thereof may direct, a number of elect- ors equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the state is entitled in congress. Const U. S. art 2, | 1.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XII]

The body of electors the entry describes — apportioned as the entry says, per Article II — casts its ballots under the procedure prescribed by the Twelfth Amendment: separate ballots for President and Vice-President, with contingent election in the House if no majority.

Why: Genuine: the entry cites Article II's apportionment; the Twelfth Amendment is the operative law governing how those electors actually vote, so it completes rather than repeats the entry.

PRESS.

In old practice. A piece or skin of parchment several of which used to be sewed together In making up a roll or rec- ord of proceedings. See 1 Bl. Comm. 183; Townsh. Pl. 486.

Metaphorically, the aggregate of publica- tions Issuing from the press, or the giving publicity to one’s sentiments and opinions through the medium of printing; as In the phrase ‘liberty of the press.”

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I]

The 'liberty of the press' the entry invokes metaphorically is the constitutional guarantee: 'Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press.'

Why: Genuine: the entry's second sense is expressly the liberty-of-the-press phrase; the First Amendment is its textual home, quoted verbatim.

[Public Enemy, 'Don't Believe the Hype', 1988]

"Don't believe the hype." The entry's metaphorical sense is the press as the aggregate of publications, and 'liberty of the press' as a protected freedom. Public Enemy's anthem is hip-hop's canonical statement on press power — the press manufacturing belief — voicing the citizen's counter-posture to that power: where the liberty is exercised, hype is manufactured, and the listener is warned not to swallow it.

Why: Added because the track is a genuine illumination of the press's power inside 'liberty of the press' — the freedom's shadow. The lyric is verbatim-certain and the link is to the term's actual subject (press power), no...

PRESUMPTION.

An inference affirma- tive or disafflrmative of the truth or false- hood of any proposition or fact drawn by a process of probable reasoning in the absence of actual certainty of Its truth or falsehood, or until such certainty can be ascertained. Best, Pres. $ 3.

A rule of law that courts and Judges shall draw a particular Inference from a particu- lar fact, or from particular evidence, unless and until the truth of such inference is dis- proved. Steph. Ev. 4. And see Dane v. Mis- souri Pac. Ry. Co., 132 Mo. 4, 33 S. W. 045 ; State v. Tibbetts, 35 Me. 81 ; Newton v. State, 21 Fla. 08; Ulrich v. Ulrich. 136 N.

A presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1950.

Presumptions are consequences which the law or the judge draws from a known fact to a fact unknown. Civ. Code La. art. 2284.

An inference affirmative or disafflrmative of the existence of a disputed fact, drawn by a ju- dicial tribunal, by a process of probable reason- ing, from some one or more matters of fact, either admitted in the cause or otherwise satis- factorily established. Best, Pres. $ 12.

A presumption is an inference as to the exist- ence of a fact not known, arising from its con- nection with the facts that are known, and founded upon a knowledge of human nature and the' motives which are known to influence hu- man conduct. Jackson v. Warford, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 62.

Classlfieatloa.— Presumptions are either pre- sumptions of law or presumptions of fact. “A presumption of law is a juridical postulate that a particular predicate is universally assignable to a particular subject. A presumption of fact is a logical argument from a fact to a fact ; or, as the distinction is sometimes put, it is an argument which infers a fact otherwise doubt- ful from a fact which is proved.” 2 Whart. Ev. g 1220. See Code Ga. g 2752. And see Home Ins. Co. v. Weide, 11 Wall. 438. 20 L. Ed. 197; Podolski v. Stone, 186 III. 540, 58

N. E. 340; McIntvre v. Ajax Min. Co.. 20 Utah, 323. 60 Pac. 552 ; U. S. v. Sykes (D. C.) 58 Fed. 1000; Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ocean Ins. Co., 107 U. 8. 485. 1 Sup. Ct. 582. 27 L. Ed. 337; Lyon v. Guild. 5 Hcisk. (Tenn.) 182; Com. v. Frew, 3 Pa. Co. Ct R. 496.

Presumptions of law are rules which, in cer- tain cases, either forbid or dispense with any ul- terior inquiry. 1 Greenl. Ev. g 14. Inferences or positions established, for the most part by the common, but occasionally by the statute, law, which are obligatory alike on jndges and juries. Best, Pres, g 15.

Presumptions of fact are inferences as to the existence of some fact drawn from the existence

Of some Other fact; Inferences which common sense dmw* from circumstances usually occur- ring in such cases, 1 Phil. Ev. 430.

Presumption^ are divided into prasumptiones juris et de jure, otherwise called “irrebuttable presumptions,” (often, but not necessarily, ficti- tious,) which the law will not suffer to be re- butted by any counter-evidence; as, that an in- fant under seven years is not responsible for his actions; prasumptiones juris iantum, which hold good in the absence of counter-evidence, but against which counter-evidence may be ad- mitted; and prtesumptiones hominis, which are not necessarily conclusive, though no proof to the contrary be adduced. Mozley & Whitley.

There are also certain mixed presumptions, or presumptions of fact recognized by law, or presumptions of mixed law and fact. These are certain presumptive inferences, which, from their strength, importance, or frequent occur- rence, attract, as it were, the observation of the law. The presumption of a “last grant” falls within this class. Best, Ev. 436. See Dickson v. Wilkinson, 3 How. 57, 11 L. Ed. 491.

Presumptions of law are divided into con- clusive presumptions’ and disputable presump- tions. A. conclusive presumption is a rule of law determining. .the quantity of evidence requi- site for the support of a particular averment which is not permitted to De overcome by any proof that the fact is otherwise. 1 Greenl. Ev. f 15 ; U. S. v. Clark, 5 Utah, 226, 14 Pac. 288; Brandt v. Morning Journal Ass’n, 81 App. Div. 183. 80 N. Y. Sunp. 1002. These are also call- ed “absolute” and “irrebuttable" presumptions. A disputable presumption is an inference of law which holds gqod until it is invalidated by proof or a stronger presumption.

A natural presumption, is that species of pre- sumption, or process of. probable reasoning, which is exercised by persons of ordinary in- telligence, in inferring one fact from another, without reference to any technical rules. Oth- erwise called “prtesumptio hominis." Burril), Circ. Ev. 11, 12, 22. 24.

Legitimate presumptions have been denomi- nated "violent" or "probable,” according to the amount of weight which attaches to them. Such presumptions as are drawn from inade- quate grounds are termed “light” or “rash” presumptions. Brown.

—Presumption of survivorship. A pre- sumption of fact, to the effect that one person survived another, applied for the purpose of determining a question of succession or similar matter, in a case where the two persons perish- ed in the same catastrophe, and there are no circumstances extant to show which of them actually died first, except those on which the presumption is founded, viz., differences of age, sex, strength, or physical condition.

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 301 — presumptions in civil cases generally]

The entry's taxonomy of presumptions of law — conclusive versus disputable — operates in federal civil practice under the rule that the party against whom a presumption is directed bears the burden of producing evidence to rebut it.

Why: Genuine: Rule 301 is the federal rule allocating the burden for exactly the disputable (rebuttable) presumptions the entry classifies; it gives the doctrine its modern procedural footing.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:25, KJV]

Why: The entries define loan contracts, including loan at interest. This is the biblical law of lending — the scriptural root of the legal concept of the loan and its limits.

[Deuteronomy 21:17, KJV]

But he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the firstborn, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath: for he is the beginning of his strength; the right of the firstborn is his.

Why: Preterition is a testator's omission of a legally entitled heir. This verse is scripture's own rule against disinheriting the entitled heir — the right of the firstborn is his.

PRETEXTS.

In international law. Reasons alleged as justificatory, but which are so only in appearance,

'Prevailing party' is an operative term of art, not mere description: fee-shifting statutes award litigation costs and attorney's fees to the party that prevails, so the label carries a direct monetary consequence.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines who counts as prevailing; § 1988 is the federal statute that makes the status matter by authorizing fee awards to the prevailing party.

PRICE.

The consideration (usually in money) given for the purchase of . a thing.

It is true that “pride" generally -means the sum of money which an artiple is sold for; but this is simply because property is generally sold for money, not because the wbrd baa necessarily sneli a restricted meaning. Among writers on political economy, who use terra# with philo- sophical accuracy, the word “price” is not al- ways or. even generally used as denoting the moneyed equivalent of property sold. They gen- erally treat and regard price as the equivalent or compensation, in whatever form received, - for property sold. The Latin word from which “price" Is derived sometimes means "reward,” “value,” “estimation,” “rtjhivalent.” Hudson Iron Co. v. Alger, 54 N. Y. 177.. . -

In sales law the price term need not be fixed for a contract to form: where the parties intend to contract but leave price open, the Code supplies a gap-filler (a reasonable price at time of delivery).

PRIMA FACIE.

Lat At first sight; on the first appearance; on the face of it; so far as can be judged from the first dis- closure; presumably.

A litigating party is said to have a prime facie case when the evidence in his favor is sufficiently strong for his opponent to be called on to answer it. A primo facie case, then, is one which is established by sufficient evidence, and can be overthrown only by rebutting evi- dence adduced on the other side. In some cases the only question to be considered is whether there is a primo facie case or no. Thus a grand iury are bound to find a true bill of indictment, f the evidence before them creates a prime facie case against the accused; and for this purpose, therefore, it is not necessary for them to hear the evidence for the defense. [Law: UCC § 9-322 — priorities among conflicting security interests]

'Prior tempore potior jure' — first in time, preferred in right — is the ancestor of modern priority rules; its living commercial form is that among conflicting security interests in the same collateral, the first to file or perfect generally prevails.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the maxim; § 9-322 is the uniform rule that operationalizes it for secured transactions, giving the ancient maxim its modern working form.

PRIVIES.

Persons connected together, or having a mutual Interest In the same action or thing, by some relation other than that of actual contract between them; persons whose interest in an estate is derived from the contract or conveyance of others.

Those who are partakers or have an interest in any action or thing, or any relation to an- other. They are of six kinds:

(1) Privies of blood; such as the heir to his ancestor.

(2) Privies in representation ; as executors or administrators to their deceased testator or iotcst&tc*

(3) Privies in estate ; as grantor and grantee, lessor and lessee, assignor and assignee, etc.

(4) Privities, in respect of contract, are per- sonal privities, and extend only to the persons of the lessor and lessee.

(5) Privies in respect of estate and contract; as where the leasee assigns his interest, but the contract between lessor and lessee continues, the lessor not having accepted of the assignee

In the civil law. A right which the na- ture of a debt gives to a creditor, and which entitles him to be preferred before other cred- itors. Civil Code La. art. 3180. '

In maritime law. An allowance to the master of u ship of the same general nature with primage, being compensation, or rather a gratuity, customary in certain trades, and which the law assumes to be a fair and equi- table allowance, because the contract on both sides is made under the knowledge of such usage by the parties. 8 Chit Cornmer. Law, 431.

In the law of libel and slander. An ex- emption from liability for the speaking or publishing of defamatory words concerning another, based on the fact that the statement was made in the performance of a duty, political, judicial, social, or personal. Privi- lege is etther absolute or conditional. The former protects the speaker or publisher with- out reference to his motives or the truth or falsity of the statement. This may be claim- ed in respect, for instance, to statements made in legislative debates, in reports of officers to their superiors in the line of their duty, and statements made by judges, wit- nesses, and jurors in trials in court. Condi- tional privilege will protect the speaker or publisher unless actual malice and knowledge of the falsity of the statement is shown. This may be claimed where the communica- tion related to a matter of public interest, or where it was necessary to protect

In parliamentary law. The right Of a particular question, motion, or statement to take precedence over all other business be- fore the house and to be considered imme- diately, notwithstanding any consequent In- terference with or setting aside the rules of procedure adopted by the house. The. mat- ter may be one of “personal privilege,” where it concerns one member of the house in bis capacity as a legislator, or of the "privilege of the house," where it concerns the rights, immunities, or dignity of the entire body, or of “constitutional privilege,” where it relates to some action to be taken or some order of proceeding expressly enjoined by the consti- tution. .

—Privilege from arrest. A privilege ex- tended to certain classes of persons, either by the rules of international law, the policy of the law, or the necessities of justice or of the ad- ministration of government, whereby they are exempted from arrest on civil process, and. in some cases, on criminal charges, either perma- nently. as in the case of a foreign minister and his suite, or temporarily, as in the case of members of the legislature, parties and witnesses engaged in a particular suit, etc.— Privilege tax. [Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 1]

The entry lists statements in legislative debates as absolutely privileged; the constitutional source is the Speech or Debate Clause — 'for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place' — which also carries the 'privileged from Arrest' language matching the entry's privilege from arrest.

Why: Genuine: the clause is the textual home of both the absolute legislative privilege and the arrest privilege the entry describes; quoted verbatim.

PRIVILEGITJM.

In Roman law. A special constitution by which the Roman em- peror conferred on some single person some anomalous or irregular right, or Imposed up- on some single person some anomalous or Irregular obligation, or inflicted on some sin- gle person some anomalous or Irregular pun- ishment. When such privilegia conferred anomalous rights, they were styled "favor- able." When they imposed anomalous obli- gations, or inflicted anomalous punishments, they were styled "odious." Aust. Jur. g 748.

In modern civil law, "privilegium" is sa Id to denote, in its general sense, every pe- culiar right or favor granted by the law, con- trary to the common rule. Maekeld. Rom. Law, | 197.

A species of lien or claim upon an article of property, not dependent upon possession, but continuing until either satisfied or re- leased. Such is the lien, recognized by mod- ern maritime law, of seamen upon the ship for their wages. 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 561.

PRIVITY.

The term “privity” means mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property. The executor Is in priv- ity with the testator, the heir with the ancestor, the assignee with the assignor, the donee with the donor, and the lessee with the lessor. Union Nat. Bank v. International Bank, 123 111. 510, 14 N. E. 859; Hunt v. Haven, 52

N. H. 169; Mygatt v. Coe, 124 N. Y. 212. 20 N. E. 611, 11 L. R. A. 640 ; Strayer v. John- son, 110 Pa. 21, 1 Atl. 222; Litchfield v. Crane, 123 U. 8. 549, 8 Sup. CL 210, 31 L. Ed. 199.

Privity of contract is that connection or relationship which exists between two or more contracting parties. It is essential to the maintenance of an action on any contract that there should subsist a privity between the plaintiff and defendant in respect of the matter sued on. Brown.

Privity of estate is that which exists be- tween lessor and lessee, tenant for life and remainder-man or reversioner, etc., and their respective assignees, and between Joint ten- ants and coparceners. Privity of estate is required for a release by enlargement Sweet Privity of blood exists between an heir and his ancestor, (privity in blood inheritable,) and between coparceners. This privity was formerly of importance in the law of descent cast Co. Litt 271o, 242o; 2 Inst 516; 8 Coke, 42b.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 2-318 — third-party beneficiaries of warranties]

The entry states the old rule that privity of contract is essential to sue on a contract; modern sales law abrogates that bar for warranties, extending express and implied warranties to third-party beneficiaries beyond the contracting parties.

Why: Genuine: § 2-318 is the uniform provision that limits the very privity requirement the entry states, so it marks the rule's modern boundary rather than repeating it.

PRIVY.

A person who Is in privity with another. See Pbivies; Pbivitt.

As an adjective, the word has practically the same meaning as "private.”

A false mark or sign, forged object, counterfeited letter, key, ring, etc., used to deceive persons, and therebv fraud- ulently get possession of property. St. 33 Hen.

VIII. c. 1. A false privy token is a false pri- vate document or sign, not such as is calcu- lated to deceive men generally, but designed to defraud one or more individuals. Cheating by such false token was not indictable at common law. Pub. St. Mass. 1882, n. 1294.— Privy verdict. In practice. A verdict given, privily to the judge out of court, but which was of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court. 3 Bl. Comm. 377. Kramer v. Kister, 187 Pa. 227, 40 Atl. 1008, 44 L. R. A. 432 ; Barrett v. State. 1 Wis. 175; Young v. Seymour. 4 Neb. 89; Com. v. Heller, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 123. Now generally su- perseded by the “sealed verdict,” i. e.. one writ- ten out. sealed up. and delivered to the judge or the clerk of the court.

PRIZE.

In admiralty law. A vessel or cargo, belonging to one of two belligerent powers, apprehended or forcibly captured at sea by a war- vessel or privateer of the other belligerent, and claimed as enemy’s property, and therefore liable to appropriation and con- demnation under the laws of war. See 1 C. Rob. Adm. 228.

Captured property regularly condemned by the sentence of a competent prize court 1 Kent, Comm. 102.

In contract*. Anything offered as a re- ward of contest ; a reward offered to the per- son who, among several persons or among the public at large, shall first (or best) per- form a certain undertaking or accomplish cer- tain conditions.

—Prise courts. Courts having jurisdiction to adjudicate upon captures made at •»oa in time of war, and to condemn the captured prop- erty as prize if lawfully subject to that sen- tence. In England, the admiralty courts have jurisdiction as prize courts, distinct from the jurisdiction on the instance side. In Ameri- ca, the federal district courts have jurisdiction in cases of prize. 1 Kent, Comm. 101-103, 853-^360. See Penhallow v. Doane, 3 Dali. 91, 1 L. Ed. 507 ; Slaley v. grant: the district courts have original jurisdiction, exclusive of state courts, over civil cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, under which prize cases fall.

Why: Genuine: prize is admiralty; § 1333 is the jurisdictional statute behind the prize-court jurisdiction the entry attributes to the federal district courts.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 9:24, KJV]

Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain.

Why: The entry's second sense is 'anything offered as a reward of contest.' Paul uses 'prize' in exactly that sense — the contest reward.

PRO.

For ; in respect of ; on account of ; In behalf of. The introductory word of many .Latin phrases.

PRO AND CON.

PRO BONO PUBLICO.

For the pub- lic good ; for the welfare of the whole.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Philippians 2:4, KJV]

Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.

Why: 'For the public good; for the welfare of the whole.' This verse states the regard-for-others principle behind acting for the public good.

PRO CONFESSO.

For confessed ; as confessed. A term applied to a bill In equity, and the decree founded upon It, where no an- swer is made to it by the defendant 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 96.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 55 — default judgment]

A bill in equity taken pro confesso for want of an answer is the ancestor of the modern default judgment: where a defendant fails to plead or defend, the court may enter judgment by default.

Why: Genuine: Rule 55 is the living procedural form of exactly the pro confesso decree the entry defines — judgment upon failure to answer.

PRO CONSILIO.

For counsel given. An annuity pro coneilio amounts to a condi- tion, but in a feoffment or lease for life, etc., it Is the consideration, and does not amount to a condition ; for the state of the land by the feoffment is executed, and the grant of the annuity is executory. Plowd.

[Axiom: a bona fide purchaser for value without notice takes free of prior undisclosed claims]

Usucapio pro emtore — acquisition 'as a purchaser' — required good faith, and is the Roman root of the bona fide purchaser rule: one who buys for value without notice of a prior claim takes free of it.

Why: Genuine but borderline: the entry never names the descendant doctrine; the axiom names the living rule that grew from the Roman title, which is illumination rather than repetition.

[Axiom: courts may admit out-of-jurisdiction counsel pro hac vice for a single matter]

The phrase's living use is in admission of counsel: a court may admit an attorney not licensed in the jurisdiction pro hac vice — for that case only, typically on motion and association with local counsel.

Why: Genuine but borderline: no single statute governs (it is court rules), so no citation is invented; the axiom states the universally practiced principle the phrase denotes.

PRO ILLA VICE.

For that turn. 8 Wils. 233, arg.

PRO INDEFENSO.

As undefended; as making no defense. A phrase in old prac- tice. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, f 7.

. PRO INDIVISO. As undivided ; in com- mon. The joint occupation or possession of lands. Thus, lands held by coparceners are held pro indlviao; that Is, they are held un- divldedly, neither party being entitled to any specific portions of the land so held, bnt both or all having a joint interest in the un- divided whole. Cowell.

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 24 — intervention]

'A third party may be allowed to intervene in a suit pro interesse suo' is the intervention practice codified for federal courts: intervention of right where the applicant's interest may be impaired, and permissive intervention where a common question of law or fact exists.

Why: Genuine: Rule 24 is the federal rule governing exactly the third-party intervention the entry describes; a direct match, not a stretch.

PRO LABSIONE FEDEI.

For breach of faith. 3 Bl. Comm. 52.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 30:2, KJV]

If a man vow a vow unto the LORD, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word, he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

Why: 'For breach of faith.' This is the scriptural law of keeping one's word — breach of faith defined as breaking what the mouth has spoken.

PRO XJBGATO.

As a legacy ; by the title of a legacy. A species of usucaptlon. Dig. 41, 8.

PRO MAJORI CAUTEEA.

For great- er caution; by way of additional security. Usually applied to some act done, or some clause inserted in an instrument which may not be really necessary, but which will serve to put the matter beyond any question.

PRO RATA.

Proportionately; accord- ing to a certain rate, percentage, or pro- portion. Thus, the creditors (of the same class) of an insolvent estate are to be paid pro rata; that Is, each is to receive n divi- dend bearing the same ratio to the whole amount of his claim that the aggregate of assets bears to the aggregate of debts.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 726 — distribution of property of the estate]

The entry's insolvent-estate example is the Code's distribution rule: after secured and priority claims, creditors within the same class share pro rata — each receiving the same proportion of its claim.

Why: Genuine: § 726 is the distribution statute whose within-class pro rata sharing the entry describes; distinct from the PREFERENCE footnote, which concerned avoidance of transfers.

PRO RE NATA.

For the affair Imme- diately In hand; adapted to meet the par- ticular occasion. Thus, a course of judicial action adopted under pressure of the exigen- cies of the affair in hand, rather than In con- formity to established precedents. Is said to be taken pro re nata.

PROBATE.

The act or process of prov- ing a will. The proof before an ordinary, surrogate, register, or other duly authorized person that a document produced before him for official recognition and registration, and alleged to be the last will and testameut of a certain deceased person, is such In reality.

The copy of the will, made out in parch- ment or due form, under the seal of the or- dinary or court of probate, and usually de- livered to the executor or administrator of the deceased, together with a certificate of the will's having been proved, is also com- monly called the "probate.”

In the canon law, “probate" consisted of probatio, the proof of the will by the execu- tor, and approbatio, the approbation given by the ecclesiastical judge to the proof. 4 Reeve, Eng. Law, 77. — Common and solemn form of probate.

In English law, there arc two kinds of pro- bate, namely, probate in common form, and probate in solemn form. Probate in common form is granted in the registry, without any formal procedure in court, upon an ex parte application made by the executor. Probate in solemn form is in the nature of a final de- cree pronounced in open court, all parties interested having been duly cited. The difference between the effect of probate in common form and probate in solemn form is that probate in common form is revocable, whereas probate in solemn form is irrevocable, as against ail per- sons who have been cited to see the proceed- ings, or who can be proved to have been privy to- those proceedings, except in the case where a will of subsequent date is discovered, in which case probate of an earlier will, though granted in solemn form, would he revoked. to designate the proof of his claim made by a non-resident plaintiff (when the same ia on book-account, promissory note, etc.) who swears to the correctness and Justness of the same, and that it is due, before a notary or other officer in his own state; also of the copy or statement of such claim filed In court, with the Jurat of such notary attached.

—Probate bond. One required by law to be given to the probate court or judge, as inciden- tal to proceedings in such courts, such as the bonds of executors, administrators, and guard- ians. See Thomas v. White, 12 Mass. 307.— Probate code. The body or system of law re- lating to all matters of which probate courts have jurisdiction. Johnson v. Harrison, 47 Minn. 575, 50 N. W. 923, 28 Am. St. Rep. 382. —Probate court. See Coubt of Probate. —Probate, divorce, and admiralty divi- sion. That division of the English high court of justice which exercises jurisdiction in mat- ters formerly within the exclusive cognizance of the court of probate, the court for divorce and matrimonial causes, and the high court of admiralty. (Judicature Act 1873, i 34.) It consists of two judges, one of whom is called the “President.” The existing judges are the judge of the old probate and divorce courts, who is president of the division, and the judge of the old admiralty court, and of a number of registrars. Sweet.— Probate duty. A tax laid by government on every will admitted to probate, and payable out of the decedent s es- tate.—Probate homestead. See Homestead. —Probate judge. The judge of a court of probate.

[Hebrews 9:16-17, KJV]

For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth.

Why: Probate is the proving of a will — establishing that the document is the testator's last will. These verses state the legal nature of a testament: it takes force only after death, which is exactly what probate establi...

PROBATIO.

Lat Proof ; more particu- larly direct, as distinguished from Indirect or circumstantial' evidence.

—Probatio mortua. Dead proof ; that is proof by inanimate objects, such as deeds or other written evidence.— Probatio plena. In the civil law. Full proof; proof by two wit- nesses. or a public instrument Hallifax, Civil Law, b. 3, c. 9, no. 25 ; 3 Bl. Comm. 370.— Pro^ batio semi-plena. In the civil law. Half- full proof; half-proof. Proof by one witness, or a private instrument. Hallifax. Civil Law, b. 3, c. 9, no. 25; 3 Bl. Comm. 370.— Probatio viva. Living proof ; that is, proof by the mouth of living witnesses.

PROBATION.

The act of proving ; evi- dence; proof. Also trial; test; the time of novitiate. Used in the latter sense In the monastic orders.

In modern criminal administration, allow- ing a person convicted of some minor of- fense (particularly juvenile offenders) to go at large, under a susiieusion of sentence, dur- ing good behavior, and generally under the supervision or guardianship of a “probation officer.”

[Law] — Law

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 3561 — sentence of probation]

The modern criminal-administration sense the entry defines — release under suspension of sentence during good behavior — is a federal sentencing option: a defendant found guilty of an offense may be sentenced to a term of probation.

Why: Genuine: § 3561 authorizes exactly the probation disposition the entry describes; the statutory home of the defined practice.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 8:11, KJV]

She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more.

Why: Probation releases a convicted offender under suspension of sentence during good behavior. Christ's words to the adulteress are the ancient shape of it: release from condemnation conditioned on reformed conduct.

PROBATIONER.

One who is upon trial. A convicted offender who Is allowed to go at large, under suspension of sentence, during good behavior.

Probations* debent ease evideatee, sell, perspicuse et facile* intelligi. Co. Litt. 283. Proofs ought to be evident, to-wlt, per- spicuous and easily understood.

The term Is used, particularly In Pennsyl- Probati* extremis, prmsumuatur mo- vanla, but not In a strictly technical sense, dla. The extremes being proved, the intermediate proceedings are presumed. 1 Greenl. Ev. | 20.

PROBATIVE.

In the law of evidence. Having the effect of proof ; tending to prove, or actually proving.

—Probative fact. In the law of evidence. A fact which actually has the effect of proving a fact sought; an evidentiary fact. 1 Benth. Ev. 18.

PRO BAT OR.

In old English law. Strictly, an accomplice in felony who to save himself confessed the fact, and charged or accused any other as principal or accessory, against whom he was bound to make good his charge. It also signified an approver, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charg- ed upon another. Jacob. See State v. Gra- ham, 41 N. J. Law, 16, 32 Am. Bep. 174.

: PROBATORY TERM. This name Is giv- en, In the practice of the English admiralty courts, to the space of time allowed for the taking of testimony In an action, after Issue formed.

LaL

A good and lawful man. A phrase particu- larly applied to a juror or witness who was free from all exception. 3 Bi. Comm. 102.

' PROCEDENDO. In practice. A writ by which a cause which has been removed from an Inferior to a superior court by certiorari or otherwise is sent down again to the same court, to be. proceeded in there, where It ap- pears to the superior court that It was re- moved on Insufficient grounds. Cowell; 1 Tldd, Pr. 408, 410; Tates v. People, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 446.

A writ which issued out of the common- law Jurisdiction of the court of chancery, when judges of any subordinate court delay- ed the parties, for that they would not give judgment either on the one side or on the other, when they ought so to do. In such a case, a writ of procedendo ad judicium was awarded, commanding the inferior court In the sovereign's name to proceed to give judg- menL but without specifying any particular Judgment Wharton.

A writ by which the commission of a Jus- tice of the peace is revived, after having been suspended. 1 Bl. Comm. 353.

—Procedendo on aid prayer. If one pray in aid of the crown in real action, and aid be granted, it shall be awarded that he sue to the sovereign in chancery, and the justices in the common pleas shall stay until this writ of procedendo de loquela come to them. So, also, on a personal action. New Nat. Brev. 154.

Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.

Why: 'A good and lawful man' — the juror or witness free from all exception. This is the biblical qualification standard for adjudicators: able, God-fearing, truthful, hating covetousness.

PROCEDURE.

This word is commonly opposed to the sum of legal principles consti- tuting the substance of the law, and denotes the body of rules, whether of practice or of pleading, whereby rights are effectuated through the successful application of the proper remedies. It is also generally distin- guished from the law of evidence. Brown. See Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 Sup.

[Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938)]

The entry's substance/procedure distinction is the axis of Erie: federal courts sitting in diversity apply state substantive law but federal procedural law.

Why: Genuine: Erie is the decision that made the substance-versus-procedure classification outcome-determinative; it gives the entry's distinction its most famous application.

PROCEED.

A stipulation not to proceed against a party is an agreement not to sue. To sue a man Is to proceed against him. Planters’ Bank v. Houser, 57 Ga. 140; Illff

PROCEEDING.

In a general sense, the form and manner of conducting juridical business before a court or Judicial officer; regular and orderly progress in form of law ; including all possible steps in an action from its commencement to the execution of Jndg- menh In a more particular sense, any ap- plication to a court of justice, however made, for aid in the enforcement of rights, for re- lief, for redress of injuries, for damages, or for any remedial object. Gordon, 8 WaBh. 488, 36 Pac. 498.

—Collateral proceeding. One in which the particular question may arise or be involved incidentally, but which is not instituted for the very purpose of deciding such question ; as in the rule that a judgment cannot be attacked, or a corporation’s right to exist be questioned, in any collateral proceeding. Peyton v. Peyton, 2S Wash. 278, 68 Pac. 757; Peoria & P. U. R. Co. v. Peoria & F. R. Co., 105 111. 1 16. — Exec- utory proceeding. In the law of Louisiana, a proceeding which is resorted to in the follow- ing cases: When the creditor’s right arises from an act importing a confession of judg- ment, and which contains a privilege or mort- gage In his favor ; or when the creditor de- mands the execution of a judgment which has been rendered by a tribunal different from that within whose jurisdiction the execution, is sought. Code Prac. La. art. 732. — Legal pro- ceedings. This term includes all proceedings authorized or sanctioned by law, and brought or instituted in a court of justice or legal tri- bunal, for the acquiring of a right or the en- forcement of a remedy. L. R. A. 802.-— Supplementary proceeding. A separate proceeding in an original action, in which the court where the action." is pending is called upon to exercise its jurisdiction in aid of the judgment in the action. Bryant v. Bank of California (Cal.) 7 Pac. 130. In a more particular sense, a proceeding in aid of execu- tion, authorized by statute in some states in cases where no leviable property of the judg- ment debtor is found. It is a statutory equiv- alent in actions at law of the creditor's bill in equity, and in states where law and equity are blended, is provided as a substitute therefor. In this proceeding the judgment debtor is sum- moned to appear before the court (or a referee or examiner) and submit to an oral examination touching all his property and effects, and if property subject to execution and in his posses- sion or control is thus discovered, he is ordered to deliver it up, or a receiver may be appointed. [Axiom: final judgments are immune from collateral attack]

The 'collateral proceeding' sub-entry states the rule's setting; the rule itself is that a final judgment cannot be attacked collaterally — it must be challenged by direct appeal or other direct review.

Why: Genuine but borderline: the entry defines the collateral-proceeding setting without stating the consequence; the axiom states the consequence courts apply. Kept for the naming value.

PROCEEDINGS.

In practice. The steps or measures taken in the course of an ac- tion, including all that are taken. The pro- ceedings of a suit embrace all matters that occur in its progress judicially. Morewood v. Hollister, 6 N. Y. 320.

PROCEEDS.

Issues; produce; money ob- tained by the sale of property; the sum, amount, or value of property sold or convert- ed into money or into other property. See Hunt v. Williams, 126 Ind. 493, 26 N. E. 177 ; Andrews v. Johns, 59 Ohio St 65, 51 N. E. 880 ; Belmont v. Ponvert, 35 N. Y. Super. Ct 212.

PROCERES.

Nobles ; lords. The house of lords in England is called, in Latin, “Do- mus Procervm."

PROOEs VERBAL. In Freuch law. A written report, which is signed, setting forth a statement of facts. This term is applied to the report proving the meeting and the resolutions passed at a meeting of share- holders, or to the report of a commission to take testimony. It can also be applied to the statement drawn up by a huissicr in relation to any facts which one of the parties to a suit can be interested in proving; for instance the sale of a counterfeited object. State- ments, drawn up by other competent author- ities, of misdemeanors or other criminal acts, are also called by this name. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 570.

A true relation in writing In due form of law of what has been done and said verbally in the presence of a public officer and of what he himself does on the occasion. Hall v. Hall, 11 Tex. 526, 539.

PROCESS.

In practice. This word Is generally defined to be the means of compel- ling the defendant in an action to appear in court. And when actions were commenced by original writ, instead of, as at present, by writ of summons, the method of compelling the defendant to appear was by what was termed “original process,’’ being founded an the original writ, and so called also to distin- guish it from “mesne” or “intermediate” process, which was some writ or process which issued during the progress of the suit The word “process,” however, as now com- monly understood, signifies those formal in- struments called “writs.” The word “pro- cess” is in common-law practice frequently applied to the writ of summons, which is the instrument now in use for commencing per- sonal actions. But in its more comprehensive signification it includes not only the writ of summons, but all other writs which may be Issued during the progress of an action. Those writs which are used to carry the judg- ments of the courts into effect, and which are termed "writs of execution’’ are also common- ly denominated “final process,” because they usually issue at the end of a suit See Carey v. German American Ins. Co., 84 Wis. SO, 54 N. W. 18, 20 L. R. A. 267, 36 Am. St Rep. 907 ; Savage v. Oliver, 110 Ga. 636, 36 S. E. 54 ; Perry v. Lorillard Fire Ins. Co., 6 Lana. (N. Y.) 204 ; Davenport v. Bird, 34 Iowa, 527 ; Philadelphia v. Campbell, 11 Fhila. (Pa.) 164 ; Phillips v. Spotts, 14 Neb. 139, 15 N. W. 332.

In the practice of the English privy council in ecclesiastical appeals, “process” means on official copy of the whole proceedings and proofs of the court below, which is transmit- ted to the registry of the court of appeal by the registrar of the court below in obedi- ence to an order or requisition requiring him so to do, called a “monition for process,” is- sued by the court of appeal. Macph. Jud. Com. 173.

— Abuse of process. See Abuse. — Compul- sory process. See Compulsory.— Executory process. In the law of Louisiana, a summary process in the nature of an order of seizure and sale, which is available when the right of the creditor arises from an act or instrument which includes or imports a confession of judgment and a privilege or lien in bis favor, and also to enforce the execution of a judgment render- ed in another jurisdiction. See Rev. Code l'rac. 1894, art. 732.— Final process. The last process in a suit; that is, writs of execu- tion. Thus distinguished from mesne process, which includes all writs issued during the prog- ress of a cause and before final judgment. Amis v. Smith, 16 Pet. 313, 10 L. Ed. 973.— Ir- regular process. Sometimes the term "ir- regular process" has been defined to mean pro- cess absolutely void, and not merely erroneous and voidable; but usually it has been applied to all process not issued in strict conformity with the law, whether the defect appears upon the face of the process, or by reference to ex- trinsic facts, and whether such defects render the process absolutely void or only voidable. Cooper v. Harter, 2 lnd. 253. And see Bryan v. Congdon, 86 Fed. 221, 29 C. C. A. 670: Paine v. Ely, N. Chip. (Vt) 24— Judicial process. In a wide sense, this term may in- clude all the acts of a court from the be- ginning to the end of its proceedings in a given cause : but more specifically it means the writ, summons, mandate, or other process which Is used to inform the defendant of the institntion of proceedings against him and to com- pel his appearance, in either civil or criminal cases. See State v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 575, 47 N. E. 551, 38 L R. A. 519. 60 Am. St. Itep. 756; In re Smith (D. C.) 132 Fed. 303. —Legal process. This term is sometimes used as equivalent to "lawful process." Cooley v. Davis, 34 Iowa, 130. But properly it means a writ, warrant, mandate, or other process issuing from a court of justice, such as an at- tachment, execution, injunction, etc. See In re Bininger. 3 Fed. Cas. 416; Loy v. Ilome Ins. Co., 24 Minn. 319, 31 Am. Rep. 346; Perry v. Lorillard F. Ins. Co., 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 204 : Cbm. v. Brower, 7 Pa. Dist. R. 255.— Mesne process. As distinguished from final process, this signifies any writ or process issued between the commencement of the action and the suing out of execution. It includes the writ of summons, (although that is now the usu- al commencement of actions,) because ancient- ly that was preceded by the original writ. The writ of capiat ad respondendum was called "mesne" to distinguish it. on the one hand, from the original process by which a suit was formerly commenced ; and, on the other, from the final process of execution. Birmingham Dry Goods Co. v. Bledsoe. 113 Ala. 418, 21 South. 403; Hirshlser v. Tinsley, 9 Mo. App. 342; Pennington v. Lowinstein, 19 Fed. Cas. 168. — Original process. That by which a ju- dicial proceeding is instituted ; process to com- pel the appearance of the defendant. Distin- guished from "mesne" process, which issues, during the progress of a suit, for some sub- ordinate or collateral purpose ; and from "final" process, which is process of execution. Appeal of Hotchkiss. 32 Conn. 353. — Process of Interpleader. A means of determining the ri"ht to property claimed by each of tiyo or more persons, which is in the possession of a third.— Process of law. See Due Process of Law.— Process roll. In practice. A roll used for the entry of process to save the stat- ute of limitations. 1 Tidd, Pr. 161, 162.— Regular process. Such as is issued accord- ing to rule and the prescribed practice, or which emanates, lawfully and in a proper case, from a court or magistrate possessing jurisdic- tion.—Summary process. The name given in some states (particularly in New England) to the process of garnishment or foreign attach? ment.— Void process. Such as was issued without power in the court to award it, or which the court had not acquired jurisdiction to issue in the particular case, or which fails in some material respect to comply with the requisite form of legal process. Bryan v, Congdon, 86 Fed. 223, 29 C. O. A. 670.

In patent law. A means or method em- ployed to produce a certain result or effect, or a mode of treatment of given materials to produce a desired result, either by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, or of one substance to another. Irrespective of any ma- chine or mechanical device; in this sense a “process” is patentable, though, strictly speaking, it Is the art and not the process which Is the subject of patent. See Coch- rane v. Deener, 94 U. 8. 780, 24 L. Ed. 139 ; Corning v. Burden, 15 How. 268, 14 L. Ed. 683 ; Westfnghouse v. Boyden Power-Brake Co.. 170 V. S. 537. 18 Sup. — Mechanical process. A process involving solely the application of mechanism or mechan- ical principles; an aggregation of functions; not patentable considered apart from the mech- anism employed or the finished product of manu- facture. See Risdon Iron, etc., Works v. Med- art, 158 U. S. 68, 15 Sup. Ct. 745, 39 L. Ed. 899; American Fibre Chamois Co. v. Buckskin Fibre Co., 72 Fed. 514, 18 C. C. A. 662 ; Coch- rane v. Deener, 94 U. [Law: U.S. Const. amends. V, XIV]

The entry's 'process of law' cross-reference points to due process: no person shall 'be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.'

Why: Genuine: the due process clauses are the constitutional content of 'process of law'; quoted verbatim.

[Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U.S. 780 (1876)]

For the patent-law sense, the Supreme Court authority the entry itself cites defines a patentable process as an art — a means or method of producing a result, irrespective of any particular machine.

Why: Genuine: Cochrane is the defining process-patent decision and the very authority the entry cites; the footnote anchors the entry's definition to its source.

PROCHEIN.

L. Fr. Next. A term somewhat used in modern law, and more fre- quently in the old law; as prochein ami, prochcin cousin. Co. Litt. 10.

— Procheia ami. Next friend. As an infant cannot legally sue in his own name, the action must be brought by his proclictn ami; that is, some friend (not being his guardian) who will appear as plaintiff in his name.— Proehein avoidance. Next vacancy. A power to ap- point a minister to a church when it shall next become void.

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 17(c) — minors and incompetents appear by next friend or guardian ad litem]

The prochein ami (next friend) the entry defines is the representative by whom minors and incompetent persons sue and defend where they cannot act in their own names.

Why: Genuine: Rule 17(c) is the federal rule codifying exactly the next-friend practice the entry describes; a direct match.

PROCHRONISM.

An error in chronol- ogy ; dating u thing before it happened.

PROGINCTUS.

Let In the Roman law. A girding or preparing for battle. Testa- mentum in procinctu, a will made by a soldier, while girdiug himself, or preparing to engage in battle. Adams, Rom. Ant. 62; Calvin.

PROCLAIM.

To promulgate; to an- nounce ; to publish, by governmental author- ity, intelligence of public acts or transactions or other matters important to be known by the people.

PROCLAMATION.

The act of causing some state matters to be published or made generally known. A written or printed doc- ument in which are contained such matters, issued by proper authority. 3 Inst. 162; 1 Bl. Comm. 170.

—Proclamation by lord of manor. A proc- lamation made by the lord of a manor (thrice repeated) requiring the heir or devisee of a deceased copyholder to present himself, pay the fine, and be admitted to the estate; failing which appearance, the lord might seize the lands quounque (provisionally.)— Proclamation of exigents. In old English law. When an ex- igent was awarded, a writ of proclamation is- sued, at the same time, commanding the sher- iS of the county wherein the defendant dwelt to make three proclamations thereof in places the most notorious, and most likely to come to bis knowledge, a month before the outlawry should take place. 3 Bl. Comm. 284.— Proclamation of a fine. The notice or proclanjation which was made after the engrossment of a fine of lands, and which consisted in its being openly read in court sixteen times, viz., four times in the term in which it was made, and four times in each of the three succeeding terms, which, however, was afterwards reduced to one read- ing in each term. Cowell. See 2 Bl. Comm. 352.— Proclamation of rebellion. In old English law. A proclamation to be made by the sheriff commanding the attendance of a person who bad neglected to obey a subpoena or attachment in chancery. If he did pot surren- der himself after this proclamation, a commis- sion of rebellion issued. 8 Bl. Comm. 444— Proclamation of recusants. A proclama- tion whereby recusants were formerly convict- ed, on non-appearance at the assizes. Jacob.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 25:10, KJV]

And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubile unto you.

Why: A proclamation is the publication of state matters by proper authority. This is the Jubilee proclamation — liberty proclaimed by divine authority to all the land.

[Spielberg, Lincoln, 2012]

(paraphrase) Spielberg's Lincoln stages the proclamation as an instrument of state — the President's word published by authority, binding the nation; the Emancipation Proclamation is the era's defining instance. [Spielberg, Lincoln, 2012] (paraphrase) children. Inst tit 2, in pr.

Why: Entry: 'to promulgate; to announce; to publish, by governmental authority... issued by proper authority.' The film dramatizes exactly that legal form — the proclamation as authoritative publication. Marked (paraphrase...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 1:28, KJV]

And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it.

Why: 'The generation of children. One of the principal ends of marriage is the procreation of children.' This is the divine mandate behind procreation as marriage's end.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Atwood, The Handmaid's Tale, 1985]

(paraphrase) Gilead makes procreation the state-mandated end of the marital order — Black's 'one of the principal ends of marriage is the procreation of children' turned into dystopian law. [Atwood, The Handmaid's Tale, 1985] (paraphrase)

Why: The entry's second sentence is the novel's premise made explicit: a regime organized around procreation as marriage's end. Genuine thematic illumination. Marked (paraphrase).

PROCTOR.

A procurator, proxy, or at- torney. More particularly, an officer of the admiralty and ecclesiastical courts whose du- ties and business correspond exactly to those of an attorney at law or solicitor in chancery.

An ecclesiastical person sent to the lower house of convocation as the representative of a cathedral, a collegiate church, or the clergy of a diocese. Also certain administrative or magisterial officers in the universities.

—Proctors of the clergy. They who are chosen and appointed to nppear for cathedral or other collegiate churches ; as also for the common clergy of every diocese, to sit in the convocation bouse in the time of parliamenb Wharton.

PROOURACY.

The writing or instru- ment which authorizes a procurator to act. Cowell ; Termes de la Ley.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 3-402 — signature by representative]

Indorsing a bill or note 'by procuration' (per proc.) — signing as proxy for another — is governed by the Code's signature-by-representative rule, which allocates liability between the principal and the agent according to how the signature discloses the representative capacity.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines exactly the per-procuration indorsement; § 3-402 is the uniform rule on the legal effect of such representative signatures on negotiable instruments.

PROCURATIONS.

In ecclesiastical law. Certain sums of money which parish priests pay yearly to the bishops or archdeacons ratione visitation^. Dig. 3, 36, 25; Ay!. Par. 429.

PROCURATOR.

In the civil law. A proctor; a person who acts for another by virtue of a procuration. Dig. 3, 3, 1.

In old English law. An agent or attor- ney ; a bailiff or servanb A proxy of a lord in parliamenb

In eoclealaa tical law. One who collect- ed the fruits of a benefice for another. An advocate of a religious house, who was to solicit the interest and plead the causes of the- society. A proxy or representative of a par- ish church.

—Procurator fiscal. In Scotch law, this ia the title of the public prosecutor for each dis- trict, who institutes the preliminary inquiry into crime within his district. The office is an- alogous, in some respect, to that of “prosecut- ing attorney," “district attorney,” or “state's at- torney” in America— Procurator In ram su- - am. Proctor (attorney) in his own affair, or with reference to bis own property. This term is used in Scotch lav to denote that a person is acting under a procuration (power of attor- ney) with reference to a thing which has become his own property. See Ersk. Inst. 3, 5, 2.— Procurator litis. In the civil law. One who by command of another institutes and car- ries on

A provincial officer who managed the affairs of the revenue, and had a judicial power in matters that concerned the revenue. Adams, Rom. Ant. 178.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 4:2, KJV]

Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful.

Why: A procurator is one who manages another's affairs by his direction — a steward. This verse states the steward's requirement: faithfulness.

PROCURATORES EOC1ESUE PARO- / CHIALIS.

The old name for church-ward- ens. Paroch. Antiq. 562.

PROOURATORIUM.

In old English law. The procuratory or instrument by which any person or community constituted or delegated their procurator or proctors to represent them in any judicial court or cause. Cowell.

PROCURATORY OF RESIGNATION.

In Scotch law. A form of proceeding by which a vassal authorizes the feu to be re- turned to his superior. Bell. It is anal- ogous to the surrender of copyholds In Eng- land.

PROCURATRIX.

In old English law. A female agent or attorney in fact Fleta, lib. 8, c. 4, J 4.

PROCURE.

In criminal law, and in analogous uses elsewhere, to “procure” is to initiate a proceeding to cause a thing to be done; to instigate; to contrive, bring about, effect, or cause. See U. S. v. Wilson, 28 Fed. Cns. 710; Gore v. Lloyd, 12 Mees. &

W. 480; Marcus v. Bernstein, 117 N. C. 31, 23 S. E. 38; RoBenbarger v. State, 154 Ind. 425, 56 N. E. 914 ; Long v. State, 23 Neb. 33. 36 N. W. 310.

PROCURER.

A pimp ; one that procures the seduction or prostitution of girls. They are punishable by statute in England and America.

[Hip-hop] — Hip-hop

[50 Cent, 'P.I.M.P.', 2003]

"No Cadillac, no perms, you can't see / That I'm a motherfuckin' P-I-M-P." The entry defines the procurer plainly: a pimp, one that procures. The track is hip-hop's most famous first-person inhabitation of exactly that legal role — the statute's subject speaking in his own voice. (Profanity retained verbatim; bowdlerizing would falsify the quote.)

Why: Added because the link is definitional: the entry IS the pimp, and the lyric is the pimp's own self-declaration, verbatim-certain. Genuine illumination of the role the law punishes.

PROCUREUR.

In French law. An at- torney-; one who has received a commission from another to act on his behalf. There were in France two classes of procureurs: Procureurs ad ncgotia, appointed by an in- dividual to act for him in the administration of his affairs ; persons invested with a power of attorney; corresponding to “attorneys In fact.” Procureurs ad litcs were persons ap- pointed and authorized to act for a party in a court of 'justice. These corresponded to at- torneys at law, (now called, in England, “so- licitors of the supreme court.”) The order of procureurs was abolished in 1791, and that of avoufs established in their place. Mozley & Whitley.

PROCUREUR DU ROI, in French law, is a public prosecutor, with whom rests the initiation of all criminal proceedings. In the exercise of his office (which appears to include the apprehension of offenders) he is entitled to call to his assistance the public force, (posse comitatus ;) and the officers of police are auxiliary to him.

PROCUREUR GENERAL, or IM- PERIAL. In French law. An officer of the imperial court, who either personally or by his deputy prosecutes every one who is ac- cused of a crime according to the forms of French law. His functions appear to be con- fined to preparing the case for trial at the assizes, assisting in that trial, demanding the sentence in case of a conviction, and being present at the delivery of the sentence. He has a general superintendence over the of- ficers of police and of the fuges d’instruction, and he 'requires from the procureur du roi a general report once in every three months. Brown.

PRODES HOMINES.

A term said by Tomlins to be frequently applied in the ancient books to the barons of the realm, particularly as constituting a council or ad- ministration or government. It is probably a corruption of “probl homines.”

PRODIGU8.

Lat. In Roman law. A prodigal ; a spendthrift ; a person whose ex- travagant habits manifested an inability to administer his own affairs, and for whom a guardian might therefore be appointed.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 15:13, KJV]

And not many days after the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living.

Why: Prodigus is the prodigal, the spendthrift whose extravagance shows inability to administer his affairs. The younger son is the archetypal prodigal — the parable's name for the legal concept.

That which has not been consecrated. By a profane place is under- stood one which Is neither sacred non sancti- fied nor religious. Dig. 11, 7, 2, 4.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 10:10, KJV]

And that ye may put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean.

Why: Profane is 'that which has not been consecrated.' This verse draws the holy/unholy distinction itself — the boundary the legal term presupposes.

PROFANELY.

In a profane manner. A technical word In Indictments for the stat- utory offense of profanity. See Updegraph v. Com., 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394.

PROFANITY.

Irreverence towards sa- cred things; particularly, an Irreverent or blasphemous use of the name of God; pun- ishable by statute in some jurisdictions.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:7, KJV]

Thou shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain; for the LORD will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

Why: Profanity is the irreverent or blasphemous use of God's name. This commandment is the root prohibition behind profanity law.

PROFECTITIUS.

Lat. In the civil law. That which descends to us from our as- cendants. Dig. 23, 3, 5.

PROFER.

In old English law. An offer or proffer ; an offer or endeavor to proceed in an action, by any man concerned to do so. Cowell.

A return made by a sheriff of his accounts into the exchequer ; a payment made on such return. Id.

' PROFERT IN CURIA. L. Lat. He pro- duces in court. In old practice, these words were inserted in a declaration, as an allega- tion that the plaintiff was ready to produce, or did actually produce, In court, the deed or other written instrument on which his suit was founded, in order that the court might inspect the same and the defendant hear it read. The same formula was used where the defendant pleaded a written instrument.

2. The benefit, advantage, or pecuniary gain accruing to the owner or occupant of land from its actual use; as in the’fnmlllar phrase “rents, issues, and profits,”' or in the expression “mesne profits."

3. A division • sometimes made of incor- poreal hereditaments ; as distinguished from “easements,” which tend rather to the con- venience than the profit of the claimant 2 Steph. Comm. 2.

—Mesne profits. Intermediate profits; that is, profits which have been accruing between two given periods. Thus, after a party has recovered the land itself in an action of eject- ment, he frequently brings another action for the purpose of recovering the profits which have been accruing or arising out of the land between the time when his title to the possession accrued or was raised and the time of his recovery in the action of ejectment, and such an action is thence termed an “action for mesne profits.” Brown.— Mesne profits, action of. PROHIBITED DEGREES.

Those de- grees of relationship by consanguinity which are so close that marriage between persons related to each other in any of such degrees is forbidden by law. See State v. Gulton, 51 La. Ann. 155, 24 South. 784.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 18:6, KJV]

None of you shall approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakedness: I am the LORD.

Why: Prohibited degrees are the kinship degrees within which marriage is forbidden. Leviticus 18 is scripture's own table of prohibited degrees, opening with this verse.

The civil law permits the offspring born before marriage [provided such off- spring be afterwards legitimized] to be the heirs of their parents; but the law of the English does not suffer the Offspring not pro- duced by the marriage to succeed.

PROLES.

Lat. Offspring; progeny ; the issue of a lawful marriage.

Proles sequitur sortem patera am. The offspring follows the condition of the father. Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. V.) 583, 660.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 127:3, KJV]

Lo, children are an heritage of the LORD: and the fruit of the womb is his reward.

Why: Proles is offspring, progeny, the issue of lawful marriage. This verse names children as heritage — offspring as blessing and reward.

PROLETARIATE.

PROLICIDE.

In medical jurisprudence. A word used to designate the destruction of the human offspring. Jurists divide the sub- ject into foeticide, or the destruction of the foetus in utero, and infanticide , or the de- struction of the new'-born infant. By. Med. Jur. 280.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:13, KJV]

Thou shalt not kill.

Why: Prolicide is the destruction of the human offspring — foeticide or infanticide. The sixth commandment is the root prohibition.

PROLIXITY.

The unnecessary and su- perfluous statement of facts in pleading or in evidence. This will be rejected as imperti- nent. 7 Price, 278, note.

PROLOCUTOR.

In ecclesiastical law. The president or chairman of a convocation.

PROMISE.

A declaration, verbal or written, made by one person to another for a good or valuable consideration In the na- ture of a covenant by which the promisor binds himself to do or forbear some act, and gives to the promisee a legal- right to de- mand and enforce a fulfillment. See Taylor v. Miller, 113 N. C. 340. 18 S. E. 504 ; New- comb v. Clark, 1 Denlo (N. Y.) 228; Foute v. Bacon, 2 Cush. (Miss.) 104 ; U. S. v. Bal- tic Mills Co., 124 Fed. 41, 59 C. C. A. 558.

“Promise” is to be distinguished, on the one hand, from a mere declaration of intention in- volving no engagement or assurance as to the future; and, on the other, from “agreement," which is an obligation arising upon reciprocal promises, or upon a promise founded on a con- sideration. Abbott.

“Fictitious promises,” sometimes called “implied promises,” or “promises Implied In law,” occur in the case of those contracts which were Invented to enable persons In certain cases to take advantage of the old rules of pleading peculiar to contracts, and which are not now of practical Importance. Sweet.

— Mutual promises. Promises simultaneous- ly made by and between two parties; each be- ing the consideration for the other.— Naked promise. One given without any considera- tion, equivalent, or reciprocal obligation, and for that reason not enforceable at law. See Arend v. Smith, 151 N. Y. 502, 45 N. E. 872. —New promise. An undertaking or promise, based upon and having relation to a former romise which, for some reason, can no longer e enforced, whereby the promisor recognizes and revives Rnch former promise and engages to fulfill it.— Parol promise. A simple contract; a verbal promise. 2 Steph. Comm. 109.— Prom- ise of marriage. A contract mutually en- tered Into by a man and a woman that they will marry each other.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 30:2, KJV]

If a man vow a vow unto the LORD, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word, he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

Why: A promise is a declaration by which the promisor binds himself to do or forbear. This verse is the scriptural law of the binding promise — the promisor shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

PROMISEE.

One to whom a promise has been made.

PROMISOR.

One who makes a prom- ise.

PROMISSOR.

Eat. In the civil law. A promiser; properly the party who under- took to do a thing In answer to the Interro- gation of the other party, who was called the “stipulator.”

PROMISSORY.

Containing or consist- ing of a promise; in the nature of a promise; stipulating or engaging for a future act or course of conduct.

—Promissory note. A promise or engage- ment, in writing, to pay a specified sum at a time therein limited, or on demund, or at sight, to a person therein named, or to his order, or bearer. Byles, Bills, 1, 4 ; Hall v. Farmer, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 484. A promissory note is a written promise made by one or more to pay an- other, or order, or bearer, at a specified time, a specific amount of money, or other articles of value. Code (ia. 1882, 4 2774. A promis- sory note is an instrument negotiable in form, whereby the signer promises to pay a specified sum of money. Civ. Code Cal. 4 3244. An un- conditional written promise, signed by the mak- er, to pay absolutely and at all events a sum certain in money, either to the bearer or to a person therein designated or his order. Benj. Chaim. Bills & N. art. 271.

As to promissory “Oath,” “Representa- tion,” and “Warranty,” see those titles.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC §§ 3-104, 3-106 — negotiable instruments; unconditional promise or order]

The promissory note the entry defines — an unconditional written promise, signed by the maker, to pay a sum certain in money to bearer or to order — is the canonical negotiable instrument: the Code defines negotiability and the unconditional promise or order that makes an instrument negotiable.

Why: Genuine: Article 3 is the uniform law of exactly the instrument the entry defines; the sections named supply the negotiability test the definitions presuppose.

PROMOTERS.

In the law relating to corporations, those persons are called the “promoters” of a company who first asso- ciate themselves together for the purpose of organizing the company, issuing Its pro- spectus, procuring subscriptions to the stock, securing a charter, etc. See Dlckerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 20 Sup. Ct. 311, 44 L. Ed. 423; Bosher v. Rich- mond & H. Land Co., 88 Va. 455, 16 S. B. 360, 37 Am. St. Rep. 879; Yale Gas Stove Co. v. Wilcox, G4 Conn. 101, 29 Atl. 303, 25

L. R. A. 90, 42 Am. St. Rep. 159;, Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 49.

In English practice. Those persons who, In popular and penal actions, prosecute of- fenders In their own names and that of the king, and are thereby entitled to part of the fines and penalties for their pains, are called “promoters." Brown.

The term Is also applied to a party who puts in motion an ecclesiastical tribunal, for the purpose of correcting the manners ot any person who has violated the laws eccle- siastical ; and one who takes such a course is said to “promote the office of the Judge.” See Mozley & Whitley.

PROMULGARE.

Lat. In Roman law. To make public; to make publicly known; to promulgate. To publish or make known a law, after its enactment

PROMULGATE.

To publish ; to an- nounce officially; to make public as Impor- tant or obligatory. See Wooden v. Western New York & P. R. Co. (Super. Ct) 18 N. Y. Supp. 769.

PROMULGATION.

The order given U> cause a law to be executed, and to make It public; it differs from publication. 1 Bl. Comm. 45.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 31:11, KJV]

When all Israel is come to appear before the LORD thy God in the place which he shall choose, thou shalt read this law before all Israel in their hearing.

Why: Promulgation is causing a law to be made public as preliminary to its force. This is promulgation's scriptural form: the law read publicly before all Israel.

PROMUTUUM.

Lat. In the civil law. A quasi contract by which he who receives a certain sum of money, or a certain quan- tity of fungible things, which have been paid to him through mistake, contracts towards the payer the obligation of returning him as much. Poth. de l’Usure, pt 3, s. 1, a. 1.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: money paid by mistake may be recovered in restitution]

The quasi-contract for money paid by mistake — the recipient's obligation to return as much — is the civil-law root of the common-law action for money had and received, the modern law of restitution for mistaken payments.

Why: Genuine but borderline: the entry defines the Roman institution without naming its descendant; the axiom names the living doctrine (restitution/money had and received), which is illumination rather than repetition.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 7:24, KJV]

Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment.

Why: A court 'pronounces' judgment — declares it formally and solemnly. Christ's command governs the judicial act itself: judgment must be righteous, not by appearance.

—Proper feuds. In feudal law, the original and genuine feuds held by purely military service.— Proper parties. A proper party, as distinguished from a necessary party, is one who has an interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, which may be conveniently settled therein; one without whom a substantial de- cree may be made, but not a decree which sKall completely settle all the questions which may be involved in the controversy and conclude the rights of all the persons who have any interest in the subject of the litigation. PROPERTY.

Rightful dominion over external objects; ownership; the unrestrict- ed and exclusive right to a thing; the right to dispose of the substance of a thing in every legal way, to possess it, to use It, and to exclude every one else from interfering with it. Mackeld. Rom. Law, S 266.

Property is the highest’ right a man can have to anything; being used for that right which one has to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which noway depends on another man’s cour- tesy. Jackson ex dem. Pearson v. Housel, 17 Johns. 281, 283.

A right imparting to the owner a power of indefinite user, capable of being transmitted to universal successors by way of descent, and Imparting to the owner the power of disposi- tion, from himself and his successors per uni- versitatem, and from all other persona who have a spes succession under any existing conces- sion or disposition, in favor of such person or series of persons as he may choose, with the like capacities and powers as he had himself, and under such conditions as the municipal or par- ticular law allows to be annexed to the disposi- tions of private persons. Aust. Jur. (Campbell’s Ed.) f 1103.

The right of property is that sole and despotic dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world, in total exclusion of the right of any other individual in the universe. It consists in the free use, en- joyment, and disposal of all a person’s acquisi- tions, without any control or diminution save only bv the laws of the land. 1 Bl. Comm. 138 ; 2 Bl. Comm. 2, 15.

The word Is also commonly used to denote any external object over which the right of property Is exercised. In this sense It Is a very wide term, and Includes every class of acquisitions which a man can own or have an Interest in. See Scranton v. Wheeler, 179

— Propter affectum. For or on account of tome affection or prejudice. The name of a species of challenge, (q . v.)— -Propter defec- tum. On account of or for some defect. The name of a species of challenge, (q. v.)— Propter defectum sanguinis. On account of failure of blood.— Propter delictum. For or on ac- count of crime. The name of a species of chal- lenge, (q. v.)— Propter honoris respectum. On account of respect of honor or rank. See Challenge. — Propter impotentiam. On •account of helplessness. The term describes one of the grounds of a qualified property in wild animals, consisting in the fact of their inability to escape; as is the case with the young of such animals before they can fly or run. 2 Bl. Comm. 304.— Propter privilegium. On account of privilege. The term describes one of the grounds of a qualified property in wild nnimals, consisting in the special privilege of hunting, taking and killing them, in a given park or preserve, to the exclusion of other per- sons. 2 Bl. Comm. 394.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: jurors are subject to challenge for cause for implied bias]

The propter affectum, propter defectum, and propter delictum challenges are the common-law species of challenge for cause for implied bias: a juror may be removed where relationship, interest, formed opinion, or disqualifying status implies partiality as a matter of law.

Why: Genuine but borderline: the entry lists the species of challenge without stating the living practice; the axiom names the consequence — removal for cause — that these challenges serve.

PRORATE.

To divide, share, or dis- tribute proportionally; to assess or appor- tion pro rata. Formed from the Latin phrase “pro rata,” and said to be a recog- nized English word. Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 405.

PROROGATES JURISDICTION.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

In

Scotch law. A power conferred by consent of the parties upon a judge who would not otherwise be competent.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: subject-matter jurisdiction cannot be conferred by the parties' consent]

The Scots doctrine the entry describes — jurisdiction conferred on an otherwise incompetent judge by the parties' consent — is the opposite of the American rule: subject-matter jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent, waiver, or estoppel, and its absence may be raised at any time.

Why: Genuine: the illumination is the contrast — the entry describes a doctrine American law rejects, and the axiom states the rejecting rule, which is what an American reader needs.

PROROGATION.

Prolonging or putting off to another day. In English law, a pro- rogation is the continuance of the parlia- ment from one session to another, as an ad- journment is a continuation of the session from day to day. Wharton.

In the civil law. The giving time to do a thing beyond the term previously fixed. Dig. 2, 14, 27, L

PROROGUE.

To direct suspension ot proceedings of parliament; to terminate a session.

PROSCRIBED.

In the civil law. Among the Romans, a man was said to be “proscribed” when a reward was offered for his head ; but the term was more usually ap- plied to those who were sentenced to some punishment which carried with it the con- sequences of civil death. Cod. 9, 40.

PROSECUTE.

To follow up; to carry on an action or other judicial proceeding ; to proceed against a person criminally.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

The

name of the public officer (in several states) who is appointed in each judicial district, circuit, or county, to conduct criminal pros- ecutions on behalf of the state or people. See People v. May, 3 Mich. 605; Holder v. State, 58 Ark. 473, 25 S. W. 279.

PROSECUTING WITNESS.

This name is given to the private person upon whose complaint or information a criminal accusa- tion is founded and whose testimony is main- ly relied on to secure a conviction at the trial ; in a more particular sense, the person who was chiefly injured, in person or prop- erty, by the act constituting the alleged crime, (as in cases of robbery, assault, crim- inal negligence, bastardy, and the likej and who instigates the prosecution and gives evi- dence.

PROSECUTION.

In criminal law. A criminal action; a proceeding instituted and carried on by due course of law, before a competent tribunal, for the purpose of de- termining the guilt or innocence of a per- son charged with crime. See U. S. v. Rels- lnger, 128 U. S. 308, 9 Sup. Ct. 99, 32 L. Ed. 480 ; Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 257. 25

L. Ed. '648; Schulte v. Keokuk County, 74 Iowa, 292, 37 N. W. 376 ; Sigsbee v. State, 43 Fla. 524, 30 South. 816.

By an easy extension of its meaning “pros- ecution’’ is sometimes used to designate the state as the party proceeding in a criminal action, or the prosecutor, or counsel ; as when we speak of “the evidence adduced by the prosecution.”

—Malicious prosecution. See Malicious.

PROTECTOR OF SETTLEMENT

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:4, KJV]

For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

Why: Prosecution is the criminal action carried on by the state. This verse is the theological root of public prosecution: the ruler as God's minister, bearing the sword against evildoers.

[N.W.A., 'Fuck tha Police', 1988]

"In the case of N.W.A. versus the police department / Prosecuting attorneys are MC Ren, Ice Cube, and Eazy-motherfuckin'-E." The entry: a criminal proceeding before a competent tribunal to determine guilt or innocence. The track stages exactly that — court convened, Judge Dre presiding, prosecuting attorneys named — with accuser and accused inverted: the police stand trial. Hip-hop's most famous dramatization of a prosecution, illuminating the term by asking who gets to be the prosecution.

Why: Added because the lyric stages a literal prosecution (caption, tribunal, prosecuting attorneys named) — it is about the proceeding itself, not merely adjacent. Verbatim-certain; the inversion is the illumination.

PROSECUTOR.

In practice. He who prosecutes another for a. crime in the name of the government.

— Private prosecutor. One who sets in mo- tion the machinery of criminal justice against a person whom he suspects or believes to be guilty of a crime, by laying an accusation before the proper authorities, and who is not himself an offi- cer of justice. See Ileacock v. State. 13 Tex. App. 129 ; State v. Millain, 3 Nev. 425.— Pros- ecutor of the pleas. This name is given, in New Jersey, to the county officer who is charged with the prosecution of criminal actions, cor- responding to the “district attorney” or ‘‘coun- ty attorney” in other states.— PnbUo prosecu- tor. An officer of government (such as a state's attorney or district attorney) whose function is the prosecution of criminal actions, or suits par- taking of the nature of criminal actions.

PROSOCER.

Lat In the civil law. A father-in-law’s father; grandfather of wife.

PROSOCERUS.

Lat In the civil law. A wife’s grandmother.

PROSPECTIVE.

Looking forward ; con- templating the future. A law is said to be prospective .(as opposed to retrospective) when it is applicable only to cases which shall arise after its enactment — Prospective damages. See Damages.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, §§ 9–10]

The entry's prospective/retrospective distinction has constitutional bite: retrospective criminal legislation is barred — 'No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed' — as against Congress and, separately, the states.

Why: Genuine: the ex post facto clauses are the constitutional prohibition on the retrospective laws the entry distinguishes from prospective ones; quoted verbatim.

PROSPECTUS.

A document published by a company or corporation, or by persons acting as its agents or assignees, setting forth the nature and objects of an issue of shares, debentures, or other securities creat- ed by the company or corporation, and in- viting the public to subscribe to the issue. A prospectus is also usually published on the issue, in England, of bonds or other se- curities by a foreign state or corporation. Sweet.

In the civil law. Prospect; the view of external objects. Dig. 8, 2, 3, 15.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Securities Act of 1933 — registration and prospectus requirements]

The prospectus the entry defines — the document inviting the public to subscribe to an issue of securities — is federally regulated: public offerings require registration and a conforming prospectus.

Why: Genuine: the '33 Act is the federal statute governing exactly the public-subscription prospectus the entry describes; cited in loose form to avoid overclaiming section numbers.

PROSTITUTE.

A woman who indis- criminately consorts with men for hire. Car- penter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. X.) 611 ; State v. Stoyell, 04 Me. 24, 89 Am. Dec. 716.

PROSTITUTION . Common lewdness ; whoredom; the act or practice of a woman who permits any man who will pay her price to have sexual intercourse with her. See Com. v. Cook, 12 Mete. (Mass.) 97.

Proteetlo trahit anbj actionem, et sub- jeotio protectionem. Protection draws with it subjection, and subjection protection.

7 Coke, 5a. The protection of an individual by government is on condition of his submis- sion to the laws, and such submission on the other hand entitles the individual to the protection of the government Broom, Max. 78.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 29:3, KJV]

Whoso loveth wisdom rejoiceth his father: but he that keepeth company with harlots spendeth his substance.

Why: Prostitution is common lewdness, whoredom for hire. This verse is scripture's witness on harlotry — the wasting of substance with harlots.

PROTECTION.

In English law. A writ by which the king might by a special prerogative, privilege a defendant from all personal and many real suits for one year at a time, and no longer, in respect of his be- ing engaged in his service out of the realm. 3 Bl. Comm. 289.

In former times the name “protection" was also given to a certificate given to a sailor to show that he was exempt from impressment into the royal navy.

In mercantile law. The name of a doc- ument generally given by notaries public to sailors and other persons going abroad, in which it is certified that the bearer therein named is a citizen of the United States.

In pnblic commercial law. A system by whicli a government imposes customs duties upon commodities of foreign origin or manufacture when imported into the coun- try, with the purpose and effect of stimulat- ing and developing the home production of the same or equivalent articles, by discour- aging the importation of foreign goods, or by raising the price of foreign commodities to a point at which the home producers can successfully compete with them.

PROTECTION OF INVENTIONS ACT.

The statute 33 & 34 Viet. c. 27. By this act It is provided that the exhibition of new inventions shall not prejudice patent rights, and that the exhibition of designs shall not prejudice the right to registration of such designs.

PROTECTION ORDER.

In English practice. An order for the protection of the wife’s property, when the husband has will- fully deserted her, Issuable by the divorce court under statutes on that subject.

PROTECTOR OF SETTLEMENT.

In

English law. By the statute 3 & 4 Win. IV. c. 74, | 32, power is given to any settlor to appoint any person or persons, not exceed- ing three, the "protector of the settlement." The object of such api>olntment is to prevent the tenant in tall from barring any subsequeut estate, the consent of the protector be- ing made necessary for that purpose.

PROTECTORATE.

(1) The period dur- ing which Oliver Cromwell ruled in Eng- land. (2) Also the office of protector. (3) The relation of the English sovereign, till the year 1804, to the Ionian Islands. Whar- ton.

PROTEST. 1. A formal declaration made by a person interested or concerned in some act about to be done, or already per- formed, and in relation thereto, whereby he expresses his dissent or disapproval, or af- firms the act to be done against his will or convictions, the object being generally to save some right which would be lost to him if his implied assent could be made out, or to exonerate himself from some responsibil- ity which would attach to him unless he ex- pressly negatived his assent to or voluntary participation in the act.

2. A notarial act, being a formal state- ment in writing made by a notary under his seal of office, at the request of the holder of a bill or note, in which such bill or note is described, and it is declared that the same was on a certain day presented for payment, (or acceptance, as the case may lie,) and that such payment or acceptance was refused, and stating the reasons, if any, given for such refusal, whereupon the notary protests against all parties to such Instrument, and declares that they will be held responsible for all loss or damage arising from its dis- honor. See Annvllle Nat. Bank v. Kettering, 100 Pa. 531, 51 Am. Rep. 536; Ayrault v. Pacific Bank, 47 N. Y. 575, 7 Am. Rep. 489.

A formal notarial certificate attesting the dis- honor of a bill of exchange or promissory note. Benj. Chaim. Bills & N. art. 170.

A solemn declaration written by the notary, under a fair copy of the bill, stating that the payment or acceptance has been demanded and refused, the reason, if any, assigned, and that the bill is therefore protested. Dennistoun v. Stewart. 17 How. G07T 15 L. Ed. 228.

"Protest," in a technical sense, means only the formal declaration drawn up and signed by the notary ; yet, as used by commercial men, the word includes all the steps necessary to charge an. indorser. Townsend v. Lorain Bank, 2 Ohio St. 340.

3. A formal declaration made by a minor- ity (or by certain individuals) in a legisla- tive body that they dissent from some act or resolution of the body, usually adding the grounds of their dissent. The term, in this sense, seems to be particularly appropriate to such a proceeding In the English house of lords. See Auditor General v. Board of Sup'rs, 89 Mich. 552, 51 N. W. 483.

4. The name “protest” is also given to the formal statement, usually in writing, made by a person who is called upon by pub- lic authority to pay a sum of money, in which he declares that he does not concede the legality or Justice of the claim or his duty to pay it, or that he disputes the amount demanded; the object being to save his right to recover or reclaim the amount, which right would 'be lost by his acquies- cence. Thus, taxes may be paid under “pro- test" See Meyer v. Clark, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 509.

5. “Protest” is also the name of a pat>er served on a collector of customs by an im- porter of merchandise, stating that he be- lieves the sum charged as duty to be excess- ive, and that, although he pays such sum for the purpose of getting his goods out of the custom-house, he reserves the right to bring an action against the collector to re- cover the excess.

6. In maritime law, a protest is a written statement by the master of a vessel, attest- ed by a proper judicial officer or a notary, to the effect that damage suffered by the ship on her voyage was caused by storms or other perils of the sea, without any negligence or misconduct on his own part. Marsh. Ins. 715. And see Cudworth v. South Carolina Ins. Co., 4 Rich. Law (S. C.) 416, 55 Am. Dec 692.

—Notice of protest. A notice given by the holder of a bill or note to the drawer or indorser that the bill has been protested for refusal of payment or acceptance. Cook v. Litchfield, 10

N. Y. Leg. Obs. 338; First Nat. Bank v. Hatch, 78 Mo. 23 ; Roberts v. State Bank, 9 Port. (Ala.) 315.— Supra protest. In mer- cantile law. A term applied to an acceptance of a bill by a third, person, after protest for nonacceptance by the' drawee. 3 Kent, Comm. 87. — Waiver of protest. As applied to a note or bill, a waiver of protest implies not only dis- pensing with the formal act known as “pro- test"’ but also with that which ordinarily most precede it, viz., demand and notice of non-pay- ment. See Baker v. Scott, 29 Kan. 136. 44 Am. Rep. 628; First Nat. Bank v. Hartman, 110 Pa. 196, 2 Atl. 271 ; Coddington v. Davis, 1 N. Y. 186.

One temporarily established in anticipation of and to exist and continue until another (more regular or more permanent) shall be organized and instituted in its stead. Chambers v. Fisk, 22 Tex. 535.— Provisional order. In Eng- lish law. Under various acts of parliament, certain public bodies and departments of the government are authorized to inquire into mat- ters which, in the ordinary course, could only be dealt with by a private act of parliament, and to make orders for their regulation. These orders have no effect unless they are confirmed by an act of parliament, and are hence called "provisional orders." Several orders may be confirmed by one act The object of this mode of proceeding is to save the trouble and expense of promoting a number of private bills. Sweet — Provisional remedy. A remedy provided for present need or for the immediate occasion; one adapted to meet a particular exigency. Par- ticularly, a temporary process available to a plaintiff in a civil action, which secures him against loss, irreparable injury, dissipation of the property, etc., while the action is pending. Such are the remedies by injunction, appoint- ment of a receiver, attachment, or arrest. The term is chiefly used in the codes of practice. See McCarthy v. McCarthy, 54 How. Prac. (N. PROVISO.

A condition or provision which is inserted in a deed, lease, mortgage, or contract, and on the performance or non- performance of which the validity of the deed, etc., frequently depends ; it usually be- gins with the word “provided."

A proviso in deeds or laws is a limitation or exception to a grant made or authority con- ferred, the effect of which is to declare that the one shall not operate, or the other be exercised, unless in the case provided. Voorhees v. Bank of United States, 10 Pet 449, 9 L. Ed. 490.

The word “proviso” is generally taken for a condition, hot it differs from it in several re- spects; for a condition is usually created by the grantor or lessor, but a proviso by the gran- tee or lessee. Jacob.

A proviso differs from an exception. 1 Barn. A Aid. 99. An exception exempts, absolutely, from the operation of an engagement or an en- actment ; a proviso defeats their operation, con- ditionally. An exception takes out of an en- gagement or enactment something which would otherwise be part of the subject-matter of it; a proviso avoids them by way of defeasance or excuse. 8 Am. Jur. 242.

[Axiom: adequate provocation mitigates murder to voluntary manslaughter]

The entry defines provocation but not its great doctrinal consequence: adequate provocation — conduct arousing heat of passion in a reasonable person — reduces an intentional killing from murder to voluntary manslaughter.

Why: Genuine: the heat-of-passion mitigation is the operative legal consequence of the provocation the entry defines; the entry never names it, so the axiom illuminates rather than repeats.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 6:4, KJV]

And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Why: Provocation is conduct tending to arouse rage in another. This verse addresses provocation directly — provoking to wrath — in the family, the law's original school of the concept.

PROXENETA.

Lat In the civil law. A broker ; one who negotiated or arranged the terms of a contract between two parties, as between buyer and seller ; one who negotiat- ed a marriage; a match-maker. Calvin.

PROXIMATE.

Immediate ; nearest ; next In order.

—Proximate eause. The proximate cause is the efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. The causes that are merely incidental or instruments of a superior or controlling agency are not the proxi- mate causes and the responsible ones, though they may be nearer in time to the result It is only when the causes are independent of each other that the nearest is, of course, to be charg- ed with the disaster. [Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R. Co., 248 N.Y. 339 (1928)]

The entry's proximate-cause definition is the doctrine of Palsgraf: liability turns on foreseeability — a duty is owed only to those within the reasonably foreseeable zone of danger, not to the world at large.

Why: Genuine: Palsgraf is the canonical proximate-cause decision, and its foreseeability holding is exactly the 'efficient cause' analysis the entry's definition performs.

Voting by proxy in the corporate setting — the appointment the entry defines — is federally regulated: the proxy solicitation rules govern the disclosures and procedures for obtaining shareholder votes.

Why: Genuine: § 14 is the federal statute regulating the corporate-proxy practice the entry describes; cited in loose form.

PRUDENCE.

Carefulness, precaution, attentiveness, and good Judgment, as applied to action or conduct. That degree of care required by the exigencies or circumstances under which it is to be exercised. Crouk v. Railway Co., 3 S. D. 93, 52 N. W. 420. This term, in the language of the law, is commonly associated with “care” and “diligence” and contrasted with "negligence;” See those ti- tles.

[Axiom: negligence is judged by the reasonably prudent person standard]

The entry defines prudence as the care required by the circumstances, contrasted with negligence; the operative standard it implies is the reasonable-person test: negligence is the failure to exercise the care of a reasonably prudent person under the circumstances.

Why: Genuine but borderline: the entry supplies the definition and the contrast; the axiom states the negligence standard courts build from it. Kept for the standard-naming value.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 22:3, KJV]

A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself: but the simple pass on, and are punished.

PUBLIC.

Pertaining to a state, nation, or whole community; proceeding from, re- lating to, or ahecting the whole body of peo- ple or an entire community. Open to all; notorious. Common to all or many; gen- eral ; open to common use. Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt 786, 14 Am. Rep. 640; Crane v. Wa- ters (C. C.) 10 Fed. 621 ; Austin v. Soule, 36 Vt. 650; Appeal of Eliot, 74 Conn. 586, 51 Atl. 558 ; O’Hara r. Miller, 1 Kulp (Pa.) 295.

A distinction has been made between the terms “public” and “general.” They are some- times used as synonymous. The former term is applied strictly to that which concerns all the citizens and every member of the state; while the latter includes a lesser, though still n large, portion of the community. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 128.

As a noun, the word “public” denotes the whole body politic, or the aggregate of the citizens of a state, district, or municipality. Knight v. Thomas, 93 Me. 494, 45 Atl. 499 ; State v. Luce, 9 Houst. (Del.) 396, 32 Atl. 1076; Wyatt v. Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 Pac. 906.

That branch or department of law which is concerned with the state in its political or sovereign capac- ity, including constitutional and administrative law, and with the definition, regulation, and en- forcement of rights in cases where the state is regarded as the subject of the right or object of the duty,— including criminal law and crim- inal procedure, — and the law of the state, con- sidered in its quasi private personality, ». c., as capable of holding or exercising rights, or ac- quiring and dealing with property, in the char- acter of an individual. See Iloll. Jur. 106, 300. That portion of law which is concerned with political conditions ; that is to say, with the powers, rights, duties, capacities, and incapaci- ties which are peculiar to political superiors, supreme and subordinate. Aust. Jur. “Public law,” in one sense, is a designation given to "in- ternational law,” as distinguished from the laws of a particular nation or state. In another sense, a law or statute that applies to the peo- ple generally of the nation or state adopting or enacting it. is denominated a public law, as con- tradistinguished from a private law, affecting only an individual or a small number of per- sons. Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 773, 14 Am. Rep. 640.— Public offense. A public offense is an act or omission forbidden by law, and punishn- ble as by law provided. Code Ala. 1886, § 3699. Ford v. State. 7 Ind. App. 567, 35 N. E. 34; State v. Cantieny. 34 Minn. 1, 24 N. W. 458. — Public passage. A right, subsisting in the public, to pnss over a body of water, whether the land under it be public or owned by a pri- vate person. — Public place. A place to which the general public has a right to resort; not necessarily a place devoted solely to the uses of the public, but a place which is in point of fact public rather than private, a place visited by many persons and usually accessible to the public. See State v. Welch, 88 Ind. 310; Gom- precht v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 434, 37 S. W. 734; Russell v. Dyer, 40 N. II. 187; Roach v. Eugene, 23 Or. 376, 31 Pac. 825; Taylor v. State, 22 Ala. 15.— Public purpose. In the law of taxation, eminent domain, etc., this is a term of classification to distinguish the objects for which, according to settled usage, the gov- ernment is to provide, from those which, by the like usage, are left to private interest, inclfha-' tion, or liberality. People v. Salem Tp. Board, 20 Mich. 485, 4 Am. Rep. 400. See Black, Const Law (3d Eld.) p. 454, et cq. — Public service. A term applied in modem usage to the objects and enterprises of certain kinds of corporations, which specially serve the needs of the general public or conduce to the comfort and convenience of an entire community, such as railroads, gas, water, and electric light com- panies.— Public, true, and notorious. [Kelo v. City of New London, 545 U.S. 482 (2005)]

The entry's 'public use' sub-entry — the constitutional restriction on taking private property by eminent domain — received its modern reading in Kelo: 'public use' encompasses public purpose, including economic development that benefits the community.

Why: Genuine: Kelo is the decision construing exactly the 'public use' limitation the entry defines; it gives the sub-entry its current operative meaning rather than restating the definition.

PUBLICAN.

In the civil law. A farm- er of the public revenue; one who held a lease of some property from the public treasury. Dig. 39, 4, 1, 1 ; Id. 39, 4, 12, 3 ; Id. 39, 4, 13.

In English law. Persons authorized by license to keep a public house, and retail therein, for consumption on or off the prem- ises where sold, all intoxicating liquors ; also termed “licensed victuallers.” Wharton.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 18:13, KJV]

And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

Why: In the civil law a publican is a farmer of the public revenue — the Gospels' tax-collector. This is Christ's penitent publican, the figure that fixed the word's meaning.

PUBLICANUS.

Lat. In Roman law. A farmer of the customs; a publican. Calvin.

PUBLICATION. 1. The act of publish- ing anything or making it public ; offering it to public notice, or rendering It accessible to public scrutiny.

2. As descriptive of the publishing of laws and ordinances, “publication” means printing or otherwise reproducing copies of them and distributing them in such a manner as to make their contents easily accessible to the public ; it forms no part of the enactment of the law.

“Promulgation,” on the other hand, seems to denote the proclamation or an- nouncement of the edict or statute as a pre- liminary to its acquiring the force and op- eration of law. But the two terms are often used interchangeably. Chicago v. McCoy, 136 111. 344, 26 N. E. 363, 11 L. R. A. 413 ; Sholes v. State, 2 Pin. (Wls.) 499.

Moon, 63 Vt. 481, 22 Atl. 80 ; Sproul v. Plllsbury, 72 Me. 20 ; Gambrill v. Schooley, 93 Md. 48, 48 Atl. 730, 52 L. R. A. 87, 86 Am. St Rep. 414.

5. In the practice of the states adopting the reformed procedure, and in some others, publication of a summons is the process of giving it currency as an advertisement In a newspaper, under the conditions prescribed by law, as a means of giving notice of the suit to a defendant upon whom personal service cannot be made.

6. In equity practice. The making pub- lic the depositions taken in a suit which have previously been kept private in the office of the examiner. Publication is said to pass when the depositions are so made public, or openly shown, and copies of them given out In order to the hearing of the cause. 3 Bl. Comm. 450.

7 . In copyright law. The act of making public a book, writing, chart, map, etc. ; that is, offering or communicating it to the public by the sale or distribution of copies. Keene v. Wheatley, 14 Fed. Cas. 180 ; Jewelers’ Mer- cantile Agency v. Jewelers’ Weekly Pub. Co., 156 N. Y. 241, 49 N. K. 872, 41 L. R. A. 846, 63 Am. St. Rep. <ki(>.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII]

The entry's 'cruel and unusual punishment' definition is the Eighth Amendment's operative phrase: 'nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.'

Why: Genuine: the Amendment is the textual source of the phrase the entry defines at length; quoted verbatim.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 12:19, KJV]

Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord.

Why: Punishment is pain or penalty inflicted by authority of law. This verse reserves vengeance to lawful hands — punishment belongs to authority, not private revenge — the root of public punishment.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Dostoevsky, Crime and Punishment, 1866]

(paraphrase) Raskolnikov's true punishment is not Siberia but the conscience that drives him to confess — the novel's argument that the state's inflicted pain is secondary to inward suffering. [Dostoevsky, Crime and Punishment, 1866] (paraphrase)

Why: Entry: 'pain, penalty, suffering... inflicted upon a person by the authority of the law... for some crime.' The novel of punishment takes that definition as its question and answers it by contrast — the law's pain vs....

PUNITIVE.

Relating to punishment; having the character of punishment or pen- alty ; inflicting punishment or a penalty.

—Punitive damages. See Damages. — Puni- tive power. The power and authority of a state, or organized jural society, to inflict pun- ishments upon the;-; persons who have commit- ted actions inherently evil and injurious to th« public, or actions declared by the laws of that state to be sanctioned with punishments.

[BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 768 (1996)]

Punitive damages — the entry's cross-referenced term — are constitutionally bounded: grossly excessive awards violate due process, judged by reprehensibility, the ratio to compensatory damages, and comparable civil penalties.

Why: Genuine but borderline: the entry is only a cross-ref, but the due-process limit is the term's most important operative law, and the entry gives no other hook. The guideposts summarize the holding without overclaiming.

PUPIL.

In the civil law. One who is in his or her minority. Particularly, one who is in ward or guardianship.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 68:5, KJV]

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation.

Why: A pupil is a minor in ward or guardianship. This verse names God as father of the fatherless — the divine guardian of the unprotected minor, the pattern of tutelage.

PUFILLARI8 8UBSTITUTIO.

Lat

In the civil law. Pupillar substitution ; the substitution of an heir to a pupil or infant under puberty. The substitution by a father of an heir to his children under his power, disposing of his own estate and theirs, in case the child refused to accept the inherit- ance, or died before the age of puberty. PURCHASE.

The word “purchase” is used in law in contradistinction to "descent,” and means any other mode of acquiring real property than by the common course of in- heritance. But it is also much used in its more restricted vernacular sense, (that of buying for a sum of money,) especially in modern law literature; and this is univer- sally its application to the case of chattels. See Stamm v. Bostwick, 122 N. Y. 48, 25

N. E. 233, 9 L. R. A. 597 ; Hall v. Hall, 81

N. Y. 134; Berger v. United States Steel Corp., 63 N. J. Eq. 809, 53 Atl. 08; Falley v. Gribllag, 128 Ind. 110, 26 N. E. 794; Cham- bers v. St Louis, 29 Mo. 574.

—Purchase money. The consideration in money paid or agreed to be paid by the buyer to the seller of property, particularly of land. Purchase money means money stipulated to be paid by a purchaser to his vendor, and does not include money the purchaser may have borrow- ed to complete his purchase. Purchase money, as between vendor and vendee only, is contem- plated ; as between purchaser and lender, the money is “borrowed money.” Heuisler v. Nick- urn, 38 Md. 270. But see Houlehan v. Rassler, 73 Wis. 557, 41 N. W. 720.— Purchase-money mortgage. See Mobtgaoe.— Quasi pur- chase. In the civil law. A purchase of prop- erty not founded on the actual agreement of the parties, but on conduct of the owner which is inconsistent with any other hypothesis than that he intended a sale.— Words of purchase. Words of purchase are words which denote the person who is to take the estate. Thus, if 1 grant land to A. for twenty-one years, and aft- er the determination of thnt term to A.’s heirs, the word “heirs” does not denote the duration of A.’s estate, but the person who is to take the remainder on the expiration of the term, and is therefore called a “word of purchase." Wil- liams, Real Prop. ; Fearne, Rem. 76. ct teg.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Rule in Shelley's Case]

The entry's 'words of purchase' discussion is the ground of the Rule in Shelley's Case: in 'to A for life, remainder to his heirs,' the word 'heirs' operates as a word of limitation, not purchase — A takes the fee.

Why: Genuine but borderline: the Rule is the landmark presupposed by the entry's purchase/limitation distinction; cited without a reporter page to avoid inventing one.

PURCHASER.

One who acquires real property in any other mode than by descent One who acquires either real or personal property by buying it for a price in money; a buyer ; vendee.

In the construction of registry acts, the term “pnrohftser” is usually taken in its technical legal sense. It means a complete purchaser, or, in other words, one clothed with the legal title. PURGATION.

The act of cleansing or exonerating one’s self of a crime, accusation, or suspicion of guilt, by denying the charge on oath or by ordeal.

Canonical purgation was made by the par- ty’s taking his own oath that he was inno- cent of the charge, which was supported by the oath of twelve compurgators, who swore they believed he spoke the truth. To this succeeded the mode of purgation by the sin- gle oath of the party himself, called the “oath ex officio, " of which the modem defendant’s oath in chancery is a modification. 3 Bl. PURGE.

To cleanse; to clear; to dear or exonerate from some charge or Imputation of guilt, or from a contempt —Purged of partial counsel. In Scotch practice. Cleared of having been partially ad- vised. A term applied to the preliminary exam- ination of a witness, in which be is sworn and examined whether he has received any bribe or promise of reward, or has been told what to say, or whether he bears malice or ill will to any of the parties. Bell.— Purging a tort is like the ratification of a wrongful act by a per- son who has power of himself to lawfully do the act. But, unlike ratification, the purging of the tort may take place even after commencement of the action. 1 Brod. & B. 282.— Purging contempt. Atoning for, or clearing one's Belt from, contempt of court, (q . v.) It is generally done by apologising and paying fees, and is gen- erally admitted after a moderate time in pro- portion to the magnitude of the offense.

Why: Entry: 'To steal; to commit larceny or theft.' The story's subject is theft itself (the title names the entry's word), and its mechanism — theft by unconcealment — genuinely illustrates the act. Nearest the word-match...

PURPART.

A share; a part in a di- vision ; that part of an estate, formerly held in common, which is by partition allotted to any one of the parties. The word was an- ciently applied to the shares falling separately to coparceners upon a division or partition of the estate, and was generally spelled “purparty ;" but it Is now used in relation to any kind of partition proceedings. See Selders v. Giles, 141 Pa. 93, 21 AU. 514.

PURPORT.

Henning; import; substan- tial meaning; substance. The “purport” of an instrument means the substance of it as it appears on the face of the instrument, and is distinguished from “tenor,” which means an exact copy. See Dana v. State, 2 Ohio St 93 ; State v. Sherwood, 90 Iowa, 550, 58

[Law: Declaration of Independence (1776); U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 — liberty]

The entry expounds the right 'as used in constitutional law' without naming its sources: the phrase comes from the Declaration of Independence (1776), and its constitutional work — personal freedom, liberty of contract and conscience, family relations — is done by Fourteenth Amendment liberty.

Why: Genuine: the entry discusses the constitutional right at length but cites neither its founding source nor its operative clause; the footnote supplies both.

"I'm on the pursuit of happiness and I know / Everything that shine ain't always gonna be gold." The entry (constitutional law): the right includes personal freedom, exemption from oppression, following one's individual preference. Cudi takes the Declaration's exact legal phrase as title and hook, then documents the pursuit as lived and hollowed — chased through excess, never arriving. QUA8TA.

An Indulgence or remission of penance, sold by the pope.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Acts 8:20, KJV]

But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money.

Why: Quaesta is an indulgence or remission of penance sold. This is the simony condemnation — Peter's rebuke of purchasing God's gift with money — directly on point.

QUASTIO.

In Roman law. Anciently a species of commission granted by the comitia to one or more persons for the pur- pose of Inquiring into some crime or public offense and reporting thereon. In later times, the quwstio came to exercise plenary criminal jurisdiction, even to pronouncing sentence, and then was appointed i>eriodieal- ly, and eventually became a permanent com- mission or regular criminal tribunal, and was then called “quastio perpetua." See Maine, Anc. Law, 3C9-372.

In medieval law. The question ; the tor- ture; inquiry or inquisition by inflicting the torture.

— Cadit quastio. The question falls ; the dis- cussion ends; there Is no room for further ar- gument.— Quwstio vezata. A vexed question or mooted point; a question often agitated or discussed but not determined; a question or point which has been differently decided, and so left doubtful.

QUAKER.

This, In England, Is the stat- utory, as well as the popular, name of a member of a religious society, by themselves denominated “Friends.”

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 15:14, KJV]

Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.

Why: The Quakers' own name for their society is 'Friends.' This verse is the scriptural root of the name — Christ calling His obedient ones friends.

QUALE JUS.

Lat In old English law.

A Judicial writ, which lay where a man of religion had judgment to recover land be- fore execution was made of the judgment It went forth to the escheator between judg- ment and execution, to Inquire what right the religious person had to recover, or wheth- er the judgment were obfained by the collu- sion of the parties, to the Intent that the lord might not be defrauded. Palen, 74 Hun, 289. 26 N. Y. Supp. 225; Hyde v. State, 52 Miss. 665.

Qualification for office is “endowment, or ac- complishment that fits for an office; having the legal requisites, endowed with qualities suita- ble for the purpose.” State v. Seay, 64 Mo. 89, 27 Am. Rep. 206.

Also a modification or limitation of terms or language ; usually Intended by way of re- striction of expressions which, by reason of their generality, would carry a larger mean- ing than was designed.

[Law] — Law

[Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 319]

The entry cites Cummings v. Missouri for the definition; the case's holding is the limit on the definition: post-Civil-War test oaths imposed as 'qualifications' for office were struck down as bills of attainder and ex post facto laws — legislatures may set qualifications, but not attainder by another name.

Why: Genuine: the citation (volume and page) comes from the entry's own body, so nothing is invented; the year is omitted rather than guessed. The holding gives the constitutional boundary of the defined term.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 18:21, KJV]

Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens.

Why: Qualification is the possession of the qualities legally necessary to fill an office. This is the biblical qualification standard for public office: able, God-fearing, truthful, hating covetousness.

QUALIFIED.

Adapted; fitted; entitled; as an elector to vote. Applied to one who has taken the steps to prepare himself for an appointment or office, as by taking oath, giv- ing bond, etc. Pub. St. Mass. p. 1294.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 1]

'During good behavior' — the tenure clause the entry describes in grants of office — is the constitutional tenure of the federal judiciary: judges 'shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour.'

Lat. The name of an action in the civil law, (and In Louisiana,) brought by the purchaser of an article, for a reduction of the agreed price on account of defects In the thing which diminish its value.

QUANTUM DAMNIFIC ATU8 ? How much damnified? The name of an issue di- rected by a court of equity to be tried in a court of law, to ascertain the amount of compensation to be allowed for damage.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 2-714 — damages for breach of warranty]

The civil-law action reducing the agreed price for defects is the ancestor of the buyer's warranty damages: the difference between the value of the goods as warranted and their value as delivered.

Why: Genuine: § 2-714 is the uniform measure for exactly the defect-in-value claim the quanti minoris action brought; the ancient action's modern form.

QUANTUM MERUIT.

As much as he deserved. In pleading.- The common count in an action of assumpsit for work and labor, founded on an implied assumpsit or promise on the part of the defendant to pay the plaintiff as much as he reasonably deserved to have for his labor. 3 Bl. Comm. 161; 1 Tidd, Pr. 2.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 10:7, KJV]

And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house.

Why: 'As much as he deserved' — the action for work and labor on an implied promise to pay what the labor reasonably deserved. 'The labourer is worthy of his hire' is the scriptural root of quantum meruit.

QUANTUM VALEBANT.

As much as they were worth. In pleading. The com- mon count in an action of assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, founded on an Im- plied assumpsit or promise, on the part of the defendant, to pay the plaintiff as much as the goods were reasonably worth. 3 Bl. Comm. 161 ; 1 Tidd, Pr. 2.

QUARANTINE.

A period of time (theo- retically forty days) during which a vessel, coming from a place where a contagious or infectious disease is prevalent, is detained by authority in the harbor of her port of desti- nation, or at a station near it, without being permitted to land or to discharge her crew or passengers. Quarantine Is said to have been first established at Venice in 1484. Baker, Quar. 3.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Ia real property. The space of forty days during which a widow bas a right to remain in her late husband's principal man- sion immediately after his death. The right of the widow is also called her “quarantine.” See Davis v. Lowden. 56 N. J. Eq. 126, 38 Atl. 648 ; Glenn v. Glenn, 41 Ala. 580 ; Spin- ning v. Spinning, 43 X. J. Eq. 215, 10 Atl. 270.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 42 U.S.C. § 264 — federal quarantine authority]

The entry's first sense — detention of vessels from infected ports — is exercised federally as the quarantine authority over communicable disease: regulations for apprehension, detention, and conditional release to prevent interstate spread.

Why: Genuine: § 264 is the federal statute behind the maritime quarantine the entry defines; the widow's-quarantine sense is left alone as historical dower law.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 13:46, KJV]

All the days wherein the plague shall be in him he shall be defiled; he is unclean: he shall dwell alone; without the camp shall his habitation be.

Why: Quarantine is detention by authority where contagious disease is prevalent. This is scripture's quarantine law — the leper's separation without the camp.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Camus, The Plague, 1947]

(paraphrase) Oran sealed by plague — Camus's quarantined city is the entry's detained vessel written large: authority holding men apart from men against contagion. [Camus, The Plague, 1947] (paraphrase)

Why: Entry's core: detention by authority of those coming from where contagion prevails. The novel's whole premise is that mechanism at city scale. Marked (paraphrase).

QUARE.

Lat Wherefore ; for what rea- son; on what account. Used In the Latin -form of several common-law writs.

QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT.

Lat

Wherefore he broke the close. That species of the action of trespass which has for its object the recovery of damages for an un- lawful entry upon another's land is termed “trespass quare clausum fregit;” “breaking a close" being the technical expression for an unla'wful entry upon land. The language of the declaration in this form of action is “that the defendant with force and arms, broke and entered the close” of the plaintiff. The phrase is often abbreviated to “qu. cl. fr.” Brown.

QUARE EJEGIT INFRA TERMINUM.

Wherefore he ejected within the term. In old practice. A writ which lay for a lessee where he was ejected before the expiration of his term, in cases where the wrong-doer or ejector was not himself in possession of the lands, but his feoffee or another claim- ing under him. 3 Bl. QUARE IMPEDIT.

Wherefore he hin- ders. In English practice. A writ or action which lies for' the patron of an advowson, where he has been disturbed in his right of patronage; so called from the emphatic words of the old form, by which the disturb- er was summoned to answer why he hinders the plaintiff. 3 Bl. Comm. 246, 248.

QUARE INCUMBRAVIT.

In English law. A writ which lay againBt a bishop who, within six months after the vacation of a benefice, conferred it on his clerk, while two others were contending at law for the right of presentation, calling upon him to show cause why he had incumbered the church. Reg. Orig. 32. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

QUARE INTRUSIT.

A writ that for- merly lay where the lord proffered a suitable marriage to his ward, who rejected it, and entered into the land, and married another, the value of his marriage not being satisfied to the lord. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

QUARE NON ADMISIT.

In English law. A writ to recover damages against a bishop who does not admit a plaintiff's clerk. It is, however, rarely or never necessary ; for it is said that a bishop, refusing to execute the writ ad admittcndum clericum, or mak- ing an Insufficient return to it, may be fined. Wats. Cler. (paraphrase) Wallace's execution at the film's close — hanged, drawn and quartered for high treason: the entry's punishment staged. [Gibson, Braveheart, 1995] (paraphrase)

Why: Entry: 'The dividing a criminal's body into quarters, after execution. A part of the punishment of high treason.' The film's climactic execution is exactly that punishment dramatized. Marked (paraphrase).

QUARTERING SOLDIERS.

The act of a government in billeting or assigning sol- diers to private houses, without the consent of the owners of such bouses, and requiring such owners to supply them with board or lodging or both.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. III]

The act the entry defines — billeting soldiers in private houses without the owners' consent — is the evil the Third Amendment bars: 'No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner.'

Why: Genuine: the Amendment is the constitutional prohibition of exactly the practice defined; quoted verbatim, a direct match.

QUASI.

Lat. As if; as it were; anal- ogous to. This term is used in legal phraaeology to Indicate that one subject resembles another, with which it is compared, in cer- tain characteristics, but that there are alBO intrinsic differences between them.

It is exclusively a term of classification. Pre- fixed to a term of Roman law, it implies that the conception to which it serves as an index is connected with the conception with which the comparison is instituted by a strong superficial analogy or resemblance. It negatives the notion of identity, but points out that the conceptions ure sufficiently similar for one to be classed as the sequel to the other. Maine, Anc. Law, 332. Civilians use the expressions “quasi contrac- tus." “quasi delictum," “quasi possessio," “quasi traditio," etc.

As to quasi “Affinity,” “Contract," “Cor- poration,” "Crime,” “Delict,” “Deposit,” “Derelict,” “Easement,” “Entail,” “Fee,” “In Rem,” “judicial," “Municipal Corporation," “Offense,” “Partners,” “Personalty,” “Pos- session,” “Posthumous Child,” “Purchase,” “Realty,” “Tenant," ‘Tort,” “Traditio,” “Trustee,” and “Usufruct," see those titles.

A writ by which one is called to justify a complaint of a trespass made to the king himself, before the king and his council. Reg. Orig. 124.

QUERELA INOFFICIOSI TESTA- / MENTI.

Lat. In the civil law. A species of action allowed to a child who had been unjustly disinherited, to set aside the will, founded on the presumption of law, in such cases, that the parent was not In his right mind. Calvin. ; 2 Kent, Comm. 327 ; Bell.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 21:17, KJV]

But he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the firstborn, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath: for he is the beginning of his strength; the right of the firstborn is his.

Why: This is the action of the unjustly disinherited child to set aside the will. The verse protects the entitled heir — 'the right of the firstborn is his' — the principle the action enforces.

QUERENS.

Lat A plaintiff; complain- ant; inquirer.

[Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962)]

The entry's 'Political question' cross-reference is the justiciability doctrine: disputes textually committed to the political branches, or lacking judicially manageable standards, are nonjusticiable — the six-factor test of Baker v. Carr.

Why: Genuine: Baker v. Carr is the decision that systematized the political-question doctrine the entry cross-references; it gives the bare cross-ref its operative content.

QUESTORES PABRICIDH.

Lat. In Roman law. Certain officers, two in number, who were deputed by the eomitia, as a kind of commission, to search out and try all cases of parricide and murder. They were proba-. bly appointed annually. Maine, Anc. Law, 370.

QUIRIT ARLAN OWNERSHIP.

In Ro- man law. Ownership held by a title recog- nized by the municipal law, In an object also recognized by that law, and in the strict character of a Roman citizen. “Roman law originally only recognized one kind of domin- ion, called, emphatically, ‘qulritary domin- ion.’ Gradually, however, certain real rights arose which, though they failed to satisfy all the elements of the definition of qulritary dominion, were practically Its equivalent, and received from the courts a similar protec- tion. These real rights might fall short of qulritary dominion in three respects: (1>

Either in respect of the persons in whom they resided ; (2) or of the subjects to which they related; or (3) of the title by which they were acquired.” In the latter case, the ownership was called “bonltarian,” i. e., "the property of a Roman citizen, In a subject capable of qulritary property, acquired by a title not known to the civil law, but Intro- duced by the pnetor and protected by his imperium or supreme executive power;" e. g ., where res mancipi had been transferred by mere tradition. [Law] — Law

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea]

'The quo animo is the real subject of inquiry' — intention or motive — states the mens rea principle: the act alone does not make one guilty unless the mind is guilty.

Why: Genuine: the maxim is the canonical statement of the intent-inquiry the entry defines; standard form, confidently cited.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Samuel 16:7, KJV]

But the LORD said unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature; because I have refused him: for the LORD seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the LORD looketh on the heart.

Why: 'With what intention or motive' — the inquiry into inward design. This verse states the inward-intention principle behind quo-animo inquiries: the LORD looks on the heart.

QUO JURE.

Lat In old English prac- tice. A writ which lay for one that had land in which another claimed common, to compel the latter to show by what title he claimed It Cowell ; Fltzh. Nat Brev. 128, F.

QUO MINUS.

Lat. A writ upon which all proceedings In the court of exchequer were formerly grounded. In It the plaintiff suggests that he is the king's debtor, and that the defendant has done him the injury or damage complained of, quo minus sufflcienS existit, by which he is less able to pay the king’s debt. This was originally requisite In order to give Jurisdiction to the court of ex- chequer; but now this suggestion Is a mere form. 3 Bl. Comm. 46.

Also, a writ which lay for him who had a grant of house-bote and hay-bote in another's woods, against the grantor making such waste as that the grantee could not enjoy his grant. Old Nat. Brev. 148.

.Quo modo quid oonatitnitwr eodem modo dlssolvitur. Jenk. Cent. 74. In the same manner by which nn.vthing Is consti- tuted by that it Is dissolved.

QUO WARRANTO.

In old English prac- tice. A writ, In the nature of a writ of right for the king, against him who claimed or usurped any office, franchise, or liberty, to inquire by what authority he supported his claim, lu order to determine the right. It lay also in case of uon-user, or long neg- lect of a franchise, or misuser or abuse of it ; being a writ commanding the defendant to show by what warrant he exercises such a franchise, having never had any grant of it, or having forfeited it by neglect or abuse. 3 Bl. Comm. 202.

In England, and quite generally through- out the United States, this writ has given place to an “information in the nature of a quo warranto,” which, though In form a crim- inal proceeding, is in effect a civil remedy similar to the old writ, and is the method now usually employed for trying the title to a corporate or other franchise, or to a public or corporate office. See Ames v. Kan- sas, 111 U. 8. 449, 4 Sup. Ct. 437, 28 L. Ed. 482; People v. Londoner, 13 Colo. 303, 22 Pac. 764, 6 L. R. A. 444; State v. Owens, 63 Tex. 270; State v. Gleason, 12 Fla. 190; State v. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 21:23, KJV]

And when he was come into the temple, the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and said, By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority?

Why: Quo warranto commands the defendant to show by what warrant he exercises a franchise. This is the scriptural quo warranto — 'By what authority doest thou these things?' asked of Christ Himself.

[N.W.A., 'Fuck tha Police', 1988]

"And not the other color so police think / They have the authority to kill a minority." The writ lies against one who usurps an office, franchise, or liberty, commanding him to show by what warrant he exercises it. The lyric names the usurped authority under challenge — police power over Black life — and the track answers the writ's question by putting the police themselves on trial. Hip-hop's quo warranto: by what warrant does the badge kill?

Why: Added because the lyric directly names the authority that quo warranto would call to account, and the song performs the writ's function (summoning usurped power to show its warrant). Verbatim-certain; genuine, not for...

[Law] — Law

[Law: the prize–chance–consideration test distinguishing lotteries]

Courts sort raffles from lotteries by the three-element test — prize, chance, and consideration — which is exactly the classification exercise the entry's cases perform.

557.— Rais- ins > promise. By this phrase is meant the act of the law in extracting from the facts and circumstances of a particular transaction a promise which was implicit therein, and postu- lating it as a ground of legal liability.— Rais- ins a use. Creating, establishing, or calling into existence a use. Thus, if a man conveyed land to another in fee, without any considera- tion, equity would presume that he meant it to be to the use of himself, and would therefore raise an implied use for his benefit. Brown.— Raisins an action, in Scotland, is the institu- tion of an action or suit.— Raisins money. To raise money is to realize money by subscrip- tion, loan, or otherwise. NeW York & It. RAHSOM.

In international law. The redemption of captured property from the hands of an enemy, particularly of property captured at sea. 1 Kent, Comm. 104.

A sum paid or agreed to be paid for the redemption of captured property. 1 Kent. Comm. 105.

A “ransom," strictly speaking, is not a recap- ture of the captured property. It is 'rather a purchase of the right of the captors at the time, be it what it may ; or, more properly, it is a relinquishment of all the interest and benefit which the captors might acquire or consummate In the property, by a regular adjudication of a prize tribunal, whether it be an interest in rem. a lien, or a mere title to expenses. In this re- spect, there seems to be no difference between the case of a ransom of an enemy or a neutral. Maiaonnaire v. Keating, 2 Gall. 325, Fed. Oaa. No. 8.978.

In old English law. A sum of money paid for the pardoning of some great offense. The distinction between ransom and amer- ciament is said to lie that ransom was the re- demption of a coriioral punishment, while amerciament was a fine or penalty directly Imposed, and not in lieu of another punish- ment. Cowell; 4 Bl. Comm. 380; IJ. S. v. Griffin, 6 D. C. 57.

Ransom was also a sum of money paid for the redemption of a person from captivity or imprisonment. Thus one of the feudal “aids” was to ransom the lord's person if taken prisoner. 2 Bl. Comm. 63.

[Mark 10:45, KJV]

For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

Why: Rahsom is the redemption of captured property from an enemy by payment. Same ransom concept as RANSOM: a price paid to redeem what was taken.

Mortimer, held captive by Owen Glendower — the classic literary instance of ransom as a sum paid to redeem a captive from the hands of an enemy. (Printed headword 'RAHSOM' is the OCR of RANSOM.) (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine literary illumination of ransom's core: redemption of a captive from an enemy for a sum paid. Honest caveat: the entry emphasizes captured property (esp. at sea); the play's instance is a captured person. The...

RAPE.

In criminal law. The unlaw- ful carnal knowledge of a woman by a man forcibly and against her will. Code Ga. f 4349; Gore v. State, 119 Ga. 418, 46 S. E. 671, 100 Am. St. Rep. 182; Maxey v. —Rape of the forest. In old English law. Trespass committed in a forest by violence. Cowell.— Rape-reeve. In English law. The chief officer of a rape, (g . v.) 1 Bl. Comm. 116.

[Law] — Law

[Law: common-law rule that penetration, however slight, completes the offense of rape]

At common law the 'carnal knowledge' element was complete upon penetration, however slight — emission was not required.

Why: The entry defines rape as 'unlawful carnal knowledge ... forcibly and against her will'; the penetration rule gives the operative legal meaning of 'carnal knowledge,' the definition's load-bearing phrase. Genuine doct...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 22:25, KJV]

But if a man find a betrothed damsel in the field, and the man force her, and lie with her: then the man only that lay with her shall die

Why: The verse is the Mosaic law of rape itself: forcible carnal knowledge against her will, capital punishment for the man, and the victim exonerated (v.26: 'there is in the damsel no sin worthy of death').

RAPINE.

In criminal law. Plunder ; pillage; robbery. In the civil law, raplna is defined as the forcible and violent taking of another man's movable property with the criminal intent to appropriate it to the rob- ber’s own use. A praetorian action lay for this offense, in which quadruple damages were recoverable. Galus, lib. 3, t 209 ; Inst 4, 2; Mackeld. Rom. Law, { 481; Helnecc. Elem. | 1071.

make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee.

Why: Rapine is violent plunder/pillage. Isaiah's woe against the spoiler pronounces the lex-talionis reversal on plunder itself: the spoiler shall be spoiled.

RAPPORT A SUCCESSION.

In French law and in Louisiana. A proceeding similar to hotchpot; the restoration to the succes- sion of such property as the heir may have received by way of advancement from the decedent, in order that an even division may be made among all the co-heirs. Civ. Code La. art. 1305.

[Law] — Law

[Law: doctrine of advancement / hotchpot in succession]

The common-law analogue is the doctrine of advancement: lifetime gifts to an heir are presumed made in anticipation of their share and must be brought into hotchpot for equal division.

Why: The entry describes the civil-law/Louisiana proceeding for restoring advancements to the succession; the common-law advancement doctrine is the same principle in the parallel system, giving genuine comparative illumin...

RASURE.

The act of scraping, scratch- ing, or shaving the surface of a written in- strument, for the purpose of removing cer- tain letters or words from it It Is to be distinguished from “obliteration,” as the lat- ter word properly denotes the crossing out of a word or letter by drawing a line through it with ink. But the two expressions are often used Interchangeably. See Penny v. Corwithe, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 499.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 3-407 — alteration of negotiable instruments]

An erasure that materially alters a written instrument invokes the alteration doctrine: a material alteration made without the obligor's assent voids or discharges the instrument.

Why: The entry defines rasure as scraping away letters/words from a written instrument and distinguishes it from obliteration; rasure is a species of alteration, and the alteration doctrine states its legal consequence. UC...

[Law] — Law

[Case: McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819)]

What counts as 'ratable' is the legislature's exercise of the taxing power — 'the power to tax involves the power to destroy.'

Why: The entry defines ratable estate as the property 'the legislature designates as taxable'; McCulloch states the nature and magnitude of that designating power. The Marshall dictum is quoted exactly and is the canonical...

RATAM REM HABERE.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Ratihabitio mandato aequiparatur — ratification is equivalent to prior command]

This civil-law 'holding a thing ratified' is the root of the agency rule that subsequent ratification is equivalent to prior authority, relating back to the act.

Why: The entry defines ratam rem habere as 'to ratify or confirm it' (Dig. 46, 8, 12, 1); the ratihabitio maxim states the operative legal effect of ratification in the descended agency doctrine. Direct lineage, genuinely...

RATE.

Proportional or relative value, measure, or degree ; the proportion or stand- ard by which quantity or value is adjusted. Thus, the rate of interest is the proportion or ratio between the principal and interest. So the buildings in a town are rated for in- surance purposes; i. e., classified and indi vidually estimated with reference to their insurable qualities. In this sense also we speak of articles as being in “first-rate” or “second-rate" condition.

Absolute measure, value, or degree. Thus, we speak of the rate at which public lands are sold, of the, rates of fare upon railroads, etc. See Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Maddox, 116 Ga. 64, 42 S. E. 315 ; Chase v. New York Cent. It. Co., 26 N. Y. 526 ; People v. Dolan, 36 N. Y. 67.

The term is also used as the synonym of “tax ;" that is, a sum assessed by govern- mental authority upon persons or property, by proportional valuation, for public pur- poses. It is chiefly employed in this sense in England, but is there usually confined to taxes of a local nature, or those raised by the parish; such as the poor-rate, borough- rate, etc.

It sometimes occurs in a connection which gives it a meaning synonymous with “as sessment;” that is, the apportionment of a tax among the whole number of persons who are responsible for it, by estimating the val- ue of the taxable property of each, and mak- ing a proportional distribution of the whole amount. Thus we speak of “rating” persons and property.

In marine Insurance, the term refers to the classification or scaling of vessels based on their relative state and condition In re- gard to Insurable qualities; thus, a vessel in the beat possible condition and offering the best risk from the underwriter’s stand- point, is “rated” as “A 1.” See Insurance Companies v. Wright, 1 Wall. 472, 17 L. Ed. 505.

[Law] — Law

[Law: the marital support duty as the basis of alimony]

Alimony rests on the common-law duty of marital support — the obligation to maintain a spouse — which is what this 'reasonable estover' secured to the wife.

Why: The entry equates the phrase with 'alimony' in one line; the support duty explains what alimony is for in law, giving the equivalence its legal content rather than leaving it a bare translation.

RATIONAL IB 118 MVI8IS.

to the intent that the living may know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men.

Why: Realm is a kingdom. The verse states the most High's rule over the kingdoms of men — every realm held under a higher sovereignty.

REALTY.

A brief term for real proper- ty ; also for anything which partakes of the nature of real property.

— Quasi realty. Things which are fixed in contemplation of law to realty, but movable in themselves, as heir-looms, (or limbs of the in- heritance,) title-deeds, court rolls, etc. Wharton.

[Isaiah 1:18, KJV]

Come now, and let us reason together, saith the LORD: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.

Why: Reason is the faculty of distinguishing truth from falsehood — the ground of judgment. The verse is God's own invitation to reason, the divine warrant for reasoned judgment.

REASONABLE.

Agreeable to reason; Just; proper. Ordinary or usual. —Reasonable aet. Such os may fairly, just- ly, and reasonably be required of a party.— Rea- sonable and probable oanse. Such grounds as justify any one in suspecting another of a crime, and giving him in custody thereon. It is a defense to an action for false imprisonment. —Reasonable creature. Under the common- law rule that murder is taking the life of a “reasonable creature” under the king’s peace, with malice aforethought, the phrase means a human being, and has no reference to his mental condition, as it includes a lunatic, an idiot, and even an unborn child. See State v. Jones, Walk. (Miss.) 85.— Reasonable part. In old English law. That share of a man’s goods which the law gave to his wife and children aft- er his decease. 2 Bl. Comm. 492.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Samuel 15:23, KJV]

For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry.

Why: Samuel's sentence on Saul's rebellion classes rebellion with the gravest sins — Scripture's own measure of the crime of rising against lawful authority.

[Hip-hop] — Hip-hop

[Public Enemy, 'Fight the Power', 1989]

Quote: "Fight the power!" — Public Enemy's chorus is hip-hop's canonical call to organized resistance against governmental and cultural authority, voicing the headword's 'deliberate, organized resistance to the laws or operations of the government' as a direct command.

Why: Added because the lyric is verbatim-certain and the track is the genre's definitive rebellion anthem; the imperative 'fight' maps directly onto Black's 'resistance… to the laws or operations of the government.' No for…

[Victor Hugo, Les Misérables, 1862]

(paraphrase) Victor Hugo's novel is built around the June Rebellion of 1832 — students and workers building barricades and taking up arms against the French government: deliberate, organized resistance by force and arms to the laws and operations of the government, exactly the entry's definition. (paraphrase)

Why: The novel's climactic barricade sequence dramatizes the entry's definition verbatim in concept; the historical event is named 'the June Rebellion.' Paraphrase only — no quoted lines.

REBELLIOUS ASSEMBLY.

In Eng- lish law. A gathering of twelve persons or more, intending, going about, or practicing unlawfully and of their own authority to Change any laws of the realm ; or to destroy the inclosure of any park or ground inclos- ed, banks of fish-ponds, pools, conduits, etc., to the intent the same shall remain void ; or that they shall have way In any of the said grounds ; or to destroy the deer In any park, fish in ponds, coneys In any warren, dove- houses, etc.; or to burn sacks of corn; or to abate rents or prices of victuals, etc. See Cowell.

[Law] — Law

[Law: common-law unlawful assembly, rout, and riot]

This statutory twelve-person offense belongs to the common-law family of unlawful assembly, rout, and riot — graduated by how far the disturbance proceeds.

Why: The entry defines a statutory form of unlawful assembly; the common-law trio is the general framework it belongs to, showing where the twelve-person statutory threshold sits. Genuine context, not decoration.

this point of affairs ; In these circumstances.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, art. 62 — fundamental change of circumstances]

The clausula rebus sic stantibus is the treaty-law doctrine permitting termination or withdrawal upon a fundamental change of circumstances.

Why: The entry gives only the translation ('in these circumstances'); the clausula's treaty-law function — the fundamental-change doctrine — is its entire legal significance. Genuine illumination of a bare translation.

REBUT.

In pleading and evidence. To rebut Is to defeat or take away the effect of something. Thus, when a plaintiff in an action produces evidence which raises a pre- sumption of the defendant's liability, and the defendant adduces evidence whtch shows that the presumption is ill-founded, he la said to “rebut It” Sweet.

In the old law of real property, to rebut was to repel or bar a claim. Thus, when a person was sued for land which bad been warranted to him by the plaintiff or his an- cestor, and he pleaded the warranty as a defense to the nction. this was called a “re- butter.” Co. Lltt. 365a; Termes de la Ley.

—Rebut as equity. To defeat an apparent equitable right or claim, by the introduction of evidence showing that, in the particular circum- stances, there is no ground for such equity to attach, or that it is overridden by a superior or countervailing equity. See 2 Whart Ev. § 973.

[Law] — Law

[Law: a presumption shifts the burden of production to the opponent]

Rebuttal is the mechanism of the burden of proof: a presumption shifts the burden of going forward with evidence, and rebutting evidence meets it.

The counterpart is the conclusive (irrebuttable) presumption — praesumptio juris et de jure — which no evidence may contradict, as against the rebuttable praesumptio juris tantum.

Why: The entry defines the rebuttable species; the conclusive/rebuttable contrast is the classification the definition belongs to, and the Latin pair is the classical statement of it. Genuine doctrinal completion.

RECALL.

In International law. To summon a diplomatic minister back to his home court, at the same time depriving him of his office and functions.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, art. 9 — persona non grata]

The counterpart is the receiving state's power to declare a diplomat persona non grata and require his recall — the two mechanisms by which a diplomatic mission ends.

Why: The entry defines recall as the sending state's act; persona non grata is the receiving state's correlative power, completing the diplomatic-law picture. Genuine bilateral illumination.

RECALL A JUDGMENT.

To revoke, cancel, vacate, or reverse a judgment for matters of fact; when It Is annulled by rea- son of errors of law, it is said to be “re- versed.”

RECAPTION.

The medieval 'fresh suit' is the ancestor of the modern hot-pursuit doctrine permitting warrantless pursuit of a fleeing suspect across jurisdictional lines.

Why: The entry defines fresh pursuit of a thief 'immediately after the discovery'; hot pursuit is that principle's modern Fourth Amendment form. Genuine historical lineage from the defined term to living doctrine.

RECESS.

In the practice of the courts, a recess is a short interval or period of time during which the court suspends business, but without adjourning. See In re Gannon, 69 Cal. 641, 11 Pac. 240. In legislative prac- tice, a recess is the 'interval, occurring in consequence of an adjournment, between the sessions of the same continuous legislative body; not the interval between the final ad- journment of one body and the convening of another at the next regular session. REGHT.

Ger. Right; justice; equity; the whole body of law ; unwritten law ; law ; also a right

There is much ambiguity in the use of this term, an ambiguity which it shares with the French “droit," the Italian "diritto,” and the English “right” On the one hand, the term “recht" answers to the Roman "jua,” and thus indicates law in the abstract, consid- ered ns the foundation of all rights, or the complex of underlying moral principles which impart the character of justice to all positive law, or give it an ethical content. Taken in this abstract sense, the term may be an adjective. In which case it is equiva- lent to the English “just,” or a noun, in which case it may be paraphrased by the expressions “justice.” “morality,” or “equi- ty." On the other hand, it serves to point out a right : that Is. a power, privilege, facul- ty. or demand. Inherent in one person, and Incident upon another. In the latter signification "recht” (or "droit," or "diritto," or “right") is the correlative of “duty” or “ob- ligation.” In the former sense, it may be considered as opposed to wrong, injustice, or the absence of law. The word “recht" has the further ambiguity that it is used in con- tradistinction to “geaetz,” as "jua” is opposed to “lea," or the unwritten law to enacted law. See Dboxt; Jus; Right.

[Law] — Law

[Law: the Roman jus vs. lex distinction]

The entry's ambiguity — Recht as both 'right' and 'law' — mirrors the Roman distinction between jus (law as right and justice) and lex (enacted statute).

Why: The entry says Recht 'answers to the Roman jus' and notes the shared ambiguity with droit/diritto/right; the jus/lex distinction is the classical frame for exactly that ambiguity. Modest but genuine jurisprudential il...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Micah 6:8, KJV]

He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

[Law] — Law

[Law: estoppel by deed]

Recitals are not mere preamble: parties may be estopped by deed from denying facts recited in their own instrument.

Why: The entry defines recitals as formal statements of fact explaining the transaction; estoppel by deed states their legal effect — the recited facts bind the parties. Genuine consequence, not restatement.

[Proverbs 6:1, KJV]

My son, if thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger

Why: The recognizor is he who enters into a recognizance — who binds himself of record for another's performance, i.e. stands surety. Proverbs 6:1 is Scripture's standing warning on suretyship, the genus of the recognizance.

RECOLEMENT.

In French law. This is the process by which a witness, who has

This is necessary to the validity of the deposition. See Poth. Proc. Crim. § 4, art 4.

RECOMMENDATION.

In feudal law. A method of converting allodial land into feudal property. The owner of the allod surrendered it to the king or a lord, doing homage, and received it back as a benefice or feud, to hold to himself and such of his heirs as he had previously nominated to the superior.

The act of one person in giving to another a favorable account of the character, re- sponsibility, or skill of a third.

— Letter of recommendation. A writing whereby one person certifies concerning another that he is of good character, solvent, possessed of commercial credit, skilled in his trade or pro- fession, or otherwise worthy of trust, aid, or employment It may be addressed to an individ- ual or to whom it may concern, and is designed to aid the person commended in obtaining cred- it employment, etc. See McDonald v. Illinois Cent. R. Go., 187 111. 629, 68 N. E. 463 ; Lord v. Goddard, IS How. 198, 14 L. Ed. 111.

RECOMMENDATORY.

Precatory, ad- visory, or directory. Recommendatory words In a will are such as do not express the tes- tator's command in a peremptory form, but advise, counsel, or suggest that a certain course be pursued or disposition made.

[Law] — Law

[Law: precatory words and the precatory-trust doctrine]

Precatory words ('wish,' 'desire,' 'recommend') raise the precatory-trust question: whether the testator meant to impose a binding trust or merely express a hope — modern law requires clear intent.

Why: The entry defines recommendatory/precatory language in wills; the precatory-trust doctrine is the construction question such language always raises. Directly illuminates the definition's legal stakes.

RECOMPENSATION.

In Scotland, where a party sues for a debt and the de- fendant pleads compensation, t e., set-off, the plaintiff may allege a compensation on his part; and this is called a "recompensa- tion." BelL

RECOMPENSE.

A reward for services; remuneration for goods or other property.

RECONCILIATION.

The renewal of amicable relations between two persons who had beoa at enmity or variance; usually im- plying forgiveness of injuries on one or both sides. It is sometimes used in the law of divorce as a term synonymous or analogous to “condonation.”

[Law] — Law

[Law: condonation as a bar in divorce]

As condonation, reconciliation bars the forgiven marital offense as a ground of divorce — forgiveness pleaded as a defense.

Why: The entry says reconciliation is used in divorce law as synonymous with 'condonation'; condonation-as-bar states the doctrine's legal effect. Genuine: gives the operative consequence of the defined term.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 5:18, KJV]

And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation.

Why: Reconciliation is the renewal of amicable relations after enmity, implying forgiveness. The verse names both the act (God reconciling) and the office (the ministry of reconciliation).

[William Shakespeare, The Winter's Tale, c.1611]

(paraphrase) Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale is structured around the entry's concept: after sixteen years of enmity, Leontes is reconciled with Hermione and Perdita — the renewal of amicable relations implying forgiveness of injuries, dramatized in the final statue scene. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines reconciliation as renewal of amicable relations after enmity, usually implying forgiveness; the play's final act is the canonical dramatic working-out of exactly that. Paraphrase.

RECONDUCTION.

In the civil law. A resewing of a former lease; relocation. Dig. 19, 2, 13, 11; Code Nap. arts. 1737-1740.

[Law] — Law

[Law: holdover tenancy]

The common-law analogue is the holdover tenancy: remaining in possession with the landlord's assent renews the tenancy as a periodic one.

Why: The entry defines reconduction as renewal of a lease; the holdover-tenancy rule is the same principle in the common-law system — continued possession as implied renewal. Genuine comparative illumination.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The name com- monly given to the process of reorganising, by acts of congress and executive action, the governments of the states which had passed ordinances of secession, and of re-establish- ing their constitutional relations to the national government, restoring their represen- tation in congress, and effecting the necessary changes in their Internal government, after the close of the civil war. See Black,' Const. Law (3d Ed.) 48; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700, 19 L. Ed. 227.

RECONTINUANCE seems to be used to signify that a person has recovered an in- corporeal hereditament of which he had been wrongfully deprived. Thus, “A. is dis- seised of a mannor, whereunto an advowson is appendant, an estranger [i. is., neither A. nor the disseisor] usurpes to the advowson ; If the disseisee [A.] enter into the mannor, the advowson is recontinued again, which was severed by the usurpation. • • • And so note a

(paraphrase) Mitchell's Gone with the Wind is set squarely in the Reconstruction era and dramatizes its political machinery — military rule, carpetbaggers, the reorganization of the seceded states' governments — the process the entry defines. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry names the post-Civil-War reorganization of the seceded states; the novel is the best-known fictional treatment of that exact historical process. Paraphrase.

RECONVENTION.

In the civil law. An action by a defendant against a plaintiff in a former action ; a cross-bill or litigation.

The term Is used in practice in the states of Louisiana and Texas, derived from the re-conventio of the civil law. Reconvention is not Identical with set-off, but more extensive. See Pacific Exp. Co. v. Malta, 132 D. S. 531, 10 Sup. Ct 166, 33 L. Ed. 460; SubervUle v. Adams, 47 La. Ann. 68, 16 South. 652; Glm- bel v. Gomprecht, 89 Tex. 497, 35 S. W. 470.

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a) — compulsory counterclaims]

The modern descendant is the compulsory counterclaim: claims arising from the same transaction must be pleaded in the same action.

Why: The entry defines reconvention as the defendant's cross-action, 'more extensive' than set-off; the compulsory counterclaim is its modern procedural form. Genuine lineage from civil-law root to current practice.

RECORD, «. a written account of some act transaction, or Instrument drawn up, under authority of law, by a proper officer, and designed to remain as a memorial or per* manent evidence of the matters to which It relates.

There are three kinds of records, viz.: (1) judicial, as an attainder; (2) ministerial, on oath, being an office or Inquisition found; (8) by way of conveyance, as a deed enrolled. Wharton.

In practice. A written memorial of all the acts and proceedings in an action or suit In a court of record. The record is the offi- cial and authentic history of the cause, con- sisting In entries of each- successive step In the proceedings, chronicling the various acts of the parties and of the court couched In the formal language established by usage, terminating with the judgment rendered In the cause, and intended to remain as a per- petual and unimpeachable memorial of the proceedings and Judgment

At common law, “record” signifies a roll of parchment upon which the proceedings ana transactions of a court are entered or drawn up by its officers, and which Is then deposited in its treasury in perpetuom rei memoriam. 3 Steph. Comm. 583 ; 3 'Bl. Comm. 24. A court of record Is that where the acts and ju- dicial proceedings are enrolled in parchment for a perpetual memorial and testimony, which rolls are called the “records of the court,” and are of such high and supereminent authority that their truth is not to be called in question. Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 422, 94 Am. Dec. 742. And see O’Connell v. Hotchkiss, 44 Conn. 53; Murrab v. State, 51 Miss. 656; Bellas v. Mc- Carty, 10 Watts (Pa.) 24 ; U. S. v. Taylor, 147

In the practice of appellate tribunals, the word “record” is generally understood to mean the history of the proceedings on the trial of the action below, (with the pleadings, offers, objections to evidence, rulings of the court, exceptions, charge, etc.,) In so far as the same appears In the record furnished to the appellate court in the paper-books or oth- er transcripts. Hence, derivatively, it means the aggregate of the various judicial steps taken on the trial below, in so far as they were taken, presented, or allowed In the form- al and proper manner necessary to put them upon the record of the court. This is the meaning In such phrases as “no error In the record," "contents of the record,” “out- side the record,” etc.

—Conveyance* by record. Extraordinary assurances; such as private acts of parliament and royal grants.— Courts of record. [Law] — Law

[Law: race, notice, and race-notice recording statutes]

Recording acts divide into race, notice, and race-notice statutes — differing on whether priority turns on recording first, bona fide purchase without notice, or both.

Why: The entry defines recording acts by their notice function; the race/notice/race-notice classification is the core doctrine determining how that function allocates priority between competing claimants. The essential pr…

RECOUPMENT.

In practice. Defalca- tion or discount from a demand. A keeping back something which is due, because there is an equitable reason to withhold It. Tom- lins.

Recoupment is a right of the defendant to have a deduction from the amount of the plaintiff's damages, for the reason that the plaintiff has not complied with the cross-obli- gations or independent covenants arising un- der the same contract. Code Ga. 1882, g 2909.

It is keeping back something which is due because there 1b an equitable reason to withhold it ; and is now uniformly applied where a man brings an action for breach of a contract be- tween him and the defendant ; and where the latter can show that some stipulation in the same contract was made by the plaintiff, which he has violated, the defendant may, if he choose, instead of suing in his turn, recoupe his dam- ages arising from the breach committed by the plaintiff, whether they be liquidated or not. Ives v. Van Eppes, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 156. And see Barber v. Chapin, 28 Vt. 413; Law- ton v. Ricketts, 104 Ala. 430, 16 South. 59 ; Aultman v. Torrey, 05 Minn. 492, 07 N. W. 211 ; Dietrich v. Ely, 63 Fed. 413. 11 C. C. A. 266 ; The Wellsville v. Geissie. 3 Ohio St. 341 ; Nichols v. Dusenbury, 2 N. Y. 286; Myers v. Estell, 47 Miss. 23.

In speaking of matters to be shown in de- fense, the term “recoupment” is ‘often used as synonymous with “reduction.” The term is of French origin, and signifies cutting again, or cutting back, and, as a defense, means the cut- ting back on the plaintiff's claim by the de- fendant. Like reduction, it is of necessity lim- ited to the amount of the plaintiff’s claim. It is properly applicable to a case where the same contract imposes mutual duties and obligations on the two parties, and one seeks a remedy for the breach of duty by the second, and the sec- ond meets the demand by a claim for the breach of duty by the first. Davenport v. Hub- bard, 46 Vt. 207, 14 Am. Rep. 620.

“Recoupment” differs from “set-off” in this respect; that any claim or demaud the de- fendant may have ugulnst the plaintiff may be used as a set-off, while It Is not a subject for recoupment unless It grows out of the very same transaction which furnishes the plaintiff’s cause of action. The term is, as appears above, synonymous with "reduction but the latter is not a technical term of the law ; the word "defalcation,” in one of its meanings, expresses the same idea, and Is used Interchangeably with recoupment. Re- coupment, as a remedy, corresponds to the reconvention of the civil law.

[Law] — Law

[Law: recoupment vs. set-off — the same-transaction requirement]

Recoupment is confined to cross-demands arising from the same transaction — which distinguishes it from set-off and lets it survive as a defense where set-off would need an independent action.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 3-415 — obligation of indorser; qualified indorsement]

An indorsement 'without recourse' disclaims the indorser's contract liability on the instrument while still transferring title.

Why: The entry defines the 'without recourse' qualified indorsement; UCC 3-415 states its legal effect — disclaimer of indorser liability with transfer intact. Directly illuminates the defined form's consequence.

RECOVERY.

In its most extensive sense, a recovery is the restoration or vindication of a right existing in a person, by the formal judgment or decree of a competent court, at his Instance and suit, or the obtaining, by such judgment, of some right or property which has been tuken or withheld from him. This is also called a "true” recovery, to diatinguish it from a “feigned” or “common” recovery. See Common Recoveby.

[Law] — Law

[Law: res judicata / claim preclusion]

A 'final recovery' — final judgment — triggers res judicata, barring relitigation of the same claim between the same parties.

Why: The entry defines 'final recovery' as the final judgment in an action; res judicata states what a final judgment does — it concludes the controversy. Genuine: the definition's legal consequence.

Why: The entry is unintelligible without trial by battle; Ivanhoe is the English novel's definitive dramatization of it. Borderline but genuine — the reasoning rides with the annotation.

A rector (or parson) has, for the most part, the whole right to all the ecclesiastical dues in his parish ; while a vicar has an appropri- ate over him, entitled to the best part of the profits, to whom the vicar is, in effect per- petual curate, with a standing salary. 1 Bl. Comm. 384, 388. See Bird v. St Mark’s Church, 62 Iowa, 567, 17 N. W. 747.

RECTOR PROVINCE®. Lat. In Ro- man law. The governor of a province. Cod. 1, 40.

RECTOR SINECURE.

A rector of a parish who has not the cure of souls. 2 Steph. Cqmrn. 683.

RECTORIAL TITHES.

Great or pre- dial tithes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Malachi 3:10, KJV]

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house

Why: Rectorial (great or predial) tithes are the tithes due to the rector. The verse is the tithe command itself, spoken by the LORD of hosts — the scriptural root of all tithe law.

RECTORY.

An entire pariah church, with all Its rights, glebes, tithes, and other profits whatsoever ; otherwise commonly call- el a “benefice." See Gibson v. Brockway, 8 N..H. 470, 81 Am. Dec. 200; Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Oranch, 826, 3 L. Ed. 735.

A rector's manse, or parsonage house. Spelman.

RECTUM.

Lat. Right; also a trial or accusation. Bract ; Cowell.

i4tMtaa esse. To be right in court. — Rec- tum rogue. To ask for right; to petition, the judge to do right. — Rectum, stare ad. To stand trial or abide by the sentence of the court

RECTUS IN CURIA.

Lat. Right In court The condition of one who stands at the bar, against whom no one objects any offense. When a person outlawed has revers- ed his outlawry, so that he can have the benefit of the law, he Is said to be “rectus in curia." Jacob.

REOUPERATIO.

Lat In old English law. Recovery; restitution by the sentence qf a Judge of a thing that has been wrong- fully taken or detained. Co. Litt 154a.

Recuperstlo, 1. e., ad rem, per Injurl- am eztortam sive detentam, per senten- tlam judleia restitutio. Co. Litt. 154a. Recovery, i. «., restitution by sentence of a judge of a thing wrongfully extorted or de- tained.

Reeupe ratio eat alicnjus rei in can- sun, aiterius addnctse per judleem ao- qnisitio. Co, Litt. 154a. Recovery Is the acquisition by sentence of a judge of any- thing brought into the cause of another.

RECUPERATORES.

In Roman law. A species of judges first appointed to decide controversies between Roman citizens and strangers concerning rights requiring speedy Remedy, but whose jurisdiction was gradual, ly extended to questions which might be brought before ordinary Judges. Mackeld. Rom. Law, | 204.

Reourrendum est ad ojctraordiuarium qnando. non valet ordinarium. We must have recourse to what is extraordinary, when what Is ordinary falls.

RECUSANTS.

In English law. Persons who willfully absent themselves from their parish church, and on whom penalties were imposed by various statutes passed during the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. Whar- ton.

Those persons who separate from the church established by law. Termes de la : Ley . The term was practically restricted to Roman Catholics.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — religion clauses]

Recusancy penalties are the old-world practice the First Amendment's religion clauses repudiate: 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.'

Why: The entry describes penal statutes for absenting from the established church; the First Amendment is the American legal answer to exactly that regime — establishment forbidden, free exercise protected. Genuine contras...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Daniel 3:18, KJV]

But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

[Law] — Law

[Law: modern presumption of witness competency]

The civil-law rejection for incompetency parallels the old common-law disqualifications (interest, infamy); modern law presumes every person competent, leaving credibility to the trier of fact.

Why: The entry defines rejection of a witness for incompetency; the historical arc — from categorical disqualification to presumptive competency — is the evidence-law context that gives the definition its modern meaning. G...

RECUSATION.

In the clvU law. A species of exception or plea to the jurisdic- tion, to the effect that the particular judge Is disqualified from hearing the cause by reason of interest or prejudice. Poth. Proc. Civile, pt 1, c. 2, | 5.

The challenge of jurors. Code Prac. La. arts. 499, 500. An act, of what nature so- ever It may be, by which a strange heir, by deeds or words, declares he will not be heir. Dig. 29, 2, 95.

[Maxim: Nemo judex in causa sua] [Law: 28 U.S.C. § 455 — disqualification of federal judges]

The principle is nemo judex in causa sua — no one should be judge in his own cause — codified for federal judges in the disqualification statute.

Why: The entry defines recusation as the plea that a judge is disqualified by interest or prejudice; the maxim states the principle and § 455 its federal codification. Directly illuminates the defined plea's foundation.

RED-HANDED.

With the marks of crime fresh on him.

[Law] — Law

[Law: in flagrante delicto; warrantless arrest for offenses committed in presence]

'Red-handed' is the English of in flagrante delicto — taken in the act — the classic case for warrantless arrest, as at common law for a felony committed in the officer's presence.

Why: The entry gives the vivid English phrase; the Latin term and the in-presence arrest rule state its legal significance — freshness of guilt justifying summary apprehension. Genuine criminal-procedure content.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 8:4, KJV]

Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act.

Why: Red-handed means with the marks of crime fresh on him. The verse is the classic case: taken 'in the very act' — the scriptural phrase for the same fact.

RED TAPE.

In a derivative sense, or- der carried to fastidious excess; system ran out Into trivial extremes. Webster v. Thomp- son, 55 Ga. 434.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Terry Gilliam, Brazil, 1985]

(paraphrase) Terry Gilliam's film is the entry dramatized: one man's life is crushed by bureaucratic procedure carried to fastidious excess — the dictionary definition ('order carried to fastidious excess; system run out into trivial extremes') is practically the film's logline. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry's concept is bureaucratic excess as a system; the film's entire plot is that concept. Genuine film moment illuminating the legal-term usage. Paraphrase.

REDDENDO SINGULA SINGULIS.

Lat By referring each to each; referring each phrase or expression to its appropriate object. A rule of construction.

[Law] — Law

[Law: canons of construction — reddendo singula singulis; noscitur a sociis; ejusdem generis]

One of the textual canons of construction, alongside noscitur a sociis and ejusdem generis — each phrase referred to its appropriate object.

Why: The entry defines the rule as 'a rule of construction'; situating it among the textual canons shows the family it belongs to. The entry's own characterization invites exactly this framing.

REDDENDUM.

Lat In conveyancing. Rendering; yielding. The technical name of that clause in a conveyance by which the grantor creates or reserves some new thing to himself, out of what he had before grant- ed; as " rendering therefor yearly the sum of ten shillings, or a pepper-corn," etc. That clause in a lease In which a rent Is re- served to the lessor, and which commences with the word "yielding." 2 Bl. [Law] — Law

[Law: common-law rule that a reservation must be to the grantor, not a stranger]

At common law a reddendum operates only by way of reservation to the grantor — a 'reservation' in favor of a stranger to the deed is void.

Why: The entry defines the reddendum as the clause by which the grantor 'creates or reserves some new thing to himself'; the stranger rule states the clause's doctrinal limit — it cannot grant to one not party to the deed....

REDDENS CAUSAM SCIENTUE.

Lat

Giving the reason of his knowledge.

In Scotch practice. A formal phrase used In depositions, preceding the statement of the reason of the witness' knowledge. 2 How. State Tr. 715.

Reddere, nil aUnd est qaam aaceptaa restltnere; sen, reddere est quasi retro dare, et reddltnr dieitor a rede unde, quia retro It. Co. Litt. 142. REDEEMABLE. 1. Subject to an obli- gation of redemption ; embodying, or condi- tioned upon, a promise or obligation of re- demption; convertible into coin; as, a “re deemable currency." See D. S. v. North Carolina, 136 U. S. 211, 10 Sup. Ct 920, 84 L, Ed. 336.

2. Subject to redemption; admitting of redemption or repurchase; given or held un- der conditions admitting of reacquisition by purchase; as, a “redeemable pledge.”

—Redeemable rights. Rights which return to the conveyor or disposer of land, etc., upon payment of the sum for which such rights are granted. Jacob.

[Law] — Law

[Law: statutory tax-sale redemption periods]

For tax sales, redemption is statutory: the owner may reclaim the land within the redemption period by paying the arrears, interest, and costs.

Why: The entry expressly includes redeeming 'one's land from a tax-sale'; the statutory redemption period is the legal machinery behind that usage. Kept distinct from REDEMPTION, which carries the equity of redemption proper.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 25:25, KJV]

If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold away some of his possession, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold.

Why: Redeem is to buy back — to liberate land from sale by paying the price. The kinsman-redeemer law is Scripture's own buy-back rule, the root of the legal right of redemption.

REDEUVERY.

A yielding and deliver- ing back of a thing.

—Redeliver* bond. A bond given to a sheriff or other officer, who has attached or levied on personal property, to obtain the re- lease and repossession of the property, condi- tioned to redeliver the property to the officer or pay him its value in case the levy or attach- ment is adjudged good. See Drake v. Sworts, 24 Or. 198, 33 Pac. 663.

REDEMISE.

A regranting of land de- mised or leased.

REDEMPTIO OPERIS.

Lat In Ro- man law, a contract for the hiring or letting of services, or for the performance of a certain work in consideration of the pay- ment of a stipulated price. It is the same contract as “ locatio operis,” but regarded from the standpoint of the one who is to do the work, and who is called “redemptor operis ,” while the hirer is called “locator operis." See Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 408.

REDEMPTION.

A repurchase; a buy- ing back. The act of a vendor of property In buying it back again from the purchaser at the same or an enhanced price.

The right of redemption is an agreement or paction, by which the vendor reserves to him self the power of taking back the thing sold by returning the price paid for it Civil Code. La.

[Law: equity of redemption; the 'no clog on the equity' rule]

The flagship is the mortgagor's equity of redemption — the right, even after default, to reclaim the estate by paying the debt, which no 'clog or fetter' in the mortgage may defeat.

Why: The entry's core is 'cancelling and annulling a defeasible title to land, such as is created by a [mortgage]'; the equity of redemption is the doctrinal name for exactly that right, and the no-clog rule its defining p...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 25:24, KJV]

And in all the land of your possession ye shall grant a redemption for the land.

Why: Redemption is repurchase, buying back. The verse commands a standing redemption right in all the land of their possession — redemption as a legal institution, not a metaphor.

REDEMPTIONES.

In old English law. Heavy fines. Distinguished from misericord Mo, (which see.)

must be supposed that the buyer would not have pur: chased it had he known of the vice. Civ; Code La. art 2520.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC §§ 2-314, 2-315 — implied warranties of merchantability and fitness]

The common-law analogue is implied warranty: goods must be merchantable and, where the seller knows the buyer's purpose, fit for that purpose.

Why: The entry defines the civil-law avoidance of sale for hidden vice (La. Civ. Code art. 2520); the UCC implied warranties are the same protective idea in the common-law sales system. Genuine comparative illumination.

REDHIBITORY ACTION.

In the civil law. An action for redhibition. An action to avoid a sale on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold, which renders its use impossible, or so inconvenient and im- perfect that it must be supposed the buyer would not have purchased it had be known of the vice. Civ. Code La. art. 2520.

REDHIBITORY DEFECT (or VICE.)

In the civil law. A defect in an article sold, for which the seller may be compelled to take It back; a defect against which the seller is bound to warrant. Poth. Cont. Sale, no. 203.

REDISSEISIN.

In old English law. A second disseisin of a person of the same ten- ements, and by the same disseisor, by whom he was before disseised. 3 Bl. Comm. 188.

[Law] — Law

[Law: rent-service, rent-charge, rent-seck]

The common-law rents — rent-service, rent-charge, and rent-seck — are distinguished by the remedies annexed to each, chiefly the lord's right of distress.

Why: The entry catalogs rent species (white rent, black rent, quit rents, rent seek); the threefold classification with its remedial distinction is the doctrinal framework organizing the catalog. Genuine property-law content.

REDOB ATORES.

In old English law. Those that buy stolen cloth and turn it into some other color or fashion that it may not be recognized. Redubbers.

REDRAFT1.

In commercial law. A draft or bill drawn in the place where the orig- inal bill was made payable and where It went to protest, on the place where such original bill was drawn, or, when there is no regular commercial intercourse render- ing that practicable, then in the next best or most direct practicable course. 1 Bell, Comm. 406.

[Law] — Law

[Law: protest for dishonor; holder's recourse on bills of exchange]

On dishonor by non-acceptance or non-payment, the holder's protest founds recourse against drawer and indorsers — the redraft being the re-exchange mechanism.

Why: The entry defines the redraft drawn where the original bill 'went to protest'; protest-and-recourse is the bills-and-notes machinery that gives the redraft its function. Genuine commercial-law context.

REDRESS.

The receiving satisfaction for an injury sustained.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — 'redress of grievances']

The Constitution secures 'the right of the people ... to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.'

Bell.— Rednotion improhatlon. In Scotch law. One form of the action of reduc- tion in which falsehood and forgery are alleged against the deed or document sought to be set aside.

[Law] — Law

[Law: civil-law forced heirship — réserve héréditaire / portion disponible]

The French reduction enforces the forced-heirship system: the réserve héréditaire limits the disposable portion, and excessive gifts are reduced to protect it.

Why: The entry's French sense defines reduction of gifts exceeding the portion disponible; forced heirship is the succession system that rule serves. Genuine: states the why behind the defined procedure.

REDUCTION INTO POSSESSION.

The act of exercising the right conferred by a chose in action, so as to convert it into a chose in possession; thus, a debt is reduced into possession by payment Sweet.

[Law] — Law

[Law: common-law doctrine of reduction into possession by the husband]

The classic application was the husband's reduction of his wife's choses in action — by receipt or judgment — making them his own at common law.

REDUNDANCY.

This is the fault of introducing superfluous matter into a legal instrument; particularly the insertion in a pleading of matters foreign, extraneous, and Irrelevant to tljat which it is intended to answer. See Carpenter v. Reynolds, 58 Wis. 666, 17 N. W. 300; Carpenter v. West, 5 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 55; Bowman v. Sheldon, 6 Sandf. (N. Y.) 660.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) — motion to strike redundant matter]

Modern pleading retains the remedy: redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter may be struck on motion.

Why: The entry defines redundancy as superfluous matter in pleadings and cites striking cases; Rule 12(f) is the modern codification of that remedy. Direct lineage from the defined fault to current practice.

RE-ENTRY.

The entering again into or resuming possession of premises. Thus in leases there is a proviso for re-entry of the lessor on the tenant’s failure to pay the rent or perform the covenants contained in the leaser and by virtue of such proviso the lessor may take the premises into his own hands again if the rent be not paid or cove nants performed; and this resumption of possession is termed “reentry.” 2 Cruise, Dig. 8 ; Cowell. [Law: equitable relief against forfeiture]

A re-entry proviso works a forfeiture; equity relieves against forfeiture for breach — especially non-payment of rent — where compensation can be made.

Why: The entry defines the lessor's resumption on the tenant's default; equitable relief against forfeiture is the chancery limit on that power — the doctrine that most often decides re-entry cases. Genuine operative limit.

RE-EXAMINATION.

[Law] — Law

[Law: scope of redirect examination limited to matters raised on cross]

Re-examination (redirect) is confined to matters raised on cross-examination — the scope rule governing the order of proof.

Why: The entry defines re-examination as upon 'matters arising out of such cross-examination'; the scope rule states the evidentiary limit that definition implies. Genuine trial-practice content.

RE -EXCHANGE.

The damages or ex- penses caused by the dishonor and protest of a bill of exchange in a foreign couutry, where it was payable, and by its return to the place where it was drawn or indorsed, and its being there taken up. Bangor Bank

REFER. 1. When a case or action in- volves matters of account or other intricate details which require minute examination, and for that reason are not fit to be brought before a Jury, it is usual to refer the whole case, or some part of it, to the decision of an auditor or referee, and the case is then said to be referred.

Taking this word In its strict, technical use. It relates to a mode of determining qnestions which is distinguished from “arbitration,” In that the latter word imports submission of a controversy without any lawsuit having been brought, while "reference” imports a lawsuit pending, and an issue framed or question raised which (and not the controversy itself) is sent out. Thus, arbitration, is resorted to instead of any judicial proceeding; while reference is one mode of decision employed in the course of a judicial proceeding. And “reference” is dis- tinguished from “hearing or trial,” in that these are the ordinary modes of deciding issues and questions in and by the courts with aid of juries when proper; while reference is an employment of non-judicial persons — individuals not integral parts of the court— for the deci- sion of particular matters inconvenient to be heard in actual court. Abbott.

2. To point, allude, direct, or make refer- ence to. This is the use of the word in con- veyancing and in literature, where a word or sign introduced for the purpose of direct- ing the reader's attention to another place in the deed, book, document, etc., is said to “refer” him to such other connection.

REFEREE.

In practice. A person to whom a cause pending in a court is referred by the court, to take testimony, hear the par- ties, and report thereon to the court See Refer. And see In re Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 243 ; Betts v. Letcher, 1 S. D. 182, 46 N. W. 193; Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, etc., R Co. (C. 0.) 32 Fed. 685.

—Referee in bankruptcy. An officer ap- pointed by the courts of bankruptcy under the act of 1898 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3418) cor- responding to the “registers in bankruptcy” un-' der earlier statutes having administrative and quasi-judicial functions under the bankruptcy law, and who assists the court in such cases and relieves the judge of attention to matters of detail or routine, by taking charge of all administrative matters and the preparation, or preliminary consideration of questions requir- ing judicial decision, subject at all times to the supervision and review of the court.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 53 — masters]

The modern federal analogue is the special master: a court-appointed officer to hear evidence and report to the court.

Why: The entry defines the referee as one to whom a pending cause is referred 'to take testimony, hear the parties, and report thereon'; the Rule 53 master is that office's current federal form. Genuine lineage.

REFERENCE.

In contracts. An agreement to submit to arbitration; the act of parties in submitting their controversy to chosen referees or arbitrators.

REFERENDART.

In Saxon law. A master of requests; an officer to whom peti- tions to the king were referred. Spelman.

REFERENDO SINOUXA SINGULIS.

Lat Referring individual or separate words to separate subjects; making a distributive reference of words in an instrument ; a rule of construction.

[Law] — Law

[Law: canons of construction — distributive reference]

The distributive-reference canon: where words in an instrument relate to several subjects, each is referred to its appropriate subject — kin to reddendo singula singulis.

Why: The entry defines the rule as 'a rule of construction'; the note states its operation distinctly from the reddendo singula singulis note at entry 171 (each-to-each vs. distributive). Honest companion, not padding.

REFERENDUM.

In international law. A communication sent by a diplomatic rep- resentative to his home government, in re- gard to matters presented to him which he is unable or unwilling to decide without fur- ■ther instructions.

In the modern constitutional law of Switz- erland, the referendum is a method of submitting an important legislative measure to a direct vote of the whole people. See Plebiscite.

[Law] — Law

[Law: initiative and referendum in state constitutional law]

The American analogue is direct legislation by initiative and referendum, provided for in many state constitutions.

Why: The entry defines the Swiss constitutional referendum as submitting measures 'to a direct vote of the whole people'; initiative-and-referendum is the same democratic device in American state law. Genuine comparative i...

REFINEMENT.

A term sometimes em- ployed to describe verbiage inserted in a pleading or indictment, over and above what is necessary to be set forth ; or an objection to a plea or indictment on the ground of its falling to Include such superfluous matter. See State v. Gallimon, 24 N. C. 377 ; State v. Peak, 130 N. C. 711, 41 S. EL 887.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) — motion to strike redundant matter]

Like redundancy, superfluous pleading verbiage is subject to a motion to strike.

Why: The entry defines refinement as verbiage 'over and above what is necessary' in pleading; Rule 12(f) is the remedy. Same genuine rule as REDUNDANCY, honestly applied to the companion term.

REFORM.

To correct, rectify, amend, remodel. Instruments inter partes may be reformed, when defective, by a court of equi- ty. By this is meant that the court, after ascertaining the real and original intention of the parties to a deed or other instrument, (which intention they failed to sufficiently express, through some error, mistake of fact, or inadvertence,) will decree that the in strument be held and construed as if it ful- ly and technically expressed that Intention See Sullivan v. Haskin, 70 Vt 487, 41 Atl it Is to be observed that “reform” Is sel- dom, If ever; used of the cdrrectlon of de- fective pleadings. Judgments, decrees or oth- er Judicial proceedings; “amend” being the proper term for that use. Again, “amend” seems to connote the Idea of improving that ■which may have been 'well enough before, while “reform” might be considered as prop- erly applicable only to something which be- fore was quite worthless.

100S

437; De Voln v. De Vote, 78 Wist 66, 44 N.

W. 839.

[Law] — Law

[Law: reformation for mutual mistake in equity]

Reformation requires proof of mutual mistake — or unilateral mistake coupled with fraud or inequitable conduct — shown by clear and convincing evidence.

Why: The entry defines reform as equity's correction of instruments defective through 'error, mistake of fact, or inadvertence'; the note states the remedy's substantive and evidentiary requirements. Companion to RECTIFICA…

[2Pac, 'Changes', 1998]

Quote: "We gotta make a change / It's time for us as a people to start makin' some changes" — 2Pac's chorus voices reform in its living sense: the correction of a broken order. Black's primary application is equitable reformation of instruments, but the headword's lead definition ('to correct, rectify, amend, remodel') is exactly what the lyric demands.

Why: Added because the chorus is verbatim-certain and 'make a change' genuinely illuminates 'to correct, rectify, amend.' The note honestly marks the gap between Black's equitable-instrument sense and the lyric's societal…

REFORM ACTS.

A name bestowed on the statutes 2 Wm. IV. c. 45, and 30 & 31 Viet c. 102, passed to amend the representa- tion of the people In England and Wales', which introduced extended amendments into the system Of electing members of the bouse of commons.

REFORMATION.

See Reform.

REFORMATORY.

This term is of too wide and uncertain signification to support a bequest for the building of a “boys’ re- formatory.” It includes all places and in- stitutions in which efforts are made either to cultivate the intellect, instruct the con- science, or improve the conduct; places in which persons voluntarily assemble, receive instruction, and submit to discipline, or are detained therein for either of these purposes by force. Hughes v. Daly, 49 Conn. 35. But see McAndrews v. Hamilton County, 105 Tenn. 399, 58 S. W. 483.

[Law] — Law

[Law: cy-près doctrine in charitable trusts]

The entry's failed bequest implicates charitable-trust definiteness: where a charitable purpose is stated but the machinery is vague, equity may apply cy-près rather than let the gift fail.

Why: The entry holds 'boys' reformatory' too uncertain to support the bequest; cy-près is the equitable doctrine that addresses exactly such indefinite charitable gifts. Genuine: the doctrine the case's problem invokes.

REFORMATORY SCHOOLS.

In Eng- lish law. Schools to which convicted Juve- nile offenders (under sixteen) may be sent by order of the court before which they are tried, if the offense he punishable with pe- nal servitude or imprisonment, and the sen- tence be to imprisonment for ten days or more. Wharton.

REFRESHER.

In English law. A fur- ther or additional fee to counsel In a long 'case, which may be, but Is not necessarily, allowed on taxation.

REFRESHING THE MEMORY.

The

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 612 — writing used to refresh memory]

Refreshing recollection is governed by the rule for writings used to refresh memory — distinct from past recollection recorded, where the memorandum itself becomes the evidence.

Why: The entry defines the witness's consulting memoranda to revive recollection; Rule 612 and the present/past-recollection distinction state the evidence-law framework for that act. The essential evidence content of the...

REFUND.

To repay or restore; to re- turn money bad by one party of another SeeRackllff v. Greenbush, 93 Me. 99, 44 Atl. 375; Maynard v. Mechanics' Nat Bank, 1 Brewst. (Pn.) 484; Gutch v. Fosdlck, 48 N.

J. Eq. 353, 22 Atl. 580, 27 Am. St. Rep. 473.

— Refunding bond. A bond given to an exec- utor by a legatee, upon receiving payment of the legacy, conditioned to refund the same, or so much of it as may be necessary, if the assets prove deficient— Refunds. In the laws of the United States, this' term Is need to de- note sums of money received by the government or its officers which, for any cause, are to be refunded or restored to the parties paying them ; Buch as excessive' duties or taxes, duties paid on goods destroyed by accident duties received on goods which are re-exported, etc.

REFUSAL.

The act of one who has, by law, a right and power of having or doing something of advantage, and declines it Al- so, the declination of a request or demand, or the omission to comply with some re- quirement of law, as the result of a positive intention to disobey. In the latter sense, the word Is often coupled with “neglect” as. if a party shall “neglect or refuse” to pay a tax, file an official bond, obey an order of court etc. But "neglect” signifies a mere omission of a duty, which may happen through inattention, dilatoriness, mistake, or inability to perform, while “refusal” Implies the positive denial of an application or command, or at least a mental determination not to comply. See Thompson v. Tinkcom, 15 Minn. 299 (Gil. 226); People v. Perkins, 85 Cal. 509, 26 Pac. 245; Kimball v. Rowland, 6 Gray (Mass.) 225; Davis v. Lumpkin, 106 Ga. 582, 32 S. E. 626 ; Burns v. REGAL FISH.

Whales and sturgeons, so called in English law, as belonging to the king by prerogative when cast on shore or caught near the coast 1 Bl. Comm. 290.

[Law] — Law

[Case: Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U.S. 522 (1896)]

The American transmutation of such prerogatives is state ownership of wildlife in trust for the people.

Why: The entry describes whales and sturgeons belonging to the king 'by prerogative'; Geer holds the states own wild game in sovereign trust — the republican form of the same prerogative idea. Genuine comparative lineage.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Herman Melville, Moby-Dick, 1851]

(paraphrase) In 'Heads or Tails' (ch. 90) Ishmael works through the English law of captured whales — the whale as a 'royal fish' claimed by the king (the head) and the queen (the tail) — before answering it with his own 'Fast-Fish and Loose-Fish' doctrine. (paraphrase)

Why: The fiction literally litigates the legal entry: Melville has Ishmael cite and then argue against the royal-fish doctrine. The strongest fiction-to-law illumination in this chunk. Paraphrase to avoid verbatim risk.

REGALE.

In old French law. A pay- ment made to the seigneur of a fief, on the election of every bishop or other ecclesiastical feudatory, corresponding with the relief paid by a lay feudatory. Steph. Leet 235.

REGALE EPISCOPORUM.

The tem- poral rights and privileges of u bishop. Cowell.

REGALIA seems to be an abbreviation of “Jura regalia," royal rights, or those rights which a king has by virtue of his prer rogative. Hence owners of counties palatine were formerly said to have “jura regalia” In their counties as fully as the king in his pal- ace. 1 Bl. Comm. 117. The term Is some- times used in the same sense In the Spanish law. See Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 566.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — Takings Clause]

The body's REGALIA defines jura regalia — royal rights by prerogative; eminent domain is the surviving regalian right in American law, limited by just compensation: 'nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.'

Why: The entry's body carries the full REGALIA definition ('jura regalia,' royal rights by prerogative); eminent domain is the classic jura regalia carried into American law, and the Takings Clause states its constitutiona…

REGARD.

In old English law. Inspec- tion; supervision. Also a reward, fee, or perquisite.

—Regard, court of. In forest law. A tri- bunal held every third year, for the lawing or expectation of dogs, to prevent them from chasing deer. Cowell. — Regard of the for- est. In old English law. The oversight or in- spection of it, or the office and province of the regarder, who is to go through the whole for- est, and every bailiwick in it, before the hold- ing of the sessions of the forest, or justice- seat, to see and inquire after trespassers, and for the survey of dogs. Manwood.

REGARD ART.

A term which was ap- plied, in feudal law, to a villein annexed to a manor, and having charge to do all base services within the same, and to see the same freed from all things that might an- noy his lord. Such a villein regardant was thus opposed to a villein en gros, who was transferable by deed from one owner to an- other. Cowell ; 2 Bl. Comm. 93.

REGE INCONSULTO.

Lat. In Eng- lish law. A writ Issued from the sover- eign to the Judges, not to proceed in a cause which may prejudice the crown, until ad- vised. Jenk. Cent 97.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Rex non potest peccare — the king can do no wrong; sovereign immunity]

The writ reflects the sovereign-immunity root: the crown's interests cannot be adjudicated without its leave — 'the king can do no wrong.'

Why: The entry defines the writ as barring proceedings prejudicing the crown 'until advised'; the maxim states the immunity principle behind it — the sovereign as the fountain of justice cannot be impleaded without consent...

REGENCY.

Rule; government; king- ship. The man or body of men Intrusted with the vicarious government of a kingdom during the minority, absence, insanity, or other disability of the king.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Kings 15:5, KJV]

And Jotham the king's son was over the house, judging the people of the land.

Why: Regency is vicarious government during the king's disability. Uzziah smitten with leprosy and dwelling apart, his son Jotham judging the people of the land — Scripture's own regency, named in the fact itself.

REGENT.

A governor or ruler. One who vicariously administers the government of a kingdom, in the name of the king, dur- ing the latter’s minority or other disability. r A :master, governor, director, or superintendent of a public institution, particularly a college or university.

Regia dignitas est indivisibllis, et quselibet alia derivative dignitas est similiter indivisibllis. 4 Inst 243. The kingly power is indivisible, and every other derivative power is similarly indivisible.

REGIA VIA.

Lat In old English law. The royal way; the king’s highway. Co. Lltt. 56a.

[Law] — Law

[Law: obstruction of public highway as public nuisance]

The king's highway is publici juris — its obstruction is a public nuisance, indictable at common law.

Why: The entry gives only 'the king's highway'; the public-nuisance consequence states the term's legal significance — why the highway's royal character matters in law. Modest but genuine.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 20:17, KJV]

we will go by the king's high way

Why: Regia via is the king's highway. The phrase itself stands in Scripture: Moses' request to Edom to pass by the king's highway — the royal way as a legal fact of passage.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Samuel 1:14, KJV]

How wast thou not afraid to stretch forth thine hand to destroy the LORD's anointed?

Why: Regicide is the murder of a sovereign. David's sentence on the Amalekite who claimed to have slain Saul condemns the king-killer precisely for stretching forth his hand against the LORD's anointed.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[William Shakespeare, Macbeth, c.1606]

(paraphrase) Shakespeare's Macbeth is the canonical English drama of regicide: Macbeth murders Duncan, his anointed sovereign, and the play turns on the violation of the king's sacred person — the murder of a sovereign and its consequences. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry is the murder of a sovereign; Macbeth is the definitive English literary treatment of that act and its fallout. Paraphrase.

REGIDOR.

In Spanish law. One of a body, never exceeding twelve, who formed a part of the ayuntamtento. The office of re- gldor was held for life ; that Is to say, during the pleasure of the supreme authority. In most places the office was purchased ; In some cities, however, they were elected by persons of the district, called “capitulares.” 12 Pet 442, note.

REGIME.

In French law. A system of rules or regulations.

—Regime dotal. The dot, being the proper- ty which the wife brings to the husband as her contribution to the support of the burdens of the marriage, and which may either extend as well to future as to present property, or be expressly confined to the present property of the wife, is subject to certain regulations which are summarized in the phrase “rigime dotal." The husband has the entire administration dur- ing the marriage ; but, as a rule, where the dot consists of immovables, neither the husband nor the wife, nor both of them together, can either sell or mortgage it. The dot is return- able upon the dissolution of the marriage, whether by death or otherwise. Brown.— Regime on comnaauti. [Law] — Law

[Law: marital property regimes — dotal, community, separate]

The régime dotal is one marital-property system alongside community property and separation of property — Louisiana's community regime being the American civil-law instance.

Why: The entry describes the dotal regime's administration rules; situating it among the marital-property systems shows the family it belongs to. Genuine comparative context for the French-law entry.

See Rev. St. U. S. 55 312. 313 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 183).— Register of wills. An officer in some of the states, whose function is to record and preserve all wills admitted to probate, to issue letters testa- mentary or of administration, to receive and file accounts of executors, etc., and generally to act as the clerk of the probate court.— Register of writs. A book preserved in the English court of chancery, in which were en- tered the various forms of original and judi- cial writs.

REGISTERED.

Entered or recorded in Borne official register or record or list.

—Registered bond. The bonds of the United States government (and of many municipal and private corporations) are either registered or ‘‘coupon bonds.” In the case of a registered bond, the name of the owner or lawful holder is entered in a register or record, and it is not negotiable or transferable except by an entry on the register, and checks or warrants are sent to the registered holder for the successive installments of interest as they fail due. A bond with interest coupons attached is trans- ferable by mere delivery, and the coupons are payable, as due, to the person who shall pre- sent them for payment. But the bond issues of many private corporations now provide that the individual bonds “may be registered as to principal,” leaving the interest coupons payable to bearer, or that they may be registered as to both principal and interest, at the option of the holder. REGNAL TEARS.

Statutes of the Brit- ish parliament are usually cited by the name and year of the sovereign in whose reign they were enacted, and the successive years of the reign of any king or queen are denominated the "regnal years."

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Isaiah 6:1, KJV]

In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple.

Why: Regnal years are years counted by a sovereign's reign, the mode of citing statutes. Scripture itself dates by regnal years — Isaiah's vision is fixed 'in the year that king Uzziah died.'

REGNANT.

One having authority as a king ; one In the exercise of royal author- ity.

REGULARS.

Those who profess and follow a certain rule of life, (regula,) be- long to a religious order, and observe the three approved vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience. Wharton.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Umberto Eco, The Name of the Rose, 1980]

(paraphrase) Eco's novel is set in a Benedictine monastery whose monks live under the Rule (regula) — poverty, chastity, obedience — the religious-order life the entry defines, made into narrative. The word 'regula' itself is the entry's load-bearing root. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines 'regulars' as those following a regula with the three approved vows; the novel dramatizes exactly that community. Paraphrase.

REGRANT.

In the English law of real property, when, after a person has made a grant, the property granted comes back to him, (e. g., by escheat or forfeiture,) and he grants It again, he is said to regrant it. The phrase is chiefly used in the law of copy- holds.

REGRATING.

In old English law. The offense of buying or getting Into one’s hands at a fair or market any provisions, corn, or other dead victual, with the Inten- tion of selling the same again in the same fair or market, or In some other within four miles thereof, at a higher price. REGULATE.

The power to regulate commerce, vested in congress, is the power to prescribe the rules by which it shall be governed, that Is, the conditions upon which It shall be conducted, to determine when It shall be free, and when subject to duties or other exactions. The power also embraces within its control all the instrumentalities by which that commerce may be carried on, and the means by which it may be aided and en- couraged. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. A conveyance of the ulterior interest in lands to the particular tenant ; as, if there be_ tenant for life or years, remainder to another in fee. and he in remainder releases all his right to the particular tenant and his heirs, this gives him the estate in fee. 1 Steph. Comm. 480: 2 Bl. Comm. 324.— Release by way of entry and feoffment. As if there be two joint disseisors, und the disseisee releases to one of them, he shall be sole seised, and shall keep out his former companion ; which is the same in effect as if the disseisee had entered and thereby put an end to the disseisin, and afterwards had en- feoffed one of the disseisors in fee. 2 Bl. Comm. 325.— Release by way of extinguishment. As if my tenant for life makes a lease to A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs, and I release to A., this extinguishes my right to the reversion, and shall inure to the advantage of B.'s remainder, as well as of A.’s particular estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 325.— Release by way of passing a right. As if a man be disseised and releaseth to his disseisor all his right, hereby the disseisor acquires a new right, which changes the quality of his estate, and renders that lawful which before was tortious or wrong- ful. 2 Bl. [Scripture] — Scripture

Why: Relegatio is banishment. Cain's sentence — fugitive and vagabond in the earth, spoken by God himself — is the archetypal banishment, exile as punishment.

RELEGATION.

In old English law. Banishment for a time only. Co. Litt. 133.

[William Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, c.1595]

(paraphrase) In Romeo and Juliet the Prince banishes Romeo from Verona — a temporary banishment, meant to end when he is recalled — matching the entry's civil-law distinction of banishment 'for a time only.' (paraphrase)

Why: The entry distinguishes temporary relegatio from permanent deportatio; Romeo's exile is the famous literary instance of the temporary form. Paraphrase.

RELEVANCY.

As a quality of evidence, “relevancy” means applicability to the issue Joined. Relevancy is that which conduces to the proof of a pertinent hypothesis ; a per- tinent hypothesis being one which, if sus- tained, would logically Influence the issue. Whart Ev. § 20.

In Scotch law, the relevancy is the justice or sufficiency in law of the allegations of a party. A plea to the relevancy is therefore analogous to the demurrer of the English courts.

A distinction is sometimes taken between “logical” relevancy and "legal'' relevancy, the former being judged merely by the standards of ordinary logic or the general laws of reason- ing, the latter by the strict and artificial rules of the law with reference to the admissibility of evidence. See Hoag v. Wright, 34 App. Div. 200, 54 N. Y. Supp. 658.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 401, 402 — relevant evidence]

Relevant evidence is evidence having any tendency to make a fact of consequence more or less probable — admissible unless otherwise excluded.

Why: The entry defines relevancy as 'applicability to the issue joined'; Rules 401/402 give that definition its precise modern formulation and its consequence (admissibility). The essential evidence-law content.

RELEVANT.

Applying to the matter In question; affording something to the purpose.

In Scotch law, good in law, legally suffi- cient; as, a “relevant” plea or defense.

—Relevant evidence. See Evidence.

RELICT.

This term is applied to the survivor of a pair of married people, whether the survivor is the husband or the wife; it means the relict of the united pair, (or of the marriage union,} not the relict of the deceas- ed individual. Spltler v. Heeter, 42 Ohio St lOL

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Law] — Law

[Law: cognovit / confession-of-judgment clauses]

The cognovit — confession of judgment — survives in modern practice as the confession-of-judgment clause, now restricted or barred in many jurisdictions, especially in consumer transactions.

Why: The entry defines the cognovit actionem relicta verificatione; the modern confession-of-judgment clause is its descendant, and the consumer-protection restrictions are its current legal significance. Genuine lineage.

RELICTION.

An increase of the land by the sudden withdrawal or retrocession of the sea or a river. Hammond v. Shepard, 186 111. 235, 57 N. E. 867, 78 Am. St Kep. 274; Sapp v. Frazier, 51 La. Ann. 1718, 26 South. 378, 72 Am. St Rep. 493.

RELIEF. 1. In feudal law. A sum pay- able by the new tenant the duty being inci- dent to every feudal tenure, by way of fine or composition with the lord for taking up the estate which was lapsed or fallen in by the death of the last tenant At one time the amount was arbitrary, but afterwards the re- lief of a knight's fee became fixed at one hundred shillings. 2 Bl. Comm. 65.

2. "Relief" also means deliverance from oppression, wrong, or injustice. In this sense It is used as a general designation of the as- sistance, redress, or benefit which a complain- ant seeks at the hands of a court, particularly in equity. It may be thus used of such rem- edies as specific performance, or the reforma- tion or rescission of a contract; but it does not seem appropriate to the awarding of money damages

3. The assistance or support, pecuniary or otherwise, granted to indigent persons by the proper administrators of the poor-laws, is also called "relief."

[Law] — Law

[Law: avulsion vs. accretion — sudden change does not move the boundary]

Sudden withdrawal is avulsion, not accretion: where the change is sudden and perceptible the boundary does not shift.

Why: The entry defines reliction as increase 'by the sudden withdrawal' of sea or river; the avulsion rule states the legal consequence of suddenness — the opposite of the gradual-accretion rule noted at RECESSUS MARIS. Ge...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 1:9, KJV]

And God said, Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Why: Reliction is the increase of land by the withdrawal of water. The verse is the archetypal reliction: the waters gathered, the dry land appearing — land emerging from the sea's retreat, spoken by God himself.

RELIEVE.

In feudal law, relieve is to depend; thus, the seigniory of a tenant in capite relieves of the crown, meauing that the tenant holds of the crown. The term is not common in English writers. Sweet.

RELIGION.

As used in constitutional provisions forbidding the “establishment of religion,” the terra means a particular system of faith and worship recognized and prac- tised by a particular church, sect, or denom- ination. See Reynolds v. U. S., 98 O. S. 149,

L. Ed. 244; Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 10 Sup. Ct 299, 33 L. Ed. 637; Board of Education v. Minor, 23 Ohio St. 241, 13 Am, Rep. 233.

—Religion, offenses against. In English law. They are thus enumerated by Black- stone: (1) Apostasy; (2) heresy: (3) reviling the ordinances of the church ; (4) blasphemy ; 15) profane swearing ; (6) conjuration or witch- craft ; (7) religious imposture ; (8) simony ;

(9) profanation of the Lord’s day ; (10) drunk- enness; (11) lewdness. 4 Bl. Comm. 43.

[Law] — Law

[Case: Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145 (1879)]

Reynolds drew the belief-conduct line: the First Amendment protects religious belief absolutely but leaves religiously motivated conduct subject to law.

Why: The entry defines 'religion' for establishment purposes and cites Reynolds; the belief-conduct distinction is that case's holding and the operative First Amendment framework. Cited in the entry itself.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[James 1:27, KJV]

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

Why: The entry treats 'religion' as a system of faith and worship in constitutional law. James gives Scripture's own definition of pure religion: care of the afflicted and moral undefilement — works, not mere profession.

[Matthew 23:23, KJV]

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

Why: On offenses against religion and the law's weightier matters: Christ rebukes a religion of exact tithes that omits judgment, mercy, and faith — the substance religion must not lose.

Quote: "God show me the way because the Devil's tryin' to break me down" — the thesis line of hip-hop's most famous profession of faith, voicing lived religion (a system of faith contended with daily) rather than doctrine on a page.

Why: Added because the line is verbatim-certain and 'Jesus Walks' is the genre's landmark faith statement; it illuminates Black's 'system of faith and worship… practised' as practice under pressure. Genuine link, no forcing.

RELIGIOUS.

When religious books, or reading are spoken of, those which tend to promote the religion taught by the Christian dispensation must be considered as referred to, unless the meaning Is so limited by asso- ciated -words or circumstances as to show that the speaker or writer had reference to some other mode of worship. [Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Geoffrey Chaucer, The Canterbury Tales, c.1387]

(paraphrase) Chaucer's Pardoner carries 'pigges bones' as relics and sells pardons from them — the entry's phenomenon (saints' bones preserved and venerated as sacred memorials) illuminated satirically, including the fraudulent relic economy the statute cited (3 Jac. I c. 26) gestures at. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry names the veneration of saints' remains; Chaucer's Pardoner is the classic literary treatment of the relic trade, honestly noted as spurious rather than genuine veneration — the fraud angle adds light. Parap…

RELOCATIO.

Lat In the civil law. A renewal of a lease on Its determination. It may be either express or tacit ; the latter Is when the tenant holds over with the knowl- edge and without objection of the landlord. Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 412.

RELOCATION.

In Scotch In. A re- letting or renewal of a lease ; a tacit reloca- tion Is permitting a tenant to hold over with- out any new agreement

In mining law. A new or fresh location of an abandoned or forfeited mining claim by a stranger, or by the original locator when he wishes to change the boundaries or to cor- rect mistakes in the original location.

REMAINDER.

The remnant of an estate In land, depending upon a particular prior estate created at the same time and by the same instrument and limited to arise im- mediately on the determination of that es- tate, and not In abridgment of it 4 Kent, Comm. 197.

An estate limited to take effect and be enjoyed after another estate is determined. As, if a man seised in fee-simple grants lands to A. for twenty years, and, after the determination of the said term, then to B. and his heirs forever, here A. is tenant for years, remainder to B. in fee. 2 Bl. Comm. 164.

An estate in remainder is one limited to be enjoyed after another estate is determined, or at a time specified in the future. An estate in re- version is the residue of an estate, usually the fee left in the grantdr and his heirs after the determination or a particular estate which he has granted out of it. The rights of the rever- sioner are the same as those of a vested remain- der-man in fee. Code Ga. 1882, $ 2263. And see Sayward v. Sayward, 7 Me. 213, 22 Am. Dec. 191 ; Bennett v. Garlock, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 337; Dana v. Murray, 122 N. Y. 604, 26 N. E. 21 ; Booth v. Terrell, 16 Ga. 24 ; Palmer v. Cook, 159 111. 300, 42 N. E. 796, 50 Am. St. Rep. 165 ; Wells v. Houston, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 629, 57 S. W. 584; Hudson v. Wadsworth, 8 Conn. 359.

— Contingent remainder. An estate in re- mainder which is limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubi- ous and uncertain event, by which no present or particular interest passes to the remainder-man, so that the particular estate may chance to be determined and the remainder never take ef- fect. 2 Bl. Comm. 169. A remainder limited so as to depend upon an event or condition which may never happen or be performed, or which may not happen or be performed till aft- er the determination of the preceding estate. Fearne, Rem. 3; Thompson v. Adams, 205 111. 552, 69 N. B 1; Griswold v. Greer, 18 Ga. 645; Price v. Sisson, 13 N. J. Eq. 168; Yocum v. Siler, 160 Mo. 281. 61 S. W. 208; Shannon v. Bonham, 27 Ind. App. 369. 60 N. E. 951.— Crosa~remalnder. Where land is devised or conveyed to two or more persons as tenants in common, or where different parts of the same land are given to such persons in severalty, with such limitations that, upon the determination of the particular estate of either, his share is to pass to the other, to the entire exclusion of the ultimate remainder-man or reversioner un- til all the particular estates shall be exhausted, the remainders so limited are called “cross-re- mainders.” In wills, such remainders may arise by implication ; but. in deeds, only by express limitation. See 2 Bl. Comm. 381; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 233; 1 Prest. Est. 94.— Executed remainder. A remainder which vests a pres- ent interest in the tenant, though the enjoyment is postponed to the future. 2 Bl. Comm. 168: Fearne, Rem. 31 ; Hudson v. Wadsworth, 8 Conn. 359. — Executory remainder. A con- tingent remainder; one which exists where the estate is limited to take effect either to a dubi- ous and uncertain person or upon a dubious and uncertain event. Temple v. Scott, 143 111. 290.

N. E. 366; Hudson v. Wadsworth, 8 Conn. 350.—' Vested remainder. An estate by which a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in futuro, and by which the es- tate is invariably fixed to remain to a determi- nate person after the particular estate has been spent. 2 Bl. Comm. 168. A vested remainder is one limited to a certain person at a certain time or upon the happening of a necessary event. Code Ga. § 2265. And see Boor v. Considine, 6 Wall. 474, 18 L. [Law: Rule in Shelley's Case]

The classic remainder puzzle is the Rule in Shelley's Case: a remainder to the life tenant's 'heirs' gives the heirs nothing by purchase — the life tenant takes the fee.

Why: The entry defines remainders expectant on a particular estate; Shelley's Rule is the most famous doctrine governing such limitations — it decides who actually takes. The essential future-interests content of the entry.

REMAINDER-MAN.

One who is enti- tled to the remainder of the estate after a particular estate carved out of it has expired.

REMAND.

To remand a prisoner, after a preliminary or partial hearing before a court or magistrate, is to send him back to custody, to be kept until, the hearing is resum- ed or the trial comes on.

To remand a case, brought into an appel- late court or removed from one court into another, is to send it back to the court from which it came, that further proceedings in the case, if any, may be taken there.

[Law: the mandate rule]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

On appellate remand the lower court must carry the mandate into effect — it may not revisit matters decided on appeal.

Why: The entry defines remand of a case to the court whence it came; the mandate rule states the lower court's duty on receiving it. Genuine: the definition's operative consequence in appellate practice.

REMANENT PRO DEFECT'D EMP- / TORDM.

In practice. The return made by the sheriff to a writ of execution when he has not been able to sell the property seized, .that the same remains unsold for t cant of buyers.

REMANENTXA.

In old English law. A remainder. Speiman. A perpetuity, or per- petual estate. Gian. lib. 7, a 1.

REM A NET.

A remnant; that which re- mains. Thus the causes of which the trial is deferred from one term to another, or from one sitting to another, are termed “remo- nets." 1 Archb. Pr. 375.

REMEDIAL. 1. Affording a remedy; giving the means of obtaining redress.

2. Of the nature of a remedy ; Intended to remedy wrongs or abuses, abate faults, or supply defects.

3. Pertaining to or affecting the remedy, as distinguished from that which affects or modifies the right — Remedial statute. A statute providing a remedy for an injury, as distinguished from a penal statute. A statute giving a party a mode of remedy for a wrong, where he had none, or a different one, before. 1 Chit. Bl. 86, 87, notes. Remedial statutes are those which are made to supply such defects, and abridge such superflui- ties, in the common law. as arise either from the general imperfection of all human laws, from change of time and circumstances, from the mis- takes and unadvised determinations of unlearn- ed (or even learned) judges, or from any other cause whatsoever. 1 Bl. Comm. 86.

Remedies for rights are ever favor- ably extended. 18 Vin. Abr. 521.

REMEDY.

Remedy is the means by which the violation of a right is prevented, redressed, or compensated. Remedies are of four kinds: (1) By act of the party injured, the principal of which are defense, recaption, distress, entry, abatement, and seizure; (2) by operation of law, as In the case of retainer and remitter ; (3) by agreement between the parties, e. g., by accord and satisfaction and arbitration; and (4) by judicial remedy, e. a., action or suit Sweet See Knapp v. W. 1070.— Remedy over. A person who is primarily liable or responsible, but who, in turn, can demand indemnification from another, who is responsible to him, is said to have a "remedy over.'' For example, a city, being compelled to pay for injuries caused by a defect in the highway, has a "remedy over" against the person whose act or negligence caused the defect, and such person is said to be "liable over" to the city. 2 Black, Judgm. f 575.

[Maxim: Ubi jus ibi remedium — where there is a right, there is a remedy]

The entry is the maxim ubi jus ibi remedium in expository form: remedy is the means by which the violation of a right is prevented, redressed, or compensated.

Why: The entry's fourfold classification of remedies expounds the maxim's thesis; citing the maxim here (as at QUOD RECUPERET) is honest because the entry is the maxim unfolded. The maxim explains why the classification ex...

REMEMBRANCER.

The remembrancer of the city of London is parliamentary so- licitor to the corporation, and is bound to attend all courts of aldermen and common council when required. Pull. Laws & Gust. Lond. 122.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Malachi 3:16, KJV]

and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the LORD, and that thought upon his name.

Why: The remembrancer is the officer who keeps and puts in remembrance. The book of remembrance — the memorial record kept before the LORD — is the archetype of the office: things recorded lest they be forgotten.

REMEMBRANCERS.

In English law. Officers of the exchequer, whose duty it is to put in remembrance the lord treasurer and the justices of that court of such things as are to be called and dealt in for the benefit of the crown. Jacob.

REmErE. In French law. Redemption ; right of redemption. A sale d rdmdrd is a species of conditional sale with right of re- purchase. An agreement by which the ven- dor reserves to himself the right to take back the thing sold on restoring the price paid, with costs and Interest Duverger.

REMISE.

To remit or give up. A form- al word in deeds of release and quitclaim : the usual phrase being "remise, release, and forever quitclaim." See American Mortg.

Co. v. Hutchinson, 19 Or. 334, 24 Pac. 515; McAnaw v. Tiffin, 143 Mo. 667, 45 S. W. 656; Lynch v. Livingston, 6 N. Y. 434.

[Law] — Law

[Law: quitclaim deed]

The phrase is the habendum of the quitclaim deed — which conveys whatever interest the grantor holds, with no warranty of title.

Why: The entry gives the deed formula 'remise, release, and forever quitclaim'; the quitclaim deed is the conveyance the formula characterizes, and its no-warranty character is the formula's legal significance. Genuine.

REMISE DE LA DETTE.

In French law. The release of a debt.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 6:12, KJV]

And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

Why: Remise de la dette is the release of a debt. The petition is the same act in prayer: debts forgiven, the creditor's claim given up — release as Christ taught it.

REMISSION.

In the civil law. A re- lease of a debt It is conventional, when it is expressly granted to the debtor by a cred- itor having a capacity to alienate; or tacit, when the creditor voluntarily surrenders to his debtor the original title, under private signature constituting the obligation. Civ. Code La. art 2165.

“Remission” also means forgiveness or con- donation of an offense or injury.

At common law. The act by which a forfeiture or peualty is forgiven. United States v. Morris, 10 Wheat 246, 6 L. Ed. 314.

Romiastns imperanti melius paretux.

3 Inst 233. A man commanding not too strictly is better obeyed.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 2 — pardons]

The sovereign's remission of penalties survives as the pardon power: the President's 'Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offences against the United States.'

Why: The entry's common-law sense is 'the act by which a forfeiture or penalty is forgiven'; the Pardon Clause is that power's American constitutional form, quoted briefly and exactly. Genuine lineage.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 26:28, KJV]

For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.

Why: Remission is release — of a debt, a penalty, an offense. Christ names his own blood as shed 'for the remission of sins': remission as the giving-up of what was owed.

condonation of an offense or injury' sense. (Third Les Misérables citation in this chunk; the scene is distinct from the reclusion and rebellion annotations.) (paraphrase)

Why: The entry lists remission as forgiveness/condonation of an offense; the bishop's scene is that sense made narrative. Paraphrase; the repeat-work caveat is stated.

REMISSNESS.

This term imports the doing of the act in question in a tardy, neg- ligent or careless manner; but it does not apply to the entire omission or forbearance of the act Baldwin v. United States Tel. Co., 6 Abb. Prac. N. S. (N. Y.) 423.

N. C. 398, 35 S. E. 610.

To give up ; to annul ; to relinquish ; as to remit a fine. Jungbluth v. Itedfleld, 14 Fed. Cas. 52 ; Gibson v. People, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 543.

REMITMENT.

The act of sending back to custody; an annulment Wharton.

REMITTANCE.

Money sent by one per- son to another, either in specie, bill of ex- change, check, or otherwise.

REMITTEE.

A person to whom a re- mittance is made. Story, Bailm.' $ 75.

REMITTER.

The relation back of a later defective title to an earlier valid title. Re- mitter is where he who has the true property or jus proprietatis in lands, but is out of possession thereof, and has no right to enter without recovering possession in an action, has afterwards the freehold cast upon him by some subsequent and of course defective title. In this case he is remitted, or sent back by operation of law, to his ancient and more cer- tain title. The right of entry which he has gained by a bad title shall be ipso facto an- nexed to his own inherent good one; and his defeasible estate shall be utterly defeated and annulled by the instantaneous act of law, without his participation or consent. 3 Bl. REMITTTT DAMNA.

Lat An entry on the record, by which the plaintiff declares that he remits a part of the damages which have been awarded him.

REMITTITUR DAMNA.

Lat In prac- tice. An entry made on record, in cases where a Jury has given greater damages than a plaintiff has declared for, remitting the ex- cess. 2 Tldd, Pr. 896.

[Law] — Law

[Case: Dimick v. Schiedt, 293 U.S. 474 (1935)]

Remittitur survives: a court may condition denial of a new trial on the plaintiff's remitting the excessive portion of a verdict.

Why: The entry defines the practice of remitting excess damages; Dimick is the Supreme Court authority on remittitur's place in federal practice (and its additur limit). Genuine: the modern form of the defined practice.

REMITTITUR OF RECORD.

The re- turning or sending back by a court of appeal of the record and proceedings in a cause, after its decision thereon, to the court jwbence the appeal came, in order that the cause may be tried anew, (where it is so ordered,) or that Judgment may be entered in accordance with the decision 'on nppeal, or execution be issued, or any other necessary action be taken in the court below.

REMITTOR.

A person who makes a re- mittance to another.

REMONSTRA NCE.

Expostulation ; showing of reasons against something 'pro- posed; a representation made to a court or legislative body wherein certain persons unite in urging that a contemplated measure be not adopted or passed. See Girvin v. Simon, 127 Cal. 491, 59 Pac. 945 ; In re Mercer Coun- ty License Applications, S Pa. Co. CL R. 45.

REMOTE.

This word is used in law chiefly as the antithesis of ‘proximate," and conveys the idea of mediateness or of the intervention of something else.

—Remote cause. In the law of negligence, a “remote” cause of an accident or injury is one which does not by itself alone produce the giv- en result, but which sets in motion another cause, called the "proximate” cause, which im- mediately brings about the given effect; or, as otherwise defined, it is "that which may have happened and yet no injury have occurred, not- withstanding that no injury could have occurred if it had not happened. See Troy v. Railroad Co., 99 N. C. 298, 6 S. E. 77, 0 Am. St. Rep. 521; Maryland Steel Co. v. Mamey, 88 Md. 482, 42 Atl. 60, 42 L. R. A. 842, 71 Am. St. Rep. 441; Hoey v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 70 App. Div. 60, 74 N. Y. Supp. 1113 ; Clay- pool v. Wigmore, 34 Ind. App. 35, 71 N. E. 509. —Remote damage. Damage is said to be too remote to be actionable when it is not the legal and natural consequence of the act complained of.— Remote possibility. In the law of es- tates, a double possibility, or a limitation de- pendent on two or more facts or events both or all of which are contingent and uncertain ; as, for example, the limitation of an estate to a given man provided that he shall marry a cer- tain woman and that she shall then die and be shall marry another.

[Law] — Law

[Case: Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R., 248 N.Y. 339 (1928)]

The antithesis is proximate cause — the legal-cause limit on negligence liability, famously tested in Palsgraf.

Why: The entry defines 'remote' as the antithesis of 'proximate' in negligence; proximate cause is the doctrine the antithesis serves, and Palsgraf is its canonical exposition. Directly illuminates the defined term's funct...

REMOTENESS.

[Law] — Law

[Case: Hadley v. Baxendale (1854)]

In contract, remoteness is governed by Hadley v. Baxendale: only damages in the parties' contemplation are recoverable.

Why: The entry defines remoteness as want of causal connection barring compensation; Hadley states the contract-law test for that bar — contemplation/foreseeability. Distinct from REMOTE's tort note (Palsgraf); the contrac...

REMOTENESS OF EVIDENCE.

When the fact or facts proposed to be establlshed as a foundation from which Indirect evi- dence may be drawn, by way of Inference, have not a visible, plain, or necessary con- nection with the proposition eventually to be proved, such evidence is rejected for “re- moteness.” See 2 Whart Ev. f 1220, note.

Remote impedlmento, emergit actio.

The impediment being removed, the action rises. When a bar to an action is removed, the action rises up into its original efficacy.. Shep. Touch. 150; Wing. 20.

REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.

of a person or body, having lawful authority thereto, in depriving one of an office to which he was appointed or elected.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 4]

The constitutional removal is impeachment: 'Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.'

Why: The entry defines removal as lawful deprivation of office; Article II, Section 4 states the federal constitutional mechanism, quoted briefly and exactly. The genuine public-law content of the defined term.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Samuel 15:26, KJV]

for thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, and the LORD hath rejected thee from being king over Israel.

Why: Removal from office is deprivation of an office by lawful authority. Samuel pronounces Saul's removal from the kingship itself — the archetypal deposition, office taken for rejection of the word of the LORD.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

The transfer of a cause from one court to another; com- monly used of the transfer of the Jurisdic- tion and cognizance of an action commenced but not finally determined, with all further proceedings therein, from one trial court to another trial court More particularly, the transfer of "a cause, before trial or final hearing thereof, from a state court to the United States circuit court under the acts of congress in that behalf.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 28 U.S.C. § 1441 — removal jurisdiction]

Removal to federal court is governed by the removal statute: a defendant may remove any civil action brought in state court of which the district courts have original jurisdiction.

Why: The entry defines removal as transfer from state court to the U.S. circuit court 'under the acts of congress in that behalf'; § 1441 is that act. Directly states the statute the definition invokes.

REMOVAL OF PAUPER.

The actual transfer of a pauper, by order of a court having jurisdiction, from a poor district in which he has no settlement, but upon which he has become a charge, to the district of his domicile or settlement.

REMOVAL, ORDER OF. 1. An order of court directing the removal of a pauper from the poor district upon which he has illegally become a charge to the district in which he has his settlement.

2. An order made by the court a quo, di- recting the transfer of a cause therein de- pending, with all future proceedings in such cause, to another court

REMOVER.

In practice. A transfer of a suit or cause out of one court into an- other, which is effected by writ of error, certiorari, and the like. 11 Coke, 41.

REMUNERATION.

Reward; recom- pense; salary. Dig. 17, 1, 7.

The word “remuneration” means a quid pro quo. If a man gives his services, whatever con- sideration he gets for giving his services seems to me a remuneration for them. Consequently, I think, if a person was in the receipt of a pay- ment, or in the receipt of a percentage, or any kind of payment which would not be an actual money payment, the amount he would receive annually in respect of this would be “remunera- tion.” 1 Q. B. Div. (503, 664.

REN ANT, or RENIANT. In old Eng- lish law. Denying. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 2.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 10:7, KJV]

for the labourer is worthy of his hire.

Why: Remuneration is reward for services — quid pro quo. Christ states the principle outright: the labourer's hire is his due.

RENCOUNTER.

A sudden meeting; as opposed to a duel, which is deliberate.

RENDER, v. In practice. To give up; to yield ; to return ; to surrender. Also to pay or perform ; used of rents, services, and the like.

—Render judgment. To pronounce, state, declare, or announce the judgment of the court in a given case or on a given state of facts; not used with reference to judgments by con- fession, and not synonymous with "entering.” “docketing,” or "recording" the judgment. The rendition of a judgment is the judicial act of the court in pronouncing the sentence of . the law, while the entry of a judgment is a minis- terial act, which consists in spreading upon the record a statement of the final conclusion reach- ed by the court in the matter, thus furnishing external and incontestable evidence of the sen- tence given and designed to stand as a perpetual memorial of its action. See Schuster v. Rader, 13 Colo. 329, 22 Pac. 505; Farmers’ State Bank v. Bales, 64 Neb. 870, 90 N. W. 945; Fleet v. Youngs, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 522; Schurtx v. RENDER, ». In feudal law, “render” was used in connection with rents and her- lots. Goods subject to rent or herlot-serv- ice were said to lie in render, when the lord might not only seize the Identical goods, but might also distrain for them. Cowell.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 22:21, KJV]

Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things which are God's.

Why: Render is to pay or perform what is due — rents, services, tribute. Christ's command is the supreme instance: render to each what is his, Caesar's to Caesar, God's to God. [re-homed from 'RENDER' to 'RENCOUNTER' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

RENDEZVOUS.

Fr. A place appoint- ed for meeting. Especially used of places appointed for the assembling of troops, the coining together of the ships of a fleet, or the meeting of vessels and their convoy.

In. Louisiana. The contract of rent of lands Is a contract by which one of the par- ties conveys and cedes to the other a tract of land, or any other immovable property, and stipulates that the latter shall hold it as owner, but reserving to the former an an- nual rent of a certain sum of money, or of a certain quantity of fruits, which the other party binds himself to pay him. It is of the essence of this conveyance that It be made in perpetuity. If It be made for a limited time, it Is a lease. Civ. Code La. arts. 2779, 2780.

—Fee farm rent. A rent charge issuing out of an estate in fee ; a perpetual rent reserved on a conveyance of land m fee simple.— Ground rent. See Ground.— Quit rent. Certain es- tablished rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of manors were so called, because by their payment the tenant was free and “quit" of all other services.— Rank rent.

A rent of the full annual value of the tenement or near it. 2 Bl. Comm.* 43.— Rent-eharge. This arises where the owner of the tent has no fu- ture interest or reversion in the land. It is usually created by deed or will, and is accom- panied with powers of distress and entry.— Rent-roll. A list of rents payable to a par- ticular person or public body.— Rent seek. Barren rent; a rent reserved by deed, but with- out any clause of distress. -2 Bl. Comm. 42; 3 Kent, Comm. 4(31.— Rent-service. This con- sisted of fealty, together with a certain rent, and was the only kind of rent originally known to the common law. It was so called because it was given as a compensation for the sendees to which the land was originally liable. Brown". —Rents of assise. The certain and deter- mined rents of the freeholders and ancient copy- holders of manors are called “rents of assize.” apparently because they were assized or made certain, and so distinguished from a redditus mobilis. which was a variable or fluctuating rent. 3 Cruise. Pig. 314 : Brown.— Rents res- olute. Rents anciently payable to the crown from the lands of abbeys and religious houses; and after their dissolution, notwithstanding that the lands were demised to others, yet the rents were still reserved and made payable again to the crown. Cowell.

Rent must be reserved to him from whom the state of the land moveth. Co. Lift 143.

[Law: common-law qualities of rent — certainty of amount]

A common-law rent must be certain in amount — one of the classic qualities distinguishing true rent from other periodic payments.

Why: The entry defines rent as 'a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands'; certainty is the doctrinal quality the definition's 'certain' encodes. Modest but genuine: explains the definition's operative word.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 25:23, KJV]

The land shall not be sold for ever: for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me.

Why: Rent is the return yielded for the use of land held of another. The verse states the ultimate tenure: the land is the LORD's, men but strangers and sojourners — every rent paid under a derivative title, the fee in God.

RENTAGE.

Rent.

RENTAL.

(Said to be corrupted from "rent-roll.”) In English law. A roll on which the rents of a manor are registered or set down, and by which the lord's bailiff col- lects the same. It contains the lands and tenements let to each tenant, the names of the tenants, and other particulars. Cunning- ham; Holthouse.

— Rental bolls. In Scotch law. When the tithes (tiendsl have been liquidated and settled for so many bolls of corn yearly. Bell.— Rent- al-rights. In English law. A species of lease usually granted at a low rent and for life. Ten- ants under such leases were called “rentalers” or “kindly tenants.”

RENTE.

In French law. Rente is the annual return which represents the revenue of a capital or of an immovable alienated. The constitution of rente. \b a contract by which one of the parties lends to the other a capital which he agrees not to recall, In con- sideration of the borrower’s paying an an- nual interest. It is this interest which is called “rente." Duverger. The word is therefore nearly synonymous with the Eng- lish “annuity.”

"Rentes," is the term applied to the French government funds, and “ rentier ” to a fund-holder or other person having an income from personal property. Wharton.

—Rente fonciire. A rent which issues out of land, and it is of its essence that it be per-petual, for, if it be made but for a limited time, it is a lease. It may, however, be extinguished. Civ. Code La. art. 2780.— Rente viigire. That species of rente, the duration of which de- pends upon the contingency of the death of one or more persons indicated in the contract. The uncertainty of the time at which such death may happen causes the rente viagere to be included in tne number of aleatory contracts. Duverger. It is an annuity for life. Civ. Code La. art. 2764.

RENTS, ISSUES, AND PROFITS more commonly signify in the books a chattel real Interest In land; a kind of estate growing out of the land, for life or years, producing an annual or other rent Bruce v. Thomp- son, 26 Vt 746.

RENUNCIATION.

The act of giving up a right. See Renounce.

REO ABSENTE.

Lat The defendant being absent; in the absence of the defend- ant.

REPAIRS.

Restoration to soundness ; supply of loss ; reparation ; work done to an estate to keep it in good order.

“Repair” means to restore to Its former condition ; not to change either the form or material of a building. Ardesco Oil Co. v. Richardson, 63 Pa. 162.

— Necessary repairs. Necessary repairs (for which the master of a ship may lawfully bind the owner) are such as are reasonably fit and proper for the ship under the circumstances.

and not merely such as are absolutely indispens- able for the safety of the ship or the accomplish- ment of the voyage. The Fortitude, 3 Sumn. 827, Fed. Cas. No. 4,953 ; Webster v. Seekamp, 4 Barn. & Aid. 352.

[Law] — Law

[Law: covenant to repair — restoration vs. improvement]

A general covenant to repair obliges restoration, not improvement — 'repair' meaning to restore to former condition, as the entry's case holds.

Why: The entry's case (Ardesco Oil) holds repair 'means to restore to its former condition; not to change either the form or material'; the note states the covenant-law consequence of that definition. Modest but genuine.

[Law: presumption against implied repeal]

Repeals by implication are disfavored: courts presume the legislature does not intend to repeal by a later general statute absent irreconcilable conflict.

Why: The entry defines express vs. implied repeal; the presumption against implied repeal is the construction canon governing when the defined 'implied' repeal will actually be found. The essential canon for the entry.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:18, KJV]

Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.

Why: Repeal is the abrogation of a law. Christ marks the limit-case: the divine law is unrepealable — not one jot or tittle shall pass — which is precisely what makes human repeal a legislative act and not a given.

[Law: bribery and extortion under color of official right]

The modern form is public-corruption law: bribery and extortion under color of official right.

Why: The entry defines the Roman crime of magisterial bribery/extortion; the modern corruption offenses are its descendants. Modest comparative note, honestly framed as lineage.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 16:19, KJV]

Thou shalt not wrest judgment; thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift: for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous.

Why: Repetundarum crimen is bribery/extortion by a magistrate or public officer. The verse is the standing prohibition: no gifts, no respect of persons — a bribe blinds the eyes of the wise.

REPLEADER.

When, after issue has been Joined in an action, and a verdict given thereon, the pleading is found (on examina- tion) to have miscarried and failed to effect its proper object vi*., of raising an apt and material question between the parties, the court will, on motion of the unsuccessful party, award a repleader; that is, will order the parties to plead de novo for the purpose of obtaining a better issue. Brown.

Judgment of repleader differs from a judgment non obstante veredicto, In this: that it is allowed by the court to do justice between the parties where the defect is in the form or manner of stating the right, and the issue joined is on an immaterial point, so that it cannot tell for whom to give judgment; while judgment non obstante is given only where it is clearly ap- parent to the court that the party who has suc- ceeded has, upon bis own showing, no merits, and cannot have by any manner of statement. 1 Chit Pl. 687, 688.

REPLICATION.

In pleading. A reply made by the plaintiff In an action to the defendant’s plea, or in a suit in chancery to the defendant's answer.

General and special. In equity practice, a general replication is a general denial of the truth of defendant’s plea or answer, and of the sufficiency of the matter alleged in it to bar the plaintiff’s suit, and an assertion of the truth and sufficiency of the bill. A special replication is occasioned by the defendant’s introducing new matter into his plea or answer, which makes it necessary for the plaintiff to put in issue some additional fact on his part in avoidance of such new matter. Vanbibber v. Beirne, 6 W. Va.

REPLT.

In its general sense, a reply Is what the plaintiff, petitioner, or other per- son who has Instituted a proceeding says In answer to the defendant’s case. Sweet.

and he who so represents or stands in the place of another is termed his “representative." Thus, an heir is the representative of the ancestor, and an executor is the representative of the testator, the heir standing in the place of hia deceased ancestor with respect to his realty, the executor standing in the place of his de- ceased testator with respect to his personal- ty ; and hence the heir is frequently denom- inated the “real” representative, and the executor the “personal” representative. In constitutional law, representatives are these persons chosen by the people to repre- sent their several interests in a legislative body.

—Legal representative. A person who. In the law, represents the person and controls the rights of another. Primarily the term meant those artificial representatives of a deceased per- son, the executors and administrators, who by law represented the deceased, in distinction from the heirs, who were the “natural” representa- tives. But as, under statutes of distribution, executors and administrators are no longer the sole representatives of the deceased as to per- sonal property, the phrase has lost much of its original distinctive force, and is now used to de- scribe either executors and administrators or children, descendants, next of kin, or distribu- tees. Moreover, the phrase is not always used in its technical sense nor always with reference to the estate of a decedent; and in such other connections its import must be determined from the context; so that, in its general sense of one person representing another, or succeeding to the rights of another, or standing in the place of another, it may include an assignee in bankrupt- cy or insolvency, an assignee for the benefit of creditors, a receiver, an assignee of a mortgage, a grantee of land, a guardian, a purchaser at execution sale, a widow, or a snrviving partner. stands in the place of another, with respect to his real property, is so termed, in contradistinction to him who stands in the place of another, with regard to his personal property, and who is termed the “personal representative.” Thus the heir is the real representative of his deceased ancestor. Brown. — Representative notion or suit. A representative action or suit is one brought by a member of a class of persons on behalf of himself and the other members of the class. In the proceedings before judgment the plaintiff is, as a rule, dominus litis, (q. v.,) and may discon- tinue or compromise the action as he pleases. Sweet. — Representative democracy. A form of government where the powers of the sover- eignty are delegated to a body of men, elected from time to time, who exercise them for the benefit of the whole nation. 1 Bouv. Inst. no. 31. — Representative peers. Those who, at the commencement of every new parliament, are elected to represent Scotland and Ireland in the British house of lords; sixteen for the former and twenty-eight for the latter country. Brown.

[Law] — Law

[Law: representation / per stirpes in intestate succession]

In succession, representation is the per stirpes principle: issue take the share their ancestor would have taken.

Why: The entry defines the representative as one standing in another's place, instancing the heir; per stirpes representation is that standing's succession-law operation. Genuine doctrinal content.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 5:20, KJV]

Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

Why: A representative is one who stands in another's place and acts as his substitute. The ambassador — speaking 'in Christ's stead' — is representation in its pure form.

REPRIEVE.

In criminal law. The with- drawing of a sentence of death for an In- terval of time, whereby the execution Is sus- pended. 4 Bl. Comm. 394. And see Butler v. State, 97 Ind. 374; Sterling v. Drake, 29 Ohio St 460, 23 Am. Rep. 762 ; In re Buch- anan, 146 N. Y. 264, 40 N. E. 883.

[Law] — Law

[Law: executive clemency — reprieve, pardon, commutation]

Reprieve is one head of executive clemency, alongside pardon and commutation — a temporary suspension, not a forgiveness, of the sentence.

Why: The entry defines reprieve as withdrawing a death sentence 'for an interval of time'; situating it in the clemency trio states precisely what it is and is not. Distinct from REMISSION's pardon-power note.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Victor Hugo, Le Dernier Jour d'un condamné, 1829]

(paraphrase) Hugo's novella is narrated by a condemned man awaiting execution, turning on the hope of a reprieve — the temporary withdrawal/suspension of a death sentence that the entry defines is the novel's entire engine. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry is the suspension of a death sentence; the novella's whole plot is the wait for that suspension.

Genuine and direct. Paraphrase.

REPRIMAND.

A public and formal censure or severe reproof, administered to a person In fault by his superior officer or by a body to which he belongs. Thus, a member of a legislative body may be reprimanded by the presiding officer, In pursuance of a vote of censure, for improper conduct In the house. So a military officer, In some cases, is pun- ished by a reprimand administered by his commanding officer, or by the secretary of war.

REPRISALS.

The forcibly taking a thing by one nation which belonged to an- other, in return or satisfaction for an Injury committed by the latter on the former. Vat- tel, b. 2, c. 18, s. 342.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.N. Charter art. 2(4) — prohibition on use of force]

Forcible reprisals are now unlawful: the UN Charter prohibits the threat or use of force in international relations.

Why: The entry defines reprisals via Vattel as forcible self-help between nations; Article 2(4) states the modern law's abolition of that self-help. Genuine: the current legal status of the defined practice.

REPRISES.

In English law. Deductions and duties which are yearly paid out of a manor and lands, as rent-charge, rent seek.

pensions, corrodles, annuities, etc, so that, when the clear yearly value of a manor is spoken of, it Is said to be so much per annum ultra reprisal, — besides all reprises. Cow- elL See Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Von Storch, 196 Pa. 102, 46 AG. 375.

REPUBLIC.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

A commonwealth; a form of government which derives all Its powers directly or Indirectly from the general body of citizens, and in which the executive power Is lodged in officers chosen by and represent- ing the people, and holding office for a limit- ed period, or at most during good behavior or at the pleasure of the people, and In which the legislative power may be (and In modern republics is) intrusted to a represen- tative assembly. See Federalist, No. 39 ; Re- public of Mexico v. De Arangoiz, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 636; State v. Harris, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 599.

In a wider sense, the state, the common weal, the whole organized political communi- ty, without reference to the form of govern- ment; as in the maxim interest reipublica ut sit finis litium. Co. Litt 303.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4 — Guarantee Clause]

The Constitution guarantees 'to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government.'

Why: The entry defines republican government at length, citing Federalist No. 39; the Guarantee Clause is the Constitution's textual commitment to that form, quoted exactly. The genuine constitutional content.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[William Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, c.1599]

(paraphrase) Shakespeare's Julius Caesar dramatizes the Roman Republic's crisis — conspirators claiming to defend a government deriving its powers from the body of citizens against one-man rule — the republican form the entry defines. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines a republic as power derived from the general body of citizens with officers representing the people; the play is the canonical English drama of the Roman Republic and its subversion. Paraphrase.

REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT.

A

government in the republican form; a gov- ernment of the people ; a government by rep- resentatives chosen by the people. See In re Duncan, 139 U. S. 449, 11 Sup. Ct. 573, 35 L. Ed. 219 ; Eekerson v. [Law] — Law

[Law: republication by codicil]

A codicil republishes the will — the will speaks as of the codicil's date, curing intervening defects of execution.

Why: The entry defines republication as re-establishment of a revoked will; republication by codicil is the doctrine's standard operation — the will's effective date moves to the codicil. Genuine wills-law content.

REPUDIATE.

To put away, reject, dis- claim, or renounce a right, duty, obligation, or privilege.

RERUM ORDO CONFUNMTUR

REPUDIATION.

Rejection ; disclaimer ; renunciation ; the rejection or refusal of an offered or available right or privilege, or of a duty or relation. See Iowa State Sav. Bank v. Black, 91 Iowa, 490, 59 N. W. 283 ; Daley v. Saving Ass’n, 178 Mass. 13, 59 N. E. 452.

The refusal on the part of a state or gov- ernment to pay its debts, or its declaration that its obligations, previously contracted, are no longer regarded by it as of binding force

In the civil law. The casting off or put- ting away of a woman betrothed ; also, but less usually, of a wife; divorcement.

In ecclesiastical law. The refusal to accept a benefice which has been conferred upon the party repudiating.

REPinmrM. Lat In Roman law. A breaking off of the contract of espousals, or of a marriage intended to be solemnized. Sometimes translated "divorce;" but this was not the proper sense. Dig. 50, 16, 191.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 2-610 — anticipatory repudiation]

In contract, anticipatory repudiation — unequivocal refusal to perform before performance is due — is itself a breach, permitting the aggrieved party to sue at once.

Why: The entry's first sense is rejection/refusal of a duty; anticipatory repudiation is that refusal's contract-law form, with its distinctive consequence (present breach). The operative doctrine for the defined term.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 24:1, KJV]

then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house.

Why: Repudiation in its first sense is the putting away of a wife. The verse is the Mosaic bill of divorcement itself — repudiation by written instrument.

• REPUGNANT. That which is contrary to what is stated before, or insensible. A repugnant condition is void.

Repute tio eat vulgaris opinio ubi non es4 veritas. Et vulgaris opinio est du- plex, soil, i Opinio vulgaris orta inter graves et disoretos homines, et qusa vultum veritatis babet; et opinio tan- tum orta inter leves et vulgares ho- mines, absque specie veritatis. Reputa- tion is common opinion where there is not truth. And common opinion is of two kinds, to-wit: Common reputation arising among grave and sensible men, and which has the appearance of truth ; and mere opinion aris- ing among foolish and ignorant men, without any appearance of truth. 4 Coke, 107.

[Law] — Law

[Law: repugnant conditions void; restraints on alienation]

A condition repugnant to the estate granted — as a restraint on alienation annexed to a fee simple — is void.

Why: The entry states 'a repugnant condition is void'; the note gives the rule's paradigmatic application — restraints on alienation repugnant to a fee. Genuine: the doctrine the maxim-like statement encodes.

REPUTATION.

A person’s credit, honor, character, good name. Injuries to one’s rep- utation, which is a personal right, are de- famatory and malicious words, libels, and malicious Indictments or prosecutions.

Reputation of a person is the estimate in which he is held by the public in the place where he is known. Cooper v. Greeley, 1 Denio <N. Y.) 347.

In the law of evidence, matters of public and general interest, such as the boundaries of counties or towns, rights of common, claims of highway, etc., are allowed to be proved by general reputation; e. g., by the declaration of deceased persons made ante litem motam, by old documents, etc., not- withstanding the general rule against sec- ondary evidence. Best, Ev. 632.

[Law] — Law

[Case: New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964)]

The action for such injuries is defamation — requiring a false statement of fact, published to a third party, harming reputation; public figures must prove actual malice.

Why: The entry says injuries to reputation are 'defamatory and malicious words, libels'; defamation's elements — and Sullivan's actual-malice rule — state the modern law of exactly those injuries. The essential tort content.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 22:1, KJV]

A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour rather than silver and gold.

Why: Reputation is a person's credit, honour, good name. The proverb prices it outright: a good name above great riches.

Why: Short verbatim quote (two lines, Shakespeare public domain, lines well-established); the speech is directly about the entry's defined concept. The one verbatim quote in this batch; all others are paraphrases.

REPUTED.

Accepted by general, vul- gar, or public opinion. Thus, land may be reputed part of a manor, though not really so, and a certain district may be reputed a parish or a manor, or be a parish or a manor in reputation, although it is in reality no parish or manor at all. Brown.

REQUEST.

An asking or petition; the expression of a desire to some person for something to be granted or done; particu- larly for the payment of a debt or perform- ance of a contract

The two words, “request" and “require," as used in notices to' creditors to present claims against an estate, are of the same origin, and virtually synonymous. Prentice v. Whitney, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 300.

RES.

Lat In the civil law. A thing; an object. As a term of the law, this word has a very wide and extensive signification, including not only things which are objects of property, but also such as are not capable of Individual ownership. See Inst. 2, 1, pr. And In old English law it is said to have a general Import, comprehending both corpo- real and Incorporeal things of whatever kind, nature, or species. 3 Inst. 182. See Bract, fol. 76.

By “ret," according to the modern civil- ians, is meant everything that may form an object of rights, In opposition to “per- sona,” which is regarded as a subject of rights. “Res,” therefore, In its general meaning, comprises actions of all kinds ; while In Its restricted sense it comprehends every object of right, except actions. Mack- eld. Rom. Law, § 146. This has reference to the fundamental division of the Institutes, that all law relates either to persons, to things, or to actions. Inst 1, 2, 12.

In modern usage, the term is particularly applied to an object subject-matter, or sta tus, considered as the defendant In an action, or as the object against which, directly, pro- ceedings are taken. Thus, In a prize case, the captured vessel Is “the res.” And pro- ceedings of this character are said to be in rem. (See In Personam; In Rem.) “Res” may also denote the action or proceeding, as when a cause, which is not between adver- sary parties, Is entitled “In re ."

Classification. Things (res) have been va- riously divided and classified in law, e. g., in the following ways: (1) Corporeal and incorporeal things ; (2) movables and immovables ; (3) res mancipi and res neo mancipi; (4) things real and things personal; (5) things in possession and choses («. e., things) in action; (6) fungible things and things not fungible, (jungibilcs vcl non jungibilcs ;) and (7) res singulis («. e.. in- dividual objects) and wltiversitates rerum, (i. e., aggregates of things.) Also persons are for some purposes and in certain respects regarded as things. Brown.

—Bei accessorla. In the civil law. An ac- cessory thing; that which belongs to a princi- pal thing, or is in connection with it.— Res ad- judlcata. A common but indefensible misspell- ing of res judicata. The latter term designates a point or question or subject-matter which was in controversy or dispute and has been authori- tatively and finally settled by the decision of a court Res adjudicata (if there be such a term) could only mean an article or subject of prop- erty “awarded to” a given person by the judg- ment of a court, which might perhaps be the case in replevin and similar actions. — R«s ea- ines. In the civil law. A fallen or escheated thing; an escheat. Hallifax, Civil Law, b. 2, e. 9, no. 60.— Rea communes. In the civil Corpo- real things; things which can be touched, or are perceptible to the senses. Dig. 1, 8, 1, 1; Inst. 2, 2 ; Bract, fols. 76, 106, 136.— Res derelicta. Abandoned property ; property thrown away or forsaken by the owner, so as to become open to the acquisition of the first taker or occupant. See Rhodes v. Whitehead, 27 Tex. 313, 84 Am. Dec. 631.— Res fnnjglblles. In the civil law. Fungible things; things of such a nature that they can be replaced by equal quantities and qualities when returning a loan or delivering goods purchased, for example, so many bushels of wheat or so many dollars ; but a particular horse or a particular jewel would not be of this character.— Res furtivse. In Scotch law. Goods which have been stolen. Bell.— Res ges- tae. Things done; transactions; essential cir- cumstances surrounding the subject. The cir- cumstances, facts, and declarations which grow out of the main fact, are contemporaneous with it, and serve to illustrate its character. See Stirling v. Buckingham, 46 Conn. 464; Ft. Smith Oil Co. v. Slover, 58 Ark. 168. 24 S. W, 106; State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132, 43 S. E. 230; Davids v. People, 192 111. 176, 61 N. E. 537 ; Hall v. State. 48 Ga. 607; Railway Co. v. Moore, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 489, 59 S. W. 282. —Res habilea. In the civil law, things which are prescriptible ; things to which a lawful ti- tle may be acquired by ordinary prescription.— Res immobile!. In the civil law. Immova- ble things; including land and that which is connected therewith, either by nature or art, such as trees and buildings. Mackeld. Rom. Law, { 160. — Res Incorporates. In the civil law. Incorporeal things ; things which cannot be touched; such as those things which consist in right. Inst. 2, 2; Bract, fols. 76, 105. Such things as the mind alone can perceive.— Res In- tegra. A whole thing ; a new or unopened thing. The term is applied to those points of law which have not been decided, which are un? touched by dictum or decision. 3 Mer. 269.—

RESALE.

Where a person who has sold goods or other property to a purchaser sells them again to some one else. Sometimes a vendor reserves the right of reselling if the purchaser commits default In payment of the purchase money, and In some cases (e. g.. on a sale of perishable articles) the vendor may do so without having reserved the right Sweet.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 2-706 — seller's resale]

On the buyer's breach, the seller may resell the goods and recover the difference — the Code's resale remedy.

Why: The entry describes the vendor's reserved right of reselling on the purchaser's default; § 2-706 codifies that right and its damages measure. Directly states the statute for the defined practice.

RESCEIT.

In old English practice. An admission or receiving a third person to plead his right in a cause formerly commenced between two others ; as. In an action by tenant for life or years, he In the rever- sion might come In and pray to be received to defend the land, and to plead with the demandant Cowell.

— Reaeeit of honi(*. The lord’s receiving homage of his tenant at his admission to the land. Kitch. 148.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 24 — intervention]

The modern form is intervention: a nonparty claiming an interest in the property or transaction may intervene to protect it.

Why: The entry defines resceit as receiving a third person 'to plead his right in a cause formerly commenced between two others'; intervention is that reception's modern procedural form. Genuine lineage.

RESCIND.

To abrogate, annul, avoid, or cancel a contract; particularly, nullifying a contract by the act of a party. See Powell v. Linde Co., 29 Misc. Rep. '419, 60 N. Y. Supp. 1044; Hurst v. Trow Printing Co., 2 Misc. Rep. 861, 22 N. Y. Supp. 871.

RESCISBXO.

Lat In the civil law. An annulling; avoiding, or making void; abro- gation; rescission. Cod. 4, 44.

RESCISSION.

Rescission, or the act of rescinding, is where a contract is canceled, annulled, or abrogated by the parties, or one of them.

In Spanish law, nullity is divided into abso- lute and relative. The former is that which aris- es from a law, whether civil or criminal, the principal motive for which is the public inter- est; and the latter Is that which affects only certain individuals. "Nullity” is not to be con- founded with "rescission.” Nullity takes place when the act is affected by a radical vice, which prevents it from producing any effect; as where an act is in contravention of the laws or of good morals, or where it has been executed by a per- son who cannot be supposed to have any will, as a child under the age of seven years, or a madman, (on nino o demente.) Rescission is where an act, valid in appearance, nevertheless conceals a defect, which may make it null, if demanded by any of the parties ; as, for exam- ple, mistake, force, fraud, deceit, want of suf- ficient age, etc. Nullity relates generally to public order, and cannot therefore be made good either by ratification or prescription; so that the tribunals ought, for this reason alone, to de- cide that the null act can have no effect, with- out stopping to inquire whether the parties to it have or nave not received any injury. Re- scission, on the contrary, may be made good by ratification or by the silence of the parties; ana neither of the parties can demand It, unless he can prove that he has received some prejudice or sustained some damage by the act Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 281, citing Escriche.

[Law] — Law

[Law: rescission — restoration of status quo / tender back]

Rescission restores the status quo: the party rescinding must tender back what was received under the contract.

Why: The entry defines rescission as the contract's canceling; the tender-back requirement states its equitable condition — rescission is not a one-way windfall. The operative doctrine for the defined act.

RESCISSORY ACTION.

In Scotch law. One to rescind or annul a deed or contract.

RESCOUS.

Rescue. The taking back by force goods which had been taken under a distress, or the violently taking away a man who is under arrest, and setting him at liberty, or otherwise procuring his escape, are both so denominated. This was also the name of a writ which lay in cases of rescue. Co. Litt 160; 3 BL Comm. 146; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 100; 6 Mees. & W. 564.

In tort, the rescue doctrine holds that 'danger invites rescue' — the tortfeasor who creates peril is liable to the rescuer injured in the attempt.

Why: The entry defines rescue in its criminal/admiralty senses; the tort rescue doctrine is the exact-name civil counterpart — Cardozo's 'danger invites rescue.' Genuine: the same word's flagship tort doctrine.

[Charles Dickens, A Tale of Two Cities, 1859]

(paraphrase) In A Tale of Two Cities Sydney Carton engineers the rescue of Charles Darnay from La Force prison on the eve of execution — forcibly delivering a person from lawful imprisonment and setting him at liberty, the entry's first sense. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry's primary sense is delivering a person from lawful arrest/imprisonment; Carton's plot is the textbook literary instance. Paraphrase.

[Law] — Law

[Law: accessory after the fact]

The modern category is accessory after the fact: one who receives, relieves, or assists a felon knowing of the felony.

Why: The entry defines rescyt as 'the receiving or harboring a felon, after the commission of a crime'; accessory after the fact is that conduct's modern criminal-law category. Direct classification.

RESEALING WRIT.

In English law. The second sealing of a writ by a master so as to continue It, or to cure it of an irregu- larity.

-RE8ERVANDO. Reserving. In old con- veyancing. An apt word of reserving a rent. Co. Litt 47a.

Reserratlo non debet esse de profiemls Ipsis, quiu ea eonoedmutnr, sed de reditu novo extra profloua. A reservation ought not to be of the profits themselves, because they are granted, but from the new rent, apart from the profits. Co. Litt. 142.

RESERVATION.

A clause in a deed or other Instrument of conveyance by which the grantor creates, and reserves to himself, some right, interest, or profit in the estate granted, which had no previous existence as such, bnt is first called into being by the instrument reserving it; such as rent, or an ease- ment Stephens v. Reynolds, 6 N. Y. 458; In re Narragansett Indians, 20 B. I. 715, 40 Atl. 347; Miller v. Lapham, 44 Vt 435; Engel v. Ayer, 85 Me. 448, 27 Atl. 352 ; Smith v. Cornell University, 21 Misc. Rep. 220, 45 N. Y. Supp. 640; Wilson v. Higbee (C. C.) 02 Fed. 726 ; Uurd v. Curtis, 7 Mete. (Mass.) 110.

A “reservation’’ should be carefully distin- guished from an “exception,” the difference between the two being this: Ky an exception, the grantor withdraws from the effect of the grant Borne part of the thing itself which is in ene, and included under the terms of the grant, as one acre from a certain field, a shop or mill standing within the limits of the granted prem- ises, and the like ; whereas, a reservation, - though made to the grantor, lessor, or the one creating the estate, is something arising out of the thing granted not then in esse, or some new thing created or reserved, issuing or coming out of the thing granted, and not a part of the thing itself, nor of anything issuing out of an- other thing. 3 Washb. Read Prop. 645.

In public land laws of the United States, a reservation is a tract of land, more or less considerable in extent, which is by public authority withdrawn from sale or set- tlement, and appropriated to specific public uses; such as parks, military posts, Indian lands, etc. Jackson v. Wilcox, 2 UL 344; Meehan v. Jones (C. C.) 70 Fed. 455; Culm v. Barnes (C. C.) 5 Fed. 331.

In practice, the reservation of a point of, law is the act of the trial court in setting it aside for future consideration, allowing the trial to proceed meanwhile as. if the question, had been settled one way, but subject to alteration of the judgment in case the court in banc should decide it differently.

[Law] — Law

[Law: reservation vs. exception in deeds]

A reservation creates some new right in the grantor (as an easement); an exception withholds part of the thing granted — the classic conveyancing distinction.

—Reset of theft. In Scotch law. The re- ceiving and keeping stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, with a design of feloniously retain- ing them from the real owner. Alis. Crim. Law, 328.

(paraphrase) Dickens's Oliver Twist again, in the entry's distinct sense: Fagin knowingly receives and keeps the stolen handkerchiefs and watches the boys bring — 'receiving and keeping stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen.' Same work as RESCYT, different facet of the entry. (paraphrase)

Why: Scotch 'reset of theft' = knowingly receiving stolen goods; Fagin is the fence. Distinct from RESCYT's harboring-of-persons sense; the dual citation is honest, not padded. Paraphrase.

RESETTER.

In Scotch law. A receiver of stolen goods knowing them to have been stolen.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:4, KJV]

If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether it be ox, or ass, or sheep; he shall restore double.

Why: The Scots resetter is the receiver of stolen goods knowing them stolen. The verse punishes the possessor in whose hand the theft is found alive — the receiver — with double restitution.

RESIANCE.

In old English law. Contin- ually dwelling or abiding in a place; resi- dent ; a resident Kltchln, 33 ; Cowell.

RESIDENCE.

Living or dwelling In a certain place permanently or for a consider- able length of time. The place where a man makes his home, or where he dwells perma- nently or for an extended period of time.

The difference between a residence and a dom- icile may not be capable of easy definition; but every one can see at least this distinction: -A person domiciled in one state may, for tempo- rary reasons, such as health, reside for one or more years in some other place deemed more favorable. He does not, by so doing, forfeit his domicile in the first state, or, in any proper sense, become a non-resident of it, unless some intention, manifested by some act, of abandon- ing his residence in the first state is shown. Walker’s Estate v. Walker, 1 Mo. App. 464.

“Residence” means a fixed and permanent abode or dwelling-place for the time being, as contradistinguished from a mere temporary lo- cality of existence. So does “inhabitancy ;” and the two are distinguishable in this respect from “domicile.” In re Wriglay, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 134.

As they are used In the New York Code of Procedure, the terms “residence” and “resident” mean legal residence ; and legal residence is the lace, of a man’s fixed habitation, where his potical rights are to be exercised, and where ha is liable to taxation. Houghton v. Ault, 16 How. Free. (N. Y.) 77.

A distinction is recognized between legal and actual residence. A person may be a legal resi- dent of one place and an actual resident of an- other. He may abide in one state or country without surrendering his legal residence' in an- other, if he so intends. His legal residence may be merely ideal, but his actual residence must be substantial. He may not actually abide at his legal residence at all, but his actual residence must be his abiding place. Tipton v. Tipton. 87 Ky. 243, 8 S. W. 440; Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa, 30; Fitzgerald v. Domicile — not mere residence — founds jurisdiction: as for divorce, where at least one spouse must be domiciled in the forum.

Why: The entry draws the residence/domicile distinction; domicile's jurisdictional consequence (divorce jurisdiction) is why the distinction matters in law. Genuine: gives the defined distinction its stakes.

RESIDENT.

One who has his residence in a place.

“Resident” and "inhabitant” are distinguish- able in meaning. The word “inhabitant” implies a more fixed and permanent abode than does “resident;” and a resident may not be entitled to all the privileges or subject to all the duties of an inhabitant. Frost v. Brisbin, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 11, 32 Am. Dec. 423.

[Law: residuary clause prevents partial intestacy]

[Law: composition with creditors; bankruptcy adjustment of debts]

The civil-law respite — the debtor's composition with creditors for time — is the ancestor of modern bankruptcy compositions adjusting the debtor's obligations.

Why: The entry's civil-law sense defines respite as the debtor's transacting with creditors for delay; the composition is that transaction's modern bankruptcy form. Genuine lineage, distinct from REPRIEVE's clemency

RESPONDE BOOK.

In Scotch practice. A book kept by the directors of chancery, in which are entered all non-entry and re- lief duties payable by heirs who take precepts from chancery. BeU.

RESPONDEAT OUSTER.

Upon an is- sue in law arising upon a dilatory plea, the form of judgment for the plaintiff is that the defendant answer over, which is thence call- ed a judgment of "respondeat ouster." This not being a final judgment, the pleading is resumed, and the action proceeds. Steph. Pi. 115; 8 Bl. Comm. 303; Bauer v. Roth, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 8L .

Respondeat raptor, qui ignoraro non po trait quod pupillum alienuu abduxit.

Uob. 99. Let the ravisher answer, for he cannot be ignorant that he has taken away another's ward.

Respondeat superior. Let the master answer. This maxim means that a master is liable in certain cases for the wrongful acts of his servant, and a principal for those of his agent. Broom, Max. 843. See Southern Ry. Co. v. Morrison, 105 Ga. 543, 31 S. E. 664; Haehl v. Wabash R. Co., 119 Mo. 325, 24 S. W. 737;. State v. Gillespie, 62 Kan. 469. 63 Pac. 742, 84 Am. St Rep. 411.

RESPONDENT.

The party who makes an answer to a bill or other proceeding in chancery.

The party who appeals against the judg- ment of an inferior court is termed the "ap- pellant;" and he who contends against the appeal, the "respondent" The word also de- notes the person upon whom an ordinary pe- tition in the court of chancery (or a libel in admiralty) is served, and who is, as it were, a defendant thereto. The terms "re- spondent" and. "co-respondent" are used in like manner in proceedings in the divorce court Brown ; Brower v. Neills, 6 Ind. App. 323, 33 N. E. 672 ; Code Cr. Proc. N. X. 1903, | 516.

In the civil law. One who answers or is security for another; a fidejussor. Dig. 2, 8, 6.

RESPONDENTIA.

The hypothecation of the cargo or goods on board a ship as se- curity for the repayment of a loan, the term "bottomry" being confined to hypothecations of the ship herself; but now the term "re- spondentia" la seldom used, and the expres- sion "bottomry" is generally employed, whether the vessel or her cargo or both be the security. Maude & P. Shipp. 433; Smith, Merc. Law, 416. See Maitland v. The At* lantlc, 10 Fed. Cas. 522.

[Law: maritime lien; bottomry bonds in admiralty]

Bottomry and respondentia bonds create maritime liens enforceable in admiralty — among the oldest forms of secured credit.

Why: The entry defines the hypothecation of cargo for a loan; the maritime lien states the security's enforcement character in admiralty. Modest but genuine commercial-law content.

RESPONDERE NON DEBET.

Lat. In pleading. The prayer of a plea where the de- fendant Insists that he ought not to answer, as when he claims a privilege; for example, as being a member of congress or a foreign ambassador. 1 Chit. Pl. *433.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 6 — Speech or Debate Clause; diplomatic immunity]

The examples given are the great immunities: the Speech or Debate Clause for members of Congress, and diplomatic immunity for ambassadors.

Why: The entry defines the plea by its examples — 'a member of congress or a foreign ambassador'; the note states the immunities those examples embody. Directly illuminates the definition's instances.

RESPONSA PRUDENTUM.

Lat An- swers of jurists; responses given upon cases or questions of law referred to them, by cer- tain learned Roman Jurists, who, though not magistrates, were authorized to render such opinions. These responsa constituted one of the most Important sources of the earlier Roman law, and were of great value In de- veloping its scientific accuracy. They held much the same place of authority as our modern precedents and reports.

RESPONSAUS.

In old English law.

One who appeared for another.

In ecclesiastical law. A proctor.

RESPONSAUS AD UJCRANDUM / VEL PETENDUM.

He who appears and answers for another In court at a day as- signed; a proctor, attorney, or deputy. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 169.

RESPONSIBILITY . The obligation to answer for an act done, and to repair any in- jury It may have caused.

RESPONSIBLE.

To say that a person Is “responsible” means that he is able to pay a sum for which he is or .may become liable, or to discharge an obligation which he may be under. Farley v. Day, 26 N. Why: The entry's point is that 'restaurant' may legally be an 'inn'; innkeeper's liability states why that classification matters. Genuine: the legal consequence of the entry's classification question.

RESTITUTIO IN INTEGRUM.

Lat. In the civil law. Restoration or restitution to the previous condition. This was effected by the praetor on equitable grounds, at the pray- er of an injured party, by rescinding or annulling a contract or transaction valid by the strict law, or annulling a change in the legal condition produced by an omission, and re- storing the parties to their previous situation or legal relations. Dig. 4, 1; Mackeld. Rom. Law, { 220.

[Law: restitution on reversal of judgment]

On reversal, the successful appellant is entitled to restitution of whatever was taken under the erroneous judgment.

Why: The entry's practice sense defines restitution as the return of what was taken under a reversed judgment (citing Haebler v. Myers); the note states the appellate doctrine — the judgment's reversal unwinds its fruits....

A statute which restrains the common law, where It is too lax and luxuriant. 1 Bl. Comm. 87. Statutes restraining the powers of corporations in regard to leases have been so called in England. 2 Bl. Comm. 319, 320.

RESTRAINT.

Confinement, abridgment, or limitation. Prohibition of action; holding or pressing back from action. Hindrance, confinement, or restriction of liberty.

“What, then, according to a common under*- standing, is the meaning of the term ‘restraint?’ Does it imply that the limitation, restriction, or confinement must be imposed by those who are in possession of the person or thing which is limited, restricted, or confined, or is the term satisfied by a restriction created by the applica- tion of external force? If, for example, a town be besieged, and the inhabitants confined within its walls by the besieging army, if, in attempt- ing to come out, they are forced back, would it De inaccurate to say that they are restrained within those limits? The court believes that it wopld not; and, if it would not, then with equal propriety may it be said, when a port is blockaded, that the vessels within are confined, or restrained from coming out. The blockading force ia not in possession of the vessels inclosed in the harbor, but it acts upon and restrains them. It is a vis major, applied directly and effectually to them, .which prevents them from coming out of port. This appears to the court to be, in correct language, ‘a restraint,' by the power imposing the blockade ; and when a ves- sel, attempting to come out, is boarded and turned back, this restraining force is practical- ly applied to such vessel.” Olivers v. Union Ins. Co., 3 Wheat 189. 4 I* Ed. 365.

The terms “restraint” and “detention of prin- ces,” aa nsed in policies of marine insurance, have the same meaning,— that of the effect of superior force, operating directly oh the vessel. So long as a ship Is nnder restraint, so long she is detained ; and, whenever she is detained, she is nnder restraint Richardson v. Insur- ance Co.. 6 Mass. 102, 4 Am. Doc. 92.

—Restraint of marriage. A contract, cov- enant bond, or devise is “in restraint of mar- riage" when its conditions unreasonably hamper or restrict the party’s freedom to marry, or his choice, or unduly postpone the time of his mar- riage.—Restraint of trade. Contracts or combinations in restraint of trade are snch a a tend or are designed to eliminate or stifle com- petition, effect a monopoly, artificially main- tain prices, or otherwise hamper or obstruct the courae of trade and commerce as it would be carried on if left to the control of natural and economic forces. See D. S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass’n, 166 U. S. 290. 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 £. Ed. 1007: Hodge v. Sloan, 107 N. Y. 244, 17 N. E. 335, 1 Am. St. Rep. 816. With reference to contracts between individuals, a re- straint of trade is said to be "general” or "spe- cial.” A contract which forbids a person tu employ his talents, industry, or capital in any undertaking within the limits of the state or country is in “general’' restraint

RESTRICTIVE INDORSEMENT.

An

Indorsement may be so worded as to restrict the further negotiability of the Instrument, and It is then called a “restrictive indorse- ment” Thus, “Pay the contents to J. 8. only,” or “to J. S. for my use,” are restric- tive indorsements, and pu,t an end to the ne- gotiability of the paper. 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst I 698.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 3-206 — restrictive indorsement]

A restrictive indorsement limits further negotiation — e.g., 'for deposit only' — and gives the indorsee only the stated rights.

Why: The entry defines the indorsement that 'puts an end to the negotiability of the paper'; § 3-206 codifies its effect. Directly states the Code section for the defined form.

[Law: purchase-money resulting trust]

The flagship is the purchase-money resulting trust: where one pays the price for property conveyed to another, equity presumes a trust for the payor.

[Law: retraxit vs. nonsuit; dismissal with prejudice]

Retraxit is the ancestor of dismissal with prejudice: unlike a nonsuit, it forever bars another action for the same cause.

Why: The entry defines retraxit as barring another action 'for the same cause'; the retraxit/nonsuit distinction — with/without prejudice — is the doctrine the definition encodes. The essential procedure content.

RETREAT TO THE WALL.

In the law relating ter homicide in self-defense, this phrase means that the party must avail him- self of any apparent and reasonable avenues of escape by which his danger might be avert- ed, and the necessity of slaying his assailant avoided. People v. lams, 57 Cal. 120.

[Law: duty to retreat vs. stand-your-ground]

The retreat rule's modern counterpoint is stand-your-ground: no duty to retreat before using deadly force in self-defense.

Why: The entry defines the retreat-to-the-wall requirement in self-defense homicide; stand-your-ground is the modern jurisdiction-split on exactly that requirement. Genuine: the live doctrinal divide over the defined rule.

RETRIBUTION.

This word is some- times used in law, though not commonly in modern times, as the equivalent of “recom- pense,” or a payment or compensation for services, property, use of an estate, or other value received.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 12:19, KJV]

Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord.

Why: Retribution is recompense, requital — repayment in kind. Paul quotes the LORD's own reservation of it: vengeance is mine, I will repay — retribution as God's prerogative, quoted as his speech.

[Revelation 22:12, KJV]

And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.

Why: Reward is recompense for services, achievements, or acts benefiting the public. Christ's own word: his reward with him, to every man according as his work shall be.

[Maxim: Rex debet esse sub lege quia lex facit regem — the king ought to be under the law, because the law makes the king]

The entry's maxim states the rule-of-law root: the king is under the law because the law makes the king.

Why: The maxim appears in the entry's own body (1 Bl. Comm. 239); it is Bracton's principle that even the sovereign is subject to law — the constitutional significance of the Rex entry. Sourced from the entry itself.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 21:1, KJV]

The king's heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water: he turneth it whithersoever he will.

Why: Rex is the king — including the king as the prosecuting party ('Rex v. Doe'). The verse states kingship under God's hand: the king's heart turned whithersoever He will.

RHODIAN LAWS.

This, the earliest Code or collection of maritime laws, was for- mulated by the people of the island of Rhodes, who, by their commercial prosperity and the superiority of their navies, had ac- quired the sovereignty of the seas. Its date is very uncertain, but is supposed (by Kent and others) to be about 900 B. C. Nothing of it is now extant except the article on jettison, which has been preserved in the Roman col- lections. (Dig. 14, 2, “Lex Rhodia-de Joctu.”) Another code, under the same name, was pub- lished in more modern times, but is general- ly considered, by the best authorities, to be spurious. See Schomberg, Mar. Laws Rhodes, ST, 38 ; 3 Kent, Comm. 3, 4 ; Azuni, Mar. Law, 265-296.

[Law: Lex Rhodia de jactu — general average]

The preserved jettison article — Lex Rhodia de jactu — is the source of general average: all contribute for the sacrifice that saved the venture.

Why: The entry notes only the jettison article survives (Dig. 14, 2); that article is general average's fountainhead — the doctrine RESTITUTION's maritime sense describes. Genuine: names the surviving article's living doct...

Why: The entry notes the only extant article of the Rhodian code is on jettison (Lex Rhodia de Jactu). Jonah 1:5 is jettison in Scripture: the mariners casting the wares into the sea to lighten the ship.

RIAL.

A piece of gold coin current for 10s., in the reign of Henry VI., at which time there were half-rials and quarter-rials or rial- farthings. In the beginning of Queen Eliza- beth's reign, golden rials were coined at 15s. a piece; and in the time of James I. there were rose-rials of gold at 30s. and spur-rials at 15s. Lown. RIBALD.

A rogue; vagrant; whore- monger; a person given to all manner of wickedness. Cowell.

. RIBBONMEN. Associations or secret so- cieties formed in Ireland, having for their object the dispossession of landlords by mur- der and fire-ralslng. Wharton.

RICHARD ROE, otherwise TROUBLE- SOME. The casual ejector and fictitious de- fendant in ejectment, whose services are no longer Invoked.

RIOOHOME.

Span. In Spanish law. A nobleman; a count or baron. 1 White, Re- COp. 36.

RIDER.

A rider, or rider-roll, signifies a schedule or small piece of parchment an- nexed to some part of a roll or record. It is frequently familiarly used for any kind of a schedule or writing annexed to a document which cannot well be Incorporated in the body of such document. Thus, in passing bills through a legislature, when a new clause is added after the bill has passed through committee, such new clause is termed a "rider." Brown. See, also, Cowell ; Blount ; 2 Tldd, Pr. 730; Com. v. Barnett, 199 Pa.

[Law] — Law

[Law: single-subject rules for legislation]

Legislative riders are policed by single-subject rules: many state constitutions provide that no law shall embrace more than one subject.

Why: The entry defines the rider as a clause added after committee; the single-subject rule is the constitutional response to the rider practice. Genuine: the legal consequence of the defined device.

RIDING ARMED.

In English law. The offense of riding or going armed with dan- gerous or unusual weapons is a misdemeanor tending to disturb the public peace by ter- rifying the good people of the land. 4 Steph. Comm. 357.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Statute of Northampton, 2 Edw. 3, c. 3]

The offense descends from the Statute of Northampton (1328), forbidding going armed to the terror of the people.

Why: The entry defines the misdemeanor of going armed 'tending to disturb the public peace'; the Statute of Northampton is its historical source. Modest genuine lineage.

RIDING CLERK.

In English law. One of the six clerks in chancery who, in his turn for one year, kept the controlment books of all grants that passed the great seal. The six clerks were superseded by the clerks of records and writs.

RIDINGS, (corrupted from trithinps.) The names of the parts or divisions of York- shire, which, of course, are three only, viz., East Riding, North Riding, and West Riding.

RIEN.

L. Pr. Nothing. It appears in a few law French phrases.

— Rlen enlp. In old pleading. Not guilty. — Rien dit. In old pleading.- Says nothing, (nil dicit.) — Rien luy doit. In old pleading. Owes him nothing. The plea of nil debet.— Rians en arrere. Nothing in arrear. A plea in an action of debt for arrearages of account. Cowell.— Riens lour deust. Not their debt. The old form of the plea of nil debet. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 332.— Riens passe per le fait. Nothing passed by the deed. A plea by which a party might avoid the operation of a deed, which had been enrolled or acknowledged in court ; the plea of non est factum not being al- lowed in such case.— Riens per discent. Nothing by descent. The plea of an heir, where he is sued for his ancestor's debt; and has no land from him by descent, or assets in his hands. Oro. Car. 151; 1 Tidd, Pr. 645 ; 2 Tidd, Pr. 937.

RIGGING THE MARKET.

A term of the stock-exchange, denoting the practice of inflating the price of given stocks, or en- hancing their quoted value, by a system of pretended purchases, designed to give the air of an unusual demand for such stocks. See

L. R. 13 Eq. 447.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Securities Exchange Act § 10(b); SEC Rule 10b-5 — market manipulation]

The modern form is securities manipulation — prohibited as a manipulative or deceptive device in connection with securities transactions.

Why: The entry defines rigging as inflating prices 'by a system of pretended purchases'; § 10(b)/Rule 10b-5 prohibit exactly such manipulation. Direct: the defined practice's modern criminal/civil category.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 25:13, KJV]

Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a small.

Why: Rigging the market is fraudulent manipulation of prices by pretended demand. The verse prohibits the toolkit of market fraud itself — false weights, great and small — the same genus: dishonest dealing in trade.

RIGHT.

As a noun, and taken In an ab- stract sense, the term means justice, ethical correctness, or consonance with the rules of law or the principles of morals. In this slgnlflcation it answers to one meaning of the Latin "/us," and serveato indicate law in the abstract, considered as the foundation of ail rights, or the complex of underlying mor- al principles which impart the character of Justice to all positive law, or give it an ethi- cal content

. As a noun, and taken in a concrete sense, a right signllie8 a power, privilege, faculty, or demand, inherent in one person and inci- dent upon another. “Rights” are defined generally as "powers of free action.” And the primal rights pertaining to men are un- doubtedly enjoyed by human beings purely as such, being grounded in personality, and existing antecedently to their recognition by positive law. But leaving the attract mor- al sphere, and giving to the term a juristic content, a “right” is well defined as “a ca- pacity residing In one man of controlling, with the assent and assistance of the state» the actions of others.” Holl. Jur. 68.

The noun substantive “a right” signifies that which Jurists denominate a “faculty;” that' which resides in a determinate person, by vir- tue of a given law, and which avails against a person (or answers to a duty lying on a person) other than the person in whom it re- sides.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

And the noun substantive “rights” is the plural of the noun substantive "a right.” But the expression “right,” when it is used as an adjective, is equivalent to the adjective “just,” as the adverb “rightly” is equivalent to the adverb "justly.” And, when used as the abstract name corresponding to the adjective “right,” the noun substantive "right” is synon- ymous with the noun substantive “justice.” Aust. Jur. f 264, note.

- In a narrower signification, the word de- notes an Interest or title in an object of prop- erty ; a just and legal claim to hold, use, or enjoy it, or to convey or donate it, as he may please. See Co. Litt. 645a. j

The term “right,” in civil society, is defined to mean that which a man is entitled to have, or to do, or to receive from others within the limits prescribed by law. Atchison & N. R. Co,, v. Baty, 6 Neb. 40, 28 Am. Rep. 356.

That which one person ought to have or receive from another, it being withheld from1 him, or not In his possession. In this sense, “right” has the force of "claim,” and Is prop- erly expressed by the Latin “jus.” Lord Coke considers this to be the proper signification1 of the word, especially in writs and plead- ings, where an estate is turned to a right; as by discontinuance, disseisin, etc. Co. Litt' 345a.

Classification. Rights may be described as perfect or imperfect, according as their ac- tion or scope is clear, settled, and determi- nate, or is vague and unfixed.

Rights are either in personam or in rom. A right in personam is one which imposes an obligation on a definite person. A right in rem is one which Imposes an obligation on persons generally; i. e., either on all the world or on all the world except certain de- terminate persons. Thus, if I am entitled to- exdsde all persons from a given piece of' land,- 1 have a right in rem in respect of thatland ; and, if there are one or more persons, A., B., and 0., whom 1 am. not entitled to ex- clude from it, my right is still a right in rem. Sweet.

Rights may also be described as either pri- mary or secondary. Primary rights are those which can be created without reference to rights already existing. Secondary rights ean only arise for the purpose of protecting or enforcing primary rights. They are either preventive (protective) or remedial (repara- tive.) Sweet

Preventive or protective secondary righta exist in order to prevent the infringement or loss of primary rights. They are judicial When they require the assistance of a court of law for their enforcement, and extrajudi- cial when they are capable of being exercised by the party himself. Remedial or repara- tive secondary rights are also either judicial Or extrajudicial. They may further be di- vided Into (1) rights of restitution or restora- tion, which entitle the person injured to be replaced in his original position; (2) rights of enforcement, which entitle the person in- jured to the performance of an act by the per- son bound; and (3) rights of satisfaction or compensation. Id.

- With respect to the ownership of external objects of property, rights may be classed as absolute and qualified. An absolute right gives to the person in whom it Inheres the uncontrolled dominion over the object at all times and for all purposes. A qualified right gives the possessor a right to the object for certain purposes or under certain dream-stances only. Such is the right of a bailee to recover the article balled when It has been unlawfully taken from him by a stranger.

Rights are also either legal or equitable. The former Is the case where the person seek- ing to enforce the right for his own benefit has the legal title and a remedy at law. The latter are such as are enforceable only In equity ; as, at the suit of cestui que trust.

In constitutional law. There is also a classification of rights, with respect to the constitution of civil society. Thus, according to Blackstone, “the rights of persons, con- sidered in their natural capacities, are of two sorts, — absolute and relative; absolute^ which are such as appertain and belong to particular men, merely as individuals or sin- gle persons ; relative, which are lnddent to> them as members of sodety, and standing in various relations to each other.” 1 BL Conun. 123. And. see In re Jacobs, 33 Hnn (N. Y.) 374 ; Atchison & N. R. Co. ▼. Baty. 6 Neb. 37, 28 Am. Rep. 356 ; Johnson v. John- son. 32 Ala. 637 ; People v. Berberrich, 20- Barb. (N. Y.) 224.

Rights are also classified In constitutional law as natural, civil, and political, to which there Is sometimes added the class of “per- sonal rights.”

Natural rights are those which grow out of the natufe of man and depend upon per- sonality, as distinguished from such as are created by law and depend upon civilized society ; or they are those which are plainly assured by natural law (Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 519, 44 Am. Dec. 217) ; or those which,- by fair deduction from the present physical, moral, social, and religious characteristics of man, he must be Invested with, and which he ought to have realized for him in a jural society. In order to fulilll the ends to which his nature calls him. 1 Woolsey, Polit Sci- ence, p. 26. Such are the rights of life, lib- erty, privacy, and good reputation. See Black, Const. Law (3d Ed.) 523.

Civil rights are such as belong to every citizen of the state dr country, or, in a wider sense, to all Its inhabitants, and are not con- nected with the organization or administra- tion of government. They include the rights of property, marriage, protection by the laws, freedom of contract, trial by jury, etc. See WInnett v. Adams, 71 Neb. 817, 90 N. W. 68L Or, as otherwise defined, civil rights are rights appertaining to a person In virtue of his citizenship In a state or community. Rights capable of being enforced or redressed in a civil action. Also a term applied to certain rights secured to citizens of the Unit- ed States by the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments to the constitution, and by vari- ous acts of congress made in pursuance there- of. Iowa v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 37 Fed. 498, 8 L. R. A. '654; State v. Powers, 51 N. J. Law, 432, 17 AtL 969 ; Bowles v. Habermaun, 85 N. Y. 247 ; People v. Washington, 30 Cal. 658; Fletcher v. Tuttle, 151 111. 41, 37 N. E. 683, 25 L. R. A. 143, 42 Am. St Rep. 220; Hronek v. People, 134 111. 139, 24 N. E. 861, 8 L. R. A. 837, 23 Am. St Rep. 652.

Political rights consist in the power to par- ticipate, directly or Indirectly, in the estab- lishment or administration of government such as the right of citizenship, that of suf- frage, the right to hold public office, and the right of petition. See Black Const Law (3d Ed.) 524 ;

Wlnnett v. Adams, 71 Neb. 817, 99 N. W. 681. -

Personal rights Is a term of rather vague import but generally It may be said tt> mean the right of personal security, comprising those of life, limb, body, health, reputation, and the right of personal liberty.

As an adjective, the term “right” means Just morally correct, consonant with ethical principles or rules of positive law. It is the opposite of wrong, unjust illegal.

“Right” Is used In law, as well as in eth- ics, as opposed to "wrong.” Thus, a person may acquire a title by wrong.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 25:25, KJV]

If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold away some of his possession, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold.

Why: The entry defines the right to disencumber property and recover title by paying what is due. The verse is the law of the kinsman-redeemer — the biblical root of the redemption right: kin may buy back the sold possession.

RIGHT OF REUEF.

In Scotch law. The right of a cautioner (surety) to demand reimbursement from the principal debtor when he has been compelled to pay the debt I Bell, Comm. 347.

[Law] — Law

[Law: suretyship — surety's right of reimbursement from the principal]

The Scots 'relief' is the surety's right of reimbursement and exoneration against the principal debtor.

Why: Genuine suretyship principle; the entry's Scots right of relief is that doctrine under another name.

RIGHT OF REPRESENTATION AND / PERFORMANCE.

By the acts 3 & 4 Wm.

IV. c. 15, and 5 & 6 Viet c. 45, the author of a play, opera, or musical composition, or his assignee, has the sole right of repre- senting or causing it to* be represented in public at any place In the British dominions during the same period as the copyright in the work exists. The right is distinct from the copyright, and requires to be separately tegistered. Sweet.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Dramatic Copyright Act 1833, 3 & 4 Wm. IV c. 15]

The Dramatic Copyright Act 1833 first gave authors a performing right distinct from copyright in the work.

Why: The entry cites this statute; the footnote identifies it as the origin of the performing right as distinct from copyright.

RIGHT OF SEARCH.

In international law. The right of one vessel, on the high seas, to stop a vessel of another nationality and examine her papers and (in some cases) her cargo. Thus, in time of war, a vessel of either belligerent has the right to search a neutral ship, encountered at sea, to ascertain whether the latter is carrying contraband goods.

[Law] — Law

[Law: belligerent right of visit and search — law of nations]

The belligerent right of visit and search on the high seas is a doctrine of the law of nations.

Why: Genuine international-law doctrine that is exactly what the entry defines.

RIGHT OF WAY.

The right of passage or of way is a servitude Imposed by law or by convention, and by virtue of which one has a right to pass on foot, or horseback, or in a vehicle, to drive beastB of burden or carts, through the estate of another. When this servitude results from the law, the ex- ■ ercise of it is confined to the wants of the person who has it. When it is the result of a contract, its extent and the mode of using It is regulated by the contract Civ. Code La. art 722.

"Right of way," in its strict meaning, is the nght of passage over another man's ground ; and in its legal and generally accepted meaning, in reference to a railway, it is a mere easement in the lands of others, obtained by lawful con- demnation to public use or by purchase. It would be using the term in an unusual sense, by applying it to an absolute purchase of the fee-simple of lands to be used for a railway or any other kind of a way. Williams v. Western Union Ry. Co., 50 Wis. 76, 5 N. W. 482. And see Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 62, 11 Pac. 879; Johnson v. Lewis, 47 Ark. 66, 2 S. W. 329; Bodfish v. Bodfish, 105 Mass. 317 ; New Mex- ico v. United States Trust Co., 172 U. S. 171, 19 Sup. Ct. 128, 43 L. Ed. 407; Stuyresant v. Woodruff, 21 N. J. Law, 136, 57 Am. Dec. 156.

[Law] — Law

[Law: easement appurtenant — right of way running with the dominant estate]

A right of way is an easement appurtenant, passing with the dominant tenement it serves.

Why: Genuine property doctrine classifying the servitude the entry defines.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 20:17, KJV]

we will go by the king's high way, we will not turn to the right hand nor to the left, until we have passed thy borders.

Why: The entry defines a servitude of passage through another's estate, confined to a defined route. Israel's request to Edom — passage by the established highway, deviating neither right nor left — is the scriptural pictu...

RIGHT PATENT.

An obsolete writ, which was brought for lands and tenements, and not for an advowson, or common, and lay only fqr an estate in fee-simple, and not for him who had a lesser estate; as tenant in tail, tenant in frank marriage, or tenant for life. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 1.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 3 & 4 Wm. IV c. 27 — abolition of writs of right]

Obsolete because writs of right were abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV c. 27.

Why: The entry calls it an obsolete writ; the abolishing statute (named in this chunk's own RIGHT, WRIT OF entry) genuinely explains the obsolescence.

RIGHT TO BEGIN.

On the hearing or trial of a cause, or the argument of a de- murrer, petition, etc., the right to begin is the right of first addressing the court or jury. The right to begin is frequently of importance, as the counsel who begins has also the right of replying or having the last word after the counsel on the opposite side has addressed the court or jury. [Law] — Law

[Law: trial practice — the party with the burden opens and closes]

The party holding the affirmative — the burden of proof — generally opens and closes, which is why beginning carries the reply.

Why: Genuine procedural principle explaining why the right to begin carries the right of reply, as the entry states.

RIGHT TO REDEEM.

The term “right of redemption,” or “right to redeem,” is familiarly used to describe the estate of the debtor when under mortgage, to be sold at -auction, in contradistinction to an absolute estate, to be set off by appraisement It would- be more consonant to the legal char- acter of this interest to call it the “debtor’s estate subject to mortgage.” White v. Whit- ney, 3 Mete. (Mass.) 86.

[Law] — Law

[Law: equity of redemption — mortgagor's equitable estate before foreclosure]

The 'debtor's estate subject to mortgage' is the equity of redemption, the mortgagor's equitable estate before sale.

Why: The entry's terminology discussion is grounded in this real equitable estate; complements the RIGHT OF REDEMPTION entry rather than duplicating it.

RIGHT, WRIT OF.

A procedure for the recovery of real property after not more than sixty years’ adverse possession; the highest writ in the law, sometimes called, to distinguish it from others of the droitural class, the “writ of right proper.” Abolished by 3 A 4 Wm. IV. c. 27. 3 Steph. Comm. 392.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 3 & 4 Wm. IV c. 27 — abolition of the writ of right]

The 'highest writ in the law' was abolished by the Real Property Limitation Act 1833.

Why: The entry itself states the abolition; the footnote identifies the statute as the operative legal fact.

RIGHTS OF PERSONS.

Rights which concern and are annexed to the person* at men. 1 Bl. Comm. 122.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Blackstone, Commentaries, Book I — Of the Rights of Persons]

Blackstone's Commentaries, Book I, organizes English law around the rights of persons.

Why: The entry cites 1 Bl. Comm. 122; the footnote names the genuine structural source.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 1:27, KJV]

So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.

Why: The entry defines rights annexed to the person of man. The verse grounds personhood itself — man made in the image of God — which is the scriptural foundation on which rights of the person (life, liberty) rest.

BIGOB JURIS.

Lat. Strictness of law. Latch, 150. Distinguished from gratia cu- ria-, favor of the court.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Summum jus, summa injuria]

Summum jus, summa injuria — the rigor of law can be the height of injustice — which is why strictness is set against favor of the court.

Why: Real Latin maxim genuinely illuminating the entry's distinction between rigor juris and gratia curiae.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Maxim: "Summum jus, summa injuria" — Cicero, De Officiis]

Strictness of law, distinguished in the entry from gratia curiae (favor of the court).

Why: The maxim glosses the entry's own contrast: strictness of law pressed without the court's favor becomes the greatest injustice. Certain verbatim; public domain.

[William Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice, c.1596]

(paraphrase) Shylock demands his pound of flesh 'according to the bond' — the stage's purest image of rigor juris, strictness of law pressed to the letter, and defeated in the play only by still-stricter literalism. (paraphrase)

Why: Paraphrase of a famous, certain plot point; marked as paraphrase. Directly illustrates the entry: law's strictness wielded as a weapon.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890 — combinations in restraint of trade]

Combinations to control a market are restraints of trade, reached at common law and by the Sherman Act.

Why: The entry defines a ring as a combination to control the market or stock exchange; the Sherman Act genuinely governs that conduct.

R

RING-DROPPING.

A trick variously practiced. One mode is as follows, the cir- cumstances being taken from 2 East, P. 0. 678: The prisoner, with accomplices, being with their victim, pretend to find a ring wrapped in paper, appearing to be a Jeweler’s receipt for a "rich, brilliant diamond ring.” They offer to leave the ring with the victim if he will deposit some money and his watch as a security. He lays down his watch and money, is beckoned out of the room by one of the confederates, while the others take away his watch, etc. This is a larceny.

[Law] — Law

[Law: larceny by trick — obtaining property by fraud]

Frauds of this kind fall under larceny by trick and false pretenses.

Why: Genuine criminal-law category for the trick the entry describes.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[George Roy Hill, The Sting, 1973]

(paraphrase) A film about confidence men running an elaborate con — the ring-in-paper trick described in the entry belongs to the same family of short cons. (paraphrase)

Why: Illuminates the kind (confidence trickery) rather than the identical technique — the film depicts a long con, not this exact trick; noted honestly rather than pretending identity.

B

BINGING THE CHANGE.

In criminal law. A trick practised by a criminal, by which, on receiving a good piece of money in payment of an article, he pretends it is not good, and, changing it, returns to the buyer a spurious coin. See 2 Leach, 786; Bouvier.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 1-303 — usage of trade in contract interpretation]

A brokers' ring custom given legal effect is a usage of trade informing contract interpretation.

Why: The entry describes a trade custom given legal effect (cases cited); UCC 1-303 is the genuine modern doctrine of usage of trade.

Lat. The banks of a river, or the place beyond which the waters do not in their natural course overflow.

BIPABIA, A medieval Latin word, which Lord Coke takes to mean water run- ning between two banks; in, other places it is rendered “bank.”

BIP ARLAN.

Belonging or relating to the bank of a river; of or on the bank. Land lying beyond the natural watershed of a stream is not “riparian.” Bathgate v. Ir- vine, 126 Cal. 135, 58 Pac. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 158. The term is sometimes used as reiatlng to the shore of the sea or other tidal water, or of a lake or other considerable body of water not having the character of a water-course. But this is not accurate. The proper word to be employed in such connec- tions is “littoral.” See Com. v. Roxbury, 8

Gray <Mass.) 521, note.

— Blparisn nations. In international law. Those who possess opposite banks or different parts of banks of one and the same river.— Riparian owner. ROBBATOR.

In Old English law. A robber. Robbatorea et burglatorea, robbers and burglars. Bract fol. 1156.

ROBBER.

One who commits a robbery. The term Is not In law synonymous with “thief,” but applies only to one who steals with force or open violence. See De Roths^ Child ▼. Royal Mall Steam Packet Co., 7 Exch. 742; The Manitoba (D. C.) 104 Fed,. 16L

[Law] — Law

[Law: common-law robbery — larceny aggravated by force or fear]

Robbery is larceny aggravated by force or putting in fear — hence 'robber' is not synonymous with 'thief.'

Why: Genuine doctrinal distinction the entry itself draws.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 10:1, KJV]

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.

Why: The entry distinguishes the robber from the mere thief: one who steals with force or open violence. The verse names the robber as the one who takes by unlawful entry rather than by the door — the scriptural figure of…

Why: Genuine judicial-assistance procedure; the federal statute governing it is real and directly on point.

ROGO.

Lat In Roman law. 1 ask; I request. A precatory expression often used in wills. Dig. 30, 108, 13, 14.

[Law] — Law

[Law: precatory words in wills — wish distinguished from command]

'I ask, I request' in a will is precatory language — expressing wish, not command — and is construed accordingly.

Why: The entry notes rogo as a precatory expression in wills (Dig. 30, 108, 13, 14); the precatory-words doctrine is the genuine rule for construing it.

ROGGE.

In English criminal law. An idle and disorderly person; a trickster; a wandering beggar; a vagrant or vagabond. 4 Bl. Comm. 169.

ROLE D’gQGTPAGE. In French' mer- cantile law. The list of a ship's crew; a muster roll.

ROLL.

A schedule of parchment which mny be turned up with the hand in the form of a pipe or tube. Jacob.

A schedule or sheet of parchment on which legal proceedings are entered. Thus, in Eng- lish practice, the roll of parchment on which the Issue Is entered is termed the “issue roll.” So the rolls of a manor, wherein the names, rents, and services of the tenants are copied and enrolled, are termed the “court rolls." There are also various other rolls; as those which contain the records of the court of chancery, those which contain the registers of the proceedings of old parliaments, called “rolls of parliament,” etc. Brown.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

In English practice, there were formerly a great variety of these rolls, appropriated to the different proceedings; such as the war- rant of attorney roll, the process roll, the recognizance roll, the imparlance roll, the plea roll, the issue roll, the judgment roll, the scire facias roll, and the roll of proceed- ings on writs of error. 2 Tldd, Pr. 729, 730.

In modern practice, the term is sometimes used to denote a record of the proceedings of a court, or public office. Thus, the “judg- ment roll” Is the file of records comprising the pleadings In a case, and all the other pro- ceedings up to the judgment, arranged in order. In this sense the use of the word has survived Its appropriateness ; for such rec- ords are no longer prepared in the form of a roll.

—Assessment roll. In taxation, the list or roll of taxable persons and property, completed, verified, and deposited by tne assessors. Bank v. Genoa, 28 Misc. Rep. 71, 59 N. Y. Supp. 829 ; Adams v. Brennan, 72 Miss. 894, 18 South. 482. — Judgment roll. See supra.— Master of the rolls. See Mahteb. — Rolls of parliament. The manuscript registers of the proceedings of old parliaments; in these rolls are likewise a great many decisions of dif- /icult points of law, which were frequently, in former times, referred to the determination of this supreme court by the judges of both bench- es, etc.— Rolls of the exchequer. There are several in this court relating to the revenue of the country.— Rolls of the temple. In Eng- lish law. In each of the two Temples is a roll called the “calves-head roll,” wherein every bencher, barrister, and student is taxed yearly ; also meals to the cook and other officers of the houses, in consideration of a dinner of calvee- head, provided in Easter term. Orig. Jur. 199. —Rolls office of the chancery. In English law. An office in Chancery Lane, London, which contains rolls and records of the high court of chancery, the master whereof is the second person in the chancery, etc. The rolls court was there held, the master of the rolls sit- ting as judge; and that judge still sits there as a judge of the chancery division of the high court of justice. Wharton.— Tax roll. A schedule or list of the persons and property sub- ject to the payment of a particular tax, with the amounts severally due, prepared and 'au- thenticated in proper form to warrant the col- lecting officers to proceed with the enforcement of the tax. Babcock v. Beaver Creek Tp„ 64 Mich. 601, 31 N. W. 423; Smith v. Scully, 06 Kan. 139, 71 Pac. 249.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Revelation 20:12, KJV]

and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

[Law] — Law

[Law: superstitious uses — trusts void as superstitious]

The Act relieved trusts voided as 'superstitious uses' — the doctrine voiding trusts for masses and like purposes.

Why: The entry says trusts were invalidated as superstitious; the footnote names the genuine doctrine the statute relieved against.

B

BOHAN LAW.

This term, in a general sense, comprehends all the laws which pre- vailed among the Romans, without regard to the time of their origin, including the col- lections of Justinian.

In a more restricted sense, the Germans understand by this term merely the law of Justinian, as adopted by them. Mackeld. Rom. Law, | 18.

In England and America, it appears to be customary to use the phrase, indifferently with “the civil law,” to designate the whole system of Roman Jurisprudence, including the Corpus Juris Civttis; or, if any distinc- tion is drawn, the expression “civil law” de- notes the system

RULE, v. This verb has two significa- tions: (1) to command or require by a rule of court ; as, to rule the sheriff to return tbe writ, to rule the defendant to plead. (2> To settle or decide a point of law arising up- on a trial at nisi prius; and, when it Is said of a judge presiding at such a trial that he "ruled" so and so, It is meant that he laid down, settled, or decided such and such to be the law.

RULE, n. 1. An established standard, guide, or regulation; a principle or regula- tion set up by authority, prescribing or di- recting action or forbearance; as, the rules of a legislative body, of a company, court, public office, of the law, of ethics.

2. A regulation made by a court of justice or public office with reference to the conduct of business therein.

3. An order made by a court, at the In- stance of one of the parties to a suit, com- manding a ministerial officer, or the opposite party, to do some act, or to show cause why some act should not be done. It is usually upon some Interlocutory matter, and has not the force or solemnity of a decree or judg- ment.

carrying on with a belligerent power a trade which is not open to them in time of peace. 1 Kent Comm. 82.— Rule of course. There are some rules which the courts authorize their officers to grant as a matter of course, without formal application being made to a judge in open court, and these are tech- nically termed, in English practice, “side-bar rules, because formerly they were moved for by the attorneys at the side bar in court. They are now generally termed “rules of course. Brown.— Rules of court. The rules for regu- lating the practice of the different courts, which the judges are empowered to frame and put in force as occasion may require, are term- ed “rules of court.” Brown. See Goodlett v. Charles, 14 Rich. Law (S. C.) 49.— Rule of bur. A legal principle, of general application, sanctioned by the recognition of authorities, and usually expressed in the form of a maxim or logical proposition. Called a “rule,” because in doubtful or unforeseen cases it is a guide or norm fee their decision. Toullier, tit. prel. no. 17.— Rules of practice. Certain orders made by the courts for the purpose of regulat- ing the practice in actions and other proceed- ings before them.— Rules of procedure. Rules made by a legislative body concerning the mode and manner of conducting its business, and for the purpose of making an orderly and proper disposition of the matters before It, such as rules prescribing what committees shall be appointed, on what subjects they shall act, what shall be the daily order in which business shall be taken up, and in what order certain motions shall be received and acted on. RUN, n. In American law. A water- course of smnll size. Webb v. Bedford, ' 2 Bibb, rtty.) 354.

[Law] — Law

[Law: hearsay — out-of-court statements inadmissible]

Rumor is inadmissible as hearsay — an out-of-court statement offered for its truth.

Why: The entry says rumor 'is not generally admissible in evidence' (cases cited); the hearsay rule is the genuine doctrine.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 23:1, KJV]

Thou shalt not raise a false report.

Why: The entry defines rumor as a current story passing from person to person without known authority for its truth — and notes it is generally inadmissible in evidence. The verse, from the covenant code spoken by God, pro…

[Law] — Law

[Law: account stated — implied promise to pay a settled balance]

An account stated — a settled balance impliedly promised to be paid — is distinguished from a running, open account.

Why: The entry contrasts running with stated and liquidated accounts; the footnote names the genuine doctrine on the other side of the distinction.

RUNNING AT LARGE.

This term is applied to wandering or straying animals.

RUNNING BATS.

Days counted in their regular succession on the calendar, in eluding Sundays and holidays. Brown v. Johnson, 10 Mees. ft W. 334 ; Crowell v. Bar- reda, 16 Gray (Mass.) 472; Davis v. Pender- gast, 7 Fed. Cas. 162.

RUNNING LEASE.

Where a lease pro- vided that the tenancy should not be con- fined to any portion of the land granted, but allowed the tenant the use of all the land he could clear, it was called in the old books a "running lease," as distinguished from one confined to a particular division, circum- scribed by metes and bounds, within a larger tract. Cowan v. Hatcher (Tenn. Ch. App.) 59 S. W. 69L

RUNNING OF THE STATUTE OF / LIMITATIONS.

RUNNING WITH THE LAND.

A cov- enant is said to run with the land when either the liability to perform It or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of that land. Brown.

[Law] — Law

[Spencer's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 16a (1583)]

Whether a covenant runs with the land is governed by Spencer's Case, the foundational authority.

Why: Genuine leading case on covenants running with land; confidently cited in standard form.

RUNNING WITH THE REVERSION.

A covenant is said to “run with the rever- sion” when either the liability to perform It or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of that reversions Brown.

[Law] — Law

[Law: privity of estate — covenants running with the reversion]

Covenants run with the reversion through privity of estate between lessor's assignee and lessee.

Why: Genuine property doctrine for the entry's subject; kept distinct from the Spencer's Case note on the companion entry.

RUNRIG LANDS.

Lands in Scotland where the ridges of a field belong alterna- tively to different proprietors. Anciently this kind of possession was advantageous in giving a united interest to tenants to resist inroads. By the act of 1695, a 23, a division of these lands was authorized, with the ex- ception of lands belonging to corporations. Wharton.

RURAL DEANS.

In English ecclesias- tical la... Very ancient officers of the church; almost grown out of use, until about the middle of the present century, about which time they were generally revived, whose deaneries are as an ecclesiastical di- vision of the diocese or archdeaconry. They are deputies of the bishop, planted all round his diocese, to inspect the conduct of the parochial clergy, to inquire into and report dilapidations, and to examine candidates for confirmation, armed in minuter matters with an Inferior degree of judicial and coercive authority. Wharton.

RURAL SERVITUDE.

In the civil law. A servitude annexed to a rural estate^ (p radium nuticum.)

[Law] — Law

[Law: praedial servitudes — burdens annexed to estates]

A rural servitude is a praedial servitude — a burden on one estate for the benefit of another.

Why: Genuine civil-law property doctrine classifying the servitude the entry defines.

RUSE DE GUERRE.

Fr. A trick in war ; a stratagem.

[Law] — Law

[Law: ruses of war permitted; perfidy prohibited — law of armed conflict]

The law of war permits ruses — stratagems — while prohibiting perfidy.

Why: Genuine distinction of the law of armed conflict directly governing the stratagem the entry defines.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Joshua 8:2, KJV]

lay thee an ambush for the city behind it.

Why: The entry defines ruse de guerre as a trick or stratagem in war. The verse is the LORD's own command to Joshua to lay an ambush for Ai — scripture's instance of a lawful stratagem, ordered by deity, not merely described.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Virgil, Aeneid, Book II]

(paraphrase) The wooden horse by which the Greeks took Troy — the archetypal ruse de guerre, the stratagem the French term names. (paraphrase)

— Ruta et oaeaa. In the civil law. Things dug, (as Band and lime,) and things cut, (as wood, coal, etc.) Dig. 19, 1, 17, 6. Words used in conveyancing.

RYOT.

In India. A peasant, subject, or tenant of house or land. Wharton.

-Ryot-tenure. A system of land-tenure, where the government takes the place of land- owners ana collects the rent by means of tax gatherers. The farming is done by poor peas- ants, (ryots,) who find the capital, so far as there is any, and also do the work. The sys- tem exists in Turkey, Egypt, Persia, and other Eastern countries, and in a modified form in British India. After slavery, it is accounted the worst of all systems, because the government can fix the rent at what it pleases, and it is difficult to distinguish between rent and taxes.

SALADINE TENTH.

A tax imposed in England and France, in 1188, by Pope In- nocent III., to raise a fund for the crusade undertaken by Richard I. of England and Philip Augustus of France, against Saladin. sultan of Egypt, then going to besiege Jeru- salem. By this tax every person who did not enter himself a crusader was obliged to pay a tenth of his yearly revenue and of the value of all his movables, except his wearing apparel, books, and arms. The Carthusians, Bernardines, and some other religious per- sons were exempt. Gibbon remarks that when the necessity for this tax no longer existed, the church still clung to it as tod lucrative to be abandoned, and thus arose the tithing of ecclesiastical benefices for the pope or other sovereigns. SAXE.

A contract between two parties, called, respectively, the “seller” (or vendor) and the “buyer,” (or purchaser,) by which the former, in consideration of the payment or promise of payment of a certain price in money, transfers to the latter the title and the possession of an object of property. See Pard. Droit Commer. 5 6; 2 Kent*, Comm. 863; Poth. Cont Sale, { 1.

Sale is a contract by which, for a pecuni- ary consideration called a “price,” one trans- fers to another an interest in property. Civil Code Cal. i 1721.

The contract of sale is an agreement by which one gives a thing for a price in cur- rent money, and the other gives the price in order to have the thing itself. Three cir- cumstances concur to the perfection of the contract, to-wit, the thing sold, the price, and the consent. Civil Code La. art. 2439.

A transmutation of property from one man to another in consideration of some price or recom- pense in value. 2 Bl. Comm. 446.

“Sale” is a word of precise legal import, both at law and in equity. It means, at all times, a contract between parties to give and to pass rights of property for money, which the buyer pays or promises to pay to the seller for the thing bought and sold. See Butler v. Thomson. 92 U. S. 414, 23 L, Ed. 684; Ward v. State, 45 Ark. 353 ; Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 544. 12

L. Ed. 1170; White v. Treat (C. C.) 100 Fed. 291 ; Iowa v. McFarland, 110 U. S. 471, 4 Sup. Ct. 210. 28 U Ed. 198; Goodwin v. Kerr, SO Mo. 281; State v. Wentworth, 35 N. H. 443; Com. v. Packard, 5 Gray (Mass.) 103; Clemens v. Davis. 7 Pa. 264; Tompkins v. Hunter, 149

N. X. 117, 43 N. E. 532.

Synonyms. The contract of “sale” is distinguished from “barter” (which applies only to goods) and “exchange,” (which is used of both land and goods,) in that both the latter terms denote a commutation of property for property ; i. e., the price or con- sideration is always paid in money if the transaction is a sale, but, if it is a barter or exchange, it is paid in specific property sus- ceptible of valuation. “Sale” differs from “gift” in that the latter transaction involves no return or recompense for the thing trans- ferred. But an onerous gift sometimes ap- proaches the nature of a sale, at least where the charge it imposes is a payment of money. “Sale” is also to be discriminated from “bail- ment;” and the difference is to be found in the fact that the contract of bailment always contemplates the return to the bailor of the specific article delivered, either in its origi- nal form or in a modified or altered form, or the return of an article which, though not identical, is of the same class, and is equiva- lent. But sale never involves the return of the article itself, but only a consideration in money. This contract differs also from “accord and satisfaction because in the latter the object of transferring the property is to compromise and settle a claim, while the object of a sale is the price given.

— Absolut* and conditional sales. An ab- solute sale is one where the property in chat- tels passes to the buyer upon the completion of the bargain between the parties. Truax v. Par- vis, 7 Houst. (Del.) 330, 32 Atl. 227. A condi- tional sale is one m which the transfer of title is made to depend on the performance of a con- dition ; or a purchase for a price paid or to be paid to become absolute on a particular event, or a purchase accompanied by an agreement to resell upon particular terms. Poindexter v. Mc- Cannon, 16 N. C. 373, 18 Am. Dec. 591; Crimp v. McCormick Const. Co., 72 Fed. 366, 18 C. C.

A. 595; Churchill v. Demeritt. 71 N. H. 110, 61 Atl. 254; Van Allen v. Francis, 123 Cal. 474, 56 Pac. 339. Conditional sales are distin- guishable from mortgages. They are to be tak- en strictly as independent dealings between strangers. A mortgage is a security for a debt, while a conditional sale is a purchase for a price paid, or to. be paid, to become absolute on a particular event ; or a purchase accompanied by an agreement to resell upon particular terms. Turner v. Kerr, 44 Mo. 429; Crane v. Bon- nell, 2 N. J. Eq. 264; Weathersly v. Weathers- ly, 40 Miss. 462. 90 Am. Dec. 344; Hopper v. Smyser, 90 Md. 363, 45 Atl. 206.— BUI of sale. See Bill. — Executed and executory sales. An executed sale is one which is final and com- plete in all its particulars and details, nothing remaining to be done by either party to effect an absolute transfer of the subject-matter of the sale. An executory sale is an incompleted sale; one which has been definitely agreed on as to terms and conditions, but which has not yet been carried into full effect in respect to some of its terms or details, as where it remains to determine the price, quantity, or identity of the thing sold, or to pay installments of purchase- money, or to effect a delivery. See McFadden v. Henderson, 128 Ala. 221, 29 South. 640; Fogel v. Brubaker, 122 Pa. 7, 15 Atl. (502 ; Smith v. Barron County Sup’rs, 44 Wis. 691. — Forced sale. A sale made without the con- sent or concurrence of the owner of the proper- ty, but by virtue of judicial process, such as a writ of execution or an order under a decree of foreclosure.— Fraudulent sale. One made for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the owner of the property, by covering up or remov- ing from their reach and converting into cash property which would be subject to the satisfac- tion of their claims.— Judicial sale. A judicial sale is one made under the process of a court having competent authority to order it, by an officer duly appointed and commissioned to sell, as distinguished from a sale by an owner in virtue of his right of property. A name sometimes applied to that form of condi- tional sale in which the goods are placed in the possession of the purchaser subject to his ap- proval, the title remaining in the seller until they are either accepted or rejected by the ven- dee.— Private sale. One negotiated and con- cluded privately between buyer and seller, and not made by advertisement and public outcry or auction. See Barcello v. Hapgood, 118 N. C. 712, 24 S. E. 124.— Public sale. A sale made in pursuance of a notice, by auction or public outcry. Itobins v. Bellas, 4 Watts (Pa.) 258. — Sale an4 return. This is a species of con- tract by which the seller (usually a manufactur- er or wholesaler) delivers a quantity of goods to the buyer, on the understanding that, if the lat- ter should desire to retain or use or resell any portion of such goods, he will consider such part as having been sold to him. and will pay their price, and the Iwlance he will return to the sell- er, or hold them, as bailee, subject to his order.'

SANCTIO.

Lat In the civil law. That part of a law by which a penalty was or- dained against those who should violate it Inst 2* 1, 10.-

SANCTION.

In the original sense of the word, a “sanction” is a penalty or punish- ment provided as a means of enforcing obe- dience to a law. In jurisprudence, a law is said to have a sanction when there is a state which will intervene if it is disobeyed or dis- regarded. Therefore international law has no legal sanction. Sweet

In a more general sense, a “sanction” has been defined as a conditional evil annexed to a law to produce obedience to that law ; and, in a still wilder sense, a “sanction" means simply an authorization of anything. Occa- sionally, “sanction" is used (e. g., in Roman law) to denote a statute, the part (penal clause) being used to denote the -whole. Brown.

8ATI8DATIO. Lat- In the civil law. Security given by a party to an action, as by a defendant, to pay what might be adjudged against him. Inst 4, 11; 3 Bl. Comm. 291.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 6:1, KJV]

My son, if thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger,

Why: The entry defines satisdare as guaranteeing the obligation of a principal — the surety's undertaking. The verse is scripture's direct treatment of that act: becoming surety for a friend, striking the hand — the surety…

SATISFACTION.

The act of satisfying a party by paying what is due to him, (as on a mortgage, lien, or contract,) or what in awarded to him, by the judgment of a court or otherwise. Thus, a judgment is satisfied by the payment of the amount due to the party who has recovered such judgment, or by his levying the amount. See Miller ▼. Beck, 108 Iowa, 575, 79 N. W. 344 ; Rivers v. Blom, 163 Mo. 442, 63 S. W. 812 ; Mazyck v. Coil, 3 Rich. Law (S. C.) . 236 ; Green v. Green, 49 Ind. 423; Bryant v. Fairfield, 51 Me. 152; Armour Bros. Banking Co. v. Add- ington, 1 Ind. T. 304, 37 S. W. 100.

In practice. An entry made on the rec- ord, by which a party in whose favor a judg- ment was rendered declares that he has been satisfied and paid.

In equity. The doctrine of satisfaction in equity is somewhat analogous to perform- ance in equity, but differs from it in this respect: that satisfaction is always some- thing given either in whole or in part as * substitute or equivalent for something else, and not (as in [Law: UCC § 3-311 — accord and satisfaction by use of instrument]

Payment of a lesser sum to settle a disputed claim is accord and satisfaction, discharging the obligation.

Why: Genuine discharge doctrine; the entry defines satisfaction by payment of what is due on a contract or judgment.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:26, KJV]

Verily I say unto thee, Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing.

Why: The entry defines satisfaction as paying what is due — a judgment satisfied by payment of the amount due. The verse states the same rule from Christ's lips: no release until the uttermost farthing is paid — satisfacti...

SATISFIED TERM.

A term of years in land is thus called when the purpose for which it was created has been satisfied or executed before the expiration of the set pe- riod.

— Satisfied terms act. The statute 8 & 9 Viet. c. 112, passed to abolish satisfied outstand- ing terms of years in land. By this act, terms which shall henceforth become attendant upon the inheritance, either by express declaration or construction of law, are to cease and determine. This, in effect, abolishes outstanding terms. 1 Steph. Comm. 380-382; Williams, Real Prop, pt. 4, c. 1.

SATISFY, in technical use, generally means to comply actually and fully with a demand; to extinguish, by payment or per- formance.

Satins est petere fontes quam seotari rlmlos. Lofft, 006. It is better to seek the source than to follow the streamlets.

[Law] — Law

[Law: saving clauses preserve vested rights; tolling suspends limitations]

A statute 'saves' vested rights by a saving clause, and 'saves' limitations by tolling their running.
Why: The entry gives both senses with examples; the footnote names the two genuine doctrines.

SAVER DEFAULT.

L. Fr. In old Eng- ' lish practice. To excuse a default. Terrnes de la Ley.

SAVING CLAUSE.

A saving clause in a statute is an exception of a special thing out of the general things mentioned in the stat- ute ; it is ordinarily a restriction in a repeal- ing act, which is intended to save rights, pending proceedings, penalties, etc., from the annihilation which would result from an un- restricted repeal. State v. St. Louis, 174 Mo. 125, 73 S. W. 623, 61 L. R. A. 093 ; Clark Thread Co. v. Kearney Tp., 50 N. J. Law, 50, 25 AU. 327. TIONS. A creditor is said to "save the statute of limitations" when he saves or pre- serves his debt from being barred by the operation of the statute. Thus, in the case of a simple contract debt, if a creditor com- mence an action for Its recovery within six years from the time when the cause of ac- tion accrued, he will be in time to save the statute. Brown.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 1 U.S.C. § 109 — repeal does not extinguish incurred liabilities]

The federal general saving statute provides that repeal does not extinguish penalties or liabilities already incurred.
Why: Genuine statute embodying the saving-clause principle the entry defines (saving rights, proceedings, penalties from repeal).

SCIENDUM.

Lat. In English law. The name given to a clause inserted In the record by which it is made “known that the justice here In court, in this same term, delivered a writ thereupon to the deputy-sheriff of the county aforesaid, to be executed in due form of law.” Lee, Diet “Record.”

SCIENDUM EST.

Lat It is to be known ; be it remarked. In the books of the Civil law, this phrase la often found at the beginning of a chapter or paragraph, by way of Introduction to some explanation, or di- recting attention to some particular rule.

SCIENTER.

Lat Knowingly. The term is used In pleading to signify an allega- tion (or that part of the declaration or in- dictment which contains it) setting out the defendant's previous knowledge of the cause which led to the injury eomplalned_ of, or rather his previous knowledge of a state of facts which it was his duty to guard against, and his omission to do which has led to the injury complained of. The insertion of such an allegation is called “laying the action (or Indictment) with a scienter." And the term is frequently used to signify the defendant's guilty knowledge.

[Law: Statute of Uses 1535, 27 Hen. VIII c. 10]

The Statute of Uses 1535 executed uses into legal estates, leaving the 'scintilla juris' fiction to support contingent uses.

Why: Genuine statute; the entry itself invokes it as executing the uses the scintilla fiction supported.

SCIRE FACIAS.

Lat In practice. A judicial writ founded upon some record, and requiring the person against whom It Is brought to show cause why the party bring- ing it should not have advantage of such record, or (In the case of a scire facias to re- peal letters patent) why the record should not be annulled and vacated. 2 Archb. Pr.

K. B. 86; Pub. St Mass. p. 1295.

The most common application of this writ is as a. process to revive a judgment, after the lapse of a certain time, or on a change of parties, or otherwise to have execution of 'the Judgment In which cases It is merely a continuation of the original action. It is used more rarely as a mode of proceeding against special bail on their recognizance, and as a means of repealing letters patent in which cases it Is an original proceeding. 2 Archb. Pr. K. B. 86. And see Knapp v. Thomas, 39 Ohio St 383, 48 Am. Rep. 462; Walker v. Wells, 17 Ga. 551, 63 Am. Dec. 252 ; Chestnut v. Chestnut 77 111. 349 ; Lyon v. Ford, 20 D. C. 535; State Treasurer v. An officer in maritime towns and places who took care of the maritime rights of the lord of the manor, and watched the shore, and collected wrecks for the lord. Tomlins.— Son rovers. Pirates and robbers at sea.— Sea-shore. The margin of the sea in its usual and ordinary state. When the tide is out, low-water mark is the margin of the sea ; and, when the sea is full, the margin is high-water mark. The sea-shore is therefore all the ground between the ordinary bigfa- water mark and low-water mark. It cannot be considered as including any ground always covered by the sea, for then it would have no definite limit on the sea-board. Verse 2 is a roadside Fourth Amendment lesson: the assertion of rights against a warrantless search and the demand that the officer produce a warrant — what a search-warrant is and why the law requires one.

Why: Lyrics are verbatim-certain ('I know my rights so you gon' need a warrant for that'; 'enough that you won't illegally search my shit'). They genuinely illuminate the magistrate-issued order to search defined in the en...

SEARCHER.

In English law. An of- ficer of the customs, whose duty it is to ex- amine and search all ships outward bound, to ascertain whether they have any prohibit- ed or uncustomed goods on board. Wharton. Jacob.

SEAWAN.

The name used by the Al- gonquin Indians for the shell beads (or wam- pum) which passed among the Indians as money. Webster.

SEAWORTHINESS.

In marine insur- ance. A warranty of seaworthiness means that the vessel is competent to resist the Ordinary attacks of wind and weather, and Is competently equipped and manned for the voyage, with a sufficient crew, and with suf- ficient means to sustain them, and with a captain of general good character and naut- ical skill. 3 Kent, Comm. 287.

A warranty of seaworthiness extends not only to the condition of the structure of the ship itself, but requires that it be properly laden, and provided with a competent mas- ter, a sufficient number of competent officers and seamen, and the requisite appurtenances and equipments, such as ballast, cables aud anchors, cordage and sails, food, water, fuel, and lights, and other necessary or proper stores and implements for the voyage. Civil Code Cal. § 2684.

The term “seaworthy" is somewhat equivocal. In its more literal sense, it signifies capable of navigating the sea; but, more exactly, it im- plies a condition to be and remain in safety, in the condition she is in, whether at sea, in port, or on a railway, stripped and under repairs. If, when the policy attaches, she is in a suitable place, and capable, when repaired and equipped, of navigating the sea, she is seaworthy. But where a vessel is warranted seaworthy for a specified voyage, the place and usual length hieing given, something more is implied than mere physical strength and capacity; she must be suitably officered and manned, supplied with provisions and water, and furnished with charts and instruments, and, especially in time of war, with documents necessary to her security against hostile capture. The term “seaworthy, as used in the law and practice of insurance, does not mean, as the tern would seem to im- ply, capable of going to sea or of being navi- gated on the sea ; it imports something very different, and much more, viz., that she is sound, staunch, and strong, in all respects, and equipped, furnished, and provided with officers and men, provisions and documents, for a cer- tain service. In a policy for a definite voyage, the term “seaworthy” means “sufficient for such a vessel and voyage.” Capen v. Washington Ins. Co., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 517, 530.

SEAWORTHY.

This adjective, applied to a vessel, signifies that she is properly con- structed, prepared, manned, equipped, and provided, for the voyage intended. See Sea- wobthiness.

SECRET.

Concealed; hidden; not made public; particularly, in law, kept from the knowledge or notice of persons liable to be affected by the act transaction, deed, or other thing spoken of.

As to secret “Committee,” “Equity,” “Lien,” “Partnership,” and “Trust” see those titles.

SECRETARY.

The secretary of a cor- poration or association is an officer charged with the direction and management of that part of the business of the company which is concerned with keeping the records, the of- ficial correspondence, with giving and re- ceiving notices, countersigning documents, etc.

The name “secretary” is also given to sev- eral of the heads of executive departments in the government of the United States; as the "Secretary of War," “Secretary of the Interior,” etc. It is also the style of some of the members of the English cabinet; as the “Secretary of State for Foreign Af- fairs.” There are also secretaries of embas- sies and legations.

— Secretary of decrees and Injnnctioms.

An officer of the English court of chancery. The office was abolished by St. 15 A 16 Viet, c. 87, § 23. — Secretary of embassy. A dip- lomatic officer appointed as secretary or assistant to an ambassador or minister plenipo- tentiary.— Secretary of legation. An officer employed to attend a foreign mission and to per- form certain duties as clerk.— Secretary of state. In American law. This is the tide of the chief of the executive bureau of the United States called the "Department of State.” He is a member of the cabinet, and is charged with the general administration of the inter- national and diplomatic affairs of the govern- ment. In many of the state governments there is an executive officer bearing the same title and exercising important functions. In English law. The secretaries of state are cabinet ministers attending the sovereign for the receipt and dispatch of letters, grants, petitions, and many of the most important affairs of the kingdom, both foreign and domestic. There are five principal secretaries,— one for the home department, another for foreign affairs, a third for the colonies, a fourth for war, and a fifth for India. Wharton.

SECTA.

In old English law. Suit; at- tendance at court ; the plaintiff's suit or fol- lowing, i. e., the witnesses whom he was re- quired, in tHe ancient practice, to bring with him and produce in court, for the purpose of confirming his claim, before the defend- ant was put to the necessity of answering the declaration. See 3 Bl. Comm. 295, 344; Bract, fol. 214a. A survival from this pro- ceeding is seen in the formula still used at the end of declarations, "and therefore he brings his suit," (ef inde producit secta hi.)

This word, in its secondary meaning, sig- nifies suit in the courts; lawsuit.

— Sects ad curiam. A writ that lay against him who refused to perform his suit either to the county court or the court-baron. Cowell. — Seota ad fnraam. In old English law. SEISIN.

The completion of the feudal Investiture, by which the tenant was admit- ted into the feud, and performed the rights of homage and fealty. Stearns, Real Act. 2.

Possession with an Intent on the part of him who holds it td claim a freehold inter- est. Towle v. Ayer, 8 N. H. 58; Ferguson v. Wltsell, 5 Rich. Law (S. C.) 280, 57 Am. Dec. 744 ; McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 361, 21

L. Ed. 341; Desbong v. Deshong, 186 Pa. 227, 40 Atl. 402, 65 Am. St. Rep. 855.

Upon the introduction of the feudal law into England, the word “seisin” was applied only to the possession of an estate of freehold, in contradistinction to that precarious kind of possession by which tenants in villeinage held their lands, which was considered to be the pos- session of those in whom the freehold continued. The word still retains its original signification, being applied exclusively to the possession of land of a freehold tenure, it being inaccurate to use the word as expressive of the possession of leaseholds or terms of years, or even of copy- holds. Brown.

Under our law, the word “seisin” has no accu- rately defined technical meaning. At common law, it imported a feudal investiture of title by actual possession. With us it has the force of possession under some legal title or right to hold. This possession, so far as possession alone is involved, may be shown by parol ; but, if it is intended to show possession under a legal title, then the title must be shown by proper conveyance for that purpose. Ford v. Garner, 49 Ala. 603.

Every person in whom a seisin is required by any of the provisions of this chapter shall be deemed to have been seised, if be may have had any right, title, or interest in the inheritance. Code N. C. 1883, { 1281, rule 12.

— Actual seisin means possession of the free- hold by the pedis positio of one's self or one's tenant or agent, or by construction of law, as in the case of a state grant or a conveyance un- der the statutes of uses, or (probably) of grant or devise where there is no actual adverse pos- session ; it means actual possession as distin- guished from constructive possession or posses- sion in law. Carpenter v. Garrett, 75 Va. 129, 135; Carr v. Anderson, 6 App. Div. 6, 39 N.

Y. Supp. 7 46. — Constructive seisin. Seisin in law where there is no seisin in fact ; as where the state issues a patent to a person who never takes any sort of .possession of the lands granted, he has constructive seisin of all the land in bis grant, though another person is at the time in actual possession. Garrett v. Ram- sey, 26 W. Va. 351. — Covenant of seisin. See Covenant.— Equitable seisin. A seisin which is analogous to legal seisin ; that is, seisin of an equitable estate in land. Thus a mortgagor is said to have equitable seisin of the land by receipt of the rents. Sweet.— Livery of seisin. Delivery of possession ; called, by the feudists, “investiture.”— Primer seisin. In English law. The right which the king had, when any of Mb tenants died seised of a knight's fee, to receive of the heir, provided he were of full age, one whole year's profits of the lands, if they were in immediate possession ; and half a year’s profits, if the lands were in reversion, expectant on an estate for life. 2

Bl. Comm. 66. — Quasi seisin. A term applied to the possession which a copyholder has of the land to which he has been admitted. The free- hold in copyhold lands being in the lord, the copyholder cannot have seisin of them in the proper sense of the word,- but he has a custom- ary or quasi seisin analogous to that of a free- holder. Williams. Seis. 126; Sweet.— Seisin in deed. Actual possession of the freehold; the same as actual seisin or seisin in fact. Vanderheyden v. Crandall, 2 Denio (N. Y.) 21; Backus v. McCoy, 3 Ohio, 221. 17 Am. Dec. 585; Tate v. Jay, 31 Ark. 579.— Seisin in fact. Possession with intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest ; the same as actual seisin. Seim v. O’Grady, 42

W. Va. 77, 24 S. E. 994 ; Savage v. Savage, 19 Or. 112, 23 Pac. 890. 20 Am. St. Rep. 795. —Seisin in ladr. A right of immediate pos- session according to the nature of the estate. Martin v. Trail, 142 Mo. 85, 43 S. W. 055; Savage v. Savage, 19 Or. 112, 23 Pac. 890, 20 Am. St. Rep. 795. As the old doctrine of cor- poreal investiture is no longer in force, the de- livery of a deed gives seisin in law. Watkins v. Nugen, 118 Ga. 372, 45 S. E. 262.— Seisin ox. In Scotch law. A perquisite formerly due to the sheriff when he gave possession to an heir holding crown lands. It was long since con- verted into a payment in money, proportioned to the value of the estate. Bell.

SEIZING OF HERIOTS.

Taking the best beast, etc., where an heriot is due, on the death of the tenant 2 BL Comm. 422.

SEIZURE.

In practice. The act per- formed by an officer of the law, under the authority and exigence of a writ, in taking into the custody of the law the property, real or personal, of a person against whom the judgment of a competent court has pass- ed, condemning him to pay a certain sum of money, in order that such property may be sold, by authority and due course of law, to satisfy the Judgment. Or the act of taking possession of goods in consequence of a vio- lation of public law. See Carey v. Insur- ance Co., 84 Wis. 80, 54 N. W. 18, 20 L. R.

A. 267, 30 Am. St. Rep.. 907; Goubeau v. Railroad Co., 6 Rob. (La.) 348; Fluker v. Bullard, 2 La. Ann. 338; Pelham v. Rose, 9 Wall. 106, 19 L. Ed. 602 ; The Josefa Se- gunda, 10 Wheat. 320, 6 L. Ed. 329.

Seizure, even though hostile, is not necessarily capture, though such is its usual and probable result. The ultimate act or adjudication of the state, by which the seizure has been made, as- signs the proper and conclusive, quality and de- nomination to the original proceeding. A con- demnation asserts a capture ab initio; an award of restitution pronounces upon the act as hav- ing been not a valid act of capture, but an act of temporary seizure only. Appleton v. Crown- inshield, 3 Mass. 443.

In the law of oopyholds. Seizure is where the lord of copyhold lands takes pos- session of them in default of a tenant. It is either seizure guousgue or absolute seiz- ure.

8ELDA. A shop, shed, or stall in a mar- ket; a wood of sallows or willows; also a sawplt. Co. Litt. 4.

One who sells anything; the party who transfers property in the contract of sale. The correlative is “buyer," or “pur- chaser.” Though these terms are not inap- plicable to the persons concerned in a trans- fer of real estate, it is more customary to use “vendor” and “vendee" in that ease.

SEMATNE’S CASE.

This case decided, in 1604, that “every man’s house [meaning his dwelling-house only] is his castle,” and that an officer executing civil process may not break open outer doors in general, but only inner doors, but that (after request made) he may break open even outer doors to find goods of anothef wrongfully in the house. Brown. It is reported in 5 Coke, 91.

[Law] — Law

[Semayne's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 91a (1604)]

Semayne's Case held every man's house is his castle — officers executing civil process may not break outer doors.

Why: Genuine leading case; the entry reports it (5 Coke, 91, decided 1604) and the footnote states its holding.

SEMBLE.

L. Fr. It seems; it would appear. This expression is often used in the reports to preface a statement by the court upon a point of law which is not directly decided, when such statement is Intended as an Intimation of what the decision would be if the point were necessary to be passed up- on. It is also used to introduce a sugges- tion by the reporter, or his understanding of the point decided when it is not free from obscurity.

Semel cl viz semper el vis. Once a citi- zen always a citizen. Tray. Lat. Max. 555.

Sententia a non judice lata nemini debet nocere — a sentence by one not a judge should harm no one.

Why: Real maxim quoted in-entry (Fleta); it genuinely states the jurisdiction requirement for judgments.

SEPARABLE CONTROVERSY.

In the acts of congress relating to the removal of causes from state courts to federal courts, this phrase means a separate and distinct cause of action existing in the suit, on which a separate and distinct suit might properly have been brought and complete relief afford- ed as to such cause of action; or the case must be one capable of separation into parts, so that* in one of the parts, a controversy will be presented, wholly between citizens of different states, which can be fully deter- mined without the presence of any of the other parties to the suit as it has been begun. SEPARALITER.

Lat Separately. Us- ed in indictments to indicate that two or more defendants were charged separately, and not Jointly, with the commission of the offense in question. State v. Edwards, 60 Mo. 490.

SEPARATE, Individual; distinct; par- ticular ; disconnected. Generally used in law as opposed to “Joint,” though the more usu- al antithesis of the latter term is “several.”' Either of these words Implies division, dis- tribution, disconnection, or aloofness. See Merrill v. Pepperdine, 9 Ind. App. 410, 36

N. E. 921; Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 Mich. 104.

—Separate action. As opposed to a joint action, this term signifies an action brought for himself alone by each of several complain- ants who are all concerned in the same trans- action, but cannot legally join in the suit.— Separate demise in ejectment. A demise in a declaration in ejectment used to be termed a “separate demise” when made by the lessor separately or individually, as distinguished from a demise made jointly by two or more persons, which was termed a “joint demise.” No such demise, either separate or joint, is now neces- sary in this action. Brown.— Separate es- tate. The individual property of one of two persons who stand in a social or business rela- tion, as distinguished from that which they own jointly or are jointly interested in. Thus, “sep- arate estate.” within the meaning of the bank- rupt law, is that in which each partner is separately interested at the time of the bank- ruptcy. The term can only be applied to such property as belonged to one or more of tue pait-

—Separation a menu et thoro. A partial .dissolution of the marriage relation.— Separa- tion order. In England, where a husband is convicted of an aggravated assault upon his wife, the court or magistrate may order that the wife shall be no ionger bound to cohabit with him. Such an order has the same effect as a judicial decree of separation on the ground of cruelty. It may also provide for the pay- ment of a weekly sum by the husband to the wife and for the custody of the children. Sweet.

SEPARATION OP PATRIMONY.

In

Louisiana probate law. The creditors of the succession may demand, in every case and against every creditor of the heir, a separa- tion of the property of the succession from that of the heir. This is what is called the "separation of patrimony." The object of a separation of patrimony is to prevent prop- erty out of which a particular class of cred- itors have a right to be paid from being con- founded with other property, and by that means made liable to the debts of another class of creditors. Civ. Code La. art. 1444.

[Law] — Law

[Law: separation of patrimony — succession creditors' preference]

Separation of patrimony keeps the succession's property from confusion with the heir's, preferring succession creditors.

Why: Genuine civilian probate doctrine; the entry defines its object as preventing confusion of the two patrimonies.

SEPARATISTS.

SERJEANT.

The same word etymologic- ally with “sergeant,” but the latter spelling Is more commonly employed In the designa- tion of military and police officers, (see Seh- geant,) while the former Is preferred when the term Is used to describe certain grades of legal practitioners and certain officers of legislative bodies. See infra.

— Common Serjeant. A judicial officer at- tached to the corporation of the city of London, who assists the recorder in disposing of the criminal business at the Old Bailey sessions, or central criminal court. Brown.— Serjeant at arms. An executive officer appointed by, and attending on, a legislative body, whose prin- cipal duties are to execute its warrants, pre- serve order, and arrest offenders.— Serjeant at law. A barrister of the common-law courts of high standing, and of much the same rank as a doctor of law is in the ecclesiastical courts. These serjeants seem to have derived their title from the old knights templar, (among whom there existed a peculiar class under the denomination of “friret serge a*,’’ or "fratres servientes") and to have continued as a separ- ate fraternity from a very early period in the history of the legal profession. The barristers who first assumed the old monastic title were those who practiced In the court of common pleas, and until a recent period (the 25th of April, 1834, 9 ft 10 Viet. c. 54) the serjeants at law always had the exclusive privilege of practice in that court. and terms of the original. Leaving a copy at his place of abode is not personal service. Moyer v. Cook, 12 Wis. 336. — Salvage serv- ice. See Salvage.-- Secular service. World- ly employment or service, as contrasted with spiritual or ecclesiastical.— Service by publi- cation. Service of a summons or other process upon an absent or non-resident defendant, by publishing the same as an advertisement in a designated newspaper, with such other efforts to give him actual notice as the particular statute may prescribe.— Service of an heir. An old form of Scotch law, fixing the right and character of an heir to the estate of nis an- cestor. Bell.— Service of process. The serv- ice of writs, summonses, rules, etc., signifies the delivering to or leaving them with the nto whom or with whom they ought to •livered or left; and, when they are so delivered, they are then said to have been served. Usually a copy only is served and the original is shown. Brown.— Special service. In Scotch law. That form of service by which the heir is served to the ancestor who was feudally vested in the lands. Bell.— Substi- tuted service. This term generally denotes any form of service of process other than per- sonal service, such as service by mail or by publication in a newspaper; but it is sometimes employed to denote service of a writ or notice on some person other than the one directly concerned, for example, his attorney of record, who has authority to represent him or to accept service for him.

SERVITUDE. 1. The condition of be- ing bound to service ; the state of a person who is subjected, voluntarily or otherwise, to another person as his servant — Involuntary servitude. See Involun- tary .—Penal servitude. In English criminal law, a punishment which consists in keeping the offender, in confinement and compelling him to labor.

2. A charge or burden resting upon one estate for the benefit or advantage of an- other ; a species of Incorporeal right derived from the civil law (see Servitus) and closely •corresponding to the “easement” of the com- mon-law, except that “servitude” rather has relation to the burden or the estate burden- ed, while “easement” refers to the benefit or advantage or the estate to which it ac- crues. See Neills v. Munson, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 576 ; Rowe v. NaUy, 81 Md. 367, 32 Atl. 198 ; Los Angeles Terminal Land Co. v. Muir, 136 Cal. 36, 68 Pac. 308; Launder v. Francis, 23 Mo. 184; Rltger v. Parker, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 145, 54 Am. Dec. 744; Kief- fer v. Imhoff, 26 Pa. 438.

The term “servitude,” in its original and popular sense, signifies the duty of service, or rather the condition of one who is liable to the performance of services. The word, how-ever, in its legal sense, is applied figuratively to. things. When the freedom of ownership in land is fettered or restricted, by reason of some person, other than the owner thereof, having some right therein, the land is said to “serve” such person. The restricted condi- tion of the ownership or the ripht which forms the subject-matter of the restriction is termed a "servitude.” and the land so burdened with another’s right is termed a “servient tenement,” while the land belonging to the person enjoying the right is called the “dominant tenement.” The word "servitude” may be said to have both a positive and a negative signification ; in the former sense denoting the restrictive right be- longing to .the entitled party ; in the latter, the restrictive duty entailed upon the proprietor or possessor of the servient land. Brown.

Classification. All servitudes which af- fect lands may be divided into two kinds, — personal and real. Personal servitudes are those attached to the person for whose benefit they are established, and terminate with his life. This kind of servitude is of three sorts, — usufruct, use, and habitation. Real servitudes, which are also called “pred- ial” or “landed” servitudes, are those which the owner of an estate enjoys on a neigh- boring estate for the benefit of his own es- tate. They are called “predial” or "land- ed” servitudes because, being established for the benefit of an estate, they are rather due to the estate than to the owner personally. Civ. Code La. art. 646.

Real servitudes are divided, In .the civil law, into rural and urban servitudes. Rural servitudes are such as are established for the benefit of a lnnded estate ; such, for ex- ample, as a right of way over the servient tenement, or of access to a spring, a coal- mine, a sand-pit, or a wood that is upon It. Urban servitudes are such as are established for the benefit of one building over another. (But the buildings need not be in the city, as the name would apparently imply.) They are such as the right of supiwrt, or of view, or of drip or sewer, or the like. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, $ 316, et seq.

Servitudes are also classed as positive and negative. A positive servitude is one which obliges the owner of the servient estate to permit or suffer something to be done on his pro;>erty by another. A negative servitude Is one which does not bind the servient pro- prietor to permit something to be done upon his property by another, but merely restrains him from making a certain use of his prop- erty which would impair the easement enjoyed by the dominant tenement See Rowe v. Nally, 81 Md. 367, 32 AU. 198.

The sitting of a court legis- lature, council, commission, etc., for the transaction of its proper business. Hence, the period of time, within any one day, dur- ing which such body is assembled In form, and engaged in the transaction of business, or, in a more extended sense, the whole space of time from Its first assembling to its pro- rogation or adjournment tine die.

Synonyms. Strictly speaking, the word “session,” as applied to a court of justice, is not synonymous with the word “term.” The “session" of a court is the time during which It actually sits for the transaction of judicial business, and hence terminates each day with the rising of the court. A “term” of court is the period fixed by law, usually embracing many days or weeks, during which it shall be open for the transaction of judicial business and during which it may bold sessions from day to day. But this distinction is not always observed, many authorities using the two words interchangeably. See Lipari v. State, 19 Tex. App. 433; Stefani v. State, 124 Ind. 3. 24

SET-OFF.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

A counter-claim or cross-de- mand ; a claim or demand which the defend- ant in an action sets off against the claim of the plaintiff, as being his due, whereby he may extinguish the plaintiff’s demand, either in whole or in part, according to the amount of the set-off. See In re Globe Ins. Co., 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 627; Sherman v. Hale, 76 Iowa, 383, 41 N. W. 48 ; Naylor v. Smith, 63 N. J. Law, 596, 44 AO. 649; Hurdle y. Hanner, 50 N. C. 360; Wills v. Browning, 96 Ind. 149.

Set-off is a defense which goes not to the Justice of the plaintiff’s demand, but sets up a demand against the plaintiff to counter- balance bis in whole or in part Code Ga. 1882, i 2899.

For the distinction between set-off and re- coupment, see Recoupment.

“Set-off” differs from a “lien," inasmuch as the former belongs exclusively to the remedy, and is merely a right to insist, if the party think proper to do so, when sued by his creditor on a counter-demand, which can only be en- forced through the medium of judicial proceed- ings; while the latter is, in effect, a substitute for a suit 2 Op. Attys. Gen. 677.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 553 — setoff in bankruptcy]

In bankruptcy, mutual debts are set off against each other under the Bankruptcy Code.

Why: Genuine statute; the entry defines set-off as the defendant's cross-demand extinguishing the plaintiff's.

SET OUT.

SEVER.

To separate. When two joint defendants separate in the action, each plead- ing separately his own plea and relying up- on a separate defense, they are said to sever.

SEVERABLE.

Admitting of severance or separation, capable of being divided ; ca- pable of being severed from other things to which it was joined, and yet maintaining ft complete and independent existence.

[Law] — Law

[Law: severability — valid parts stand though others fall]

Where the valid can be severed from the invalid, the valid stands — the doctrine of severability.
Why: Genuine doctrine; the entry defines severable as capable of maintaining 'a complete and independent existence.'

SEVERAL.

Separate; individual; inde- pendent In this sense the word is distin- guished from “joint” Also exclusive; indi- vidual ; appropriated. In this sense it is op- posed .to “common.”

—Several actions. Where a separate and dis- tinct action is brought against each of two or more persons who are all liable to the plaintiff in respect to the same subject-matter, the ac- tions are said to be "several.” If all the per- sons are joined as defendants in one and the same action, it is called a “joint” action.— Sev- eral inheritance. An inheritance conveyed so as to descend to two persons severally, by moieties, etc. — Several Issues. This occurs where there is more than oue issue involved in a case. 3 Steph. Comm. 569.

As to several “Counts,” “Covenant,” “De- mise,” “Fishery," “Tail,” and “Tenancy," see those titles.

SEVERALTY.

A state of separation. An estate In severalty is oue that is held, by a person in bis own right only, without any Other person being joined or connected with him, in point of interest, during his estate therein. 2 Bl. Comm. 179.

The term "severalty” is especially applied, in England, to the case of adjoining meadows undivided from each other, but belonging, either i>ennanently or in what are called “shifting severalties.” to separate owners, and held In severalty until the crops have been carried, when the whole is throws open as pasture for the cattle of all the owners, and In some cases for the cattle of other persons as well ; each owner Is called a “sev- eralty owner,’’ and his rights of pasture are called “severalty rights,’’ as opposed to the rights of persons not owners. Cooke, Incl. Acts, 47, 163a.

[Law: estate in severalty — sole ownership; 2 Bl. Comm. 179]

An estate in severalty is sole ownership — held in one's own right only, as Blackstone states.

Why: The entry cites 2 Bl. Comm. 179; the footnote names the genuine estate the entry defines.

SEVERANCE.

In pleading. Separa- tion; division. The separation by defend- ants in their pleas ; the adoption, by several defendants, of separate pleas, instead of joining in the same plea. Steph. Pl. 257.

Xn estates. The destruction of any one of the unities of a joint tenancy. It is so called because the estate is no longer a joint tenan- cy, but is severed.

The word “severance” is also used to sig- nify the cutting of the crops, such as corn, grass, etc., or the separating of anything from the realty. Brown.

SEWARD, or SEAWARD. One who guards the sea-coast; cuatoa maria.

[Law] — Law

[Law: four unities of joint tenancy — time, title, interest, possession]

Severance destroys a joint tenancy by breaking one of the four unities — time, title, interest, or possession.

Why: Genuine property doctrine; the entry defines severance in estates as destruction of the unities.

SEWER.

A fresh-water trench or little, river, encompassed with banks on both sides, to drain off surplus water Into the sea. Cow- ell. Properly, a trench artificially made for the purpose of carrying water into the sea, (or a river or pond.) Crabb, Real Prop, f 113.

In its modern and more usual sense, a “sewer” means an under-ground or covered channel used for the drainage of two or more separate buildings, as opposed to a "drain,” which is a channel used for carrying off the drainage of one building or set of build- ings in one curtilage. Alston, 110 Fed. 912, 49 C. C. A. 180.

In English law. The sheriff is the prin- cipal officer in every county, and has the transacting of the public business of the county. He is an officer of great antiquity, and was also called the "shire-reeve," "reeve," or "bailiff." He is called in Latin "vice- cornea," as being the deputy of the earl or comes, to whom anciently the custody of the shire was committed. The duties of the sheriff principally consist in executing writs, precepts, warrants from justices of the peace for the apprehension of offenders, etc. Brown.

In Scotch law. The office of sheriff dif- fers somewhat from the same office under the English law, being, from ancient times, an office of important judicial power, as well as ministerial. The sheriff exercises a juris- diction of considerable extent, both of civil and criminal character, which is, in a proper sense, Judicial, in addition to powers resem- bling those of an English sheriff. To engage to serve on board a vessel as a seaman.

SHIP, n. A vessel of any kind employed In navigation. In a more restricted and more technical sense, a three-masted vessel navigated with sails.

The term “ship” or “shipping,” when used In this Code, Includes steam-boats, sailing vessels, canal-boats, barges, and every struc- ture adapted to be navigated from place to place for the transportation of merchandise or persons. Civ. Code Cal. § 960.

Nautical men apply the term “ship” to distin- guish a vessel having three masts, each consisting of a lower mast, a topmast, and a top- gallant most, with their appropriate rigging. In familiar language, it is usually employed to distinguish any large vessel, however- rig- ged. It is also frequently used as a general designation for all vessels navigated with sails ; and this is the sense in which it is employed in law. Tomlins. And see Cope v. Vallettc Pry-Dock Co., 119 U. The “law of shipping" is a comprehensive term for all that part of the maritime law which relates to ships and the persons em- ployed in or about them. It embraces such subjects as the building and equipment of vessels, their registration, and nationality, their ownership and inspection, their em- ployment. (including charter-parties, freight demurrage, towage, and salvage.) and their sale, transfer, and mortgage; also, the em- ployment rights, powers, and duties of <aa» ters and mariners; and the Taw relating to ship-brokers, ship-agents, pilots, etc.

— Shipping articles. A written agreement be- tween the master of a vessel and the mariners, specifying the voyage or term for which the lat- ter are shipped, and the rate of wages. — Ship- ping’ commissioner. An officer of the United States, appointed by the several circuit courts, within their respective jurisdictions, for each port of entry (the same being also a port of ocean navigation)' which, in the judgment of such court, may require the same ; his duties being to supervise the engagement and discharge of seamen ; to see that men engaged as seamen report on board at the proper time; to facili- tate the apprenticing of persons to the marine service; and other similar duties, such as may be required by law. Rev. St. U. S. S§ 4501— 4608 (U. S. Comp. St 1901, pp. 3061-3067).

SHIPWRECK.

The demolition or shat- tering of a vessel, caused by her driving ashore or on rocks and shoals in the mid- seas, or by the violence of winds and waves In tempests. 2 Am. Ins. p. 734.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Jonah 1:4, KJV]

But the LORD sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken.

Why: The entry defines shipwreck as the shattering of a vessel by the violence of winds and waves in tempests. The verse narrates exactly that: a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken — scriptur...

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[William Shakespeare, The Tempest, c.1610–11]

(paraphrase) The play opens on a ship shattered in a tempest — the canonical stage shipwreck, the very event the entry defines. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuinely illustrates the human reality of the defined event. Certain; marked paraphrase.

SHIRE.

In English law. A county. So ealled because every county or shire is di- vided and parted by certain metes and bounds from another. Co. I/ltt. 50a.

•—Knights of the shire. See Knight.— Shire-clerk. He that keeps the county court, —ghire-man, or Scvre-man. Before the Conquest, the judge or the county, by whom trials for land, etc., were determined. Tomlins ; Mosley & Whitley.— Shire-mote. The assize of the shire, or the assembly of the people, was so called by the Saxons. It was nearly if not exactly, the same as the scyreqemotc, and in most respects corresponded with what were afterwards called the “county courts.” Brown.— Shire-reeve. In Saxon law. The reeve or bailiff of the shire. The viscount of the Anglo-Normans, and the sheriff of later times. Co. Litt. 168a.

SHOCK.

In medical jurisprudence. A sudden and severe depression of the vital functions, particularly of the nerves and the circulation, due to the nervous exhaustion following trauma, surgical operation, or sud- den and violent emotion, resulting (if not in death) in more or less prolonged prostration ; it is spoken of as being either physical or psychical, according as it Is caused by dis- turbance of the bodily powers and functions or of the mind. See Maynard v. Oregon R. Co., 43 Or. 63, 72 Pac. 590.

8HOOFAA. In Mohammedan law. Pre- emption, or a power of possessing property which has been sold, by paying a sum equal to that paid by the purchaser. Wharton.

SHOP.

A building in which goods and merchandise are sold at retail, or where mechanics work, and sometimes keep their products for sale. See State v. Morgan, 98

N. C. 641, 3 S. E. 927; State v. O'Connell, 26 Ind. 267 ; State v. Sprague, 149 Mo. 409, 50 S. W. 901.

. Strictly, a shop is a place where goods nre sold by retail, and a store a place where goods nre deposited; but, in this country, shops for the sale Of goods are frequently called "stores.” Com. v. Annis, 15 Gray (Mass.) 197. —Shop-hooks. Books of original entry kept by tradesmen, shop-keepers, mechanics, and the like, in which are entered their accounts and charges for goods sold, work done, etc.

SHOP A.

In old records, a shop. Cowell.

SHORE.

Land on the margin of the sea, or a lake or river.

In common parlance, the word "shore” is understood to mean the line that separates the tide-water from the land about it, wher- ever that line may be, and in whatever stage of the tide. The word “shore,” in its legal and technical sense, indicates the lands ad- jacent to navigable waters, where the tide flows and reflows, which at high tides are submerged, and at low tides are bare. Shiv- ely v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct.' 548, 38 L. Ed. 331 ; Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 400, 16 Am. Rep. 46 ; U. S. v. Pacheco, 2 Wall. 590, 17 L. Ed. 865 ; Harlan & Hollings- worth Co. v. Paschall, 5 Del. Ch. 463; Lacy v. Green, 84 Pa. 519; Axline v. Shaw, 35 Fla. 305, 17 South. 411, 28 L. R. A. 391.'

Sea-shore is that space of land over which the waters of the sea spread in the highest water, during the winter season. Civ. Code La. art 451.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

When the sea-shore is referred to as a bound- ary, the meaning must be understood to be the margin of the sea in its usual and ordinary state ; the ground between the ordinary high- water mark and low-water mark is the shore. Hence a deed of land bounded at or by the ‘‘shore” will convey the flats as appurtenant/ Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, 4 Am. Dec. 155.

[Law] — Law

[Law: public trust — tide lands and navigable waters]

Shore lands where the tide flows and reflows are held under the public trust for navigation and fishery.

Why: Genuine doctrine; the entry defines 'shore' in its legal sense as lands adjacent to navigable tidewaters.

SHORT CAUSE.

A cause which Is not likely to occupy a great portion of the time of the court, and which may be entered on the list of “short causes,” upon the applica- tion of one of the parties, and will then be heard more speedily than it would be in its regular order. This practice obtains in the English chancery and in some of the American states.

SHORT ENTRY.

A custom of hankers of entering on the customer’s pass-book the amount of notes deposited for collection, in such a manner that the amount is not car- ried to the latter’s general balance until the notes are paid. See Giles v. Perkins, 9 East, 12; Blaine v. Bourne, 11 R. I. 121. 23 Am. Rep. 429.

SHORT LEASE.

A term applied collo- quially, but without much precision, to a lease for a short term, (as a month or a year,) as distinguished from one running for a long period.

SHORT NOTICE.

In practice. Notice of less than the ordinary time; generally of half that time. 2 Tidd, Pr. 757.

NULLA 8IT CONJECTURA

SHORT SUMMONS.

A process, author- ised in some of the states, to be issued against an absconding, fraudulent, or non- resident debtor, which is returnable within a less number of days than an ordinary writ of summons.

SHORTFORD.

An old custom of the city of Exeter. A mode of foreclosing the right of a tenant by the chief lord of the fee, in cases of non-payment of rent Cowell.

SHOW.

Although the words “show" and “Indicate" are sometimes interchangeable in popular use, they are not always so. To “show” is to make apparent or clear by evi- dence; to prove; while an "Indication” may be merely a symptom ; that which points to or gives direction to the mind. Coyle v. Com., 104 Pa. 133.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

SHOW CAUSE.

To show cause against a rule nisi, an order, decree, execution, etc., is to appear as directed, and present to the court such reasons and considerations as one has to offer why it should not be con- firmed, take effect, be executed, or as the case may be.

[Law] — Law

[Law: rule to show cause — order nisi]

A rule to show cause orders the party to appear and show why the rule should not be made absolute.

Why: Genuine procedural device; the entry defines showing cause against a rule nisi.

SHRIEVALTY.

The office of sheriff; the period of that office.

SHYSTER.

A “pettifogging shyster” is an unscrupulous practitioner who disgraces his profession by doing mean work, and re- sorts to sharp practice to do it Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 Mich. 231. See, also, Grlbble v. Pioneer Press Co., 84 Minn. 342, 25 N. W. 710.

SIDE.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The same court is sometimes said to have different sides; that is, different provinces or fields of Jurisdiction. Thus, an admiralty court may have an “instance side,” distinct from its powers as a prize court; the “crown side,” (criminal Jurisdiction) is to be distinguished from the “plea side," (civil Jurisdiction ;) the same court may have an “equity side” and a “law side.”

[Law] — Law

[Law: law and equity sides of the court]

Why: Genuine jurisdictional structure; the entry defines the sides, including law vs. equity.

SIDE-BAR RULES.

In English prac- tice. There are some rules which the courts authorize their ofiicers to grant as a matter of course without formal application being made to them in open court, and these are technically termed “side-bar rules,” because formerly they were moved for by the attor- neys at the side bar In court: such, for in- stance, was the rule to plead, which was an order or command of the court requiring a defendant to plead within a specified number of days. Such also were the rules to reply, to rejoin, and many others, the granting of which depended upon settled rules of prac- tice rather than upon the discretion of the courts, all of which are rendered unneces- sary by recent statutory changes. Brown, voc. “Rule.”

SIDE LUTES.

In mining law, the side lines of a mining clnim are those which measure the extent of the claim on each side of the middle of the vein at the surface. They are not necessarily the side lines as laid down on the ground or on a map or plat ; for if the claim, in its longer dimen- sion, crosses the vein. Instead of following It, the platted side lines will be treated in law as the end lines, and vice versa. See Argentine Min. Co. v. Terrible Min. Co., 122

U. S. 478, 7 Sup. Ct 1350, 30 L. Ed. 1140; Del Monte Min. Co. v. Last Chance Min. Co., 171 U. S. 53, 18 Sup. Ct. 8!>5, 43 L. Ed. 72.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:16, KJV]

Why: Slander is oral defamation — false, malicious speech against another; the ninth commandment is the direct divine prohibition of exactly that wrong.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Shakespeare, Othello, c. 1603]

Who steals my purse steals trash... but he that filches from me my good name / Robs me of that which not enriches him, / And makes me poor indeed.

Why: Iago's speech (III.iii) is the definitive literary treatment of reputation-theft — oral words injuring reputation, the heart of the slander definition. (Headword key kept in the chunk's OCR form 'BLANDER' for 'SLANDER'.)

S

SLANDERER.

One who maliciously and without reason imputes a crime or fault to another of which he is innocent. See Slmj- deb.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 10:18, KJV]

He that hideth hatred with lying lips, and he that uttereth a slander, is a fool.

Why: The slanderer is one who maliciously imputes crime or fault; the proverb names the utterer of slander and passes sentence on him.

[Hip-hop] — Hip-hop

[Public Enemy, "Don't Believe the Hype", 1988]

"Don't believe the hype!" — Black's: a slanderer "maliciously and without reason imputes a crime or fault to another of which he is innocent." The track is Public Enemy's answer to false press narratives about the group — a rebuttal to slanderers — and the hook instructs the listener's defense: disbelieve false public imputations.

Why: The song's subject is literally defamation — false public claims imputing faults to persons; the hook is verbatim-certain. It genuinely illuminates the act of slandering and the defense against it.

SLAVE.

A person who is wholly subject to the will of another ; one who lias no free- dom of action, but whose person and serv- ices are wholly under the control of another. Webster.

One who is under the power of a master, and who belongs to him ; so that the master may sell and dispose of his person, of his in- dustry, and of his labor, without his being nlile to do anything, have anything, or ac- quire anything, but what must belong to his master. Civ. Code La. art. 35.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Galatians 3:28, KJV]

There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.

Why: SLAVE is defined as one wholly subject to another's will with no freedom of action; the 'bond nor free' clause directly addresses that legal status, declaring it abolished in the relevant reckoning.

[Hip-hop] — Hip-hop

"Rich nigga, poor nigga, house nigga, field nigga / Still nigga, still nigga" — Black's defines the slave as one "wholly subject to the will of another... under the power of a master." Jay-Z's hook names the plantation typology directly (house nigga, field nigga) and lands on "still nigga": the claim that the condition of total subjection persists regardless of wealth or status.

Why: The lyric directly names slave roles from American chattel slavery and asserts the condition's persistence; it genuinely illuminates the definition's core (wholly subject to another's will) rather than decorating it.…

[Law] — Law

[Law: Act of Mar. 2, 1807, prohibiting the importation of slaves, effective Jan. 1, 1808]

The traffic the entry defines was statutorily extinguished in the United States by the federal prohibition of slave importation, effective 1808, long before the Thirteenth Amendment abolished the underlying status.

Why: The body is a bare one-line definition ('the traffic in slaves') with no legal-status information; the footnote supplies the operative federal abolition of the trade itself — distinct from the Thirteenth Amendment's a...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 21:16, KJV]

And he that stealeth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death.

Why: The slave-trade is the buying and selling of men for profit; man-stealing-for-sale is the trade's engine, and the verse condemns it capitally.

[Hip-hop] — Hip-hop

"New Slaves" argues the trade continues in modern form: consumerism, coercive contracts, and the prison-industrial complex ("They tryna lock niggas up, they tryna make new slaves"; "I know that we the new slaves"). The refrain is the refusal of the follower's — the slave's — role.

Why: The song's entire thesis is that the slave trade's logic (buying and selling human beings for profit) persists in new institutions; the quoted refrain states the refusal of that subjection. Wording verified verbatim a...

Socage tenure, in England, is the holding of certain lands in consideration of certain inferior services of husbandry to be performed by the tenant to the lord of the fee. "Socage,” in its most general and ex- tensive signification, seems to denote a ten- ure by any certain and determinate service. And in this sense it Is by the ancient writers constantly put In opposition to tenure by chivalry or knight-service, where the render was precarious and uncertain. Socage is of two sorts, — free socage, where the services are not only certain, but honorable ; and vil- lein socage, where the services, though cer- tain, are of baser nature. Such as hold by the former tenure are also called in Glanvil and other authors by the name of “liberi sokemanni," or tenants in free socage. By the statute 12 Car. 2, c. 24, all the tenures by knight-service were, with one or two im- material exceptions, converted into free and common socage. See Cowell; Bract. 1. 2, c. 35; 2 Bl. SODOMY.

In criminal law. The crime of unnatural sexual connection; so named from Its prevalence In Sodom. See Gene- sis, xix.

This term is often defined in statutes and judicial decisions as meaning “the crime against nature," the “crimen innominatum,” or as car- nal copulation, against the order of nature, by man with man, or, in the same unnatural manner, with woman or with a beast. See Cr. Code Ga. f 4352; Honseiman v. People, 168 111. 172, 48 N. E. 304. But, strictly speaking, it should be used only as equivalent to “pederas- ty," that Is, the sexual act as performed by a man upon the person of another man or a boy by penetration of the amm. See Ausman v. Veal, 10 Ind. 355, 71 Am. Dec. 331. The term might also, without any great violence to ita original meaning, be so extended as to cover the same act when performed in the same man- ner by a man upon the person of a woman. Another possible method of unilateral sexual connection, by penetration of the mouth (penem in ore m alii immiltcre, vcl penem alii in ore m recipere) is not properly called “sodomy," but “fellation.” That this does not constitute sodo- my within the meaning of a statute is held in Harvev v. - SOROR. Lat. In the civil law. Slater ; a sister. Ihst. 3, 6, 1.

SORORICIBE.

The killing or murder of a sister; one who murders his sister. This Is not a technical term of the law.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 9:6, KJV]

Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man.

Why: Sororicide is the killing of a sister — kin-murder; the verse is the post-diluvian homicide ordinance covering all shedding of man's blood, grounded in the image of God.

SORS.

Lat. In the civil law. Lot; chance; fortune; hazard; a lot, made of wood, gold, or other material. Money bor- rowed, or put out at interest. A principal sum or fund, such as the capital of a part- nership. Ainsworth ; Calvin.

Ia old English law. A principal lent on interest, as distinguished from the inter- est itself.

A thing recovered in action, as distin- guished from the costs of the action.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 16:33, KJV]

The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the LORD.

Why: Sors is lot, chance, hazard; the proverb is the classical statement on the lot itself.

SOURCES OF THE LAW.

The origins from which particular positive laws derive their authority and coercive force. Such are constitutions, treaties, statutes, usages, and customs.

In another sense, the authoritative or re- liable works, records, documents, edicts, etc., to which we are to look for an understand- ing of what constitutes the law. Such, for example, with reference to the Roman law, are the compilations of Justinian and the treatise of Gaius; and such, with reference to the common law, are especially the an- cient reports and t£e works of such writers as Bracton, Littleton, Coke, “Fleta,” and others.

States whose subjects or citizens are in the habit of obedience to them, and which are not them- selves subject to any other (or paramount) state in any respect The state is said to be semi- sovereign only, and not sovereign, when in any respect or respects it is liable to be controlled (like certain of the states in India) by a para- mount government (e. g., by the British empire.) Brown. "In the intercourse of nations, certain states have a position of entire independence of others, and can perform all those acts which it is possible for any state to perform in this par- ticular sphere. These same states have also entire power of self-government; that is, of in- dependence upon all other states as far as their own territory and citizens not living abroad are concerned. SOVEREIGNTY.

The possession of sovereign power; supreme political author- ity; paramount control of the constitution and frame of government and Its administra- tion; the self-sufficient source of political power, from which all specific political pow- ers are derived; the international Independ- ence of a state, combined with the right and power of regulating its internal

“The freedom of the nation has its correlate in the sovereignty of the nation. Political sovereignty is the assertion of the self-determi- nate will of the organic people, and in this there is the manifestation of its freedom. It is In and through the determination of its sovereign- ty that the order of the nation is constituted and maintained.” Mulford, Nation, p. 129.

“If a determinate human superior, not in a habit of obedience to a like superior, receive habitual obedience from the bulk of a given so- ciety, that determinate superior is sovereign in that society, and the society (including the su- perior) is a society political and independent.” Aust. Jur.

[Scripture] — Scripture

Why: The song is a sustained meditation on the state's monopoly of force; the hook is the certain, famous formulation. It genuinely illuminates sovereignty-as-coercive-authority rather than the abstract definition alone.

SPENDTHRIFT.

A person who by ex- cessive drinking, gaming, idleness, or de- bauchery of any kind shall so spend, waste, or lessen his estate as to expose himself or his family to want or suffering, or expose the town to charge or expense for the support of himself or family. Rev. St. Vt C. 65, § 9; Appeal of Morey, 57 N. H. 54.

The word “spendthrift,” in all the provi- sions relating to guardians and wards, con- tained in this or any other statute, is in- tended to include every person who is liable to be put under guardianship, on account of excessive drinking, gaming, idleness, or de- bauchery. How. St. Mich. 1882, { 6340.

—Spendthrift trust. A term commonly ap- plied to those trusts which are created with a view of providing a fhnd for the maintenance of another, and at the same time securing it against his improvidence or incapacity for his protection. Provisions against alienation of the trust fund by the voluntary act of the beneficia- ry or by his creditors are the usual incidents. Bennett v. Bennett, 66 ill. App. 28; Guernsey v. Lazear, 51 W. SPY.

A person sent into an enemy’s camp to inspect their works, ascertain their strength and their intentions, watch their movements, and secretly communicate intel- ligence to the proper officer. By the laws of war among all civilized nntions. a spy is pun- ished with death. Webster. See Vattel, 3, 179.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 13:2, KJV]

Send thou men, that they may search the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel:

Why: A spy is sent into the enemy's camp to inspect works and strength; the verse is the archetypal military reconnaissance commission, ordered as such.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Ian Fleming, Casino Royale, 1953]

(paraphrase) Ian Fleming's James Bond, the glamorous secret agent, inverts the entry's grim reality — by the laws of war the captured spy faces death. (paraphrase)

Why: The archetypal fictional spy; the contrast between the glamour and the entry's 'punished with death' illuminates the definition's severity.

SQUARE.

As used to designate a certain portion of laud within the limits of a city or town, this term may be synonymous with "block,” that Is, the smallest subdivision which is bounded on all sides by principal streets, or it may denote a space (more or less rectangular) not built upon, and set apart for public passage, use, recreation, or orna- mentation, in the nature of a "park" but smaller. STAND.

To abide; to submit to; as “to stand a trial.” »

To remain as a thing is; to remain in force. Pleadings demurred to and held good are allowed to stand.

To appear in court.

— Standing aside Jurors. A practice by which, on tne drawing of a jury for a criminal trial, the prosecuting officer puts aside a juror, provisionally, until the panel is exhausted, without disclosing his reasons, instead of being re- quired to challenge him and show cause. The statute 33 Edw. I. deprived the crown of the power to challenge jurors without showing cause, and the practice of standing aside jurors was adopted, in England, as a method of evad- ing its provisions. A similar practice is in use in Pennsylvania. See Warren v. Com., 37 Pa. 54; Zell v. Com., 94 Pa. 272; Haines v. Com., 100 Pa. 322. But in Missouri, it is said that the words "stand aside” are the usual formulg. used in impaneling a jury, for rejecting a juror. State v. Hultz, 106 Mo. 41, 16 S. W. 94a — Standing by is used in law as implying knowledge, under such circumstances as ren- dered it the duty of the possessor to communi- cate it; and it is such knowledge, and not the mere fact of “standing by,” that lays the foun- dation of responsibility. A work in thirty-three volumes octavo, containing all English trials for offenses against the state and others partaking in some degree of that character, from the ninth year of Hen. II. to the first of Geo. IV.

STATE OF FACTS.

Formerly, when a master in chancery was directed by the court of chancery to make an Inquiry or investiga- tion into any matter arising out of a suit, and which could not conveniently be brought before the court itself, each party in the suit carried in before the master a statement showing how the party bringing it in repre- sented the matter in question to be; and this statement was technically termed a "state of facts," and formed the ground upon which the evidence was received, the evidence be- ing, in fact, brought by one party or the other, to prove his own or disprove his op- ponent's state of facts. And so now, a state of facts means the statement made by any one of his version of the facts. Brown.

STATE OF FACTS AND PROPOSAL.

In English lunacy practice, when a person has been found a lunatic, the next step is to submit to the master a scheme called a “state of facts and proposal,” showing what is the position in life, property, aqd income of the lunatic, who are his next of kin and heir at law, who are proposed as bis committees, and what annual sum is proposed to be allowed for his maintenance, etc. From the state of facts and the evidence adduced in support of it, the master frames his report Elmer, Lun. 22; Pope, Lun. 79; Sweet

In a general sense, an allegation; a declaration of matters of fact. The term has come to be used of a variety of formal narratives of facts, required by lnw in various jurisdictions as the foundation of judicial or official proceedings.

— Statement of affairs. In English bank- ruptcy practice, a bankrupt or debtor who has presented a petition for liquidation or composi- tion must produce at the first meeting of cred- itors a statement of his affairs, giving a list of his creditors, secured and unsecured, with the value of the securities, a list of bills discount- ed, and a statement of his property. Sweet. —Statement of claim. A written or printed statement by the plaintiff in an action in the English high court, showing the facts on which he relies to support his claim against the de- fendant, and the relief which he claims. It is delivered to the defendant or his solicitor. The delivery of the statement of claim is usually the next step after appearance, and is the commence- ment of the pleadings. Sweet.— Statement of defense. In the practice of the English high court, where the defendant in an action docs not demur to the whole of the plaintiff’s claim, he delivers a pleading called a “statement of de- fense.” The statement of defense deals with the allegations contained in the statement of claim, (or the indorsement on the writ, if there is no statement of claim,) admitting or denying them, and, if necessary, stating fresh facts in expla- nation or avoidance of those alleged by the plaintiff. Sweet— Statement of ptrtionlsn. In English practice, when the plaintiff claims a debt or liquidated demand, but has not indors- ed the writ specially, (i. e., indorsed on it the particulars of his claim under Order iii. r. 6.) and the defendant fails to appear, the plaintiff may file a statement of the particulars of his claim, and after eight days enter judgment for the amount, as if the writ bad been specially in- dorsed. III. The third public act in the statute-book. It has been pronounced not to be a statute. In the form of it, it appears to be an instruction given by the king to bis justices in Ireland, directing them how to proceed in a certain point where they entertained a doubt. It seems the justices itinerant in that country had a doubt, when land descended to sisters, whether the younger sisters ought to hold of the eldest, and do homage to her for their several portions, or of the chief lord, and do homage to him ; and certain knights had been sent over to know what the practice was in England in such a case. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 259. — Statutum sessionum. In old English law. suits shall not be instituted until a certain time after the cause of action arose, or otherwise suspending legal remedies; designed for the re- lief of debtors, in times of general distress or financial trouble.— Stay of execution. The stopping or arresting of execution on a judgment, that is, of the judgment-creditor’s right to issue execution, for a limited period. This is given by statute in many jurisdictions, as a privilege to the debtor, usually on his furnishing bail for the debt, costs, and interest. Or it may take place by agreement of the parties. See National Docks, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania

R. Co., 54 N. J. Eq. 167, 33 Atl. 938.— Stay of proceedings. The temporary suspension of the regular order of proceedings in a cause, by direction or order of the court, usually to await the action of one of the parties in regard to some omitted step or some act which the court has required him to perform as incidental to the suit; as where a non-resident plaintiff has been ruled to give security for costs. See Wallace v. Wallace, 13 Wis. 228: Lew ton v. Hower, 18 Fla. 876; Rossi ter v. AStna L. Ins. Qo., 98 Wis. 466, 71 N. W. 898.

STEAL.

This term Is commonly used In Indictments Tor larceny, (“take, steal, and qarry away,") and denotes the commission of theft. But, In popular usage, “stealing" seems to be a wider term than “larceny," In- asmuch as It may Include the unlawful ap- propriation of things which are not technic- ally the subject of larceny, e. g., Immova- bles. See Randall v. Evening News Ass’n, 101 Mich. 561, 60 N. W. 301 ; People v. Du- ma r, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 85; Com. v. Kelley, 184 Mass. 320, 68 N. E. 346 ; Holmes v. Gil- man, 64 Hun, 227, 19 N. Y. — Stealing children. See Kidnapping.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:15, KJV]

Thou shalt not steal.

Why: Steal is the indictment term for larceny — 'take, steal, and carry away'; the eighth commandment prohibits the act directly.

STEWARD.

This word signifies a man appointed In the place or stead of another, and generally denotes a principal officer within his jurisdiction. Brown.

— Land steward. See Land.— Steward of a manor. An important officer who has the general management of all forensic matters con- nected with the manor of which he is steward. He stands in much the same relation to the lord of the manor as an under-sheriff does to the sheriff. Cowell. — Steward of all England. In old English law. An officer who was invested with various powers ; among others, to pre- side on the trial of peers. — Steward of Scotland. An officer of the highest dignity and trust. He administered the crown revenues, superintended the affairs of the household, and possessed the privilege of holding the first place in the army, next to the king, in the day of battle. From this office the royal house of Stu- art took its name. But the office was sunk on their advancement to the throne, and has never since been revived. Bell.

STEWARTRY, in Scotch law, is said to be equivalent to the English "county.” See Brown.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 12:42, KJV]

And the Lord said, Who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season?

Why: A steward is one appointed in another's place over his affairs; Christ's parable defines the faithful steward as the one set over his lord's household — the entry's definition nearly verbatim.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[J.R.R. Tolkien, The Lord of the Rings, 1954-55]

(paraphrase) Denethor, Steward of Gondor, rules the realm in the king's absence — a man appointed in the place of another, exactly as defined. (paraphrase)

Why: Matches the entry's definition nearly word for word: one appointed in the place or stead of another.

Lat. In the Roman law. stipulatio was the verbal contract (verbis obligatio ,) and was the most solemn and formal of all the contracts in that system of jurisprudence. It was entered into by ques- tion and corresponding answer thereto, by the parties, both being present at the same time, and usually by such words as “spondesf spondeo,” “promitlist promitto," and the like. Brown.

—Stipulatio Aqniliana. A particular appli- cation of the stipulatio, which waa used to col- lect together into one verbal contract all the li- abilities of every kind and quality of the dcbtor, with a view to their being released or dis- charged by an acoeptilatio, that mode of dis- charge being applicable only to the verbal con- tract. Brown.

STIPULATION.

A material article in an agreement lit practice. An engagement or under- taking In writing, to do a certain act ; as to try a cause at a certain time. 1 Burrlll, Pr. 389.

The name “stipulation” Is familiarly given to any agreement made by the attorneys en- gaged on opposite sides of a cause, (especially If In writing.) regulating any matter Inci- dental to the proceedings or trial, which falls within their Jurisdiction. Such, for instance, are agreements to extend the time for plead- ing, to take depositions, to waive objections, to admit certain facts, to continue the cause. See Lewis v. Orpheus, 15 Fed. Cas. 492.

In admiralty practice. A recognizance of certain persons (called in the old law “fide iussors") in the nature of bail for the ap- pearance of a defendant 3 Bl. Comm. 108.

STIPULATOR.

In the civil law. The party who asked the question in the contract of stipulation ; the other party, or he who an- swered, being called the “promissor.” But, In a more general sense, the term was ap- plied to both the parties. Calvin.

8TIBP8. Lat A root or stock of descent or title. Taking property by right of repre- sentation is called “succession per stirpes,” in opposition to taking in one's own right, or as a principal, which is termed "taking per capita." See Rotmanskey v. Heiss, 86 Md, 633, 39 Atl. 415.

STOCK.

In mercantile law. The goods and wares of a merchant or trades- man, kept for sale and traffic.

In a larger sense. The capital of a mer- chant or other person. Including his mer- chandise, money, and credits, or, in other words, the entire property employed in busi- ness.

In corporation law. The capital or prin- cipal fund of a corporation or Joint-stock company, formed by the contributions of sub- scribers or the sale of shares, and considered as the aggregate of a certain number of shares severally owned by the members or stockholders of the corporation; also the proportional part of the capital which is owned by an individual stockholder; also the incorporeal property which is represent- ed by the holding of a certificate of stock; and in a wider and more remote sense, the right of a shareholder to participate in the general management of the company and to share proportionally in its net profits or earnings or in the distribution of assets on dissolution. See Thayer v. Wathen, 17 Tex.

The funded indebtedness of a. state or gov- ernment also, is often represented by stocks, shares of which are held by its creditors at interest

In the law of descent. The term is used, metaphorically, to denote the original pro- genitor of a family, or the ancestor from whom the persons in question are all descend- ed; such descendants being called “branch- es.”

Glauses of eorporate stock. Preferred stock is a separate portion or class of the stock of a corporation, which is accorded, by the charter or by-laws, a preference or priority in respect to dividends, over the re- mainder of the stock of the corporation, which in thnt case is called “common” stock. That is, holders of the preferred stock are entitled to receive dividends at a fixed an- nual rate, out of the net earnings or profits of the corporation, before any distribution of earnings is made to the common stock. If the earnings applicable to the payment of dividends are not more than sufficient for such fixed annual dividend, they will be en- tirely absorbed by the preferred stock. If they are more than sufficient for the purpose, the remainder may be given entirely to the common stock (which is the more usual cus- tom) or such remainder may be distributed pro rata to both classes of the stock, in which case the preferred stock is said to “partici- pate” with the common. The fixed dividend on preferred stock may be “cumulative” or “non-cumnlative.” In the former case. If the stipulated dividend on preferred stock is not earned or paid in any one year, It becomes a charge upon the surplus earnings of the next and succeeding years, and all such accumu- lated and unpaid dividends on the preferred stock must be paid off before the common stock is entitled to receive dividends. In the case of “non-cumulative” preferred stock, its preference for any given year is extin- guished by the failure to earn or pay Its divi- dend in that year. If a corporation has no class of preferred stock, all its stock Is com- mon stock. The word “common” in this con- nection signifies that all the holders of such stock are entitled to an equal pro rata division Of profits or net earnings, if any there be, without any preference or priority among themselves. “Deferred” stock is rare- ly Issued by American corporations, though it is not uncommon in England. This kind of stock is distinguished by the fact that the payment of dividends upon it is expressly postponed until some other class of stock has received a dividend, or until some certain liability or obligation of the corporation is discharged. If there is a class of "preferred” stock, the common stock may in this sense be said to be “deferred,” and the term Is sometimes used as equivalent to “common” stock. But it is not impossible that a cor* poration should have three classes of stock: (1) Preferred, (2) common, and (3) deferred; the latter clpss being postponed, in respect to participation in profits, until both the preferred and the common stock had received dividends at a fixed rate. See Cook, Corp. g 12; State v. Railroad Co., 16 S. C. 528; Scott v. Railroad Co., 03 Md. 475, 49 Atl. 327; Jones v. Railroad Co., 67 N. H. 234, 30 Atl. 614, 68 Am. St. Rep. 650; Lockhart v. —Capital stock. See that title.— Certlll- cate of stock. See Certificate. — Guaran- tied stock. Stock of a corporation which is entitled to receive dividends at a fixed annual rate, the payment of which dividends is guar- antied by some outside person or corporation. See Field v. Lamson, etc., Mfg. Co.. 162 Mass. 388, 38 N. E. 1126, 27 L. R. A. 136.— Pnblio stocks. The funded or bonded debt of a gov- ernment or state. — Special stock of a corpora- tion, in Massachusetts, is authorized by statute. It is limited in amount to two-fifths of the actu- al capital. It is subject to redemption by tlie corporation at par after a fixed time. The cor- poration 1b bound to pay a fixed annual divi- dend on it as a debt The holders of it are in no event liable for the debts of the corpora- tion beyond their stock ; and an issue of spe- cial stock makes all the general stockholder*! liable for all debts and contracts of the corpora- tion until the special stock is fully redeemed. speculation. State v. Debenture Co.. 51 La. Ann. 1874. 26 South. 600.— Stock-note. The term “stock- note” has no technical meaning, and may as well apply to a note given on the sale of stock which the bank hod purchased or taken in the payment of doubtful debts as to a note given on account of an original subscription to stock. Dunlap v. Smith. 12 111. 402.— Water- ed stock. Stock issued by way of increase or addition to the nominal capital stock of the corporation, and passing into the hands of stockholders either by purchase or in the form of a stock dividend, but which does not repre- sent or correspond to any increase iu the actual capital or actual value of the assets of the cor- poration. See Appeal 6f Wiitbank, 64 I’a. 260, 3 Am. Rep. 585.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

STOCKHOLDER.

A person- who owns shares of- stock in a corporation or joint- stock company. See Mills v. Stewart, 41 N.

The owners of shares In a corporation which has a capital stock are called “stock- holders.” If a corporation has no capital stock, the corporators and their successors are called “members." Civ. Code Dak. f 392.

STOCKS.

A machine consisting of two pieces of timber, arranged to be fastened to- gether, and holding fast the legs of a person placed in it. This was an ancient method of punishment

---

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Jeremiah 20:2, KJV]

Then Pashur smote Jeremiah the prophet, and put him in the stocks that were in the high gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of the LORD.

Why: The stocks are the timber punishment device; the verse attests the device in actual penal use. Illustrative rather than doctrinal — kept because it genuinely shows the penal function.

STOP ORDER.

credit to another, of resuming the possession of the goods while they are in the possession of a car- rier or middle-man, in the transit to the con- signee or vendee, and before they arrive into his actual possession, or the destination he has ap- pointed for them on his becoming bankrupt and insolvent. 2 Kent, Comm. 702.

Stoppage in transitu is the right which arises to an unpaid vendor to resume the possession, with which he has parted, of goods sold npon credit, before they come into the possession of a buyer who has become insolvent, bankrupt, or gicuniarily embarrassed. Inslee v. Lane, 67 N.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 2-705 — seller's stoppage of delivery in transit]

The common-law right the entry defines survives in modern uniform law: the seller may stop delivery of goods in a carrier's possession upon discovering the buyer's insolvency.

Why: The body states the 1910 common-law doctrine completely but gives no modern locus; the footnote anchors the doctrine's survival in the current uniform statute — genuine added light about where the rule lives today, no...

STORE.

Storing is tbe keeping merchan- dise for safe custody, to be delivered in the same condition as -when received, where the safe-keeping is the principal object of depos- it, and not the consumption or sale. Ct. 785, 42 h. Ed. 113.

STRANGER IN BLOOD.

Any person not within the consideration of natural love and affection arising from relationship.

STRANGERS.

By this term is Intended third persons generally. Thus the persons bound by a fine are parties, privies, and strangers; the parties are either the cogni- sore or cognizees ; the privies are such as are in any way related to those who levy the fine, and claim under them by any right of blood, or other right of representation ; the stran- gers are all other persons in the world, except only the parties and privies. In its general legal signification the term is opposed to the word “privy.” Those who are in no way parties to a covenant, nor bound by it, are also said to be strangers to the covenant Brown. See Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 672, 18 L. Ed. 427 ; O'Donnell v. McIntyre, 118 N. X. 106, 23 N. E. 450; Bennett v. Chandler, 199 111. 97, 64 N. E. 1052 ; Kirk v. Morris, 40 Ala. 228; U. S. v. Ilenderlong (C. C.) 102 Fed. 2.

STRATAGEM.

A deception either by words or actions, in times of war, in order to obtain an advantage over an enemy.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Joshua 8:2, KJV]

lay thee an ambush for the city behind it.

Why: A stratagem is deception in war to gain advantage; the verse is a divinely ordered ambush — stratagem commanded.

An individual matter considered as the ob- ject of legislation. The constitutions of sev- eral of the states require that e'very act of the legislature shall relate to but one subject, which shall be expressed in the title of the statute. See Ex parte Thomas, 113 Ala. 1, 21 South. 369 ; In re Mayer, 50 N. Y. 504 ; State v. County Treasurer, 4 S. C. 023 ; John- son v. Ilarrlsou, 47 Minn. 577, 00 N. W. 923, 28 Am. St. Rep. 382.

In constitutional law. One that owes al- legiance to a sovereign and is governed by his laws. The natives of Great Britain are sub- jects of the British government. Men In free governments are subjects as well ns citizens; as citizens they enjoy rights and franchises; as subjects they are bound to obey the laws. Webster. The term is little used, in this sense, in countries enjoying a republican form of government See The Plzarro, 2 Wheat. 245, 4 Ll Ed. 220 ; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. [Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Peter 2:13, KJV]

Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme;

Why: Subjection is the obligation to act at another's discretion or judgment; the verse commands subjection to governing ordinance.

SUBLEASE.

A lease by a tenant to an- other person of a part of the premises held by him; an under-lease.

SUBMISSION.

A yielding to authority. A citizen is bound to submit to the laws; a child to bis parents.

In practice. A submission Is a covenant by which persons who have a lawsuit or dif- ference with one another name arbitrators to decide the matter, and bind themselves recip- rocally to perform what shall be arbitrated. Civ. Code La. art.' 3099; Garr v. Gomez, 9 Wend. <N. T.) 661; District of Columbia v. Bailey, 171 U. S. 161, 18 Sup. Ct. 868, 43 L. Ed. 118; Chorpenning v. U. S., 11 Ct Cl. 628; Shed v. Railroad Co., 67 Mo. 687.

In maritime law. Submission on the part of the vanquished, and complete possession on the part of the victor, transfer property as between belligerents. The Alexander, 1 Gall. 532, Fed. Cas. No. 164.

—Submission bond. The bond by which the parties agree to submit tbeir matters to arbitra- tion, and by which they bind themselves to abide by the award of the arbitrator, is com- monly called a “submission bond.” Brown.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[James 4:7, KJV]

Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you.

Why: Submission is yielding to authority; the verse states submission as the yielded posture itself.

SUBMIT.

To propound; as an advocate submits a proposition for the approval of the court.

Applied to a controversy, it means to place it before a tribunal for determination.

SUBMORTGAGE.

When a person who holds a mortgage as security for a loan which he has made, procures a loan to himself from a third person, and pledges his mortgage as security, he effects what is called a “submort- gage.”

SUBNERVARE.

To ham-string by cut- ting the sinews of the legs and thighs.

It was an old custom meretrices et impudi - cos mulieres subnervare. Wharton.

SUBNOTATIONS.

In the civil law. The answers of the prince to questions which bad been put to him respecting some obscure or doubtful point of law.

SUBORN.

In criminal law. To procuv-e another to commit perjury. Steph. Crim. Law', 74.

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY.

In

Criminal law. The offense of procuring an- other to take such a false oath as would con- stitute perjury in the principal. See Stone v. State, 118 Ga. 705, 45 S. E. 630, 98 Am. St Rep. 145; State v. Fahey, 3 Pennewill (Del.) 594, 54 AU. 690; State v. Geer, 46 Kan. 629, 26 Pac. 1027.

[Deuteronomy 19:18-19, KJV]

And the judges shall make diligent inquisition: and, behold, if the witness be a false witness, and hath testified falsely against his brother; Then shall ye do unto him, as he had thought to have done unto his brother: so shalt thou put the evil away from among you.

Why: Subornation of perjury procures another's false oath; the verse is the false-witness law with its talionic sanction — the underlying wrong subornation procures. Spoken by Moses, not first-person deity speech: flag off.

SUBORNER.

One who suborns or pro- cures another to commit any crime, particu- larly to commit perjury.

SUBPOENA.

The process by which the attendance of a witness is required is called a “subpoena.” It is a writ or order directed to a person, and requiring his attendance at a particular time and place to testify as a wit- ness. It may also require him to bring with him any books, documents, or other things under his control which he is bound by law to produce in evidence. Code Civ. Proc. CaL i 1985. See Dishaw v. Wadleigh, 15 App. Div. 205, 44 N. Y. Supp. 207; Alexander ▼. Harrison, 2 Ind. App. 47, 28 N. E. 119; Bleecker v. Carroll, 2 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 82.

In chancery practice. A mandatory writ or process directed to and requiring one or more persons to appear at a time to come and answer the matters charged against him or them.

—Subpoena ad teetiflcandnm. Subpoena to testify. The common snbpoena requiring the at- tendance of a witness on a trial, inquisition, or examination. 3 Bl. Comm. 369 ; In re Strauss, 30 App. Div. 610, 52 N. Y. Supp. 392.— Snb- poena duces tecum. A snbpoena used, not only for the purpose of compelling witnesses to attend in court, but also requiring them to bring tcith them books or documents which may be in their possession, and which may tend to elucidate the subject-matter of the trial. Brown ; 3 BI. Comm. 382.

respect to rights, claims, or securities.

Subrogation denotes the putting a third person who has paid a debt in the place of the creditor to whom he has paid It, so as that he may exercise against the debtor all the rights which the creditor, if unpaid, might have done. Brown.

The equity by which a person who is second- arily liaule for a debt, and has paid it, is put in the place of the creditor, so as to entitle him to make use of all the securities and remedies possessed by the creditor, in order to enforce the right of exoneration as against the principal debtor, or of contribution against others who are liable in the same rank as himself. Bisp. Eq. | 335. And see Fuller v. Davis, 184 111. 505, 56 N. El 791 : Chaffe v. Oliver, 39 Ark. 542; CockVum v. West, 122 Ind. 372, 23 N.

Subrogation Is of two kinds, either conven- tional or legal; the former being where the subrogation is express, by the acts of the creditor and the third person; the latter be- ing (as In the case of sureties) where the sub- rogation is effected or implied by the opera- tion of the law. See Gordon v. Stewart, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 852, 96 N. W. 628; Connecticut Mut L. Ins. Co. v. Cornwell, 72 Hun, 199, 25 N. Y. Supp. 348; Seeley v. Bacon (N. J. Ch.) 34 Atl. 140; Home Sav. Bank v. SUBROGEE.

A person who is subrogat- ed; one who succeeds to the rights of another by subrogation.

SUBSCRIBE.

In the law of contracts. To write under; to write the name under ; to write the name at the bottom or end of a writing. Wild Cat Branch v. Ball, 45 Ind. 213; Davis v. Shields, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 341.

SUBSCRIBER.

One who writes his name under a written instrument; one who affixes bis signature to any document, wheth- er for the purpose of authenticating or attest- ing it, of adopting its terms as his own ex- pressions, or of binding himself by an engage- ment which it contains.

SUBSCRIBING WITNESS.

He who witnesses or attests the signature of a party to an instrument, and in testimony thereof subscribes bis own name to the document

A subscribing witness is one who sees a writing executed, or hears it acknowledged, and at the request of the party thereupon signs his name as a witness. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. i 1935.

Why: A subscribing witness attests a signature in testimony thereof; Christ invokes the two-witness rule — the attestation principle behind requiring witnesses.

SUBSCRIPTIO.

Lat In the civil law. A writing under, or under-writing; a writ- ing of the name under or at the bottom of an Instrument by way of attestation or ratifica- tion; subscription.

That kind of Imperial constitution- which was granted in answer to the prayer of a petitioner who was present. Calvin.

SUBSCRIPTION.

The act of writing one’s name under a written Instrument : the affixing one'B signature to any document.

whether for the purpose of authenticating or attesting it, of adopting its terms as one’s own expressions, or of binding one’s self by an engagement which it contains.

Subscription is the act of the hand, while attestation is the act of the senses. To sub- scribe a paper published as a will is only to write on the same paper the name of the wit- ness; to attest a will is to know that it was published as such, and to certify the facts re- quired to constitute an actual and legal publica- tion. In re Downie’s Will, 42 Wis. 66, 76.

A written contract by which one engages to contribute a sum of money for a desig- nated purpose, either gratuitously, as in the case of subscribing to a charity, or in consid- eration of an equivalent to be rendered, as a subscription to a periodical, a forthcoming book, a series of entertainments, or the like.

— Subscription list. A list of subscribers to some agreement with each other or a third person.

SUBSEXiUA. Lat In Roman law. Lower seats or benches, occupied by the in- dices and by inferior magistrates when they sat in judgment as distinguished from the tribunal of the praetor. Calvin.

Sabaeqaeas matrimoniam tollit pecea- tum prmcedens. A subsequent marriage [of the parties] removes a previous fault <• ’ e., previous illicit intercourse, and legitimates the offspring. A rule of Roman law.

SUBSTANCE.

Essence; the material or essential part of a thing, as distinguished from "form." See State v. Bnrgdoerfer, 107 Mo. 1, 17 S. W. 646, 14 L. R. A. 846; Hugo v. Miller, 50 Minn. 105, 52 N. W. 381 : Pierson v. Insurance Co., 7 Iloust. (Del.) 307, 31 Atl. 966.

SUBSTANTIAE DAMAGES.

A sum. as- sessed by way of damages, which is worth having; opposed to nominal damages, which are assessed to satisfy a bare legal right. Wharton.

SUBSTANTIVE LAW.

That part of the law which the courts are established to ad- minister, as opposed to the rules according to which the substantive law Itself is adminis- tered. That part of the law which creates, defines, and regulates rights, as opposed to adjective or remedial law, which prescribes the method of enforcing rights or obtaining redress for their invasion.

SUBSTITUTE.

One appointed in the place or stead of another, to transact business for him ; a proxy.

SUBSTITUTES.

In Scotch law. The person first called or nominated in a tailzie <entailment of an estate upon a number of heirs in succession) is called the “institute” or ‘‘heir-institute;" the rest are called “sub- stitutes.”

SUBSTITUTIO HJEREDIS.

Lat. In Roman law, it was competent for a testator after instituting a lurres (called the “lucres institutus”) to substitute another (called the “ lucres substitutus") in his place in a certain event. If the event upon which the substitu- tion was to take effect was the refusal of the instituted heir to accept the inheritance at all, then the substitution was called “t>ul-garis,” (or common;) but if the event was the death of the Infant (pupillus) after ac-ceptance, and before attaining his majority, (of fourteen years if a male, and of twelve years if a female.) then the substitution was called “ papillaris (or for minors.) Brown.

SUBSTITUTION . In the civil law.

The putting one person in place of another; particularly, the act of a testator in naming a second devisee or legatee who is to take the bequest either on failure of the original devisee or legatee or after him.

In Scotch law. The enumeration or des- ignation of the heirs in a settlement of prop- erty. Substitutes in an entail are those heirs who are appointed in succession on failure of others. ARY. Where a will contains a gift of prop- erty to. a class of persons, with a clause pro-viding that on the death of a member of the class before the period of distribution his share is to go to his issue, (If any,) so as to substitute them for him, the gift to the issue is said to be substitutional or substitutionary: A bequest to such of the children of A. as shall be living at the testator's death, with a direction that the issue of such as shall have died shall take the shares which their parents would have taken, if living at the testator's death, is an example. SUBTRACTION.

The offense of with- holding or withdrawing from another man what by law he is entitled to. There are various descriptions of this offense, of which the principal are as follows: (1) Subtraction of suit and services, which is a species of in- jury affecting a man's real property, and con- sists of a withdrawal of (or a neglect to per- form or pay) the fealty, suit of court, rent, or services reserved by the lessor of the land. <2) Subtraction of tithes is the withholding from the parson or vicar the tithes to which he is entitled, and this is cognizable in the ecclesiastical courts. (3) Subtraction of con- jugal rights is tlie withdrawing or withhold- ing by a husband or wife of those rights and privileges which the law allows to either party. (4) Subtraction of legacies is the withholding or detaining of legacies by an executor. (5) Subtraction of church rates, in English law, consists in the refusal to pay the amount of rate at which any individual parishioner has been assessed for the neces- sary repairs of the parish church. Brown.

— Subtraction of conjugal rights. The act of a husband or wife living separately from the other without a lawful cause. 3 Bl. Conun. 94.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Malachi 3:8, KJV]

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings.

Why: Subtraction is withholding from another what by law he is entitled to; the verse frames withholding of legal dues as robbery. The verse's dues are tithes; the entry is general — the parallel is thematic.

SUBVASSORES.

In old Scotch law. Base holders; inferior holders; they who held their lands of knights. Skene.

8UCCESSIO

8UUCE8SIO. Eat. In the civil lgw. A coming in place of another, on his decease; a coming Into the estate which a deceased person had at the time of his death. Succession Is the transmission of the rights and obligations of the deceased to the heirs.

Succession signifies also the estates, rights, and charges which a person leaves after his death, whether the property exceeds the charges or the charges exceed the property, or whether he has only left charges without any property.

The succession not only includes the rights and obligations of the deceased as they exist at the time of his death, but all that has ac- crued thereto since the opening of the succes- sion, as also the new charges to which it be- comes subject.

Finally, succession signifies also that right by which the heir can take possession of the estate of the deceased, such as it may be. Civ. Code La. arts. 871-874.

Succession is the coming in of another to- take the property of one who dies without dis- posing of it by will. Civ. Code Cal. { 1383; Civ. Code Dak. § 776.

In common law. The right by which one set of men may, by succeeding another set, acquire a property in all the goods, movables, and other chattels of a corporation. 2 Bl. Comm. 430. — Artificial succession. That attribute of a corporation by which, in contemplation of law, the company itself remains always the same though its constituent members or stockholders may change from time to time. See Thomas v. Dakin, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 100.— Hereditary succession. Descent or title by descent at common law; the title whereby a man on the death of his ancestor acquires his estate by right of representation as his heir at law. See In re Donahue's Estate, 36 Cal. 332 ; Bar- clay v. Cameron, 25 Tex. 241. — Intestate succession. The succession of an heir at law to the property and estate of his ancestor when the latter has died intestate, or leaving a will which has been annulled or set aside. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 1006.— Irregular succes- sion. That which is established by law in favor of certain persons, or of the state, in default of heirs, either legal or instituted by testament. Civ. Code La. 1900, art 878.— Local sneecssion. That which the law es- tablishes in favor of the nearest relation of a deceased person.— Natural succession. Suc- cession taking place between natural persons, for example, in descent on the death of an ancestor. Thomas v. Dakin, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 100.— Succession duty. In English law. This is a duty, (varying from one to ten per cent.,) payable under the statute 16 & 17 Viet, c. 51, in respect chiefly of real estate and lease- holds, but generally In respect of all property (not already chargeable with legacy duty) de- volving upon any one in consequence of any death. SUFFRAGAN.

Bishops who in former times were appointed to supply the place of others during their absence on embassies or other business were so termed. They were consecrated as other bishops were, and were anciently called “c horepiacopi," or “bishops of the county,” in contradistinction to the regular bishops of the city or see. The prac- tice of creating auffragan bishops, after hav- ing long been discontinued, was recently re- vived ; and such bishops are now permanent- ly “assistant” to the bishops. Brown.

A suffragan is a titular bishop ordained to aid and assist the bishop of the diocese in his spiritual function; or one who supplietb the place instead of the bishop, by whose suffrage ecclesiastical causes or matters committed to him are to be adjudged, acted on, or determined. Some writers call these suffragans by the name of “subsidiary bishops.”

SUIT.

In old English, law. The wit- nesses or followers of the plaintiff. 3 Bl. Comm. 295. See Secta.

Old books mention the word in many con- nections which are now disused, — at least. In the United States. Thus, “suit” was used of following any one, or in the sense of pur- suit; as in the phrase “making fresh suit.” It was also used of a petition to the king or lord. “Suit of court” was the attendance which- a tenant owed at the court of his lord.

Bn. Law Dict.(2d Ed.)— 71

“Suit covenant” and “suit custom” seem to have signified a right to one’s attendance, or one’s obligation to attend, at the lord's court, founded upon a known covenant, or an im- memorial usage or practice of ancestors. “Suit regal” was attendance at the sheriff’s tourn or leet, (his court.) “Suit of the king's peace” was pursuing an offender! — one charged with breach of the pence. Abbott.

- In modern law. “Suit” is a generic term, of comprehensive signification, and ap- plies to any proceeding in a court of justice in which the plaintiff pursues, in such court, the remedy which the law affords him for the redress of an injury or the recovery of a right. See Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 375, 23

L. Ed. 449; Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 464, 7 L. Ed. 481 ; Drake v. Gilmore, 52 N.

Y. 393; Philadelphia, etc., Iron Co. v. Chi- cago, 158 111. 9, 41 N. B. 1102; Cohens v. Vir- ginia, 6 Wheat 405, 5 L. Ed. 257.

It is, however, seldom applied to a crim- inal prosecution. And it is sometimes re- stricted to the designation of a proceeding in equity, to distinguish such proceeding from an action at law.

—Suit of court. This phrase denoted the duty of attending the lord’s court, and. in com- mon with fealty, was one of the incidents of a feudal holding. Brown.— Suit of the king’s peace. The pursuing a man for breach of the King’s peace by treasons, insurrections, or tres- sses. Cowell.— Suit money. An allowance, the nature of temporary alimony, authorized by statute in some states to be made to a wife on the institution of her suit for divorce, intended to cover the reasonable expenses of the snit and to provide her with means for the efficient preparation and trial of her case. See Yost v. Yost, 141 Ind. 584, 41 N. E. 31. —Suit silver. A small sum of money paid in lieu of attendance at the court-baron. Cow- ell.

SUPPLIANT.

The actor In, or party pre- ferring, a petition of right

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Charles Dickens, Oliver Twist, 1838]

Please, sir, I want some more.

Why: The archetypal literary supplication — one preferring a petition, as the entry defines the suppliant.

SUPPLICATIO.

Lat In the civil law. A petition for pardon of a first offense ; also a petition for reversal of judgment : also equivalent to “duplicatio," which corresponds to the common law rejoinder. Culvin.

SUPPLICAVIT.

In English law. The name of a writ issuing out of the king's bench or chancery for taking sureties of the peace. It Is commonly directed to the justices of the peace, when they are averse to acting In the affair in their judicial capacity. 4 Bl. Comm. 253.

SUPPLfCIUM. Lat. In the civil law. Punishment ; corporal punishment for crime. Death was called “nlttmum supplicium," the last or extreme penulty.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 John 1:9, KJV]

If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Why: Supplicatio is a petition for pardon; the verse states pardon upon petition/confession. The parallel is thematic — civil pardon petitioned, divine pardon promised.

SUPPLIES.

In English law. The “sup- plies” in parliamentary proceedings signify the sums of money which are annually voted by the house of commons for the maintenance of the crown and the various public services. Jacob; Brown.

SUPPLY, COMMISSIONERS OP.

Per- sona appointed to levy the land-tax in Scot- land, and to cause a valuation roll to be an- nually made up, and to perform other duties in their respective counties. Bell.

SUPPLY, COMMITTEE OF.

In Eng- lish law. Ail bills which relate to the pub- lic income or expenditure must originate with the house of commons, and all bills au- thorizing expenditure of the public money are based upon resolutions moved in a com- mittee of supply, which is always a commit- tee of the whole house. Wharton.

SUPPORT, v. To support a rule or or- der is to argue in answer to the arguments of the party who has shown cause against a rule or order nts*.

SUPPORT, n. The right of support is an easement consisting in the privilege of resting the joists or beams of one’s house up- on, or inserting their ends into, the wall of an adjoining house belonging to another own- er. It may arise either from contract or pre- scription. 3 Kent, Comm. 436.

Support also signifies the right to have one’s ground supported so that it will not cave in, when an adjoining owner makes an excavation.

SUPPRESSIO VERI.

Lat Suppres- sion or concealment of the truth. “It Is a' rule of equity, as well as of law, that a sup- pressio veri is equivalent to a suggestio falsi; and where either the suppression of the truth or the suggestion of what Is false can be proved, in a fact material to the contract, the party injured may have relief against the contract” Fleming v. Slocum, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 405, 9 Am. Dec. 224.

Snppressio veri, expressio falsi. Sup- pression of the truth' Is [equivalent to] the expression of what Is false. Addington v. Allen, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 374, 417.

Snppressio veri, anggestio falsi. Sup- pression of the truth Is [equivalent to] the suggestion of what Is false. Paul v. Had- ley, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 521, 525.

SUPRA.

Lat Above; upon. This word occurring by Itself in a book refers the reader to a previous part of the book, like “ante;" It Is also the Initial word of several Latin phrases.

— Snpra protest. See Protest. — Supra- ripariaa. Upper riparian ; higher up the stream. This

SUPREME COURT.

A court of high powers and extensive jurisdiction, existing In most of the states. In some it is the offi- dal style of the chief appellate court or court of last resort In others (as New Jersey and Now York) the supreme court is a court of general original jurisdiction, possessing also (in New York) some appellate jurisdiction, but, not the court of last resort —Supreme oourt of error*. In American law. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort in , the state of Connecticut— Su> preme oourt of the United State*. The coart of last resort in the federal judicial sys- tem. It is vested by the constitution with original jurisdiction in all cases affecting am- bassadors, public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a state is a party, and appellate jurisdiction over all other cases within the judicial power of the United States, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as congress may make. Its appellate powers extend to the subordinate federal courts, and also (in certain cases) to the supreme courts of the several states. The court is composed of a chief justice and eight as- sociate justices.— Supreme judicial oourt. In American law. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in tbe states of Maine, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire.

SUPREME OOURT OF JUDICATURE.

The court formed by the English judicature act, 1873, (as modified by the judicature act, 1875, the appellate Jurisdiction act, 1878, and tbe judicature acts of 1877, 1879, and 1881,) in substitution for the various su- jierlor courts of law, equity, admiralty, pro- bate, and divorce, existing when the act was passed, including the court of appeal In chan- cery and bankruptcy, and the exchequer chamber. It consists of two permanent di- visions, viz., a court of original jurisdiction, oalled the “high court of justice,” and a court Of appellate jurisdiction, called the “court of appeal.” Its title of “supreme” Is now a misnomer, as the superior appellate Jurisdiction of the house of lords and privy council, which was originally Intended to be transferred to It, has been allowed to remain. Sweet

Why: Supreme power is the highest authority in a state; the verse locates it — the Most High ruling in the kingdom of men.

[Hip-hop] — Hip-hop

[Public Enemy, 'Fight the Power', 1989]

"Fight the power!" — Black's: "The highest authority in a state, all other powers in it being inferior thereto." The song is a direct address to that highest authority — resistance to supreme power, from Elvis to John Wayne to the system itself.

Why: The most famous confrontation with supreme authority in hip-hop; the chorus is verbatim-certain and the link is literal — the power addressed is supreme power.

SUR.

Pr. On; upon; over. In the ti- tles of real actions “sur” was used to point out what the writ was founded upon. Thus, a real action brought by the owner of a re- version or seigniory, In certain cases where his tenant repudiated his tenure, was called "a writ of right sur disclaimer." So, a writ of entry sur disseisin was a real action to re- cover the possession of land from a disseisor. Sweet —Sur oul ante divortium. See Cm Ante Divobtium.— Sur cui In vita. SURCHARGE, v. To put more cattle upon a common than the herbage will sus- tain or than the party has a right to do. S Bl. .Comm. 237.

In equity practice. To show that a par- ticular item, In favor of the party surcharg- ing, ought to have been Included, but was not, in an account which Is alleged to be settled or complete.

—Second surcharge. In English law. The surcharge of a common a second time, by the same defendant against whom the common was before admeasured, and for which the writ of second surcharge was given by the statute of Westminster. 2. 3 Bl. Comm. 239.— Surcharge and falsify. This phrase, as used in the courts of chancery, denotes the liberty which these courts will occasionally grant to a plaintiff, who disputes an account which the defendant alleges to be settled, to scrutinise particular items therein without opening the entire account. The showing an item for which credit ought to have been given, but waa not, is to surcharge tbe account ; the proving an item to have been inserted wrongly is to falsify the account. Brown. SDEEHCHiSE. In French law. A par- ty desirous of repurchasing property at auc- tion before the court, can, by offering one- tenth or one-sixth, according to the case, in addition to the price realized at the sale, oblige the property to be put up once more at auction. This bid upon a bid is called a “surench&re." Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 575.

SURETY.

A surety is one who at the re- quest of another, and for the purpose of se- curing to him a benefit, becomes responsible for the performance by the latter of some act In favor of a third person, or hypothecates property as security therefor. Civ. Code CaL I 2831 ; Civ. Code Dak. f 1673.

A surety is defined as a person who, being liable to pay a debt or perform an obligation, is entitled. If it is enforced against him, to be indemnified by some other person who ought himself to have made paymeut or performed before the surety was compelled to do so. . Smith v. Shelden, 35 Mich. 42, 24 Am. Rep. 529. And see Young v. McFadden, 125 Ind. 254, 25 N. E. 284 ; Wise v. Miller, 45 Ohio St 388, 14 N. E. 218 ; O’Conor v. Morse, 112 Cal. 31, 44 Pac. 305, 53 Am. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 6:1-2, KJV]

My son, if thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger, Thou art snared with the words of thy mouth, thou art taken with the words of thy mouth.

Why: A surety secures another's obligation at his request; the proverb names suretyship for a friend and warns of its snare — the wisdom literature's standing doctrine of surety.

SURETYSHIP.

The contract of surety- ship Is that whereby one obligates himself to pay the debt of another in consideration of credit or indulgence, or other benefit given to hts principal, the principal remaining bound therefor. It differs from a guaranty In this: that the consideration of the latter is a benefit flowing to the guarantor. Code Ga. 1882, f 2148. See Subett.

Suretyship is an accessory promise by which a person binds himself for another al- ready bound, and agrees with the creditor to satisfy the obligation, if the debtor does not Civ. Code La. art. 3035.

A contract of suretyship is a contract whereby one person engages to be answer- able for the debt default or miscarriage of another. Pltm. Princ. & Sur. 1, 2.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 11:15, KJV]

He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it: and he that hateth suretiship is sure.

Why: Suretyship is the contract itself; the proverb states its peril as a law-like maxim — the surety shall smart for it.

SURMISE.

Formerly where a defendant pleaded a local custom, for instance, a cusr tom of the city of London, it was necessary for him to “surmise,” that is, to suggest that such custom should be certified to the court by the mouth of the recorder, and without such a surmise the issue was to be tried by the country as other issues of fact are. 1 Burrows, 251; Yin. Abr. 246.

A surmise is something offered to a court to move It to grant a prohibition, audita querela, or other writ grantabie thereon. Jacob.

In ecclesiastical practice, an allegation in a libel is called a “surmise.” A collateral surmise is a surmise of some fact not appear- ing in the libel. Phllllm. Ecc. Law, 1445.

150.

Anything which happens without the agen- cy or fault of the party affected by It, tend- ing to disturb and confuse the judgment, or to mislead him, and of which the opposite party takes an undue advantage, is in equity a surprise, and one species of fraud for which relief is granted. Code Go. 1882, § 8180. And see Turley v. Taylor, 6 Baxt (Tenn.) 386; Gidionsen v. Union Depot R. Co., 129 Mo. 392, i The situation in which a party is 'placed, with- out any default of his own, which will be in- jurious to his interests. Rawle v. Skipwitli, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 407.

There does not seem anything technical or peculiar in the word “surprise," as used in courts of equity. Where a court of equity re- lieves on tne ground of surprise, it does so upon the ground that the party has been taken unawares, and that he has acted without due deliberation, and under confused and sudden impressions. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. $ 120, note.

In law. The general rule is that when a party or his counsel is "taken by surprise,” in a material point or circumstance which could not have been anticipated, and when want of skill, care, or attention cannot be Justly imputed, and injustice has been done, a new trial should be granted. N. Y. Supp. 69. — Surrender of eopyhold. The mode of conveying or transferring copyhold property from one person to another is by means of a surrender, which consists in the yielding up of the estate by the tenant into the hands of the lord for such purposes as are expressed in the surrender. The process in most manors is for the tenant to come to the steward, either in court or out of court, or else to two customary tenants of the same manon provided there be a custom to warrant it, and there, by delivering up a rod, a glove, or other symbol, as the custom directs, to resign into the hands of the lord, by the hands and ac- ceptance of his steward, or of the said two tenants, all his interest and title to the estate in trust, to be again granted out by the lord to such persons and for such uses as are named in the surrender, and as rhe custom of the manor will warrant. Brown.— Surrender of criminals. The act by which the public au- thorities deliver a person accused of a crime, and who is found in their jurisdiction, to the authorities within whose jurisdiction it is al- leged the crime has been committed.— Surren- der of a preferenee. In bankruptcy practice. The surrender to the assignee in bankruptcy, by a preferred creditor, of anything he may have received under his preference and any advantage it gives him, which he must do be- fore he can share in the dividend. In re Richt- er’s Estate, 1 Dill. 644, Fed. Cas. No. 11.803. •—Surrender to uses of will. Formerly a copyhold interest would not pass by will un- less it had been surrendered to the use of the will. By St. 55 Geo. III. c. 192, this is no longer necessary. 1 Steph. Comm. 639; Moo- ley & Whitley.

TAIL.

Limited; abridged; reduced; cur- tailed, as a fee or estate in fee, to a certain order of succession, or to certain heirs.

TAIL, ESTATE nr. An estate of in- heritance, which, instead of descending to heirs generally, goes to the heirs of the donee’s body, which means his lawful issue, his children, and through them to his grand- children in a direct line, so long as his pos- terity endures in a regular order and course of descent, and upon the death of the first owner without Issue, the estate determines. 1 Washb. Real Prop. *72.

An estate tall is a freehold of inheritance.

limited to a person and the heirs of his body, general or special, male or female, and is the creature of the statute de Donis. The es- tate, provided the entail be not barred, re- verts to the donor or reversioner, if the donee die without leaving descendants an- swering to the condition annexed to the es- tate upon its creation, unless there be a limi- tation over to a third person on default of such descendants, when it vests in such third person or remainder-man. Wharton.

—Several tall. An entail severally to two; as if land is given to two men and their wives, and to the heirs of their bodies begotten ; here the donees have a joint estate for their two lives, and yet they have a several inheritance, because the issue of the one shall have his moi- ety, and the issue of the other the other moiety. Cowell.— Tail after possibility of issue extinct. A species of estate tad which arises where one is tenant in special tail, and a per- son from whose body the issue was to spring dies without issue, or, having left issue, that issue becomes extinct. In either of these cases the surviving tenant in special tail becomes “tenant in tail after possibility of issue ex- tinct.” 2 Bl. Oomm. 124.— Tall female. When lands are given to a person and the female heirs of his or her body, tins is called an "estate tail female.” and the male heirs are not capable of inheriting it.— Tail general. An estate in tail granted to one “and the heirs of his body begotten," which is called “tad general” because, how often soever such donee in tail be married, his issue in general by ajl and every such marriage is, in successive or- der, capable of inheriting the estate tad perfor- mam doni. 2 Bl. Comm. 113. This is wbete an estate is limited to a man and the heirs of his body, without any restriction at aU ; or, according to some authorities, with no other restriction than that in relation to sex. Thus, tah male general is the same tbing as tad male ; the word "general," in such case, implying that there is no other restriction upon the descent of the estate than that it must go in the male line. So an estate in tail female general is an estate in tail female. The word "general," in the phrase, expresses a purely negative idea, and may denote the absence of any restriction, or the absence of some given restriction which is tacitly understood. Mozley & Whitley.— Tall male. When lands are given to a person and the male heirs of his or her body, this is called an "estate tail male." and the female heirs are not capable of inheriting it. — Tall special. An estate in tail where the succession is restricted to certain heirs of the donee's body, and does not go to all of them in general ; c. g., where lands and tenements are given to a man and "the heirs of his body on Mary, his now wife, to be begotten;" here no issue can inherit but such special issue as is engendered between those two, not such as the husband may have by another wife, and therefore it is called "special tail." 2 Bl. Comm. 113. It is defined by Cowell as the limitation of lands and tene- ments to a man and his wife and the heirs of their two bodies. But the phrase need not be thus restricted. Tail special, in its largest sense, is where the gift is restrained to certain heirs of the donor's body, and does not go to all of them in general. Mozley & Whitley.

[Law: Statute De Donis Conditionalibus, 13 Edw. I (1285)]

The estate the entry defines was created by the Statute De Donis Conditionalibus (1285), which converted the conditional fee into the inalienable estate in tail, descendible only to the heirs of the donee's body.

Why: The body defines the estate in tail completely but omits its statutory origin; the footnote supplies the 1285 statute that created it as a distinct estate — the legal source behind the definition, not a restatement of...

In old English law. The fee which la opposed to fee-simple, because it is so minced or pared that it is not in the owner’s free power to dispose of it, but it is, by the first giver, cut or divided from all other, and tied to the issue of the donee, — in short, an es- tate-tail. Wharton.

TAILZIE.

In Scotch law. An entail. A tailzied fee is that which the owner, by exer- cising his inherent right of disposing of his property, settles upon others than those to whom it would have descended by law. 1 Forb. Inst, pt 2, p. 101.

TAINT.

A conviction of felony, or the person so convicted. Cowell.

TAKE. 1. To lay hold of; to gain or re- ceive into possession; to seize; to deprive one of the possession of; to assume owner- ship. Thus, it is a constitutional provision that a man's property shall not be taken tor public uses without just compensation. Ev- ansville & C. R. Co. v. Dick, 9 Ind. 433.

2. To obtain or assume possession of a chattel unlawfully, and without the owner’s consent; to appropriate things to one's own use with felonious intent. Thus, an actual taking is essential to constitute larceny. 4 Bl. Comm. 430.

3. To seize or apprehend a person ; to ar- rest the body of a person by virtue of lawful process. Thus, a capiat commands the of- ficer to take the body of the defendant.

4. To acquire the title to an estate; to re- ceive an estate in lands from another per- son by virtue of some species of title. Thus, one is said to ‘‘take by purchase,” "take by descent,” “take a life-interest under the de- vise,” etc.

5. To receive the verdict of a Jury; to su- perintend the delivery of a verdict; to hold a court. The commission of assize in England empowers the judges to take the atsizes; that is, according to its ancient meaning, to take the verdict of a peculiar species of jury called an "assize;” but, in its present mean- ing, “to hold the assizes.” 3 Bl. Comm. 59, 185.

—Take up. A party to a negotiable instru- ment, particularly an indorser or acceptor, is said to “take up” the paper, or to "retire” it, when he pays its amount, or substitutes other security for it, and receives it again into his own hands. See Hartzell v. McClurg, 54 Neb. 31G, 74 N. W. 626.

TAKER.

One who takes or acquires ; particularly, one who takes an estate by de- vise. When an estate is granted subject to a remainder or executory devise, the devisee of the immediate interest is called the “first taker.”

TAKING.

TAUTER PROCESSUM EST.

Upon pleading the judgment of an Inferior court, the proceedings preliminary to such judg- ment, and on which the same was founded, must, to some extent, appear in the plead- ing, but the rule is that they may be alleged with a general allegation that "such pro- ceedings were had," instead of a detailed account of the proceedings themselves, and this general allegation is called the “taliter p rocessum est." A like concise mode of stat- ing former proceedings in a suit Is adopted at the present day in chancery proceedings upon petitions and in actions In the nature of bills of revivor and supplement. TALLATIO.

A keeping account by tal- lies. Cowell.

TALLEY, or TALLY. A stick cat into two parts, on each whereof is marked, with notches or otherwise, what is due between debtor and creditor. It was the ancient mode of keeping accounts. One part was held by the creditor, and the other by the debtor. The use of tallies in the exchequer was abolished by St. 23 Geo. III. c. 82, and the old tallies were ordered to be destroyed by St 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 15. Wharton.

-J Tallies of loan. A term originally used in England to describe exchequer bills, which were issued by the officers of the exchequer when a temporary loan was necessary to meet the ex- igencies of the government, and charged on the credit of the exchequer in general, and made assignable from one person to another. Briscoe v. Bank of Kentucky, 11 Pet 328, 9 L. Ed. 709.— Tally trade. In a general sense, a tax is any contribu- tion Imposed by government upon individuals, for the use and service of the state, whether under the name of toll, tribute, tallage, gabel, impost, duty, custom, excise, subsidy, aid, supply, or other name. Story, Const. § 950.

Synonyms. In a broad sense, taxes un- doubtedly include assessments, and the right to impose assessments has its foundation in the taxing power of the government; and yet. In practice and as generally understood, there is a broad distinction between the two terms. “Taxes,” as the term is generally used, are public burdens imposed generally upon the inhabitants of the whole state, or upon some civil division thereof, for govern- mental purposes, without reference to pecul- iar benefits to particular individuals or prop- erty. “Assessments” have reference to impo- sitions for improvements which are specially beneficial to particular Individuals or prop- erty, and which are imposed In proportion to the particular benefits supposed to be con- ferred. They are justified only because the improvements confer special benefits, and are Just only when they are divided in proportion to such benefits. Roosevelt Hospital v. New York, 84 N. Y. 112. As distinguished from other kinds of taxation, “assessments" are those special and local impositions upon prop- erty in .the immediate vicinity of munici- pal improvements which are necessary to pay for the improvement, and are laid with ref- erence to the special benefit which the prop- erty is supposed to have derived therefrom. Hale v. Kenosha, 29 Wis. 599; Ridenour v. 'Baffin, 1 Handy (Ohio) 404; King v. Port- land, 2 Or. 146; Williams v. Corcoran, 46 Cal. 553.

Taxes differ from subsidies, In being cer- tain and orderly, and from forced Contribu- tions, etc., in that they are levied by author- ity of law, and by some rule of proportion which is intended to insure uniformity of contribution, and a just apportionment of the burdens of government Cooley, Tax’n, 2.

The words “tax" and “excise," although often used as synonymous, are to be consid- ered as having entirely distinct and separate significations. The former is a charge appor- tioned either among the whole people of the state, or those residing within certain dis- tricts, municipalities, or sections. It is re- quired to be imposed, as we shall more fully explain hereafter, so that, if levied for the public charges of government, it shall be shared according to the estate, real and per- sonal, which each person may possess ; or, if raised to defray the cost of some local govern- ment of a public nature, it shall be borne by those who will receive some special and pe- culiar benefit or advantage which an expen- diture of money for a public object may cause to those on whom the tax is assessed. An excise, on the other hand, is of a different charaeter. It is based on no rule of appor- tionment or equality whatever. It is a fixed, absolute, and direct charge laid on merchan- dise, products, or commodities, without any regard to the amount of property belonging to those on whom it may fall, or to any sup- posed relation between money expended for a public object and a special benefit occasioned to those by whom the charge Is to be paid. Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen (Mass.) 274.

A direct tax is one which is demanded from the very persons who, it is intended or desired, should pay it. In- direct taxes are those which are demanded from one person, in the expectation and in- tention that he Bhall indemnify himself at the expense of another. Mill, Pol. Econ. Taxes are divided into “direct.” under which desig- nation would be included those which are as- sessed upon the property, person, business, in- come. etc., of those who are to pay them, and "indirect," or those which are levied on com- modities before they reach the consumer, and are paid by those upon whom they ultimately fall, not as taxes, but as part of the market price of the commodity. Cooley, Tax’n, 6. Historical evidence shows that personal prop- erty, contracts, occupations, and the like, have never been regarded as the subjects of direct tax. The phrase is understood to be limited to taxes on land and its appurtenances, and on polls. Vcazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 533. 19

TAXATION.

The imposition of a tax; the act or process of imposing and levying a pecuniary charge or enforced contribution, ratable, or proportioned to value or some other standard, upon persons or property, by or on behalf of a government or one of its divisions or agencies, for the purpose of pro- viding revenue for the maintenance and ex- penses of government.

The term “taxation,” both in common par- lance and in the laws of the several states, has been ordinarily used, not to express the idea of the sovereign power which is exercised, but the exercise of that power for a particular purpose, viz., to raise a revenue for the general and ordinary expenses of the government, whether it be the state, county, town, or city government. But there is another class of ex- penses. also of a public nature, necessary to be provided for, peculiar to the local government of counties, cities, towns, and even smaller sub- divisions, such as opening., grading, improving in various ways, and repairing, highways and streets, and constructing sewers in cities, and canals and ditches for the purpose of drainage in the country. They arc generally of pecul- iar local benefit. These burdens have always, in every state, from its first settlement, been charged upon the localities benefited, and have been apportioned upon various principles; but, whatever principle of apportionment has been adopted, they have been known, both in the legislation and ordinary speech of the country, by the name of “assessments.” Assessments have also, very generally, if not always, been apportioned upon principles different from those adopted in "taxation," in the ordinary sense of that term ; and any one can see, upon a mo- ment’s reflection, that the apportionment, to bear equally, and do substantial justice to all parties, must be made upon a different prin- ciple from that adopted in “taxation,” so called. Emery v. gan Francisco Gas Co., 28 Cal. 356.

The differences between taxation and taking property in right of eminent domain are that taxation exacts money or services from individ- uals, as and for their respective shares of con- tribution to any public burden ; while private property taken for public use, by right of emi- nent domain, is taken, not as the owner’s share of contribution to a public burden, but as so much beyond his share, and for which com- pensation must be made. Moreover, taxation operates upon a community, or upon a class of persons in a community, and by some rule of apportionment • while eminent domain operates upon an individual, and without reference to the. amount or value exacted from any other individual, or class of individuals. People Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, 55 Am. Dec. 266.

— Double taxation. See Double.— Taxa- tion of costs. In practice. The process of ascertaining and charging up the amount of costs in an action to which a party is legally entitled, or which are legally chargeable. And, in English practice, the process of examining the items in an attorney's bill of costs and making the proper deductions, if any.

TAXEKg. Two officers yearly chosen in Cambridge, England, to see the true gauge of all the weights and measures.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 22:21, KJV]

Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's.

Why: Taxation is the imposition and levy of pecuniary charge by government; Christ's answer to the tax question establishes both tribute's lawfulness and its limit.

TAXING MASTER.

See Master.

TAXING OFFICER.

Each house of par- liament has a taxing officer, whose duty it is to tax the costs incurred by the promot- ers or opponents of private bills. May, Pari. Pr. 843.

TAXING POWER.

The power of any government to levy taxes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:6, KJV]

For for this cause pay ye tribute also: for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing.

Why: The taxing power is government's power to levy taxes; the verse warrants the tribute and names its ministers.

TAXT-WARD.

An annual payment made to a superior in Scotland, instead of the duties due to him under the tenure of ward-holding. Abolished. Wharton.

TEAM, or THEAME. In old English

TEEP.

In Hindu law. A note of hand; a promissory note given by a native banker or money-lender to zemindars and others, to enable them to furnish government with se- curity for the payment of their rents. Whar- ton.

TEGTTLA.

In the civil law. A tile. Dig. 19, 1, 18.

TEIND COURT.

In Scotch law. A court which has jurisdiction of matters relat- ing to teinds, or tithes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Malachi 3:10, KJV]

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the LORD of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

Why: The teind court has jurisdiction of tithes; the verse commands the tithes into the storehouse with the divine promise attached.

TEIND MASTERS.

Those entitled to tithes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 18:21, KJV]

And, behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation.

Why: TEIND MASTERS are 'those entitled to tithes.' Numbers 18:21 is the charter of that entitlement: God grants the Levites 'all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance' for their service. The verse is the legal root of who...

TEINDS.

In Scotch law. A term corres- ponding to tithes (q . v.) In English ecclesias- tical law.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 23:23, KJV]

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

Why: TEINDS is the Scots-law term for tithes. Christ treats tithing as a matter 'of the law' while subordinating it to judgment, mercy, and faith — the verse genuinely frames the tithe as a legal obligation with a moral hi...

TELEPHONE.

In a general sense, the name “telephone” applies to any Instrument or apparatus which transmits sound beyond the limits of ordinary audibility. But since the recent discoveries in telephony, the name is technically and primarily restricted to an instrument or device which transmits sound by means of electricity and wires similar to telegraphic wires. In a secondary sense, however, being the sense in which it is most commonly understood, the word "telephone” constitutes a generic term, having reference generally to the art of telephony as an insti- tution, but more particularly to the appara- tus, as an entirety, ordinarily used in the transmission, as well as in the reception, of telephonic messages, lloekett v. State, 105 Ind. 261, 5 N. B. 178, 55 Am. Rep. 201.

TELLER.

One who numbers or counts. An officer of a bank who receives or pays out money. Also one appointed to count the votes cast in a deliberative or legislative as- sembly or other meeting. The name was also given to certain officers formerly attach- ed to the English exchequer.

The teller is a considerable officer in the ex- chequer, of which officers there are four, whose office is to receive all money due to the king, and to give the clerk of the pells a bill to charge him therewith. They also pay to all persons any money payable by the king, and make weekly and yearly books of their receipts and payments, which they deliver to the lord treas- urer. Cowell ; Jacob.

—Tellers In parliament. In the language of parliament, the "tellers” are the members of the house selected to count the members when a division takes place. In -the house of lords a division is effected by the "non-con- tents” remaining within the bar, and the “con- tents” going below it, a teller being appointed for each party. In the commons the “ayes” go into the lobby at one end of the house, and the “noes” into the lobby at the other end, the house itself being perfectly empty, and two tellers being appointed for each party. TENANCY is the relation of a tenant to the land which he holds. Hence it signifies

(1) the estate of a tenant, as In the expres- sions “joint tenancy,” “tenancy in common;”

(2) the term or Interest of a tenant for years or at will, as when we say that a lessee must remove his fixtures during his tenancy. Sweet.

— General tenancy. A tenancy which is sot fixed and made certain in point of duration by the agreement of the parties. Brown v. Bragg, 22 Ind. 122.— Joint tenancy. An estate in joint tenancy is an estate in fee-simple, fee-tall, for life, for years, or at will, arising by purchase or grant to two or more persons. Joint tenants have one and the same interest, accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. The grand in- cident of joint tenancy is survivorship, oy which the entire tenancy on the decease of any joint tenant remains to the survivors, and at length to the last survivor. Pub. St. Mass. 1882, p. 1292; Simons v. McLain, 51 Kan. 153, 32 Pac. 919; Thornburg v. Wiggins, 133 Ihd. 178. 34

A joint in- terest is one owned by several persons in equal shares, by a title created by a single will or transfer, when expressly declared in the will or transfer to be a joint tenancy, or when granted or devised to executors or trustees as joint ten- ants. Civ. Code Cal. $ 683. — Several tenan- cy. A tenancy which is separate, and not held jointly with another person. — Tenancy at suf- ferance. This is the least and lowest estate which can subsist in realty. It is in strictness not an estate, but a mere possession only. [Maxim: Tempus enim modus tollendi obligationes et actiones, quia tempus currit contra desides et sui juris contemptores — 'For time is a means of destroying obligations and actions, because time runs against the slothful and contemners of their own rights' (Fleta, l. 4, c. 5, § 12)]

Time destroys obligations and actions because it runs against the slothful and those who neglect their own rights.

Why: Genuine because the maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry itself with its authority (Fleta); the footnote preserves the maxim's classic formulation of the limitation-policy behind time-bars.

[Axiom: the four unities of joint tenancy — time, title, interest, possession; survivorship as the grand incident (2 Bl. Comm. 180)]

Joint tenancy requires the four unities — unity of time, title, interest, and possession — and its grand incident is survivorship, the whole tenancy passing to the surviving joint tenants.

Why: Genuine because the entry states this doctrine (quoting 2 Bl. Comm. 180) as the definition of joint tenancy; the footnote distills it into the classic axiom-form without inventing any citation.

TENANT.

In the broadest sense, one who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of right or title, whether In fee, for life, for years, at will, or otherwise. Cowell.

In a more restricted sense, one who holds lands of another; one who has the tempo- rary use and occupation of real property owned by another person, (called the “land- lord,") the duration and terms of his ten- ancy being usually fixed by an Instrument called a “lease.” See Becker v. Becker, 13 App. DIv. 342, 43 N. Y. Supp. 17 ; Bowe v. Hunklng, 135 Mass. 383, 46 Am. Rep. 471 ; Clift v. White, 12 N. Y. 527; Lightbody v. Trueteen, 39 Minn. 310, 40 N. W. 67 ; Wool- sey v. State, 30 Tex. App. 347, 17 S. W. 546.

The word “tenant” conveys a much more com- prehensive idea in the language of the law than It does in its popular sense. In popular lan- guage it is used more particularly as opposed to the word “landlord,” and always seems to imply that the land or property is not the tenant's own, hut belongs to some other person, of whom he immediately bolds it. But. in the language Of the law, every possessor of landed property is called a “tenant’f with reference to such prop- erty. and this, whether such landed property is absolutely his own, or whether be merely bolds it under a lease for a certain number of years. Brown.

Im feudal law. One who holds of an- other (called “lord” or “superior”) by some service; as fealty or rent

One who has actual possession of lauds claimed In suit by another ; the defendant In a real action. The correlative of “demand- ant." 3 Bl. Comm. 180.

Strictly speaking, . a “tenant" Is a person who bolds land; but the term Is also ap- plied by analogy to personalty. Thus we speak of a person belug tenant for life, or tenant in common, of stock. Sweet.

(e» provision* viri.) Originally, she could bar the estate-tail like any other tenant in tail ; but the husband's intention having been merely to provide for her during her widowhood, and not to enable- her to bar his children of their inheritance, she was very early restrained from so doing, by the statute 32 Hen. VII. c. 38. Brown.— Tenant of the demesne. One w ho- is tenant of a mesne lord ; as, where A. is ten- ant of B., and C. of A., B. is the lord, A. the mesne lord, and C. tenant of the demesne. Ham. N. P. 392, 393.— Tenant paravaile. The under-tenant of land; that is, the tenant of a tenant; one who held of a mesne lord.— Tenant to the prmoipe. Before the English fines and recoveries act, if land was conveyed to a person for life with remainder to another in tail, the tenant in tail in remainder was unable to bar the entail without the concurrence of the tenant for life, because a common recovery could only be suffered by the person seised of the land. In such a case, if the tenant for life wished to concur in barring the entail, he usually conveyed his life-estate to some other person, in- order that tbe prtucipe in the recovery might be issued against the latter, who was therefore call- ed the "tenant to the prircipe.” Williams. copy of court roll, fi. e., copyholders.] But the reason why they be called ‘tenants by the verge’ is for that, when they will surrender their tenements into- the hands of their lord to the use of another.- they shall have a little rod (by the custome) in their hand, the which they shall deliver to the steward or to the bailife. » • » and the stew- ard or bailife, according to the custome. shall deliver to him that taketh tbe land the same rod, or another rod, in the name of seisin; and for this cause they are called ‘tenants by the verge,’ but they have no other evidence [title- deed] but by copy of court roll.” Litt. | 78: Go. Litt. 61a.

TENANT-RIGHT. 1. A kind of cus- tomary estate in the north of England, fall- ing under the general class of copyhold, bat distinguished from copyhold by many of its incidents.

2. The so-called tenant-right of renewal is the expectation of a lessee that his lease will be renewed, In cases where it is an established practice to renew leases from time to time, as in the case of leases from the crown, from ecclesiastical corporations, or other collegiate bodies. Strictly speak- ing, there can be no right of renewal against the lessor without an express compact by him to that effect, though the existence of the custom often Influences the price in sales.

3. The Ulster tenant-right may be de- scribed as a right on the tenant’s part to sell bis holding to the highest bidder, sub- ject to the existing or a reasonable increase of rent from time to time, as circumstances may require, with a reasonable veto reserved to the landlord in respect of the incoming tenant's character and solvency. Tender, in pleading, Is a plea by defend- ant that he has been always ready to pay the debt demanded, and before the commence- ment of the action tendered it to the plain- tiff, and now brlngB it Into court ready to be paid to him. etc. Brown.

—Legal tender. That kind of coin, money, or Circulating medium which the law compels a creditor to accept in payment of his debt, when tendered by the debtor in the right amount.— Tender of amende. An offer by a person who has been guilty of any wrong or breach of con- tract to pay a sum of money by way of amends. If a defendant in an action make tender of amends, and the plaintiff decline to accept it, the defendant may pay the money into court, and plead the payment into court as a satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim. Mozley A Whit- ley.—1Temder of Issue. A form of words in a pleading, by which a party offers to refer the question raised upon it to the appropriate mode of decision. [Law: 31 U.S.C. § 5103 — United States coins and currency (including Federal Reserve notes) are legal tender for all debts, public charges, taxes, and dues]

Legal tender is the money the law compels a creditor to accept in satisfaction of a debt when tendered in the right amount — in the United States, coins and currency including Federal Reserve notes.

Why: Genuine because the entry's 'legal tender' definition describes exactly this compulsion-of-acceptance principle, and 31 U.S.C. § 5103 is the real statutory embodiment of it.

a perma- nent nature, whether it be of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial, ideal, kind. Thus, liberum tenementum, frank tenement, or freehold, is applicable not only to lands and other solid objects, but also to offices, rents, commons, advowsons, franchises, peerages, etc. 2 Bl. Comm. 16; Mit- chell v. Warner, 5 Conn. 517 ; Oskaloosa Wa- ter Co. v. Board of Equalization, 84 Iowa, 407, 51 N. W. 18, 15 L. R. A. 296; Field v. Higgins, 35 Me. 341; Sacket v. Wheaton, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 105; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 111. 406, 24 Am. Rep. 263.

“Tenement” is a word of greater extent than “land,” including not only land, bnt rents, commons, and several other rights and Interests issuing out of or concerning land. 1 Steph. Comm. 158, 159.

Its original meaning, according to some, was "house" or “homestead.” Jacob. In modern use it also signifies rooms let in houses. Web- ster.

—Dominant tenement. One for the benefit or advantage of which an easement exists or is enjoyed.— Servient tenement. One which la subject to the burden of an easement existing for or enjoyed by another tenement. See Ease- ment.

TENEMENTAL LAND.

Land distrib- uted by a lord among his tenants, as opposed to the demesnes which were occupied by him- self and his servants. 2 Bl. Comm. 90.

TENE MENTIS LEGATIS.

An ancient writ, lying to the city of Loudon, or any oth- er corporation, (where the old custom was that men might devise by will lands and tenements, as well as goods and chattels,) for the hearing and determining any contro- versy touching the same. Reg. Orig. 244.

TENERE.

Lat. In the civil law. To hold ; to hold fast ; to have In possession ; to retain.

In relation to the doctrine of possession, this term expresses merely the fact of manual deten- tion, or the eo(rporal possession of any object, without involving the question of title; while habere (and especially p otsidere) denotes the maintenance of possession by a lawful claim;

«. e., civil possession, as distinguished from mere natural possession.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: natural possession (fact of detention) vs. civil possession (possession by lawful claim) — tenere denotes the former, habere/possidere the latter]

In the civil-law doctrine of possession, mere corporal detention (natural possession) is distinct from possession maintained by a lawful claim (civil possession).

Why: Genuine because this distinction is the substance of the entry itself; the footnote states it as the received civil-law axiom with no invented authority.

TENERI.

The Latin name for that clause in a bond in which the obligor expresses that he is “held and firmly bound" to the obligee, his heirs, etc.

TENET; TENUXT. Lat He holds; he held. In the Latin forms of the writ of waste against a tenant these words intro- duced the allegation of tenure. If the ten- ancy still existed, and recovery of the land was sought the former word was used, (and the writ was said to be “In the tenet.”) If the tenancy had already determined, the lat- ter term was used, (the writ being described as “in the tenuit,”) and then damages only were sought.

a compact contrary to the common nature and. reason of the fee, put Into a contract

TEXTURE.

The mode or system of hold- ing lands or tenements in subordination to some superior, which, in the feudal ages, was the leading characteristic of real property.

Tenure is the direct result of feudalism, which separated the dominium directum, (the dominion of the soil,) which is placed mediately or immediately in the crown, from the dominion utile, (the possessory title,) the right to the use and profits in the soil, designated by the term “seisin,” which is the high- est interest a subject can acquire. Wharton.

Wharton gives the following list of tenures which were ultimately developed:

Lay Tenures.

I.

Frank tenement, or freehold. (1) The mili- tary tenures (abolished, except grand serjeanty, ana reduced to free socage tenures) were: Knight service proper, or tenure in chivalry ; grand serjeanty; coinage. (2) Free socage, or plow-service; either petit serjeanty, tenure in burgage, or gavelkind.

II.

Villeinage. (1) Pure villeinage, (whence copyholds at the lord’s [nominal] will, which is regulated according to custom.) (2) Privileged villeinage, sometimes called “villein socage,” (whence tenure in ancient demesne, which is an exalted species of copyhold, held according to custom, and not according to the lord’s will,) aiid is of three kinds: Tenure in ancient de- mesne; privileged copyholds, customary free- holds, or free copyholds; copyholds of base tenure.

Spiritual Tenures.

I.

Frankalmoigne. or free alms.

II.

Tenure by divine service.

Tenure in its general sense, Is a mode of holding or occupying. Thus, we speak of the tenure of an office, meaning the manner In which it is held, especially with regard to time, (tenure for life, tenure during good be- havior,) and of tenure of land in the sense of occupation or tenancy, especially with ref- erence to cultivation and questions of politi- cal economy; e. g., tenure by peasant pro- prietors, cottiers, etc. Sweet. TERCERONE.

A term applied in the West Indies to a person one of whose parents was white and the other a mulatto. See Dan- iel v. Guy, 19 Ark. 131.

TERM.

A word or phrase; an expres- sion ; particularly one which possesses a fix- ed and known meaning in some science, art, or profession.

In the civil law. A space of time grunt- ed to a debtor for discharging his obligation. Poth. Obi. pt. 2, c. 3, art 3, | 1; Civ. Code La. art. 2048.

In estates. “Term” signifies the bounds, limitation, or extent of time for which an estate is granted; as when a man holds an estate for any limited or specific number of years, which is called his “term,” and he himself is called, with reference to the term he so holds, the “termor,” or “tenant of the term.” See Gay Mfg. Co. v. Hobbs, 128 N.

C. 46, 38 S. E. 20, 83 Am. St Rep. 061 ; San- derson v. Scranton, 105 Pa. 472; Hurd v. Whitsett 4 Colo. 84 ; Taylor v. Terry, 71 Cal. 46, 11 Pac. 813.

Of court. The word “term,” when used with reference to a court, signifies the space of time during which the court holds a ses- sion. A session signifies the time during the term when the court sits for the trans- action of business, and the session com- mences when the court convenes for the term, and continues until final adjournment either before or at the expiration of the term. The tern of the court is the time prescribed by law during which it may be in session. The session of the court is the time of its actual sitting. Lipari v. State, 19 Tex. App. 431. And see Horton v. Miller, 38 Pa. 271; Dees v. State, 78 Miss. 250, 28 South. $49; Conkling v. Rldgely, 112 111. 36, 1 N. E. 261, 54 Am. Rep. 204; Brown v. Hume, 16 Grat. (Va.) 462; Brown v. Leet 136 111. 203, 26 N. E. 639.

—General term. A phrase used in some ju- risdictions to denote the ordinary session of a court, for the trial and determination of causes, as distinguished from a special term, for the hearing of motions or arguments or the despatch of various kinds of formal business, or the trial of a special list or class of cases. Or it may de- note a sitting of the court in banc.- State v. Eggers, 152 Mo. 485, 54 S. W. 498.— Regular term. A regular term of court is a term be- gun at the time appointed by law, and continu- ed, in the discretion of the court, to Ruch time as it may appoint, consistent with the law: Wightman v. Karsner, 20 Ala. 451.— Special term. In New York practice, that branch of the court which is held by a single judge for hearing and deciding in the first instance mo- tions and causes of equitable nature is called the “special term,” as opposed to the “general term,” held by three judges (usually) to hear ap- peals. Abbott; Graeie v. Freeland, 1 N. Y. 232.— Term attendant on the inheritance. See Attendant Terms.— Term fee. In Eng- lish practice. A certain sum which a solicitor is entitled to charge to his client, and the client to recover, if successful, from the unsuccessful party; payable for every term in which any proceedings subsequent to the summons shall take plate. Wharton.— Term for deliberat- ing. By "term for deliberating” is understood the time given to the beneficiary heir, to examlnh if it be for his interest to accept or reject the succession which has fallen to him. Civ. Code La. art. 1033.—' Term for years. An estate for years and the time during which such estate is to be held are each called a “term hence the term may expire before the time, as by a surrender. Co. Litt. 45.— Term In gross. A term of years is said to be either in gross (out- standing) or attendant upon the inheritance. It is outstanding, or in gross, when it is unattach- ed or disconnected from the estate or inheri- tance, as where it is in the hands of some third party having no interest in the inheritance; it is attendant, when vested in some trustee in trust for the owner of the inheritance. Brown. —Term of lease. The word “term,” when used in connection with a lease, mean3 the pe- riod which is granted for the lessee to occupy the premises, and does not include the time be- tween the making of the lease and the tenant’s entry. Young v. Dake, 5 N. Y. 463, 65 Am. Dec. 356.— Term probatory. The period of time allowed to the promoter of an ecclesiastical suit to produce his witnesses, and prove the facts on which he rests his case. Coote, Ecc. Pr. 240, 241.— Term to conclude. In English ecclesiastical, practice. An appointment by the judge of a time at which both parties are un- derstood to renounce all further exhibits and allegations.— Term to propound all things. In English ecclesiastical practice. An appoint- ment by the judge of a time at which both par- ties are to exhibit all the acts and instruments which make for their respective causes.

In the law of contracts and in court practice. The word is generally used In the plural, and “terms” are conditions ; prop- ositions stated or promises made which, when assented to or accepted by another, settle the contract and bind the parties. Webster. See Hutchinson v. Lord, 1 Wis. 313, 60 Am. Dec. 381; State v. Fawcett, 58 Neb. 371, 78 N. W. 636; Rokes ▼. Amazon Ins. Co., 51 Md. 512, 34 Am. Rep. 323.

—Special terms. Peculiar or unusual condi- tions imposed on a party before granting some application to the favor of the court.—' Under terms. A party is said to be under terms when an indulgence is granted to him by the court in its discretion, on certain conditions. Thus, when an injunction is granted ex parte, the party obtaining it is put under terms to abide by such order as to damages as the court may make at the hearing. Mozley & Whitley.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Terra manens vacua occupanti conceditur — 'Land lying unoccupied is given to the first occupant' (1 Sid. 347)]

Land lying unoccupied is given to the first occupant — the first-possession rule for ownerless land.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in the entry with its authority; it is the classical maxim of first occupancy.

TERRAGE.

In old English law. A kind of tax or charge on land; a boon or duty of plowing, reaping, etc. Cowell.

TERR AGES.

An exemption from all

TERRITORIAL, TERRITORIALITY.

These terms are used to signify connection with, or limitation with reference to, a particular country or territory. Thus, “terri- torial law’’ is the correct expression for the law of a particular country or state, aunmigh “municipal law” is more common. “Terri- torial waters” are that part of the sea adja- cent to the coast of r given country which is by international law deemed to be within the sovereignty of that country, so that its courts have Jurisdiction over offenses com- mitted on those waters, even by a person on board a foreign ship. [Axiom: territorial waters — coastal-state sovereignty over the adjacent sea with jurisdiction over offenses committed there, even aboard a foreign ship]

Territorial waters are the part of the sea adjacent to a country's coast deemed by international law to be within that country's sovereignty, so its courts have jurisdiction over offenses committed on those waters.

Why: Genuine because the entry names this real public-international-law doctrine; the footnote states the principle without inventing a treaty citation.

TERRITORIAL COERT8.

The courts established in the territories of the United States.

TERRITORY.

A part of a country sep- arated from the rest, and subject to a par- ticular jurisdiction.

In American law. A portion Of the United States, not within the limits of any state, which has not yet been admitted as a state of the Union, but is organized, with n separate legislature, and with executive and Judicial ,oflicers appointed by the president. TEST.

To bring one to a trial and exam- ination, or to ascertain the truth or the quality or fitness of a thing.

Something by which to ascertain the truth respecting another thing; a criterion, gauge, standard, or norm.

In public law, an inquiry or examination addressed to a person appointed or elected to a public office, to ascertain his qualifica- tions therefor, but particularly a scrutiny of his political, religious, or social views, or his attitude of past and present loyalty or dis- loyalty to the government under which he Is to act See Attorney General v. [Law: Test Act 1673, 25 Car. II. c. 2 — oaths of allegiance and supremacy, declaration against transubstantiation, and reception of the sacrament; sacramental requirement abolished by 9 Geo. IV. c. 17]

The Test Act imposed sacramental and oath tests on civil and military officers; its sacramental requirement was abolished in 1828.

Why: Genuine because the entry itself identifies both statutes; the footnote preserves the real statutory lineage.

TESTA DE NEVIL.

An ancient and au- thentic record in two volumes, in the cus- tody of the king’s remembrancer In the ex- chequer, said to be compiled by John de Nevll, a justice itinerant. In the eighteenth and twenty-fourth years of Henry III. Cow- ell. These volumes were printed in 1807, under the authority of the commissioners of the public records, jtnd contain an account of fees held either immediately of the king or of others who held of the king in capite; fees holden in frankalmoigne ; serjeanties holden of .the king ; widows and heiresses of tenants in capite, whose marriages were in the gift of the king; churches in the gift of the king; escheats, and sums paid for scutages and aids, especially within the coun- ty of Hereford. TESTABLE.

A person is said to be test- able when he has capacity to make a will; a man of twenty-one years of age and of sane mind is testable.

TESTACY.

The state or condition of leaving a will at one’s death. Opposed to "Intestacy.”

TESTAMENT.

A disposition of personal property to take place after the owner's de- cease, according to his desire and direction. Pluche v. Jones, 54 Fed. 865, 4 C. C. A. 622; Aubert’s Appeal, 109 Pa. 447, 1 AO. 336; Conklin v. Egerton, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 436; Ragsdale v. Booker, 2 Strob. Eq. (S. C.) 348.

A testament is the act of last will, clothed with certain solemnities, by which the testa- tor disposes of his property, either univer- sally, or by Universal title, or by particular tiOe. Civ. Code La. art. 1571.

Strictly speaking, the term denotes only a will of personal property ; a will of land not being called a “testament.” The word “tes- tament” fe now seldom used, except In the heading of a formal will, which usually be- gins: “This is the last will and testament of me, A. B.,” etc. Sweet.

Testament is the true declaration of a man’s last will as to that which he would have to be done after his death. It is compounded, ac- cording to Justinian, from tcHatio mentis; but the better opinion is that it is a simple word formed from the Latin tester. and not a com- pound word. Mosley & Whitley.

—Military testament. In English law. A nuncupative will, that is, one made by word of mouth, by which a soldier may dispose of his goods, pay, and other personal chattels, without the forms and solemnities which the law re- quires in other cases. St. 1 Viet c. 26. { 11. —Mutual testaments. Wills made by two persons who leave their effects reciprocally to the survivor.— Mystic testament. In the law of Louisiana. A sealed testament. The mystic or secret testament, otherwise called the “cloeed testament," is made in the following manner: The testator must sign his dispositions, whether he has written them bimself or has caused them to be written by another person. The paper containing those dispositions, or the paper serv- ing as their envelope, must be closed and sealed. The testator shall present it thus closed and sealed to the notary and to seven witnesses, or he shall cause it to be closed and sealed in their presence. Then he shall declare to the notary, in presence of the witnesses, that that paper contains his testament written by him- self, or by another by his direction, and signed by him, the testator. The notary shall then draw up the act of superscription, which shall be written on that paper, or on the sheet that serves as its envelope, and that act shall be signed by the testator, and by the notary and (he witnesses. [Law: 39 Eliz. c. 17, § 3 (1597) — testimonial certificates for soldiers and mariners; repealed by 52 Geo. III. c. 31 (1812)]

Under 39 Eliz. c. 17 (1597), a testimonial was a justice's certificate authorizing a soldier or mariner to travel to his dwelling; wandering without one was a felony without benefit of clergy until the Act's repeal in 1812.

Why: Genuine because the entry itself identifies both the statute and its repealing Act; the footnote preserves the real statutory lineage.

TESTIMONIAL PROOF.

In the civil law. Proof by the evidence of witnesses, i. e., parol evidence, as distinguished from proof by written instruments, which is called “literal” proof.

TESTIMONIO.

In Spanish law. An au- thentic copy of a deed or other instrument, made by a notary nnd given to an interested party as evidence of his title, the original remaining in the public archives. Guilbeau v. Mays, 15 Tex. 414.

TESTIMONIUM CLAUSE.

In convey- ancing. That clause of a deed or Instrument with which it concludes: “In witness where- of, the parties to these presents have here- unto set their hands and seals.”

TESTIMONY.

Evidence of a witness; evidence given by n witness, under oath or afllrmatlon; as distinguished from evidence derived from writings, and other sources.

Testimony is not synonymous with evi- dence. It is but a species, a class, or kind of evidence. Testimony is the evidence given by witnesses. Evidence is whatever may be given to the jury as tending to prove a case. It includes the testimony of witnesses, documents, admissions of parties, etc. Mann v. Higgins, 83 Cal. 66, 23 Pac. 206; Carroll v. Bancker, 43 La. Ann. 1078, 10 South. 192 ; Columbia Nat Bank v. German Nat. Bank, 66 Neb. 803, 77 N. W. 340; Harris v. Tom- linson, 130 Ind. 420, 30 N. E. 214. See Evi- dence.

— Negative testimony. Testimony not bear- ing directly upon the immediate fact or occurrence under consideration, but evidencing facts from which it may be inferred that the act or fact in question could not possibly have happened. See Barclay v. Hartman, 2 Marv. (Del.) 351, 43 Atl. 174.

A lewd person is a sufficient witness to an act committed in a brothel — witness competency follows the place and nature of the fact.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in the entry with its authority; it is a real (if archaic) maxim on witness competency tied to the locus of the fact.

[Maxim: Testis nemo in sua causa esse potest — 'No one can be a witness in his own cause']

No one can be a witness in his own cause.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in the entry; it is the classical maxim of witness disqualification by interest, kin to nemo iudex in causa sua.

[Maxim: Testis oculatus unus plus valet quam auriti decem — 'One eye-witness is worth more than ten ear-witnesses' (4 Inst. 279)]

THISTLE-TAKE.

It was a custom with- in the manor of Halton, in Chester, that If, In driving beasts over a common, the driver permitted them to graze or take but a thistle, he should pay a halfpenny a-piece to the lord of the fee. And at Fiskerton, in Nott- inghamshire, by ancient custom, If a native or a cottager killed a swine above a year old, he paid to the lord a penny, which purchase of leave to kill a bog was also called “thistle-take.” Cowell.

THOROUGHFARE.

The term means, according to Its derivation, a street or pas- sage through which one can /are, (travel;) that is, a street or highway affording an unobstructed exit at each end into another street or public passage. If the passage is closed at one end, admitting no exit there, it is called a “cat de sac." See Cemetery Ass'n v. Meninger, 14 Kan. 315; Mankato v. Warren, 20 Minn. 150 (Oil. 128); Wig- gins v. TILLAGE.

A place tilled or cultivated; land under cultivation, as opposed to lands lying fallow or in pasture.

TIMBER.

Wood felled for building or other such like use. In a legal sense it gen- erally means (in England) oak, ash, and elm, but in some parts of England, and generally in America, it is used in a wider sense, which is recognized by the law.

The term “timber," as used in commerce, re- fers generally only to large sticks of wood, squared or capable of being squared for build- ing bouses or vessels; and certain trees only having been formerly used for such purposes, namely, the oak, the ash, and the elm, they alone were recognized as timber trees. But the numerous uses to which wood has come to be applied, and the general employment of all kinds of trees for some valuable purpose, has wrought a change in the general acceptation of terms in connection therewith, and we find that Webster defines “timber" to be “that sort of wood which is proper for buildings or for tools, utensils, furniture, carriages, fences, ships, and the like.” This would include ail sorts of wood from which any useful articles may be made, or which may be used to advantage in any class of manufacture or construction. Time of legal memory runs from the beginning of the reign of Richard I (1189); 'time immemorial' is time beyond living memory to the contrary.

A written de- scription of the plot of land so marked out with metes and bounds, and the name of the person, is recorded in the local stannaries court, aud is proclaimed on three successive court-days. If no objection is sustained by any other person, the court awards a writ to the bailiff to deliver possession of the said ‘bounds of tin-work’ to the ‘bounder,’ who thereupon has the exclusive right to search for, dig, and take for his own use all tin and tin-ore within the inclosed limits, paying as a royalty to the owner of the waste a certain proportion of the produce under the name of ‘toll-tin.’ ” 10 Q. TITLE.

The radical meaning of this word appears to be that of a mark, style, or designation; a distinctive appellation; the' name by which anything is known. Thus, in the law of persons, a title is an appella- tion of dignity or distinction, a name denot- ing the social rank of the person bearing it -h as "duke" or "oount." So, in legislation, the title of a statute is the heading or pre- liminary part, furnishing the name by which the act is individually known. It is usually prefixed to the statute in the form of a brief summary of its contents ; as "An act for the' prevention of gaming." Again, the title of a patent is the short description of the in- vention, which is copied in the letters pat- ent from the inventor's petition; e. g., "a new and improved, method of drying and, preparing malt" Johns. Pat Man. 90.

In the law of trade-marks, a title may; become a subject of property ; as one who has adopted a particular title for a newspaper, or other business enterprise, may, by long and; prior user, or by compliance with statutory provisions as to registration and notice, ac- quire a right to be protected in the exclusive use of it Abbott

The title of a book, or any literary compo- sition, is its name; that is, the beading or caption prefixed to it, and disclosing the dis-: tinctlve appellation by which it is to be known. This usually comprises a brief de- scription of its subject-matter and the name of its author. ,

"Title" is also used as the name of one of, the subdivisions employed in many literary works, standing intermediate between the di- visions denoted by the term "books" or "parts," and those designated as "chapters" and "sections."

In real property law. Title is the means whereby the owner of lands has the just possession of his property. Co. Lltt. 345; 2 Bl. Comm. 195.

Title is the means whereby a person's right- to property is established. Code Ga. 1882. f 2348.

Title may be defined generally to be the evi- dence of right which a person has to the posses- sion of property. The word "title" certainly does not merely signify the right which a per- son has to the possession of property ; because there are many instances in which a person may have the right to the possession of property, and. at the same time have no ’title to the same. In its ordinary legal acceptation, however, it gen- erally seems to imply a right of possession also.. It therefore appears, on the whole, to signify the outward evidence of the right, rather than, the mere right itself. Thus, when it is said that the “most imperfect degree of title consists in the mere naked possession or actual occupa- tion of an estate,” it means that the mere circumstance of occupying the estate is the weak- est species of evidence of the occupier’s right to such possession. The word is defined by Sir Edward Coke thus: Titulua eat juata cauaa poaaidendi id quod noatrum eat, (1- Inst. 34;) that is to say, the ground, whether purchase, gift, or other such ground of acquiring; “titu- iua" being distinguished in this respect from “ modua ocquirendi,” which is the traditio, i. e., delivery or conveyance of the thing. Brown.

Title is when a man hath lawful cause of entry into lands whereof another is seised ; and it signifies also the means whereby a man comes to lands or tenements, as by feoffment, last will and testament, etc. The word “title” includes a right, but is the more general word. Every right is a title, though every title is not a right for which an action lies. Jacob.

Law, 85; Pratt v. Fountain, 73 Ga. 262.

A title is a lawful cause or ground of possess- ing that which is ours. An intereat, though primarily it includes the terms “estate," ‘‘right,” and “title,” has latterly come often to mean less, and to be the same as “concern,” “share,” and the like. Merrill v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 73 N. Y. 456, 29 Am. Rep. 184.

The investigation of titles is one of the prin- cipal branches of conveyancing, and in that practice the word “title” has acquired the sense of “history,” rather than of “right" Thus, we speak of an abstract of title, and of investigat- ing a title, and describe a document as forming part of the title to property. Sweet.

In pleading. The right of action which the plaintiff has. The declaration must show the plaintiff’s title, and, if such title be not shown In that Instrument, the defect cannot be cured by any of the future pleadings. Bac. Abr. “Pleas,” etc., B 1.

In procedure, every action, petition, or other proceeding has a title, which consists of the name of the court in which it is pend- ing, the names of the parties, etc. Admin- istration actions nre further distinguished by the name of the deceased person whose es- tate is being administered. Every pleading, summons, affidavit, etc., commences with the title. In many cases it is sufficient to give what is called the “short title” of an ac- tion, namely, the court, the reference to the record, and the surnames of the first plain- tiff and the first defendant. [Case: Johnson v. McIntosh, 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 543 (1823)]

An absolute title to land cannot exist at the same time in different persons or in different governments.

Why: Genuine because the entry itself quotes this holding from the case, and Johnson v. McIntosh is independently the landmark authority on absolute title and the discovery doctrine.

A title is the just cause of possessing that which is our own; it is so called from 'tuendo,' defending.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body (the TITULUS definition) with its Coke authority; it is the received definition of title.

TO.

This Is a word of exclusion, when used in describing premises; it excludes the terminus mentioned. Montgomery v. Reed, 68 Me. 514.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD.

The words in a conveyance which show the estate in- tended to be conveyed. Thus, in a convey- ance of land in fee-simple, the grant is to “A. and his heirs, to have and to hold the said [land] unto and to the use of the said A., his heirs and assigns forever.” Wil- liams, Real Prop. 198,

Strictly speaking, however, the words “to have” denote the estute to be taken, while the words “to hold” signify that it is to be held of some superior lord, i e., by way of tenure, (q. v.) The former clause is called the “habendum;" the latter, the “tenen- dum." Co. Lltt6o.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: the habendum clause defines the estate granted; the tenendum denotes the tenure (Co. Litt. 6a)]

In a conveyance, 'to have' (the habendum) denotes the estate to be taken, while 'to hold' (the tenendum) signifies that it is held of some superior lord by way of tenure.

Why: Genuine because the entry states this distinction with its Coke authority; the footnote preserves the classical habendum/tenendum division.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

In American law. A tax laid upon ves- sels according to their tonnage or cubical ca- pacity.

A tonnage duty is a duty imposed on vessels in proportion to their capacity. The vital principle of a tonnage duty is that it is imposed, what- ever the subject, solely according to the rule of weight, either as to the capacity to carry or the actual weight of the thing itself. Inman S.

S. Co. v. Tinker. 94 U. S. 238, 24 L. Ed. 11&

The term “tonnage duty,” as used in the con- stitutional prohibition upon state laws imposing tonnage duties, describes a duty proportioned to the tonnage of the vessel ; a certain rate on each ton. But it is not to be taken in this restricted sense in the constitutional provision. The gener- al prohibition upon the states against levying duties on imports or exports would have been ineffectual if it had not been extended to duties on the ships which serve as the .vehicles of con- veyance. The prohibition extends to any duty on the ship, whether a fixed sum upon its whole tonnage or a sum to be ascertained by compar- ing the amount of tonnage with the rate of duty.

Southern S. S. Co. v. New Orleans, 0 Wall. 31, 18 L, Ed. 749.

A tonnage tax is defined to be a duty levied on a vessel according to the tonnage or capacity, it is a tax upon the boat as an instrument of navigation, and not a tax upon the property of a citizen of the state. The North. Cape, G Bias. 505. Fed. Gas. No. 10,310.

TOTAL LOSS.

In marine lnanranee, a total loss Is the entire destruction or loss, to the Insured, of the subject-matter of the policy, by the risks insured against As to the distinction between “actual" and “con- structive” total loss, see infra.

In Are lnanranee, a total loss is the com- plete destruction of the insured property by fire, so that nothing of value remains from It; as distinguished from a partial loss, where the property is damaged, but not en- tirely destroyed.

— Actual total loss. In marine insurance. The total loss of tbe vessel covered by a policy of insurance, by its real and substantive de- struction, hy injuries which leave it no longer existing in specie, by its being reduced to a wreck irretrievably beyond repair, or by its be- ing placed beyond the control of tbe insured and beyond his power of recovery. Distinguished from a constructive total loss, which occurs where the vessel, though injured by the perils Insured against, remains in specie and capable of repair or recovery, but at such an expense, or under such other conditions, that the insured may claim the whole amount of the policy up- on abandoning the vessel to the underwriters. “An actual total loss Is where the vessel ceases to exist in specie, — becomes a 'mere congeries of

E tanks,’ incapable of being repaired; or where, r the peril insured against, it is placed beyond the control of the insured and beyond his pow- er of recovery. A constructive total loss is where the vessel remains in specie, and is sus- ceptible of repairs or recovery, but at an ex- pense, according to the rule of the English com- mon law, exceeding its value when restored, or, according to the terms of this policy, where ‘the injury U equivalent to fifty per cent, of the 3 reed value in the policy,' and where the insur- abandons the vessel to the underwriter. In such cases the insured is entitled to indemnity as for s total loss. An exception to the rule re- quiring abandonment is found in cases where the loss occurs in foreign ports or seas, where it Is impracticable to repair. In such cases the master may sell the vessel for the benefit of all concerned, and the insured may claim as for a total loss by accounting to tbe insurer for the amount realised on the sale.. There are other exceptions to the rule, but it is sufficient now to say that we have found no case in which the doctrine of constructive total loss without aban- donment has been admitted, where the injured vessel remained in specie and waa brought to its home port by the insured. A well marked dis- tinction between an actual and a constructive total loss is therefore found in this: that in the former no abandonment is necessary, while in the latter it is essential, unless the case be brought within some exception to the rule re- quiring it. A partial loss is where an injury re- sults to the vessel from a peril insured against, but where the loss is neither actually nor con- structively total." Globe Ins. Co. v. This occurs where the loss or injury to the vessel Insured does not amount to its total disappear- ance or destruction, but where, although the ves- sel still remains, the cost of repairing or recov- ering it would amount to more than its value when so repaired, and consequently the insured abandons it to the underwriters. [Case: Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U.S. 82 (1879)]

Congress lacked power under the Commerce Clause to enact the general trademark legislation of 1870.

In the United States, a mechanic or artifi- cer of any kind, whose livelihood depends up- on the labor of his hands. Richie v. Mc- Cauley, 4 Pa. 472.

“Primarily the words ‘trader’ and ‘tradesman’ mean one who trades, and they have been treat- ed by the courts in many instances as synony- mous. But, in their general application and usage, I think they describe different vocations, By ‘tradesman’ is usually meant a shop-keeper. Such is the definition given the word in Bur- rill’s Law Dictionary. It is used in this sense by Adam Smith. He says, (Wealth of Nations;) ‘A tradesman in London is obliged to hire a whole house in that part of the town where his customers live. His shop is on the ground floor,’ etc. Dr. Johnson gives it the same mean- ing, and quotes Prior ana Goldsmith as authori- ties.” In re Ragsdale, 7. Biss. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 11,530.

TRANSFER, v. To carry or pass over; to pass a thing over to another; to convey.

TRANSFER, n. The passing of a thing or of property from one person to another; alienation; conveyance. 2 Bl. Comm. 294.

Transfer is an act of the parties, or of the law, by which the title to property is con- veyed from one living person to another. Civ. Code Cal. I 1039. And see Pear re v. Hawkins, 62 Tex. 437; Innerarity v. Mims, 1 Ala. 669; Sands v. Hill, 65 N. Y. 18; Pi- rie v. Chicago Title A Trust Co., 182 O. S. 438, 21 Sup. Ct. 906, 45 £>. Ed. 1171.

In prooednre, "transfer" is applied to an action or other proceeding, when it is taken from the jurisdiction of one court or judge, and placed under that of another.

—Transfer of a cause. The removal of a cause from the jurisdiction of one court or judge to another by lawful authority.— Transfer tax. A tax upon transfers of property by will or Inheritance; a tax upon the passing of the title to property or a valuable Interest therein out of or from the estate of a decedent, by in- heritance, devise, or bequest. See In re Hoff- man's Estate, 143 N. Y. 327, 38 N. E. 311; In re Gould's Estate, 156 N. Y. 423, 51 N. E. 287; In re Brez's Estate, 172 N. Y. 609, 64 N. E. 968. Sometimes also applied to a tax on the transfer of property, particularly of an incor- poreal nature, such as bonds or shares of stock, between living persons.

TRANSFERABLE.

A term used in a quasi legal sense, to indicate that the char- acter of assignability or negotiability at- taches to the particular Instrument, or that it may pass from hand to hand, carrying all rights of the original holder. The words "not transferable" are sometimes printed up- on a ticket, receipt, or bill of lading, to show that the same will not be good in the bands of any person other than the one to whom first issued.

TRANSFEREE.

He to whom a trans- fer ia made.

TRANSFERENCE.

In Scotch law. The proceeding to be taken upon the death of one of the parties to a {lending suit, whereby the action Is transferred or continued, in its then condition, from the decedent to his rep- resentatives. Transference is either active or passive; the former, when it is the pur- suer (plaintiff) who dies; the latter, upon the death of the defender. , Ersk. Inst.

Rights of dominion are transferred without title or delivery, by usucaption — that is, by long, continuous, and peaceful possession.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its Coke authority; it states the classical usucaption/adverse-possession principle.

TRANSFRETATIO.

Lat. In old Eng- lish law. A crossing of the strait, (of Dover ;] a passing or sailing over from England to France. The royal passages or voyages to Gascony, Brittany, and other parts of France were so- called, and time was sometimes com- puted from them.

[Romans 13:1-2, KJV]

Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation.

Why: TREASON is 'the offense of attempting to overthrow the government of the state to which the offender owes allegiance.' Romans 13:1-2 states the theological root of allegiance: the powers are ordained of God, so resist...

[Charles Dickens, A Tale of Two Cities, 1859]

(paraphrase) Dickens's A Tale of Two Cities stages a treason trial: Charles Darnay prosecuted at the Old Bailey for betraying England to France — the entry's 'betraying the state into the hands of a foreign power' as courtroom drama. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry's second clause maps exactly onto Darnay's prosecution. The treason trial is a set piece of the novel; facts certain. (paraphrase).

Bl. Comm. 208.

An injury or misfeasance to the person, property, or rights of another person, done with force and violence, either actual or Im- plied In law. See Grunson v. State, 89 Ind. 636, 46 Am. Rep. 178; Southern Ry. Co. v. Harden, 101 Ga. 263, 28 S. E. 847 ; Blood v. Kemp, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 173 ; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 63 111. 391; Agnew v. Jones, 74 MIsb. 347, 23 South. 25; Hill v. Kimball, 76 Tex. 210, 13 S. W. 59, 7 L. R.

A. 618.

In the strictest sense, an entry on another's ground, without a lawful authority, and do- ing some damage, however Inconsiderable, to his real property. 3 Bl. Comm. 209.

Trespass, in its most comprehensive sense, signifies any transgression or offense against the law of nature, of society, or of the country in which we live ; and this, whether it relates to a man's person or to his property. In its more limited and ordinary sense, it signifies an injury committed with violence, and this vio- lence may be either actual or implied; and the law will imply violence though none is actually used, when the injury is of a direct and immediate kind, and committed on the person or tangible and corporeal property of the plaintiff. Of actual violence, an assault and battery is an instance ; of implied, a peaceable but wrongful entry upon a person's land. Brown.

In practice. A form of action, at the common law, which lies for redress In the shape of money damages for any unlawful injury doue to the plaintiff, in respect either to his person, property, or rights, by the Im- mediate force and violence of the defendant

These are called on for Argument in the order in which they stand in the paper, on days appointed by the judges for the purpose. Brown — Public trial. A trial held in public, in the presence of the pub- lic. or in a place accessible and open to the attendance of the public at large, or of persons who may properly be admitted. “By this [pub- lic trial] is not meant that every person who sees fit shall in all cases be permitted to at- tend criminal trials, because there are many cases where, from the character of the charge and the nature of the evidence by which it is to be supported, the motives to attend the trial, on the part of portions of the community, would be of the worst character, and where a regard to public morals and public decency would re- quire that at least the young be excluded from hearing and witnessing the evidences of human depravity which the trial must necessarily bring to light. The requirement of a public trial is for the benefit of the accused ; that the public may see he is fairly dealt with and not unjustly con- demned. and that the presence of interested spec tutors may keep his triers keenly alive to a sense of their responsibility and to the importance of their functions : and the requirement is fairly observed if, without partiality or favoritism, a reasonable proportion of the public is suffered to attend, notwithstanding that those persons whose presence could he of no service to the accused, and who would only be drawn thither by a prurient curiosity, are excluded altogether.” Cooley, Const. lam. *312. Under such circumstances, the issue might be determined by the certificate alone, because, if sent to a jury, it would be conclusive upon them, and therefore their inter- vention was unnecessary. Tomlins.— Trial by grand assise is a peculiar mode of trial al- lowed in writs of right. See Assize; Grand Assize.— Trial lnr inspection or examina- tion is a form of trial in which the judges of the court, upon the testimony of their own senses, decide the point in dispute.— Trial by Jury. A trial in which the issues of fact are to be determined by -the verdict of a jtary of twelve men, duly selected, impaneled, and sworn. The terms “jury” and “trial by jury" are, and for ages have been, well known in the language of the law. They were used at the adoption of the constitution, and always, it is believed, be- fore that time, and almost always since, in a single sense. A jury for the trial of a cause was a body of twelve men, described as upright, well-qualified, and lawful men, disinterested and impartial, not of kin nor personal dependents bf either of the parties, having their homes within the jurisdictional limits of the court, drawn and selected by officers free from all bias in favor of or against either party, duly impaneled under the direction of a competent court, sworn to render a true verdict according to the law and the evidence given them. who. after hearing the parties and their evidence, and receiving the instructions of the court relative to the law involved in the trial, and deliberat- ing, when necessary, apart from all extrane- ous influences, must return their unanimous rein- dict upon tbe issue submitted to them. All the books of the law describe a trial jury sub- stantially as we have stnted it ; and a “trial by jury" Is a trial by such a body so constitut- ed and conducted. State v. McClear, 11 Ner. 60. [Christian Carion, Joyeux Noël, 2005]

(paraphrase) Carion's Joyeux Noël dramatizes the 1914 Christmas Truce — British, French, and German soldiers suspending hostilities by tacit agreement in no-man's-land; the entry's 'temporary cessation of hostilities by agreement' filmed. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines a truce as suspension of hostilities by agreement between belligerents. The Christmas Truce is the iconic historical truce, and Joyeux Noël (2005) is its best-known film treatment. Certain; (paraphra…

TRUCK ACT.

In English law. This name Is given to the statute 1 & 2 Wm. IY. c. 37, passed to abolish what is commonly called the “truck system,” under which em- ployers were in the practice of paying the wages of their work people in goods, or of requiring them to purchase goods at certain shops. This led to laborers being compelled to take goods of inferior quality at a high price. The act applies to all artificers, work- men, and laborers, except those engaged in certain trades, especially iron and metal works, quarries, cloth, silk, and glass manu- factories. It does not apply to domestic or agricultural servants. Sweet [Law: Truck Act 1831, 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 37 — wages to be paid in coin, truck system abolished]

The Truck Act abolished the truck system under which employers paid wages in goods or required purchases at company shops.

Why: Genuine because the entry itself identifies this statute with its regnal citation; the footnote names the real enactment and its operative rule.

TRUE.

Conformable to fact; correct; ex- act ; actual ; genuine ; honest

“In one sense, that only is true which is con- formable to the actual state of things. In that sense, a statement is untrue which does not ex- press things exactly as they are. But in an-, other and broader sense, the word 'true' is often used as a synonym of ‘honest,’ ‘sincere,’

‘not fraudulent* ’’ Moulor v. American L. Ins. Co., Ill U. S. 345, 4 Sup. Ct. 466, 28 L. Ed. 447.

—True Mil. In criminal practice. The in- dorsement made by a grand jury upon a bill of indictment, when they find it sustained by the evidence laid before them, and are satisfied of the truth of the accusation. 4 Bl. Comm. 306.— True, public, and notorious. These three qualities used to be formally predicated hi the libel in the ecclesiastical courts,- of the charges which it contained, at the end of each article severally. Wharton.

TRUST. 1. An equitable or beneficial right or title to land or other property, held for the beneficiary by another person, In whom resides the legal title or ownership, recognized and enforced by courts of chan- cery. See Goodwin v. McMlnn, 193 Pa. 646, 44 Atl. 1094, 74 Am. St. Rep. 703; Beers v. Lyon, 21 Conn. 613; Seymour v. Freer, 8 Wall. 202, 19 L. Ed. 306.

An obligation arising out of a confidence reposed in the trustee or representative, who has the legal title to property conveyed to him, that he will faithfully apply the prop- erty according to the confidence reposed, or, in other words, according to the wishes of the grantor of the trust. 4 Kent Comm. 304; Willis, Trustees, 2; Beers v. Lyon, 21 Conn. 613 ; Thornburg v. Buck, 13 Ind. App. 446, 41 N.' E. 85.

An equitable obligation, either express or implied, resting upon a person by reason of a confidence reposed In him, to apply or deal with the property for the benefit of some other person, or for the benefit of himself and another or others, according to such con- fidence. McCreary v. Gewlnner, 103 Ga. 528, 29 S. E. 960.

A holding of property subject to a duty of employing it or applying its proceeds ac- cording to directions given by the person from whom It was derived. Munroe v. Crouse, 59 Hun, 248, 12 N. Y. Supp. 815.

— Accessory trust. In Scotch law, this is the term equivalent to “active” or “special” trust. See infra. — Active trust. One which imposes upon the trustee the duty of taking active measures in the execution of the trust, as. where property Is conveyed to trustees with directions to sell and distribute the proceeds among creditors of the grantor; distinguished from a “passive" or “dry” trust— Cestui quo trust. The person for whose benefit a trust is created or who is to enjoy the income or the avails of i t. — Constructive trust. A trust raised by construction of law. or arising by operation of law, as distinguished from an ex- press trust Wherever the circumstances of a transaction are such that the person who takes the legal estate in property cannot also enjoy the beneficial interest without necessarily vio- lating some established principle of equity, the court will immediately raise a constructive trust, and fasten it upon the conscience of the legal owner, so as to convert him into a trus- tee for the parties who in equitv are entitled to the beneficial enjoyment. Hill, Trustees. 116; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 51 1. Neater v. Gross, 66 Minn. 371. 69 N. W. 39: Jewelry On. v. Volfer. 106 Ala. 205, 17 South. 525, 28 L. R. A. 707, 54 Am. St. Rep. 31.— Continigent trust. An express trust may depend for its operation upon a future event, and is then a “contingent" trust. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 3154.— Direct trust. A direct trust is an express trust, as distinguished from a constructive or implied trust. Currence v. Ward, 43 W. Va. 867, 27

S. E. 329.— Directory trust. One which is subject to be moulded or applied according to subsequent directions of the grantor; one which is not completely and finally settled by the instrument creating it but only defined in its general purpose and to be carried into detail according to later specific directions.— Dry trust. One which merely vests the legal title in the trustee, and does not require the per- formance of any active duty on his part to carry out the trust. — Executed trust. A trust of which the scheme has in the outset been completely declared. Adams, Eq. 151. A trust in which the estates and interest in the subject-matter of the trust are completely limited and defined by the instrument creating the trust, and require no further instruments to complete them. Bisp. Eq. 20: Pillot v. Landon, 46 N.

J. Eq. 310, 19 Atl. 25; Dennison v. Goebring, 7 Pa. 177. 47 Am. Dec. 505 ; In re Fair's Estate, 132 Cal. 523, 00 Pac. 442, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70; Cushing v. Blake. 29 N. J. Eq. 403; Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H. L. Cas. 210. As all trusts are executory in this sense, that the trustee is bound to dispose of the estate according to the tenure of his trust, whether active or passive, it would be more accurate and precise to substitute the terms, "perfect" and "imperfect" for "executed" and "execu- tory" trusts. 1 Hayes, Conv. 85. — Executory trust. One which requires the execution of some further instrument, or the doing of some further act, on the part of the creator of the trust or of the trustee, towards i(s complete creation or full effect. An executed trust is one fully created and of immediate effect. These terms do not relate to the execution of the trust as regards the beneficiary. Martling v. Marilmg. 55 N. J. Eq. 771. 39 Atl. 203 ; Car- radine v. Carradine. 33 Miss. 729: Cornwell v. Wulflf, 148 Mo. 542. 50 S. W. 439, 45 L. R.

A. 53; In re Fair's Estate. 132 Cal. 523, 60 Pac. 442, 84 Am. St. Itep. 70; Pillot v. Lan- don. 46 N. J. Eq. 310. 19 Atl. 25.— Express trust. A trust created or declared in express terms, and usually in writing, as distinguished from one inferred by the law from the con- duct or dealings of the parties. State v. Camp- bell. 59 Kan. 246, 52 Pac. 454 ; Kaphan v. Toney (Tenn. Ch.) 58 S. \V. 913 : McMonagle v. McGlinn (C. C.) 85 Fed. 91 ; Ransdel v, Moore, 153 Ind. 393, 53 N. E. 767. 53 I.. R. A. 753. Express trusts are those which are cre- ated in express terms in the deed, writing, or will, -while implied trusts are those which, with- out being expressed, are deducible from the nature of the transaction, ns matters of intent, or which are superinduced upon the transac- tions by operation of law, as matters of equity, independently of the particular intention of the parties. Brown v. Cherry. 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 635.— Imperfect trust. An executory trust, (which see ;) and see Executed Trust. — Im-

Slied trust. A trust raised or created by npHcation of law ; a trust implied or pre- sumed from circumstances. Wilson v. Welles,- 79 Minn. 53. 81 N. W. 549; In re Morgan, 84 Hun (N. Y.) 220; Kaphan v. Toney (Tenn. Ch.) 58 S. W. 913 ; Cone v. Dunham, 59 Conn. 145. 20 Atl. 311, 8 L. R. A. 647; Russell v. Peyton, 4 III. App. 478. — Involuntary trust. "Involuntary" or "constructive" trusts embrace all those instances in which a trust is raised by the doctrines of equity, for the pur- pose of working out justice in the most efficient manner, when there is no Intention of the parties to create a trust relation and contrary to the intention of the one holding the* legal title. This class of trusts may usually be re- ferred to fraud, either actual or constructive, as an essentinl element. Bank v. Kimball Mill- ing Co.. 1 S. D. 388, 47

N. W. 402, 36 Am. St. Rep. 739.— Ministerial trusts. (Also called "instrumental trusts.") Those which de- mand no further exercise of reason of under- standing than every intelligent agent must nec- essarily employ ; as to convey an estate. They are a species of special trusts, distinguished- from discretionary trusts, which necessarily re- quire much exercise of the understanding. 2 Bouv. Inst. no. 1896.— Naked trust. A dry or passive tmst ; one which requires no action on the part of the trustee, beyond turning over money or -property to the cettui gue trutt .— Passive trust. A trust os to which the trus- tee has no active duty to perform. Goodrich v. Milwaukee. 24 Wis. 429: Perkins v. Brink- lev. 133 N. C. 154. 45 S. E. 542: Holmes v. Walter. 118 Wis. 409. 95 N. W. 380, 62 L. R.

A. 986. — Precatory trust. Where words em- ployed in a will or other instrument do not amount to a positive command or to a distinct testamentary disposition, hut are terms of en- treaty, request, recommendation, or expectation, they are termed "precatory words," and from such words the law will raise a trust, called a "precatory trust," to carry out the wishes of the testator or grantor. See Bohon v. Barrett, 79 K.v. 378: Hunt v. Hunt. 18 Wash. 14. 50 Pac. 578; Aldrich v. Aldrich, 172 Mass. 101, 51 N. K. 449. — Private trust. One established or created for the benefit of a certain designated individual-or individuals, or a known person or class of persons, clearly identified or ca- pable of identification by the terms of the in- strument creating the trust, as distinguished from trusts for public institutions or charitable uses. See Pennoyer v. Wadhams, 20 Or. 274, 25 Pac. 720,' 11 L. R. A. 210: Doyle v. Whalen. 87 Me. 414, 32 Atl. 1022. 31 L. R. A. 118: Brooks v.‘ Belfast. 90 Me. 318. 38 Atl. 222. —Proprietary trusi. In Scotch law. a na- ked. dry, or passive trusf. See supra. — Publio trust. One constituted for the benefit eitner of the public at large or of some considerable portion of it answering a particular description ; to this class belong all trusts for charitable pur- poses. and indeed public trusts and charitable trusts may be considered in general as synony- mous expressions. Lewin, Trusts, 20. — Result- ing trust. One that arises by implication of law. or by the operation and constniction of equity, and which is established at consonant to the presumed intention of the parties as gathered from the nature of the transaction ; as, for example, where on? pqrson, becomes in- vested with the title to real property under cir- cumstances which in equity obligate him to hold the title and exercise his ownership for the bene- fit of another, a familiar instance being the case where a man buys land with his own money but has the title put iu tbe name of another. See 8anders v. Steele, 124 Ala. 415. 26 South. SS2 ; Dorman v. Dorman. 187 111. 154, 58 K E. 235 79 Am. St. Rep. 210; Abom v.- Searles, 18

R. I. 357, 27 Ati. 796; Fulton v. - Jansen, 90 Cal. 587. 34 Pac. 331 ; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Shepard, 169 N. Y. 170, 62 N. K. 154. 58 L. R. A. 115. — Secret trusts. Where a testator gives property to a person, on a verbal romise by the legatee or devisee that he will old it in trust for another person, this is called a “secret trust." Sweet.— Shifting trust. An express trust which is so settled that it may operate in favor of beneficiaries additional to. Or substituted for, those first named, upon speci- fied eontingencies. Civ. Code Ga. 1895. i 3154. — Simple trust. A simple trust corresponds with the ancient use, and is where property is simply vested in one person for tlje use of an- dther. and the nature of the trust, not being qualified by the settler, is left to the Construc- tion of law. It differs from a special trust. Perkins v. Brinkley. 133 N. C. 154. 45 s. F„ 541 ; Cone v. Dunham. 59 Conn. 145. 20 Atl. 311, 8 L. R. A. 047 ; Dodson v. Ball. 60 Pa. 500. 100 Am. Dec. 586.— Special trust. Where the machinery of a trust is introduced for the execution of some purpose particularly pointed out. and the trustee is not a mere pas- sive depositary of the estate, but Is culled upon to exert himself actively in the execution of the settlor's intention ; as. where a conveyance is to trustees upon trust to sell for payment of debts. Special tmstB have been divided into (1) ministerial (or instrumental) and (2) discre- tionary. The former, such as demand no fur- ther exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ; the latter, such as cannot be duly administered without the application of a certain degree of prudence and judgment. 2 B°ov. Inst. no. 1896; Perkins v. Brinkley. 133 N. O. 154. 45

S. E. 541 ; Flagg v. Ely, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 209 ; Freer v. Lake, 115 111. 062. 4 N. E. 512; Dodson v. Ball. 60 Pa. 496, 100 Am. Dec. 586— Spendthrift trust. See Spendthrift. —Transgressive trust. A name sometimes applied to a trust which transgresses or violates the rule against perpetuities. See Pulitzer v. Livingston, 89 Me. 359, 36 Atl. 635.— Trut company. A corporation formed for the pur- pose of taking, accepting, and executing all such trusts as may be lawfully committed to it, and acting as testamentary trustee, trustee under deeds of settlement or for married women, executor, guardian, etc. To these functions are sometimes (but not necessarily) added the busi- ness of acting as fiscal agent for corporation^ attending to the registration and transfer of their stock and bonds, serving as trustee for their bond or mortgage creditors, and transact- ing a general banking and loan business. See Vennei1 v. Farmers' I.. & T. Co., 54 App. Div. 271. 66 N. Y. Supp. 773; Jenkins v. Neff, 163

N. X. 320, 57 N. E. 408 ; Mercantile Nat. Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 7 Sup. Ct. 826, 30 Ii. Ed. 895— Trust-deed. (1) A species of mortgage given to a trustee for the purpose of securing a numerous class of creditors, as the bondholders of a railroad corporation, with pow- er to foreclose and sell on failure of the pay- ment, of their bonds, notes, or other claims. (2) In some of the states, and in the District of Columbia, a trust-deed is a security resem- bling a mortgage, being a conveyance of lands to trustees to secure the payment of a debt, with a power of sale upon default, and upon a trust to apply the net proceeds to paying the debt and to turn over the surplus to the gran- tor.—Trust estate. This term may mean ei- ther the estate of the trustee,— that is, the legal title,— or the estate of the beneficiary, or the corpus of the property which is the subject of the trust. See Cooper v. Cooper, 5 N. J. Eq. 9 ; Farmers’ L. & T. Co. v. Carroll, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 643. — Trust ez maleflcio. A species of. constructive trust arising out of some traud, misconduct, or breach of faith on the part of the person to be charged as trustee, which ren- ders It an equitable necessity that a trust should be implied. See Rogers v. Richards, 67 Kan. 706. 74 Pac. 205:

Kent v. Dean. 128 Ala. 600, 30 South. 543; . Barry v. Hill, 100 Pa. 344, 31 At). 126. — Trust fund. A fund held by a trustee for the specific purposes of the trust ; in a more general sense, a fund which, legally or equitably., is subject to be devoted to a par- ticular purpose and cannot or should not be diverted therefrom. In this sense it is often said that the capital and other property of a corporation 'id a “trust fund” for the payment of its debts. See Henderson v. Indiana Trust Co., 143 Ind. 561, 40 N. E. 516 ; In re Beard’s Estate; 7 Wyo. 104, 50 Pac. 226, 38 L. R. A. 860, 75 Am. St. Rep. 882.—' Trait in invitum. A constructive trust imposed by equity, con- trary to the trustee’s intention and will, upon property in his hands. Sanford v. Hamner, 115 Ala. 406, 22 South. 117.— Volantary trust. An obligation arising out of a personal con- fidence reposed in, and voluntarily accepted by, one for the benefit of another, as distinguished from an “involuntary” trust, which is created by operation of law. Civ. Code Cal. §jj 2216, 2217. According to another use of the term, “voluntary” trusts are such as are made in favor of a volunteer, that is, a person who gives nothing in exchange for the trust, but receives it as a pure gift : nnd in this use the term is distinguished from "trusts for value,” the latter being such as are in favor of pur- chasers, mortgagees, etc.

2. Ia constitutional and statutory law. An assocIntion or organization of persons or corporations having the intention and power, or the tendency, to create a mo- nopoly, control production, interfere with the free course of trade or transportation, or to fix and regulate the supply and the price of commodities. In the history of economic .development, the “trust” was originally a device, by which several corporations engag- ed in the same general line of business might combine for their mutual advantage, In the direction of eliminating destructive competition, controlling the output of their commodity, and regulating and maintaining Its price, but at the same time preserving their .separate individual existence, and without any consolidation or merger. This de- vice was the erection of a central committee or board, composed, perhaps, of the presi- dents or general managers of the different corporations, and the transfer to them of a majority of the stock In each of the corpo- rations, to be held “In trust” for the sev- eral stockholders so assigning their holdings. These stockholders received in return “trust certificates” showing that they were entitled to receive the dividends on their assigned stock, though the voting power of it had passed to the trustees. This last feature enabled the trustees or committee to elect all the directors of all the corporations, dnd through them the officers, and thereby to ex- ercise an absolutely controlling influence over the policy and operations of each con- stituent company, to the ends and with the purposes above mentioned. Though the “trust,” in this sense, Is now seldom If ever resorted to as a form of corporate organiza- tion, having given place to the “holding cor- poration” and other devices, the word has become current In statute laws as Well as popular speech, to designate almost any form of combination of a monopolistic character or tendency See Black, Const Law (3d Ed.) p. 428; Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679 ; MacGinniss v. Mining Co., 29 Mont 428, 75 Pac. 89; State v. Continental Tobacco Co., 177 Mo. 1, 75 S. W. 737; Queen Ins. Co. v. TRUSTEE.

The person appointed, or required by law, to execute a trust; one in whom an estate. Interest, or power is vested, under an express or implied agreement to administer or exercise it for the benefit or to the use of another.

"Trustee" Is also used In a wide and per- haps Inaccurate sense, to denote that a per- son has the duty of carrying out a transac- tion, in which he and another person are In- terested, in such manner as will be most for the benefit of the latter, and not in such a way that he himself might be tempted, for the sake of his personal advantage, to neg- lect the interests of the other. In this sense, directors of companies are said to be "trus- tees for the shareholders." Sweet- — Conventional tx-ustee. A "conventional" trustee is one appointed by a decree of court to execute a trust, as distinguished from one appointed by the instrument creating the trust. Gilbert v. Kolb, 85 Md. 627, 37 Atl. 423. — Joint trustees. Two or more persons who are in- trusted with property for the benefit of one or more others.— Quasi trustee. A person who reaps a benefit from a breach of trust, and so becomes answerable as a trustee. Lewin, Trusts (4th Ed.) 592, 638. — Testamentary trustee. A trustee appointed by or acting under a will ; one appointed to carry out a trust created by a will.. The term does not ordinarily include an executor or an administrator with the will annexed, or a guardian, though all of these are in a sense trustees, except when they act in the execution of a trust created by the will and which is separable from their functions as executors, etc. See In re Haz- ' ard, 51 Hun. 201, 4 N. N. E. 352.—' Trustee acta. The statutes 13 & 14 Viet. c. €0, passed in 1850, and 15 ft 10 Viet. c. 55, passed in 1852. enabling the court of chancery, without bill filed, to appoint new trustees in lieu of any who, on account of death, lunacy, absence, or otherwise, are unable or unwilling to act as such ; ■ and also to make vesting orders by which legal estates and rights may be transferred from the old trustee or trustees to the new trustee or trustees so appointed. Mozley ft Whitley.— Trustee ex znaleflclo. A person who, being guilty of wrongful or fraudulent conduct, is held by equity to the duty and liability of a trustee, in relation to the subject-matter, to prevent him from profiting by bis own wrong.— Trustee In bankruptcy. A trustee in bankruptcy is a person in whom the property of a bankrupt is vested in trust for the creditors.— Trustee pro- cess. The name given, in the New England states, to the process of garnishment or for- eign attachment. — Trustee . relief nets. The statute 10 ft 11 Viet. c. 90. passed in 1847. and statute 12 & 13 Viet. e. 74, passed in 1849. by which a trustee is enabled to pay money into court, in cases where a difficulty arises respect- ing' the title to the trust fund.  | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The Trustee Acts enabled the Court of Chancery to appoint new trustees in place of those dead, lunatic, absent, or unwilling, and to make vesting orders transferring the legal estate.

Why: Genuine because the entry itself identifies both statutes with their regnal citations and operative effect.

[Law: Trustee Relief Act 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96; Trustee Relief Act 1849, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 74]

The Trustee Relief Acts enabled a trustee, where title to the trust fund was in doubt, to pay the money into court.

Why: Genuine because the entry itself identifies both statutes with their regnal citations and operative effect.

TURNPIKE.

A gate set across a road, to stop travelers and carriages until toll is paid for the privilege of passage thereon.

—Turnpike roads. These are roads on which parties have by law a right to erect galas and ban, for the purpose of taking toll, and of re* fusing the permission to pass along them to all persons who refuse to pay. Nortbam Bridge Co. v. London Ry. Oo., 6 Mees. & W. 428. A turn- pike road is a public highway, established by public authority for public use, and is to be re- garded as a public easement, and not as pri- vate property. The only difference between this and a common highway is that, instead of be- ing made at the public expense in the first in- stance, it is authorised and laid out by public authority, and made at the expense of individ- uals in the first instance ; and the cost of con- struction and maintenance iB reimbursed by a toll, levied by public authority for the purpose. Com. v. Wilkinson, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 175, 20 Am. Dec. 054.

TURPIS.

Lat In the civil law. Base; mean; vile; disgraceful; infamous; unlaw- ful. Applied both to things and persons. Calvin.

—Turpis causa. A base cause; a vile or im- moral consideration ; a consideration which, on account of its immorality, is not allowed by law to be sufficient either to support a contract or fonnd an action ; e. g„ future illicit intercourse. —Turpis contractus. An immoral or iniqui- tous contract

[Maxim: Tutius erratur ex parte mitiore — 'It is safer to err on the gentler side' (3 Inst. 220)]

It is safer to err on the gentler side.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its Coke authority; it states the classical mercy rule in doubtful cases.

[Maxim: Tutius semper est errare acquietando, quam in puniendo, ex parte misericordiae quam ex parte justitiae — 'It is always safer to err in acquitting than punishing, on the side of mercy than on the side of justice' (Branch, Princ.; 2 Hale, P.C. 290; Broom, Max. 326; Com. v. York, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 116)]

It is always safer to err in acquitting than in punishing, on the side of mercy than on the side of justice.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its multiple authorities; it is the received maxim preferring acquittal to punishment in doubt.

TUTOR.

In the civil law. This term corresponds nearly to “guardian,” (i. e., a person appointed to have the care of the person of a minor and the administration of his estate,) except that the guardian of a minor who. has passed a certain age is called “curator,” and has powers and duties differing somewhat from those of a tutor.

By the laws of Louisiana, minors under the age of fourteen years, if males, and un- der the age of twelve years, if females, are, both as to their persons and their estates, placed under the authority of a tutor. Above that age, and until their majority or eman- cipation, they are placed under the nuthor- 'lty of a curator. Civ. Code La. 1838, art 263.

—Tutor alienus. In English law. The name given to a stranger who enters upon the lands of an infant within tbe age of fourteen, and takes the profits. Co. Litt. SUb, 90o.— Tutor proprlus. The name given to one who is rightly a guardian in socage, in contradistinction to a tutor alienus.

TUTORSHIP.

The office and power of a tutor.

— Tutorship by nature. After the dissolu- tion of marriage by tbe death of either husband or wife, the tutorship of minor children belongs of right to the surviving mother or father. This is what is called "tutorship by nature.” Civ. Code La. art. 250.— Tutorship by will. The right of appointing a tutor, whether a relation or a stranger, belongs exclusively to the father or mother dying last. This is call- ed “tutorship by will,” because generally it is given by testament ; but it may likewise be given by any declaration by the surviving father or mother, executed before a notary and two witnesses. Civ. Code La. art. 257.

TUTRIX.

A female tutor.

TWA NIGHT GEST.

In Saxon law. A guest on the second night. By the laws of Edward the Confessor It wa's provided that a man who lodged at an inn, or at the bouse of another, should be considered, on the first night of his being there, a stranger, (itncuth ;) on the second night, a guest ; on the third night, a member of the family. This had reference to the responsibility of the. host or entertainer for offenses committed by the guest

TWELFHINDI.

TWELVE TABLES.

The earliest stat- ute or code of Roman law, framed by a com- mission of ten men, B. C. 450, upon the re- turn of a commission of three who had been sent abroad to study foreign laws and insti- tutions. The Twelve Tables consisted partly of laws transcribed from the Institutions of other nations, partly of such as were altered and accommodated to the manners of the Romans, partly of new provisions, and main- ly, perhaps, of laws and usages under their ancient kings. They formed the source and foundation for the whole later development of Roman jurisprudence. They exist now only in fragmentary form. See 1 Kent, Comm. 520.

[Axiom: uberrima fides — the duty of utmost good faith (cf. Carter v. Boehm, 3 Burr. 1905 (1766))]

Insurance contracts demand uberrima fides — the most abundant good faith: absolute candor with no concealment or deception, however slight.

Why: Genuine because the entry states this doctrine as the definition of uberrima fides; the footnote preserves it as the received insurance-law axiom, anchored to its landmark authority.

[Maxim: Ubi aliquid conceditur, conceditur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest — 'When anything is granted, that also is granted without which the thing granted cannot exist' (Broom, Max. 483; 13 Mees. & W. 706)]

When anything is granted, that also is granted without which the thing granted cannot exist.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the rule that a grant carries its necessary incidents.

[Maxim: Ubi aliquid impeditur propter unam causam, ea remota, tollitur impedimentum — 'Where anything is impeded by one single cause, if that be removed, the impediment is removed' (Branch, Princ., citing 5 Coke 77a)]

Where anything is impeded by one single cause, if that be removed, the impediment is removed.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the rule that removing the sole cause removes the impediment.

[Maxim: Ubi cessat remedium ordinarium, ibi decurritur ad extraordinarium — 'Where the ordinary remedy fails, recourse must be had to an extraordinary one' (4 Coke 92b)]

Where the ordinary remedy fails, recourse must be had to an extraordinary one.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the rule justifying extraordinary relief when ordinary remedies fail.

[Maxim: Ubi culpa est, ibi poena subesse debet — 'Where the crime is committed, there ought the punishment to be undergone' (Jenk. Cent. 325)]

Where the crime is committed, there ought the punishment to be undergone.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the rule linking punishment to the place and fact of the offense.

[Maxim: Ubi damna dantur, victus victori in expensis condemnari debet — 'Where damages are given, the vanquished party ought to be condemned in costs to the victor' (2 Inst. 289)]

Where damages are given, the vanquished party ought to be condemned in costs to the victor.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the received costs-follow-the-event rule.

Where the same reason exists, there the same law prevails; and, of things similar, the judgment is similar.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it is the classical ratio-decidendi maxim grounding analogy in law.

[Maxim: Ubi et dantis et accipientis turpitudo versatur, non posse repeti dicimus; quoties autem accipientis turpitudo versatur, repeti posse — 'Where there is turpitude on the part of both giver and receiver, we say it cannot be recovered back; but as often as the turpitude is on the side of the receiver [alone] it can be recovered back' (Mason v. Waite, 17 Mass. 562)]

Where there is turpitude on the part of both giver and receiver, it cannot be recovered back; but where the turpitude is on the receiver's side alone, it can be recovered back.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the in-pari-delicto rule on recovery of money paid for immoral consideration.

[Maxim: Ubi factum nullum, ibi fortia nulla — 'Where there is no principal fact, there can be no accessory' (4 Coke 42b)]

Where there is no principal fact, there can be no accessory.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the rule that accessory liability depends on a principal fact.

[Maxim: Ubi jus, ibi remedium — 'Where there is a right, there is a remedy' (Broom, Max. 191, 204; 1 Term R. 512; Co. Litt. 197b)]

Where there is a right, there is a remedy.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it is the most famous of the Ubi maxims, the foundation of remedial law.

[Maxim: Ubi jus incertum, ibi jus nullum — 'Where the law is uncertain, there is no law' (authority cited in the entry)]

Where the law is uncertain, there is no law.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the certainty requirement for law.

[Maxim: Ubi lex aliquem cogit ostendere causam, necesse est quod causa sit justa et legitima — 'Where the law compels a man to show cause, it is necessary that the cause be just and lawful' (2 Inst. 289)]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Where the law compels a man to show cause, it is necessary that the cause be just and lawful.
Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the rule governing orders to show cause.

[Maxim: Ubi lex est specialis, et ratio ejus generalis, generaliter accipienda est — 'Where the law is special, and the reason of it general, it ought to be taken as being general' (2 Inst. 43)]
Where the law is special, and the reason of it general, it ought to be taken as being general.
Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the construction rule extending a special law by its general reason.

[Maxim: Ubi lex non distinguit, nec nos distinguere debemus — 'Where the law does not distinguish, neither ought we to distinguish' (7 Coke 5b)]
Where the law does not distinguish, neither ought we to distinguish.
Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the received rule against judicially engrafting distinctions the law omits.

[Maxim: Ubi major pars est, ibi totum — 'Where the greater part is, there the whole is. That is, majorities govern' (Moore 578)]
Where the greater part is, there the whole is — that is, majorities govern.
Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the majority-rule principle.

[Maxim: Ubi non adest norma legis, omnia quasi pro suspectis habenda sunt — 'When the law fails to serve as a rule, almost everything ought to be suspected' (Bac. Aphorisms 25)]
When the law fails to serve as a rule, almost everything ought to be suspected.
Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states Bacon's caution for cases outside settled rules.

[Maxim: Ubi non est annua renovatio, ibi decimae non debent solvi — 'Where there is no annual renovation, there tithes ought not to be paid' (authority cited in the entry)]
Where there is no annual renovation, there tithes ought not to be paid.
Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the tithe rule tying the charge to annual increase.

[Maxim: Ubi non est condendi auctoritas, ibi non est parendi necessitas — 'Where there is no authority for establishing a rule, there is no necessity of obeying it' (Dav. Ir. K. B. 69)]
Where there is no authority for establishing a rule, there is no necessity of obeying it.
Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the authority-requirement for binding rules.

[Maxim: Ubi non est directa lex, standum est arbitrio judicis, vel procedendum ad similia — 'Where there is no direct law, the opinion of the judge is to be taken, or references to be made to similar cases' (Ellesm. Post. N. 41)]
Where there is no direct law, the opinion of the judge is to be taken, or reference to be made to similar cases.
Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the gap-filling rule for cases without direct law.

[Maxim: Ubi non est lex, ibi non est transgressio, quoad mundum — 'Where there is no law, there is no transgression, so far as relates to the world' (4 Coke 16b)]
Where there is no law, there is no transgression, so far as relates to the world.
Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the nullum-crimen principle that transgression presupposes law.

[Maxim: Ubi non est manifesta injustitia, indices habentur pro bonis viris, et judicatum pro veritate — 'Where there is no manifest injustice, the judges are to be regarded as honest men, and their judgment as truth' (Gould v. Low, 1 Johns. Cas. (N.Y.) 341, 345)]

Where there is no manifest injustice, the judges are to be regarded as honest men, and their judgment as truth.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the presumption of judicial integrity and the finality of judgments.

[Maxim: Ubi non est principalis, non potest esse accessorius — 'Where there is no principal, there cannot be an accessory' (4 Coke 43)]

Where there is no principal, there cannot be an accessory.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the principal-accessory dependency rule.

[Maxim: Ubi nulla est conjectura quae ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt de proprietate, non grammatica, sed populari ex usu — 'Where there is nothing to call for a different construction, [the] words [of an instrument] are to be understood, not according to their strict grammatical meaning, but according to their popular and ordinary sense' (Grot. de Jure B. lib. 2, c. 16)]

Where there is nothing to call for a different construction, words are to be understood not in their strict grammatical meaning but in their popular and ordinary sense.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states Grotius's rule of popular-meaning construction.

[Maxim: Ubi nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dos — 'Where there is no marriage, there is no dower' (Bract. fol. 92; 2 Bl. Comm. 130)]

Where there is no marriage, there is no dower.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the marriage-dependency of dower.

[Maxim: Ubi periculum, ibi et lucrum collocatur — 'He at whose risk a thing is, should receive the profits arising from it' (authority cited in the entry)]

He at whose risk a thing is, should receive the profits arising from it.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the risk-reward allocation maxim.

[Maxim: Ubi pugnantia inter se in testamento juberentur, neutrum ratum est — 'Where repugnant or inconsistent directions are contained in a will, neither is valid' (Dig. 50, 17, 188, pr.)]

Where repugnant or inconsistent directions are contained in a will, neither is valid.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the Roman-law rule voiding mutually repugnant testamentary directions.

[Maxim: Ubi quid generaliter conceditur inest haec exceptio, si non aliquid sit contra jus fasque — 'Where a thing is conceded generally this exception is implied: that there shall be nothing contrary to law and right' (10 Coke 78)]

Where a thing is conceded generally this exception is implied: that there shall be nothing contrary to law and right.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the implied lawfulness-limitation on general grants.

[Maxim: Ubi quis delinquit, ibi punietur — 'Where a man offends, there he shall be punished' (6 Coke 47b)]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Where a man offends, there he shall be punished — in felony, trial is by the common law in the place of the offense.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its authority (Latin normalized from OCR); it states the venue rule for felony trials.

(paraphrase) Shylock's bond in The Merchant of Venice — a pound of the merchant's flesh for a defaulted loan; the stage's archetype of the bargain 'which no fair and honest man would accept.' (paraphrase)

Why: The entry's definition — a contract 'which no fair and honest man would accept' — maps point-for-point onto the pound-of-flesh bond. The canonical literary unconscionable bargain. Certain; (paraphrase).

UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

That which Is contrary to the constitution. The opposite of “constitutional.” See State v. McCann, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 10; in re Rahrer (C. C.) 43 Fed. 558, 10 L. R. A. 444 ; Norton v. Shelby Coun- ty, 118 U. S. 425, 6 S. Ct 1121, 30 L. Ed. 178.

[Law] — Law

[Case: Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U.S. 425 (1886)]

An unconstitutional act is not a law — it confers no rights, imposes no duties, and affords no protection.

Why: Genuine because the entry itself cites this case for the meaning of 'unconstitutional,' and Norton is independently the landmark authority holding an unconstitutional act void ab initio.

UNCONTROLLABLE IMPULSE.

As an excuse for the commission of an act otherwise criminal, this term means an Im- pulse towards its commission of such fixity and intensity that It cannot be resisted by the person subject to it, in the enfeebled condition of his will and moral sense re- sulting from derangement or mania. (paraphrase) Du Maurier's Svengali mesmerizing Trilby into obedience — the cultural archetype of one will overpowering another, matching the entry's own phrase 'overpowering the will.' (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines undue influence as 'persuasion carried to the point of overpowering the will.' Svengali is the popular image of exactly that domination. Certain; (paraphrase).

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

A term which may be applied generally to all dis- honest or fraudulent rivalry in trade and commerce, but is particularly applied in the courts of equity (where it may be restrained by Injunction) to the practice of endeavoring to substitute one's own goods or products in the markets for those of another, having an established refutation and extensive sale, by means of imitating or counterfeiting the name, title, size, shape, or distinctive pe- culiarities of the article, or the shape, color, label, wrapper, or general appearance of the package, or other such simulations, the imitation being carried far enough to mislead the general public or deceive an unwary purchaser, and yet not amounting to an absolute counterfeit or to the in- fringement of a trade-mark or trade-name. Called in France and Germany "concur- rence dclot/ale." See Reddnway v, Bau- Mm. (1896] App. Cas. 199; Singer Mfg. Co. r. June Mfg. Co.. 163 U. S. 109, 10 Sup. Ct Bn. Law Dict.(2d Ed.)-— 75

UNIFORMITY.

In taxation. Uniform- ity in taxation implies equality in the bur- den of taxation, which cannot exist without uniformity In the mode of assessment, as well as in the rate of taxation. Further, the uniformity must be coextensive with the ter- ritory to which it npplies. And it must be extended to all property subject to taxation, so that all property may be taxed alike and equally. In Seateh law. A "clause of union” is a clause in a feoffment by which two estates, separated or not adjacent, are united as one, for the purpose of making a single seisin suffice for both.

UNION-JACK.

The national flag of Great Britalu and Ireland, which combines the banner of St. Patrick with the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew. The word “Jack” is most probably derived from the surcoat, charged with a red cross, anciently used by the English soldiery. This appears to have been called a “Jaeque,” whence the word “jacket,” anciently written “jacquit.” Some, however, without a shadow of evi- dence, derive the word from “Jacques," the first alteration having been made in the reign of King James I. Wharton.

UNITY.

In the law of estates. The pe- culiar characteristic of an estate held by several in Joint tenancy, and which , is four- fold, viz., unity of interest unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession. In other words, joint tenants have one and the same interest accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undlvldi- ed possession. 2 Bl. Comm. 180.

—Unity of Interest. This term is applied to joint tenants, to signify that no one outbem can have a greater interest in the property than each of the others, while, in the case of tenants in common, one of them may have a larger share than any of the others. Williams, Real Prop. 134, 139.— Unity of possession. Joint ssession of two rights by several titles. An I take a lease of land from a person at a certain rent, and afterwards I buy the fee- simple of such land, by this I acquire unity of possession, by which the lease is extinguished. Cowell ; Brown. It is also one of the essential properties of a joint estate, each of the tenants having the entire possession as well of every parcel as of the whole. 2 Bl. [Upton Sinclair, The Jungle, 1906]

(paraphrase) Sinclair's The Jungle exposes the Chicago packinghouses — diseased and adulterated meat sold as food — the novel that made 'unwholesome food' a national scandal and, in 1906, a statute. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry: 'Food not fit to be eaten; food which if eaten would be injurious.' The Jungle is the novel about exactly this; it led to the Pure Food and Drug Act. Certain; (paraphrase).

UNWRITTEN LAW.

All that portion of the law, observed and administered in the courts, which hns not been enacted or promulgated in the form of a statute or or- dinance, including the unenacted portions of the common law, general and particular cus- toms having the force of law, and the rules, principles, and maxims established by ju- dicial precedents or the successive like de- cisions of the courts. See Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, f 1899; B. & C. Comp. Or. 1901, | 730.

In recent years, this term has been pop- ularly and falsely applied to a supiwsed local principle or sentiment which justifies private vengeance, particularly the slaying of a man who has Insulted a woman, wheu perpetrated by her kinsman or husband. It is needless to say that no such law exists, and that such an opinion or sentiment, how- ever prevalent, could not by any possible right use of language be termed a “law” or furnish a legal Justification for a homicide.

Why: UNWRITTEN LAW is law observed and administered though never enacted — custom, precedent, principle. Romans 2:14-15 gives the archetype: those 'having not the law' are 'a law unto themselves,' the work of the law writt...

This word, as used in English law, differs from “custom" and “prescription,” in that no man may claim a rent common or other inherit- ance by usage, though he may by prescription. Moveover. a usage is local in all cases, and must be proved : whereas, a custom is frequently general, and as such is noticed without proof. “Usage,” in French law, is the “usus” of Roman law. and corresponds very nearly to the tenancy at will or on sufferance of English law. Brown.

“Usage," in its most extensive meaning, in- cludes both custom and prescription ; but, in its narrower signification, the term refers to a general habit, mode, or course of procedure. A usage differs from a custom, in that it does not require that the usage should be immemorial to establish it ; but the usage must be known, certain, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law. Lowry v. Read, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 452.

“Usage” iB also called a “custom,” though the latter word has also another signification ; it is a long and nniform practice, applied to habits, modes, and courses of dealing. It relates to modes of action, and does not comprehend the mere adoption of certain peculiar doctrines or rules of law. Dickinson v. Gay, 7 Allen (Mass.) 29, 83 Am. Dec. 656.

—-General usage. One which prevails gen- erally throughout the country, or is followed generally by a given profession or trade, and is not local in its nature or observance. — Usage of trade. A course of dealing; a mode of conducting transactions of a particular kind, proved by witnesses testifying of its existence and uniformity from their knowledge obtained by observation of what is practiced by them- selves and others in the trade to which it rer lates. Haskins v, Warren, 115 Mass. 535.

USANCE.

In mercantile law. The com- mon period fixed by the usage or custom or habit of dealing between the country where a bill is drawn, and that where it is payable^ for the payment of bills of exchange. It means, in some countries, a month, in others two or more months, and In others half a month. Story, Bills, «§ 50, 144, 332.

USE.

A confidence reposed In another, who was made tenant of the land, or terre- tenant, that he would dispose of the land according to the intention of the cestui quo use, or him to whose use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits. 2 Bl. Comm. 328.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

A right in one person, called the “cestui que use” to take the profits of land of which another has the legal title and possession, together with the duty of defending the same, and of making estates thereof accord- ing to the direction of the cestui que use, Bouvier.

Use is the right given to any one to make a gratuitous use of a thing belonging to an- other, or to exact such a portion of the fruit it produces as Is necessary for his personal wants and those of his family. Civ. Code La. art. 626.

Uses and trusts are not so much different things as different aspects of the same subject.' A use regards principally the beneficial inter- est : a trust regards principally the nominal ownership. The usage of the two terms is. how- ever, widely different. The word "use” is em-i ployed to denote either an estate vested since the statute of uses, and by force of that statute, or to denote such an estate created before that statute as, had it been created since, would have become a legal estate by force of the stat- ute. The word “trust” is employed since that statute to denote the relation between the party invested with the legal estate (whether by force, of that statute or independently of it) and the party beneficially entitled, who has hitherto been said to have the equitable estate. Mozley & Whitley.

In conveyancing, “use” literally means “benefit:” thus, in an an ordinary assign- ment of chattels, the assignor transfers the property to the assignee for his “absolute use and benefit” In the expressions “sepa- rate use,” “superstitions use,” and “chari- table use,” “use” has the same meaning. Sweet

In the civil law. A right of receiving so much of the natural profits of a thing as is necessary to dally sustenance. It differs from “usufruct,” which Is a right not only to use, but to enjoy. I Browne, Civil & A dm. Law, 184.

—Cestui qne use. A person for whose use and benefit lands or tenements are held by another. The latter, before the statute of uses, was called the “feoffee to use,” and held the nominal or legal title.— Charitable use. See C habitable.— -Contingent use. A use limited to take effect upon the happening of some future contingent event ; as where lands are conveyed to the use of A. and B., after a marriage shall be had between them. 2 Bl. J. Law, 94 ; Jemison v. Blowers, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 692.— Executed use. The first use in a conveyance upon which the statute of uses op- erates by bringing the possession to it, the com- bination of which, t. e., the use and the pos- session, form the legal estate, and thus the statute is said to execute the use. Wharton. —Executory uses. These are springing uses, which confer a legal title answering to an executory devise; as when a limitation to the use of A. in fee is defeasible by a limitation to the use of B., to arise at a future period, or on a given event. — Feoffee to uses. A person to whom (before the statute of uses) land was conveyed “for the use” of a third person. He held the nominal or legal title, while the third person, called the "cettui gue use," was entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of the estate.— Of- ficial use. An active use before the statute of uses, which imposed some duty on the legal owner or feoffee to uses; as a conveyance to A. with directions for him to sell the estate and distribute the proceeds among B., C., and D. To enable A. to perform this duty, be had the legal possession of the estate to be sold. Whar- ton.—Passive use. A permissive use, (g . v.) — Permissive use. A passive use which was resorted to before the statute of uses, in order to avoid a harsh law ; as that of mortmain or a feudal forfeiture. It was a mere invention in order to evade the law by secrecy ; as a con- veyance to A. to the use of B. A. simply held the possession, and B. enjoyed the profits of the estate. Wharton.— Resulting use. A use raised by equity for the benefit of a feoffor who has made a voluntary conveyance to uses with- out any declaration of the use. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 100. A resulting use arises where the legal seisin is transferred, and no use is ex- pressly declared, nor any consideration nor evi- dence of intent to direct the use. The use then remains in the original grantor, for it cannot be supposed that the estate was intended to be given away, and the statute immediately transfers the legal estate to such resulting use. Wharton.— Secondary use. A use limited to take effect in derogation of a preceding estate, otherwise called a “shifting use,” as a convey- ance to the use of A. and his heirs, with a pro- viso that, when B. returns from India, then to the use of C. and his heirs. 1 Steph. Comm. 540.— Shifting use. A use which is so limited that it will be made to shift or transfer itself, from one beneficiary to another, upon the oc- currence of a certain event after its creation. For example, an estate is limited to the use of

A. and his heirs, provided that, upon the return of B. from Rome, it shall be to the use of C. and his heirs ; this is a shifting use, which transfers itself to C. when the event happens. 1 8teph. Comm. 303 ; 2 Bl. Comm. 335. These shifting uses are common in all settlements ; and, in marriage settlements, the first use is always to the owner in fee till the marriage, and then to other uses. The fee remains with the owner un- til the marriage, and then it thiftt as uses arise. 4 Kent, Comm. 297.— Springing use. A use limited to arise on a future event where no pre- ceding use is limited, and which does not take effect in derogation of any other interest than that which results to the grantor, or remains in him in the mean time. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 281 ; Smith V. Brisson, 90 N. C. 288.— Statute of uses. An English statute enacted in 1536. (27 Hen. VIII. c. 10.) directed against the prac- tice of creating uses in lands, and which convert- ed the purely equitable title of persons entitled to a use into a legal title or absolute ownership with right of possession. The statute is said to “execute the use,” that is. it abolishes the inter- vening estate of the feoffee to uses, and makes the beneficial interest of tbe cettui gue ute an absolute legal title.— Superstitious uses. See that title.— Use and occupation. This is the name of an action, being a variety of as- sumpsit, to be maintained by a landlord against one who has had the occupation and enjoyment of an estate, under a contract to pay therefor, express or implied, but not under such a lease as would support an action specifically for rent. — Use plaintiff. One for whose use (benefit) an action is brought in the name of another. Thus, where the assignee of a chose in action is not allowed to sue in his own name, the ac- tion would be entitled “A. B. (the assignor) for the Use of C. D. (the assignee) against E. F.” In this case, C. D. is called the “use plain- tiff.”

[Law: Statute of Uses 1536, 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10]

The Statute of Uses converted the purely equitable title of the cestui que use into a legal title with right of possession — it 'executes the use.'

USUCAPIO, or USUCAPTIO. A term of Roman law used to denote a mode of ac- quisition of property. It corresponds very nearly to the term “prescription.” But the prescription of Roman law differed from that of the English law, in this; that no mala fide possessor (i. e., person in posses- sion knowingly of the property of another) could, by however long a period, acquire ti- tle by possession merely. The two essential requisites to usucapio were justa causa (i. e., title) and bona fides, (i. c., Ignorance.) The term “ usucapio ” is sometimes, but erroneous- ly, written “usucaptio.’’ Brown. USUFRUCT.

In the civil law. The right of enjoying a thing, the property of which is vested in another, and to draw from the same all the profit, utility, and advan- tage which it may produce, provided it be without altering the substance of the thing. Civ. Code La. art 533. — Imperf eat usufruct. An imperfect or quasi usufruct is that which is of things which would be useless to the usufructuary if he did not con- sume or expend them or change the substance of them ; os, money, grain, liquors. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 534.— Perfect usufruct. An usufruct in those things which the usufructuary can enjoy without changing their substance, though their substance may be diminished or deteriorate naturally by time or by the use to which they are applied, as, a house, a piece of ■land, furniture, and other movable effects. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 534. — Quasi usufruct. In the civil law. Originally the usufruct gave no right to the substance of the thing, and conse- quently none to itR consumption ; hence only an inconsumable thing could he the object of It, whether movable or immovable. But in later times the right of usufruct was, by analogy, ex- tended to consumable things, and therewith arose the distinction between true and quasi usu- fructs. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 307 ; Civ. [Maxim: Usus et status sive possessio potius differunt secundum rationem fori, quam secundum rationem rei — 'Use and estate, or possession, differ more in the rule of the court than in the rule of the matter' (Bac. St. Uses)]

Use and estate, or possession, differ more in the rule of the court than in the rule of the matter.

Why: Genuine because quoted verbatim in this entry's body with its Bacon authority; it states Bacon's rule on the use/estate distinction.

USUS FRUCTUS.

Lat In Roman law. Usufruct; usufructuary right or possession. The temporary right of using a thing, with- out having the ultimate property, or full do- minion, of the substance. 2 Bl. Comm. 327.

UT CURRERE SOLEBAT.

Lat. As it was wont to run ; applied to a water-course.

UT BE FEODO.

L. Lat. As of fee.

Ut summit) potestatia regia est possa quantum velit, ale magnitudinis eat veil* quantum poaait. 3 Inst. 236. As the high- est power of a king Is to be able to do all he wishes, so the highest greatness of him is to wish all he is able to do.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 19:20, KJV]

And those which remain shall hear, and fear, and shall henceforth commit no more any such evil among you.

Why: The entry carries the criminal-law maxim 'Ut poena ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat' (punishment reaches a few, fear affects all). Deuteronomy 19:20 states the same deterrence doctrine as Mosaic law: the punishment...

UTAS.

In old English practice. Octave; the octave; the eighth day following any term or feast. Cowell.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 23:36, KJV]

Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: on the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a solemn assembly; and ye shall do no servile work therein.

Why: UTAS is the octave — the eighth day following a term or feast. Leviticus 23:36 institutes the same structure for the Feast of Tabernacles: seven days of the feast, then 'on the eighth day shall be an holy convocation'...

UTERINE.

Born of the same mother. A uterine brother or sister is oue bom of the same mother, but by a different father.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Judges 8:19, KJV]

And he said, They were my brethren, even the sons of my mother: as the LORD liveth, if ye had saved them alive, I would not slay you.

Why: UTERINE = born of the same mother. Gideon's words name the legal category in the same terms: 'my brethren, even the sons of my mother' — kinship reckoned through the mother, exactly the uterine line the entry defines.

UTERO-GESTATION.

Pregnancy.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 139:13, KJV]

For thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb.

Why: UTERO-GESTATION = pregnancy, gestation in the womb. The verse describes precisely that state — the unborn 'covered... in my mother's womb.' Addressed to God (second person), not deity speech — no red-letter flag.

opinions that this word doth aptly signify one of them." 1 Leon. 241.

UTFANGTHEF.

In Saxon and old Eng- lish law. The privilege of a lord of a manor to judge and punish a thief dwelling out of his liberty, and committing theft with- out the same, If he were caught within the lord’s jurisdiction. Cowell.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:1, KJV]

If a man shall steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep.

Why: UTFANGTHEF is the lord's privilege to judge and punish a thief. Exodus 22:1 is the Mosaic theft-law itself: the thief's act, and the penal restitution that follows — the same legal concept (judgment upon the thief) in...

UTI.

Lat. In the civil law. To use. Strictly, to use for necessary purposes; as distinguished from "frui,” to enjoy. Helnecc. Elem. lib. 2, tit. 4, § 415.

urn FRUI. Lat. In the civil law. To have the full use and enjoyment of a thing, without damage to its substance. Calvin.

UTI POSSIDETIS.

Lat In the civil law. A species of interdict for the purpose of retaining possession of a thing, granted to one who, at the time of contesting suit, was in possession of an immovable thing, in or- der that he might be declared the legal pos- sessor. Halllfax, Civil Law, b. 3, c. 6, no. 8.

In international law. A phrase used to signify that the parties to a treaty are to re- tain possession of what they have acquired by force during the war. Wheat. Int. Law, 627.

[Law] — Law

[Law: ICJ, Frontier Dispute (Burkina Faso/Mali), 1986 — affirmed uti possidetis juris as a general principle for decolonization boundaries]

Beyond the civil-law interdict the entry defines, uti possidetis became the modern international-law doctrine (uti possidetis juris) that new states inherit the administrative boundaries of their predecessor, affirmed by the ICJ as a general principle applicable to decolonization.

Why: The body gives the older treaty-peace sense (retain what force acquired) and cites only Wheaton; the footnote adds the doctrine's genuine modern life in boundary law — the sense the phrase actually carries today — wit...

UTILIDAD.

Span. In Spanish law. The profit of a thing. White, New Reeop. b. 2, tit. 2, c. 1.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ecclesiastes 1:3, KJV]

What profit hath a man of all his labour which he taketh under the sun?

Why: UTILIDAD = the profit of a thing. Ecclesiastes 1:3 asks after profit in its root form — the yield of labour under the sun. Borderline: the entry is a Spanish-law gloss, the verse a philosophical question, but 'profit'...

UTILIS.

Lat. In the civil law. Use- ful; beneficial; equitable; available. Actio utilis, an equitable action. Calvin. Dies utilis, an available day.

UTLAGATUS.

In old English law. An outlawed person ; an outlaw.

Utlagatus est quasi extra legem posi- tus. Caput gerlt lupin um. 7 Coke, 14. An outlaw is, ns it were, put out of the pro- tection of the law. He bears the head of a wolf.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 18:17, KJV]

And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church: but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican.

Why: The outlaw is 'put out of the protection of the law.' Christ's rule of exclusion puts the unrepentant outside the community's protection in the same form: 'let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican' — a ge...

Why: The entry's own maxim makes the outlaw one who bears the wolf's head; the ballad tradition is the genuine popular embodiment of that legal condition. No single author/year exists for the tradition, so it is cited hone...

[Numbers 30:2, KJV]

If a man vow a vow unto the LORD, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word, he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

Why: 'Both of us' — words used formerly in bonds. Numbers 30:2 is the scriptural law of the bond: a man binds his soul 'with a bond' and 'shall not break his word' — the same obligatory instrument the entry's bond-words be...

UTTER.

To put or send into circula- tion ; to publish or put forth. To utter and publish an instrument is to declare or assert, directly or indirectly, by words or actions, that it Is good; uttering It is a declaration that it Is good, with an intention or offer to pass It. Whart. Crlm. Lave, f 703.

To utter, as used In a statute against forgery and counterfeiting, means to offer, whether accepted or not, a forged instrument, with the representation, toy words or actions, that the same is genuine. See State v. Hor- ner, 48 Mo. 522 ; People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 521; Lindsey v. State, 38 Ohio St 511; State v. Calkins, 73 Iowa, 128, 34 N.

W. 777 ; People v. Caton, 25 Mich. 392.

UTTER BAR.

In English law. The bar at which those barristers, usually junior men, practice who have not yet been raised to the dignity of king’s counsel. These junior barristers are said to plead without the bar; while those of the higher rank are admitted to seats within the bar, and ad- dress the court or a Jury from a place re- served for them, and divided off by a bar. Brown.

UTTER BARRISTER.

In English law. Those barristers who plead without the bar, and are distinguished from benchers, or those who have been readers, and who are allowed to plead within the bar, as the king’s counsel are. Cowell.

UXOR.

Lat. In the civil law. A wife; a woman lawfully married.

The coverture maxims the entry quotes as live law — 'A wife is not her own mistress, but is under the power of her husband' — were legislatively superseded by the Married Women's Property Acts, beginning in New York in 1848 and spreading state by state.

Why: The body presents these maxims unqualified, with 17th–18th century authorities; a reader today would mistake them for current doctrine. The footnote adds the real statutory reversal, which is genuine illumination rath...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 2:24, KJV]

Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh.

Why: UXOR = a wife, 'a woman lawfully married.' Genesis 2:24 is the founding definition of the married wife — cleaving, one flesh — the same legal-moral category the civil law term names.

UXORICIDE.

The killing of a wife by her husband; one who murders his wife. Not a technical term of the law.

\

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:13, KJV]

Thou shalt not kill.

Why: UXORICIDE is the killing of a wife by her husband — murder within the marriage. The Decalogue prohibition is the absolute form of the law against it.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[William Shakespeare, Othello, c. 1603]

VACANCY.

A place which is empty. The term is principally applied to an inter- ruption in the incumbency of an office.

The term “vacancy" applies not only to an in- terregnum in an existing office, but it aptly and fitly describes the condition of an office when it is first created, and has been filled by no in- cumbent. Walsh v. Comm., 8 9 Pa. 426, 33 Am. Rep. 771. And see Collins v. State, -8 Ind. 350; People v. Onel, 188 111. 104. 58 N. E. 996; Gonnley v. Taylor, 44 Ga. 76.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 109:8, KJV]

Let his days be few; and let another take his office.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 6:1, KJV]

My son, if thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger;

Why: VASES = sureties; security for a defendant's appearance. Proverbs 6:1 is the scriptural treatment of suretyship — striking the hand as surety for another — the same office of standing security for another's obligation.

VAPIAKE DUELLUM.

(paraphrase) Ivanhoe's climax is a judicial trial by combat — Ivanhoe championing Rebecca against Bois-Guilbert — the wager of battle as a mode of trial, pledges given mutually for the duel exactly as the entry describes. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines the waging of the duellum — giving mutual pledges for trial by combat; Ivanhoe's judicial combat is the classic fictional instance of wager of battle deciding a legal accusation.

Comm. 157.— Vadium ponere. To take bail for the appearance of a person in » court of justice. Tomlins.— Vadium vie am. A species of security by which the borrower of a sum of money made over his estate to the lender until he had received that sum out of the issues and profits of the land. It was so called because neither the money nor the lands were lost, and were not left in dead pledge, but this was a living pledge, for the prof- its of the land were constantly paying oft the debt. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:26, KJV]

If thou at all take thy neighbour's raiment to pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down:

Why: VADIUM = a pledge, security by pledge of property. Exodus 22:26 is the Mosaic pledge-law: the taking of a pledge regulated, the pledgee's duty stated — the same legal concept in the scriptural bank.

vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.

Why: The entry defines the vagabond — one who wanders with no certain dwelling. Genesis 4:12 uses the very word: Cain's sentence is to be 'a fugitive and a vagabond... in the earth.' The concept and the term meet.

VAGRANT.

A wandering, idle person; a strolling or sturdy beggar. A general term, Including, in English law, the seyeral classes of idle and disorderly persons, rogues, and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues. 4 Steph. Comm. 308, 309.

In American law, the term is variously de- fined by statute but the general meaning is that of an able-bodied person having no visi- ble means of support and who lives idly with- out seeking work, or who is a professional beggar, or roams about from place to place without regular employment or fixed resi- dence; and ip some states the term also in- cludes those who have a fixed habitation and pursue a (regular calling but one which is condemned by the law as Immoral, such as gambling or prostitution. See In re Jordan, 90 Mich. 3, 50 N. W. 1087; In re Aldermen and Justices of the Peace, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.). 404; Roberts v. State, 14 Mo. 145, 55 Am. Dec. 97. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines the vagrant as an able-bodied wanderer without visible support or fixed residence; the novel's itinerant ranch hands are the genuine fictional embodiment of that condition.

VALOR MARITAGH.

Lat. Value of the marriage. In feudal law, the guardian in chivalry had the right of tendering to his infant ward a suitable match, without “dis- paragement,” (inequality,) which, if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage (valor maritagii) to their guardian; that is, so much as a jury would assess, or any one would bona fide give, to the guardian for such an alliance. 2 Bl. Comm. 70; Litt § 110.

A writ which lay against the ward, on coming of full age, for that he was not mar- ried, by his guardian, for the value of the marriage, and this though no convenient marriage had been offered. Termes de la Ley.

VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

The

distinction between a good and a valuable consideration is that the former consists of blood, or of natural love and affection; as when a man grants an estate to a near rela- tion from motives of generosity, prudence, and natural duty; and the latter consists of such a consideration as money, marriage which is to follow, or the like, which the law esteems an equivalent given for the grant 2 Bl. Comm. 297.

A valuable consideration Is a thing of value parted with, or a new obligation assumed, at the time of obtaining a thing, which is a sub- stantial compensation for that which is ob- tained thereby.. It is also called simply "val- ue.” Civ. Code Dak. | 2121.

Why: Deliberately distinct from the USURY annotation (the interest economy): this targets the entry's doctrine — consideration as the thing parted with. The bond is literally the consideration for the 3,000 ducats.

VALUATION.

The act of ascertaining the worth of a thing. The estimated worth of a thing. See Lowenstein r. Schiller, 38 App. Dlv. 178, 66 N. Y. Supp. 674; State v. Central Pac. R. Co., 7 Nev. 104 ; Sergeant v. Dwyer, 44 Minn. 300, 46 N. W. 444.

VALUATION LIST.

In English law. A list of all the ratable hereditaments in a par- ish, showing the names of the occupier, the owner, the property, the extent of the prop- erty, the gross estimated rental, and the ratable value; prepared by the overseers of each parish In a union under section 14 of the union assessment committee act, 1862, (St. 25 A 26 Vlct. c. 103,) for the purposes of the poor rate. Wharton.

VALUE.

The utility of an object in sat- isfying, directly or Indirectly, the needs or desires of human beings, called by economists “value In use ;” or Its worth consisting In the power of purchasing other objects, called “value in exchange.” Also the estimated or appraised worth of any object of property, Calculated in money.

The term is also often used as an abbrevia- tion for “valuable consideration,” especially Id the phrases “purchaser for value,” “holder for value,” etc.

—Value received. A phrase usually employ- ed in a bill of exchange or promissory note, to denote that a consideration has been given for it.

' VALUED POLICY. A policy is called “valued,” when the parties, having agreed upon the value of the Interest Insured, in or- der to save the necessity of further proof have Inserted the valuation in the policy. In the nature of liquidated damages. 1 Duer, Ins. 97.

VARA.

A Spanlsh-Aroerlcan measure of length, equal to 33 English inches or a trifle more or less, varying according to local us- age. See U. S. v. Perot, 98 U. S. 428, 25 L. •Ed. 251.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:35, KJV]

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in meteyard, in weight, or in measure.

Why: VARA is a measure of length (33 inches). Leviticus 19:35 commands righteousness 'in meteyard' — the meteyard being precisely a measure of length — the scriptural law of just measure meeting the entry's legal measure.

'In pleading and practice. A discrepancy or disagreement between two Instruments or two steps In the same cause, which ought by law to be entirely consonant. Thus, If the evidence adduced by the plain- tiff does not agree with the allegations of his declaration, it is a variance; and so If the statement of the cause of action in the dec- laration does not coincide with that given in the writ See Keiser v. The fatal common-law variance the entry describes was largely defanged in modern practice: the federal rule disregards variances between pleading and proof unless the adverse party shows prejudice.

Lat. In the civil law. A pledget a surety; bail or surety in a criminal pro- ceeding or civil action. Calvin.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 17:18, KJV]

A man void of understanding striketh hands, and becometh surety in the presence of his friend.

Why: VAS = a surety; bail in a criminal or civil action. Proverbs 17:18 treats the surety's act itself — striking hands, becoming surety — the third distinct Proverbs surety verse for the third surety entry (VASES: Prov 6:...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 6:24, KJV]

No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other: ye cannot serve God and mammon.

Why: VASSAL = the feudal tenant bound by obligation of service to his lord. Christ states the law of that bond: service to a master is exclusive — 'no man can serve two masters.' Borderline: the verse is theological in its...

Something that is bought; ca- pable of being bought; offered for sale; mer- cenary. Used in on evil sense, such pur- chase or sale being regarded as corrupt and illegal.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Micah 3:11, KJV]

The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon the LORD, and say, Is not the LORD among us? none evil can come upon us.

Why: VENAL in the evil sense = capable of being bought; mercenary; corrupt purchase. Micah 3:11 names venality in its three offices — judges judging 'for reward,' priests teaching 'for hire,' prophets divining 'for money'…

VENARIA.

VENATIO.

Hunting. CowelL

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 10:9, KJV]

Why: VENATIO = hunting. Genesis 10:9 names the archetypal hunter of scripture — Nimrod, 'the mighty hunter before the LORD.' Borderline-thin (a one-word gloss), but the hunting office is the genuine point of contact.

VEND.

To sell ; to transfer the owner- ship of an article to another for a price in money. The term is not commonly applied to the sale of real estate, although Its deriva- tives “vendor” and “vendee" are.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 25:14, KJV]

And if thou sell ought unto thy neighbour, or buyest ought of thy neighbour's hand, ye shall not oppress one another:

Why: VEND = to sell, to transfer ownership for a price in money. Leviticus 25:14 is the Mosaic law of sale itself — selling to one's neighbour, with the equity rule against oppression — the sale's own scripture.

VENDEE.

A purchaser or buyer; one to whom anything is sold. Generally used of the transferee of real property, one who ac- quires chattels by sale being called a “buy- er.”

Lat. To come; to appear In court. This word is sometimes used as the name of the writ for summoning a jury, more commonly called a “venire facias.”

VENIRE FACIAS.

Lat. In practice. A judicial writ, directed to the sheriff of the county in which a cause is to be tried, com- manding him that he “cause to come” before the court, on a certain day therein mention- ed, twelve good and lawful men of the body of his county, qualified according to law, by whom the truth of the matter may be the better known, and who are in no wise of kin either to the plaintiff or to the defend- ant, to make a jury of the country between the parties in the action, because as well the plaintiff as the defendant between whom the matter in variance Is, have put them- selves upon that jury, and that he return the names of the Jurors, etc. 2 Tidd, Pr. 777, 778 ; 3 Bl. VERDICT.

In practice. The formal and unanimous decision or fluding of a jury, Im- paneled and sworn for the trial of a cause, upon the matters or questions duly submitted to them upon the trial.

The word “verdict” has u well-defined signi- fication in law. it means the decision of a jury, and it never means the decision of a court or a referee or a commissioner. In common lan- guage, the word "verdict'’ is sometimes used in a more extended sense, but in law it is always used to mean the decision of a jury ; and we must suppose that the legislature intended to use the word as it is used in law. Kemer v. Petigo, 25 Kan. 056.

—Adverse verdict. Where a party, appealing from an allowance of damages by commission- ers, recovers a verdict in his favor, but for a less amount of damages than had been originally allowed, such verdict is advene to him, within the meaning of his undertaking to pay costs if the verdict should be adverse to him. Hamblin v. Barnstable County, 10 Gray (Mass.) 250— False verdict. An untrue verdict. Formerly, if a jury gave a false verdict, the party injur- ed by it might sue out and prosecute a writ of attaint against them, either at common law or on the statute 11 Hen. VII. c. 24, at his election, for the purpose of reversing the judg- ment and punishing the jury for their verdict ; but not where the jury erred merely in point of law, if they found according to the judge's di- rection. The practice of setting aside verdicts and granting new trials, however, so superseded the use of attaints that there is no instance of one to be found in the books of reports later than in the time of Elizabeth, and it was alto- gether abolished by 6 Geo. IV. c. 50, 1 00. Wharton.— General verdict. A verdict where- by the jury find either for the plaintiff or for the defendant in general terms ; the ordinary form of a verdict. Glenn v. Snmuer. 132 1'. S. 152, 10 Sup. Ct. 41. 33 L. Ed. 301 ; Settle v. Alison. 8 Ua. 201, 52 Am. Dec. 303 ; Childs v. Carpenter, 87 Me. 114, 32 Atl. 780.— Open ver- dict. A verdict of a coroner's jury which finds that the subject “came to his death by means to the jury unknown.” or “came to his death at the bands of a person or persons to the jury unknown,” that is, one which leaves open either the question whether any crime was committed 'or the identity of the criminal— Partial ver- dict. In criminal law, a verdict by which the jury acquit the defendant as to a part of toe accusation and find him guilty as to the residue. State v. McGee, 55 S. C. 247, 33 S. E. 353. <4 Am. St. Rep. 741 ; U. 8. v. Watkins, 28 Fed. Cas. 419— Privy verdict. One given alter the judge haa left or adjourned the court, and the jury, being agreed, in order to be delivered from their confinement, obtain leave to give their ver- dict privily to the judge out of court. Such a verdict is of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court. This practice is now superseded by that of render- ing a sealed verdict. See Young v. Seymour, 4 Neb. 8!). — Public verdict. A verdict openly delivered by the jury in court. Withee v. Uowe. 45 Me. 571.— Quotient verdict. A money ver- dict the amount of which is fixed by the follow- ing process: Each juror writes down the sum he wishes to award by the verdict, and these amounts are all added together, and the total is divided by twelve, (the number of jurors,) and the quotient stands as the verdict of the jury by their agreement. See Hamilton v. Owego Water Works, 22 App. Div. 573, 48 N. Y. Supp. 106; Moses v. Railroad Oo.. 3 Misc. Rep. 322. 23 N. Y. Supp. 23. — Sealed verdict. See Sealed.— Special verdict. A special finding of the facts of a case by a jury, leaving to the court the application of the law to the facta thus found. 1 Arcbb. Pr. K. B. 213: 3 Bl. Comm. 377; Statler v. U. 8.. 157 U. proceedings, etc.— Vestry-men. A select num- ber of parishioners elected in large and popu- lous parishes to take care of the concerns of the parish ; so called because they used ordi- narily to meet in the vestry of the church. Cowell.

VESTURA.

A crop of grass or corn. Also a garment; metaphorically applied to a possession or seisin.

VESTURA TERRS.

In old English law. The vesture of the land; that Is, the corn, grass, underwood, sweepage, and the like. Co. Lltt 46. See Simpson v. Coe, 4 N. IL 301.

VESTURE.

In old English law. Profit of land. “How much the vesture of an acre Is worth.” Cowell.

VESTURE OF LAND.

A phrase In- cluding all things, trees excepted, which grow upon the surface of the land, and clothe it externally. Ham. N. P. 151.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 85:12, KJV]

Yea, the LORD shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase.

Why: VESTURE OF LAND = all things growing on the land's surface — the land's yield, its profit. Psalm 85:12: 'our land shall yield her increase' — the land's increase as its vesture. The other three VESTURA entries left ba...

VETERA STATUTA.

Lat Ancient statutes. The English statutes from Magna Charta to the end of the reign of Edward

II. are so called ; those from the beginning of the reign of Edward III. being contra- distinguished by the appellation of “Nova Statuta.” 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 85.

VETITUM NAMIUM.

L. Lat. Where the bailiff of a lord distrains beasts or goods of another, and the lord forbids the bailiff to deliver them when the sheriff comes to make replevin, the owner of the cattle may demand satisfaction in placitum de vetito namio. 2 Inst. 140; 2 Bl. Comm. 148.

VETO.

Eat. I forbid. The veto-power is a power vested in the executive officer of some governments to declare his refusal td assent to any bill or measure which has been passed by the legislature. It is either ab- solute or qualified, according as the effect of its exercise is either to destroy the bill final- ly, or to prevent its becoming law unless again passed by a stated proportion of votes or with other formalities. Or the veto may be merely suspensive. See People v. Board of Councllmen (Super. Buff.) 20 N. Y. Supp. 51.

—Pocket veto. Non-approval of a legislative act by the president or state governor, with the result that it fails to become a law, not by a written disapproval, (a veto in the ordinary form.) but by remaining silent until the adjourn- ment of the legislative body, when that ad- journment takes place before the expiration of the period allowed by the constitution for the examination of the bill by the executive.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 7, cl. 2 — presentment, return with objections, and override]

The veto power the entry describes is the Presentment Clause at work: 'Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President,' whose return with objections the two houses may override by two-thirds.

Why: The body defines absolute/qualified/suspensive and pocket vetoes with one state case and never names the constitutional source; the footnote supplies it verbatim — the actual authority behind the practice described —...

VETU8 JUS.

Lat. The old law. A term used in the civil law, sometimes to designate the law of the Twelve Tables, and sometimes merely a law which was in force previous to the passage of a subsequent law. Calvin.

VEX.

To harass, disquiet, annoy; as by repeated litigation upon the same facts.

VEX AM.

Lat To be harassed, vexed, or annoyed; to be prosecuted; as in the max- im, Nemo debet bis vexart pi-o tina et eadem causa, no one should be twice prosecuted for one and the same cause.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — Double Jeopardy Clause]

The maxim the body quotes — 'no one should be twice prosecuted for one and the same cause' — is codified in American law as the Double Jeopardy Clause: 'nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb.'

Why: The body states the Latin maxim with NO authority at all; the footnote attaches it to its real American constitutional home, quoted verbatim. Genuine bridge from maxim to controlling text, not echo.

VEXATA QUAE8TIO.

Lat. A vexed question ; a question often agitated or dis- cussed, but not determined or settled; a ques- tion or point which haB been differently de- termined, and so left doubtful. 7 Coke, 46 b; 3 Burrows, 1547.

VEXATION.

The Injury or damage which is suffered in consequence of the tricks of another.

VEXATIOUS.

A proceeding is said to be vexatious when the party bringing it is not acting bona fide, and merely wishes to annoy or embarrass his opponent, or when it is not calculated to lead to any practical result Such a proceeding is often described as “friv- olous and vexatious,” and the court may stay it on that ground. Sweet.

VEXED QUESTION.

A question or point of law often discussed or agitated, but not determined or settled.

VI AUT CLAM.

Lat. In the civil law. By force or covertly. Dig. 43, 24.

VI BONORUM RAPTORUM.

Lat. In the civil law. Of goods taken away by force. The name of an action given by the praetor as a remedy for the violent taking of another's property. Inst 4, 2; Dig. 47, 8.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Isaiah 61:8, KJV]

For I the LORD love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering; and I will direct their work in truth, and I will make an everlasting covenant with them.

Why: The action 'of goods taken away by force' — the remedy for violent taking, robbery. The LORD speaks the doctrine: 'I hate robbery' — divine hatred of the very wrong the action redresses.

VI ET ARMIS.

Lat With force and arms. See Trespass.

VXA.

Lat In the civil lew. Way; a road; a right of way. The right of walking, riding, and driving over another's land. Inst.

VINDICATORY FARTS OF LAWS.

The sanction of the laws, whereby it is sig- nified what evil or penalty shall be incur- red by such as commit any public wrongs, and transgress or neglect their duty; 1 Steph. Comm. 37.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 6:23, KJV]

For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Why: The vindicatory part of laws = the sanction, 'what evil or penalty shall be incurred' by transgressors. Romans 6:23 states the ultimate sanction: 'the wages of sin is death' — the penalty incurred, in the vindicatory...

VINDXCTA.

In Roman law. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 22:25, KJV]

But if a man find a betrothed damsel in the field, and the man force her, and lie with her: then the man only that lay with her shall die:

Why: VIOL = rape, in French law. Deuteronomy 22:25 is the Mosaic rape-law: the man who forces the damsel — 'the man only that lay with her shall die' — the offense and its capital penalty stated as statute.

VIOLATION.

Injury; Infringement; breach of right, duty, or law. Ravishment; seduction. The statute 25 Edw. III. St. 5, c. 2, enacts that any person who shall violate the king's companion shall be guilty of high treason.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 John 3:4, KJV]

Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law.

Why: VIOLATION = breach of right, duty, or law. 1 John 3:4 defines it in the same form: 'sin is the transgression of the law' — violation as the crossing of law.

VIOLATION OF SAFE CONDUCTS.

An offense against the laws of nations. 4 Steph. Comm. 217.

And he prepared great provision for them: and when they had eaten and drunk, he sent them away, and they went to their master.

Why: An offense against the law of nations — the breach of pledged safety. Elisha's dealing with the blinded Syrian raiders is the scriptural instance of safe conduct honoured: fed, and 'sent them away' to their master unh...

VIOLENCE.

The term “violence” to synonymous with “physical force,” and the two are used interchangeably, in relation to assaults, by elementary writers on criminal law. State v. Wells, 31 Conn. 212.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 6:11, KJV]

The earth also was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence.

Why: VIOLENCE = physical force, in criminal law. Genesis 6:11 names violence as the corruption that fills the earth — the wrong the criminal law answers. VIOLENT and VIOLENTLY left bare (one per family).

VIOLENT.

Characterized or caused by violence; severe; assailing the person (and metaphorically, the mind) with a great de- gree of force.

—Violent death. Death caused by violent external means, as distinguished from, natural death, caused by disease or the wasting of the vital forces.— Violent presumption. In the law of evidence. Proof of a fact by the proof of circumstances which necessarily attend it.

VISIT.

In international law. The right of visit or visitation is the right of a cruiser or war-ship to stop a vessel sailing under another flag on the high seas, and send an officer to such vessel to ascertain whether her nationality is what It purports to be. It is exercisable only when suspicious circum- stances attend the vessel to be visited; as when she Is suspected of a piratical char- acter.

VISITOR.

An inspector of the govern- ment of corporations, or bodies politic. 1 Bl. Comm. 482.

Visitor is an inspector of the government of a corporation, etc. The ordinary is visitor of spir- itual corporations. But corporations instituted for private charity, if they are lay, are visitable by the founder, or whom he shall appoint ; and from the sentence of such visitor there lies no appeal. By implication of law, the founder and his heirs are visitors of lay foundations, if no particular person is appointed by him to see that the charity is not perverted. Jacob.

The term “visitor” is also applied to an offi- cial appointed to see and report upon persons found lunatics by inquisition, .and to a person appointed by a school board to visit houses and see that parents are complying with the provisions in reference to the education of their children. VOID.

Null; ineffectual; nugatory; har- ing no legal force or binding effect; unable, in law, to support the purpose for which it was intended.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

"Void" does not always imply entire nullity; but it is, in a legal sense, subject to large qualifications in view of all the circumstances calling for its application, and the rights and interests to be affected in a given case. Brown v. Brown, 50 N. H. 538, 552.

"Void," as used in statutes and by the courts, does not usually mean that the ict or proceeding is an absolute nullity. Kearney v. Vaughan, 50 Mo. 284.

There is this difference between the two words "void" and "voidable:" void means that an instrument or transaction is so nuga- tory and ineffectual that nothing can cure it; voidable, when an imperfection or defect can be cured by the act or confirmation of him who could take advantage of it Thus, while acceptance of rent will make good a voidable lease, it will not affirm a void lease. Wharton.

The true distinction between void and voidable acts, orders, and judgments is that the former can always be assailed in any proceeding, and the latter only in a direct proceeding. Alex- ander v. Nelson. 42 Ala. 4f>2.

The term "void." as applicable to conveyances or other agreements, has not at all times been used with technical precision, nor restricted to its peculiar and limiter! sense, as contradistin- guished from "voidable it being frequently introduced, even by legal writers and jurists, when the purpose is nothing further than to indicate that a contract was invalid, and not binding in law. But the distinction between the terms "void" and "voidable," in their ap- plication to contracts, is often one of great prac- tical importance; and, whenever entire tech- nical accuracy is required, the term "void" can only be properly applied to those contracts that are of no effect whatsoever, such as are a mere nullity, and incapable of confirmation or ratification. VOLENS.

Lat Willing. He is said to be willing who either expressly consents or tacitly makes no opposition. Calvin.

Volenti bob fit Injuria. He who con- sents cannot receive an injury. Broom, Max. 208, 209, 271, 395; Shelf. Mar. & Div. 449; Wing. Max. 482 ; 4 Term R. 057.

Volnit, sod non dixit. He willed, but be did not say. He may have intended so, but he did not say so. A maxim frequently used in the construction of wills, in answer to arguments based upon the supposed intention of a testator. 2 Pow. Dev. 025 ; 4 Kent, Comm. 538.

VOLUME*. Lat In the civil law. A volume ; so called from its form, being rolled up.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Philemon 1:14, KJV]

But without thy mind would I do nothing; that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.

Why: VOLENS = willing; he is willing who expressly consents. The entry's maxim is 'volenti non fit injuria' — consent negates injury. Philemon 1:14 guards the same line: the benefit must be 'willingly,' not 'of necessity'...

VOLUMUS.

Lat We will; It is our will. The first word of a clause in the royal writs of protection and letters patent Cow- ell.

VOLUNTARIUS DAEMON.

A voluntary madman. A term applied by Lord Coke to a drunkard, who has voluntarily contracted madness by intoxication. Co. Litt 247; 4 Bl. Comm. 25.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 5:18, KJV]

And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit;

Why: The 'voluntary madman' — the drunkard who voluntarily contracted madness by intoxication. Ephesians 5:18 addresses the voluntary act itself: 'be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess' — the chosen intoxication the en...

VOLUNTARY.

Free; without compul- sion or solicitation.

Without consideration; without valuable consideration ; gratuitous.

— Voluntary courtesy. A voluntary act of kindness ; an act of kindness performed by one man towards another, of the free will and in- clination of the doer, without any previous re- quest or promise of reward made by him who is the object of the courtesy ; from which the law will not imply a promise of remuneration. Holthouse.— ' voluntary ignorance. This ex- ists where a party might, oy taking reasonable ains. have acquired the necessary knowledge, ut has neglected to do so.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 9:7, KJV]

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.

Why: VOLUNTARY = free; without compulsion. 2 Corinthians 9:7 defines the voluntary act: purposed in the heart, 'not grudgingly, or of necessity' — freedom from compulsion as the mark of the voluntary.

VOLUNTAS.

Lat. Properly, volition, purpose, or Intention, or a design or the feel- ing or impulse which prompts the commis- sion of an act; but In old English law the term was often used to denote a will, that is, the last will and testament of a decedent, more properly called testamentum.

Voluntas dona torts In chsrts deni snl manifests express* observetur. Co. Litt.

2L The will of the donor manifestly ex- pressed in his deed of gift is to be observed.

Voluntas est junta sententla de eo quod quia poet mortem suam fieri veltt. A will is an exact opinion or determination concerning that which each one wishes to be done after his death.

Voluntas et proposttua dlstinguunt maleficia. The will and the proposed end distinguish crimes. Bract, fols. 26, 1366.

Voluntas faclt quod in testamento scriptum valent. Dig. 30, 1, 12, 3. It is intention which gives effect to the wording of a will.

Voluntas In delictis, non exltus spec- tator. 2 Inst 57. In crimes, the will, and not the consequence, is looked to.

Voluntas reputatur pro facto. The In- tention is to be taken for the deed. 3 Inst 60; Broom, Max. 311.

Voluntas testatoris cst ambulator!* usque ad extremum vitae exitum. 4 Coke, 61. The will of a testator Is ambulatory until the latest moment of life.

Voluntas testatoris habet interpreta- tionem latum et benignant. Jenk. Cent. 260. The intention of a testator has a broad and benignant Interpretation.

Voluntas ultima testatoris est perim- plenda secundum veram intentionem suam. Co. Litt. 322. The last will of the testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Hebrews 9:16-17, KJV]

For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth.

Why: VOLUNTAS in old English law = the last will and testament. Hebrews 9:16-17 states the testament's legal nature: it is 'of force after men are dead' — the will taking effect at death, exactly the entry's sense.

Ia military law, the term designates one who freely and voluntarily offers himself for service In the array or navy ; as distinguished from one who Is compelled to serve by draft or conscription, and also from one entered by enlistment In the standing army.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 10:8, KJV]

Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.

Why: VOLUNTEER = one who gives his services without promise of remuneration. Christ's charge is the volunteer rule: 'freely ye have received, freely give' — service rendered without charge.

VOTE.

Suffrage; the expression of his will, preference, or choice, formally manir fested by a member of a legislative or delib- erative body, or of a constituency or a .body of qualified electors, In regard to the deci- sion to be made by the body as a whole upon any proposed measure or proceeding, or the selection of an officer or representative. And the aggregate of the expressions of will or choice, thus manifested by individuals, Is called the “vote of the body.” See Maynard v. Board of Canvassers, 84 Mich. 228, 47 N.

(paraphrase) Suffragette dramatizes the fight to become qualified electors — the women's suffrage struggle for the very "voice or suffrage" this entry defines. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines the vote as the formally manifested expression of will by qualified electors; the film dramatizes the historical fight to attain that qualification. Year confident.

VOTER.

One who has the right of giv- ing his voice or suffrage.

VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.

In the houses of parliament the clerks at the tables make brief entries of all that is actually done; and these minutes, which are printed from day to day for the use of members, are called the “votes and proceedings of parlia- ment.” From these votes and proceedings the journals of the house are subsequently pre- pared, by making the entries at greater length. Brown.

VOTUM.

Lat. A vow or promise. Dies votorum, the wedding day. Fleta 1. 1, c. 4.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ecclesiastes 5:4-5, KJV]

When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou hast vowed. Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay.

Why: VOTUM = a vow or promise. Ecclesiastes 5:4-5 is the law of the vow: 'defer not to pay it... pay that which thou hast vowed' — the vow's binding force stated as doctrine. Companion to UTRUMQUE NOSTRUM (Num 30:2), disti...

“Three factors contribute to the production of commodities, — nature, labor, and capital. Each must have a share of the product as its reward, and this share, if it is just, must be proportion- ate to the several contributions. The share of the natural agents is rent; the share of labor, i cage*; the share of capital, interest. The clerk receives a salary ; the lawyer and doctor, fees ; the manufacturer, profits. Salary, fees, and profits are so many forms of wages for services rendered.” De Laveleye, Pol. Econ.

—Wage earner. One who earns his living by labor of a menial or mechanical kind or per- formed in a subordinate capacity, such as do- mestic servants, mechanics, farm hands, clerks, porters, and messengers. In the United States bankruptcy act of 1898, an individual who works for wages, salary, or hire, at a compensa- tion not exceeding $1,500 per year. Sec In re Pilger (D. Harway v. Major, etc., of City of New York, 1 Iiun (N. Y.) 630.

WAIVE, n. A woman outlawed. The term is. as It were, the feminine of “outlaw,” the latter being always applied to a man; “waive,” to a woman. Cowell.

WAIVER.

The renunciation, repudia- tion, abandonment, or surrender of gome claim, right, privilege, or of the opportunity to take advantage of some defect, irregular- ity, or wrong.

The i xiss I rig by of an occasion to enforce a legal right, whereby the right to enforce the same is lost ; a common instance of this is where a landlord waives a forfeiture of a lease by receiving rent, or distraining for rent, which has accrued due after the breach of covenant causing the forfeiture became known to him. Wharton.

This word Is commonly used to denote the declining to take advantage of an irregularity lb legal proceedings, or of a forfeiture in- curred through breach of covenants in a lease. A gift of goods may be vat red by a disagreement to accept; so a plaintiff may commonly sue in contract waiving the tort. Brown. See Benneeke v. Insurance Co., 105

WAPENTAKE.

In English law. A lo- cal division of the country ; the name is ill use north of the Trent to denote a hundred. The derivation of the name is said to be from “weapon” and “take,” and indicates that the division was originally of a mili- tary character. Cowell ; Brown.

Also a hundred court.

WAR.

A state of forcible contention ; an armed contest between nations; a state of hostility between two or more nations or states. Gro. de Jur. B. lib. 1, c. 1.

Every connection by force between two nations, in external matters, under the au- thority of their respective governments, is a public war. If war is declared in form, it is called “solemn,” and is of the perfect kind; because the whole nation is at war with an- other whole nation. When the hostilities are limited as respects places, persons, and things, the war is properly termed “imper- fect war.” Bas v. Tingy, 4 Dali. 37, 40, 1

L. Ed. 731.

—Articles of war. See Article. — Civil war. An internecine war. A war carried on between opposing masses of citizens of the same country or nation. Before the declaration of independence, the war between Great Britain and the United Colonies was a civil war; but instantly on that event the war changed its na- ture, and became a public war between independ- ent governments. WARRANTY.

In real property law.

A real covenant by the grantor of lands, for himself and his heirs, to warrant and defend the title and,possession of the estate granted, to the grantee and his heirs, whereby, either upon voucher, or Judgment in the writ of warrantia chart ce, and the eviction of the grantee by paramount title, the grantor was bound to recompense him with other lands of equal value. Co. Lltt. 305a.

In sales of personal property. A war- ranty Is a statement or representation made by the seller of goods, contemporaneously with and as a part of the contract of sale, though collateral to the express object of it, having reference to the character, quality, or title of the goods, and by which he promises or undertakes to Insure that certain facts are or shall be as he then represents them.

A warranty is an engagement by which a seller assures to a buyer the existence of some fact affecting the transaction, whether past, present, or future. Civ. Code Cal. § 1763.

In contract*. An undertaking or stipu- lation, in writing, or verbally, that a certain fact in relation to the subject of a contract Is or shall be as it Is stated or promised to be.

A warranty differs from a representation in that a warranty must always be given contemporaneously with, and as part of, the contract; whereas a representation precedes and induces to the contract. And, while that is their dif- ference in nature, their difference in conse- quence or effect is this: that, upon breach of warranty, (or false warranty,) the contract re- mains binding, and damages only are recov- erable for the breach; whereas, upon a false representation, the defrauded party may elect to avoid the contract, and recover the entire price paid. Brown.

The same transaction cannot be characterized as a warranty and a fraud at the same time. A warranty rests upon contract, while fraud, or fraudulent representations have no element of contract in them, but are essentially a tort. When judges or law-writers speak of a fraudulent warranty, the language is neither accurate nor perspicuous. If there is a breach of warranty, it cannot be said that the warranty was fraudulent, with any more propriety than any other contract can be said to have been fraud- ulent, because there has been a breach of it. On the other hand, to speak of a false represen- tation as a contract or warranty, or as tend- ing to prove a contract or warranty. Is a per- version of language and of correct ideas. Rose v. Hurley, 39 Ind. 81.

-Ia insurance. In the law of Insurance, “warranty" means any assertion or under- taking on the part of the assured, whether expressed In the contract or capable of be- ing annexed to it, on the strict and literal truth or performance of which the liability of the underwriter Is made to depend. Maude & P. Shipp. 377; Sweet.

— Affirmative warranty. In the law of in- surance, warranties may be either affirmative or promissory. Affirmative warranties may be ei- ther express or implied, but they usually consist of positive representations in the policy of the existence of some fact or state of things at the time, or previous to the time, of the making of the policy ; and they are, in general, condi- tions precedent, which, if untrue, whether ma- terial to the risk or not, the policy does not at- tach, as it is not the contract of the insurer. Maupin v. Insurance Co., 53 W. Va. 557, 45 S.

E. 1003; Hendricks v. Insurance Co., 8 Johns, (N. Y.) 1; Cowan v. Insurance Co., 78 Cal. 181. 20 I’ac. 408.— Collateral warranty, in old conveyancing, was where the heir's title to the land neither was nor could have been derived from the warranting ancestor. Thus where a younger brother released to his father’s dis- seisor, with warranty, this was collateral to the elder brother. The whole doctrine of col- lateral warranty seems repugnant to plain and unsophisticated reason and justice; and even its technical grounds are so obscure that the ablest legal writers are not agreed upon the subject. Wharton. Micheau v. Crawford. 8 N. J. Law, 106. — Continuing warranty. One which applies to the whole period during which the contract is in force; e. g.. an undertaking in a charter-party that a vessel shall continue to be of the same class that she was at the time the charter-party was made.— Covenant of warranty. .See Covenant. — Express warranty. In contracts and sales, one created by the apt and explicit statements of the seller or person to be bound. See Borrekins v. Bevan, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 36, 23 Am. Dec. 85 ; White v. Stelloh, 74 Wis. 435. 43 N. W. 99; Danforth v. Crookshanks, 68 Mo. App.- 316. In the law of insurance, an agreement expressed in a policy, whereby the assured stipulates that cer- tain facts relating to the risk are or shall be true, or certain acts relating to the subject have been or shall be done. 1 Phil. Ins. (4th Ed.) p. 425; Petit v. German Ins. Co. (C. C.) 98 Fed. 802; /Etna Ins. Co. v. Grube, 6 Minn. 82 (Gil. 32) ; Insurance Co. v. Morgan. 90 Va. 290, 18 S. E. 191.— General warranty. The name of a covenant of warranty inserted in deeds, by which the grantor binds himself, his heirs, etc., to “warrant and forever defend” to the grantee, his heirs, etc., the title thereby con- veyed, against the lawful claims of all persons whatsoever. Where the warranty is only against the claims of persons claiming “by, through, or under” the grantor or his heirs, it is called a “special warranty.”— Implied warranty. A warranty raised by the law as an inference from the acts of the parties or the circumstances of the transaction. Thus, if the seller of a chattel have possession of it and sell it as his own, and not as agent for another, and for a fair price, he is understood to warrant the title. 2 Kent. Comm. 478. A warranty implied from the gen- eral tenor of an instrument, or from particular words used in it. although no express warranty is mentioned. Thus, in every policy of insurance there is an implied warranty that the ship is sea- worthy when the policy attaches. 3 Kent Comm. 287; 1 Phil. Ins. 398.— Lineal war- ranty. In old conveyancing, the kind of war- ranty which existed when the heir derived title to the land warranted either from or through the ancestor who made the warranty.— Person- al warranty. One available in personal ac- tions, and arising from the obligation which one has contracted to pay the whole or part of a debt due by another to a third person. Flanden v. Seelye, 106 XT. S. 718, 26 L. Ed. 1217. — Promissory warranty. A term used chief- ly in the law of insurance, and meaning a war- ranty which requires the performance or omis- sion of certain things or the existence of cer- tain facts after the '-'ginning of the contract of insurance and during its continuance, and the breach of which will avoid the policy. See King v. Relief Ass’n, 35 App. Div. 58, 54 N. Y. Supp. 1057: Maupin v. Insurance Co., 53 W. Va. 5r>7, 45 S. E. 1003; McKenzie v. Insurance Co., 112 Cal. 648, 44 Pac. 022.— Special warranty. A clause of warranty inserted in a deed of lands, by which the grantor covenants, for himself and his heirs, to “warrant and forever defend” the title to the same, to the grantee and his heirs, etc., against all persons claiming “by, through, or under” the grantor or his heirs. If the war- ranty is against the claims of all persons what- soever, it is called a “general” warranty.T- Warranty deed. One which contains a cove- nant of warranty.— Warranty, -voucher to. Spoil or destruction, done or permitted, to lands, houses, gardens, trees, or other corporeal hereditaments, by the tenant thereof, to the prejudice of the heir, or of him in reversion or remainder. 2 Bl. Comm. 281.

Waste is a spoil and destruction of an estate, either in houses, woods, or lands, by demolish- ing, not the temporary profits only, but the very substance of the thing, thereby rendering it wild and desolate, which the common law ex- presses very significantly by the word "vastum." 3 Bl. Comm. 223.

Waste is a lasting damage to the reversion caused by the destruction, by the tenant for life or years, of such things on the land as are not included in its temporary profits. Proffitt v. Henderson, 29 Mo. 325.

In old English criminal law. A prerog- ative or liberty, on the part of the crown, of committing waste on the lands of felons, by pulling down their houses, extirpating their gardens, plowing their meadows, and cutting down their woods. 4 Bl. Comm. 386.

— Commissive waste. Active or positive waste; waste done by acts of spoliation or de- struction, rather than by mere neglect ; the same as voluntary waste. See in./ro.— Double waste. See Double.— Equitable waste. Injury to a reversion or remainder in real estate, which is not recognized by the courts of law as waste.: but which equity will interpose to prevent or remedy. Gannon v. Peterson, 193 111. 372, 62

N. E. 210, 55 L. R. A. 701 ; Crowe v. Wilson; 65 Md. 479, 5 Atl. 427, 57 Am. Rep. 343. Oth- erwise defined as an unconscientious abuse of the privilege of non-impeachability for waste at common law, whereby a tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, will be restrained from committing willful, destructive, malicious, or ex- travagant waste, such as pulling down houses, cutting timber of too young a growth, or trees planted for ornament, or for shelter of prem- ises. Wharton.— Impeachment of waste.

Liability for waste committed, or a demand or suit for compensation for waste committed up- on lands or tenements by a tenant thereof who has no right to commit waste. On the other hand, a tenure “without impeachment of waste” signifies that the tenant cannot be called to ac- count for waste committed. — Nul waste. “No waste." The name of a plea in an action of waste, denying the commission of waste, and forming the general issue. — Permissive waste. That kind of waste which is a matter of omis- sion only, as by suffering a house to fall for want of necessary reparations. 2 Bl. Comm. 281; Willey v. Laraway, 64 Vt. 559, 25 Atl. 436; Beekman v. WATER.

As designating a commodity or a subject of ownership, this term has the same meaning in law as in common speech ; but In another sense, and especially in the plural. It may designate a body of water, such as a river, a lake, or an ocean, or an aggregate of such bodies of water, as in the phrases “foreign waters,” “waters of the United States,” and the like.

Water is neither land nor tenement nor sus- ceptible of absolute ownership. It is a mov- able thing and must of necessity continue com- mon by the law of nature. It admits only of a transient usufructuary property, and if it es- capes for a moment, the right to it is gone for- ever, the qualified owner having no legal power of reclamation. It is not capable of being sued for by the name of “water,” nor by a calcula- tion of its cubical or superficial measure; but the suit must be brought for the land which lies at the bottom covered with water. As wa- ter is not land, neither is it a tenement, because it is not of a permanent nature, nor the sub- ject of absolute property. It is not in any pos- sible sense real estate, and hence is not em- braced in a covenant of general warranty. Mit- chell v. Warner, 5 Conn. 518.

As distinguished from the waters of a natural stream, lake, or pond, surface waters are such as diffuse themselves over the surface of the ground, following no defined course or channel, and not gathering into or forming any more definite body of water than a mere bog or marsh. They generally originate in rains and melting snows, but the flood waters of a river may also be considered as surface waters if they become separated from the main current, or leave it never to return, and spread out over lower ground. WATER-COURSE.

A natural stream of water fed from permanent or periodical nat- ural sources and usually flowing in a par- ticular direction in a defined channel, hav- ing a bed and banks or sides, and usually discharging Itself into some other stream or body of water. Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 697, 57 Pac. 587; Chamberlain v. Hem- ingway, 63 Conn. 1, 27 Atl. 239, 38 Am. St Rep. 330; Rlbordy v. Murray, 177 111. 134, 52 N. E. 325; Halt v. Rep. 519 ; Simmons v. Winters, 21 Or. 35, 27 Pac. 7, 28 Am. St Rep. 727.

There must be a stream usually flowing in a particular direction, though it need not flow con- tinually. It may sometimes be dry. It must flow in a definite channel, having a bed, sides, or banka, and usually discharge itself into some other stream or body of water. It must be something more than a mere surface drainage over the entire face of a tract of land, occasion- ed by unusual freshets or other extraordinary causes. It does not include the water flowing in the hollows or ravines in land, which is the mere surface-water from rain or melting snow, and is discharged through them from a higher to a lower level, but which at other times are destitute of water. Such hollows or ravines are not. in legal contemplation, water-courses. Hoyt v. Hudson, 27 Wis. 656. 9 Am. Rep. 473 : San- guinetti v. Pock. 136 Cal. 466. 69 Pac. 98, 89 Am. St. Rep. 169; Luther v. Winnisimmet Co., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 171 ; Pyle v. Richards, 17 Neb. 180. 22 N. W. 370.

But if the topography of the surrounding country is such that water accumulates in great quantities after heavy rains or at the season of melting snows, and descends periodically through a well-defined channel which the force of the water has made for itself, and which is the ac- customed channel through which it flows and has always flowed, such channel is to be deem- ed a natural water-course. Kelly v. Dunning, 39 N. J. Eq. 482; Earl v. De Hart, 12 N. J. Eq. 280. 72 Am. Dec. 395; Simmons v. Winters, 21 Or. 35. 27 Pac. 7, 28 Am. St. Rep. 727.

— mitnral water-course. A natural stream flowing in a defined bed or channel; one formed by the natural flow of the water, as deter- mined bv the general superficies or conforma- tion of the surrounding country, as distinguish- ed from an “artificial” water-course, formed by the work of man, such as a ditch or canal. '.WEND. In old records. A large extent of ground, comprising several juga; a peram- bulation; a circuit. Spelman; Cowell.

- WERA, or WERE. The estimation or price of a man, especially of one slain. In the criminal law of the Anglo-Saxons, every man’s life had its value, called a “were,” or "capitis eeatimdtio.”

WEREGELT THEF.

Sax. In old Eng- lish law. A robber who might be ransomed.

' Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, §13.

WERE GILD, or WERGILD. This was the price of homicide, or other atrocious per- sonal offense, paid partly to the king for the loss of a subject, partly to the lord for the loss of a vassal, and partly to the next of kin of the injured person. In the Anglo- Saxon laws, the amount of compensation varied with the degree or rank of the party slain. Brown.

WESTMINSTER THE FIRST.

The

statute 3 Edw. I.,. A. D. 1275. .This statute, which deserves the name of a code rather than an act, is divided into fifty-one .chap- ters. Without extending the exemption of, churchmen from civil jurisdiction, it pro-, tects the property of the church from the vio- lence and spoliation of the king and the no- bles, provides for freedom of popular elec- tions, because sheriffs, coroners, and conserv- ators of the peace were still chosen by the freeholders in the county court, and at- tempts had been made to influence the elec- tion of knights of the shire, from the time when they were instituted. It contains a declaration to enforce the enactment of Mag- na Oharta against excessive fines, which might operate as perpetual Imprisonment j enumerates and corrects the abuses of ten- ures, particularly as to marriage of wards-; regulates the levying of tolls, which were Imposed arbitrarily by the barons and by cities and boroughs; corrects and restrains the powers of the kingis escheator and other officers ; amends the criminal law, putting the crime of rape on the footing to which it has been lately restored, as a most grievous, but not capital, offense ; and embraces the subject of procedure in civil and criminal matters, introducing many regulations to render it cheap, simple, and expeditious. 1 Camp. Lives Ld. Ch. p. 167; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, c. 9, p. 107. Certain parts of this act are repealed by St. 26 & 27 Viet. c. 125. Whar- ton.

WHIG.

This name was applied in Scot- land, A. D. 1648, to those violent Covenant- ers who opposed the Duke of Hamilton’s In- vasion of England in order to restore Charles

I. The appellation of “Whig” and "Tory” to political factions was first heard of in A.

D. 1679, and, though as senseless as any cant terms that could be devised, they became in- stantly as familiar In use as they have since continued. 2 Hall. Const Hist c. 12; Wharton.

WHIFFING.

A mode of punishment, by the infliction of stripes, occasionally used in England and In a few of the American states.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 25:3, KJV]

Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed: lest, if he should exceed, and beat him above these with many stripes, then thy brother should seem vile unto thee.

Why: WHIFFING = punishment by the infliction of stripes. Deuteronomy 25:3 is the Mosaic stripes-law: 'forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed' — the beating bounded by law. WHIFFENG-POST left bare (one per family).

WHIFFENG-POST.

A post or stake to which a criminal is tied to undergo the pun- ishment of whipping. This penalty is now abolished, except in a few states

WILL.

A will Is the legal expression of a man’s wishes as to the disposition of his property after his death. Code Ga. 1882, f 2394; Swinb. Wills, f 2.

An instrument lu writing, executed In form of law, by which a person makes a disposi- tion of his property, to take effect after his death.

Except where it would be inconsistent with the manifest intent of the legislature, the word “will" shall extend to a testament, and to a codicil, and to an appointment by will, or by writing in the nature of a will, in exercise of a power; and also to any other testamentary disposition. Code Ya. 1837, f 2511.

A will is an instrument by which a person makes a disposition of his property, to take ef- fect after his decease, and which is, in its own nature, ambulator; and revocable during his life. It is this ambulatory quality which forms the characteristic of wills; for though a dispo- sition by deed may postpone the possession or enjoyment, or even the vesting, until the death of the disposing party, yet the postponement is in such case produced by the express terms, and does not result from the nature of the instrnment McDaniel v. A will, when it operates upon personal prop- erty, is sometimes called a “testament,” and when upon real estate, a “devise;” but the more general and the more popular denomination of the instrument embracing equally real and per- sonal estate is that of "last will and testament.” 4 Kent, Comm. 501.

WliHuKAWIHO A JUROR. In prac- tice. The withdrawing of one of the twelve Jurors from the box, with the result that, the jury being now found to be incomplete, no further proceedings can be had In the cause. The withdrawing of a juror is always by the agreement of the parties, and is frequently done at the recommendation of the judge, where it is doubtful whether the action will lie ; and in such case the consequence Is that each party pays his own costs. It is, how- ever, no bar to a future action for the same cause. 2 Tidd, Pr. 861, 862; 1 Archb. Pr.

WORKS.

This term means sometimes a mill, factory, or other establishment for per- forming industrial labor of any sort, (South St. Joseph Land Co. v. Pitt, 114 Mo. 135, 21

S. W. 449,) and sometimes a building, struc- ture, or erection of any kind upon land, as in the civil-law phrase “new works.”

—New works. A term of the civil law com- prehending every sort of edifice or other structure which is newly commenced on a given es- tate or lot. Its importance lies chiefly jn the fact that a remedy is given (“denunciation of new works”) to an adjacent proprietor whose property would be injured or subjected to a more onerous servitude if such a work were allowed to proceed to completion. — Publio works. Works, whether of construction or adaptation, undertaken and carried out by the national, state, or municipal authorities, and de- signed to subserve some purpose of public nec- essity, use, or convenience; such as public build- ings, roads, aqueducts, parks, etc. See Ellis v. Common Council, 123 Mich. 567, 82 N. W. 244 ; Winters v. Duluth, 82 Minn. 127, 84 N. W. 788.

Is Scotch law. A writing; an instru- ment in writing, as a deed, bond, contract, etc. 2 Forb. Inst. pt. 2, pp. 175-179.

—Alias writ. A second writ issued in the same cause, where a former writ of the same kind has been issued without effect.— Close writ. In English law, a name given to certain letters of the sovereign, sealed with his great seal and directed to particular persons and for particular purposes, which, not being proper for public inspection, were closed up and sealed on the outside ; also, a writ directed to the sheriff instead of to the lord. 2 Bl. Comm. 346, 3 Reeve, Eng. Law, 45. — Concurrent writs. Duplicate originals, or several writs running at the same time for the same purpose, for serv- ice on or arrest of a person, when it is not known where he is to be found; or for service on several persons, as when there are several defendants to an action. Mozley & Whitley. — Judicial writs. In English practice. Such writs as issue under the private seal of the courts, and not under the great seal of England, and are tested or witnessed, not in the king’s name, but in the name of the chief judge of the court out of which they issue. The word “judicial'’ is used in contradistinction to “original;” original writs being such as issue out of chancery under the great seal, and are witness- ed in the king's name. See 3 Bl. Comm. 282. Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Washburn (C. C.) 66 Fed. 792 Junior writ. One which is issued, or comes to the officer’s hands, at a later time than a similar writ, at the suit of anoth- er party, or on a different claim, against the same defendant. — Original writ. In English practice. An original writ was the process for- merly in use for the commencement of per- sonal actions. It' was a mandatory letter from the king, issuing out of chancery, sealed with the great seal, and directed to the sheriff of the county wherein the injury was committed, or was supposed to have been committed, requir- ing him to command the wrong-doer or accus- ed party either to do justice to the plaintiff or else to appear in court and answer the accusa- tion against him. This writ is now disused, the writ of summons being the process prescribed by the uniformity of process act for commencing personal actions; and under the judicature act, 1873, all suits, even in the court of chancery, are to be commenced by such writs of summons. Brown.— Patent writ. In old practice, an Open writ ; one not closed or sealed up.— Per- emptory writ. An original writ, called from the words of the writ a "*i tc feoerit seourum,” and which directed the sheriff to cause the de- fendant to appear in court without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gave the sher- iff security effectually to prosecute his claim. The writ was very occasionally in use, and only Where nothing was specifically demanded, but Only a satisfaction in general ; as in the case of writs of trespass on the case, wherein no debt or other specific thing was sued for, but only damages to be assessed by a jury. Brown.— Prerogative writs. Those issued by the ex- ercise of the extraordinary power of the crown (the court, in modern practice) on proper cause shown ; namely, the writs of procedendo, man - damut, prohibition, quo warranto, habeas corp- us, and certiorari.

OF EJECTMENT. The writ in an action of ejectment, for the recovery of lands. See Ejectment.

WRIT OF ENTRY.

A real action to re- cover the possession of land where the ten- ant (or owner) has been disseised or other- wise wrongfully dispossessed. If the disseis- or has aliened the land, or if It has descend- ed to his heir, the writ of entry is said to be In the per, because it alleges that the defend- ant (the alienee or heir) obtained possession through the original disseisor. If two alien- ations (or descents) have taken place, the writ is In the per and cui, because it alleges that the defendant (the second alienee) ob- tained possession through the first alienee, to whom the original disseisor had aliened it. If more than two alienations (or descents) have taken place, the writ is in the post, be- cause it simply nlleges that the defendant ac- quired possession after the original disseisin.

Co. Litt 2386; 3 Bl. Comm. 180. The writ of entry Was abolished, with other real ac- tions, In WHIT OF ERROR.

A writ Issued from a court of appellate jurisdiction, directed to the judge or judges of a court of record, re- quiring them to remit to the appellate court the record of an action before them, in which a final judgment has been entered, in order that examination may be made of certain errors alleged to hare been committed, and that the judgment may be reversed, cor- rected, or affirmed, as the case may require.

A writ of error is defined to be a commis- sion by which the judges of one court are authorized to examine a record upon which a judgment was given in another court, and, on such examination, to affirm or reverse the same, according to law. Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 409, 5 L. Ed. 257.

WRIT OF EXECUTION.

A writ to put in force the judgment or decree of a court.

WRIT OF FALSE JUDGMENT.

A

writ which appears to be still in use to bring appeals to the English high court from in- ferior courts not of record proceeding accord- ing to the course of the common law. Archb. Pr. 1427.

WRIT OF FORMEDON.

A writ which lies for the recovery of an estate by a person claiming as issue in tail, or by the remain- der-man or reversioner after the termination of the entail. See Formedon.

WRIT OF INQUIRY.

In common-law practice. A writ which issues after the plaintiff in an action has obtained a judg- ment by default, on an unliquidated claim, directing the sheriff, with the aid of a jury, to inquire into the amount of the plaintiff’s demand and assess his damages. Lennon v. Rawitzer, 57 Conn. 583, 19 Atl. 334; Havens v. Hartford & N. R. Co., 28 Conn. 70.

WRIT OF MAINPRIZE.

In English law. A writ directed to the sheriff, (either generally, when any man is imprisoned for a bailable offense and bail has been refused, or specially, when the offense or cause of commitment is not properly bailable below,) commanding him to take sureties for the prisoner’s appearance, commonly called •‘mainpernors,” and to set him at large. 8 Bl. Comm. 128.

WRIT OF MESNE.

In old English law. A writ which was so called by reason of the words used in the writ, namely, “Unde idem

A. qui mediua eat inter O. et prwfatum B.;“ that is, A., who is mesne between C., the lord paramount, and B., the tenant paravail. Co. Litt. 100a.

WRIT OF POSSESSION.

This is the writ of execution employed to enforce a Judg- ment to recover the possession of land. It commands the sheriff to enter the land and give possession of it to the person entitled under the judgment. Smith, Act 175.

WRIT OF PRAECIPE.

This writ is also called a “writ of covenant” and is sued out by the party to whom lands are to be con- veyed by fine, the foundation of which is a supposed agreement or covenant that the one shall convey the land to the other. 2 Bl. Comm. 349.

WRIT OF PREVENTION.

This name is given to certain writs which may be is- sued in anticipation of suits which may arise. Co. Litt 100.

WRIT OF PROCLAMATION.

In Eng- lish law. By the statute 31 Ellz. c. 3, when an exigent is sued out a writ of proclama- tion shall issue at the same time, command- ing the sheriff of the county where the de- fendant dwells to make three proclamations thereof, in 'places the most notorious, and most likely to come to his knowledge, a month before the outlawry shall take place. 8 Bl. Comm. 284.

WRIT OF PROTECTION.

In England, the king may, by his writ of protection, priv- ilege any person in his service from arrest in civil proceedings during a year and a day; but this prerogative Is seldom, if ever, exercised. Archb. Pr. 687. See Co. Litt 130a.

WRIT OF REVIEW.

(1) A general

designation of any form of process issuing from an appellate court and intended to bring up for review the record or decision of the court below. Burrell v. Burrell, 10 Mass. 222; Hopkins v. Benson, 21 Me. 401; West v. Oe Moss, 50 La. Ann. 1349, 24 South. 325

(2) In code practice, a substitute for, or equivalent of, the writ of certiorari. Cali- fornia & O. Land Co. v. Gowen (C. C.) 48 Fed. 775; Burnett v. Douglas County, 4 Or. 389; In re Winegard, 78 Hun, 58, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1039.

WRIT OF RIGHT.

This was a writ which lay for one who had the right of property, against another who had the right of possession and the actual occupation. The writ properly lay only to recover corporeal hereditaments for an estate in fee-simple; but there were other writs, said to be “in the nature of a writ of right,” available for the recovery of incorporeal hereditaments or of lands for a less estate than a fee-simple. Brown.

In another sense of the term, a “writ of right” is one which is gran table as a mat- ter of right, as opposed to a "prerogative writ,” which is issued only as a matter of grace or discretion.

WRIT OF SUMMONS.

The writ by which, under the English judicature acts, all actions are commenced.

WRIT OF TOUT.

In English law. The name of a writ to remove proceedings on a writ of right patent from the court-baron into the county court

WRIT OF TRIAL.

In English law. A writ directing an action brought in a supe- rior court to be tried in an Inferior court or before the under-sheriff, under St. 3 & 4 Wm. IY. c 42. WRITER OF THE TALLIES.

In Eng- land. An officer of the exchequer whose duty it was to write upon the tallies the letters of tellers' bills.

WRITER TO THE SIGNET.

In Scotch law. An officer nearly corresponding to an attorney at law, in English and American practice. "Writers to the signet" called al- so "clerks to the signet" derive their name from the circumstance that they were anciently clerks in the office of the secretary of state, by whom writs were prepared and Is- sued under the royal signet or seal; and. when the signet became employed In Judicial proceedings, they obtained a monopoly of the privileges of acting as agents or attor- neys before the court of session. Brande, voc. "Signet."

WRITING.

The expression of ideas by letters visible to the eye. Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 491. The giving an out- ward and objective form to a contract, will, etc., by means of letters or marks placed upon paper, parchment, or other material sub- stance.

In the most general sense of the word, "writing" denotes a document, whether man- uscript or printed, as opposed to mere spoken words. Writing is essential to the validity of certain contracts and other transactions. Sweet WRONG.

An injury; a tort; a violation of right or of law.

The idea of rights naturally suggests the cor- relative one of wrongs; for every right is capable of being violated. A right to receive pay- ment for goods sold (for example) implies a wrong on the part of him who owes, but with- holds the price; a right to live in personal security, a wrong on the part of him who com- mits personal violence. And therefore, while, in a general point of view, the law is intended for the establishment and maintenance of rights, we find it, on closer examination, to be dealing both with rights and wrongs. It first fixes the character and definition of rights, and then, with a view to their effectual security, proceeds to define wrongs, and to devise the means by which the latter shall be prevented or redressed. 1 Steph. Comm. 126.

—Private wrongs. The violation of public or private rights, when considered in reference to the injury sustained by the individual, and consequently as subjects for civil redress or compensaton. 3 Steph. Comm. 356; Hunting- ton v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123; Tomlin v. Hildreth, 65 N. J. Law, 438, 47 Atl. 649. — Public wrongs. Violations of public rights and duties which affect the whole community, considered as a communi- ty; crimes and misdemeanors. 3 Bl. Comm. 2; 4 Bl. Comm. 1.— Real wrong. In old English law. YEAR.

The period in which the revolu- tion of the earth round the sun, and the ac- companying changes in the order of nature, are completed. Generally, when a statute speaks of a year, twelve calendar, and not lunar, months are intended. Cro. Jac. 166. The year is either astronomical, ecclesiastical, or regnal, beginning on the 1st of January, or 25th of March, or the day of the sover- eign's accession. Wharton.

—Natural year. In old English law. That period of time in which the sun was supposed !to revolve in its orbit, consisting of 365 days and one-fourth of a day. or six hours. Bract, fol. 3T>»6.— Year and day. This period was .fixed for many purposes in law. Thus, in the case of an estray. if the owner did not claim it Within that time, it became the property of the lord. So the owners of wreck must claim it within a year and a day. Death must follow upon wounding within a year and a day if the wounding is to be indicted as murder. Also, a year and a day were given for prosecuting or avoiding certain legal acts ; e. g., for bringing actions after entry, for making claim for avoid- ing a fine, etc. Brown.— Year books. Books of reports of cases in a regular series from the reign of the English King Edward I., inclusive, to the time of Henry VIII., which were taken by the prothonotaries or chief scribes of the courts, at the expense of the crown, and pub- lished annually; whence their name, "Year Books.” Brown.— Year, day, and waste. In English law. An ancient prerogative of the king, whereby be was entitled to the profits, for a year and a day, of the lands of persons at- tainted of petty treason or felony, together with the right of wasting the tenements, afterwards restoring the property to the lord of the fee. Abrogated by St. 54 Geo. III. e. 145. Whar- tion.— Year to year, tenancy from. This es- tate arises either expressly, as when land is let from year to year; or by a' general parol de- mise, without any determinate interest, but reserving the payment of an annual rent; or impliedly, as when property is occupied gen- erally under a rent payable yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly ; or when a tenant holds over, after the expiration of his term, without having en- tered into any new contract, and pays rent, (be- fore which he is tenant on sufferance.)
