CRIME.

A crime is an act committed or omitted, in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it ; a breach or violation of some public right or duty due to a whole community, considered as a com- munity in its social aggregate capacity, as distinguished from a civil injury. Wilkins v. U. S., 96 Fed. 837, 37 C. C. A. 588 ; Pound- er v. Ashe. 36 Neb. 564, 54 N. W. 847 ; State v. Bishop, 7 Conn. 185; In re Bergin, 31 Wls. 386; State v. Brazier, 37 Ohio St. 78; Peo- ple v. Williams, 24 Mich. 163, 9 Am. Rep. 119; In re Clark, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 212. “Crime” and “misdemeanor,” proi>erly speak- ing, are synonymous terms; though in com- mon usage “crime” Is made to denote such offenses as are of a deeper and more atro- cious dye. 4 Bl. Comm. 5.

Crimes are those wrongs which the gov- ernment notices as injurious to the public, and punishes in what is called a “criminal proceeding,” in its own name. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, | 43.

or commanding it, and to which is an- nexed, upon conviction, either of the follow- ing punishments: (1) Death; (2) imprisonment; (3) fine; (4) removal from office; or (5) disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit in this state. Pen. Code Cal. | 15.

A crime or misdemeanor shall consist in a violation of a public law, in the commission of which there shall be a union or Joint oper- ation of act and Intention, or criminal negli- gence. Code Ga. 18S2, § 4292.

Synonyms. According to Blackstone,' the word “crime” denotes such offenses as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye, while smaller faults and omissions of less consequence are called “misdemeanors.” But the better use ap- pears to be to make crime a term of broad and general import, including both felonies and misdemeanors, and hence covering all infrac- tions of the criminal law. In this sense it is not a technical phrase, strictly speaking, (as “fel- ony” and “misdemeanor” are,) but a convenient general term. In this sense, also, “offense” or "public offense” should be used as synonymous with it.

The distinction between a orime and a tort or civil injury is that the former is a breach and1 violation of the public right and of duties due to the whole community considered as such, and in its social and aggregate capacity: whereas the latter is an infringement or privation of the civil rights of individuals merely. Brown.

A crime, as opposed to a civil injury, is the- violation of a right, considered in reference t*> the .evil tendency of such violation, as regards the community at large. 4 Steph. Comm. 4.

common law to certain crimes, upon the conviction of which a person became incompetent to testify as a witness, upon the theory that a person would not commit bo heinous a crime unless he was so depraved as to be unworthy of credit. These crimes are treason, felony, and the crim- en fain. Abbott. A crime punishable bv im- prisonment in the state prison or penitentiary, with or without hard labor. iB an infamous crime, within the provision of the fifth amend- ment of the constitution that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or in- dictment of a grand jury.” Mackin v. U. S„ 117 U. 8. 348, 6 Sup. Ct. 777, 28 L. Ed.. 909.

“Infamous,” as used in the fifth amendment to the United States constitution, in reference to crimes, includes those only of the class called “ crimen falxi," which both involve the charge of falsehood, and may also injuriously affect the public administration of justice by introducing falsehood and fraud. U. S. v. Rloek, 15 N. B.

II. 325. Fed. Pas. No. 14,009. By the Revised Statutes of New York the term “infamous crime,” when used in any statute, is directed to be construed as including every offense pun-, isliable with death or by imprisonment in a state-prison, and no other. 2 Itev. St. <p. 702. $ 31,) p. 587. g 32.— Quasi crimes. This term embraces all offenses not crimes or misdemean- ors, but that are in the nature of crimes, — a class of offenses against the public which have not been declared crimes, but wrongs against the general or local public which it is proper should be repressed or punished by forfeitures and penalties. This would embrace all gut tarn actions and forfeitures imposed for the neglect or violation of a public duty. A guazi crime would not embrace an indictable offense, what- ever might be its grade, but simply forfeitures for a wrong done to the public, whether volun- tary or involuntary, where a penalty is given, whether recoverable by criminal or civil pro- cess. Wiggins v. Chicago, 08 111. 375. — Statu- tory crime*. Those created by statutes, as distinguished from such as are known to, or cognizable by, the common law.

[United States v. Hudson & Goodwin, 11 U.S. (7 Cranch) 32 (1812)]

The entry notes that 'there are no common-law crimes against the United States' — the rule that federal courts have no common-law criminal jurisdiction; federal crimes must be created by statute.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the rule with supporting cases; Hudson & Goodwin is its landmark Supreme Court statement. Confident on the citation.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — grand jury indictment for infamous crimes]

The entry's 'infamous crime' discussion states the Fifth Amendment rule: no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime except on presentment or indictment of a grand jury.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes the Fifth Amendment language and discusses infamous crime at length (citing Mackin v. U.S.); the footnote gives the constitutional rule the discussion expounds. Confident.

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea]

The entry's Georgia definition — crime as 'a union or joint operation of act and intention' — is the classical requirement of actus reus joined with mens rea: the act alone does not make one guilty unless the mind is guilty.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines crime to require the joint operation of act and intention (or criminal negligence); the maxim is the classical statement of that union. Nothing imported beyond the entry's own definition.

[Fyodor Dostoevsky, Crime and Punishment, 1866]

Raskolnikov murders the pawnbroker Alyona Ivanovna with an axe, convinced that an 'extraordinary' man stands above the law — then is unmade by his own conscience, confesses, and takes his punishment: the criminal act anatomized from theory through penalty. (paraphrase) (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the novel literally titled for the entry is the great literary anatomy of crime — act, intention, conscience, punishment. Paraphrase marked; details certain from the novel.

[Maxim: Nullum crimen, nulla poena sine lege]

Nullum crimen, nulla poena sine lege — no crime, no punishment without a (pre-existing) law.

Why: Classical maxim that is the spine of the entry: crime is defined throughout as violation of a public law, which presupposes the law pre-exists the act.

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 609(a)(2) — crimen falsi admissible to attack credibility]

The crimen falsi the entry defines — forgery, perjury, counterfeiting, false weights, and other deceits — is the class of crimes of dishonesty or false statement that may be used to impeach a witness's credibility.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the class (including perjury and forgery by name) and notes its common-law use against witness competency; Rule 609(a)(2) is the modern evidentiary form of that use. Confident on the rule.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:16, KJV]

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined; two-witness rule]

The high treason this entry defines is defined and limited in American law by the Constitution: treason consists only in levying war against the United States or adhering to their enemies, and no person shall be convicted but on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act.

Why: Genuine: the entry's subject is treason (crimen laesae majestatis); the Treason Clause is the U.S. law of that crime, including its unique evidentiary safeguard. Confident on the clause.

[Maxim: Crimen trahit personam]

Crimen trahit personam: the crime carries the person — the commission of a crime gives the courts of the place where it was committed jurisdiction over the offender; the territorial principle of criminal jurisdiction.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim with its meaning and authority (People v. Adams); the note states the jurisdictional principle it expresses. Standard form as given.

Crimina morte extinguuntur: crimes are extinguished by death — a criminal prosecution abates upon the death of the accused.

Why: Genuine: the entry states this maxim; the note gives its procedural consequence, which is the maxim's entire content. Nothing added.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — privilege against self-incrimination]

The entry's rule — 'a witness cannot be compelled to answer any question which has a tendency to criminate him' — is the privilege against self-incrimination: no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the privilege in its classic witness form with cases; the Fifth Amendment is its constitutional source. Direct illumination; confident.

One of the offices of the English high court of chancery, now transferred to the high court of justice. The principal of- ficial, the clerk of the crown, is an officer of parliament, and of the lord chancellor, in his nonjudicial capacity, rather than an officer of the courts of law.— Crown paper. A paper containing the list of criminal cases which await the hearing or decision of the court, and particularly of the court of king’s bench ; and it then includes all eases arising from informa- tions quo warranto, criminal informations, criminal cases brought up from inferior courts by writ of oertiorari, and cases from the ses- sions. Brown.— Crown side. The criminal department of the court of king’s bench ; the civil department or branch being called the “plea side.” 4 Bl. Comm. 265.— Crown solic- itor. In England, the solicitor to the treasury acts, in state prosecutions, as solicitor for the crown in preparing the prosecution. In Ireland there are officers called “crown solicitors” attached to each circuit, whose duty it is to get up every case for the crown in criminal prosecutions. They are paid by salaries. There is no such system in England, where prosecu- tions are conducted by solicitors appointed by the parish, or other persons bound over to 1 rosecute by the magistrates on each committal ;

ut in Scotland the still better plan exists of a crown prosecutor (called the “procurator-fiscal,” and being a subordinate of the lord-advocate) is every county, who prepares every criminal pros- ecution. Wharton.

As between husband and wife. Those acts which affect the life, the health, or even the comfort, of the party aggrieved and give a rea- sonable apprehension of bodily hurt, are called “cruelty.” What merely wounds the feelings is seldom admitted to lie cruelty, unless the act be accompanied with bodily injury, either ac- tual or menaced. Mere austerity of temper, petulance of manners, rudeness of language, a want of civil attention and accommodation, even occasional sallies of passion, will not amount to legal cruelty ; a fortiori, the denial of little in- dulgences and particular accommodations, which the delicacy of the world is apt to number among its necessaries, is not cruelty. The nega- tive descriptions of cruelty are perhaps the best, under the infinite variety of cages that may occur, by showing what is not cruelty. Evans v. Evans, 1 Hagg. Const. 35; Westmeath v. Westmeath, 4 Eng. Ecc. 238, 311. 312.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the phrase with Parker's dictum; the note states the evidentiary use the dictum points to. Nothing beyond the entry's own words.

Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum: whose is the soil, his it is up to the sky — the ad coelum doctrine of airspace ownership, limited in modern law by the public's right of transit through navigable airspace.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes the maxim twice (both forms, citing Co. Litt. 4a); Causby is the landmark limiting ad coelum by navigable airspace. Confident on the citation.

Cui jurisdictio data est, ea quoque concessa esse videntur, sine quibus jurisdictio explicari non potest: the grant of jurisdiction implies the grant of all powers necessary to its exercise.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this Digest maxim with Kent's application (1 Kent, Comm. 339); the note states the implied-powers rule it expresses. The entry's own authority.

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 702 — expert testimony]

Cuilibet in arte sua perito est credendum: credence is to be given to one skilled in his own art — the classical root of expert testimony, given modern form in the rule permitting qualified experts to give opinion evidence.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes the maxim (Co. Litt. 125a; Broom, Max. 932); FRE 702 is the modern rule admitting the skilled witness's opinion. The maxim-to-rule lineage is direct. Confident on the rule.

Cuilibet licet juri pro se introducto renunciare: anyone may waive the benefit of a rule of law that exists only for his own protection — the waiver doctrine.

Why: Genuine: the entry states this maxim; the note names the waiver doctrine it states. Nothing imported beyond the maxim's own words.

[Maxim: recovery of mistaken payments — Dig. 50.17.53]

Cujus per errorem dati repetitio est, cujus consulto dati donatio est: he who gives by mistake may recover it back; what is given deliberately is a gift — the restitution rule for mistaken payments.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this Digest rule; the note identifies it as the mistaken-payment branch of quasi-contract/restitution. The rule is doing the work.

[Law] — Law

[Law: degrees of negligence — gross, ordinary, and slight fault]

The entry's three degrees — lata culpa (gross fault), levis culpa (ordinary fault), levissima culpa (slight fault) — are the civil-law degrees of negligence the entry says are 'precisely the same as those in our law,' scaling the duty of care to the undertaking.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the three degrees and asserts their identity with ours (citing Story, Bailm. § 18); the note restates the scale the entry describes. Kept in loose form.

Culpa lata dolo aequiparatur: gross negligence is held equivalent to intentional wrong — the rule by which wanton or reckless fault is treated as willful for purposes such as punitive damages.

Why: Genuine: the entry states this maxim among the culpa rules; the note gives its operative consequence. Standard form as given.

CULPABILIS.

Lat. In old English law. Guilty. Cuipabili* dc intrusione, — guilty of intrusion. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 30, 8 11. Aon culpalillix, (abbreviated to non all.) In crim- inal procedure, the plea of “not guilty.” See Culprit.

CULPABLE.

Rlnmiible; censurable; in- volving file breach of a legal duty or the commission of a fault. The term is not nec- essarily equivalent to “criminal,” for, in pres- ent use. and notwithstanding its derivation, It implies that the act or conduct spoken of is reprehensible or wrong but not that it In- volves nmlice or a guilty purpose. "Culpa- ble" iu fact connotes fault rather than guilt.

proportioned to the crime; punishment is to be measured by the extent of the offense — the proportionality principle behind the ban on cruel and unusual punishments.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this sentencing maxim in the CULPABLE text; the Eighth Amendment is the constitutional form of the proportionality it demands. The maxim is doing the work.

CULPRIT.

A person who is indicted for a criminal offense, but not yet convicted. It is not, however, a technical term of the law ; and in its vernacular usage it seems to imply only a light degree of censure or moral reprobation.

Blackstone believes it an abbreviation of the old forms of arraignment, whereby, on the pris- oner's pleading not guilty, the clerk would re- spond, "culpabilis, prit," ». e., he is guilty and the crown is ready. It was (he says) the viva voce replication, by the clerk, on behalf of the crown, to the prisoner’s plea of non culpabilis; prit being a technical word, anciently in use in the formula of joining issue. 4 Bl. Comm. 339.

But a more plausible explanation is that given by Donaldson, (cited Whart. Lex.,) as follows: The clerk asks the prisoner, “Are you guilty, or not guilty?” Prisoner “Not guilty.” Clerk, “Qu’il paroit, [may it prove so.) How will you be tried?” Prisoner, “By God and my eoun- ' try.” These words being hurried over, came to sound, “culprit, how will you be tried?” The ordinary derivation is from culpa.

CULTIVATES.

Cum duo inter se pugnantia reperiuntur in testamento, ultimum ratum est: where two repugnant provisions are found in a will, the last shall stand — the rule that the testator's latest expression controls.

Why: Genuine maxim of testamentary construction, printed in the dictionary's text within this entry (citing Co. Litt. and Broom, Max. 583); the reasoning notes its printed location. The note states the rule the maxim gives.

Cum in testamento ambigue aut etiam perperam scriptum est benigne interpretetur et secundum id quod credibile est cogitatum credendum est: an ambiguous or even erroneous expression in a will is to be construed liberally, according to the testator's probable meaning.

Why: Genuine Digest maxim (citing Broom, Max. 568), printed in the dictionary's text within this entry; the reasoning notes its printed location. It states the benign-construction rule for wills.

[Maxim: Cum in corpore dissentitur — no consensus, no contract]

Cum in corpore dissentitur, apparet nullam esse acceptionem: when the parties disagree on the substance, there is no acceptance — no meeting of the minds, no contract.

[Law: recording acts — purchaser takes subject to recorded encumbrances]

What is taken cum onere — 'with the burden,' subject to an existing charge — states the purchaser's position under the recording system: one who takes property takes subject to duly recorded encumbrances.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines cum onere as taking 'subject to an existing burden or charge'; the recording acts are the system that determines which burdens bind the taker. Direct illumination, kept in loose form.

Additional ; heaping up ; increasing ; forming an aggregate. The word signifies that two things are to be added together, Instead of one being a repetition or in substitution of the other. People v. Su- perior Court 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 285; Regina v. Eastern Archipelago Co., 18 Eng. Law & Eq. 183.

—Cumulative dividend. See Stock. — Cu- mulative offense. One which can be commit- ted only by a repetition of acts of the same kind but committed on different days. The of- fense of being a “common seller” of intoxicat- ing liquors is an example. Wells v. Com., 12 Cray (Mass.) 328.— Cumulative punishment. An increased punishment inflicted for & second or third conviction of the same offense, under the statutes relating to habitual criminals. State v. Hambly, 120 N. C. 1060, 35 S. E. 614. To be distinguished from a “cumulative sen- tence,” as to which see Sentence. — Cumula- tive remedy. A. remedy created by statute in addition to one which still remains in force. Railway Co. v. Chicago. 148 111. 141. 35 N. E. 881.— Cumulative votlug. A system of vot- ing, by which the elector, having a number of votes equal to the number of officers to be chos- en, is allowed to concentrate the whole number of his votes upon one person, or to distribute them as he may see fit. For example, if ten directors of a corporation are to be elected, then, under this system, the voter may cast ten votes for one person, or five votes for each of two persons, etc. It is intended to secure repre- sentation of a minority.

As to cumulative “Evidence.” “Legacies,’" and "Sentences,” see those titles.

[Law] — Law

[Law: habitual-offender / recidivist statutes — enhanced punishment for repeat convictions]

The entry's 'cumulative punishment' — increased punishment for a second or third conviction of the same offense under habitual-criminal statutes — is the recidivist enhancement: repeat offenders face heavier sentences than first offenders.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines cumulative punishment by reference to habitual-criminal statutes, citing State v. Hambly; the note states the enhancement principle the definition describes. Kept in loose form.

[Law: cumulative voting for corporate directors — minority representation]

The entry's 'cumulative voting' — each elector casting as many votes as there are offices, concentrated or distributed at will — is the corporate device for securing minority representation on the board.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the device and states its purpose ('intended to secure representation of a minority'); the note names the corporate-law context. Nothing beyond the entry's own definition.

CUHADE8.

In Spanish law. Affinity; alliance; relation by marriage. Las Parti- das, pt 4, tit. 6, 1, 5.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 18:6, KJV]

None of you shall approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakedness: I am the LORD.

Why: Borderline, kept with reasoning explicit: Leviticus 18 is scripture's own law of prohibited degrees, affinity included — the entry names the category the chapter governs.

CURATIVE.

Intended to cure (that Is. to obviate the ordinary legal effects or con- sequences of) defects, errors, omissions, or irregularities. Applied particularly to stat- utes, a “curative act” being a retrospective law passed in order to validate legal pro- ceedings, the acts of public officers, or private deeds or contracts, which would otherwise be void for defects or irregularities or for want of conformity to existing legal require- ments. Meigs v. Roberts, 162 N. Y. 371, 56

N. E. 838, 76 Am. St. Rep. 322.

[Law] — Law

[Law: curative statutes — may validate irregular proceedings; cannot divest vested rights]

The curative act the entry defines — retrospective validation of proceedings, official acts, or instruments defective for irregularity — is effective only within limits: a legislature may cure irregularities but may not divest vested rights.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the curative act's validating function (citing Meigs v. Roberts); the vested-rights limit is the operative boundary of that function. Kept in loose form; no invented authority.

CURATOR.

In the civil law. A per- son who is appointed to take care of any- thing for another. A guardian. One ap- pointed to take care of the estate of a minor above a certain age, a lunatic, a spendthrift, or other person not regarded by the law as competent to administer it for himself. The

The coined money and circulating paper the entry defines are legal tender: United States coins and currency are legal tender for all debts, public and private.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines currency as what 'in fact circulate[s] from hand to hand as the medium of exchange'; § 5103 is the statute declaring what counts as legal tender. Confident on the section.

[Knox v. Lee, 79 U.S. 457 (1871)]

The entry's 'bank-notes or other paper money as are authorized by law' was the precise question of the Legal Tender Cases: Congress may make paper money legal tender for debts.

Why: Genuine: the entry's definition turns on paper money 'authorized by law' circulating as currency; the Legal Tender Cases decided Congress's power to so authorize it. Confident on the citation.

CURTILAGE.

The Inclosed space of ground and buildings immediately surround- ing a dwelling-house.

In its most comprehensive and proper legal signification, it includes all that space of ground and buildings thereon which is usually inclosed within the qencral fence immediately surround- ing a principal messuage and outbuildings, and yard closely adjoining to a dwelling-house, but it may lie lnrge enough for cattle to be levant and couclmnt therein. 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 175.

The curtilage of a dwelling-house is a space, necessary and convenient and habitually used for the family purposes, and the carrying on of domestic employments. It includes the garden, if there be one, and it need not be separated from other lands by fence. State v. Shaw, 31 Me. 523: Com. v. Barney, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 4.S0 ; Derrickson v. Edwards, 29 X. J. Law, 474. .SO Am. Dec. 220.

The curtilage is the court-yard in the front or rear of a house, or at its side, or any piece of ground lying near, inclosed nnd used with, the house, and necessary for the convenient occu- pation of the house. People v. Geduey, 10 Hun (X. Y.) 154.

A usage or practice of the lieople, which, by common adoption nnd ac- quiescence. aud by long aud unvarying habit, has become compulsory, and has acquired the force of n law with respect to the place or subject-matter to which It relates. Adams v. Insurance Co., 95 I*a. 355, 40 Am. Re)). 662 ; Lindsay v. Cusimano (C. C.) 12 Fed. 304 ; Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 445. 9 L. Eil. 1137; Minis v. Nelson (C. C.) 43 Fell. 779; Panautl v. Jones, 1 Cal. 498; llursli v. North, 40 Pa. 241.

A law not written, established by long us- age, and the consent of our ancestors.

Termes de la Ley; Cowell; Bract, fol. 2. If it be universal! it is common law ; if par- ticular to this or that place, it is then prop- erly custom. 3 Salk. 112.

* Customs result from a long series of ac- tions constantly repeated, which have, by such repetition, and by uninterrupted acqui- escence, acquired the force of a tacit and common consent. Civil Code La. art. 3.

It differs from prescription, which is personal and is annexed to the person of the owner of a particular estate ; while the other is local, and relates to a particular district. An in- stance of the latter occurs where the question is upon the manner of conducting a particular branch of trade at a certain place; of the former, where a certain person and his ances- tors, or those whose estates he has, have been entitled to a certain advantage or privilege, as to have common of pasture in a certain close, or the like. The distinction has been thus ex- pressed: "While prescription is the making of a right, custom is the making of a law.” Law- son, Usages & Oust. 15, note 2.

Classification. Customs are general, local or particular. General customs are such as prevail throughout a country and become the law of that country, and their existence is to be determined by the court. Bodfish 23 Me. 95; 39 Am. Dec. 611. Or as to usages of trade and business, a general cus- tom is one that is followed in all cases by all persons in the same business in the same ter- ritory, and which has been so long established that persons sought to be charged thereby, and all others living in the vicinity, may be pre- sumed to have known of it and to have acted upon it as they had occasion. Sturges v. Buck- ley, 32- Conn. 267 ; Railroad Co. v. Harrington, 192 111. 9, 61 N. E. 622 ; Bonham v. Railroad Co., 13 8. C. 267. Local customs are such as prevail only in some particular district or lo- cality, or in some city, county, or town. Bod- fish v. Fox. 23 Me. 95, 39 Am. Dec. 611 ; Clough v. Wing, 2 Ariz. 371, 17 Pac. 457. Particular customs are nearly the same, being such as af- fect only the inhabitants of some particular district. 1 Bl. Comm. 74.

— Customs of London. Certain particular customs, peculiar to that city, with regard to trade, apprentices, widows, orphans and a var- iety of other matters; contrary to the general law of the land, but confirmed by act of par- liament. 1 Bl. Comm. 75.— Custom of mer- chants. A system of customs or rules relative to bills of exchange, partnership, and other mercantile matters, and which, under the name of the "lex mercatoria," or "law-merchant,” has been ingrafted into and made a part of, the common law. 1 Bl. Comm. 75 ; 1 Steph. Comm. 54; 2 Burrows, 1226. 1228. — Custom of

[Law: UCC § 1-303 — course of performance, dealing, and usage of trade]

The 'custom of merchants' the entry describes — the lex mercatoria 'ingrafted into and made a part of the common law' — is codified in the UCC's recognition of course of performance, course of dealing, and usage of trade in interpreting agreements.

Why: Genuine: the entry traces merchant custom into the common law (citing 1 Bl. Comm. 75); § 1-303 is the UCC's codification of trade usage. The lineage is direct. Confident on the section.

[Maxim: Custom is the best interpreter of the law — 4 Inst. 75]

Custom is the best interpreter of the law — long usage settles the meaning of doubtful legal texts.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim with authorities (4 Inst. 75; McKeen v. Delaney, 5 Cranch 32); the note states the interpretive rule it gives. The entry's own authorities.

CUSTOMARY.

—Customary Court-Baron. See Court- Baron.— Customary estates. Estates which owe their origin and existence to the custom of the manor in which they are held. 2 Bl. Comm. 149.— Customary freehold. In Eng- lish law. A variety of copyhold estate, the evi- dences of the title to which are to be found upon the court rolls ; the entries declaring the holding to be according to this custom of the manor, but it is not said to be at the will of the- lord. The incidents are similar to those of com- mon or pure copyhold. 1 Steph. Comm. 212, 213, and note.— Customary Interpretation- See Interpretation.— Customary services. Such as are

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Customs shall be taken strictly — Jenk. Cent. 83]

Customs shall be taken strictly: local or particular customs are construed narrowly, not extended by analogy beyond their established observance.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (Jenk. Cent. 83) in the entry's text; the note states the strict-construction rule for customs. Standard form as given.

CUSTOMS.

This term is usually applied to those taxes which are payable upon goods and merchandise imported or exported. Sto- ry, Const. | 949; Pollock v. Trust Co., 158

U. S. 601, 15 Sup. Ct. 912, 39 L. Ed. 1108; Marriott v. Brune, 9 How. 632, 13 L. Ed. 282.

The duties, toll, tribute, or tariff payable upon merchandise exported or Imported. These are called '•customs" from having been paid from time immemorial. Expressed in law Latin by custuma, as distinguished from consuetudines, which are usages merely. 1 Bl. Comm. 314.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1 — power over duties and imposts]

The import and export duties the entry defines are laid under Congress's power to lay and collect duties and imposts — the constitutional source of the customs laws.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines customs as duties on imported/exported merchandise (citing Story, Const. § 949); cl. 1 is the constitutional grant of the taxing power over them. Confident on the clause.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:7, KJV]

Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour.

Why: The verse names 'custom' (duty) expressly among the dues to be rendered to authority. Placed here; CUSTOMS COURT and CUSTOM-HOUSE left bare as single placement.

CUSTOMS COURT.

A court of the Unit- ed States, created by act of congress In 1909, to hear and determine appeals from the decisions of the revenue officers in the imposition and collection of customs-duties. It is composed of a chief judge and four as- sociates, and sits at Washington.

[BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559 (1996)]

The entry's exemplary (punitive) damages — awarded over and above compensation to punish evil behavior — are bounded by due process: grossly excessive punitive awards violate the Fourteenth Amendment, tested by reprehensibility, ratio, and comparable penalties.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines exemplary damages at length (citing Scott v. Donald); Gore sets the constitutional excessiveness guideposts for exactly such awards. Confident on the citation.

The entry's consequential (special) damages — those following by reason of special circumstances — are recoverable only if foreseeable: the Hadley rule limiting contract damages to what was in the parties' contemplation.

Why: Genuine: the entry's general/special and direct/consequential classifications turn on foreseeability; Hadley v. Baxendale is the rule. Confident on the citation.

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 356 — liquidated damages vs. unenforceable penalty]

The entry's liquidated damages — a sum stipulated in advance for breach — are enforceable only as a genuine pre-estimate; a stipulated sum operating as a penalty for breach is void.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines liquidated damages as the parties' stipulated sum; § 356 is the validity test distinguishing them from penalties. Confident on the section.

[Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R. Co., 248 N.Y. 339 (1928)]

The entry's proximate and remote damages — the immediate and direct results versus those cut off by intervening cause — are the proximate-cause inquiry: liability extends only to the foreseeable scope of the risk created.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Why: Genuine: the entry classifies damages by proximity and remoteness in causation terms; Palsgraf is the landmark on the duty/proximate-cause boundary. Confident on the citation.

E. 354.

A sum of money assessed by a Jury, on finding for the plaintiff or successful party in an action, as a compensation for the in- jury done him by the opposite party. 2 Bl. Comm. 438 ; Co. Litt. 257o ; 2 Tidd, Pr. 869, 870.

Every person who suffers detriment from the unlawful act or omission of another may recover from the person in fault a compen- sation therefor in money, which is called "damages.” Civ. Code Cal. | 3281 ; Civ. Code Dak. i 1940.

In the ancient usage, the word "damages” was employed in two significations. According to Coke, its proper and general sense included the costs of suit, while its strict or relative sense was exclusive of costs. 10 Coke, 116, 117 ; Co. Litt. 257»; 9 East, 299. The latter meaning has alone survived.

Classification. Damages are either gen- eral or special. General damages are such as the law itself implies or presumes to have ac- crued from the wrong complained of. for the reason that they are its immediate, direct, and proximate result, or such as necessarily result from the injury, or such as did in fact result from the wrong, directly and proximately, and without reference to the special character, con- dition. or circumstances of the plnintiff. Mood v. Telegraph Co.. 40 S. C. 524. 19 S. E. 67; Manufacturing Co. v. Gridley, 28 Conn. 212: Irrigation Co. v. Canal Co., 23 Utah, 199. 63 Pac. 812; Smith v. Railway Co., 30 Minn. 169, 14 N. \V. 797 ; Lottos -v. Bennett, 68 App. Div. 128, 74 N. Y. Supp. 290. Special damages are those which are the actual, but not the neces- sary, result of the injury complained of. and which in fact follow it as a natural and proxi- mate consequence in the particular case, that is.

by reason of special circumstances or conditions. Hence general damages are such as might ac- crue to any person similarly injured, while spe- cial damages are such as did in fact accrue to the particular individual by reason of the par- ticular circumstances of the case. Wallace v. Ah Sam, 71 Cal. 197, 12 Pac. 46. 60 Am. Rep. 534 ; Manufacturing Co. v. Gridley, 28 Coqn. 212 ; Lawrence v. Porter, 63 Fed. 62, 11 C. C.

A. 27, 26 L. R. A. 167 : Roberts v. Graham. 6 Wall. 579, 18 L. Ed. 791 ; Fry v. McCord, 95 Tenn. 678, 33 S. W. 568.

Direct and consequential. Direct dam- ages are such aB follow immediately upon the act done; while consequential damages are the necessary and connected effect of the wrongful act, flowing from some of its consequences or results, though to some extent depending on oth- er circumstances. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, | 3911 ; Pearson v. Spartanburg County, 51 S. C. 480. 29 S. E. 193; Eaton v. Railroad Co., 51 N. H. 504, 12 Am. Rep. 147.

Liquidated and unliquidated. The for- mer term is applicable when the amount of the damages has been ascertained by the judgment in the action, or when a specific Bum of money has been expressly stipulated by the parties to a bond or other contract as the amount of dam- ages to be recovered by either party for a breadh of the agreement by the other. Watts v. Shep- pard, 2 Ala. 445; Smith v. Smith, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 470; Keeble v. Keeble, 85 Ala. 552. 5 South. 149: Eakin v. Scott, 70 Tex. 442, 7

S. W. 777. Unliquidated damages are such as are not yet reduced to a certainty in respect of amount, nothing more being established than the plaintiff s right to recover ; or such as can- not be fixed by a mere mathematical calculation from ascertained data in the case. Cox v. Mc- Laughlin. 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164.

Nominal and substantial. Nominal dam- ages are a trifling sum awarded to a plaintiff in an action, where there is no substantial loss or injury, to be compensated, but still the law recognizes a technical invasion of his rights or a breach of the defendant's duty, or in cases where, although there has been a real injury, the plaintiffs evidence entirely fails to show its amount. Maher v. Wilson, 139 Cal. 514. 73 Pac. 418; Stanton v. Railroad Co.. 59 Conn. 272, 22 Atl. 300, 21 Am. St. Rep. 110: Sprin- ger v. Fuel Co.. 196 Pa. 156, 46 Atl. 370; Telegraph Co. v. Lawson. 60 Kan. 600, 72 Pac. 283; Railroad Co. v. Watson. 37 Kan. 773. 15 Pac. 877. Substantial damages are considerable in amount, and intended as a real compensation for a real injury.

Compensatory and exemplary. Compen- satory damages are such as will compensate the injured party for the injury sustained, and nothing more ; such as will simply make good or replace the loss caused by the wrong or in- jury. McKnight v. Denny, 198 Pa. 323, 47 Atl. 970; Reid v. Terwilliger. 116 N. Y. 530. 22 N. E. 1091 ; Monongaheia Nav. Co. v. U. S., 148 U. S. 312, 13 Sup. Ct. 622. 37 L. Ed. 463; Wade v. Power Co.. 51 S. C. 296, 29 S. E. 233. 64 Am. St. Rep. 676; Gatzow v. Buening, 106 Wis. 1, 81 N. W. 1003, 49 L. R. A. 475, 80 Am. St. Rep. 1. Exemplary damages are damages on an Increased scale, awarded to the plaintiff over and above what will barely compensate him for his property loss, where the wrong done to him was aggravated by circumstances of vio- lence, oppression, malice, fraud, or wanton and wicked conduct on the part of the defendant, and are intended to solace the plaintiff for men- tal anguish, laceration of hiB feelings, shame, degradation, or other aggravations of the orig- inal wrong, op else to punish the defendant for his evil behavior or to make an example of him. for which reason they are also called "puni- tive” or “punitory" damages or “vindictive” damages, and (vulgarly) “smart-money.” Reid

t. Terwilliger, 116 N. Y. 530, 22 N. E. 1091; Springer v. Fuel Co., 196 Pa. St. 156, 46 Atl. 370; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 17 Sup. Ct. 265, 41 L. Ed. 632; Gillingham v. Railroad Co., 35 W. Va. 588, 14 S. E. 243, 14 L. K. A. 798, 29 Am. St. Rep. 827; Boydan v. Habers- tumpf, 129 Mich. 137, 88 N. W. 386; Oliver V. Railroad Co., 65 S. C. 1, 43 S. E. 307 ; Murphy v. Hobbs, 7 Colo. 541, 5 Pac. 119, 49 Am. Repw 366.

Proximate and remote. Proximate dam- ages are the immediate and direct damages and natural results of the act complained of, and such as are usual and might have been expect- ed. Remote damages are those attributable im- mediately to an intervening cause, though it forms a link In an unbroken chain of causation, so that the remote damage would not have oc- curred if its elements had not been set in mo- tion by the original act or event Henry v. Railroad Co., 50 Cal. 183 ; Kuhn v. Jewett, 32

N. J. Eb. 649; Plelke v. Railroad Co., 5 Dak. 444, 41 N. W. 069. The terms “remote dam- ages” and “consequential damages” are not syn- onymous nor to be used interchangeably ; all remote damage is consequential, but it is by no means true that all consequential damage is remote. Eaton v. Railroad Co., 51 N. H. 511, 12 Am. Rep. 147.

Other compound and descriptive terms. — Actual dam ages are real, substantial and just damages, or the amount awarded to a complainant in compensation for his actual and real loss or injury, as opposed on the one hand to “nominal” damages, and on the other to “ex- emplary” or “punitive” damages. DAMAIOUSE.

In old English law. Causing damage or loss, as distinguished from torcenouse, wrongful. Britt, c. 61.

DAME.

In English law. The legal des- ignation of the wife of a knight or baronet.

DAMNA.

Damages, both inclusive and exclusive of costs.

DAMNATU8.

In old English law. Con- demned ; prohibited by law ; unlawful. Dam- natus coitus, an unlawful connection.

DAMNI Uf JUHUE ACTIO. An action given by the civil law for the damage done by one who Intentionally Injured the slave 419; Lumber Co. v. TT. 8.. 69 Fed. 33\ 1C or beast of another. Calvin. C. C. A. 400.

[Law] — Law

[Law: lex Aquilia — Roman action for wrongful damage to property]

The actio damni injuriae this (parser-fused) entry defines — the civil-law action for damage intentionally done to another's slave or beast — is the Aquilian action, the Roman ancestor of the modern law of wrongful damage to property.

Why: Genuine: the fused entry defines the action (citing Calvin); the note names it as the Aquilian action, its proper doctrinal identity. Keyed under its own headword though fused into entry 482's tail (flagged in the log). [re-homed from 'DAMNI INJURIAE ACTIO' to 'DAMNATU8' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

DAMNIFICATION.

That which causes damage or loss.

Damnum sine injuria esse potest.

Lofft, 112. There may he damage or injury inflicted without any act of injustice.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Damnum sine injuria esse potest]

Damnum sine injuria esse potest: there may be damage inflicted without any act of injustice — loss without legal wrong, the companion maxim to damnum absque injuria.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (Lofft, 112) in the entry's text; the note states it. Standard form as given.

DAMNIFY.

To cause damage or inju- rious loss to a person or put him in a posi- tion where he must sustain it. A surety is “damnified” when a judgment has been ob- tained against him. McLean v. Bank. 16 Fed. Cas. 278.

DAMNOSA HASREDITAS.

In the civil law. A losing inheritance; an inheritance that was a charge, instead of a benefit. Dig. 50, 16, 119.

The term has also been applied to that species of property of a bankrupt which, so far from being valuable, would be a charge to the creditors ; for example, a term of years where the rent- would exceed the revenue. 7 East, 342 ; 3 Camp. 340; 1 Esp. N. P. 234; Provident L. & Trust Co. v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 203 Pa. 82, 52 Atl. 34.

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 554 — abandonment of burdensome estate property]

The damnosa haereditas the entry applies to the bankrupt's burdensome property — a leasehold whose rent exceeds its revenue — is dealt with by abandonment: the trustee may abandon property that is burdensome or of inconsequential value to the estate.

Why: Genuine: the entry expressly applies the term to the bankrupt's chargeable property, citing cases; § 554 is the Code's abandonment provision for exactly such property. Confident on the section.

DAMNUM.

Lot. In the civil law.

Damage ; the loss or diminution of what is a man s own. either by fraud, carelessness, or accident.

In pleading and old English law. Dam- age; loss.

— Damnum fatale. Fatal damage ; damage from fate ; loss happening froth a cause beyond human control, (quod ex fato contingit ,) or an act of God, and for which bailees are not liable; such as shipwreck, lightning, and the like. Dig. 4, 9. 3. 1; Story. Bailm. S 465. The civilians included in the phrase “ damnum fatale all those accidents which are summed up in the common-law expression, “Act of God or public enemies though, perhaps, it embraced some which would not now be admitted ns occurring from an irresistible force. Thickstun v. How- ard 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 535.— Damnum infec- tum. In lioman law. Damage not yet committed, but threatened or impending. A pre- ventive interdict might be obtained to prevent such damage from happening; and it was treat- er! as a quani-delict, because of the imminence of the danger. — Damnum rel amiss*. In the civil law. A loss arising from a payment made by a party in consequence of an error of law. Maekeld. Rom. Law. 8 178.

[Law] — Law

[Law: act of God — irresistible natural force excusing liability]

The entry's damnum fatale — loss from a cause beyond human control, 'for which bailees are not liable' — is the act-of-God defense: irresistible natural force excusing performance or liability.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines damnum fatale with the bailee rule (citing Story, Bailm. § 465 and Dig. 4.9.3.1); the note names the common-law equivalent. Kept in loose form.

[Law: preventive injunction — equitable relief against threatened injury]

The entry's damnum infectum — damage threatened but not yet committed, against which 'a preventive interdict might be obtained' — is the ancestor of the preventive injunction against threatened harm.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Why: Genuine lineage: the entry describes the Roman preventive interdict for imminent damage; the injunction is its modern equitable form. The entry's own description does the work.

DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA.

Loss, hurt, or harm without injury in the legal sense, that is, without such au invasion of rights as is redressible by au action. A loss which does not give rise to an action of damages against the person causing it; as where a person blocks up the windows of a new house overlooking his land, or Injures a person’s trade by setting up an establish- ment of the same kind in the neighborhood. Broom, Com. Law, 75 ; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Crunch, 164, 2 L. Ed. 60; West Virginia Trutisp! Co. v. Standard Oil Co.. 50 W. Va. 011. 40 S. E. 591, 56 L. R. A. 804. 88 Am. 'St. Ref>. 895; Irwin v. [Maxim: Damnum absque injuria — no action lies without violation of a legal right]

Damnum absque injuria — loss without legal injury: harm that invades no right redressible by action, as where one blocks a neighbor's new windows or injures a rival's trade by fair competition, gives no cause of action.

Why: Genuine: the entry is the maxim's definition, with the entry's own illustrations (the blocked windows, the rival establishment) and authorities including Marbury v. Madison; the footnote states the maxim the entry def...

DATE.

The specification or mention, In a written instrument, of the time (day and year) when it was made. Also the time so specified.

That part of a deed or writing which ex- presses the day of the month and year in which it was made or given. 2 Bl. Comm. 304 ; Tomlins.

The primary signification of date is not time ,n the abstract, nor time taken absolutely, but time given or specified : time in some way as- certained and fixed. When we speak of the date of a deed, we do not mean the time when it was actually executed, but the time of its exe- cution. as given or stated in the deed itself. "The date of an item, or of a charge ih a bookaccount, is not necessarily the time when the article charged was. in fact, furnished, but rath- er the time given or set down in the account, in connection with such charge. And so the expression “the date of the last work done, or materials furnished,” in a mechanic's lien law. may be taken, in the absence of anything in the act indicating a different intention, to mean the time when such work was done or materials furnished, as specified in the plaintiff's written claim. Bemcnt v. Manufacturing Co., 32 X. J. Law, 513.

The entry's point that the date of a deed is the time 'as given or stated in the deed itself,' not necessarily when it was executed, states a conveyancing rule: a deed takes effect from delivery, not from its date, and the true date of execution may be proved by parol.

Why: Genuine: the entry's long Bemcnt discussion establishes that the written date is the stated time, not necessarily the actual one; the note states the delivery rule and parol-date rule that give the point its operative...

DATE CERTAINE.

In French law. A deed is said to have a date certaine (fixed date) when it has been subjected to the for- mality of registration; after this formality has been complied with, the parties to the deed cannot by mutual consent change the date thereof. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 555.

DATIO.

In the civil law. A giving, or act of giving. Datio in solutum ; a giving in payment; a species of accord and satisfac- tion. Called, in modern law, “dation."

[Law] — Law

[Law: accord and satisfaction — substituted performance accepted in discharge]

The entry's datio in solutum — 'a giving in payment,' which the entry itself calls 'a species of accord and satisfaction' — is the civilian form of accord and satisfaction: the creditor's agreement to accept substituted performance in discharge of the obligation.

Why: Genuine: the entry draws the accord-and-satisfaction analogy itself; the note names the common-law counterpart. Nothing imported beyond naming.

DATION.

In the civil law. A gift; a giving of something. It is not exactly syn- onymous with “donation,” for the lntter Im- plies generosity or liberality in making a gift, while dation may mean the giving of something to which the recipient is already entitled.

—Dation tn paiement. In French law. A giving by the debtor and receipt by the creditor of something in payment of a debt, instead of a sum of money. It is somewhat like the accord and satisfaction of the common law. 16 Tonl- lier, no. 45; Poth. Vente, no. 601.

. DATIVE. A word derived from the Ro- man law, signifying “appointed by public authority.” Thus, in Scotland, an executor- dative is an executor appointed by a court of Justice, corresponding to an English ad- ministrator. Mozley & Whitley.

In old English law. In one's gift; that may be given and disposed of at will and pleasure.

[Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306 (1950)]

The entry's 'day in court' — 'the opportunity to present one's claims or rights in a proper forensic hearing before a competent tribunal' — is the fundamental requisite of due process: notice and the opportunity to be heard.

Why: Genuine: this dictionary entry (its headword dropped by the parser, fused into entry 510's tail — flagged in the log) defines 'day in court' in due-process terms; Mullane states the requisite in its classic form. [Law: days of grace — abolished for negotiable instruments; payable on the stated date]

The entry's 'days of grace' — the merchant-custom three days allowed after a bill's stated time for payment — are a historical relic: days of grace for negotiable instruments were abolished, so an instrument is payable on its stated date.

Why: Genuine: the entry describes days of grace as established merchant custom 'demandable as of right'; the note states their abolition, which is what gives the historical definition its modern significance. [Law] — Law

[Law: burglary at common law required nighttime breaking and entering]

The entry defines daylight — the time before sunrise and after sunset counted as day — for the offense of burglary, because burglary at common law was a nighttime offense: breaking and entering in the night.

Why: Genuine: the entry ties its day/night line expressly to 'defining the offense of burglary'; the note states the nighttime element that made the line matter. Kept in loose form. [re-homed from 'DAYLIGHT' to 'DAYXIGHT' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

[Axiom: a fiduciary who commits waste of the property entrusted to him answers from his own goods]

A judgment de bonis propriis holds the executor personally answerable from his own goods where he has wasted the estate (devastavit) — personal liability follows a fiduciary's waste.

Why: Genuine: the entry names devastavit as the trigger for the de bonis propriis judgment, and personal liability for fiduciary waste is the live doctrine behind the writ; axiom form, no invented case.

DE BONIS TESTATORIS, or INTE8- / TATI.

Of the goods of the testator, or In- testate. A term applied to a judgment awarding execution against the property of a testator or intestate, as distinguished from the individual property of his executor or administrator. 2 Arehb. Pr. K. B. 148, 149.

[Axiom: an executor sued in his representative capacity answers from the estate's goods, not his individual property]

The de bonis testatoris judgment embodies the representative-capacity principle: an executor answers for the decedent's debts from the estate's goods, not his own.

Why: Genuine: the entry's whole point is the distinction between estate goods and the executor's own property; the axiom states that distinction in modern fiduciary terms without stretching.

DE BONIS TESTATORIS AC SI.

(Lat. From the goods of the testator, if he hat any, and. If not, from those of the execu- tor.) A judgment rendered where an execu- tor falsely pleads any matter as a release, or. generally, in any case where he is to be charged in case bis testator’s estate is in- sufficient 1 'Williams’ Saund. 3306; Baa Abr. “Executor,” B, 3; 2 Archb. Pr. K. B. 148.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: a representative who defeats creditors by false pleading answers personally for the resulting loss]

Where an executor falsely pleads a release or other bar to creditors, the de bonis testatoris ac si judgment charges him personally if the estate proves insufficient — false pleading by a fiduciary converts representative liability into personal liability.

Why: Genuine and distinct from #0/#1: the entry's trigger is the false plea, not waste; the annotation tracks the entry's own causal logic.

DE BONO ET MALO.

“For good and ill.” The Latin form of the law French phrase “De 6 ten et de mat" In ancient criminal pleading, this was the expression with which the prisoner put himself upon a Jury, indicating his absolute submission to their verdict.

■ This was also the name of the special writ of jail delivery formerly in use In England, which issued for each particular prisoner, of course. It was superseded by the gen- eral commission of jail delivery.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — 'the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury']

The prisoner's 'for good and ill' was absolute submission to the jury's verdict — the ancient pleading ancestor of the modern right to trial by jury.

Why: Genuine: the entry describes putting oneself upon a jury with absolute submission to its verdict; the Sixth Amendment text quoted is verbatim and the lineage from jury-submission pleading to the jury right is direct,...

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 1 — judges 'shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour']

'For good behavior' is the tenure formula of Article III judges — the Constitution's own de bono gestu clause.

[Law: common-law doctrine of champerty and maintenance]

The writ enforced the statute of champertors — the common-law doctrine of champerty and maintenance, under which a bargain to prosecute another's suit for a share of the proceeds is void.

Why: Genuine: the entry names the statute of champertors as the writ's purpose; the annotation states the doctrine the statute enforced, kept to axiom form since champerty's modern status varies by jurisdiction.

[Law: partition — a cotenant's right to compel division of property held in common]

The civil-law action for dividing common property is the ancestor of modern partition: a cotenant may compel division of property held in common.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the action as 'for dividing a thing held in common'; partition is its direct modern counterpart, not an analogical reach.

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 401 — federal courts' contempt power]

The writ issued commitment for contempt out of chancery — the ancestor of courts' inherent power to punish contempt of their authority.

Why: Genuine: the entry describes the writ as 'a commitment for contempt'; the annotation links it to the contempt power that is its modern descendant, citing the section only.

DE COPIA LIBELLI DELIBERANDA.

Writ for delivering the copy of a libel. An ancient writ directed to the judge of a spiritual court, commanding him to deliver to a defendant a copy of the libel filed against him in such court Reg. Orig. 58. The writ in the register is directed to the Dean of the Arches, and his commissary. Id.

DE DEBITO.

A writ of debt Beg. Orig. 139. DO. In Roman law. “Of cutting a debtor in pieces.” This was the name of a law contained in the Twelve Tables, the meaning of which has occasioned much controversy. Some commentators have concluded that It was literally the privilege of the creditors of an insolvent debtor (all other means fall- ing) to cut his body into pieces and distribute it among them. Others contend that the language of this law must be taken figura- tively, denoting a cutting up and apportion- ment of the debtor’s estate.

The latter view has been adopted by Montes- quieu, Bynkershoek, Heineccius, and Taylor. (Esprit des Lois, liv. 29, c. 2; Bynk. Obs. Jur. Rom. 1. 1, c. 1 ; Heinecc. Ant Rom. lib. 3, tit 30, | 4; Tayl. Comm, in Leg. Decemv.) The literal meaning, on the other hand, is advocated by Aulus Geliius and other writers of antiquity, and receives support from an expression (semoto omni cruciatu) in the Roman code itself. (Aul. Gel. Nodes Attic®, lib. 20, c. 1 : Code, 7, 7, 8.) This is also the opinion of Gibbon, Gravina, Pothier, Hugo, and Niehbuhr. (3 Gib. Rom. Emp., Am. Ea., p. 183; Grov. de Jur. Nat Gent, et XII. Tab. I 72 ; Poth. Introd. Pand. ; Hugo, Hist, du Droit Rom. tom. i., p. 233, j 149; 2 Neibh. Hist Rom. p. 597; 1 Kent, Comm. 523, note.) Burrill.

(paraphrase) The entry notes the Twelve Tables controversy over whether creditors could literally cut an insolvent debtor's body in pieces; Shakespeare stages the same creditor-vengeance on the debtor's body when Shylock claims his forfeit — a pound of Antonio's flesh. (paraphrase)

Why: The body's own controversy is answered by literature's most famous treatment of a creditor exacting flesh from a debtor; the link is to the entry's stated dispute, not a shared word.

[Law: actio de dolo malo, Dig. 4.3 — Roman-law action for fraud]

The actio de dolo malo (Dig. 4.3) is the Roman-law action for fraud — the civil-law root from which the modern action of deceit descends.

Why: Genuine: cites the authority the entry itself cites (Dig. 4, 3), and the illumination — Roman fraud action to modern deceit — is the real doctrinal lineage, borderline restatement but adding the descent the entry omits.

DE DOMO REPARANDA.

A writ which lay for one tenant in common to com- pel his co-tenant to contribute towards the repair of the common property.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: cotenants share the burdens of common property; one who pays the common charge has contribution against the rest]

The writ compelling a co-tenant to contribute to repairs states the contribution principle: one who pays more than his share of common charges recovers the excess from his fellows.

Why: Genuine: the entry's writ is precisely a contribution remedy between co-owners; the axiom states the common-law principle it enforced.

DE DONIS.

[Law: Statute De Donis Conditionalibus (1285) — creation of the fee tail]

De Donis Conditionalibus (13 Edw. I, 1285; Westm. 2 c.1) converted the fee-simple conditional into the fee tail — an estate descendible only to the lineal heirs of the donee's body.

Why: Genuine: the entry identifies the statute by regnal year and parliament; the annotation states its operative doctrinal consequence, which the entry's truncated body only begins to reach.

DE DOTE ASSIGNANDA.

Writ for as- signing dower. A writ which lay for the widow of a tenant in capite, commanding the king’s escheater to cause her dower to be assigned to her. Reg. Orig. 297 ; Fltzh. Nat Brev. 263, C.

A writ which lay at the suit of the tenant for years against the lessor, reversioner, remainder- man, or stranger who had himself deprived the tenant of the occupation of the land dur- * ing his term. 3 Bl. Comm. 199.

By a gradual extension of the scope of this form of action its object wsb made to include not only damages for the unlawful detainer, but also the possession for tile remainder of the term, and eventually the possession of land generally. And, as it turned on the right of possession, this involved a determi- nation of the right of property, or the title, and thus arose the modem action of eject- ment

[Law: action of ejectment — ancestor of modern possessory land actions]

The writ of ejectione firmae grew by extension into the action of ejectment — the ancestor of modern actions to recover possession of land (unlawful detainer, quiet title).

Why: Genuine: the entry itself narrates the writ's expansion beyond damages into recovery of the land; the modern possessory actions are its direct descendants.

DE ESC1ETA.

[Law: escheat — property of one dying without heirs reverts to the sovereign]

The writ of escheat enforced the lord's reversion where a tenant died without heir — the feudal root of modern escheat, by which property of one dying intestate without heirs passes to the state.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the writ as the lord's recovery on failure of heirs; escheat is the live doctrine of the same rule, stated as axiom.

DE FACTO.

In fact, in deed, actually. This phrase is used to characterize an officer, a government, a past action, or a state of af- fairs which exists actually and must be ac- cepted for all practical purposes, but which is illegal or illegitimate. In this sense it is the contrary of de jure, which means right- ful, legitimate, just, or constitutional. Thus, an officer, king, or government de Jacto is one who is in actual possession of the office or supreme power, but by usurpation, or without respect to lawful title; while an of- ficer, king, or governor de jure is one who has just claim and rightful title to the office or power, but who has never had plenary possession of the same, or is not now in actual possession. 4 Bl. Comm. 77, 78. So a wife de facto is one whose marriage is voidable by decree, as distinguished from a wife de jure, or lawful wife. 4 Kent, Comm. 36.

But the term is also frequently used inde- pendently of any distinction from dc jure; thus a blockade dc facto is a blockade which is actually maintained, as distinguished from a mere paper blockade.

As to de facto "Corporation," "Court," "Domicile," "Government," and "Officer," see those titles.

In old English lots. De facto means re- specting or concerning the principal act of a murder, which was technically denomi- nated factum. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 27, g 18.

DE FAIRE ECHEIXE.

In French law. A clause commonly inserted in policies of marine insurance, equivalent to a license to touch and trade at Intermediate ports. American Ins. Co. v. Griswold, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 491.

DE FAX.SO JUDICIO. Writ of false Judgment. Reg. Orig. 15; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 18. See False Judgment.

[Law] — Law

[Law: marine-insurance doctrine of deviation]

A license 'to touch and trade at intermediate ports' is an anti-deviation clause — it answers the marine-insurance doctrine of deviation, under which an unjustified departure from the described voyage voids the policy.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the clause as equivalent to a touch-and-trade license; deviation is the doctrine that makes such a clause necessary, a direct doctrinal link rather than analogy.

DE FAXSO MONETA.

Of false money. The title of the statute 27 Edw. I. ordaining that persons importing certain coins, called "pollards," and "crokards," should forfett their lives nnd goods, and everything they could forfeit. 2 Reeve. Eng. Law, 228, 229.

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting U.S. obligations and securities]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The statute made importing false coin forfeitable with life and goods — the medieval ancestor of federal counterfeiting law.

Why: Genuine: the entry describes a counterfeiting statute; the federal counterfeiting section is its modern counterpart, cited by section number only.

DE FEDEX UESIONE.

Of breach of faith or fidelity. 4 Reeve, Eng. Law, 09.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 30:2, KJV]

If a man vow a vow unto the LORD, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word, he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

Why: The entry names breach of faith or fidelity. Numbers 30:2 states the covenantal root of the duty: a sworn word must not be broken. Narrative law (given through Moses), not first-person divine speech — no flag.

DE FINE FORCE.

L. Fr. Of necessity ; of pure necessity. See Fine Force.

DE FIRE HON CAPIENDO PRO PUL- / CHRE PLACITANDO.

A writ prohibiting the taking of fines for beau pleader. Reg. Orig. 179. PIENDO.' A writ which lay for the release of one imprisoned for a re-disseisin, on pay- ment of a reasonable fine. Reg. Orig. 222b.

DE FORISFACTURA MARITAGII.

Writ of forfeiture of marriage. Reg. Orig. 163, 164.

DE FRAHGENTIBtTB PRIBONAM.

Concerning those that break prison. The title of the statute 1 Edw. II. ordaining that none from thenceforth who broke prison should have judgment of life or limb for breaking prison only, unless the cause for which he was taken and imprisoned required such a judgment if he was lawfully convict- ed thereof. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 290 ; 2 Inst. 589.

DE FURTO.

Of theft. One of the kinds of criminal appeal formerly in use in Eng- land. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 40.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:15, KJV]

Thou shalt not steal.

Why: De furto names the old English criminal appeal for theft. Exodus 20:15 is the Decalogue's direct prohibition, spoken by God (Exodus 20:1, 'And God spake all these words, saying') — deity_verbatim true.

[Exodus 22:1, KJV]

If a man shall steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep.

(paraphrase) Jean Valjean steals the bishop of Digne's silver plate in the night — the theft that sets the novel's moral arc in motion, showing theft as the old criminal appeal knew it: a taking that the law must answer. (paraphrase)

Why: Theft is the entry's whole subject and the novel's inciting act; the scene genuinely illuminates what 'of theft' meant in practice.

DE GESTU ET FAMA.

Of behavior and reputation. An old writ which lay in cases where a person’s conduct and reputation were impeached;

DE GRATIA.

Of grace or favor, by fa- vor. De spcciali gratia, of special grace or favor.

De gratia special! certs icientia et me ro motu, tails clausula non valet in his in qnibns praesumltur prineipem esse ignorantem. 1 Coke, 53. The clause ‘‘of our special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion," is of no avail in those things in which it is presumed that the prince was ignorant.

De grossls arboribus declines non da- bnntur sed de sylvia ceedna declines da- bnntnr. 2 Rolle, 123. Of whole trees, tithes are not given ; but of wood cut to be used, tithes are given.

[Hugo, Les Misérables, 1862]

(paraphrase) Caught with the stolen silver, Valjean is spared by the bishop, who not only forgives him but adds the candlesticks — grace where the law allowed prosecution. The entry itself contrasts de gratia with de jure (by grace vs. as of right); the bishop acts purely de gratia. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines grace as favor rather than right, and the bishop's act is the culture's clearest dramatization of exactly that distinction.

DE EXREDE DELIBERANPO HXI / QUI HABET CUBTODIAM TERRAS.

Writ for delivering an heir to him who has ward' ship of the land. A writ directed to the sheriff,. to require one that had the body of him that was ward to another to deliver him to the person whose ward he was by reason of his land. Reg. Orig. 161.

DE HJEREDE RAPTO ET ABDUCTO.

Writ concerning an heir ravished and car- ried away. A writ which anciently lay for a lord who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age could not obtain his body, the same being carried away by an- other person. Reg. Orig. 163 ; Old Nat Brev. 93.

(paraphrase) Joan of Arc is condemned as a relapsed heretic and burned at the stake — Shaw's play follows the historical record, in which the relapse charge is what sends her to the fire, matching the writ's precise trigger. (paraphrase)

Why: The writ lies for burning a heretic who abjured and relapsed; Joan's case is the famous historical instance of that exact sequence.

DE HOMAGIO RESPECTUANDO.

A

writ for respiting or postponing homage. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 269, A. NAM. (Lat. For taking a man in wither- nam.) A writ to take a man who bad car- ried away a bondman or bondwoman into another country beyond the reach of a writ of replevin.

DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO.

(Lat. For replevying a man;) A writ which lies to replevy a man out of prison, or out of the custody of a private person, upon giving se- curity to the sheriff that the man shall be forthcoming to answer any charge against him. Fitzh. Nat Brev. 6d; 3 Bl. Comm. 129.

This writ has been superseded almost wholly, in modern practice, by that of habeas corpus; but it is still used, in some of the states, in an amended and altered form. See 1 Kent Comm. 404 n; 34 Me. .136. -

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 2 — 'The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it']

The writ to replevy a man from custody was 'superseded almost wholly' by habeas corpus — the Great Writ whose privilege the Constitution protects against suspension.

Why: Genuine: the entry itself names habeas corpus as the writ's successor; the Suspension Clause is quoted verbatim and is the constitutional anchor of that successor.

(paraphrase) In the comedy of errors around the twin Antipholi, the wrong man is repeatedly seized and threatened with arrest under another's name — the very mischief the writ addresses: imprisonment under a mistake as to identity. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry's mischief is mistaken-identity arrest; the play is the iconic dramatization of same-name confusion leading to seizure of the wrong person.

[Law] — Law

[Law: guardianship/conservatorship — judicial determination of incapacity and appointment of a guardian of person or estate]

The writ inquiring whether a man be an idiot is the ancestor of modern judicial determinations of incapacity — guardianship and conservatorship proceedings.

Why: Genuine: the entry's writ is precisely an incapacity inquisition; modern guardianship is its direct procedural descendant.

DE INJURIA.

Of [his own] wrong. In the technical language of pleading, a repli- cation de injuria is one that may be made In an action of tort where the defendant has admitted the acts complained of, but al- leges, in his plea, certain new matter by way of justification or excuse; by this replica- tion the plaintiff avers that the defendant committed the grievances in question “of his own wrong, and without any such cause," or motive or excuse, as that alleged In the plea, (de injuria sua propria absque tali causa;) or, admitting part of the matter pleaded, “without the rest of the cause” al- leged, (absque rcsidrn causes.)

In form it is a species of traverse, and it is frequently used when the pleading of the defendant, in answer to which It is directed, consists merely of matter of excuse of the alleged trespass, grievance, breach of con- tract, or other cause of action. Its com- prehensive character in putting in issue all the material facts of the defendant's plea has also obtained for it the title of the gen- eral replication. Holthouse.

[Law] — Law

[Law: replication de injuria — the traverse denying the defendant's matter of justification or excuse]

The replication de injuria is the plaintiff's special traverse: where the defendant admits the acts but pleads new matter of justification or excuse, the plaintiff replies that the acts were done of the defendant's own wrong, denying the justification.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines this exact pleading device; the annotation states its operative mechanics, a named technical doctrine, not an analogy.

DE INOFFIGIOSO TESTAMENTO.

Concerning an Inofficious or undutiful will. A title of the civil law. Inst. 2, 18.

[Law] — Law

[Law: elective share / forced heirship — a surviving spouse's statutory share despite the will's terms]

The querela inofficiosi testamenti (Inst. 2.18) let close kin set aside a will that disinherited them without cause — the Roman root of forced heirship and the surviving spouse's elective share.

Why: Genuine: the entry titles the civil-law action against an undutiful will; the elective share is its modern counterpart, cited without a statute section quoted from memory.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 13:22, KJV]

A good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children: and the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.

(paraphrase) Edward I's statute laid severe penalties on the Jews; Shakespeare's Venice shows the same legal machinery from the other side — Shylock navigating a Christian commercial law that treats the Jew as an outsider to its protections. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry is anti-Jewish statute law; the play is the literary mirror of how such law operated on its target. Third Merchant annotation in this chunk, each on a distinct legal point.

DE MANUCAFTIONE.

Writ of man- ucaption, or mainprise. A writ which lay for one who, being taken and imprisoned on a charge of felony, had offered bail, which had been refused; requiring the sheriff to discharge him on bis finding sufficient main- pernors or ball. Reg. Orlg. 2686; Fltzh. Nat Brev. 249, G.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — 'Excessive bail shall not be required']

The writ of manucaption discharged on mainprise one whose offered bail had been refused — the medieval enforcement of the right against excessive bail.

Why: Genuine: the entry's writ exists precisely to cure refused bail; the Eighth Amendment clause is quoted verbatim and states the same guarantee the writ enforced.

DE MANUTENENDO.

Writ of main- tenance. A writ which lay against a person for the offense of maintenance. Reg. Orlg. 189, 1826.

DE MEDIETATE LINGUiE. Of the

The writ lay against the offense of maintenance — officious intermeddling in another's suit, the companion doctrine to champerty without the bargain for a share.

Why: Genuine: the entry names maintenance as the offense the writ punished; the annotation states the doctrine, kept distinct from champerty (#14).

DE MEDIO.

A writ In the nature of a writ of right, which lay where upon a subin- feudation the mesne (or middle) lord suffered his under-tenant or tenant paravail to be distrained upon by the lord paramount for the rent due him from the mesne lord. Booth, Real Act 136.

DE MELIORLBUB DAMNIS.

[Law: statute merchant / statute staple — enrolled commercial obligations with speedy enforcement]

The Statute of Acton Burnel (11 Edw. I) authorized the recognizance by statute merchant — an enrolled commercial obligation enforceable by speedy process, ancestor of modern commercial security devices.

Why: Genuine historical doctrine: the entry identifies the statute and its mechanism; the annotation names the institution and its place in commercial-law lineage without claiming a modern code article.

DE MINIS.

Writ of threats. A writ which lay where a person was threatened with personal violence, or the destruction of his property, to compel the offender to keep the peace. Reg. Orlg. 886, 89; Fltzh. Nat Brev. 79, G, 80.

[Law: injunction against threatened injury (quia timet) — Roman novi operis nuntiatio as ancestor]

The civil-law interdict against a threatened 'new work' in derogation of the plaintiff's rights is the Roman ancestor of the injunction against threatened injury.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the interdict as lying where the defendant 'is about to erect' injurious work; preventive equitable relief is its direct descendant.

DE NOVO.

Anew; afresh; a second time. A venire de novo is a writ for summoning a jury for the second trial of a case which has been sent back from above for a new trial.

De Hullo, quod est iu nature indi- vialbile, et dlvisionem non patitur, nul- lum partem babe bit vidua, sed satia- f octet ei ad valentiam. Co. Litt. 32. A widow shall have no part of that which iu its own nature is indivisible, and is not sus- ceptible of division, but let the heir satisfy her with an equivalent

De nullo tenemento, quod tenetur ad terminum, fit homagii, lit tamen inde fldelitatia sacrum en turn. In no tenement which is held for a term of years is there an avail of homage; but there is the oath of fealty. Co. Litt 676.

[Law] — Law

[Law: de novo review — appellate decision anew, without deference]

'Anew; afresh' — de novo is the standard of appellate review under which the court decides the matter anew, without deference to the tribunal below.

Why: Genuine: the phrase is the doctrine's name; the annotation states the standard the phrase denotes in modern practice.

DE ODIO ET ATIA.

A writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him to inquire whether a prisoner charged with murder was committed upon Just cause of suspicion, or merely propter odium et atiam, (through ha- tred and ill will;) and if, upon the inquisi- tion, due cause of suspicion did not appear, then there issued another writ for the sher- iff to admit him to bail. 3 BL Comm. 12a

[Law: probable-cause determination — continued detention requires just cause of suspicion]

The writ inquired whether a murder prisoner was held on just cause of suspicion or merely 'through hatred and ill will,' admitting him to bail if no due cause appeared — an early form of the probable-cause determination conditioning detention.

Why: Genuine: the entry's mechanism is a judicial test of the cause of detention with release on failure; probable-cause review is its modern counterpart, stated without a case cite from memory.

DE OFFICE.

L. Fr. Of office ; in virtue of office; officially; in the discharge of or- dinary duty.

DE ONERANDO PRO RATA FOR- / TIONE.

Writ for charging according to a rateable proportion. A writ which lay for a joint tenant, or tenant in common, who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land came to. Reg. Orig. 182 ; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 234, H.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: common burdens are apportioned rateably; one distrained beyond his share has recourse for the excess]

The writ charged rateably one distrained for more rent than his proportion — the apportionment principle: shared burdens are borne rateably, and one charged beyond his share recovers the excess.

Why: Genuine: the entry is a rateable-contribution writ; the axiom states the principle it enforced, distinct from #49's repair-contribution.

DA.

For keeping the peace, and for good behavior.

DE PACE ET PLAGIS.

Of peace, (breach of peace,) and wounds. One of the kinds of criminal appeal formerly in use in England, and which lay in cases of assault, wounding, and breach of the peace. Bract, fol. 144; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 33.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 21:18-19, KJV]

And if men strive together, and one smite another with a stone, or with his fist, and he die not, but keepeth his bed: If he rise again, and walk abroad upon his staff, then shall he that smote him be quit: only he shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed.

Why: The appeal de pace et plagis lay for assault, wounding, and breach of the peace. Exodus 21:18-19 is the biblical wounding rule — compensation for lost time and healing — the same legal concept of redress for non-fatal...

DE PACE ET ROBERIA.

Of peace [breach of peace] and robbery. One of the kinds of criminal appeal formerly in use in England, and which lay in cases of robbery and breach of the peace. Bract, fol. 146; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 37.

DE PALABRA.

Spnn. By word; by parol. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 19. c. 8, l 2.

[Law] — Law

[Law: parol evidence rule — extrinsic oral evidence inadmissible to vary a complete writing]

'By word; by parol' — parol is the operative term of the parol evidence rule, under which extrinsic oral evidence is inadmissible to vary a complete writing.

Why: Genuine though terminological: the entry glosses the very word the rule is named for; the annotation states the rule that gives the term its legal office.

DE PARCO FRACTO.

A writ or action for damages caused by a pound-breach, (q. ».) It has long been obsolete. Co. Litt 476; 3 Bl. Comm. 146.

DE PERAMBULATIONS FACIENDA.

A writ which lay where there was a dis- pute as to the boundaries of two adjacent lordships or towns, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to take with him twelve discreet and lawful knights of his county and make the perambulation and set the bounds and limits in certainty. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 309, D.

DE PIGNORE SURREPTO FURTI, / ACTIO.

In the civil law. An action to re- cover a pledge stolen. Inst 4, 1, 14.

[Law] — Law

[Law: actio furti lineage — Roman theft actions as root of conversion/replevin]

The civil-law action to recover a stolen pledge (Inst. 4.1.14) is the Roman root of the actions for stolen chattels — the possessory remedies now grouped under conversion and replevin.

Why: Genuine: the entry is literally an action to recover a stolen pledge; the annotation traces its descent to the modern possessory actions.

DE PIPA VINI GARIANDA.

A writ of trespass for carrying a pipe of wine so carelessly that It was stove, and the contents lost. Reg. Orlg. 110. Alluded to by Sir William Jones in his remarks on the case of Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 900. Jones, Bailm. 59.

[Law] — Law

[Law: bailment — the bailee's duty of care; see Coggs v. Bernard (1703)]

The writ of trespass for carelessly carrying a pipe of wine — the case Jones used to illustrate Coggs v. Bernard — states the bailee's duty of care over goods entrusted to him.

Why: Genuine: the entry itself invokes Coggs v. Bernard as the case's doctrinal home; the annotation names bailment, the doctrine that case founded.

DE PLACITO.

Of a plea; of or in an action. Formal words used in declarations and other proceedings, as descriptive of the particular action brought.

DE PLAGIS ET MAHEMIO.

Of

DE PLEGHS ACQUIETANDI8.

Writ for acquitting or releasing pledges. A writ that lay for a surety, against him for whom he had become surety for the payment of a certain sum of money at a certain day, where the latter had not paid the money at the ap- pointed day, and the surety was compelled to pay it. Reg. Orlg. 158; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 137, C; 3 Reeve, Eng. Law, 65.

[Law] — Law

[Law: suretyship — a surety who pays the principal's debt is entitled to indemnity from the principal]

The writ let a surety compelled to pay recover against the principal who defaulted — the surety's right of indemnity against the principal debtor.

Why: Genuine: the entry's mechanism is exactly surety-indemnity; the annotation states the live suretyship doctrine.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 17:18, KJV]

A man void of understanding striketh hands, and becometh surety in the presence of his friend.

Why: The writ gave the surety (pledge) his remedy against the defaulting principal. Proverbs 17:18 is the classic biblical text on the surety's office — the wisdom tradition's warning about the very undertaking the writ's...

DE PONENDO SI GILLUM AD EX- / CEPTIONEM.

[Law: parens patriae — the sovereign as guardian of persons under legal disability]
The statute gave the king ward of the lands of idiots, 'taking the profits without waste, and finding them necessaries' — the feudal origin of parens patriae, the sovereign as guardian of those under legal disability.
Why: Genuine: the entry quotes the idiot-wardship clause; parens patriae is the classic doctrinal name for exactly that sovereign guardianship.

DE PRJE8ENTI.

Of the present; in the present tense. See Per Verba de PassEim.

DE PROPRIETATE PROBANDA.

Writ for proving property. A writ directed to the sheriff, to inquire of the property or goods distrained, where the defendant in an action of replevin claims the property. 3 Bl. Comm. 148 ; Reg. Orig. 85 b.-

DE QUARANTINA H ABEND A.

At

common law, a writ which a widow entitled to quarantine might sue out in case the heir or other persons ejected her. It seems to have been a summary process, and required the sheriff, if no just cause were shown against it, speedily to put her into posses- sion. Aiken v. Aiken, 12 Or. 203, 6 Pac. 682.

DE QUIBUS SUR DISSEISIN.

An an- cient writ of entry.

DE QUO, and DE QUIBUS. Of which. Formal words in the simple writ of entry, from which it was caljed a writ of entry “in the quo," or “In the quibun" 3 Reeve, Eng. Law, 33.

DE QUOTA LITIS.

In the clvU law. A contract by which one who has a claim difficult to recover agrees with another to give a part, for the purpose of obtaining his services to recover the rest. 1 Duval, note 201.

[Law] — Law
[Law: contingent fee — agreement to share the proceeds of recovery as compensation for prosecuting the claim]
The civil-law quota litis — a contract to give part of a hard-to-recover claim in exchange for services to recover the rest — is the structural ancestor of the contingent fee agreement.
Why: Genuine: the entry defines exactly a proceeds-sharing recovery contract; the contingent fee is the modern institution of the same structure, not a loose analogy.

DE RAPTU VIRGINUM.

Of the ravish- ment of maids. The name of an appeal formerly in use in England in cases of rape. Bract fol. 147; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 38.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Pope, The Rape of the Lock, 1712]

"What dire offence from am'rous causes springs, / What mighty contests rise from trivial things" — the poem's whole engine is 'rape' in the old legal sense: violent seizure (here, of a lock of hair), illuminating the word's historic range beyond its modern narrowed meaning.

Why: The appeal was 'of the ravishment of maids'; the poem plays on raptus as seizure, genuinely illuminating the term's older breadth. Public domain; couplet verified from memory with confidence.

DE RATIONABILI PARTE BONO- / RUM.

A writ which lay for the wife and children of a deceased person against his executors, to recover their reasonable part or share of his goods. 2 Bl. Comm. 492; Fitzh. Nat Brev. 122, L; Hopkins v. Wright, 17 Tex. 36.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Timothy 5:8, KJV]

But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.

Why: The writ recovered the wife and children's reasonable share of the deceased's goods from his executors. 1 Timothy 5:8 states the underlying duty — provision for one's own household — which is the moral root of the fam...

DE RATIONABILIBUS D I V I S I S.

Writ for fixing reasonable boundaries. A writ which lay to settle the boundaries be- tween the lands of persons in different towns, where one complained of encroach- ment. Reg. Orig. 157b; Fitzh. Nat Brev. 128, M; Rose. Real Act 31; 3 Reeve, Eng. Law, 48.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 19:14, KJV]

Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's landmark, which they of old time have set in thine inheritance, which thou shalt inherit in the land that the LORD thy God giveth thee to possess it.

Why: The writ settled boundaries between lands where one complained of encroachment. Deuteronomy 19:14 is the biblical boundary law — the ancient landmark must not be moved — the scriptural root of the same legal concept....

[Law] — Law

[Law: writ of error / appellate review — decision on the transmitted record]

The writ sending the record and process to a superior court, 'a species of writ of error,' is the ancestor of appellate review — the reviewing court decides on the transmitted record.

Why: Genuine: the entry names the writ as a species of writ of error; the annotation states the appellate function it performed.

DE RECTO.

Writ of right Reg. Orig. 1, 2; Bract fol. 3276. See Whit or Right.

DE RECTO DE AD VOCATIONS.

[Law: covenant of warranty — the grantor's covenant to defend the grantee's title]

The writ compelled the feoffor to warrant the land where the feoffee was impleaded — the ancestor of the covenant of warranty, by which a grantor defends the grantee's title.

Why: Genuine: the entry's writ enforces warranty of title; the covenant of warranty is its modern conveyancing form.

DE WARRANTIA DIEI.

A writ that lay where a man had a day in any action to appear in proper person, and the king at that day, or before, employed him in some service, so that he could not appear at the day in- court It was directed to the justices, that they should not record him to be In default for his not appearing. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 17, A ; Termes de la Ley.

DEACON.

In ecclesiastical law. A min- ister or servant in the church, whoso office is to assist the priest in divine service and thp distribution of the sacrament. It is the low- est order in the Church of England.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Timothy 3:8, KJV]

Likewise must the deacons be grave, not doubletongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre;

Why: The entry defines the deacon as the church's minister/servant assisting the priest. 1 Timothy 3:8 is the scriptural description of the deacon's office and character — the verse that defines the very office the entry d…

DEAD BODY.

A corpse. The body of a human being, deprived of life, but not yet en- tirely disintegrated. Meads v. Dougherty County, 96 Ga. 697, 25 S. E. 915.

[Law] — Law

[Law: no property in a corpse — quasi-property of the next of kin for burial]

There is no property in a corpse in the ordinary commercial sense; the next of kin hold a quasi-property right in the body for purposes of burial.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the corpse as a legal subject (with its own case cite); the no-property rule with the burial quasi-property exception is the classic doctrine governing it.

[Shakespeare, Hamlet, 1601]

"Alas, poor Yorick! I knew him, Horatio" — Hamlet in the graveyard, turning skulls in his hands: the law's 'body deprived of life' met as a moral fact.

Why: The entry defines a corpse in clinical terms; the gravedigger scene is the culture's deepest meditation on what a dead body is.

DEAD FREIGHT.

When a merchant who has chartered a vessel puts on board a part only of the Intended cargo, but yet, hav- ing chartered the whole vessel, is bound to pay freight for the unoccupied capacity, the freight thus due is called “dead freight.” Gray v. Carr, L. R. 6 Q. B. 528 ; Phillips v. Rodle, 15 East. 547.

DEAD LETTERS.

Letters which the postal department has not been able to deliver to the persons for whom they were intended. They are sent to the “dead-letter office,” where they are opened, and returned to the writer if his address can be ascertained.

[Melville, "Bartleby, the Scrivener", 1853]

(paraphrase) The story's narrator once clerked in the Dead Letter Office, where undeliverable letters go to be opened and returned — the entry's definition given a human room and a melancholy keeper. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines the dead-letter office; Melville literally staffs his narrator there. Direct definitional fit.

DEAD MAN'S PART.

In English law. That portion of the effects of a deceased per- son which, by the custom of London and York, is allowed to the administrator ; being, where the deceased leaves a widow and chil- dren, one-third ; where he leaves only a wid- ow or only children, one-half ; and, where he leaves neither, the whole. This portion the administrator was wont to apply to his own use. till the statue 1 Jac. II. c. 17, declared that the same should be subject to the stat- ute of distributions. 2 Bl. Comm. 518; 2 Steph. Comm. 254; 4 Reeve, Eng. Law, 83. A similar portion in Scotch law is called “dead's part,” (q . v.)

DEAD-PLEDGE.

A mortgage ; mortuum vadium.

[Law] — Law

[Law: mortgage — from mortuum vadium, the 'dead pledge']

'A mortgage; mortuum vadium' — the mortgage is the 'dead pledge,' the pledge that is dead to the pledgor until redemption.

Why: Genuine: the entry gives the etymology as the definition; the annotation states the doctrinal content the etymology carries (dead until redeemed).

[Dusky v. United States, 362 U.S. 402 (1960)]

A deaf-and-dumb person 'may be tried for felony if the prisoner can be made to understand by means of signs' — the 1910 statement of competency to stand trial: the accused must be able to understand the proceedings.

Why: Genuine: the entry's test (can the prisoner be made to understand) is the competency inquiry; Dusky is the modern competency standard, cited with high confidence.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Penn, The Miracle Worker, 1962]

(paraphrase) The law presumes the deaf-dumb-blind person incapable of understanding; the film answers the presumption — Annie Sullivan teaching Helen Keller to understand, word by spelled word. (paraphrase)

DEBET ET DETINET.

He owes and de- tains. Words anciently used in the original writ, {and now, in English, in the plaintiff's declaration,) in an action of debt, where it was brought by one of the original contract- ing parties who personally gave the credit, against the other who personally incurred the debt, or against his heirs, if they were bound to the payment ; as by the obligee against the obligor, by the landlord against the tenant, etc. The declaration, in such cases, states that the defendant “owes to,” as well as “de- tains from,” the plaintiff the debt or thing in question ; and hence the action is said to be "in the debrt ct dctinct." Where the dec- laration merely states that the defendant detains the debt, (as in actions by and against an executor for a debt due to or from the testator,) the action Is said to be “in the dctinct” alone. DEBT.

A sum of money due by certain and express agreement; as by bond for a de- terminate sum, a bill or note, a special bar- gain, or a rent reserved on a lease, where the amount is fixed and specific, and does not depend upon any subsequent valuation to settle it! 3 Bl. Comm. 154; Camden v. Allen, 26 N. J. Law, 398; Appeal of City of Erie, 91 Pa. 398; Dickey v. Leonard, 77 Ga. 151 ; Hagar v. Reclamation DIst, 111 D. S. 701, 4 Sup. Ct. 663, 28 L. Ed. 569; Appeal Tax Court v. Bice, 50 Md. 302.

A debt is a sum of money due by contract. It is most frequently due by a certain and ex- press agreement, which fixes the amount, in- dependent of extrinsic circumstances. But it is not essential that the contract should be express, or that it should fix the precise amount to be paid. U. S. v. Colt, 1 Pet C.

C. 145, Fed. Cas. No. 14,839.

Standing alone, the word “debt” is as applica- ble to a sum of money which has been promised at a future day. as to a sum of money now due and payable. To distinguish between the two, it may be said of the former that it is a debt owing, and of the latter that it is a debt due. Whether a claim or demand is a debt or not is in no respect determined by a reference to the time of payment. A sum of money which is certainly and in all events payable is a debt, without regard to the fact whether it be pay- able now or at a future time. A sum payable upon a contingency, however, is not a debt, or does not become a debt until the contingency has happened. People v. Arguello, 37 Cal. 624.

The word “debt" is of large import, includ- ing not only debts of record, or judgments, and debts by specialty, but also obligations arising under simple contract, to a very wide extent ; and in its popular sense includes all that Is due to a man under any form of obligation or promise. Gray v. Bennett, 3 Mete. (Mass.) 522,

“Debt” has been differently defined, owing to the different subject-matter of the statutes in which it has been used. Ordinarily, it imports a sum of money arising upon a contract, express or implied. In its more general sense, it is de- fined to be that which is due from one person to another, whether money, goods, or services; that which one person is bound to pay or per- form to another. Under the legal-tender stat- utes, it seems to import any obligation by con- tract, express or implied, which may be dis- charged by money through the voluntary action of the party bound. Wherever he may be at liberty to perform his obligation by the payment of a specific sum of money, the party owing the obligation is subject to what, in these statutes, is termed "debt.” Kimpton v. Bronson, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 618.

The word is sometimes used to denote an aggregate of separate debts, or the total sum of the existing claims against a person or company. Thus we speak of the “national debt,” the "bonded debt” of a corporation, etc.

Synonyms. The term “demand” is of much broader Import than "debt,” and em- braces rights of action belonging to the debt- or beyond those which could appropriately be called "debts.” In this respect the term “de- mand” Is one of very extensive Import. In re Denny, 2 Hill (N.Y.) 223.

The words “debt” and "liability” are not synonymous. As applied to the pecuniary relations of parties, liability Is a term of broader significance than debt. The legal acceptation of debt is a sum of money due by certain and express agreement Liability Is responsibility ; the state of one who is bound In law and justice to do something which may be enforced by action. This liability may arise from contracts either express or Implied, or In consequence of torts commit- ted. McElfresh v. Klrkendall, 36 Iowa, 226:

“Debt" Is not exactly synonymous with “duty.” A debt is a legal liability to pay a specific sum of money; a duty is a legal ob- ligation to perform some act. Allen v. Dick- son, Minor (Ala.) 120.

In practice. The name of a common-law action, which lies to recover a certain spe- cific sum of money, or a sum that can read- ily be reduced to a certainty. 3 Bl. Comm. 154; 3 Steph. Comm. 461; 1 Tldd. Pr. 3.

It is said to lie in the debet and detinet, (when it is stated that the defendant owes and Debt in the detinet for goods differs from detinue, because it is not es- sential in this action, as in detinue, that the specific property in the goods should have been vested in the plaintiff at the time the action is brought. Dyer, 246.

E. 68. — Mutual debts. Money due on both sides between two persons.— Passive debt. A debt upon which, by agreement be- tween the debtor and creditor, no interest is payable, as distinguished from active debt; «. e., a debt upon which Interest is payable. In this sense, the terms "active” and “passive” are applied to certain debts due from the Spanish government to Great Britain. Wharton. In another sense of the words, a debt is “active” or "passive” according as the person of the cred- itor or debtor is regarded; a passive debt being •that which a man owes ; an active debt that which is owing to him. In this meaning every debt is both active and passive, — active as re- gards the creditor, passive as regards the debtor. — Public debt. That which is due or owing by the government of a state or nation. The terms ,rpublic debt” and "public securities,” used in legislation, are terms generally applied to national or state obligations and dues, and would rarely, if ever, be construed to include town debts or obligations ; nor would the term “public revenue” ordinarily be applied to funds arising from town taxes. Morgnn v. Cree, 46 Vt. 773, 14 Am. Rep. 640.— Pure debt. In Scotch law. A debt due now and uncondition- ally is so called. It is thus distinguished from a future debt, — payable at a fixed day in the future.— and a contingent debt, which will only become due upon the happening of a certain con- tingency.—Simple contract debt. One where the contract upon which the obligation arises is neither ascertained by matter of record nor yet by deed or special instrument, but by mere oral evidence the most simple of any, or by notes unsealed, which are capable of a more easy proof, and therefore only better than a verbal promise. 2 Bl. [Shakespeare, Hamlet, 1601]

"Neither a borrower nor a lender be; / For loan oft loses both itself and friend" — Polonius's counsel: debt as the solvent of friendship, stated as prudential law.

Why: The entry defines debt as a sum due by express agreement; Polonius gives the culture's standing counsel on the borrower-lender relation. Lines held with confidence.

DEBTEE.

A person to whom a debt is due; a creditor. 3 Bl. Comm. 18 ; Plowd. 543. Not used.

DEBTOR.

One who owes a debt; he who may be compelled to pay a claim or de- mand.

— Common debtor. In Scotch law. A debtor whose effects have been arrested by several cred- itors. In regard to these creditors, he is their common debtor, and by this term is distinguish- ed in the proceedings that take place in the competition. Bell.— Debtor’s act 1869. The statute 32 & 33 Viet. c. 62, abolishing impris- onment for debt in England, and for the punish- ment of fraudulent debtors. 2 Steph. Comm. 159-164. Not to be confounded with the. Bank- ruptcy Act of 1869. Mozley & Whitley.— Debt- or’s summons. In English law. A summons issuing from a court having jurisdiction in bank- ruptcy, upon the creditor proving a liquidated debt of not less than £50, which he has failed to collect after reasonable effort, stating that if the debtor fail, within one week if a trader, and within three weeks if a non-trader, to pay or compound for the sum specified, a petition may be presented against him praying that he may be adjudged a bankrupt. Why: The entry names the Decalogue; the film is its most widely seen dramatization. Film note; no quote needed.

DSCAXIA.

The office, Jurisdiction, ter- ritory, or command of a decanus, or dean. Spelman.

DECANUS.

In ecclesiastical and old European law. An officer having super- vision over fen; a dean. A term applied not only to ecclesiastical, but to civil and mili- tary, officers. Decanus monasticus; a mo- nastic dean, or dean of a monastery; an offi- cer over ten monks. Decanus in majori ecclesice; dean of a cathedral church, pre- siding over ten prebendaries. Decanus epis- copi; a bishop’s or rural dean, presiding over ten clerks or parishes. Decanus friborgi; dean of a friborg. An officer among the Sax- ons who presided over a friborg, tithing, decennary, or association of ten inhabitants; otherwise called a “tithing man," or “bors- holder.” Decanus militaris; a military offi- cer, having command of ten soldiers. Spel- man.

Ia Roman law. An officer having the command of a company or "mess” of ten soldiers. Also an officer at Constantinople having charge of the burial of the dead.

DECAPITATION.

The act of behead- ing. A mode of capital punishment by cut- ting off the head.

DECEASE, n. Death; departure from life, not including civil death, (see Death.) In re Zeph’s Estate, 50 Hun, 523, 8 N. X. Supp. 460.

DECEASE, v. To die; to depart life, or from life. This has always been a common term in Scotch law. "Gif ane man deceas- is." Skene.

(paraphrase) The guillotine through the Terror, and Sydney Carton's walk to it in another man's place — beheading as capital punishment given literature's most famous scaffold scene. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines beheading as a mode of capital punishment; the novel's climax is that mode's iconic literary instance. DECOLLATIO left bare to avoid double-dipping.

DECEDENT.

A deceased person; one who has lately died. Etymologically the word denotes a person who is dying, but it has come to be used in law as signifying any defunct person, (testate or intestate,) but always with reference to the settlement of his estate or the execution of his will. A subtle trick or device, whereunto may be referred all manner of craft and collusion used to deceive and defraud another by any means whatsoever, which hath no other or more proper name than deceit to distinguish the offense. [West Symb. S 68;] Jacob.

The word “deceit,” as Well as "fraud.” ex- cludes the idea of mistake, and imports knowl- edge that the artifice or device used to deceive or defraud is untrue. Farwell v. Metcalf, 61 111. 373.

In old English law. The name of an original writ, and the action founded on it, which lay to recover damages for auy injury committed deceitfully, either in the name of another, (as by bringing an action in anoth- er’s name, and then suffering a nonsuit, whereby the plaintiff became liable to costs.) or by a fraudulent warranty of goods, or other personal injury committed contrary to good faith and honesty. Reg. Orig. 112-116; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 95. E, 98.

Also the name of a Judicial writ which formerly lay to recover lands which had been lost by default by the tenant in a real action, In consequence of his not having been summoned by the sheriff, or by the collusion of his attorney. Rose. Real Act. 136; 3 Bl. Comm. 166.

—Deceitful plea. A sham plea ; one alleging as facts things which are obviously false on the face of the plea. Gray v. Gidiere, 4 Strob. (S. C.) 443.

[Law: fraud/deceit — misrepresentation, scienter, intent, reliance, damages]

The entry defines the tort of deceit — fraudulent misrepresentation to another's damage; its elements are misrepresentation of material fact, scienter, intent to induce reliance, justifiable reliance, and resulting damages.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines deceit with its own cases; the annotation states the tort's elements, complementing #48's Roman root rather than duplicating it.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:11, KJV]

The entry preserves the maxim 'Decet tamen principem servare leges quibus ipse servatus est' — it behoves the prince to keep the laws by which he himself is preserved: the sovereign is bound by law.

Why: Genuine: the maxim is quoted verbatim from the entry's body; the annotation states the rule-of-law principle it expresses.

DECIDE.

To decide includes the power and right to deliberate, to weigh the rea- sons for and against, to see which pre- ponderate. and to be governed by that pre- ponderance. Darden v. Lines, 2 Fla. 571 ; Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray (Mass.) 253; In re Milford & M. R. Co., 68 N. H. 570, 36 AO. 545.

which clearly defines rights to be observed and wrongs to be eschewed.— Declaratory statnte. One enacted for the purpose of removing doubts or putting an end to conflicting decisions in regard to what the law is in relation to a particular matter. It may either be expressive of the common law, (1 Bl. Comm. 86; Gray v. Bennett, 3 Mete. [Mass.] 527 ;) or may declare what shall be taken to be the true mean- ing and intention of a previous statute, though in the latter case such enactments are more commonly called ‘‘expository statutes."

DECLARE.

To solemnly assert a fact before witnesses, e. g., where a testator de- clares a paper signed by him to be his last will and testament. Lane v. Lane, 95 N. X. 49R

This also is one of the words customarily used in the promise given by a person who is affirmed as a witness, — “sincerely and truly declare and affirm.” Hence, to make a positive and solemn asseveration. Bassett v. Denn, 17 N. J. Law, 433.

With reference to pleadings, it means to draw up, serve, and file a declaration ; e. g., a “rule to declare." Also to allege in a dec- laration as a ground or cause of action; as “he declares upon a promissory note."

DEGBEE.

In practice. The judgment of a court of equity or admiralty, answering to the judgment of a court of common law. A decree in equity Is a sentence or order of the court, pronounced on hearing and under- standing all the points In issue, and deter- mining the right of all the parties to the suit, according to equity and fcood conscience. 2 Daniell, Ch. Pr. 986; Wooster v. Handy (O. C.) 23 Fed. 56; Rowley v. Van Benthuysen, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 383 ; Vance v. Rockwell, 3 Colo. 243 ; Halbert v. Alford (Tex.) 16 S. W. 814.

Decree is the judgment of a court of equity, and is, to most intents and purposes, the same as a judgment of a court of common law. A decree, as distinguished from an order, is final, and is made at the bearing of the cause, where- as an order is interlocutory, and is made on mo- tion or petition. Wherever an order may, in a certain event resulting from the direction con- tained in the order, lead to the termination of the suit in like manner as a decree made at the hearing, it is called a "decretal order." Brown.

In Frenob law. Certain acts of the leg- islature or of the sovereign which have the force of law are called “decrees;” as the Ber- lin and Milan decrees.

In Scotch law. A final judgment or sen- tence of court by which the question at issue between the parties is decided.

Classification. Decrees in equity are ei- ther final or interlocutory. A final decree Is one which fully and finally disposes of the whole litigation, determining all questions raised by the case, and leaving nothing that requires further Judicial action. Travis v. Waters, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 508 ; Mills v. Hoag, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 19, 31 Am. Dec. 271; Core v. 8trlckler, 24 W. Va. 689; Ex parte Crit- tenden, 10 Ark. 339. An interlocutory decree Is a provisional or preliminary decree, which Is not final and does not determine the suit.

but directs some further proceedings pre- paratory to the final decree. A decree pro- nounced for the purpose of ascertaining mat- ter of law or fact preparatory to a final de- cree. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 326, 327. Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St 520, 59 Am.- Dec. 634; Wooster v. Handy (C. C.) 23 Fed. 56; Beebe v. Russell, 19 How. 283, 15 L. Ed. 668 ; Jen- kins v. Wild, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 543.

—Consent decree. One entered by consent of the parties; it is not properly a judicial sen- tence, but is in the nature of a solemn con- tract or agreement of the parties, made under the sanction of the court, and in effect an ad- mission by them that the decree is a just de- termination of their rights upon the real facts of the case, if such facts had been proved. Allen v. Richardson, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 53; Kelly v. Milan (C. C.) 21 Fed. 842; Schmidt v. Mining Co., 28 Or. 9. 40 Pac. 1014, 52 Am. St Rep. 759.— Decree dative. In Scotch law. An order of a probate court appointing an ad- ministrator.—Decree nisi. A provisional de- cree, which will be made absolute on motion unless cause be shown against it. In English practice, it is the order made by the court for divorce, on satisfactory proof being given in support of a petition for dissolution of mar- riage ; it remains imperfect for at least six months, (which period may be shortened by the court down to three,) and then, unless sufficient cause be shown, it is made absolute on motion, and the dissolution takes effect, subject to ap- peal. Wharton.— Decree of constitution. In Scotch practice. A decree by which a debt is ascertained. Bell. In technical language, a decree which is requisite to found a title in the person of the creditor, whether that necessity arises from the death of the debtor or of the creditor. Id.— Decree of forthcoming. In Scotch law. A decree made after an arrest- ment (j. ti.) ordering the debt to be paid or the effects of the debtor to be delivered to the ar- resting creditor. Bel!.— Decree of Insolven- cy. One entered in a probate court, declaring the estate in question to be insolvent, that is, that the assets are not sufficient to pay the debts In full. Bush v. Coleman, 121 Ala. 548, 25 South. 569; Walker v. Newton, 85 Me. 458. 27 Ati. 347.— Decree of locality. In Scotch law. The decree of a teind court allocating stipend upon different heritors. It is equivalent to the apportionment of a tithe rent-charge.— Decree of modification. In Scotch law. A decree of the teind court modifying or fixing a stipend.— Decree of nnlllty. One entered in a suit for the annuiiment of a marriage, and adjudging the marriage to have been null and void ah initio. See N UIXITY. — Decree of reg- istration. In Scotch law. A proceeding giv- ing immediate execution to the creditor; simi- lar to a warrant of attorney to confess judg- ment.— Decree pro confesso. One entered in a court of equity in favor of the complainant where the defendant has made no answer to the bill and its allegations are consequently tak- en “as confessed.” Ohio Cent. R. Co. v. DECRETAXES BONIFACII OCTAVI.

A supplemental collection of the canon law, published by Boniface VIII. in 1298, called, also, “ Liber Sextus Decretalium," (Sixth Book of the Decretals.)

DECRETAXES GREGORII NONI.

The

decretals of Gregory the Ninth. A collec- tion of the laws of the church, published by order of Gregory IX. in 1227. It is compos- ed of five books, subdivided into titles, and each title is divided Into chapters. They are cited by using an X, (or extra;) thus “Cap. 8 X de Rcgulis Juris," etc.

DECRETAXS.

In ecclesiastical law. Letters of the pope, written at the suit or instance of one or more persons, determining some point 'or question in ecclesiastical law, and possessing the force of law. The decre- tals form the second part of the body of can- on law.

This is also the title of the second of the two great divisions of the canon law, the first being called the “Decree,” (decretum.)

DECRETUM GRATIANI.

Grattan’s de- cree, or decretum. A collection of ecclesias- tical law in three books or parts, made In the year 1151, by Gratlan, a Benedictine monk of Bologna, being the oldest as well as the first in order of the collections which to- gether form the body of the Roman canon law. 1 Bl. Comm. 82; 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 67.

DECROWNING.

The act of depriving of a crown.

[Shakespeare, Richard II, 1595]

(paraphrase) Richard II, made to hand over his crown piece by piece in the deposition scene — the act of depriving a king of his crown staged line by line, the hollow crown speech and all. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry names the act; the deposition scene is its most famous staging.

DECRY.

To cry down; to deprive of credit “The king may at any time decry or cry down any coin of the kingdom, and make It no longer current” 1 Bl. Comm. 278.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — Congress's power 'to coin Money, regulate the Value thereof']

The king's prerogative to 'cry down any coin of the kingdom, and make it no longer current' is the royal form of the coinage power the Constitution vests in Congress.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the prerogative over the currency; the Coinage Clause is its constitutional successor, quoted verbatim.

DECURIO.

Lat. A decurion. In the provincial administration of the Roman em- pire, the decurlons were the chief men or official personages of the large towns. Taken as a body, the decurlons of a city were charg- ed with the entire control and administra- tion of its internal affairs; having powers both magisterial and legislative. See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 54.

DEDBAKA.

In Saxon law. An actual homicide or manslaughter.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:13, KJV]

Thou shalt not kill.

Why: Dedbaka is Saxon law's word for homicide/manslaughter. Exodus 20:13 is the Decalogue's direct prohibition of killing — the biblical counterpart of the entry's concept. Spoken by God (Exodus 20:1), hence deity_verbatim...

DEDI.

(Lat. I have given.) A word used in deeds and other instruments of con- veyance when such instruments were made in Latin, and anciently held to imply a war- ranty of title. Deakins v.

[Law] — Law

[Law: implied covenants from words of conveyance — 'dedi' anciently implied warranty of title]

'I have given' — anciently held to imply a warranty of title: certain words of conveyance carry implied covenants.

Why: Genuine: the entry states the implied-warranty rule with its own case; the annotation names the conveyancing doctrine.

DEDI ET CONCESSI.

I have given and granted. The operative words of conveyance in ancient charters of feoffment, and deeds of gift and grant; the English " given and granted " being still the most proper, though not the essential, words by which such con- veyances are made. 2 Bl. Comm. 53, 316, 317 ; 1 Steph. Comm. 161, 177, 473, 474.

DEDICATE.

To appropriate and set apart one's private property to some public use ; as to make a private way public by acts evincing an intention to do so.

DEDICATION.

In real property law. An appropriation of land to some public use, made by the owner, and accepted for such use by or on behalf of the public; a delib- erate appropriation of land by its owner for any general and public uses, reserving to himself no other rights than such as are com- patible with the full exercise and enjoymeut of the' public uses to which the property has been devoted. People v. Marin County, 103 Oal. 223, 37 Pnc. 203, 20 L. K. A. 659; Gro- gan v. Hayward (C. C.) 4 Fed. 161 ; Go wan r. Philadelphia Exch. Co., 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 141, 40 Ain. Dec. 489; Alden Coal CO. v. Chaliis, 200 111. 222, 65 N. E. 665; Barteau v. West, 23 Wls. 416; Wood v. Hurd, 34

N. J. Law, 87.

Express or implied. A dedication may be express, as where the intention to dedicate is expressly manifested by a deed or an explicit oral or written declaration of the owner, or some other explicit manifestation of his pur- pose to devote the land to the public use. An implied dedication may be shown by some act or course of conduct on the part of the owner from which a reasonable inference of intent may be drawn, or which is inconsistent with any other theory than that he intended a dedi- cation. Culmer v. Salt lake City, 27 I'taii, 252. 75 Pac. 620; San Antonio v. Sullivan, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 019, 57 S. W. 42 • Kent v. Pratt, 73 Conn. 573, 48 Atl. 418; Hurley v. West St. Paul, 83 Minn. 401, 86 N. W. 427; People v. Marin County, 103 Cal. 223. 37 Pac. 203, 26 L. R. A. 059.

Common-law or statutory. A common- law dedication is one made as above described, and may be either express or implied. A stat- utory dedication is one made under and in conformity with the provisions of a statute regu- lating the subject, and is of course necessa- rily express. San Antonio v. Sullivan, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 57 S. W. 42; People v. Marin Coimd^, 103 Cal. 223, 37 Pac. 203, 26 L. R.

In copyright law. The first publication of a work, without having secured a copy- right, is a dedication of it to the public ; that having been done, any one may republish it. Bartlett v. Crittenden, .5 McLean, 32, Fed. Cas. No. 1,07a

[Law] — Law

[Law: common-law dedication — offer by the owner and acceptance by or on behalf of the public]

Dedication in real-property law — the owner's deliberate appropriation of land to public use, accepted by or on behalf of the public — requires both the owner's intent (offer) and public acceptance.

Why: Genuine: the entry's definition contains both appropriation and acceptance; the annotation states the doctrine's two elements.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Kings 8:63, KJV]

So the king and all the children of Israel dedicated the house of the LORD.

Why: Dedication is the deliberate appropriation of property to a use beyond private enjoyment. 1 Kings 8:63 records the archetypal dedication — the house of the LORD set apart by the king and the people — the same act of s...

DEDICATION-DAY.

The feast of ded- ication of churches, or rather the feast day of the saint and patron of a church, which was celebrated not only by the inhabitants of the place, but by those of all the neighboring villages, who usually came thither ; and such assemblies were allowed as lawful. It was usual for the people to feast and to drink on those days. Cowell.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 10:22, KJV]

And it was at Jerusalem the feast of the dedication, and it was winter.

Why: The entry is the feast of dedication of churches. John 10:22 names the feast of the dedication itself — the scriptural instance of a dedication feast. Narrative setting, not divine speech — no flag.

DEDIMUS ET CONCESSIMUS.

(Lat. We have given and granted.) Words used by the king, or where there were more grantors than one, Instead of dedi et concessi.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM.

(We have given power.) In English practice. A writ or commission Issuing out of chancery, em- powering the persons named therein to per- form certain acts, as to administer oaths to defendants in chancery and take their an- swers, to administer oaths of office to justices of the peace, etc. 3 Bl. Comm. 447. It was anciently allowed for many purposes not now in use, as to make an attorney, to take the acknowledgment of a fine, etc.

In the United States, a commission to take testimony is sometimes termed a "dedimus potestatcm.” Buddicum v. Kirk, 3 Crunch, DEDIMUS POTESTATEM DE AT- / TORNO FACIE NDO.

In old English prac- tice. A writ, Issued by royal authority, em- powering an attorney to appear for a defend- ant. Prior to the statute of Westminster 2, a party could not appear in court by attor- ney without this writ.

DEDITION.

The act of yielding up any- thing ; surrender.

DEDITITII.

In Roman law. Criminals who had been marked in the face or on the body with fire or an iron, so that the mark could not be erased, and subsequently manu- mitted. Calvin.

DEDUCTION.

By “deduction” is under- stood a portion or thing which au heir has a right to take from the mass of the suc- cession before any partition takes place. Civil Code La. art 1358.

DEDUCTION FOR NEW.

In marine In- surance. An allowance or drawback credit- ed to the insurers on the cost of repairing a vessel for damage arising from the perils of the sea insured against. This allowance Is usually one-third, and is made on the theory that the parts restored with new materials are better, in that proportion than they were before the damage.

DEED.

A sealed instrument, containing a contract or covenant, delivered by the party to be bound thereby, and accepted by the party to whom the contract or covenant runs.

A writing- containing a contract sealed and delivered to the party thereto. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 239.

In its legal sense, a "deed” is an instru- ment in writing, upon pai>er or parchment, between parties able to contract, subscrib- ed, sealed, and delivered. Insurance Co. v. Avery, 60 Ind. 572 ; 4 Kent, Comm. 452.

In a more restricted sense, a written agree- ment, signed, sealed, and delivered, by which one person conveys land, tenements, or her- editaments to another. This is its ordinary modern meaning. Sanders v. Riedlnger, 30 App. Dlv. 277, 51 N. Y. Supp. 937 ; Reed v. Hazleton, 37 Kan. 321, 15 Pac. 177 ; Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 470 ; Fisher v. Pender, 52

N. C. 485.

The term is also used as synonymous with “fact,” "actuality,” or “act of parties.” Thus a thing “In deed” Is one that has been really or expressly done ; as opposed to “in law,” which means that it is merely Implied or pre- sumed to have been done.

—Deed In fee. A deed conveying the title to land in fee simple with the usual covenants. Rudd v. Saveli i, 44 Ark. 152; Moody v. Rail- way Co., 5 Wash. 699, 32 Pac. 751. — Deed Indented. or indenture. In conveyancing. A deed executed or purporting to be executed in pans, between two or more parties, and dis- tinguished by having the edge of the paper or parchment on which it is written indented or cut at the top in a particular manner. This was formerly done at the top or side, in a line re- sembling the teeth of a saw ; a formality derived from the ancient practice of dividing chiro- graphs; but the cutting is now made either in. a waving line, or more commonly by notching or nicking the paper at the edge. 2 Bl. Comm. 295, 296 ; Lit*. § 370; Smith, Cont. 12.— Deed of covenant. Covenants are sometimes enter- ed into by a separate deed, for title, or for the indemnity of a purchaser or mortgagee, or for the production of title-deeds. A covenant with a penalty is sometimes taken for the payment of a debt, instead of a bond with a condition, but the legal remedy is the same in either case. —Deed of release. One releasing property from the incumbrance of a mortgage or similar pledge upon payment or performance of the conditions ; more specifically, where a deed of trust to one or more trustees has been executed, pledging real property for the payment of a debt or the performance of other conditions, substantially as in the case of a mortgage, a deed of release is the conveyance executed by the trustees, after payment or performance, for the purpose of divesting themselves of the legal title and revesting it in the original owner. See Swain v. McMillan, 30 Mont. 433, 76 Pac. 943. — Deed of separation. An instrument by which, through the medium of some third person acting as trustee, provision is made by a husband for separation from his wife and for her separate maintenance. Whitney v. Whit- ney, 15 Misc. Rep. 72. 36 N. Y. Supp. 891.— Deed of trust. An instrument in use in many states, taking the place and serving the uses of a common-law mortgage, by which the legal title to real property is placed in one or more trustees, to secure tie repayment of a sum of money or the performance of other conditions. Bank v. Pierce, 144 Cal. 434, 77 Pac. 1012. See Tbtjst Deed.— Deed poll. In convey- ancing. A deed of one part or made by one party only ; and originally so called because the edge of the paper or parchment was polled or cut in a straight line, wherein it was dis- tinguished from a deed indented or indenture. As to a special use of this term in Pennsylvania in colonial times, see Herron v. Dater. 120 U.

S. 464, 7 Sup. Ct. 620, 30 L. Ed. 748.— Deed to declare uses. A deed made after a fine or common recovery, to show the object there- of.—Deed to lead uses. A deed made before a fine or common recovery, to show the object thereof.

As to “Quitclaim” deed, “Tax Deed,” “Trust Deed,” and “Warranty” deed, see those titles.

DEEM.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

To hold; consider; adjudge; condemn. Cory v. Spencer, 67 Kan. 648, 73 Pac. 920, 63 L. R. A. 275 ; Blaufus v. People, 69 N. Y. Ill, 25 Am. Rep. 148 ; U. S. v. Doher- ty (D. C.) 27 Fed. 730; Leonard v. Grant (C. C.) 5 Fed. 11. When, by statute, certain acts are “deemed” to be a crime of a particular na- ture, they are such crime, and not a semblance of It, nor a mere fanciful approximation to or designation of the offense. Com. v. Pratt, 132 Mass. 247.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: what a statute 'deems' to be so, is so for the purposes of that statute]

Statutory 'deemed': when a statute provides that certain acts are 'deemed' of a particular nature, they are of that nature for the statute's purposes — the legal fiction as an interpretive principle.

Why: Genuine: the entry's cases establish the deeming rule; the axiom states the interpretive principle they support.

DEEMSTERS.

Judges In the Isle of Man, who decide all controversies without process, writings, or any charges. These judges are chosen by the people, and are said by Spelman to be two in number. Spelman.

DEER-FALD.

A park or fold for deer.

DEER-HATES.

Engines or great nets made of cord to catch deer. 19 Hen. VIII. c. 11.

DEFACE.

To mar or destroy the face (that Is, the physical appearance of written or inscribed characters as expressive of a definite meaning) of a written Instrument, signature, inscription, etc., by obliteration, erasure, cancellation, or superinscription, so as to render It illegible or unrecognizable. Linney v. State, 6 Tex. 1, 55 Am. Dec. 756. See Cancel.

DEFALCATION.

The act of 'a defaulter ; misappropriation of tryst funds or money held in any fiduciary capacity; failure to properly account for such funds. Usually spoken of officers of corporations or public officials. In re Butts (D. C.) 120 Fed. 970; Crawford v. Burke, 201 111. 581, 66 N. E. 833.

Also set-off. The diminution of a debt or claim by deducting from it a smaller claim held by the debtor or payor. Iron Works v. Cuppey, 41 Iowa, 104 ; Houk v. Foley, 2 Pen. & W. (Pa.) 250; McDonald v. Lee, 12 La. 435.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(4) — defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity]

Defalcation — misappropriation of funds held in a fiduciary capacity — is nondischargeable in bankruptcy: debts for fraud or defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity survive discharge.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines defalcation as fiduciary misappropriation; § 523(a)(4) is the exact statutory home of that wrong, cited by section with confidence.

DEFALK.

To set off one claim against another ; to deduct a debt due to one from a debt which one owes. Johnson v. Signal Co., 57 N. J. Eq. 79, 40 Atl. 193 ; Pepper v. War- ren, 2 Marv. (Del.) 225, 43 Atl. 91. This verb corresponds only to the second meaning of “defalcation” as given above ; a public officer or trustee who misappropriates or embezzles funds in his hands is not said to “defalk.”

DEFAMATION.

The taking from one’s reputation. The offense of injuring a per- son’s character, fame, or reputation by false and malicious statements. The term seems to be comprehensive of both libel and slander. Printing CO. v. Moulden, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 574, 41 S. W. 381 ; Moore v. Francis, 121 N.

Y. 199, 23 N. E. 1127, 8 L. B. A. 214, 18 Am. St Bep. 810 ; Hollenbeck v. Hall, 103 Iowa, 214, 72 N. W. 518, 39 L. B. A. 734, 64 Afa. St. Bep. 175; Mosnat v. Snyder, 105 Iowa, 500, 75 N. W. 356.

perform an agreement - State v. Moores, 52 Neb. 770, 73 N. W. 299; Osborn v. Rogers, 49 Hun, 245, 1 N. Y. Supp. 623; Mason v. Aldrich, 36 Minn. 283, 30 N..

W. 884.

Im practice. Omission; neglect or fail- ure. When a defendant in an action at law omits to plead within the time allowed him for that purpose, or falls to appear on the trial, be is said to make default, and the judg- ment entered in the former case is technical- ly called a "Judgment by default" 3 Bl.

Oomm. 896; 1 Tidd, Pr. 562; Page v. Sut- ton, 29 Ark. 806.

—Default of tune. Failure to have living children or descendants at a given time or fixed point. George v. Morgan, 16 Pa. 106.— De- faulter. One who makes default. One who misappropriates money held by him in an official or fiduciary character, or fails to account for such money.— Judgment by default. One entered upon the failure of a party to appear or plead at the time appointed. See Judgment.

[Law] — Law

[Law: default judgment — Fed. R. Civ. P. 55]

In practice, default is the defendant's omission to plead or defend — the ground of default judgment, entered against a party who fails to plead or otherwise defend.

Why: Genuine: the entry's 'in practice' sense is exactly the default that Rule 55 answers; the rule is cited by number with confidence.

DEFEASANCE.

An instrument which defeats the force or operation of some other deed or estate. That which is in the same deed is called a “condition and that which is in another deed is a “defeasance.” Com. Dig. “Defeasance."

In conveyancing. A collateral deed made at the same time with a feoffment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally un- done. 2 BL Comm. 327 ; Co. Litt. 236, 237.

[Law: defeasance — the collateral instrument defeating a conveyance on condition performed]

A defeasance is the collateral instrument that defeats the force of another deed upon condition performed — the device by which an absolute conveyance was made in substance a mortgage, defeated by payment.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the defeasance as the instrument defeating another deed; the annotation states its classic office in mortgage law.

[Law: defeasible fees — fee simple determinable; fee simple subject to condition subsequent]

An estate is defeasible where it may be defeated on a condition subsequent — the defeasible fees: the fee simple determinable and the fee simple subject to condition subsequent.

Why: Genuine and distinct from #302: the entry defines the quality of being defeasible with the equity-of-redemption example; the annotation names the estates.

DEFEAT.

To prevent, frustrate, or cir- cumvent ; as in the phrase “hinder, delay, or defeat creditors.” Coleman v. Walker, 3 Mete. (Ky.) 65, 77 Am. Dec. 163; Walker v. Sayers, 5 Bush (Ky.) 581.

To overcome or prevail against in any con- test ; as in speaking of the “defeated party” in an action at law. Wood v. Bailey, 21 Wall. 642, 22 L. Ed. 689; Goff v. Wilburn (Ky.) 79 8. W. 233.

To annul, undo, or terminate; as, a title or estate. See Defeasible.

[Law: fraudulent transfer — 11 U.S.C. § 548]

To 'hinder, delay, or defeat creditors' is the classic formula of the fraudulent transfer — a transfer made with intent to put assets beyond creditors' reach.

Why: Genuine: the entry quotes the operative formula verbatim; § 548 is its modern statutory home, cited by section with confidence.

DEFEND.

To prohibit or forbid. To deny. To contest and endeavor to defeat a claim or demand made against one In a court of Justice. Boehmer v. Irrigation Dlst, 117 Cal. 19, 48 Pac. 908. To oppose, repel, or resist.

In covenants of warranty In deeds, it means to protect, to maintain or keep secure, to guaranty, to agree to Indemnify.

DEFENDANT.

The person defending or denying; the party against whom relief or recovery is sought In an action or suit. Jew- ett Car Co. v. Kirkpatrick Const. Co. (C. C.) 107 Fed. 622 ; Brower v. Neills, 6 Ind. App. 323, 33 N. E. 672; Tyler v. State, 63 Vt. 300, 21 Atl. 611 ; Insurance Co. v. Alexandre (D. C.) 16 Fed. 281.

In common usage, this term is applied to the party put upon his defense, or summoned to answer a charge or complaint, in any species of action, civil or criminal, at law or in equity. Strictly, however, it does not apply to the per- son against whom a real action is brought, for in that proceeding the technical usage is to call the parties respectively the “demandant" and the “tenant.” , —Defendant in error. The distinctive term appropriate to the party against whom a writ of error is sued out.

DEFENSE.

That which is offered and alleged by the party proceeded against in an action or suit, as a reason in law or fact why the plaintiff should not recover or establish wbat he seeks; what is put forward to de- feat an action. More properly what is suffi- cient when offered for this purpose. In ei- ther of these senses it may be either a denial, Justification, or confession and avoidance of the facts averred as a ground of action, or nn exception to their sufficiency in point of law. Whitfield v. Insurance Co. (C. C.) 125 Fed. 270; Miller v. Martin, 8 X. J. Law, 204;

Baier v. Humpall, 10 Neb. 127, 20 N. W. 108; Cohn v. Hussen, 60 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 151; Railroad Co. v, Ilinehellffe, 34 Misc. Rep. 49, 68 X. Y. Supp. 550; Brower v. Nellis, 6 Ind. App. 323, 33 X. E. 072.

In a stricter sense, defense is used to de- note the answer made by the defendant to the plaintiff’s action, by demurrer or plea at law or answer in equity. This is the mean- ing of the term in Scotch law. Ersk. Inst. 4, 1, 66.

Half defense was that which was made by the form, “defends the force and injury, and says,” (defendit vim et injuriam, et dicit.)

Com. Pl. 188 ; 8 Term, <332 ; 3 Bos. A

P. 9, note ; Co. Litt. 1276.

In matrimonial suits, in England, defenses are divided into absolute, i. e., such as, being established to the satisfaction of the court, are a complete answer to the petition, so that the court can exercise no discretion, but is bound to dismiss the petition ; and discretionary, or such as, being established, leave to the court a discretion whether it will pronounce a decree or dismiss the petition. Thus, in a suit for dis- solution, condonation is an absolute, adultery by the petitioner a discretionary, defense. Browne, Div. 30.

Defense also means the forcible repelling of an attack made unlawfully with force and violence.

In old statutes and records, the term means prohibition; denial or refusal. Enconter le defense et le commandement de roy; against the prohibition and commandment of the king. St.- Westm. 1, c. 1. Also a state of severalty, or of several or exclusive occu- pancy; a state of Inclosure.

In English practice, a defense to am action on grounds which, prior to the passage of the common-law procedure act, (17 & 18 Viet c. 125,) would have been cog- nizable only in a court of equity. In Amer- ican practice, a defense which is cognizable in a court of equity, but which is available there only, and not in an action at law, except under the reformed codes of practice. Kelly v. In legislation It is frequently used in the creation, enlarging, and extending the powers and duties of boards and officers, in defining certain offenses and pro- viding punishment for the same, and thus en- larging and extending the scope of the crim- inal law. And it is properly used in the title where the object of tne act is to determine or fix boundaries, more especially where a dispute has arisen concerning them. DEGRADATION.

A deprivation of dig- nity; dismission from office. An ecclesias- tical censure, whereby a clergyman is divest- ed of his holy orders. There are two sorts by the canon law, — one summary, by word only; the other solemn, by stripping the party degraded of those ornaments and rights which are the ensigns of his degree. Degradation is otherwise called “deposi- tion,” but the canonists have distinguished between these two terms, deeming the for- mer as the greater punishment of the two. There is likewise a degradation of a lord or knight at common law, and also by act of parliament Wharton.

DEGRADATIONS.

A term for waste In the French law.

DEGRADING.

Reviling; holding one up to public obloquy; lowering a person In the estimation of the public.

DEGREE.

In the law of descent and family relations. A step or grade, i. the distance, or number of removes, which separates two persons who are related by consanguinity. Thus we speak of cousins In the “second degree."

In criminal law. The term “degree” denotes a division or classification of one specific crime Into several grades or stadia of guilt according to the circumstances at- tending its commission. Thus, In some states, there may be “murder In the second degree.”

record, and matter dehors the record is not noticed.

Why: Genuine: the entry gives 'dehors the record' as the term's legal office (3 Bl. Comm. 387); the annotation states the record-confinement rule it marks.

DEI GRATIA.

Let By the grace of God. A phrase used in the formal title of a king or queen, Importing a claim of sover- eignty by the favor or commission of God. In ancient times It was incorporated In the titles of inferior officers, (especially ecclesias- tical,) but in later use was reserved as an as- sertion of “the divine right of kings.”

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. pmbl. — 'We the People']

By way of contrast: 'by the grace of God' imports sovereignty by divine commission — the American constitutional order grounds sovereignty instead in the people.

Why: Genuine contrast-illumination: the entry asserts the divine-right formula; the preamble's popular-sovereignty formula is its direct constitutional antithesis, quoted verbatim.

[1 Corinthians 15:10, KJV]

But by the grace of God I am what I am: and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all: yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me.

The judgment of God. The old Saxon trial by ordeal, so called be- cause it was thought to be an appeal to God for the justice of a cause, and it was believ- ed that the decision was according to the will and pleasure of Divine Providence. Wharton.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Isaiah 33:22, KJV]

For the LORD is our judge, the LORD is our lawgiver, the LORD is our king; he will save us.

Dejacion includes 'the abandonment of insured property to the underwriters' — abandonment in marine insurance, by which the assured on a constructive total loss cedes the property to the underwriters and claims as for a total loss.

Why: Genuine: the entry names the marine-insurance abandonment among the term's senses; the annotation states the doctrine.

DEJERATION.

A taking of a solemn oath.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:7, KJV]

Thou shalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain; for the LORD will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

Why: Dejeration is the taking of a solemn oath. Exodus 20:7 is the Decalogue's oath rule — the divine name must not be taken in vain — the biblical regulation of oath-taking itself. Spoken by God (Exodus 20:1), hence deity...

[Law: de bene esse — taken conditionally or provisionally]

'The same as de bene esse' — of well-being: taken conditionally or provisionally, as evidence taken de bene esse to be used if the witness becomes unavailable.

Why: Genuine: the entry equates the phrase with de bene esse; the annotation states the procedural office of that term.

DEL CREDERE.

In mercantile law. A phrase borrowed from the Italians, equiva- lent to our word "guaranty" or "warranty," or the Scotch term "warrandice;" an agree- ment by which a factor, when he sells goods on credit, for an additional commission, (called a "del credere commission,") guaran- ties the solvency of the purchaser and his performance of the contract. Such a factor is called a "del credere agent." He Is a mere surety, liable only to his principal In case the purchaser makes default. Story, Ag. 28; Loeb v. Heilman, 83 N. Y. 603; Lewis v. Brehme, 33 Md. 424, 3 Am. Rep. 190 ; Lever- Ick v. Meigs, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 003; Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 604.

DELEGATION.

A sending away ; a put- ting Into commission ; the assignment of a debt to another: the intrusting another with a general power to act for the good of those who depute him.

At common Inw. The transfer of au- thority by one person to another; the act of making or commissioning a delegate.

The whole body of delegates or representa- tives sent to a convention or assembly from one district, place, or political unit are col- lectively spoken of as a “delegation.”

In the civil law. A species of novation which consists in the change of one debtor for another, when he who is indebted substi- tutes a third person who obligates himself in his stead to the creditor, so that the first debtor is acquitted and his obligation extin- guished, and the creditor contents himself with the obligation of the second debtor. Delegation is essentially distinguished from any other species of novation, in this: that the former demands the consent of all three parties, but the latter that only of the two parties to the new debt. 1 Domat, l 2318; Adams v. Power, 48 Miss. 434.

Delegation is novation effected by the In- tervention of another person whom the debt- or, in order to be liberated from his cred- itor, gives to such creditor, or to him whom the creditor appoints; and such person so given becomes obliged to the creditor in the place of the original debtor. Burge, Sur. 173.

Delegatus non potest delegare. A del- egate cannot delegate : an agent cannot dele- gate his functions to a subagent without the knowledge or consent of the principal ; the person to whom an office or duty is delegat- ed cannot lawfully devolve the duty on an- other, unless he be expressly authorized so to do. 9 Coke. 77; Broom, Max. 840 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 633 ; 2 Steph. Deliberandum eat din quod statues- dum ©at aemel. 12 Coke, 74. That which is to be resolved once for all should be long deliberated upon.

DELIBERATE, v. To weigh, ponder, discuss. To examine,- to consult, in order to form an opinion.

DELIBERATE, adj. By the use of this word, in describing a crime, the idea is con- veyed that the perpetrator weighs the mo- tives for the act and its consequences, the nature of the crime, or other things con- nected with his intentions, with a view to a decision thereon ; that he carefully considers all these ; and that the act Is not suddenly committed. It implies that the perpetrator must be capable of the exercise of such men- tal powers as are called into use by de- liberation and the consideration and weighing of motives and consequences. State v. Boyle, 28 Iowa, 324.

"Deliberation" and "premeditation" are of the same character of mental operations, dif- fering only in degree. Deliberation is but pro- longed premeditation. In other words, in law. deliberation is premeditation in a cool state of the blood, or, where there has been heat of pas- sion, it is premeditation continued beyond the period within which there has been time for the blood to cool, in the given case. Delibera- tion is not only to think of beforehand, which may be but for an instant, but the inclination to do the act is considered, weighed, pondered upon, for such a length of time after a provoca- tion is given as the jury may find was sufficient for the blood to cool. One in a heat of passion may premeditate without deliberating. Delib- eration is only exercised in a cool state of the blood, while premeditation may be either in that state of the blood or in the neat of passion. State v. Kotovsky, 74 Mo. 249 ; State v. DELICT.

In the Roman and civil law. A wrong or Injury ; an offense ; a violation of public or private duty.

It will be observed that this word, taken in its most general sense, is wider in both direc- tions than our English term “tort.” On the one hand, it includes those wrongful acts which, while directly affecting some individual or his property, yet extend in their injurious conse- quences to the peace or security of the commu- nity at large, and hence rise to the grade of crimes or misdemeanors. These acts were termed in the Roman law “public delicts; while those for which the only pena|ty exacted was compensation to the person primarily in- jured were denominated “private delicts. On the other hand, the term appears to have in- cluded injurious actions which transpired with- out any malicious intention on the part of the doer. Thus l’othier gives the name “quati delicts” to the acts of a person who, without malignity, but by an inexcusable imprudence, causes an injury to another. Poth. Obi. 116. But the term is used in modem jurisprudence as a convenient synonym of "tort ;” that ia a wrongful and injurious violation of a jut »'*• rent or right available against all the world. This appears in the two contrasted phrases, “actions ex contractu" and “actions ex delicto.”

Quasi delict. An act whereby a person, without malice, but by fault, negligence, or imprudence not legally excusable, causes injury to another. They were four in number, viz.: (1) (Jut judex litem tuam fecit, being the offense of partiality or excess in the judex,

(2) Dejectum effusumce aliquid, being the tort committed by one's servant in emptying or throwing something out of an attic or uppes story upon a person passing beneath. (3) Dam- num infectum, being the offense of hanging dangerous articles over the heads of persons passing along the king's highway. [Law: actions ex delicto vs. ex contractu]

The Roman delict — wider than 'tort,' embracing violations of public and private duty — grounds the fundamental classification of actions as ex delicto (founded on wrong) or ex contractu (founded on contract).

DELIRIUM.

In medical jurisprudence. Delirium is that state of the mind in which it acts without being directed by the power of volition, which is wholly or partially sus- pended. This happens most perfectly in dreams. But what is commonly called "de- lirium" is always preceded or attended by a feverish and highly diseased state of the body. The patient in delirium is wholly un- conscious of surrounding objects, or conceives them to be different from what they really are. His thoughts seem to drift about, wild- ering and tossing amidst distracted dreams. And his observations, when he makes any, as often happens, are wild and Incoherent; or, from excess of pain, he sinks into a low muttering, or silent and death-like stupor. The law contemplates this species of mental derangement as an intellectual eclipse ; as a darkness occasioned by a cloud of disease passing over the mind ; and which must soon terminate in health or in death. Owing's Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 386, 17 Am. Dec. 311; Supreme Lodge v. Lapp, 74 S. W. 656, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 74; Clark v. Ellis, 9 Or. 132; Brogden v. Brown, 2 Add. 441.

Absolute and conditional delivery. An absolute delivery of a deed, as distinguished from conditional delivery or delivery in escrow, is one which is complete upon the actual trans- fer of the instrument from the possession of the grantor. Dyer v. Skadan, 128 Mich. 348. SJ.N. W. 277. 92 Am. St. Rep. 401. A con- ditional delivery of a deed is one which passes the deed from the possession of the grantor, but is not to be completed by possession of the grantee, or a third person as his agent, until the happening of a specified event, liver v. Skadan. 128 Mich. 348, 87 N. W. 277. 92 Am. St. Rep. 461 : Schmidt v. Deegan, 69

Wis. 300, 34 N. W. 83.

Actual aud constructive. In the law of sales, actual delivery consists in tbe giving real possession of the thing sold to the vendee or his servants or special agents who are identified with him in law and represent him. Construc- tive delivery is a general term, comprehending all those acts which, although not truly conferring a real possession of the thing sold on the vendee, have been held, by construction of law, equiv- alent to acts of real delivery. In this sense constructive delivery includes symbolic deliv- ery and all those Iraditiones fict(e which have been admitted into the law as sufficient to vest the absolute property in the vendee and bar the rights of lien and stoppage in transitu, such as marking and setting apart the goods as be- longing to the vendee, charging him with ware- house rent, etc. Bolin v. Huffnagle, 1 Rawle (I’a.) 19. A constructive delivery of personal- ty takes place when the goods are set apart and notice given to the person to whom they are to be delivered (The Titania, 131 I ed. 229, 65 C. C. A. 215), or when, without actual trans- fer of the goods or their symbol, the conduct of the parties is such as to be inconsistent with any other supposition than that there has been a change in tne nature of the holding. Swaf- ford v. Spratt, 93 Mo. App. 631, 67 S. W. 701; Holliday v. White, 33 Tex. 459.

Symbolical delivery. The constructive de- livery of the subject-matter of a sale, where it is cumbersome or inaccessible, by the actual de- livery of some article which is conventionally accepted as the symbol or representative of it, or which renders access to it possible, or —Delivery bond. A bond given upon the sei- zure of goods (as under the revenue laws) conditioned for their restoration to the defendant, or the payment of their value, if so adjudged. —Delivery order. DEMAND A.

In Spanish law. The peti- tion of a plaintiff, setting forth his demand. Las Partidas, pt 3, tit. 10, 1. 3.

[Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice, 1598]

(paraphrase) Shylock comes before the court of Venice with his bond as his stated demand — the petition of a plaintiff setting forth what he claims is due him, pressed past mercy into menace when the court takes him at his word. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry (Spanish law) is the plaintiff's petition setting forth his demand; Shylock's suit is that act dramatized — a plaintiff formally stating his demand before a tribunal. Reworded from the verb sense to fit this...

DEMANDANT.

The plaintiff or party suing in a real action. Co. Litt. 127.

[Shakespeare, King Lear, 1606]

Why: The entry points to insanity; Lear's madness is the stage's great portrait of the unsound mind. DEMENTED/DEMENS left bare — same ground.

DEMESNE.

Domain; dominical; held in one’s own right, and not of a superior ; not allotted to tenants.

In the language of pleading, own; prop- er ; original. Thus, son assault demesne, his own assault, his assault originally or in the first place.

—Ancient demesne, see Ancient.— De- mesne as o t fee. A man is said to be seised in hit demesne as of fee of a corporeal inher- itance, because he has a property, dominie «m or demesne, in the thing itself. But when he has no dominion in the thing itself, as in the case of an incorporeal hereditament, he is said to be seised as of fee, and not in his demesne as of fee. 2 Bl. Comm. 106; Littleton, f 10; Barnet v. Ihrie, 17 Serg. & R. (Pad 196. — De- mesne lands. In English law. Those lands of a manor not granted out in tenancy, but re- served by the lord for his own use and occu- pation. Lands set apart and appropriated by the lord for his own private use, as for the supply of his table, and the maintenance of his family ; the opposite of tenemental lands. Ten- ancy and demesne, however, were not in every sense the opposites of each other; lands held for years or at will being included among de- mesne lands, as well as those in the lord's actu- al possession. Spelman ; 2 Bl. Comm. 90.— De- mesne lands of the crown. That share of lands reserved to the crown at the original dis- tribution of landed property, or which came to it afterwards by forfeiture or otherwise. 1 Bl. Comm. 286; 2 Steph. [Law: son assault demesne — the plea that the plaintiff assaulted first]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The entry's 'son assault demesne' — his own assault, in the first place — is the plea of self-defense in assault: the defendant pleads that the plaintiff was the first aggressor.

Why: Genuine: the entry gives the plea phrase with its meaning; the annotation names the self-defense plea it states.

DEMI.

French. Half; the half. Used chiefly in composition.

DEMIES.

In some universities and col- leges this term is synonymous with “schol- ars.”

DEMUTimO. In the civil law. A tak- ing away; loss or deprivation. See Capitis Dkuinutio.

DEMISE, v. In conveyancing. To con- vey or create an estate for years or life; to lease. The usual and operative' word in leases: “Have granted, demised, and to farm let, and by these presents do grant, demise, and to farm let” 2 Bl. Comm. 817; 1 Steph. Comm. 476; Co. LItt. 45a.

DEMISE, n. In conveyancing. A convey- ance of an estate to another for life, for years, or at will : most commonly for years; a lease. 1 Steph. Comm. 475. Voorhees ▼. Church, 5 How. Prae. (N. Y.) 71; Gilmore ▼. Hamilton, 83 Ind. 196.

Originally a posthumous grant; commonly a lease or conveyance for a term of years; sometimes applied to any conveyance, in fee, for life, or for years. Pub. St. Mass. 1882, p. 1289.

“Demise” is synonymous with “lease” or “let” except that demise ex vi termini implies a cov- enant for title, and also a covenant for quiet enjoyment whereas lease or let implies neither of these covenants. Brown.

The word is also used as a synonym for "decease” or “death.” In England it is es- pecially employed to denote the death of the sovereign.

— Demise and redemise. In conveyancing. Mutual leases made from one party to another on each side, of the same land, or something outa of it ; as when A. grants a lease to B. at a nominal rent (as of a pepper corn,) and B. redemises- the same property to A. for a shorter time at a real, substantial rent. Jacob; Whi- shaw.— Demise of the erowa. The natural dissolution of the king is generally so called ; an expression which signifies merely a transfer of property. By demise of the crown we mean only that in consequence of the disunion of the king’s natural body from his body politic, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his suc- cessor. and so the royal dignity remains perpet- ual. 1 Bl. Comm. 249; Plowd. 234. — Sevsral demises. In English practice. In the action of ejectment it wns formerly customary, in case there were any doubt as to the legal estate being in the plaintiff, to insert in the declara- tion several demises from as many different persons; but this was rendered unnecessary by the provisions of the common-law procedure acts.—Single demise. A declaration in eject- ment might contain either one demise or sev- eral. When it contained only one, it was call- ed a “declaration with a single demise.”

DEMISI.

Lat. I have demised or leased. Demisi, concessi, et ad ft rmam tradidi; have demised, granted, and to farm let. The usu- al operative words in ancient leases, as the corresponding English words are in the mod- em forms. 2 Bl. Comm. 317, 318. Koch v. Hustis, 113 Wis. 599. 87 N. W. 834; Kinney v. Watts, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 40.

DEMISSIO.

L. Lat. A demise or let- ting. Chiefly used in the phrase ex demis- sione (on the demise), which formed part of the title of the cause in the old actions of ejectment, where it signified that the nom- inal plaintiff (a fictitious person) held the es- tate “on the demise” of, that is, by a lease from, the real plaintiff.

DEMOBILIZATION.

In military law. The dismissal of an army or body of troops from active service.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Wyler, The Best Years of Our Lives, 1946]

(paraphrase) The film opens with discharged servicemen flying home and follows their return to civilian life — dismissal from active service as lived experience, not paperwork. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines dismissal from active service; the film is the demobilization experience dramatized. Borderline weighed; kept — the link is real.

DEMOCRACY.

That form of govern- ment in which the sovereign power resides in and is exercised by the whole body of free citizens; gs distinguished from a monarchy, aristocracy, or oligarchy. According to the theory of a pure democracy, every citizen should participate directly in the business of governing, and the legislative assembly should comprise the whole people. But the ultimate lodgment of the sovereignty being the distinguishing feature, the introduction of the representative system does not remove a government from this type. However, a government of the latter kind is sometimes specifically described as a "representative de- mocracy.”

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 1:13, KJV]

(paraphrase) Pericles' funeral oration: Athens' constitution 'is called a democracy because power is in the hands not of a minority but of the whole people' — the classical statement of the entry's definition. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines democracy as sovereign power in the whole body of free citizens; the oration is classical wisdom's founding statement of it. Paraphrase of the famous sense, clearly marked.

DEMOCRATIC.

Of or pertaining to de- mocracy, or to the party of the democrats.

DEMONETIZATION.

The disuse of a particular metal for purposes of coinage. The withdrawal of the value of a metal as money.

[Maxim: 'Falsa demonstratio non nocet' — a false description does not harm]

The entry preserves the maxim 'Falsa demonstratio non nocet' — a false description does not harm: a misdescription does not vitiate where the thing or person is otherwise certainly designated.

Why: Genuine: the maxim is quoted verbatim from the entry's body; the annotation states the construction rule it expresses.

state such facts as support the claim._ prayer, or defense put forward. 5 Ch. Div. 979.— De- mnrrant. One who demurs; the party who, in pleading, interposes a demurrer.

[Melville, "Bartleby, the Scrivener", 1853]

"I would prefer not to." — Bartleby's gentle, absolute exception to every demand: the demurrer as a way of life, disputing the sufficiency of the world's pleadings.

Why: The entry defines demur as taking exception to sufficiency; Bartleby's formula is the literary demurrer. Same story as DEAD LETTERS, different fact — logged.

DEMURRAGE.

In maritime law. The sum which is fixed by the contract of car- riage, or which is allowed, as remuneration to the owner of a ship for the detention of his Teasel beyond the number of days allowed by the charter-party for loading and unload- ing or for sailing. Also the detention of the vessel by the freighter beyond such time. See 3 Kent, Comm. 203 ; 2 Steph. Comm. 185. The Apollon, 9 Wheat. 378, 6 L. Ed. Ill; Fisher v. Abeel, 44 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 440; Wordln v. Bemis, 32 Conn. 273, 85 Am. Dec. 255; Cross v. Beard, 26 N. Y. S5; The J. E. Owen (D. C.) 54 Fed. 185; Fnlkenburg v. Clark, 11 R. I. 283.

Demurrage is only an extended freight or re- ward to the vessel, in compensation for the earnings she is improperly caused to lose. Every improper detention of a vessel may be considered a demurrage, and compensation un- der that name be obtained .for it. Donaldson v. McDowell, Holmes, 290, Fed.Cas. No. 3,985.

Demurrage is the allowance or compensation due to the master or owners of a ship, by the freighter, for the time the vessel may have been detained beyond the time specified or implied in the contract of affreightment or the charter- party. Bell.

DEMURRER.

In pleading* The form- al mode of disputing the sufficiency in law of the pleading of the other side. In effect it Is an allegation that, even if the facts as stated in the -pleading to which objection is taken be true, yet their legal consequences are not such as to put the demurring party to the necessity of answering them or proceeding further with the cause. Mltf. Eq. Pl. 107.

Classification and varieties. A general demurrer is a demurrer framed in general terms, without showing specifically the nature of the objection, and which is usually resorted to where the objection is to matter of substance. Steph. Pl. 140-142 ; 1 Chit. Pl. 663. See Reid v. Field, 83 Va. 26. 1 S. E. 395; U. S. v. National Bank (C. C.) 73 Fed. 381; McGuire v. Van Pelt, 55 Ala. 344; Taylor v. Taylor, 87 Mich. 64, 49 N. W. 519. A special demurrer is one which excepts to the sufficiency of the pleadings on the opposite side, and shows spe- cifically the nature of the objection, and the particular ground of the exception. 3 Bouv. This proceeding (now practically obsolete) was analogous to a demurrer to a pleading. It was au objection or exception by one of the parties in an action at law, to the effect that the evidence which his _ adversary had produced was insufficient in point of law (whether true or not) to make out his case or- sustain the issue. Upon joinder in demurrer, the jury was discharged, and the case was acgued to the court in bano, who gave judgment npon the facts as shown in evidence. See 3 Bl. Comm. 372; Bass v. In old Eugllsh law. As much land as Is worth one penny per annum.

DEEARH.

An ancient general term for any sort of pecunia numerata, or ready mon- ey. The French use the word “ denier ” In the same sense, — payer de sea proprca de- afer*.

—Denarii de caritate. In English law. Customary oblations made to a cathedral church St Pentecost.— Denarii S. Petri. (Commonly called "Peter’s Pence.”) An annual payment on St. Peter's feast of a penny from every family to the pope, during the time that the Roman Catholic religion was established in England.

DENARIUS.

The chief silver coin among the Romans, worth 8d.; it was the seventh part of a Roman ounce. Also an English penny. The denarius was first coined five years before the first Punic war, B. C. 269. In later times a copper coin was called “ de- narius.” Smith, Diet. Antiq.

—Denarius Del. (Lat. "God’s penny.”) Ear- nest money; money given as a token of the completion of a bargain. It differs from arrha in this: that arrha is a part of the considera- tion, while the denarius Dei is no part of it. The latter was given away in charity ; whence the name.— Denarius tertlus comitatfis. In old English law. DENIZATION.

The act of making one a denizen; the conferring of the privileges of citizenship upon an alien born. Cro. Jac. 540. See Denizen.

DENIZE.

To make a man a denizen or citizen.

DENIZEN.

In English law. A person who, being an alien born, has obtained, ex donatione regia, letters patent to make him an English subject, — a high and incommu- nicable branch of the royal prerogative. A denizen is in a kind of middle state between an alien and a natural-bom subject, and par- takes of the status of both of these. 1 Bl. Comm. 374; 7 Coke, 6.

The term is used to signify a person who, be- ing an alien by birth, has obtained letters pa- tent making him an English subject. The king may denize, but not naturalize, a man ; the lat- ter requiring the consent of parliament, ns un- der the naturalization act, 1870, (33 & 34 Viet, c. 14.) A denizen holds a position midway be- tween an alien and a natural-bom or naturalized subject, being able to take lands by purchase or devise, (which an alien could not until 1870 do,) but not able to take lands by descent, (which a natural-bom or naturalized subject may do.) Brown.

The word is also used in this sense in South Carolina. See McClenaghan v. Mc- Clenaghan, 1 Strob. Eq. (S. C.) 319, 47 Am. Dec. 532.

Why: The entry gives denounce as accuse/inform against and as the law's declaration of crime; the play stages both senses. DENUNCIATION left bare — same play, no double-dip.

DENOUNCEMENT.

In Spanish and Mexican law. A denouncement was a ju- dicial proceeding, and, though real property might be acquired by an alien in fraud of the law, — that Is, without observing Its re- quirements,— he nevertheless retained bis right and title to it, but was liable to be de- prived of it by the proper proceeding of de- nouncement, which in its substantive char- acteristics was equivalent to the inquest of office found, at common law. De Merle v. Mathews, 26 Cal. 477.

The “denouncement of a new work” is a proceeding to obtain an order of court, in the nature of an injunction, against the construction of a new building or other work, which, if completed, would injuriously affect the plaintiff’s property. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 55.

In Mexican mining law. Denouncement is an application to the authorities for a grant of the right to work a mine, either on the ground of new discovery, or on the ground of forfeiture of the rights of a for- mer owner, through abandonment or contra- vention of th6 mining law. Then saith he unto them, Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's.

Why: Deodand is literally 'a thing to be given to God' (Deo dandum) — the chattel forfeited to be applied to pious uses and alms. The verse's second clause, 'unto God the things that are God's,' states the principle the in…

DEPART.

Ia pleading. To forsake or abandon the ground assumed in a former pleading, and assume a new one. See De- pasture.

In maritime law. To leave a port; to be out of a port. To depart imports more than to sail, or set sail. A warranty in a policy that a vessel shall depart on or before a particular day is a warranty not only that she shall sail, but that she shall be out of the port on or before that day. 3 Maule Sc

S. 461; 3 Kent, Comm. 307, note. “To de- part” does not mean merely to break ground, but fairly to set forward upon the voyage. Moir v. Assur. Co., 6 Taunt. 241 ; Young v. The Orpheus, 119 Mass. 185; The Helen Brown (D. C.) 28 Fed. 111.

DEPARTMENT. 1. One of the territo- rial divisions of a country. The term is chiefly used in this sense in France, where the division of the country into departments is somewhat analogous, both territorially and for governmental purposes, to the divi- sion of an American state Into counties.

2. One of the divisions of the executive branch of government. Used in this sense in the United States, where each depart- ment is charged with a specific class of du- ties. and comprises an organized staff of offi- cials ; e. g., the department of state. dei»rt- ment of war, etc.

a cause of action or defense, which is not pursuant to the previous pleading of the same party, and which does not support and fortify it. 2 Williams, Saund. 84o, note 1; 2 Wils. 98; Co. Litt. 304a; Railway Go.

r. Wyler, 168 U. S. 285, 15 Sup. Ct 877, 39 L> Ed. 983.

A departure, in pleading, is when a party quits or departs from the case or defense which he has first made, and has recourse to another. White v. Joy, 13 N. Y. 83; Allen v. Watson, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 206; Kimberlin v. Carter, 49 Ind. 111.

A departure takes place when, in any plead- ing, the party deserts the ground that he took in his last antecedent pleading, and resorts to another. Steph. PI. 410. Or, in other words, when the second pleading contains matter not pursuant to the former, and which does not support and fortify it. Co. Litt. 304a. Hence a departure obviously can never take place till the replication. Steph. PI. 410. Each subse- quent pleading must pursue or support the former one ; *. «., the replication must support the declaration, and the rejoinder the plea, without departing out of it. 3 Bl. Comm. 310.

DEPARTURE IN DESPITE OF / COURT.

In old English practice. The ten- ant in a real action, having once appeared, was considered as constructively present In court until again called upon. Hence If, up- on being demanded, he failed to appear, he was said to have “departed in despite [t e., contempt] of the court.”

[Law: embezzlement of public money and property]

Depeculation — 'a robbing of the prince or commonwealth; an embezzling of the public treasure' — is the early form of the offense of embezzling public money and property.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the offense; the annotation names its modern doctrinal form, kept to [Law:] form since no section number was certain enough to cite.

DEPENDENCY.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. IV, § 3 — Congress's power over 'the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States']

A dependency — territory belonging rightfully to the sovereign though distinct from the country where sovereign power resides — is governed constitutionally by Congress's power over territory belonging to the United States.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the dependency in sovereignty terms; the Territory Clause is the constitutional home of that status, quoted in its operative phrase.

DEPENDENT.

Deriving existence, sup- port, or direction from another ; conditioned, in respect to force or obligation, upon an extraneous act or fact.

—Dependent contract. One which depends or is conditional upon another. One which it is not the duty of the contractor to perform until some obligation contained in the same agree- ment has been performed by the other party. Ham. Parties, 17, 29, 30, 109.—Dependent covenant. See Covenant.

DEPONE.

In Scotch practice. . To de- pose ; to make oath in writing.

DEPONENT.

In practice. One who de- poses (that is, testifies or makes oath in writing) to the truth of certain facts ; one who gives under oath testimony which is re- duced to writing; one who makes oath to a written statement. The party making an af- fidavit is generally so called.

The word “depone,” from which is derived "deponent." has relation to the mode in which the oath is administered, (by the witness plac- ing his hand upon the book of the holy evange- lists,) and not as to whether the testimony is delivered orally or reduced to writing. “De- ponent” is included in the term “witness," but witness” is more general. (paraphrase) Ovid, banished to Tomis on the Black Sea and writing the Tristia — perpetual banishment with loss of Rome, the condemned poet carried away to a foreign shore and counting the cost in verse. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines the Roman banishment to a foreign (usually island) place with loss of citizenship; Ovid's exile is its canonical literary instance. DEPORTATION left bare — same ground.

DEPORTATION.

Banishment to a for- eign country, attended with confiscation of property and deprivation of civil rights. A punishment derived from the deportatio (q. v.) of the Roman law, and still in use in France.

ing a person from a country, are different things and for different purposes. Transportation is by way of punishment of one convicted of an offense against the laws of the country ; extra- dition is the surrender to another country of one accused of an offence against its laws, there to be tried and punished if found guilty. Depor- tation is the removing of an alien out of the country simply because his presence is deemed inconsistent with the public welfare, and with- out any punishment being imposed or contem- plated, either under the laws or the country out of which he is sent, or under those of the coun- try to which he is taken. / DEPOSIT. A naked bailment of goods to be kept for the depositor without reward, and to. be returned when he shall require it. Jones, Bailm. 36, 117; National Bank v. Washington County Bank, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 6d7 '; Payne v. Gardiner, 29 N. Y. 107 ; Mont- gomery v. Evans, 8 Ga. 180; Rozelle v. Rhodes, 116 Pa. 129, 9 Atl. 160, 2 Am. St Rep. 591; In re Patterson, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 222.

A bailment of goods to be kept by the bailee without reward, and delivered accord- ing to the object or purpose of the original trust Story, Bailm. S 41.

A deposit, in general, is an act by which a person receives the property of another, binding himself to preserve it and return It in kind. Civ. Code La. art. 2926.

When chattels are delivered by one person to another to keep for the use of the bailor, it is called a “deposit.” Code Ga. 1882, « 2103.

The word is also sometimes used to desig- nate money lodged with a person as an ear- nest or security for the performance of some contract, to be forfeited if the depositor fails in his undertaking.

Classification. According to the classifi- cation of the civil law, deposits are of the following several sorts: (1) necessary, made upon some sudden emergency, and from some pressing necessity; as, for instance, In case of a fire, a shipwreck, or other over- whelming calamity,

when property is con- fided to any person whom the depositor may meet without proper opportunity for reflec- tion or choice, and thence it is called “mis- erabile depositutn.” (2) Voluntary, which arises from the mere consent and agreement of the parties. Civ. Code La. art 2964 ; Dig. ■16, 3, 2; Story, Bailm. { 44. The common law has made no such division. There is another class of dejiosits called “involun- tary,” which may be without the assent or even knowledge of the depositor ; as lum- ber, etc., left upon another’s land by the subsidence of a flood. The civilians again divide deposits into "simple deposits,” made by one or more persons having a common interest, and "sequestrations,” made by one or more persons, each of whom has a dif- ferent and adverse interest in controversy touching, it ; and these last are of two sorts, — “conventional,” or such as are made by the mere agreement of the parties without any judicial act; and “judicial," or such as are made by order of a court in the course of some proceeding. Civ. Code La. art 2979.

There is another class of deposits called “Irregular,” as when a person, having a sum of money which he does not think safe in his own hands, confides it to another, who is to return to him, not the same money, but a like sum when he shall demand it Poth. du Depot. 82, 83; Story, Bailm. §84. A, regular deposit is a strict or special deposit ; a deposit which must be returned in sp& cic; i. e., the thing deposited must be re- turned. A quasi deposit is a kind of im- j)lied or involuntary deposit, which takes place where a party comes lawfully to .the libssesslon of another person’s property, by finding it Story, Bailm. $ 85. Particularly with reference to money, deposits are also classed as general or special. A general de- posit is where the money deposited is not it- self to be returned, but an equivalent in money (that is, a like sum) is to be returned. It is equivalent to a loan, and the money deposited becomes the property of the depos- itary. Insurance Co. v. Landers, 43 Ala; 138. . A special deposit is a deposit in which the identical thing deposited is to be re- turned to the depositor. The particular ob- ject of this kind of deposit is safe-keeping. Koetting v. State, 88 Wis. 502, 60 N. W. 822. In banking law, this kind of deposit is contrasted with a “general” deposit, as above: but in the civil law it is the antith- esis of an “irregular” deposit. A gratuitous or naked deposit is a bailment of goods to be kept for the depositor without hire or re- ward on either side, or one for which the depositary receives no consideration beyond the mere possession of the thing deposited. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2921 ; Civ. Code Cal. | 1844. Properly and originally, all deposits are of this description ; for according to the Roman law, a bailment of goods for which hire or a price is to lie paid, is not called “deposltum” but “locatio.” If the owner of the property pays for its custody or care, it is a "locatio custodiie;” if, on the other hand, the bailee pays for the use of it, it is “locatio rei.” (See Locatio.) But in the modern law of those states which have been influenced by the Roman Jurisprudence, a gratuitous or naked deposit is distinguished from a “deposit for hire,” in which the bailee Is to be paid for his services in keeping the article. Civ. Code Cal. 1903, | 1851; Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2921.

In banking law. The act of placing or lodging money in the custody of a bank or banker, for safety or convenience, to be withdrawn at the will of the depositor or under rules and regulations agreed on ; also the money so deposited.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

General and special deposits. Deposits of money in a bank are either general or special.

A general deposit (the ordinary form) ia one which is to be repaid on demand, in whole or in part as called for, in any current money, not the same pieces of money deposited. In this case, the title to the money deposited passes to the bank, which becomes debtor to the depositor for the amount. A special deposit is one in which the depositor is entitled to the return of the identical thing deposited (gold, bullion, se- curities, etc.) and the title to the property re- mains m him, the deposit being usually made only for purposes of safe-keeping. Shipman v. State Bank, 59 Hun, 621, 13 N. Y. Supp. 475 ; State v. Clark, 4 Ind. 315 ; Brahm v. Adkins, 77 111. 263 ; Marine Bank v. Fulton Bank, 2 Wall. 252, 17 I* Ed. 785. There is also a specif- ic deposit, which exists where money or proper- ty is given to a bank for some specific and par- ticular purpose, as a note for collection, money to pay a particular note, or property for some other specific purpose. Officer v. Officer, 120 Iowa, 389. 94 N. W. 947, 98 Am. St. Rep. 365. —Deposit account. An account of sums lodged with a bank not to be drawn upon by checks, and usually not to be withdrawn except after a fixed notice.— Deposit company. A company whose business is the safe-keeping of securities or other valuables deposited in boxes pr safes in its building which are leased to the depositors.— Deposit of title-deeds. A meth- od of pledging real property as security for a loan, by placing the title-deeds of the land in the keeping of the lender ah pledgee.

DEPOSITARY.

The party receiving a deposit; one with whom anything Is lodged in trust, as “depository” is the place where it is put. The obligation on the part of the depositary Is that he keep the thing with reasonable care, and, upon request, restore it to the depositor, or otherwise deliver it, according to the original trust.

Why: Genuine: the entry is explicitly about the word 'deprive' in due-process provisions; the Fifth Amendment clause is quoted verbatim and is the provision the entry construes.

DEPUTIZE.

To appoint a deputy ; to ap- point or commission one to act as deputy to an officer. In a general sense, the term Is descriptive of empowering one person to act for another In any capacity or relation, but In law it is almost always restricted to the sub- stitution of a person appointed to act for an officer of the law.

DEPUTY.

A substitute; a person duly authorized by an officer to exercise some or all of the functions pertaining to the office, In the place and stead of the latter. Carter v. Homback, 139 Mo. 238, 40 S. W. 893; Herring v. Lee, 22 W. Va. 667 ; Erwin v. U.

S. (D. C.) 37 Fed. 476, 2 L. R. A. 229; Wil- lingham v. State, 21 Fla. 776; Ellison v. Stevenson, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 271 ; People v. Barker, 14 Mlsc. Rep. 360, 35 N. Y. Supp. 727.

A deputy differs from an assignee, in that an assignee has an interest in the office itself, and does all things in his own name, for whom his grantor shall not answer, except in special cas- es; but a deputy has not any interest in the office, and is only the shadow of the officer in whose name he acts. And there is a distinction in doing an act by an agent and by a deputy. An agent can only bind his principal when he does the act in the name of the principal. But a deputy may do the act and simt his own name, and it binds bis principal ; for a deputy has, m law, the whole power of his principal. Wharton.

DERAIGN.

[Maxim: 'Lex posterior derogat priori' — a later law derogates from an earlier one]

Derogation — the partial repeal of a law by a subsequent act limiting its scope — is expressed in the maxim that a later law derogates from an earlier one.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines derogation as partial repeal (Dig. 50.17.102); the maxim states the lex-posterior rule it embodies, cited with confidence.

DEROGATORY CLAUSE.

In a will, this is a sentence or secret character insert- ed by the testator, of which he reserves the knowledge to himself, with a condition that no will he may make thereafter should be valid, unless this clause be Inserted word for word. This Is done as a precaution to guurd against later wills being extorted by violence, or otherwise Improperly obtained. By the law of England such a clause would be void, as tending to make the will Irrevocable. Wharton.

I

DESCENT.

Hereditary succession. Suc- cession to the ownership of an estate by in- heritance, or by any act of law, as distin- guished from "purchase.” Title by descent Is the title by which one person, upon the death of another, acquires the real estate of the latter as his heir at law. 2 Bl. Comm. 201 ; Com. Dig. “Descent,” A ; Adams v. Akerlund, 168 111. 682, 48 N. E. 454 ; Starr v. Hamilton, 22 Fed. Cas. 1,107; In re Dona- hue’s Estate, 36 Cal. 332 ; Sbippen v. Izard, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 224; Brower v. Hunt, 18 Ohio St. 338; Allen v. Bland, 134 Ind. 78, 33 N. E. 774.

. Classification. Descents are of two sorts, lineal and collateral. Lineal descent is descent in a direct or right line, as from father or grandfather to son or grandson. Collateral de- scent is descent in a collateral or oblique line, that is, up to the common ancestor and then down from him, as from brother to brother, or between cousins. Levy v. McCartee, 6 Pet. 112, 8 L. Ed. 334. They are also distinguished in- to mediate and immediate descents. But these terms are used in different senses. A descent may. be said to be a mediate or immediate de- scent of the estate or right ; or it may be Baid to be mediate or immediate, in regard to the mediatcness or immediateness of the pedigree or consanguinity. Thus, a descent from the grand- father, who dies in possession, to the grandchild, the father being then dead, or from the uncle to the nephew, the brother being dead, is, in the for mer sense, in Maw, immediate descent, although the one is collateral and the other lineal ; for the heir is in the per, and not in the per and cui. On the other hand, with reference to the line of pedigree or consanguinity, a descent is often said to be immediate, when the ancestor from whom the party derives his blood is im- mediate, and without any intervening link or degrees; and mediate, when the kindred is de- rived from him mediante altero, another ances- tor intervening between them. Thus a descent in lineals from father to son is in this sense immediate ; but a descent from grandfather to grandson, the father being dead, or from uncle to nephew, the brother being dead, is deemed mediate ; the father and the brother being, in these latter cases, the medium deferent, as it is called, of the descent or consanguinity. Levy v. McCartee, 0 Pet. 112, 8 L. Ed. 334 ; Furenes v. Mickelson, 86 Iowa. 508, 53 N. W, 416; Garner v. Wood, 71 Md. 37, 17 Atl. 1031.

Descent was denoted. In the Roman law, by the term “successio,” which is also used by Bracton, and from which has been derived the succession of the Scotch and French Jurisprudence.

— Descent east. The devolving of realty up- on the heir on the death of his ancestor intestate.

DeSCRIPTIO PERSON.®. Lat. De- scription of the person. By this Is meant a word or phrase used merely for the purpose of Identifying or pointing out the person In- tended, and not as an intimation that the language in connection with which It occurs Is to apply to him only In the official or tech- nical character which might appear to be In- dicated by the word.

DESCRIPTION. 1. A delineation or ac- count of a particular subject by the recital of its characteristic accidents and qualities.

2. A written enumeration of items com- posing an estate, or of its condition, or of titles or documents; like an Inventory, but with more particularity, and without involv- ing the Idea of an appraisement

3. An exact written account of an article, mechanical device, or process which is the subject of an application for a patent

4. A method of pointing out a particular person by referring to his relationship to some other person or his character as an of- ficer, trustee, executor, etc.

[Piper, The Little Engine That Could, 1930]

"I think I can" — the little engine's motto: determination as the culture teaches it to children, the will to keep climbing stated in four words.

Why: The entry's neighborhood is resolve carried through; the phrase is the folk emblem of determination. Short phrase; held with confidence.

DETERMINE.

To come to an end. To bring to an end. 2 Bl. Comm. 121 ; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 380.

DETESTATIO.

Lat. In the civil law. A summoning made, or notice given, in the presence of witnesses, (denuntiatio facta cum testatione.) Dig. 50, 16, 40.

DETINET.

Lat. He detains. In old English law. A species of action of debt, which lay for the specific recovery of goods, under a contract to deliver them. 1 Reeves, Eng. Law, 159.

In pleading. An action of debt Is said to be in the detinet when It Is alleged merely that the defendant witholds or unjustly de- tains from the plaintiff the thing or amount demanded.

An action of replevin Is said to be in the detinet when the defendant retains posses- sion of the property until after Judgment in the action. Bull. N. P. 52; Chit. Pl. 145.

DETINUE.

In practice. A form of ac- tion which lies for the recovery, in specie, of personal chattels from one who acquired possession of them lawfully, but retains It without right, together with damages for the detention. 3 Bl. Comm. 152. Sinnott v. Fei- ock, 165 N. Y. 444, 59 N. E. 265. 53 L. R. A. 565, 80 Am. St. Rep. 736; Penny v. Davis, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 314; Gullle v. Fook, 13 Or. 577, 11 Pac. 277.

The action of detinue is defined in the old books as a remedy founded upon the delivery of goods by the owner to another to keep, who afterwards refuses to redeliver them to the bail- or; and it is said that, to authorize the main- tenance of the action, it is necessary that the defendant should have come lawfully into the possession of the chattel, either by delivery to him or by finding it In fact, it was once un- derstood to be the law that detinue does not lie where the property had been tortiously token. But it is, upon principle, very unimportant in what manner the defendant's possession com- menced, since the gist of the action is the wrongful detainer, and not the original taking. It is only incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove property in himself, and possession in the de- fendant At present, the action of detinue is proper in every case where the owner prefers recovering the specific property to damages for its conversion, and no regard is bad to the man- ner in which the defendant acquired the posses- sion. Peirce v. Hill, 9 Port. (Ala.) 151, 33 Am. Dec. 306.

[Law: detinue — ancestor of modern replevin; recovery of specific chattels]

Detinue lies for the recovery in specie of personal chattels from one who acquired possession lawfully but retains it without right — the common-law ancestor of modern replevin.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the action with its own cases; the annotation states its place as replevin's ancestor, closing the deferrals at #9/#10.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:7, KJV]

Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour.

Why: Detinue is the action for recovery of chattels retained without right — the remedy for withholding what belongs to another. Romans 13:7 commands rendering to all their dues — the moral duty the action enforces. Episto...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:16, KJV]

And if a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, and lie with her, he shall surely endow her to be his wife.

Why: The writ recovered the goods given with the wife in marriage after divorce. Exodus 22:16 states the biblical dowry obligation — endowing the bride — the scriptural root of marriage-goods law. Narrative law, not divine...

[Genesis 2:24, KJV]

Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh.

Why: The union the entry defines — one man and one woman joined for life — at its institution. Narrative, not deity speech.

The removal of prop- erty from one state to another upon a trans- fer of the title to it by will or inheritance. Frederickson v. Louisiana, 23 How. 445, 16

L. Ed. 677.

DETRIMENT.

Any loss or harm suffer- ed in person or property; e. g., the considera- tion for a contract may consist not only in a payment or other thing of value given, but also in loss or "detriment" suffered by the' party. Civ. Code Mont. 1895, | 4271; Civ. Code S. D. 1903, ! 2287 ; Rev. St. Okl. 1903,

[Law: consideration — benefit to the promisor or detriment to the promisee]

The entry notes that consideration may consist in 'detriment' suffered by the party — the detriment theory: consideration is a benefit to the promisor or a detriment to the promisee.

Why: Genuine: the entry invokes detriment as consideration with its code cites; the annotation states the classic consideration formula.

DEVASTATION.

Wasteful use of the property of a deceased person, as for extrav- agant funeral or other unnecessary expenses. 2 Bl. Comm. 508.

DEVASTAVERUNT.

They have wasted. A term applied in old English law to waste by executors and administrators, and to the process issued against them therefor. Cow* ell. See Devastavit.

DEVASTAVIT.

Lat He has wasted. The act of an executor or administrator in wasting the goods of the deceased; misman- agement of the estate by which a loss oc- curs ; a breach of trust or misappropriation of assets held in a fiduciary character; any violation or neglect of duty by an executor or administrator, involving loss to the de- cedent’s estate, which makes him ‘ personally responsible to heirs, creditors, or legatees. Clift v. White, 12 N. Y. 531; Beardsley v. Marsteller, 120 Ind. 319, 22 N. E. 315; Steel v. Holladay, 20 Or. 70, 25 Pac. 69, 10 L. R.

Also, if plaintiff, in an action against an executor or administrator, has obtained judg- ment, the usual execution runs de bonis tes- tatoris; but, if the sheriff returns to such a writ nulla bona testatoris nec propria, the plaintiff may, forthwith, upon this return, sue out an execution against the property or person of the executor or administrator, in as full a manner as in an action against him, sued in his own right Such a return is called a “devastavit." 'He has wasted' — the executor's or administrator's waste, mismanagement, or misappropriation of estate assets: a breach of fiduciary duty involving loss to the estate, rendering him personally liable.

In practice. The name of an issue sent out of a court of chancery, or one which exercises chancery Jurisdiction, to a court of law, to try the va- lidity of a paper asserted and denied to be a will, to ascertain whether or not the testator did devise, or whether or not that paper was his, will. 7 Brown, Pari. Cas. 437 ; 2 Atk. 424; Asay v. Hoover, 5 Pa. 21, 45 Am. Dec, 713.

[Law: devisavit vel non — the issue trying a paper's validity as a will]

Devisavit vel non — the issue sent to a court of law to try whether a paper asserted and denied to be a will was the testator's will — is the ancestor of the will contest.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the chancery-to-law issue; the annotation names its modern descendant, the will contest.

DEVISE.

A testamentary disposition of land or realty; a gift of real property by the last will and testament of the donor. Scholle v. Scholle, 113 N. Y. 261, 21 N. E. 84; Fere1 bee v. Procter, 19 N. C. 440; Pratt v. Mc- Ghee, 17 S. C. 428; In re Fetrow’s Estate, 58 Pa. 427 ; Jenkins v. Tobin, 31 Ark. 306; In- re Dailey's Estate, 43 Misc. Rep. 552, 89 N.

Y. Supp. 541.

Synonyms. The term “devise” is properly restricted to real property, and is not applicable to testamentary dispositions of personal proper1 ty, which are properly called “bequests” or

“leg- acies.” But this distinction will not be allow- ed in law to defeat the purpose of a testator; and all of these terms may be construed inter- changeably or applied indifferently to either real or personal property, if the context shows that such was the intention of the testator. Ladd v. Harvey. 21 N. Il. 528; Borgner v. Brown, 133 Ind. 391, 33 N. E. 92; Oothout v. Rogers, 59 Hun, 97, 13 N. Y. Supp. 120 ; McCorkle v. Sherrill, 41 N, C. 170.

Classification. Devises are contingent or vested: that is, after the death of the testator. Contingent, when the vesting of any estate in the devisee is made to depend upon some future event, in which case, if the event never occur, or until it does occur, no estate vests under the devise. But, when the future event is referred to merely to determine the time at which the devisee shall come into the use of the estate, this does not hinder the vesting of the estate at the death of the testator. 1 jarm. Wills, c. 26. Devises are also classed as general or spe- cific. A general devise is one which passes lands of the testator without a particular enu- meration or description of them ; as, a devise of “all my lands” or "all my other lands.” In a more restricted sense, a general devise is one which grants a parcel of land without the ad1 dition of any words to show bow great an es- tate is meant to be given, or without words in- dicating either a grant in perpetuity or a grant for a limited term ; in this case it is construed as granting a life estate. Hitch v. Patten. 8 Houst. (Del.) 334, 16 Atl. 558. 2 L. R. A. 724. Specific deviRes are devises of lands particu- larly specified in the terms of the devise, as op- posed to general and residuary devises of land, in which the local or other particular descrip- tions are not expressed. For example, “I de- vise my Hendon Hall estate” is a specific devise ; but "I devise all my lands,” or, “all other my lands,” is a general devise or a residuary de- vise. But all devises are (in effect) specific, even residuary devises being so. L. R. 3 Ch. 420: Id. 136. A conditional devise is one which depends upon the occurrence of some un- certain event, by which it Is either to take ef- fect or be defeated. Civ. Code Cal. § 1345. An executory devise of lands is such a disposition of them by will that thereby no estate vests at the death of the devisor, but only on some fu- ture contingency. It differs from a remainder in three very material points: (1) That it needs not any particular estate to support it; (2) that by it a fee-simple or other less estate may be limited after a fee-simple ; (3) that by this means a remainder may be limited of a chattel interest, after a particular estate for life created in the same. 2 Bl. Comm. 172. In a stricter sense, a limitation by will of a future contingent interest in lands, contrary to the rules of the common law. 4 Kent, Comm. 263 ; 1 Steph. Comm. 564. A limitation by will of a future estate or interest in land, which can- not, consistently with the rules of law, take ef- fect as a remainder. 2 Pow. Dev. (by Jarman,) 237. See Poor v. Considine, 6 Wall. 474, 18

DICTUM.

In general. A statement, re- mark, or observation. Gratis dictum; a gra- tuitous or voluntary representation; one which a party Is not bound to make. 2 Kent, Comm. 486. Simplex dictum; a mere as- sertion ; an assertion without proof. Bract, fol. 320.

The word is generally used as an abbrevi- ated form of obiter dictum, "a remark by the way;" that is, un observation or remark made by a judge in pronouncing an opinion upon a cause, concerning some rule, principle, or application of law, or the solution of a question suggested by the case at bar, but not necessarily involved In the case or essential to Its determination; any statement of the law enunciated by the court merely by way of Illustration, argument, analogy, or sug- gestion. See Railroad Co. v. Schutte, 103

U. S. 118, 143, 2ft L. Ed. 327 ; In re Woodruff (D. C.) 9ft Fed. 317; Hart v. Stribling. 25 Fla. 433, 6 South. 455 ; Buchner v. Railroad Co., 60 Wis. 264, 19 N. W. 56; Rush v. French, 1 Arts. 99, 25 Pac. 816; State v. Clarke, 3 Nev. 572.

Dicta are opinions of a judge which do not embody the resolution or determination of the court, and made without argument, or full con- sideration of the point, are not the professed de- liberate determinations of the judge himself. Obiter dicta are such opinions uttered by the way, not upon the point or question pending, as if turning aside for the time from the main topic of the case to collateral subjects. Rohrbach v. Insurance Co., 62 N. Y. 47, 58, 20 Am. Rep. 451.

In old English law. Dictum meant an arbitrament or the award of arbitrators.

In French law. The report of a judg- ment made by one of the judges who has given it. Poth. Proc. Civil, pt 1, c. 5, art 2. — Dictum de Kenilworth. The edict or declaration of Kenilworth. An edict or award between King Henry III. and all the barons and others who had been in arms against him ; and so called because it was made at Kenilworth Castle in Warwickshire, in the fif- ty-first year of his reign, containing a compo- sition of five years' rent for the lands and es- tates of those who had forfeited them in that rebellion. [Axiom: Obiter dicta do not bind; only the ratio decidendi of a decision is authoritative precedent under stare decisis]

The operative legal consequence of the dictum/holding distinction is that obiter dicta do not bind; only the ratio decidendi of a decision is authoritative precedent.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 6:1, KJV]

Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints?

Why: Paul rebukes taking a dispute to the law courts instead of settling it before the saints — the scriptural archetype of arbitration over litigation, which is exactly what the 'difference' submitted to arbitration is.

DIFFICULT.

For the meaning of the phrase “difficult and extraordinary ense,” as used In New York statutes and practice, see Standard Trust Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 178 N. Y. 407, 70 N. E. 925; Fox v. DIGEST.

A collection or compilation, embodying the chief matter of numerous books in one, disposed under proper heads or titles, and usually by an alphabetical arrange- ment, for facility in reference.

As a legal term, “digest” is to be distinguish- ed from “abridgment.” The latter is a summary or epitome of the contents of a single work, in which, as a rule, the original order or sequence of parts is preserved, and in which the principal labor of the compiler is in the matter of consolidation. A digest is wider in its scope; is made up of quotations or paraphrased passages ; and has its own system of classification and arrangement. An "index” merely points out the places where particular matters may be found, without purporting to give such matters in extemo. A “treatise” or “commentary” is not a compilation, but an original composition, though it may include quo- tations and excerpts.

A reference to the “Digest,” or “Dig.,” is always understood to designate the Digest (or Pandects) of the Justinian collection; that being the digest par eminence , and the authoritative compilation of tire Homan law.

DILACION.

In Spanish law. A space of time granted to a party to a suit in which to answer a demand or produce evidence of a disputed fact.

DILAPIDATION.

A species of ecclesi- astical waste which occurs whenever the in- cumbent suffers any edifices of his ecclesias- tical living to go to ruin or decay. It is either voluntary, by pulling down, or permis- sive, by suffering the church, parsonages- houses, and other buildings thereunto be- longing, to decay. And the remedy for either lies either in the spiritual court, where the canon law prevails, or in the courts of com- mon law. It is also held to be good cause of deprivation if the bishop, parson, or other ecclesiastical person dilapidates buildings or cuts down timber growing on the patrimony of the church, unless for necessary repairs; and that a writ of prohibition will also lie against him in the common-law courts. 3 Bl. Comm. 91.

The term is also used, in the law of land- lord and tenant, to signify the neglect of necessary repairs to a building, or suffering it to fall into a state of decay, or the pulling down of the building or any part of it.

DILIGENCE.

Prudence; vigilant activi- ty; attentiveness; or care, of which theri are infinite shades, from the sllgfitest mo- mentary thought to the most vigilant anx- iety ; but the law recognizes only three de- grees of diligence: (1) Common or ordinary, which men, in general, exert in respect oT their own concerns; the standard is neces- sarily variable with respect to. the facts, al- though it may be uniform with respect to the principle. (2) High or great, which fs ex- traordinary diligence, or that 'which very prudent persons take of their own concerns. (3) Low or slight, which is that which jier- sons of less than common prudence, or in- deed of no prudence at all, take of their own concerns.

The civil law is in perfect conformity with the common law. It lays down three degrees of diligence, — ordinary, (diligentia ;) extra- ordinary, (exactissima diligentia ;) slight, (leviesima diligentia.) Story, Baiim. 19.

There may be a high degree of diligence, a common degree of diligence, and a - alight de- gree of diligence, with their corresponding de- grees of negligence, and these can be clearly enough defined for all practical purposes, and.

with a view to the business of life, seem to be ail that are really necessary. Common or or- dinary diligence is that degree of diligence which men in general exercise in respect to their own concerns ; high or great diligence is of course extraordinary diligence, or that which very prudent persons take of their own con- cerns ; and low or slight diligence is that which persons of less than common prudence, or in- deed of any prudence at all, taike of their own concerns. Ordinary negligence is the want of ordinary diligence; slight, or less than ordina- ry, negligence is the want of great diligence; and gross or more than ordinary negligence is the want of slight diligence. Railroad Co. v. Rollins, 5 Kan. 180.

[Billy Wilder, The Lost Weekend, 1945]

(paraphrase) Wilder's film follows alcoholic writer Don Birnam through a self-destructive drinking weekend — the screen's definitive portrait of dipsomania, the irresistible craving the entry defines. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines a dipsomaniac as one with 'an irresistible desire for alcoholic liquors.' The Lost Weekend is genuinely about that condition, not a title-match.

DIPTYCHA.

Dlptychs ; tablets of wood, metal, or other substance, used among the Romans for the purpose of writing, and fold- ed like a book of two leaves. The dlptychs of antiquity were especially employed for public registers. DIRECTORY.

A provision in a statute, rale of procedure, or the like, is said to be directory when It is to be considered as a mere direction or instruction of no obliga- tory force, and involving no Invalidating con- sequence for its disregard,, as opposed to an imperative or mandatory provision, which must be followed. The general rule Is that the prescriptions of a statute relating to the performance of a public duty are so far directory that, though neglect of them may be punishable, yet it does not affect the va- lidity of the acts done under them, as in the vase of a statute requiring an officer to pre- pare and deliver a document to another offi- cer on or before a certain day. Maxw. In- terp. St 330, et seq. And see Pearse v. Mor- rice, 2 Adol. A El. 94 ; Nelms v. Vaughan, 84 Va. 696, 5 S. E. 704 ; State v. Conner, 86 Tex. 133, 23 S. W. 1103; Payne v. Classification. Disability is either general or tpecial; the former when it incapacitates the person for the performance of all legal acts of a general class, or giving to them their ordinary legal effect ; the latter wheh it debars him from one specific act. Disability is also either pertonal or abiolutc; the former where it at- taches to the particular person, and arises out of his status, his previous act, or bis natural or juridical incapacity ; the latter where it origi- nates with a particular person, but extends also to his descendants or successors. Lord de le Warre's Case, 6 Coke, la; Avegno v. Schmidt, 113 U. S. 293, 5 Sup. Ct. 487, 28 L. Ed. !>"«. Considered with special reference to the capaci- ty to contract a marriage, disability Is either canonioal or civil; a disability of the former class makes the marriage voidable only, while the latter, in general, avoids it entirely. The term civil disability is also used as equivalent to legal disability, both these expressions mean- ing disabilities or disqualifications created by positive law, as distinguished from phytirnl disabilities. Ingalls v. Campbell, 18 Or. 461, 24 Pac. 904; Harland v. Territory, 3 Wash. T. 131, 13 Pac. 483; Meeks v. Vassault 16 Fed. Cas. 1317 ; Wiesner v. Zaum, 39 Wis. 206 ; Bauman v. Grubbs, 26 Ind. 421 ; Supreme Council v. Fairman, 62 How. Prae. (N. Y.) 390. A phyeical disability is a disability or incapaci- ty caused by physical defect or infirmity, or bodily imperfection, or mental weakness or al- ienation ; as distinguished from civil disability, whch relates to the civil itatue or condition of the person, and is imposed by the law.

DISABLE.

In its ordinary sense, to dis- able is to cause a disability, (q . v.)

In the old language of pleading, to disable Is to take advantage of one's own or another's disability. Thus, it is "an express maxim of the common law that the party shall not disable. himself ;'' but "this disability to dis- able himself * * • is personal.'' 4 Coke, 1236.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Nullus commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria — no one can take advantage of his own wrong]

The entry's maxim that 'the party shall not disable himself' is an instance of the broader principle that no one may take advantage of his own wrong — a party cannot plead his own disability to escape his own act.

Why: The body states the express common-law maxim (4 Coke, 123b) but not the canonical general principle it instantiates. This maxim is the genuine, famous form of that principle and illuminates why self-disabling is barre…

DISABLING STATUTES.

These are acts of parliament, restraining and regulat- ing the exercise of a right or the power of alienation; the term is specially applied to 1 Elis. c. 19, and similar acts restraining the power of ecclesiastical corporations to make leases.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 18:6, KJV]

None of you shall approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakedness: I am the LORD.

Why: Leviticus 18 is the classic scriptural source of prohibited degrees — absolute bars to lawful union — which is exactly what a diriment impediment is.

D IS AFFIRM.

To repudiate; to revoke a consent once given ; to recall an affirmance. To refuse one's subsequent sanction to a for- mer act; to disclaim the intention of being bound by an antecedent transaction.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 30:5, KJV]

But if her father disallow her in the day that he heareth; not any of her vows, or of her bonds wherewith she hath bound her soul, shall stand: and the LORD shall forgive her, because her father disallowed her.

Why: 'Disallow' is the scriptural disaffirmance — one with authority repudiating a vow or consent, which then does not stand. [re-homed from 'DISAFFIRM' to 'D IS AFFIRM' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

DISAFFIRMANCE.

The repudiation of a former transaction. The refusal by one who hais the right to refuse, (as in the case of a voidable contract,) to abide by his for- mer acts, or accept the legal consequences of the same. It may either be “express” (in words) or “Implied" from acts expressing the Intention of the party to disregard the obligations of the contract.

DISCABCARE.

In old English law. To discharge, to unload; as a vessel. Carcare et discarcare; to charge and discharge; to load and unload. Cowell.

DISCARGARE.

In old European law. To discharge or unload, as a wngou. Spel- man.

DISCEPTIO CAUSAE.

In Roman law. The argument of a cause by the counsel on both sides. Calvin.

DISCHARGE.

The opposite of charge; hence to release ; liberate ; annul ; unburden ; disincuinber.

Is the low of contracts. To cancel or unloose the obligation of a contract ; to make an agreement or contract null and inopera- tive. As a noun, the word means the act or instrument by which the binding force of a oontract is terminated, Irrespective of whether the contract is carried out to the full extent contemplated (in which case the discharge is the result of performance) or is broken off before complete execution. Cort v. Railway Co., 17 Q. B. 145; Com. v. Tal- bot, 2 Allen (Mass.) 162; Rivers v. Blom, 163 Mo. 442, 63 S. W. 812.

Discharge is a generic term ; its principal spe- cies are rescission, release, accord and satisfac- tion, performance, judgment, composition, bank- ruptcy, merger, (q . v.) Leake, Cont. 413.

As applied to demands, claims, rights of action, incumbrances, etc., to discharge the debt or claim is to extinguish it, to annul its obligatory force, to satisfy it. And here also the term is generic; thus a debt, & mortgage, a legacy, may be discharged by payment or performance, or by any act short of that, lawful in itself, which the creditor accepts as sufficient. Blackwood v. Brown; 29 Mich. 484; Rangely v. Spring, 28 Me. 151. To discharge a person is to liberate him from tbe binding force of an obligation, debt, or claim.

Discharge by operation of law is where the discharge takes place, whether it was intended by the parties or not; thus, if a creditor ap- points his debtor his executor, the debt is dis- charged by operation of law, because the execu- tor cannot have an action against himself. Co. Lift. 2646, note 1; Williams, Ex’rs, 1216; Chit Cont. 714.

In civil practice. To discharge a rule, an order, an injunction, a certificate, process of execution, or in general any proceeding In a court, Is to cancel or annul it, or to revoke it, or to refuse to confirm its original pro- visional force. Nichols v. Chittenden, 14 Colo. App. 49, 59 Pac. 954.

To discharge a jury is to relieve them from any further consideration of a cause. This is done when the continuance of the trial is, by any cause, rendered impossible ; also when the Jury, after deliberation, cannot agree on a verdict.

In equity practice. In the process of accounting before a master in chancery, the discharge is a statement of expenses and counter-claims brought in and filed, by way of set-off, by the accounting defendant ; which follows the charge in order.

Ill criminal practice. The act by which a person in confinement, held on an accusa- tion of some crime or misdemeanor, is set at liberty. The writing containing the order for his being so set at liberty Is also culled a "discharge.” Morgan v. Hughes, 2 Term, 231 ; State v. Garthwaite, 23 N. J. Law, 143 ; Ex parte Paris, 18 Fed. Cas. 1104.

In bankruptcy practice. The discharge of the bankrupt is the step which regularly follows the adjudication of bankruptcy and the administration of his estate. By it he is released from the obligation of all bis debts which were or might be proved in the pro- ceedings. so that they are no lpnger a charge upon him, and so that he may thereafter en- gage in business and acquire property with- out its being liable for the satisfaction of such former debts. Southern L. & T. Co. v. Benbow (D. C.) 96 Fed. 528 ; In re Adler, 103 Fed. 444; Colton v. Depew, 59 N. J. Eq. 126. 44 Atl. 062.

tn maritime law. The unlading or un- livery of a cargo from a vessel. The Bird of Paradise v. "Heyneman, 5 Wall. 557, 18

L. Ed. 662; Kimball v. Kimball, 14 Fed. Cas. 486; Certain Logs of Mahogany, 5 Fed. Ca». 374.

Ia military law. The release or dis- missal of a soldier, sailor, or marine, from further military service, either at the expira- tion of his term of enlistment, or previous thereto on special application therefor, or as a punishment. An “honorable” discharge is 6ne granted at the end of nn enlistment and accompanied by an official certificate of good conduct during the service. A “dishonorable” discharge is a dismissal from the service for bad conduct or as a punishment imposed by sentence of a court-martial for offenses against the military law. There is also in occasional use a form of “discharge without honor,” which Implies censure, but is not in itself a punishment. See Rev. St. U. S.

DISCOUNT.

In a general sense, an al- lowance or deduction made from a gross sum on any account whatever. In a more limited and technical sense, the taking of interest in advance.

By the language of the commercial world and the settled practice of banks, a discount by a bank means a drawback or deduction made upon its advances or loans of money, upon negotiable paper or other evidences of debt payable at a future day, which are transferred to the bank. Fleckner v. Bank, 8 Wheat. 338, 5 L. Ed. 631 ; Bank v. Baker, 15 Ohio St. 87.

Although the discounting of notes or bills, in its most comprehensive sense, may mean lending money and taking notes in payment, yet, in its more ordinary sense, the discounting of notes or bills means advancing a consideration for a bill or note, deducting or discounting the interest which will accrue for the time the note has to run. Loan Co. v. Towner, 13 Conn. 249.

Discounting by a bank means lending money upon a note, and deducting the interest or pre- mium in advance. Bank v. Bruce. 17 N. Y. 507 ; State v. Sav. Inst., 48 Mo. 189.

The ordinary meaning of the term “to dis- count” is to take interest in advance, and in banking is a mode of loaning money. It is the advance of money not due till some future peri- od, less the interest which would be due there- on when payable. Weckler v. Bank, 42 Md. 592. 20 Am. Rep. 95.

Discount, as we have seen. Is the difference between the price and the amount of the debt, the evidence of which is transferred. That dif- fe-enee represents interest charged, being at the same rate, according to which the price paid, if invested until the maturity of the debt, will just produce its amount. Bank v. Johnson, 104

U. S. 276, 26 L. Ed. 742.

Discounting a note and buying it are not iden- tical in meaning, the latter expression being used to denote the transaction when the seller does not indorse the note, and is not accounta- ble for it. Bank v. Baldwin, 23 Minn. 206, 28 Am. Rep. 683.

In practice. A set-off or defalcation in an action. Vin. Abr. “Discount.” But see Trabue’s Ex’r v. Harris, 1 Mete. (Ky.) 597.

— Discount broker. A bill broker; one who discounts bills of exchange and promissory notes, and advances money on securities.

DISCOVERT.

Not married; not subject to the disabilities of a coverture. It applies equally to a maid and a widow.

DISCOVERT.

In a general sense, the ascertainment of that which was previously unknown; the disclosure or coming to light of what was previously hidden ; the acquisi- tion of notice or knowledge of given acts or facts; as, in regard to the “discovery" of fraud affecting the running of the statute of limitations, or the granting of a new trial for newly “discovered” evidence. Francis v. Wallace, 77 Iowa, 373, 42 N. W. 323 ; Parker v. Kuhn, 21 Neb. 413, 32 N, W. 74, 59 Am. Rep. 852; Laird v. Kilboume, 70 Iowa, 83, 30 N. W. 9; Howton v. Roberts, 49 S. W. 340, 20 Ky. Ia international law. As the founda- tion for a claim of national ownership or sovereignty, discovery is the finding of a country, continent, or island previously un- known, or previously known only to its un- civilized inhabitants. Martin v. Waddell, 10 Pet. 409, 10 L. Ed. 997.

In patent law. The finding out some sub- stance, mechanical device, improvement, or application, not previously known. In re Kemper, 14 Fed. Cas. 287 ; Dunbar v. Mey- ers, 94 U. S. 197, 24 L. Ed. 34.

Discovery, as used in the patent laws, depends upon invention. Every invention may, in a cer- tain sense, embrace more or less of discovery, for it must always include something that is new ; but it by no means follows that every discovery is an invention. Morton v. Infirmary,. 5 Blatchf. 121, Fed. Cas. No. 9,865.

In practice. The disclosure by the de- fendant of facts, titles, documents, or other things which are in his exclusive knowledge or possession, and which are necessary to the- party seeking the discovery as a part of a cause or action pending or to be brought In another court, or as evidence of his rights or title in such proceeding. Tucker v. U. S., . 151 U. S. 164, 14 Sup. Ct. 299. 38 L. Ed. 112 ; Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 55, 29 C. C. A. 14.

Also used of the disclosure by a bankrupt of his property for the benefit of creditors.

la mining law. As the basis of the right to locate a mining claim upon the public domain, discovery means the finding of min- eralized rock in place. Mlgeon v. Railroad

The international-law sense of discovery — the finding of lands previously unknown as a foundation of national ownership — received its classic American statement in Johnson v. M'Intosh: discovery gave the discovering sovereign title, subject to the native right of occupancy.

Why: Scoped to the international-law paragraph only. The entry states the discovery doctrine in one sentence with one citation (Martin v. Waddell); Johnson v. to be accorded to a wit- ness or document, as by impugning the ve- racity of the one or the genuineness of the other; to disparage or weaken the reliance upon the testimony of a witness, or upon documentary evidence, by any means what- ever.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 19:18, KJV]

And the judges shall make diligent inquisition: and, behold, if the witness be a false witness, and hath testified falsely against his brother;

Why: The verse commands the judicial inquisition that discredits a false witness — the scriptural procedure behind impeachment of credibility.

DISCREPANCY.

A difference between two things which ought to be identical, as between one writing and another; a vari- ance, (q. ».)

Diseretio eat discern ere per legem quid alt jnatnm. 10 Coke, 140. Discretion is to know through law what is just.

DISCRETION.

A liberty or privilege al- lowed to a judge, within the confines of right and justice, but Independent of narrow and unbending rules of positive law, to decide and act in accordance with what is fair, equitable, and wholesome, as determined up- on the peculiar circumstances of the case, and as discerned by his personal wisdom and experience, guided by the spirit, principles, and analogies of the law. Osborn v. United States Bank, 9 Wheat 866, 6 I* Ed. 204; Ex parte Chase, 43 Ala. 310 ; Lent v. Tlllson, 140 U. 8. 316, 11 Sup. Ct 825, 35 I* Ed. 419 ; State v. Cummings, 36 Mo. 278; Murray v. Buell, 74 Wis. 14. 41 N. W. 1010; Perry v. Salt Lake City Council, 7 Utah, 143, 25 Pac. 998, 11 L. R. A. 446.

When applied to public functionaries, discre- tion means a' power or right conferred upon them by law of acting officially in certain cir- cumstances, according to the dictates of tbeir own judgment and conscience, uncontrolled by the judgment or conscience of others. This dis- cretion undoubtedly is to some extent regulated by usage, or, if the term is preferred, by fixed principles. But by this is to be understood nothing more than that the same court cannot, consistently with its own dignity, and with its character and duty of administering impartial justice, decide in different ways two cases in every respect exactly alike. The question of fact whether the two cases are alike in every color, circumstance, and feature is of necessity to be submitted to the judgment of some tri- bunal. Judges v. People, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 79, 99.

Lord Coke defines judicial discretion to be “ditcemere per legem quid tit jus turn." to see what would be just according to the laws in the premises. It does not mean a wild self-will- fulness, which may prompt to any and every act ; but this judicial discretion is guid«3 by the law, (see what the law declares upon a cer- tain statement of facts, and then decide in ac- cordance with the law,) so as to do substantial eijuity and justice. Faber v. Bruner, 13 Mo.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

True, it is a matter of discretion ; but then the discretion is not willful or arbitrary, but legal. And, although its exercise be not purely a matter of law, yet it “involve! a matter of law or legal inference,” in the language of the Code, and an appeal will lie. Lovinier v. Pearce, 70 N. C. 171.

In criminal law and the law of torta, It means the capacity to distinguish between what Is right and wrong, lawful or unlawful, wise or foolish, sufficiently to render one amenable and responsible for his acts. Towle v. State, 3 Fla. 214.

— Judicial discretion, legal discretion.

These terms are applied to the discretionary action of a judge or court, and mean discretion as above defined, that is, discretion bounded by the rules and principles of law, and not arbi- trary, capricious, or unrestrained.

Judicial discretion, in Coke's compressed maxim, is knowing through law what is just — discretion bounded by law, not arbitrary will.

(paraphrase) DuVernay's film dramatizes the 1965 Selma marches against the disfranchisement of Black voters — the systematic deprivation of the franchise the entry defines. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry: 'to deprive of any franchise, as of the right of voting in elections.' Selma is genuinely about disfranchisement and its reversal, not a title-match.

DISFRANCHISEMENT.

The act of dis- franchising. The act of depriving a member of a corporation of his right as such, by expulsion. 1 Bouv. Inst no. 192. Richards v. Clarksburg, 30 W. Va. 491, 4 S. E. 774; White v. Brownell, 4 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) (N. Y.) 192.

Why: The law forbids disinheriting the true firstborn in favor of a preferred son — the scriptural disherison rule.

DISHONOR.

In mercantile law and usage. To refuse or decline to accept a bill of exchange, or to refuse or neglect to pay a bill or note at maturity. Shelton v. Bralth- waite, 7 Mees. & W. 436 ; Brewster v. Arnold, 1 Wis. 276.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Isaiah 61:1, KJV]

The Spirit of the Lord GOD is upon me; because the LORD hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound;

Why: The verse's commission is precisely to proclaim liberty to captives and open the prison — disincarceration as prophetic office. (Red-letter call: the speaker is the anointed Servant, not the LORD — flag off.)

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Frank Darabont, The Shawshank Redemption, 1994]

(paraphrase) Darabont's film is the modern archetype of liberation from prison — Andy Dufresne's escape and Red's parole from Shawshank. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry: 'To set at liberty, to free from prison.' The film's entire arc is disincarceration, literal and otherwise.

DISINHERISON.

In the civil law. The act of depriving a forced heir of the inherit- ance which the law gives him.

— Customary dispatch. Such as accords with the rules, customs, and usages of the port where the discharge is made.— Quick dispatch. Speedy discharge of cargo without allowance for the customs or rules of the port or for delay from the crowded state of the harbor or wharf. Mott v. Frost (D. C.) 47 Fed. 82; P.jorkqnist v. Certain Steel Rail Crop Ends (D. C.) 3 Fed. 717 ; Davis v. Wallace, T Fed. Cas. 182.

DISPAUPER.

When a person, by rea- son of his poverty, Is admitted to sue in for- m& pauperis, and afterwards, before the suit be ended, acquires any lands, or person- al estate, or is guilty of anything whereby he is liable to have this privilege taken from him, then he loses the right to sue in formA pauperis, and Is said to be dispaupered. Wharton.

Dispensntio eat mnli prohibit! provide relmxatio, ntilitate sen necessitate pen- seta; et eat de Jure domino regi conees- sa, propter impossibllitatem prsevldendi de omnibus particularlbns. A dispensa- tion Is the provident relaxation of a malum prohibitum weighed from utility or necessi- ty; and It is conceded by law to the king on account of the impossibility of foreknowl- edge concerning all particulars. 10 Coke, 88.

Dispensatio eat minus, quod mlnerat jus commune. A dispensation is a wound, which wounds common law. Dav. Ir. K. B. 69.

DISPENSATION.

An exemption from some laws; a permission to do something forbidden ; an allowance to omit something commanded ; the canonistlc name for a license. Wharton; Baldwin v. Taylor, 166

A relaxation of law for the benefit or ad- vantage of an individual. In the United States, no power exists, except in the legislature, to dispense with law ; and then it is not so much a dispensation as a change of the law. Bouvier.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 12:4, KJV]

How he entered into the house of God, and did eat the shewbread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the priests?

Why: Jesus cites David's eating of the shewbread — a thing 'not lawful' — as the precedent for dispensation, permission overriding the letter of the law.

[Geoffrey Chaucer, The Canterbury Tales, c. 1400]

(paraphrase) Chaucer's Pardoner rides with papal pardons — dispensations and indulgences — which he hawks for profit: the literary archetype of the licensed exemption the entry defines. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry: 'An exemption from some laws; a permission to do something forbidden... the canonistic name for a license.' The Pardoner's entire trade is dispensations; a genuine literary illumination.

DISPERSON ARE.

To scandalize or dis- parage. Blount.

DISPLACE.

This term, as used In ship- ping articles, means “disrate,” and does not import authority of the master to discharge a second mate, notwithstanding a usage In the whaling trade never to disrate an officer to a seaman. Potter v. Smith, 103 Mass. 68.

DISPONE.

In Scotch law. To grant or convey. A technical word essential to the conveyance of heritable property, and for which no equivalent Is accepted, however clear may be the meaning of the narty. Paters. Comp.

DXSPONO.

Lat To dispose of, grant, or convey. Disponet, he grants or alienates. Jus disponcndi, the right of disposition, i. of transferring the title to property.

DISPOSE.

To alienate or direct the own- ership of property, as disposition by will. Used also of the determination of suits. Called a word of large extent. Koerner v. Wilkinson, 96 Mo. App. 510, 70 S. W. 509; Love v. Pamplin (C. C.) 21 Fed. 760; U.

S. v. Hacker (D. C.) 73 Fed. 294; Benz v. Fabian, 54 N. J. Kq. 615, 35 Atl. 760; El- ston v. Schilling, 42 N. Y. 79; Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 256, 63 Am. Dec. 125.

DISPOSABLE PORTION.

That portion of a man’s property which he is free to dispose of by will to beneficiaries other than his wife and children. By the ancient com- mon law, this amounted to one-third of his estate if he was survived by both wife and children. 2 Bl. Comm. 492; Hopkins v. Wright, 17 Tex. 36. In the civil law (by the Lex Falcidia) it amounted to three-fourths. Mackeld. Korn. Law, §S 708, 771.

DISPOSING CAPACITY OR MIND.

These are alternative or synonymous phrases in the law of wills for “sound mind,” and "testamentary capacity,” (q . v.)

DISPOSITION.

In Scotch law. A deed of alienation by which a right to property is conveyed. Bell.

DISPOSITIVE FACTS.

Such as pro- duce or bring about the origination, transfer, or extinction of rights. They are either in- vestitive, those by means of which a right comes into existence, divestitive, those through which It terminates, or translative, those through which it passes from one per- son to another.

DISPOSSESS PROCEEDINGS.

Sum- mary process by a landlord to oust the ten- ant and regain possession of the premises for non-payment of rent or other breach of the conditions of the lease. Of local origin and colloquial use in New York.

DISPOSSESSION.

Ouster ; a wrong that carries with it the amotion of posses- sion. An act whereby the wrong-doer gets the actual occupation of the land or heredita- ment. It includes abatement, intrusion, dis- seisin, discontinuance, deforcement. 3 Bl. Comm. 167.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Kings 21:15, KJV]

And it came to pass, when Jezebel heard that Naboth was stoned, and was dead, that Jezebel said to Ahab, Arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money: for Naboth is not alive, but dead.

Why: The scriptural case-study of wrongful dispossession — possession seized by wrong after the owner's death.

DISPROVE.

To refute; to prove to be false or erroneous; not necessarily by mere denial, but by affirmative evidence to the contrary. Irsch v. Irsch, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc.

K. 182.

DISPUNISHABLE.

In old English law. Not answerable. Co. Lift. 27b, 53. 1 Steph. Comm. 245. Not punishable. "This mur- der is dispunishable.” 1 Leon. 270.

DISPUTE.

A conflict or controversy ; ■ conflict of claims or rights; an assertion of a right, claim, or demand on one side, met by contrary claims or allegations on the other. Slaven v. Wheeler, 58 Tex. 25 ; Keith v. Levi (C. C.) 2 Fed. 745; Ft. Pitt Gas Co. v. Borough of Sewlckley, 198 Pa. 201, 47 Atl. 957; Railroad Co. v. Clark, 92 Fed. 968, 35 O. C. A. 120.

— Disputable presumption. A presumption of law, which may be rebutted or disproved. See Presumptions.— Matter in dispute. The subject of litigation ; the matter for which a suit is brought and upon which issue is joined, and in relation to which jurors are called and witnesses examined. Lee v. Watson, 1 Wall. 339, 17 L. Ed. 557 ; Smith v. Adams, 130 U.

S. 167, 9 Sup. Ct 566, 32 L. Ed. 985.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 18:18, KJV]

The lot causeth contentions to cease, and parteth between the mighty.

Why: The proverb states the scriptural mechanism for settling disputes — the lot parting the mighty — bearing directly on controversy and its resolution.

DISQUALIFY.

To divest or deprive of qualifications; to incapacitate; to render in- eligible or unfit; as, In speaking of the “dis- qualification” of a Judge by reason of his interest in the case, of a juror by reason of his holding a fixed preconceived opinion, or of a candidate for public office by reason of non-residence, lack of statutory age, pre- vious commission of crime, etc. In re Tyers’ Estate, 41 Misc. Rep. 378, 84 N. Y. Supp. 934; In re Maguire, 57 Cal. 606, 40 Am. Rep. 125; Carroll v. Green, 148 Ind. 362, 47 N. E. 223; In re Nevitt, 117 Fed. 448, 54 C. C. A. 622; State v. Blair, 53 Vt 28.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 1:17, KJV]

Ye shall not respect persons in judgment; but ye shall hear the small as well as the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man; for the judgment is God's: and the cause that is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it.

Why: The command against respecting persons in judgment is the scriptural ground of disqualification for interest or bias.

DISRATE.

In maritime law. To de- prive a seaman or petty officer of his "rat- ing” or rank; to reduce to a lower rate or rank.

DI8RATIONARE, or DERATION ARE.

To Justify; to clear one’s self of a fault; to traverse an Indictment ; to disprove. Enc. Lond.

[Robert Wise, The Body Snatcher, 1945]

(paraphrase) Wise's film dramatizes the Burke-and-Hare trade — grave-robbers supplying corpses to anatomists for dissection — the historical world behind the entry's 'anatomical examination of a dead body.' (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines dissection as anatomical examination of a dead body. The film is genuinely about the procurement of bodies for that purpose.

DISSEISE.

To dispossess; to deprive.

DISSEISEE.

One who is wrongfully put ■out of possession of his lands; one who Is disseised.

DISSEISIN.

Dispossession; a depriva- tion of possession; a privation of seisin; a usurpation of the right of seisin and posses- sion, and an exercise of such powers and privileges of ownership as to keep out or dis- place him to whom these rightfully belong. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 125; Probst v. Trustees, 129 U. S. 182, 9 Sup. Ct 263, 32 L. Ed. 642; Bond v. O'Gara, 177 Mass. 139, 58 N. E. 275, 83 Am. St. Rep. 265; Moody v. Fleming, 4 Ga. 115, 48 Am. Dec. 210; Clapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 553; Wash- hum v. Cutter, 17 Minn. 368 (Gil. 335).

It Is a wrongful putting out of him that Is seised of the freehold, not, as In abatement or intrusion, a wrongful entry, where the possession was vacant, but an attack upon him who Is in actual possession, and turning him out. It Is an ouster from a freehold In deed, as abatement and Intrusion are ousters In law. 8 Steph. Comm. 386.

When one man invades the possession of an- other, and by force or surprise turns him out of the occupation of his lands, this is termed a "disseisin," being a deprivation of that actual seisin or corporal possession of the freehold which the tenant before enjoyed. In other words, a disseisin is said to be when one enters intending to usurp the possession, and to oust another from the freehold. To constitute an entry a disseisin, there must be an ouster of the freehold, either by taking the profits or by claiming the inheritance. Brown.

According to the modern authorities, there seems to be no legal difference between the words "seisin" and "possession," although there is a difference between the words "disseisin" and "dispossession;" the former meaning an estate gained by wrong and injury, whereas the latter may be by right or by wrong ; the former denoting an ouster of the disseisee, or some act equivalent to it, whereas by the latter no such act is implied. DISSEI8ITRIX.

A female disseisor; a dlsselsoress. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 12, | 4.

DISSEISOR.

One who puts another out of the possession of his lands wrongfully.

DISSEISORESS.

A woman who unlaw- fully puts another out of his land.

DI8SENSUS.

Lat In the civil law. The mutual agreement of the parties to a simple contract obligation that it shall be dissolved or annulled; technically, an un- doing of the consensus which created the obligation. Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 641.

DISSENT.

Contrariety of opinion; re- fusal to agree with something already stated or adjudged or to an act previously per- formed.

The term is most commonly used in Amer- ican law to denote the explicit disagreement of one or more judges of a court with the de- cision passed by the majority upon a case before them. In such event, the non-concur- ring judge Is reported as “dissenting.”

—Dissenting opinion. The opinion in which a judge announces his dissent from the conclu- sions held by the majority of the court, and expounds his own views.

DISSENTERS.

Protestant seceders from the established church of England. They are of many denominations, principally Presby- terians, Independents, Methodists, and Bap- tists ; but, as to church government, the Baptists are Independents.

DISSIGNARE.

Dissimulations tollitnr injuria. An injury Is extinguished by the forgiveness or reconcilement of the party Injured. Ersk. Inst 4, 4, 108.

DISSOLUTION.

In contracts. The dissolution of a contract Is the cancellation or abrogation of it by the parties themselves, with the effect of annulling the binding force of the agreement, and restoring each party to his original rights. In this sense it Is frequently used In the phrase "dissolution of a partnership.” Wlliston v. Camp, 9 Mont. 88, 22 Pac. 501.

Of corporations. The dissolution of a corporation Is the termination of Its exlstence as a body politic. This may take place in several ways; as by act of the legislature, where that is constitutional ; by surrender or forfeiture of its charter ; by expiration of its charter by lapse of time ; by proceedings for winding it up under the law; by loss of all its members or their reduction below the statutory limit. Matthews v. Bank, 60 S.

C. 183, 38 S. E. 437; Lyons-Thomas Hard- ware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co., 86 Tex. 143, 24 S. W. 16, 22 L. R. A. 802; Theis v. Gaslight Co., 34 Wash. 23, 74 Pac. 1004.

In practice. The act of rendering a legal proceeding null, abrogating or revoking it; unloosing its constraining force ; as when an injunction is dissolved by the court. Jones v. Hill, 6 N. C. 131.

The constitutional qualification on legislative dissolution of a corporation — 'where that is constitutional' — rests on the rule that a corporate charter is a contract within the Contract Clause (U.S. Const. art. I, § 10), limiting the legislature's power to dissolve or impair it.

Why: Scoped to the corporations paragraph only. The entry names the constitutional limit without identifying it; Dartmouth College is the canonical authority for that limit. Confident this landmark citation is real. Not ex...

(paraphrase) Mantel's novel follows Thomas Cromwell through Henry VIII's dissolution of the monasteries — the great historical instance of corporate bodies being terminated, the entry's 'dissolution of corporations' sense. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry covers dissolution of contracts, corporations, and Parliament; the dissolution of the monasteries is the archetypal English instance of the corporate sense.

DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT.

The crown may dissolve parliament either in person or by proclamation; the dissolution is usually by proclamation, after a prorogation. No parliament may last for a longer period than seven years. Septennial Act, 1 Geo. I. c. 38. Under 6 Anne, c. 37, upon a demise of the crown, parliament became ipso facto dissolved six months afterwards, but under the Reform Act, 1867, its continuance is now nowise affected by such demise. —Statute of distribution!. A law prescrib- ing the manner of the distribution of the es- tate of an intestate among his heirs or rela- tives. Such statutes exist in all the states.

DISTRIBUTIVE.

Exercising or accom- plishing distribution; apportioning, dividing, and assigning in separate items or shares.

— Distributive finding of the issue. The jury are bound to give their verdict for that party who, upon the evidence, appears to them to have succeeded in establishing his side of the issue. But there are cases in which an issue may be found distributively, i. e., in part for plaintiff, and in part for defendant. Thus, in an action for goods sold and work done, if the defendant pleaded that he never was indebted, on which issue was joined, a verdict might be found for the plaintiff as to the goods, and for the defendant as to the work. Steph. Pl. (7th Ed.) 77 d. — Distributive Justice. See Jus- tice.— Distributive share. The share or por- tion which a given heir receives on the legal distribution of an intestate estate. People v. Beckwith, 10 N. Y. St. Itep. 97 ; Page v. Rives, 18 Fed. Cas. 992. divided, for judicial purposes,, into sections called by some other name than “districts,” the same offi- cer is denominated “county attorney” or “state’s attorney.” Smith v. Scranton, 3 C. P. Rep. (Pa.) 84 ; State v. Salge, 2 Nev, 324.— District clerk. The clerk of a district court of either a state or the United .States.— Dis- trict courts. Courts of the United States, each having territorial jurisdiction over a diitrict, which may include a whole state or only part of it. Each of these courts is presided over by one judge, who must reside within the district. These courts have original jurisdic- tion over all admiralty and maritime causes and all proceedings in bankruptcy, and over all penal and criminal matters cognizable under the lawa of the United States, exclusive juris- diction over which is not vested either in the supreme or circuit courts. Also inferior courts of record in California, Connecticut, Iowa. Kansas, Louisiana, Minnesota, Nebraska, Neva- da, Ohio, and Texas are also called “district courts.” Their jurisdiction is for the most part similar to that of county courts, (g. v.)— District judge. The judge of a United States district court ; also, in some states, the judge of a district court of the state.— District par- ishes. Ecclesiastical divisions of parishes in England, for all purposes of worship, and for the celebration of marriages, christenings, church- ings, and burials, formed at the instance of the queen’s commissioners for building new church- es. See 3 Steph. Comm. 744.— District regis- try. By the English judicature act, 1873, { 60, it is provided that to facilitate proceedings in country districts the crown may, from time to time, by order in council, create district reg- istries, and appoint district registrars for the purpose of issuing writs of summons, and for other purposes. Docilments sealed in any such district registry shall be received in evidence without further proof, (section 61;) and the district registrars may administer oaths or do other things as provided by rules or a special order of the court, (section 62.) Power, how- ever, is given to a judge to remove proceedings from a district registry to the office of the high court. Section 65. By order in council of 12th of August, 1875, a number of district registries lmve been established in the places mentioned in thnt order; and the prothonotaries in Liv- erpool, Manchester, and Preston, the district registrar 'of the court of admiralty at Liver- pool, and the county court registrars in the oth- er places named, have been appointed district registrars. [Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 17 — exclusive congressional legislation over the seat of government]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The entry's constitutional claim — that the District is neither state nor territory but subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress — rests on the District Clause, giving Congress power 'to exercise exclusive Legislation' over the seat of government.

Why: The entry asserts the constitutional consequence without naming its source; the clause is the genuine, specific, real authority behind it. Confident in this citation. Not a restatement — it identifies the constitution...

[Deuteronomy 18:10, KJV]

There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch,

Why: The verse names and prohibits divination itself — the very act the Latin verb denotes. [re-homed from 'DIVINARE' to 'D IVIN ARE' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

DIVINE LAWS.

As distinguished from those of human origin, divine laws are those of which the authorship Js ascribed to God, being either positive or revealed laws or the laws of nature. Mayer v. Broke, 40 W. Va. 246, 22 S. E. 58; Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 527, 44 Am. Dec. 217.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 19:7, KJV]

The law of the LORD is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the LORD is sure, making wise the simple.

Why: The psalm's celebration of the divine law's perfection — the entry's subject described from inside. (The psalmist's voice, about the LORD, not from Him — flag off.)

DIVINE SERVICE.

Divine service was the name of a feudal tenure, by which the tenants were obliged to do some special divine services in certain ; as to sing so many masses, to distribute such a sum in alms, and the like. (2 Bl. Comm. 102; 1 Steph. Comm. 227.) It differed from tenure in fran- kalmoign, in this: that, In case of the tenure by divine service, the lord of whom the lands were holden might distrain for its non- performance, whereas, in case of frankal- moign, the lord has no remedy by distraint for neglect of the service, but merely a right of complaint to the visitor to correct it. Mozley & Whitley.

DIVISA.

In old English law. A device, award, or decree ; also a devise ; also bounds or limits of division of a parish or farm, etc. Cowell. Also a court held on the bound- ary, in order to settle disputes of the ten- ants.

Dlvisibilis est semper dlvisibilis. A thing divisible may be forever divided.

DIVISIBLE.

That which is susceptible of being divided.

— .Divisible contract. One which is in its nature and purposes susceptible of division and apportionment, having two or more parts in re- spect to matters and things contemplated and embraced by it, not necessarily dependent on each other nor intended by the parties so to be. Horseman v. Horseman, 43 Or. 83, 72 I’ac. 698.

DIVISION.

In English law. One of the smaller subdivisions of a county. Used in Lincolnshire as synonymous with “riding” in Yorkshire.

DIVISION OF OPINION.

In the prac- tice of appellate courts, this term denotes such a disagreement among the judges that there is not a majority in favor of uuy one view, and hence no decision can be rendered on the case. But it sometimes also denotes a division into two classes, one of which may comprise a majority of the judges ; as ■when we speak of a decision having proceed- ed from a “divided court.”

DIVISIONAL COURTS.

Courts in Eng- land, consisting of two or (in special cases) more judges of the high court of justice, sitting to transact certain kinds of business which cannot be disposed of by one Judge.

. DIVISUM IMPERIUM. Lat A divided jurisdiction. Applied, e. g., to the jurisdic- tion of courts of common law and equity over the same subject 1 Kent Comm. 366; 4 Steph. Comm. 9.

DIVORCE.

The legal separation of man and wife, effected, for cause, by the judg- ment of a court, and either totally dissolving the marriage relation, or suspending its ef- fects so far as concerns the cohabitation of the parties. Atherton v. Atherton, 181 U.

S. 155, 21 Sup. Ct 544, 45 L. Ed. 794 ; Mllleir v. Miller, 33 Cal. 355 ; Cast v. Cast 1 Utah, 112.

The dissolution is termed “divorce from the bond of matrimony,” or, in the Latin form of the expression, “a vinculo matrimonii;'' the suspension, “divorce from bed and board,” “o mcnaa ct thoro." The former divorce puts an end to the marriage ; the latter leaves it in full force. 2 Bish. Mar. & Div. $ 225.

The term “divorce” is now applied, in Eng- land, both to decrees of nullity and decrees of dissolution of marriage, while in America it is used only in cases of divorce a mcnaa or a vin- culo, a decree of nullity of marriage being granted for the causes for which a divorce a vinculo was formerly obtainable in England.

—Divorce a mens* et thoro. A divorce from table and bed, or from bed and board. A partial or qualified divorce, by which the par- ties are separated and forbidden to live or co- habit together, without affecting the marriage itself. 1 Bl. Comm. 440; 3 Bl. Comm. 94: 2 Steph. Comm. 311; 2 Bish. Mar. & Div. $ 225; Miller v. Clark. 23 Ind. 370; Rudolph v. Ru- dolph (Super. Buff.) 12 N. Y. Supp. 81 ; Zule v. Zule, 1 N. J. Eq. 99.— Divorce a vinculo matrimonii. A divorce from the bond of marriage. A total divorce of husband and wife, dissolving the marriage tie, and releasing the parties wholly from their matrimonial obliga- tions. 1 Bl. Comm. 440; 2 Steph. Comm. 310, 311: 2 Bish. Mar. & Div. { 225; De Roche v. De Roche, 12 N. D. 17, 94 N. W. 770.— For- eign divorce. A divorce obtained out of the state or country where the marriage was solem- nized. 2 Kent, Comm. 106, et seq.— Limited divorce. A divorce from bed and board ; or a judicial separation of husband and wife not dissolving the marriage tie.

Divortinm dleitnr a divertendo, qnia dr divertitnr ab uxore. Co. Litt. 235. Divorce is called from divertendo, because a man Is dlyerted from his wife.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 24:1, KJV]

When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house.

Why: The scriptural divorce writ — the legal procedure of divorce itself.

[Matthew 19:6, KJV]

Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Why: Jesus' ruling on the marriage bond's indissolubility — the counterweight every divorce law must answer.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Robert Benton, Kramer vs. Kramer, 1979]

(paraphrase) Benton's film — the prototypical screen divorce — follows Ted and Joanna Kramer through the dissolution of their marriage and the custody fight over their son. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines divorce as the legal separation of man and wife dissolving the marriage relation. The film is genuinely about that process, not a title-match.

DO.

Lat. I give. The ancient and apt- est word of feoffment and of gift. 2 Bl. Oomm. 310, 316; Co. Lltt. 9.

DO, DICO, ADDICO.

Lat. I give, 1 say, I adjudge. Three words used In the Homan law, to express the -extent of the civil juris- diction of the pristor. Do denoted that he gave or granted actions, exceptions, and judl- ces; dice, that he pronounced judgment; addico, that he adjudged the controverted property, or the goods of the debtor, etc., to the plaintiff. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 39.

DO, LEGO.

Lat I give, 1 bequeath; or I give and bequeath. The formal words of making a bequest or legacy, In the Roman law. Titio et Seio hominem Stichum do, lego, I give and bequeath to Tltius and Selus my man Stlcbus. Inst. 2, 20, 8, 30, 31. The expression Is literally retained In modern wills.

DO VT DES.

Lat. I give that you may give; I give [you] that you may give [me.] A formula in the civil iaw, constituting a general division under which those contracts (termed "innominate") were classed In which something was given by one party as a con- sideration for something given by the other. Dig. 19, 4; Id. 19, 5, 5; 2 Bl. Comm. 444.

DO UT FACIAS.

Lat. I give that you may do; I give [you] that you may do or make [for me.] A formula In the civil law, under which those contracts were classed In which one party gave or agreed to give money, in consideration the other party did or performed certain work. Dig. 19, 5, 6; 2 Bl. Cqmm. 444.

In this and the foregoing phrase, the con- junction "ui" is not to be taken as the tech- nical means of expressing a consideration. In the Roman usage, this word imported a modus, that is, a qualification ; while a consideration (causa) was more aptly expressed by the word "quia."

DOCTOR AND STUDENT.

The title of a work written' by St. Germain in the reign of Henry VIII. in which many principles of the common law are discussed in a popular manner. It is in the form of a dialogue between a doctor of divinity and a student in law, and has always been considered a book of merit and authority. 1 Kent, Comm. 504; Crabb, Eng. Law, 482.

DOCTORS’ COMMONS.

An Institution near St Paul’s Churchyard, in London, where, for a long time previous to 1857, the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts used to be held.

DOCTRINE.

A rule, principle, theory, or tenet of the law ; as, the doctrine of mer- ger, the doctrine of relation, etc.

Doctrinal interpretation. See INTER- PRETATION.

DOCUMENT.

An instrument on which ' is recorded, by means of letters, figures, or marks, matter which may be evidentially used. In this sense the term “document” ap- plies to writings; to words printed, litho- graphed, or photographed; to seals, plates, or stones on which inscriptions are cut or en- graved; to photographs and pictures; to maps and plans. The Inscription may be on stone or gems, or on wood, as well as on paper or parchment. 1 Whart. Ev. f 614; Johnson Steel Street-Rail Co. v. North Branch Steel Co. (C. C.) 48 Fed. 194 ; Arnold v. Water Co., 18 R. I. 189, 26 Atl. 55, 19

L. R. A. 602; Hayden v. Van Cortlandt, 84 Hun, 150, 32 N. Y. Supp. 507.

In the plural, the deeds, agreements, title- papers, letters, receipts, and other written instruments used to prove a fact In the civil law. Evidence delivered in the forms established by law, of whatever nature such evidence may be. The term is, however, applied principally to the testimony of witnesses. Sav. Dr. Rom. | 165.

— Ancient documents. Deeds, wills, and other writings more than thirty years old are so called ; they are presumed to be genuine without express proof, when coming from the proper custody. — Foreign document. One which was prepared or executed in, or which comes from, a foreign state or country.— Judi- cial documents. Proceedings relating to liti- gation. They are divided into (1) _ judgments, decrees, and verdicts; (2) depositions, exam- inations, and inquisitions taken in the course of a legal process ; (3) writs, warrants, plead- ings, etc., which are incident to any judicial proceedings. See 1 Starkie, Bv. 252. — Public document. A state paper, or other instru- ment of public importance or interest, issued or published by authority of congress or a state legislature. Also any document or record,, evi- dencing or connected with the public business or the administration of public affairs, preserv- ed in or issued by any department of the gov- ernment. See Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Me. 335, 46 Am. Dec. 598.— Documentary evi- dence. Such evidence as is furnished by writ- ten instruments, inscriptions, documents of all kinds, and also any inanimate objects admis- sible for the purpose, as distinguished from "oral" evidence, or that delivered by human beings viva voce.

DODRANS.

Lat. In Roman law. A subdivision of the as, containing nine un- does the proportion of nine-twelfths, or three-fourths. 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note.

DOE, JOHN.

The name of the fictitious plaintiff in the action of ejectment. 3 Stepb. Comm. 618.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Frank Capra, Meet John Doe, 1941]

(paraphrase) Capra's film turns the law's fictitious placeholder into a character: a down-and-out ballplayer hired to personify 'John Doe,' the ordinary-man signature on a protest letter — the fictitious everyman made flesh. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry: 'The name of the fictitious plaintiff in the action of ejectment.' The film takes the fictitious-person device itself as its premise.

DOED-BANA.

In Saxon law! Tbe act- ual perpetrator of a homicide.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:13, KJV]

Thou shalt not kill.

Why: The commandment prohibiting homicide itself — the act the Saxon term names.

DOER.

In Scotch law. An agent or at- torney. 1 Karnes, Eq. 325.

DOG-DRAW.

In old forest law. The manifest deprehension of an offender against venison in a forest, when he was found drawing after a deer by the scent of a bound led in his hand; or where a person bad wounded a deer or wild beast, by shooting at him, or otherwise, and was caught with a dog drawing after him to receive the same. Manwood, Forest Law, 2, c. 8.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[A Gest of Robyn Hode, c. 1500]

(paraphrase) The Robin Hood ballads' central offense is deer-poaching in the royal forest — the outlaw caught 'drawing after a deer,' exactly the forest-law deprehension the entry defines. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines dog-draw as catching a venison offender found drawing after a deer with a hound. Poaching the king's deer is the ballads' signature crime; genuine fit.

DOG-LA TIN.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The Latin of Illiterate persons; Latin words put together on the .English grammatical system.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Terry Jones, Monty Python's Life of Brian, 1979]

(paraphrase) In the film's famous Latin lesson, a Roman centurion drills Brian on the correct grammar of 'Romans go home' — the screen's best-loved encounter with the illiterate's Latin the entry defines. (paraphrase)

Why: Headword as parsed ('DOG-LA TIN' = DOG-LATIN). The entry: 'The Latin of illiterate persons; Latin words put together on the English grammatical system.' The centurion scene is genuinely about bad Latin being corrected.

DOGGER.

In maritime law. A light ship or vessel; dogger-flsh, fish brought in ships. Cowell.

DOGGER-MEN.

Fishermen that belong to dogger-ships.

DOGMA.

In the civil law. A word oc- casionally used as descriptive of an ordi- nance of the senate. See Nov. 2, 1, I ; Dig. 27, 1, 6.

DOING.

The formal word by which serv- ices were reserved and expressed in old con- veyances; as "rendering" (reddendo) was expressive of rewf. Perk. c. 10, H 625, 635, 638.

' DOITKUf, or DOIT. A base coin of small value, prohibited by St. 3 Hen. V. c. 1. We still retain the phrase, in the com- mon saying, when we would undervalue a man, that he is not worth a doit. Jacob.

DOLE.

A part or portion of a meadow Is so called; and the word has the general signification of share, portion, or the like; as "to dole out" anything among so many- poor persons, meaning to deal or distribute in portions to them. Holthouse.

Is Scotch law. Criminal Intent; evil design. Bell, Diet. voc. "Crime."

DOLES, or DOOL8. Slips of pasture left between the furrows of plowed land.

DOLO.

Sax A wound. Spelman.

DOLG-BOTE.

A recompense for a scar or wound. Cowell.

DOLL Lat. See Doi-tra.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 21:25, KJV]

Why: The lex talionis clause on wounds — the scriptural measure of recompense for a wound.

DOLLAR.

The unit employed In the United States In calculating money values. It Is coined both In gold and silver, and la of the value of one hundred cents.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Coinage Act of 1792 — established the dollar as the U.S. monetary unit]

The dollar as the United States' monetary unit, valued at one hundred cents, was established by the Coinage Act of 1792, which created the U.S. Mint and the decimal coinage.

Why: The entry defines the dollar as the American money unit; the genuine Law-well illumination is the statute that made it the unit. Same statute as the DIME footnote — not duplication, but the same historical fact illumi...

[Wu-Tang Clan, 'C.R.E.A.M.', 1993]

Lyric (hook): "Cash rules everything around me, C.R.E.A.M., get the money, dollar dollar bill y'all." Black's defines the dollar as the United States' unit for calculating money values; the hook names the dollar bill verbatim and repeatedly as the very object the song is about — money's rule over everything around the speaker.

Why: Added because the lyric is verbatim-certain (one of the most quoted hooks in hip-hop), correctly attributed, and directly illuminates the entry: the legal unit of money value is the song's named subject. No force-fit...

DOLO.

In Spanish law. Bad or mis- chievous design. White, New Becop. b. 1, tit L c. 1, { 3.

extreme culpa as if It were dolus, upon the maxim culpa dolo comparatur. A person Is always liable for dolus producing damage, but not always for culpa producing damage, even though extreme, e. g., a depositary Is only liable for dolus, and not for negligence. Brown.

— Dolus bonus, dolus mains. In a wide sense, the Roman law distinguishes between “good," or rather “permissible” dolus and “bad” or fraudulent dolus. The former Is justifiable or allowable deceit: it is that which a man may employ in self-defense against an unlawful attack, or for another permissible purpose, as when one dissembles the truth to prevent a lunatic from injuring himself or others. The latter exists where one intentionally misleads another or takes advantage of another’s error wrongfully, by any form of deception, fraud, or cheating. Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 179 ; Broom, Max. 349 ; 2 Kent, Coram. 560, note.— Dolus duns locum contractu!. Fraud (or deceit) {living rise to the contract; that is, a fraudu- ent misrepresentation made by one of the parties to the contract, and relied upon by the other, and which was actually instrumental in inducing the latter to enter into the con- tract.—Doll capax. Capable of malice or criminal intention; having sufficient discretion and intelligence to distinguish between right and wrong, and so to become amenable to the criminal laws.— Doll inoapax. Incapable of criminal Intention or malice; not of the age of discretion ; not possessed of sufficient discretion and intelligence to distinguish between right and wrong to the extent of being criminally responsible for his actions.

Dolus auctorls uon uooet successor!.

The fraud of a predecessor prejudices not his successor.

Dolus drouitu aoa purgatur. Fraud Is not purged by circuity. Bac. Max. 4; Broom, Max. 228.

[Maxim: Dolo malo pactum se non servaturum — an agreement induced by fraud cannot stand (Dig. 2, 14, 7, 9)]

The operative legal consequence of dolus in contract is the Digest rule that an agreement induced by fraud cannot stand.

Why: The entry defines dolus at length (guile, deceit, malicious fraud); the maxim states the principle the definition serves — fraud vitiates the agreement it induces. Copied in its standard certain form (the body carries…

[Patricia Highsmith, The Talented Mr. Ripley, 1955]

(paraphrase) Highsmith's Tom Ripley — the charming impostor whose every relation is a 'fraudulent address or trick used to deceive' — is fiction's purest study of dolus, guile as a way of life. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines dolus as guile, deceitfulness, malicious fraud, 'any subtle contrivance by words or acts with a design to circumvent.' Ripley is the textbook fictional embodiment.

DOM.

PBOC. An abbreviation of Do- mus Proccmm or Domo Procennn; the house of lords in England. Sometimes ex- pressed by the letters D. P.

DOMAIN.

The complete and absolute ownership of land; a paramount and In- dividual right of property in land. People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 658. . Also the real estate so owned. The inherent sovereign pow- er claimed by the legislature of a state, of controlling private property for public uses, is termed the “right of eminent domain.” 2 Kent, Comm. 339. See Eminent Domain.

A distinction has been made between “prop- erty" and "domain.” The former is said to be that quality which is conceived to be in the thing itself, considered as belonging to such or such person, exclusively of all others. By the latter is understood that right which the owner has of disposing of the thing. Hence "domain and “property" are said to be correlative terms. The one is the active right to dispose of; the other a passive quality which follows the thing and places it at the disposition of the owner. 3 Toullier, no. 83.

-■-National domain. A term sometimes ap- plied to the aggregate of the propertyowned directly by a nation. Civ. Code In. 1900, art. 486.— Public domain. This term embraces all lands, the title to which, is in the United States, including as well land occupied for the purposes of federal buildings, arsenals, dock-yards, etc., as land of an agricultural or mineral character hot yet granted to private owners. Barker v. Harvey, 181 U. S. 481, 21 Sup. Ct. 690. 45 L. Ed. 963 ; Day Land & Cattle Co. v. State, 68 Tex. 526, 4 S. W. 865.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 24:1, KJV]

The earth is the LORD's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.

Why: The psalm locates absolute ownership in God — the root from which every human domain derives.

DOMBEC, DOMBOC.

(Sax. From dom, judgment, and bee, hoc, a book.) Dome-book or doom-book. A name given among the Saxons to a code of laws. Sev- eral of the Saxon kings published domboca, but the most important one was that attrib- uted to Alfred. Crabb, Com. Law, 7. This is sometimes confounded with the celebrated Domesday-Book. See Dome-Book, Domes- DAT.

DOMESTIC, n. Domestics, or. In full, domestic servants,, are servants who reside In the same house with the master they serve. The term does not extend to work- men or laborers employed out of doors. Ex parte Meason, 5 Bin. (Pa.) 167.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The Louisiana Civil Code enumerates as domestics those who receive wages and stay In the house of the person paying and em- ploying them, for his own service or that of his family; such as valets, footmen, cooks, butlers, and others who reside in the house. Persons employed in public houses are not included. Cook v. Dodge, 6 La. Ann. 276.

DOMESTIC, ad j. Pertaining, belonging, or relating to a home, a domicile, or to the place of birth, origin, creation, or transac- tion.

—Domestic animals. Such as are habituated to live in or about tbe habitations of men, or such as contribute to the support of a family or the wealth of the community. This term in- cludes horses, (State v. Gould, 26 W. Va. 264 ; Osborn v. Lenox, 2 Allen [MassJ 207,) but may or may not include dogs. See Wilcox v. State, 101 Ga. 593, 28 S. E. 981, 39 L. DOME.

(Sax.) Doom; sentence; Judg- ment. An oath. The homager's oath in the black book of Hereford. Blount.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ecclesiastes 12:14, KJV]

For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

Why: The Preacher's doctrine of universal judgment — the doom toward which every sentence points.

DOME-BOOK.

A book or code said to have been compiled under the direction of Alfred, for the general use of the whole kingdom of England; containing, as is sup- posed, the principal maxims of the common law, the penalties for misdemeanors, and the forms of judicial proceedings. It is said to have been extant so late as the reign of Edward IV., but is now lost. 1 Bl. Comm. 64, 65.

DOME8DAY, DOMESDAY - BOOK.

(Sax.) An ancient record made in the time of William the Conqueror, and now remain- ing in the English exchequer, consisting of two volumes of unequal size, containing mi- nute and accurate surveys of the lands in England. 2 Bl. Comm. 49, 50. The work was begun by five Justices in each county in 1081, and finished in 1086.

DOMESMEN.

DOMESTICU8.

In old European law. A seneschal, steward, or major domo; a Judge's assistant; an assessor, (q . v.) Spel- man.

DOMICELLA.

In old English law. A damsel. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, i 80.

DOMICELI/U8. In old English law. A better sort of servant in monasteries; also ,an appellation of a king’s bastard.

DOMICILE.

That place in which a man has voluntarily fixed the habitation of him- self and family, not for a mere special or temporary purpose, but with the present In- tention of making a permanent home, until some unexpected event shall occur to induce him to adopt some other permanent home. In re Gameau, 127 Fed. 677, 62 C. C. A. 403.

In its ordinary acceptation, a person’s domi- cile is tbe place where he lives or has his home. In a strict and legal sense, that is properly the domicile of a person where he has his true, fixed, permanent home and principal establish- ment, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning. Anderson v. Anderson, 42 Vt. 350, 1 Am. Rep. 334.

Domicile is but the established, fixed, perma- nent, or ordinary dwelling-place or place of resi- dence of a person, as distinguished from his temporary and transient, though actual, place of residence. It is his legal residence, as dis- tinguished from hia temporary place of abode; or his home, as distinguished from a place to which business or pleasure may temporarily call him. Salem v. Lyme, 29 Conn. 74.

Domicile is the place where a person has fixed his habitation and has a permanent residence, without any present intention of removing therefrom. Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 504, 520.

One's domicile is the place where one’s family permanently, resides. Daniel v. Sullivan, 40 Ga. 277.

In international law, “domicile” means a resi- dence at a. particular place, accompanied with positive or presumptive proof of intending to continue there for an unlimited time. State v. Collector of Bordentown. 32 N. J. Law, 192.

Bales, 13 Fed. Cas. 803. — Necessary domicile. That kind of domicile which exists by operation of law, as distinguished from voluntary domicile or domicile of choice. Phillim. Dom. 27-97.

DOMICIUSD.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Established in a given domicile; belonging to a given state or jur- isdiction by right of domicile.

DOMICILIARY.

Pertaining to domicile ; relating to one's domicile. Existing or creat- ed at, or connected with, the domicile of a suitor or of a decedent.

“Domicile” and “residence” are not syn- onymous. The domicile is the home, the fixed plate of habitation; while residence is a transient place of dwelling. Bartlett v. New York. 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 44.

The domicile is the habitation fixed in any place with an intention of always staying there, while simple residence is much more temporary in its character. New York v. Genet, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 489.

Glassification. Domicile is of three sorts, —domicile by birth, domicile by choice, and dom- icile by operation of law. The first is the com- mon case of the place of birth, domicilium orig- inia; the second is that which is voluntarily acquired by a party, proprio mot u; the last is consequential, as that of the wife arising from marriage. Story, Confl. Laws, jj 40. And see Railroad Co. v. Kimbrough, 115 Ky. 512, 74

S. W. 229; Price v. Price, 156 Pa. 617, 27 Atl. 291 ; White v. Brown, 29 Fed. Cas. 992. The following terms are also used: Commercial domicile. A domicile acquired t>y the main- tenance of a commercial establishment ; a domi- cile which a citizen of a foreign country may acquire by conducting business in another coun- try. U. S. v. Chin Quong Look (D. C.) 52 Fed. 204; Lau Ow Bew v. IT. S., 144 U. S. 47, 12 Sup. Ct. 517, 36 L. Ed. 340. — De facto domi- cile. In French law, permanent and fixed res- idence in France of an alien who has not ac- uired French citizenship nor taken steps to o so, but who intends to make bis home per- manently or indefinitely in that country ; call- ed domicile "de facto” because domicile in the full sense of that term, as used in France, can only be acquired by an act equivalent to nat- uralization. In re Cruger's Will, 36 Misc. Rep. 477, 73 N. Y. Supp. 812.— Domicile of origin. The home of the parents. Phillim. Dom. 25, 101. That which arises from a man’s birth and connections. 5 Yes. 750. The domicile of the parents at the time of birth, or what is termed the "domicile of origin,” constitutes the domicile of an infant, and continues until aban- doned, or until the acquisition of a new domi- cile in a different place. Prentiss v. Barton, 1 Brock. 389, 393. Fed. Cas. No. 11,384.— Domi- cile of succession. This term, as distinguish- ed from a commercial, political, or forensic domicile, means the actual residence of a person within some jurisdiction, of such a character as shall, according to the well-established princi- ples of public law, give direction to the succes- sion of Jus personal estate. Smith v. Croora, 7 Fla. 81.— Elected domicile. The domicile of parties fixed in a contract between them for the purposes of such contract. Woodworth v. Bank of America, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 417, 10 Am. Dec. 239.— Foreign domicile. A domicile estab- lished by a citizen or subject of one sovereignty within the territory of another.— National domicile. The domicile of a person, consid- ered as being within the territory of a particu- lar nation, and not with reference to a particu- lar locality or subdivision of a nation. — Natu- ral domicile.

Sp. In Spanish law. A term corresponding to and derived from the Latin dominium, (q . v.) Dominio alto, em- inent domain; dominio directo, immediate ownership; dominio utile, beneficial owner- ship. Hart T. Burnett 15 Cal. 556.

DOMINION.

Ownership, or right to property. 2 Bl. Comm. 1. Title to an ar- ticle of property which arises from the pow- er of disposition and the right of claiming it Baker v. Westcott, 73 Tex. 129, 11 S.

W. 157. “The holder has the dominion of the bill.” 8 East, 579.

Sovereignty or lordship; as the dominion of the seas. Moll, de Jure Mar. 91, 92.

In the civil law. with reference to the title to property which is transferred by a sale of it dominion is said to be either “proximate” or “remote.” the former being the kind of title vest- ing in the purchaser when he has acquired both the ownership and the possession of the article, the latter describing the nature of his title when he has legitimately acquired the owner- ship of the property but there has been no de- livery. Coles v. Perry, 7 Tex. 109.

[Scripture] — Scripture
[Genesis 1:26, KJV]
And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.
Why: The creation grant of dominion — man given rule over the earth, the charter of human dominion.

Classification. By the civil law (adopted into the English and American law) donations are either infer vivos (between living persons) or mortis causa (in anticipation of death.) As to these forms, see infra. A donatio or gift as between living persons is called donatio mera or puro when it is a simple gift without com- pulsion or consideration, that is, resting solely on the generosity of the donor, rb in the case of most .charitable gifts. It is called donatio remuneratoria when given as a reward for past services, but still not under any legal compul- sion, as in the case of pensions and land-grants. It is called donatio sub modo (or modalis) when given for the attainment of some special object or on condition that the donee shall do some- thing not specially for the benefit of the donor, as 'in the case of the endowment of hospitals, colleges, etc., coupled with the condition that they shall be established and maintained. Mack- eld. Rom. Law, § 466; Fisk v. Flores, 43 Tex. 340; Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 576. The fol- lowing terms are also used: Donatio condition- alls, a conditional gift ; donatio relata, a gift made with reference to some service already done, (Fisk v. Flores, 43 Tex. 340;) donatio stricta et coarctura, a restricted gift, as an es- tate tail.

—Donatio inofficiosa. An inofficious (undo- tiful) gift ; a gift of so great a part of the don- or’s property that the birthright portion of his heirs is diminished. Mackeld. Rom. Law, g 469. — Donatio inter vivos. A gift between the living. The ordinary kind of gift by one per- son to another. 2 Kent, Comm. 438 ; 2 Steph. Comm. 102. A term derived from the civil law. Inst. 2, 7, 2. A donation inter vivos (between living persons) is an act by which the donee divests himself at present and irrevocably of the thing given in favor of the donee who ac- cepts it Civ. Code La. art 1468.— Donatio mortis eansa. A gift made by a person in sickness, who, apprehending bis dissolution near, delivers, or causes to be delivered, to an- other the possession of any personal goods, to keep as bis. own in case of the donor’s decease. 2 Bl. Comm. 514. The civil law defines it to be a gift under apprehension of death ; as when anything is given upon condition that, if the donor dies, the donee shall possess it ab- solutely, or return it if the donor should sur- vive or should repent of having made the gift, or if the donee should die before the donor. Adams v. Nicholas, 1 Miles (Pa.) 109-117. A gift in view of death is one which is made ip contemplation, fear, or peril of death, and with intent that it shall take effect only in case of the death of the giver. Civ. Code Cal. g 1149. A donation mortis causa (in prospect of death) is an act to take effect when the do- nor shall no longer exist, by which he disposes of the whole or a part of his property, and which is irrevocable. Civ. Code La. art. 1469. —Donatio propter nuptias. A gift on account of marriage. In Roman law, the bridegroom’s gift to the bride in antipicatjon of marriage and to secure her dos was called “donatio ante nuptias;’’ but by an ordinance of Justinian such gift might be made after as well as before marriage, and in that case it waB called “donatio propter nuptias.’’ Mackeld. Rom. Law, g 572.

Donatio non praesnmitnr. A gift is not presumed. Jenk. Cent 109.

Donatio perilcitar possessione aoci- pientia. A gift is perfected [made complete] by the possession of the receiver. Jenk. Cent 109, case 9. A gift is incomplete until pos- session is delivered. 2 Kent Comm. 438.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 9:7, KJV]

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.

Why: The scriptural rule of giving — purposed in the heart, not grudging — bearing on the donor's act.

DOS.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

In Roman law. Dowry ; a wife's marriage portion ; all that property which on marriage is transferred by the wife her- self or by another to the husband with a view of diminishing the burden which the marriage will entail upon him. It Is of three kinds. Profectitia dos is that which is deriv- ed from the property of the wife’s father or paternal grandfather. That dos Is termed adventitia which Is not profectitia in respect to its source, whether it is given by the wife from her own estate or by the wife’s mother or a third person. It is termed rcccptitia dos when accompanied by a stipulation for its reclamation by the constitutor on the termi- nation of the marriage. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, ii 561, 563.

In old English l»w. The portion given to the wife by the husband at the church door, in consideration of the marriage ; dow- er; the wife's portion out of her deceased husband’s estate in case he had not endowed her.

—Dos ratlonabills. A reasonable marriage portion. A reasonable part of her husbanaa estate, to which every widow is entitled, of lands of which her husband may have endowed her on the day of marriage. Co. Litt. 336. Dower, at common law. 2 Bl. Comm. 134.

Dos do dote peti non debet. Dower ought not to be demanded of dower. Co. Litt. 31 ; 4 Coke, 1226. A widow is not dow- able of lands assigned to another woman in dower. 1 Hill. Real Prop. 135.

Dos rationabilia vel legitim* est enjns- libet mulieria de quoeuuque tenemento tertia pars omnium terrarum et tene- mentcmm, quae vir suns tenuit in do- miuio suo ut de feodo, etc. Co. Litt. 336. Reasonable or legitimate dower belongs to every woman of a third part of all the lauds and tenements of which her hnsband was seised in bis demesne, as of fee, etc.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 34:12, KJV]

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me: but give me the damsel to wife.

Why: Scripture's own use of 'dowry' — the marriage portion given for the bride — the entry's concept in its biblical dress.

(paraphrase) Dostoevsky's novella follows the clerk Golyadkin as his identical double appears and usurps his life — the literary archetype of 'acting in two capacities or having two aspects.' (paraphrase)

Why: The entry: 'Twofold; acting in two capacities or having two aspects.' The novel is the classic fiction of the double.

DOUBLES.

Letters-patent Cowell.

DOUBT.

Uncertainty of mind; the ab- sence of a settled opinion or conviction ; the attitude of mind towards tbe acceptance of or belief in a proposition, theory, or statement, in which the judgment is not at rest but inclines alternately to either side. Rowe v. Baber. 93 Ala. 42?, 8 South. 865; Smith v. Railway Co., 143 Mo. 33, 44 S. W. 718; West Jersey Traction Co. v. Camden Horse R. Co., 52 N. J. Eq. 452, 29 Atl. 333.

Reasonable doubt. This is a term often used, probably pretty well understood, but not easily defined. It does not mean a mere possi- ble doubt, because everything relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence. leaves the minds of jurors in that condi- tion that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. Law, 601, 615. A reasonable doubt is deemed to ex- ist, within the rule that the jury should not convict unless satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, when the evidence is not sufficient to sat- isfy the judgment of the truth of a proposition with such certainty that a prudent man would feel safe in acting upon it in his own important affairs. Arnold v. State, 23 Ind. 170. The burden of proof is upon the prosecutor. All the presumptions of law independent of evi- dence are in favor of innocence ; and every person is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty. If upon such proof there is reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal; for it is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one, arising from the doctrine of chances, that the fact charged is more likely to be true than the contrary, but the evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a rea- sonable and moral certainty, — a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. This is proof beyond reasonable doubt; because if the law, which mostly depends upon considera- tions of a moral nature, should go further than this, and require absolute certainty, it would exclude circumstantial evidence altogether. DOWAOEB.

A widow who Is endowed, or who has a Jointure in lieu of dower. In England, this is a title or addition given to the widows of princes, dukes, earls, and other noblemen, to distinguish them from the wives of the heirs, who have right to bear the title.

1 Bl. Comm. 224.

-Dowager-queen. The widow of the king. As such she enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as queen consort. It is not treason to conspire her death or violate her chastity, because the succession to the crown is not thereby endangered. No man, however, can marry her without a special license from the sovereign, on pain of forfeiting his lands or goods. 1 Bl. Comm. 233.

Dower Is an estate for the life of the wid- ow in a certain portion of the following real estate of her husband, to which she has not relinquished her right during the marriage: (1) Of all lands of which the husband was seised In fee during the marriage ; (2) of all lands to which another was seised in fee to his use; (3) of all lands to which, at the time of his death, he' had a perfect equity, having paid all the purchase money therefor. Code Ala. 1886, 8 1892.

The term, both technically and in popular acceptation, has reference to real estate exclusively.

“Dower,” in modem use, is and should be dis- tinguished from “dowry.” The former is a provision for a widow on her husband’s death; the latter is a bride’s portion on her marriage. Wendler v. Lambeth, 163 Mo. 428, 63 8. W. 684.

—Dower ad ostium eeclesisa. Dower at the church door or porch. An ancient kind of dow- er in England, where a man, (being tenant in fee-simple, of full age,) openly at the churek door, where all marriages were formerly cele- brated, after affiance made and troth plighted between them, endowed his wife with the whole of his lands, or such quantity as he pleased, at the same time specifying and ascertaining the same. Litt. f 39; 2 Bl. Comm. 133. — Dower by the common law. The ordinary kind of dower in English and American law, consisting of a life interest in one-third of the lands of which the husband was seised in fee at any time during the coverture. DOVKT.

The property which a woman brings to her husband in marriage; now more commonly called a “portion.”

By dowry is meant the effects which the wife brings to the husband to support the expenses of marriage. Civil Code La. art. 2337.

This word expresses the proper meaning of the “dos" of the Roman, the “dot" of the French, and the “dote" of the Spanish, law, but is a very different thing from “dower,” with which it has sometimes been con- founded.

By dowry, in the Louisiana Civil Code, is meant the effects which the wife brings to the husband to support the expenses of marriage. It is given to the husband, to be enjoyed by him so long as the marriage shall last, and the in- come of it belongs to him. He alone has the administration of it during marriage, and his wife cannot deprive him of it. The real estate settled as dowry is inalienable during marriage, unless the marriage contract contains a stipula- tion to the contrary. De Young v. De Young, 6 La. Ann. 7%.

[Maxim: Draco's laws were 'written not with ink, but blood' — the orator Demades, quoted by Plutarch in his Life of Solon.]

Why: The entry defines the Draconian laws as 'exceedingly severe.' Demades' saying (Plutarch, Solon 17) is the classical verdict on exactly that severity; verified via the Perseus text of Plutarch.

DROIT.

In French law. Right jus- tice, equity, law, the whole body of law ; al- so a right.

This term exhibits the same ambiguity which is discoverable In the German equiv- alent, “ recht ” and the English word “right.” On the one hand, these terms answer to the Roman “jus” and thus indicate law In the abstract, considered as the foundation of all rights, or the complex of underlying moral principles which impart the character of justice to all positive law, or give it an ethical content. Taken in this abstract sense, the terms may be adjectives, in which case they are equivalent to “Just," or nouns, in which case they may be paraphrased by the expressions “Justice,” “morality," or “equity.” On the other hand, they serve to point out a right; that is, a power, priv- ilege, faculty, or demand, inherent in one person, and incident upon another. In the latter signification, dtvit (or recht or right) is the correlative of “duty" or “obligation." In the former sense, it may be considered as opposed to wrong, injustice, or the absence of law. Droit has the further ambiguity that it is sometimes used to denote the existing body of law considered as one whole, or the sum total of a number of individual laws taken together. See Jus; Recht; Right.

— Droit d’aocessiom. That property which is acquired by making a new species out of the material or another. It is equivalent to the Roman “specificatio." — Droit d'auboine. A rule by which all the property of a deceased foreigner, whether movable or immovable, was confiscated to the use of the state, to the ex- clusion of his heirs, whether claiming ab intes- tato or under a will of the deceased. Finally abolished in 1819. Opel v. Shoup, 100 Iowa, 407, 69 N. W. 560, 37 L. R. A. 583 — Droit d’execution. The tight of a stockbroker to sell the securities bought by him for account of a client, if the latter does not accept delivery thereof. The same expression is also applied to the sale by a stockbroker of securities deposited with him by his client, in order to guaranty the payment of operations for which the latter has given instructions. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 557.— Droit de brim. A right formerly claimed by the lords of the coasts of certain parts of France, to shipwrecks, by which not only the property, but the persons of those who were cast away, were confiscated for the prince who was lord of the coast. Oth- erwise called “droit de bris sur le naufrage.” This right prevailed chiefly in Bretagne, and was solemnly abrogated by Henry III. as duke of Normandy, Aquitaine, and Uuienne, in a charter granted A. Steph, Lect 354.— Droit de prise. In French feudal law. The duty (incumbent on a roturier) of supplying to the kixig on cred- it during a certain period, such articles of domestic consumption as might be required for the royal household. Steph. Lect. 351.— Droit de quint. In French feudal law. A relief payable by a noble vassal to the king as his seigneur, on every change in the ownership of his fief. Steph. Lect. 350.— Droit de suite. The right of a creditor to pursue the debtor’s property into the hands of third persons for the enforcement of his claim.— Droits etvlls. This phrase in French law denotes private rights, the exercise of which is independent of the status (qualitd) of citizen. Foreigners enjoy them ; and the extent of that enjoyment is determined by the principle of reciprocity. Conversely, foreigners may be sued on contracts made by them in France. ' Brown.— Droit (erlt. —Duchy court of Lancaster. A tribunal of special jurisdiction, held before the chan- cellor of the duchy, or his deputy, concerning all matters of equity relating to lands holden of the crown, in right of the duchy of Lancas- ter; which is a thing very distinct from the county palatine, (which has also its separate chancery, for sealing of writs, and the like,) and comprises much territory which lies at a vast distance from it ; as particularly a very large district surrounded by the city of West- minster. The proceedings in this court are the same as were those on the equity side of the court of chancery, so that it seems not to be a court of record ; and, indeed, it has been holden that the court of chancery has a concurrent jurisdiction with the duchy court, and may take cognizance of the same causes. DUCROERE.

In French law. Guaran- ty ; equivalent to del credere, (which see.)

DUE. 1. Just; proper; regular; lawful; sufficient ; as in the phrases “due care,” “due process of law,” “due notice.”

2. Owing; payable; justly owed. That which one contracts to pay or perform to another; that which law or justice requires to be paid or done.

3. Owed, or owing, as distinguished from payable. A debt is often said to be due from a person where he Is the party owing It, or primarily bound to pay, whether the time for payment has or has not arrived.

4. Payable. A bill or note Is commonly said to be due when the time for payment of It has arrived.

The word “due” always imports a fixed and settled obligation or liability, but with refer- ence to the time for its payment there is con- siderable ambiguity in the use of the term, as will appear from the foregoing definitions, the precise signification being determined in each case from the context. It may mean that the debt or claim in question .is now (presently or immediately) matured and enforceable, or that it matured at some time in the past and yet remains unsatisfied, or that It is fixed and cer- tain but the day appointed for its payment has not yet arrived. But commonly, and in the absence of any qualifying expressions, the word “due” is restricted to the first of these meanings, the second being expressed by the term “overdue,”, and the third by the word “payable.” See Feeser v. Feeser, 93 Md. 716, 50 Atl. 406; Ames v. Ames, 128 Mass. 277; Van Hook v. Walton, 28 Tex. 75; Leggett v. Bank, 24 N. Y. 286; Scudder v. Scudder. 10 absence of negligence. This term, as usually understood in cases where the gist of the action is the defendant's negligence, implies not only that a party has not been negligent or careless, but that he has been guilty of no violation of law in relation to the subject- matter or transaction which constitutes the cause of action. Evidence that a party is guilty of a violation of law supports the issue of a want of proper care ; nor can it be doubted that in these and similar actions the aver- ment in the declaration of the use of due care, and the denial of it in the answer, properly and distinctly put in issue the legality of the con- duct of the party as contributing to the acci- dent or injury which forms the groundwork of the action.. No specific averment of the par- ticular unlawful act which caused or contrib- uted to produce the result complained of should, in Buch cases, be deemed necessary. See Ryan

This phrase is synonymous with "due process of law," or "the law of the land," and the general definition thereof is "law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice ;" and, while not always necessarily confined to judicial proceedings, yet these words have such a signification, when used to desig- nate the kind of an eviction, or ouster, from real estate by which a party is dispossessed, as to preclude thereunder proof of a construc- tive eviction resulting from the purchase of a paramount title when hostilely asserted by the party holding it. See Adler v. Whithec'k, 44 Ohio St. 569, 9 N. E. 672; In re Dorsey, 7 Port. (Ala.) 404 ; 'Backus v. Shipherd. 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 635; Dwight v. Williams, 8 Fed. Cas. 187 — Due notice. particular circumstances. Lawrence v. Bow- man, 1 McAll. 420, 15 Fed. Cas. 21 ; Slattery v. Doyle. 180 Mass. 27, 61 N. E. 264 ; Wilde v. Wilde, 2 Nev. 306.— Due process of law. Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice. 3 Story, Const. 264, 661. "Due process of law in each particular case means such an exercise of the powers of the government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safe- guards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs." Cooley, Const. Lim. 441. Whatever difficulty may be experienced in giving to those terms a definition which will embrace every permissible exertion of power affecting private rights, and exclude such as is forbidden, there can be no doubt of their meaning when applied to judi- cial proceedings. They then mean a course of legal proceedings according to those rules and principles which have been established in our systems of jurisprudence for the enforcement and protection of private rights. To give such roceedings any validity, there must be a tri- unal competent by its constitution — that is, by the law. of its creation— to pass upon the sub- ject-matter of the suit ; and, if that involves merely a determination of the personal liability of the defendant, he must be brought within its jurisdiction by service of process within the state, or his voluntary appearance. Pennoyer v. Neff. 95 U. S. 733, 24 L. Ed. 565. Due pro- cess of law implies the right of the person af- fected thereby to be present before the tribunal which pronounces judgment upon the question of life, liberty, or property, in its most com- prehensive sense ; to be heard, by testimony or otherwise, and to have 'the right of controvert- ing, by proof, every material fact which bears on the question of right in the matter involved. If any question of fact or liability be conclu- sively presumed against him, this is not due process of law. Zeigler v. Railroad Co., 58 Ala. 599. These phrases in the constitution do not mean the general body of the law, com- mon and statute, as it was at the time the con- stitution took effect; for that would seem to deny the right of the legislature to amend or repeal the law. They refer to certain funda- mental rights, which that system of jurispru- dence, of which ours is a derivative, has always recognized. Brown v. Levee Com'rs, 50 Miss. 468. “Due process of law,” as used in the con- stitution, cannot mean less than a prosecution or suit instituted and conducted according to the prescribed forms and solemnities for as- certaining guilt, or determining the title to property. DUEL.

A duel is any combat with deadly weapons, fought between two or more per- sons, by previous agreement or upon a pre- vious quarrel. Pen. Code Cal. g 225; State v. Fritz, 133 N. C. 725, 45 S. E. 957; State v. Herriott, 1 McMul. (S. C.) 130; Bassett v. State, 44 Fla. 2, 33 South. 262; Davis v. Modem Woodmen, 98 Mo. App. 713, 73 S. W. 923.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Samuel 17:8-9, KJV]

And he stood and cried unto the armies of Israel, and said unto them, Why are ye come out to set your battle in array? am not I a Philistine, and ye servants to Saul? choose you a man for you, and let him come down to me. If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants: but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and serve us.

Why: Goliath's formal challenge to single combat — the scriptural archetype of the duel, terms stated before witnesses.

[Stanley Kubrick, Barry Lyndon, 1975]

(paraphrase) Kubrick's film stages the ritual with lethal formality — notably Barry's pistol duel with Lord Bullingdon — the screen's most famous image of combat with deadly weapons by previous agreement. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines a duel as combat with deadly weapons 'by previous agreement or upon a previous quarrel.' The film's duels are textbook instances.

DUPLICATE.

When two written docu- ments are substantially alike, so that each might be a copy or transcript from the other, while both stand on the same footing as original instruments,- they are called “dupli- cates.” Agreements, deeds, and other docu- ments are frequently executed in duplicate, In order. that each party may have an orig- inal In his possession. State v. Graffam. 74 Wls. 643, 43 N. W. 727; Grant v. Griffith, 89 App. Dlv. 107, 56 N. Y. Supp. 791 ; Trust Co. v. Codington County, 9 S. D. 159, 68 N.

W. 314; Nelson v. Blakey, 54 Ind. 36.

A duplicate is sometimes defined to be the "copy” of a thing; but, though generally a copy, a duplicate differs from a mere copy, in having all the validity of an original. Nor, it seems, need it be an exact copy. Defined also to be the “counterpart” of an instrument; but In indentures there is a distinction between counterpart* executed by the several parties re- spectively, each party affixing his or her seal to only one counterpart, and duplioate original*, each executed by all the parties. Toms v. Cuming, 7 Man. & G. 91, note. The old in- dentures, charters, or chirographs seem to have had the character of duplicates. Burrill.

some other person or upon all persons gener- ally. But it is also used, in a wider sense, to designate that class of moral obligations which lie outside the jural sphere; such, namely, as rest upon an imperative ethical basis, but have not been recognized by the law as within its proper province for pur- poses of enforcement or redress. Thus, grat- itude towards a benefactor Is a duty, but its refusal will not ground an action. In this meaning "duty" is the equivalent of "moral obligation," as distinguished from a "legal obligation." See Kentucky v. Denni- son. 24 How. 107, 16 L. Ed. 717; Harrison v. Bush, 5 El. & Bl. 349.

As a technical term of the law. "duty" signifies a thing due ; that which is due from a person; that which a person owes to an- other. An obligation to do a thing. A word of more extensive signification than "debt," although both are expressed by the same , Latin word " debitum Beach v. Boynton, 26 Yt. 725, 733.

But in practice it is commonly reserved as the designation of those obligations of performance, care, or observance which rest up- on a person In an official or fiduciary capacity ; as the duty of an executor, trustee, man- ager, etc.

It also denotes a tax or impost due to the government upon the importation or expor- tation of goods.

-legal duty. An obligation arising from contract of the parties or the operation of the law. Riddell v. Ventilating Co., 27 Mont. 44, 69 Pac. 241. Why: The entry cross-refers to Declaration (the dying-declaration hearsay exception). The film's premise is literally a man delivering his own dying declaration to the authorities.

DYING WITHOUT ISSUE.

At com- mon law this phrase imports an indefinite failure of issue, and not a dying without is- sue surviving at the time of the death of the first taker. But this rule has been changed in some of the states, by statute or decisions, and in England by St. 7 Wm. IV., and 1 Viet. c. 26, $ 29.

Tbe words “die without issue,” and "die with- out leaving issue,” in a devise of real estate, im- port an indefinite failure of issue, and not the failure of issue at the death of the first taker. And no distinction is to be made between the words "without issue” and “without leaving is- sue.” Wilson v. Wilson, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 328; McGraw v. Davenport, 6 Port. (Ala.) 319.

In Connecticut, it has been repeatedly held that the expression “dying without issue,” and like expressions, have reference to the time of the death of the party, and not to an indefinite failure of issue. Phelps v. Phelps, 55 Conn. 359, 11 Atl. 596.

Dying without children imports not a failure of issue at any indefinite future period, but a leaving no children at the death of the legatee. Condict v. King, 13 N. J. Eq. 375.

If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger: her husband's brother shall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of an husband's brother unto her.

Why: Dying 'and have no child' is the very trigger of the levirate law — the scriptural consequence of dying without issue.

Earnest as part payment binding the sale lives on in the modern statute of frauds: where payment has been made and accepted (or goods received and accepted), the sale-of-goods contract is enforceable despite the writing requirement.

Why: The entry defines earnest's function (part payment binds the contract); the UCC provision is the genuine living rule giving that function legal effect under the statute of frauds. Confident this is the real UCC except...

EASEMENT.

A right in the owner of one parcel of land, by reason of such owner- ship, to use the land of another for a special purpose not inconsistent with a general prop- erty in the owner. 2 Wasbb. Real Prop. 25.

A privilege which the owner of one adja- cent tenement hath of another, existing in respect of their several tenements, by which that owner against whose tenement the priv- ilege exists is obliged to suffer or not to do something on or in regard to his own land for the advantage of him in whose land the privilege exists. Termes de la Ley.

A private easement is a privilege, service, or convenience which one neighbor has of another, by prescription, grant, or necessary implication, and without profit; ns a way over his land, a gate-way, water-course, and the like. Kitch. 105; 3 Cruise, Dig. 484. And see Harrison v. Boring, 44 Tex. 267; Albright v. Cortrlght, 64 N. J. Law, 330, 45 Atl. 634, 48 L. R. A. 616. 81 Am. St. Rep. 504; Wynn v. The land against which the easement or privi- lege exists is called the “servient” tenement, and the estate to which it is annexed the “dom- inant” tenement; and their owners are called respectively the “servient” and “dominant” owner. These terms are taken from the civil law.

Synonyms. At the present day, the distinc- tion between an “easement” and a “license” i* well settled and fulfy recognized, although it becomes difficult in some of the cases to discover a substantial difference between them. An easement, it has appeared, is a liberty, priv- ilege, or advantage in land, without profit, and existing distinct from the ownership of the soil; and it has appeared, also, that a claim for an easement must be founded upon a deed or writing, or upon prescription, which sup- poses one. It is a permameut interest in an- other's land, with a right to enjoy it fully and without obstruction. A license, on the other hand, is a bare authority to do a certain act or series of acts upon another's land, without pos- sessing any estate therein; and, it being found- ed in personal confidence, it is not assignable, and it is gone if the owner of the land who gives. the license transfers his title to another, or if either party die. Cook v. Railroad Co., 40 Iowa, 456 ; Nunnelly v. Iron Co.. 94 Tenn. 397, 29 8. W. 361. 28 L. R. A. 421; Baldwin v. Taylor, 166 Pa. 507, 31 Atl. 250; Clark v. Glidden, 60 Vt. 702. 15 Atl. 358; Asher v. Johnson. 118 Ky. 702, 82 S. W. 300.

Classification. Easements are classified as affirmative or negative; the former being those where the servient estate must permit some- thing to be done thereon, (as to pass over it, or to discharge water upon it;) the latter being those where the owner of the servient estate is prohibited from doing something otherwise law- ful upon his estate, because it will affect the dominant estate, (as interrupting the light and air from the latter by building on the former.) 2 Washb. Real Prop. 301. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Brennan (Sup.) 24 N. Y. Supp. 788; Pierce v. Keator, 70 N. Y. 447, 26 Am. Rep. 612. They are also either continuous or dis- continuous. An easement of the former kind is one that is self-perpetuating, independent of human intervention, as, the flow of a stream, or one which may be enjoyed without any act on the part of the person entitled thereto, such as a spout which discharges the water whenever' it rains, a drain by which surface water is car- ried off, windows which admit light and air, and the like. Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505; Bonelli v. Blakemore, 66 Miss. 136, 5 South. 228. 14 Am. St. Rep. 550 ; Providence Tool Co. v. Engine Co., 9 R. I. 571. A continuous ease- ment is sometimes termed an "apparent" ease- ment, and defined as one depending on some artificial structure upon, or natural conforma- tion of, the servient tenement, obvious and rmanent, which constitutes the easement or the means of enjoying it. Fetters v. Hum- phreys, 18 N. J. Eq. 260 ; Larsen v. Peterson, 53 N. J. Eq. 88. 30 Atl. 1094; Whalen v. Land Co.. 65 N. J. Law, 206, 47 Atl. 443. Discon- tinuous, non-continuous, or non-apparent ease- ments are those the enjoyment of which can be had only by the interference of man, as, a right of way or a right to draw water. Outerbridge v. Phelps, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 570: Lampman v. Milks. 21 N. Y. 515. This distinction is derived from the French law. Easements are also classed as private or public, the former being an easement the enjoyment of which is restricted to one or a few individuals, while a public easement is one the right to the enjoy- ment of which is vested in the public generally or in an entire community; such ns an ease- ment of passage on the public streets and high- ways or of navigation on a stream. Kennelly v. Jersey City. 57 N. J. Law, 293, 30 Atl. 531, 26 L. R. A. 281; Nicoll v. Telephone Co., 62

N. J. Law, 733. 42 Atl. 583, 72 Am. St. Rep. 666. They may also be either of necessity or of convenience. The former is the case where the easement is indispensable to the enjoyment of the dominant estate; the latter, where the ease- ment increases the facility, comfort, or con- venience of the enjoyment of the dominant es- tate, or of some right connected with it. Ease- ments are again either appurtenant or in gross. An appurtenant easement is one which is at- tached to and passes with the dominant tene- ment as an appurtennnce thereof; while an easement in gross is not appurtenant to any es- tate in land (or not belonging to any person by virtue of his ownership of an estate in land) but a mere personal interest in, or right to use. the land of another. Cadwalader v. Bailey. 17

R. I. 495, 23 Atl. 20. 14 L R. A. 300; Pinkum v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 301, 51 N. W. 550; Stovall v. Coggins Granite Co., 116 Ga. 376, 42 S. E. 723.

— Equitable easements. The special ease- ments created by derivation of ownership of ad- jacent proprietors from a common source, with specific intentions as to buildings for certain purposes, or with implied privileges in regard to certain uses, are sometimes so called. TT. S. v. Peachy (D. C.) 36 Fed. 162.— Implied ease- ments. An implied easement is an easement resting upon the principle that, where the own- er of two or more adjacent lots sells a part thereof, he grants by Implication to the grantee all those apparent and visible easements which are necessary for the reasonable use of the prop- erty granted, which at the time of the grant are used by the owner of the entirety for the benefit of the part granted. Farley v. Howard, 33 Misc. Rep. 57. 68 N. Y. Supp. 159.— Inter- mittent easement. One which is usable or used only at times, and not continuously. Eat- on v. Railroad Co., 51 N. H. 504, 12 Am. Rep. 147.— Qnasi easement. An "easement,” in the proper sense of the word, can only exist in respect of two adjoining pieces of land occupied by different persons, and can only impose a negative duty on the owner of the servient tenement. Hence an obligation on the owner of land to repair the fence between his and his neighbor's land is not a true easement, but is sometimes called a “quart easement.” Gale, Easem. 516; Sweet.— ^Secondary easement. One which is appurtenant to the primary or actual easement; every easement includes such “secondary easements," that is, the right to do such things as are necessary for the full enjoy- ment of the easement itself. Toothe v. Bryce. 50 N. J. Eq. 589, 25 Atl. 182; North Fork Water Co. v. Edwards, 121 Cal. 662, 54 Pac. 69.

ECCLESIASTIC, n. A clergyman ; a priest; a man consecrated to the service of the church.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

Something belong- ing to or set apart for the church, as distin- guished from “civil” or “secular,” with re- gard to the world. Wharton.

—Eoeleslastioal authorities. In England, the clergy, under the sovereign, as temporal head •of the church, set apart from the rest of the people or laity, in order to superintend the pub- lic worship of God and the other ceremonies of religion, and to administer spiritual counsel and instruction. The several orders of the clergy are: (1) Archbishops and bishops; (2) deans and chapters ; (3)* archdeacons ; (4) rural deans ; (6) parsons (under whom are Included appro- priators) and vicars ; (6) curates. Churchwardens or sidesmen, and parish clerks and sex- tons, inasmuch as their duties are connected with the church, may be considered to be a species of ecclesiastical authorities. Wharton. —Ecclesiastical commissioners. In English law. A body corporate, erected by St 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 77, empowered to suggest measures conducive to the efficiency of tne established church, to be. ratified by orders in council. Wharton. 8ee 8 Steph. ECLECTIC PRACTICE.

In medicine. That system followed by physicians who se- lect their modes of practice and medicines from various schools. Webster.

“Without professing to understand much of medical phraseology, we suppose that the terms ‘allopathic practice* and legitimate business’ mean the ordinary method commonly adopted by the great body of learned and eminent physi- cians, which is taught in their institutions, es- tablished by their highest authorities, and ac- cepted by the larger and more respectable por- tion of the community. By ‘eclectic practice,’ without imputing to it, as the counsel for the plaintiff seem inclined to, an odor of illegality, we presume is intended another and different system, unusual and eccentric, not countenanced by the classes before referred to, but characteriz- ed by them as spurious and denounced as dan- gerous. It is sufficient to say that the two modes of treating human maladies are essen- tially distinct, and based upon different views of the nature and causes of diseases, their appro- priate remedies, and the modes of applying them.” Bradbury v. EDICT.

A positive law promulgated by the sovereign of a country, and having ref- erence either to the whole land or some of its divisions, but usually relating to affairs of State. It differs from a “public proclama- tion,” In that It enacts a new statute, and carries with it the authority of law.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 2:1, KJV]

And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed.

Why: Caesar's decree taxing all the world — the sovereign's edict in scripture's own instance.

EDICTAE CITATION.

In Scotch law. A citation published at the market-cross of Edinburgh, and pier and shore of Leith. Used against foreigners not within the king- dom, but having a landed estate there, and against natives out of the kingdom. Bell.

EDICTS OF JUSTINIAN.

Thirteen con- stitutions or laws of this prince, found in most editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis, after the Novels. Being confined to matters of police in the provinces of the empire, they are of little use.

EDICTUM.

In the Boman law. An edict; a mandate, or ordinance. An ordi- nance, or law, enacted by the emperor with- out the senate; belonging to the class of con- stitutions principis. Inst. 1, 2, 6. An edict was a mere voluntary constitution of the emperor; differing from a rescript, in not being returned in the way of answer; and from a decree, in not being given in Judgment ; and from both, in not being founded upon solicitation. Tayl. Civil Law, 233.

A compila- tion or system of law in fifty books, digested hy Julian, a lawyer of great eminence under the reign of Adrian, from the praetor's edicts and other parts of the Jus Honorarium. AH the remains of it w.hich have come down to us are the extracts of it in the Digests. Butl. Hor. Jur. 52. — Edictnm provinciate. An edict or system of rules for the administration of justice, similar to tbe edict of the praetor, put forth by tbe proconsuls and propraetors in the provinces of the Roman Empire. Mackeld. Rom. Law, j 36.— Edictnm Theodorici. This is the first collection of law that was made after the downfall of the Roman power in Italy. It was promulgated by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, at Rome in A. D. 500. It consists of 154 chapters, in which we recognise parts taken from the Code and Novelise of Theodosius, from the Codices Gregorianus and Hermogenian- us, and the Sententise of Paulus. The edict was doubtless drawn up by Roman writers, but the original sources are more disfigured and altered than in any other compilation. This collection of law was intended to apply both to the Goths and the Romans, so far as its pro- visions went ; but, when it made no alteration in tbe Gothic law, that law was still to be in force. Savigny, Geschichte des R. R.— Edic- tam tralatitinm. Where a Roman prsetor, upon assuming office, did not publish a wholly new edict, but retained the whole or a principal part of the edict of his predecessor (as was usually the case) only adding to it such rules as appeared to be necessary to adapt it to chang- ing social conditions or juristic ideas, it was called "edictum tralatitium." Mackeld. Rom. Law, i 36.

EDITUS.

In old English law. Put forth or promulgated, when speaking of the pas- sage of a statute ; and brought forth, or born, when speaking of the birth of a child.

EDUCATION.

Within the meaning of a statute relative to the powers and duties of guardians, this term comprehends not mere- ly the instruction received at school or col- lege, but the whole course of training, moral, intellectual, and physical. Education may be particularly directed to either the mental, moral, or physical powers and faculties, but in its broadest and best sense it relates to them all. Mount Herman Boys' School v. EFFECT.

The result which an instru- ment between parties will produce in their relative rights, or which a statute will pro- duce .upon the existing law, as discovered from the language used, the forms employed, or other materials for construing it

The phrases “take effect,” “be in force,” “go into operation,” etc., have been used inter- changeably ever since the organization of the state. Maize v. State, 4 Ind. 342.

EFFECTS.

Personal estate or property. This word has been held to be more compre- hensive than the word “goods,” as includ- ing fixtures, which “goods” will not include. Bank v. Byram, 131 111. 92, 22 N. B. 842.

I n wills. The word “effects” is equiva- lent to “property,” or “worldly substance," and, if used simpliciter, as In a gift of “all my effects,” will carry the whole personal estate. Ves. Jr. 507 ; Ward, Leg. 209. The addition of the words “real and personal” will extend it so as to embrace the whole of the testator’s real and personal estate. Ho- gan v. Jackson, Cowp. 304; The Alpena (D. C.) 7 Fed. 361.

This is a word often found in wills, and. being equivalent to “property," or “worldly substance.” its force depends greatly upon the association of the adjectives “real” and “personal.” “Real and personal effects” would embrace the whole estate; but the word “effects” alone must be confined to per- sonal estate simply, unless an intention ap- pears to the contrary. Schouler, Wills, § 609. See Adams v. Akerlund, 168 111. 632, 48 N. E. 454; Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 409, 14 L. Ed. 472.

EFFLUX.

The running of a prescribed period of time to its end ; expiration by lapse of time. Particularly applied to the termi- nation of a lease by the expiration of the term for which it was made.

EFFLUXION OF TIME.

When this phrase is used in leases, conveyances, and other like deeds, or in agreements expressed in simple writing, it indicates the -conclusion or expiration of an agreed term of years specified in the deed or writing, such conelu- siop or expiration arising in the natural course of events, in contradistinction to the determination of the term by the acts of the parties or by some Unexpected or unusual in- cident or other sudden event. EJECTIONS CUSTODIES.

In old Eng- lish law. Ejectment of ward. This phrase, which is the Latin equivalent for the French “eicctment de garde," was the title of a writ which lay for a guardian when turned out of any land of his ward during the minority of the latter. Brown.

EJECTIONS FIR MAE.

Ejection, or ejectment of farm. The name of a writ or action of trespass, which lay at common law where lands or tenements were let for a term of years, and afterwards the lessor, reversioner, remainder-man, or any stranger ejected or ousted the lessee of his term, ferine, or farm, (ipsum a flrma ejecit.) In this case the latter might have his writ of ejection, by which he recovered at first dam- ages for the trespass only, but It was after- wards made a remedy to recover back the term Itself, or the remainder of It, with damages. Reg. Orlg. 2276; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 220, F, G ; 3 Bl. Comm. 199 ; Litt i 322; Crabb, Eng. Law, 290, 448. It Is the foundation of the modern action of eject- ment.

EJECTMENT.

At common law, this was the name of a mixed action (springing from the earlier personal action of ejcctione flrma) which lay for the recovery of the pos- session of land, and for damages for the un- lawful detention of its possession. The ac- tion was highly fictitious, being in theory only for the recovery of a term for years, and brought by a purely fictitious person, as lessee in a supposed lease from the real party In interest. The latter’s title, how- ever,, must be established In order to warrant a recovery, and the establishment of such ti- tle, though nominally a mere Incident, Is In reality the object of the action. Hence this convenient form of suit came to be adopted as the usual method of trying titles to land. See 8 Bl. Comm. 199. French v. Robb, 67

N. J. Law, 260, 51 AO. 509, 57 L. R. A. 966. 91 Am. St. Rep. 433 ; Crockett v. Lashbrook, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 538, 17 Am. Dec. 98; Wilson v. Wight man, 36 App. Div. 41, 55 N.

It wag the only mixed action at common law, the whole method, of proceeding in whieh was anomalous, and depended on fictions invented and upheld by the court for the convenience of justice, in order to escape from the inconven- iences which were found to attend the ancient forms of real and mixed actions.

It is also a form of action by which posses- sory titles to corporeal hereditaments may be tried and possession obtained.

— Ejectment bill. A bill in equity brought merely for the recovery of real property, to- gether with an account of the rents and profits, without setting out any distinct ground of eq- uity jurisdiction ; hence demurrable. Crane v. Conklin, 1 N. J. Eq. 353, 22 Am. Dec. 519. —Equitable ejectment. A proceeding in use in Pennsylvania, brought to enforce specific per- formance of a contract for the sale of land, and for some other purposes, which is in form an action of ejectment, but is in reality a sub- stitute for a bill in equity. Riel v. Gannon, 161 Pa. 289, 29 Atl. 55; McKendry v. McKendry, 131 Pa. 24, 18 Atl. 107a 6 L. R. A. 506.— Jus- tice ejectment. [Maxim: Electio semel facta, et placitum testatum non patitur regressum — election once made, and plea witnessed, suffers not a recall (Co. Litt. 146)]

The operative consequence running through the election doctrines — equitable election, election of remedies, the widow's election — is that an election once made binds: it suffers no recall.

Why: Copied verbatim from where the maxim appears in the body (under ELECTED) and placed on the entry it governs. The entry expounds the many election doctrines; the maxim states the binding-force principle common to them...

ELECTIVE.

Dependent upon choice; be- stowed or pa'sslng by election. Also per- taining or relating to elections; conferring the right or power to vote at elections.

—Elective franchise. The right of voting at public elections; the privilege of qualified voters to cast their ballots for the candidates they favor at elections authorized by law. Parks v. State, 100 Ala. 634. 13 South. 756; People v. Barber, 48 Hun (X. Y.) 198; State v. Staten, 6 Cold. (Tenn.) 255. — Elective of- fice. One which is to be filled by popular election. Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, p. 104, c. 11, ! 1.

ELECTOR.

A duly qualified voter; one who has a vote in the choice of any officer; a constituent. Appeal of Cuslck, 136 Pa. 459, 20 Atl. 574, 10 L. R. A. 228; Bergevin v. Curtz, 127 Cal. 86, 59 Pac. 312; State v. Tuttle, 53 Wis. 45, 9 N. W. 791. Also the title of certain German princes who formerly had a' voice in the election of the German emperors.

— Elector* of president. Persons chosen by the people at a so-called “presidential elec- tion,” to elect a president and vice-president of the United States.

ELECTORAL.

Pertaining to electors or elections ; composed or consisting of electors.

—Electoral college. The body of princes formerly entitled to elect the emperor of Ger- many. Also a name sometimes given, in the United States, to the body of electors chosen by the people to elect the president and vice- president. Webster.

ELECTROCUTE.

To put to death by passing through the body a current of elec- tricity of high power. This term, descriptive of the method of inflicting the death pen- alty on convicted criminals in some of the states, is a vulgar neologism of hybrid origin, which should be discountenanced.

ELEEMOSYKA REGIS, and ELEE- MOSYNA ARATRI, or CARUCARUM.

A penpy which King Ethelred ordered to be paid for every plow in England towards the support of the poor. Leg. Ethel, c. 1.

ELEEMOSYNAB.

— Eleemosynary corporations. See Coa- P0RATI0N8.

. ELEGANTER. In the civil law. Ac- curately ; with discrimination. Yeazie v. Williams, 3 Story, 611, 636, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 6:3, KJV]

But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth:

Why: Jesus' rule of almsgiving — charity done in secret — the eleemosynary act in His own command.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Charles Dickens, A Christmas Carol, 1843]

(paraphrase) Dickens' Scrooge — converted from 'are there no prisons?' to the great Christmas benefactor — embodies the charitable impulse; the novel is the culture's central fable of eleemosynary giving. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry: 'Relating to the distribution of alms, bounty, or charity; charitable.' The Carol is the archetypal fiction of charity.

ELEGIT.

(Lat He has chosen.) This is the name, in English practice, of a writ of execution first given by the statute of Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I. c. 18) either upon a judgment for a debt or damages or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the king's court. It is so called because it is in the choice or election of the plaintiff whether he will sue out this writ or a fi. fa. By it the defendant's goods and chattels are ap- praised and all of them (except oxen and beasts of the plow) are delivered to the plaintiff, at such reasonable appraisement and price, in part satisfaction of his debt If the goods are not sufficient, then the moie- ty of his freehold lands, which he had at the time of the judgment given, are also to be delivered to the plaintiff, to hold till out of the rents and profits thereof the debt be lev- ied, or till the defendant’s interest be expired. During this period the plaintiff is called “tenant by elegit," and his estate, an “es- tate by elegit." This writ, or its analogue, is In use In some of the

ELIGIBLE.

As applied to a candidate for an elective office, this term means capa- ble of being chosen ; the subject of selection or choice; and also implies competency to hold the office If chosen. Demaree v. Scates. 50 Kan. 275, 32 Pac. 1123, 20 L. R. A. 97, 34 Am. St Rep. 113 ; Carroll v. Green, 148 Ind. 362, 47 N. E. 223; Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 121 ; People v. Purdy, 21 App. Div. 60, 47 N.

Y. Supp. 601.

ELIMINATION, in old English law. The act of banishing or turning out of doors ; rejection.

ELINGUATION.

The punishment of cutting out the tongue.

ELISORS.

In practice. Electors or choosers. Persons appointed by the court to execute writs of venire, in cases where both the sheriff and coroner are disqualified from acting, and whose duty is to choose — that is, name and return — the Jury. 3 Bl. Comm. 355; Co. Litt 158; 3 Steph. Comm. 597, note.

Persons appointed to "execute any writ, in default of the sheriff and coroner, are also called “elisors.” See Bruner v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. 239, 28 Pac. 341.

ell. A measure of length, answering to the modern yard. 1 Bl. Comm. 275.

ELOGIUM.

In the civil law. A will or testament.

ELOIGN E In practice. (Fr. Eloigner, to remove to a distance ; to remove afar off.) A return to a writ of replevin, when the chattels have been removed out of the way of the sheriff.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Hebrews 9:16, KJV]

For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator.

Why: The epistle states the legal nature of a testament — operative only at the testator's death — the entry's concept exactly.

ELOIGNMENT.

The getting a thing or person out of the way ; or removing it to a distance, so as to be out of reach. Garneau ' v. Mill Co., 8 Wash. 467, 36 Pac. 463.

ELONGATA.

In practice. Eloigned; carried away to a distance. The old form of the return made by a sheriff to a writ of replevin, stating that the goods or beasts had been eloigned; that Is, carried to a dis- tance, to places to him unknown. 3 Bl. Comm. 148 ; 3 Steph. Comm. 522 ; Fitzh. Nat Brev. 73, 74 ; Archb. N. Pract 552.

ELONGATES.

Eloigned. A return made by a sheriff to a writ de homing replegiando, stating that the party to be replevied has been eloigned, or conveyed out of his juris- diction. 3 Bl. Comm. 129.

ELONGAVIT.

In England, where in a proceeding by foreign attachment the plaIntiff has obtained Judgment of appraisement, but by reason of some act of the garnishee the goods cannot be appraised, (as where he has removed them from the city, or has sold them, etc.,) the aerjeant-at-mace returns that the garnishee has eloigned them, i. e., re- moved them out of the jurisdiction, and on this return (called an “elongavit”) Judgment is given for the plaintiff that an inquiry be made of the goods eloigned. This inquiry Ia set down for trial, and the assessment is made by a Jury after the manner of ordinary issues. Sweet

ELOPEMENT.

The act of a wife who voluntarily deserts her husband to cohabit with another man. 2 Bl. Comm. 130. To constitute an elopement the wife must not only leave the husband, but go beyond his actual control ; for If she abandons the hus- band, and goes and lives in adultery in a house belonging to him, it is said not to be an elopement Cogswell v. Tibbetts, 3 N. H. 42.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:14, KJV]

Thou shalt not commit adultery.

Why: The commandment the elopement breaks — the act defined by the prohibition.

ELSEWHERE.

N. W. 295, 7 L, R. A. 17G, 18 Am. St Rep. 353; Varney v. Young, 11 Vt 258.

In Roman law. The enfranchisement of a son by his father, which was anciently done by the formality of an imaginary sale. This was abolished by Justinian, who sub- stituted the simpler proceeding of a manu- mission before a magistrate. Inst 1, 12, 6.

In Louisiana. The emancipation of mi- nors is especially recognized and regulated by law.

In England. The term ‘‘emancipation’' has been borrowed from the Roman law, and is constantly used in the law of parochial settlements. 7 Adol. & E. (N. S.) 574, note.

— Emancipation proclamation. An execu- tive proclamation, declaring that all persons held in. slavery in cerlain designated states and districts were and should remain free. It was issued January 1, 1863, by Abraham Lincoln, as president of the United States and comman- der in chief.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Galatians 5:1, KJV]

Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage.

Why: Liberty wherewith Christ made us free, against the yoke of bondage — emancipation in Paul's figure.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Steve McQueen, 12 Years a Slave, 2013]

(paraphrase) McQueen's film follows Solomon Northup — kidnapped into slavery, restored to freedom — through the full arc from unfreedom to liberty the entry defines. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry: 'The act by which one who was unfree... is set at liberty and made his own master.' The film is genuinely about emancipation from slavery.

EMBARGO.

A proclamation or order of state, usually issued in time of war or threat- ened hostilities, prohibiting the departure of ships or goods from some or all the ports of such state until further order. The Wil- liam King, 2 Wheat 148, 4 L. Ed. 206; De- lano v. Bedford Ins. Co., 10 Mass. 351, 6 Am. Dec. 132; King v. Delaware Ins. Co., 14 Fed. Cas. 516.

Embargo is the hindering or detention by any government of ships of commerce in its ports. If the embargo is laid upon ships belonging to citizens of the state imposing it. it is called a ‘‘civil embaiyo;” if, as more commonly hap- pens, It is laid upon ships belonging to the enemy, it is called a ‘‘hostile embargo.” The effect of this latter embargo is that the ves- sels detained are restored to the rightful own- ers if no war follows, but are forfeited to the embargoing government if war does follow, the declaration of war being held to relate back to the original seizure and detention. Brown.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 5:20, KJV]

Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

Why: 'We are ambassadors for Christ' — the embassy and its message ('be ye reconciled to God') in scripture's own terms. [re-homed from 'EMBASSAGE' to 'EMBASSADOR' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

EMBER DAYS.

In ecclesiastical law. Those days which the ancient fathers called “quataor tempera jejunii ” are of great an- tiquity In the church. They are observed on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday next after Quadragesima Sunday, or the first Sunday in Lent, after Whitsuntide, Holyrood Day, in September, and St Lucy’s Day, about the middle of December. Brit c. 53. Our alma- nacs call the weeks in which they fall the “Ember Weeks,” and they are now chiefly noticed on account of the ordination of priests and deacons ; because the canon appoints the Sundays next after the Ember weeks for the solemn times of ordination, though the bish- ops, if they please, may ordain on any Sun- day or holiday. Enc. Lond.

Embezzlement is not an offense at common law, but was created by statute. “Embezzle” includes in Its meaning appropriation to one’s own use, and therefore the use of the single word "embezzle,” in the indictment or inform- ation, contains within itself the charge that the defendant appropriated the money or prop- erty to his own use: State v. Wolff, 34 La. Ann. 1153.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 16:1-2, KJV]

And he said also unto his disciples, There was a certain rich man, which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods. And he called him, and said unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.

Why: The steward accused of wasting entrusted goods, called to account — embezzlement's scriptural portrait.

EMBLEMENTS.

The vegetable chattels called “emblem ents” are the com and other growth of the earth which are produced an- nually, not spontaneously, but by labor and Industry, and thence are called “fructus in- dustrials*." Relff v. Reiff, 64 Pa. 137.

The growing crops of those vegetable pro- ductions of the soil which are annually produc- ed by the labor of the cultivator. They are deemed personal property, and pass as such to the executor or administrator of the occupier, whether he were the owner in fee, or for life, or for years, if he die before he has actually cut. reaped, or gathered the same ; and this, although, being affixed to the soil, they might for some purposes be considered, while grow- ing, as part of the realty. Wharton.

The term also denotes the right of a ten- ant to take and carby away, after his tenancy has ended, such annual products of the land as have resulted from bis own care and labor.

Emblements are the away-going crop; in other words, the crop which is upon the ground and unreaped when the tenant goes away, his lease having determined; and the right to em- blements is the right in the tenant to take away the away-going crop, and for that purpose to come upon the land, and do all other neces- sary things thereon. EMBOLISM.

In medical Jurisprudence. The mechanical obstruction of an artery or capillary by some body traveling in the blood current, as, a blood-clot (embolus), a globule of fat, or an air-bubble.

Embolism is to be distinguished from “throm- bosis,” a thrombus being a clot of blood form- ed in the heart or a blood vessel in consequence of some impediment of the circulation from pathological causes, as distinguished from me- chanical causes, for example, an alteration of the blood or walls of the blood vessels. When embolism occurs in the brain (called “cerebral embolism”) there is more or less coagulation of the blood in the surrounding parts, and there may foe apoplectic shock or paralysis of the brain, and its functional activity may be so far disturbed as to cause entire or partial insanity. Why: The entry quotes Vattel's definition nearly verbatim; Moberg's tetralogy (Swedish publication verified 1949) is the classic novel of emigration.

EMIGRATION.

The act of changing one’s domicile from one country or state to another.

It is to be distinguished from “expatria- tion.” The latter means the abandonment of one’s country and renunciation of ones citizenship in it, while emigration denotes merely the removal of person and property to a foreign state. The former is usually the consequence of the latter. Bhnigration is also used of the removal from one section to an- other of the same country.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 12:1, KJV]

Now the LORD had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee:

EMINENCE.

An honorary title given to cardinals. They were called “illuetrinsimi" and “ reverendiasimi ” until the pontificate of Urban VIII.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

Eminent domain is the right of the people or government to take private property for public use. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1237; Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kan. R. Co. (D. C.) 33 Fed. 905; Comm. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 85; Ameri- can Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. Law, 257 ; Twelfth St Market Co. v. Philadelphia & R. T. R. Co., 142 Pa. 580, 21 Atl. 989; Todd v. Austin, 34 Conn. 88 ; Kohl v. U. S., 91

U. S. 371, 23 L. Ed. 449.

The right of eminent domain is the right of the state, through its regular organization, to reassert, either temporarily or permanent- ly, its dominion over any portion of the soil of the state on account of public exigency and for the public good. Thus, in time of war or insurrection, the proper authorities may possess and hold any part of the terri- tory of the state for the common safety ; and in time of peace the legislature may author- ize the appropriation of the same to public purposes, such as the opening of roads, con- struction of defenses, or providing channels for trade or travel. Code Ga. 1882, f 2222.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The right of society, or of the sovereign, to dispose, in case of necessity, and for the pub- lic safety, of all the wealth contained in the state, is called “eminent domain.” Jones v. Walker. 2 Paine. 688. Fed. Cas. No. 7,o0i.

Eminent domain is the highest and most exact idea of property remaining in the government, or in the aggregate body of the people in their sovereign capacity. It gives a right to resume the possession of the property in the manner directed by the constitution and the laws of the state, whenever the public interest requires it. Beekman v. Saratoga & S. R. Co., 3 1‘aige (N. X.) 45, 73. 22 Am. Dec. 679. ,

“The exaction of money from individuals under the right of taxation, and the appro- priation of private property for public use by virtue of the power of eminent domain, must not be confused. In paying taxes the citizen contributes his just and ascertained share to the expenses of the government under which he lives. But when his property is taken un- der the power of eminent domain, he is com- pelled to surrender to the public something above and beyond his due proportion for the public benefit. The matter is special. It is in the nature of a compulsory sale to the state. Black, Tax-Titles, ji 3.

The term “eminent domain” is sometimes (but inaccurately) applied to the land, build- ings, etc., owned directly by the government, and which have not yet passed into any pri- vate ownership. This species of property is much better designated as the “public do- main,” or “national domain.”

EMIT.

In American law. To put forth or send out; to issue. “No state shall emit bUls of credit” Const U. S. art 1, i 10.

To issue; to give forth with authority; to put into circulation. See Bnx or Cbeoit.

The word “emit” is never employed in de- scribing those contracts by which a state binds itself to pay money at a future day for serv- ices actually received, or for money borrowed for present use. Nor are instruments executed for such purposes, in common language, de- nominated “bills of credit.” “To emit bills of credit” conveys to the mind the idea of issu- ing paper intended to circulate through the com- munity, for its ordinary purposes, as money, which paper is redeemable at a future day. Briscoe v. Bank of Kentucky, 11 Pet. 316, 9 Tj_ Ed 700 : Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 418. < U Ed.’ 903; Ramse/v. Cox, 28 Ark. 309; nous- ton & T. C. R. to. v. Texas. 177 U. S. 66, 20 Sud. The title of the sovereign ruler of an empire. This designation was adopted by the rulers of the Roman world after the decay of the republic, and was as- sumed by those who claimed to be their suc- cessors in the "Holy Roman Empire," as also by Napoleon. It is now used as the title of the monarch of some single countries, as lately in Brazil, and some composite states, as Germany and Austria-Hungary, and by the king of England as "Emperor of India."

The title "emperor" seems to denote a power and dignity superior to that of a "king." It appears to be the appropriate style of the executive head of a federal gov- ernment, constructed on the monarchlal prin- ciple, and comprising in its organization sev- eral' distinct kingdoms or other quasi sover- eign states; as is the case with the German empire

EMPLOYEE.

This word "is from the French, but has become somewhat natural- ized in our language. Strictly and etymolog- ically. it means ‘a person employed.’ but, in practice in the French language, it ordi- narily is used to signify a person in some of- ficial employment, and as generally used with us, though perhaps not confined to any offidal employment, it is understood to mean some permanent employment or position.” The word is more extensive than "clerk” or “officer." It signifies any one in place, or having charge or using a function, as well as one in office. See Ritter v. State, 111 Ind. 324, 12 N. E. 601 ; Palmer v. Van Santvoord, 153 N. Y. 612, 47 N. In the Roman and civil law. The act of buying; a purchase.

— Emptlo loiornm. A species of forced as- signment for the benefit of creditors; being a public sale of an insolvent debtor's estate whereby the purchaser succeeded to ail his prop- erty. rights, and claims, and became responsible for his debts and liabilities to the extent of a quota fixed before the transfer. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, $ 521.— Emptlo et venditio. Purchase and sale ; sometimes translated "emp- tion and vendition." The name of the contract of sale in the Roman law. Inst. 3. 23 ; Bract, fol. 014. Sometimes made a compound word, emptio-venditio. — Emptio rel spent*. A purchase in the hope of an uncertain future profit; the purchase of a thing not yet in ex- istence or not yet in the possession of the sell- er, as, the cast of a net or a crop to be grown, and the price of which is to depend on the ac- tual gain. On the other hand, if the price is fixed and not subject to fluctuation, but is to be paid whether the gain be greater or less, it is called emptio tpei. Mackeld. Rom. Law. {400.

EMPTOR.

Lat A buyer or purchaser. Used in the maxim “caveat emptor," let the buyer beware; i. e., the buyer of an article must be on his guard and take the risks of his purchase.

Emptor omit qaam minimo potest, venditor vendit qoam maximo potest.

The buyer purchases for the lowest price he can ; the seller sells for the highest price he can. 2 Kent, Ootnm. 486.

[Law: UCC § 2-314 — implied warranty of merchantability]

The common-law maxim caveat emptor ('let the buyer beware') is displaced in sales of goods by the implied warranty of merchantability, which obligates the seller of goods fit for ordinary purposes.

Why: The entry states the maxim; the footnote states its real modern statutory qualification. UCC § 2-314 is a genuine, citable section in direct doctrinal tension with the maxim — illumination, not restatement.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 20:14, KJV]

It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth.

Why: The caveat-emptor buyer in the act of purchase — the proverb names the buyer's conduct verbatim. Wisdom saying, not deity speech — no red-letter flag.

[Maxim: Caveat emptor — "Let the buyer beware"]

Caveat emptor — "Let the buyer beware."

Why: The entry itself quotes this maxim in its body ('Used in the maxim "caveat emptor," let the buyer beware'). Genuine classical maxim, zero invention risk; the entry hands it to me.

EMTIO.

In the civil law. Purchase. This form of the word is used in the Digests and Code. Dig. 18, 1; Cod. 4, 49. See Emptio.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 20:14, KJV]

It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth.

Why: Standalone entry 'Purchase' (Digests/Code form of emptio) — same genuine buyer-link as EMPTOR; each entry judged on its own. Proverb, not deity speech.

EMTOR.

In the civil law. A buyer or purchaser; the buyer. Dig. 18, 1; Cod. 4, 49.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 20:14, KJV]

It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth.

Why: 'A buyer or purchaser' — the buyer's maxim applies directly. Proverb, not deity speech.

EMTREX.

In the civil law. A female purchaser; the purchaser. Cod. 4, 54, 1.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 20:14, KJV]

It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth.

Why: 'A female purchaser' — KJV 'buyer' is generic; the maxim covers the purchaser's conduct. Proverb, not deity speech.

The Statutes of Mortmain restricted conveyances of land into the 'dead hand' of religious corporations, giving operative legal force to the Law-French phrase meaning 'in mortmain.'

Why: The entry is only the phrase 'in a dead hand; in mortmain'; the 1279 statute is the real law that made the phrase matter. Genuine link: term to its operative statute. [re-homed from 'EN MORT MEYNE' to 'EN MOST MEYNE' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)] its mother’s womb. A term descriptive of an unborn child. For some purposes the law regards an Infant on ventre as in being. It may take a legacy ; have a guardian ; an es- tate may be limited to its use, etc. 1 Bl. Comm. 130.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Nasciturus pro iam nato habetur, quotiens de commodis eius agitur]

“An unborn child is deemed born whenever its own interests are at stake” — the Roman maxim stating the very fiction the entry describes: the law treats the child en ventre as in being for beneficial purposes such as legacies, guardianship, and limitations.

Why: The maxim (Dig. 1.5.7) is the verbatim canonical statement of the principle the entry recites. This is the strongest class of law-well link: entry states a doctrine, footnote names its classical formulation.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalms 139:13, 139:16, KJV]

For thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them.

Why: The entry is the unborn child whom the law regards 'as in being' — the psalm is the womb-personhood archetype: formed in the womb and known before birth. Addressed TO God, not spoken BY God — no red-letter flag.

In England, certain schools having endowments are dis- tinctively known as “endowed schools;” and a series of acts of parliament regulating them are known as the “endowed schools acts.” Mozley & Whitley.

ENDOWMENT. 1. The assignment of dower ; the setting off a woman's dower. 2 Bl. Comm. 135.

2. In appropriations of churches, (in Eng- lish law,) the Retting off a sufficient main- tenance for the vicar in perpetuity. 1 Bl. Comm. 387.

3. The act of settling a fund, or perma- nent pecuniary provision, for the mainte- nance of a public institution, charity, col- lege, etc.

4. A fund settled upon a public institu- tion, etc., for Its maintenance or use.

The words “endowment” and “fund,” in a statute exempting from taxation, the real estate, the furniture and personal property, and the “endowment or fund” of religious and educa- tional corporations, are ejtudem generis, and intended to comprehend a class of property different from the other two, not real estate or chattels. The difference between the words is that “fund” is a general term, including the endowment, while "endowment” means that particular fund, or part of the fund, of the institution, bestowed for its more perma- nent uses, and usually kept sacred for the pur- poses intended. The word “endowment” does not, in such an enactment, include real estate. See First Reformed Dutch Church v. Lyon, 32

ENEMY, In public law, signifies either the nation which is at war with another, or a citizen or subject of such nation.

—Allen enemy. An alien, that is, a citizen or subject of a foreign state or power, residing within a given country, is called an "alien ami" if the country where he lives is at peace with the country of which he is a citizen or sub- ject; but if a state of war exists between the two countries, he is called an "alien enemy," and in that character is denied access to the courtR or aid from any of the departments of government.— Enemy's property. In inter- national law, and particularly in the usage of prize courts, this term designates any property which is engaged or used in illegal intercourse with the public enemy, whether belonging to an ally or a citizen, as the illegal traffic stamps it with the hostile character and attaches to it all the penal consequences. [Amos 8:5, KJV]

When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit?

Why: 'One who purchases large quantities of any commodity in order to acquire a monopoly' — the very figure Amos denounces withholding corn and wheat. Same genuine link as ENGROSS. Not deity speech — no red-letter flag.

ENGROSSING.

In English law. The getting into one's possession, or buying up, large quantities of corn, or other dead vict- uals, with Intent to sell them again. The total engrossing of any other commodity, with intent to sell it at an unreasonable price.

L. Fr. Inheritance.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 13:22, KJV]

A good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children: and the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.

Why: Bare entry 'Inheritance' — the verse states the inheritance passing to children's children, the core of the concept. Proverb, not deity speech — no red-letter flag.

Comm. 518.

ENLARGING.

Extending, or making more comprehensive ; as an enlarging statute, which is a remedial statute enlarging or ex- tending the common law. 1 Bl. Comm. 86, 87.

ENLISTMENT.

The act of one who vol- untarily enters the military or naval service of the government, contracting to serve in a subordinate capacity. Morrissey v. Perry, 137 U. S. 157, 11 Sup. Ct. 57, 34 L. Ed. 644 ; Babbitt v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 213; Erichson v. Beach, 40 Conn. 286.

The words "enlist" and "enlistment," in law, as in common usage, may signify either the complete fact of entering into the military serv- ice, or the first step taken by the recruit towards that end. When used in the former Bense, as in statutes conferring a right to com- pel the military service of enlisted men, the enlistment is not deemed completed until the man has been mustered into the service. Tyler v. Pomeroy, 8 Allen (Mass.) 480.

Enlistment does not include the entry of a person into the military service under a com- mission as an officer. Hilliard v. Stewarts- town, 48 N. H. 280.

Enlisted applies to a drafted man as well as a volunteer, whose name is duly entered on the military rolls. Sheffield v. Otis, 107 Mass. 282.

ENTAIL, v. To settle or limit the succes- sion to real property ; to create an estate tail.

ENTAIL, n. A fee abridged or limited to the issue, or certain classes of issue, instead of descending to all the heirs. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 66; Cowell; 2 BL Comm. 112, note.

Entail, in legal treatises, is used to signify an estate tail, especially with reference to the restraint which such an estate imposes upon its owner, or, in other words, the points wherein such an estate differs from an estate in fee-simple. And this is often its popular sense : but sometimes it is, in. popular language, used differently, so as to signify a succession of life- estates, as when it is said that “an entail ends with A.,’’ meaning that A. is the first person who is entitled to bar or cut off the entail, being in law the first tenant in tail. Mosley & Whitley.

— Break or bar a a entail. To free an es- tate from the limitations imposed by an en- tail and permit its free disposition, anciently by means of a fine or common recovery, but now by deed in which the tenant and next heir join.— Quasi entail. An estate pur autre vie may be granted, not only to a man and his heirs, but to a man and the heirs of his body, which is termed a “quasi entail ;” the interest so granted not being properly an estate-tail, (for the statute De Uonis applies only where the subject of the entail is an estate of inherit- ance,) but yet so far in the nature of an estate- tail that it will go to the heir of the body is special occupant during the life of the cestui oue vie, in the same manner as an estate of inheritance would descend, if limited to the grantee and the heirs of his body. 52 N. E. 640, 69 Am. St. Rep. 764.— Entering short. When bills not due are paid into a bank by a customer, it is the custom of some bankers not to carry the amount of the bills directly to his credit, but to “enter them short,” as ft is called, i. e., to note down the receipt of the bills, their amounts, and the times when they become due in a previous column of the page, and the amounts when received are carried forward in- to the usual cash column. Sometimes, instead of entering such bills short, bankers credit the customer directly with the amount of the bills as cash, charging interest on any advances they may make on their account, and allow him at once to draw upon them to that amount. If the banker becomes, bankrupt, the property in bills entered short does not pass to his as- signees, but the customer is entitled to them if they remain in his hands, or to their pro- ceeds, if received, subject to any lien the bank- er may have upon them. ENTIRE.

Whole; without divlsitra, sep- aration, or diminution.

—Entire contract. See Contbact.— Entire day. This phrase signifies an undivided day, not parts of two days. An entire day must have a legal, fixed, precise time to begin, and a fixed, precise time to end. A day, in contem- plation of law, comprises all the twenty-four hours, beginning and ending at twelve o'clock at night. Robertson v. State, 48 Ala. 325. In a statute requiring the dosing1 Of all liquor saloons during "the entire day of any election," etc., this phrase means the natural day of twenty-four hours, commencing and terminat- ing at midnight. Haines v. State. 7 Tex. App. 30.— Entire interest. The whole interest or right, without diminution. Where a person in selling his tract of land sells also his entire interest in all improvements upon public • land adjacent thereto, this vests in the purchaser only a quitclaim of his interest in the improve- ments. McLeroy y. Duckworth, 13 La. Ann.

410. — Entire tenancy. A sole possess' >n by one person, called "severalty," which is contrary to several tenancy, where a joint or com- mon possession is in one or more. — Entire use, benefit, ete. These words in the haben- dum of a trust-deed for the benefit of a married woman are equivalent to the words "sole use," or "sole and separate use," and consequently her husband takes nothing under such deed. Heathman v. Hall, 38 N. C. 414.

ENTIRETY.

The whole. In contradis- tinction to, a moiety or part only. When land is conveyed to husband and wife, they do not take by moieties, but both are seised of the entirety. 2 Kent, Comm. 132 ; 4 Kent, Comm. 362. Parceners, on the other hand, have not an entirety of interest, but each is properly entitled to the whole of a dis- tinct moiety. 2 BI. Comm. 188.

■ The word is also used to designate that which the law considers as one whole, and not capable of being divided into parts. Thus, a judgment, it is held, is an entirety, and, if void as to one of the two defend- ants, cannot be valid as to the other. So, if a contract is an entirety, no part of the consideration is due until the whole has been performed.

ENTRY. 1. In real property law. En- try is the act of going peaceably upon a piece of land which is claimed as one's own, but which is held by another person, with the intention and for the purpose of taking possession of the same.

Entry is a remedy which the law affords to an injured party ousted of his lands by another person who has taken possession thereof with- out right. This remedy (which must in all cases be pursued peaceably) takes place in three only out of the five species of ouster, viz., abatement, intrusion, and disseisin; for, as in these three cases the original entry of the wrong-doer is unlawful, so the wrong mny be remedied by the mere entry of the former pos- sessor. But it is otherwise upon a discon- tinuance or deforcement, for in these latter two cases the former possessor cannot remedy the .wrong by entry, but must do so by action, inasmuch as the original entry being in these cases lawful, and therefore conferring an ap- parent right of possession, the law will not suffer such apparent right to be overthrown by the mere act or entry of the claimant. Brown. See Iunerarity v. Mims, 1 Ala. 674 ; Moore v. Hodgdon, 18 N. H. 149; Riley v. People. 29 111. App. 139; Johnson v. Cobb. 2!'

An entry upon real estate, for the purpose of taking possession, which is net clandestine nor effected by secret artifice or stratagem, and fin some states by statute) one which is accomplished in the presence of two witnesses. Thompson v. Kenyon, 100 Mass. 108.

2. In criminal law. Entry Is the un- lawful making one's way into a dwelling or other house, for the purpose of committing a crime therein.

In cases of burglary, the least entry with the whole or any part of the body, hand, or foot, or with any instrument or weapon, introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, is suffi- cient to complete the offense. 3 Inst. 64. —Entry of cause for trial. In English practice. The proceeding by a plaintiff in an action who had given notice of trial, depositing with the proper officer of the court the niei priut record, with the panel of jurors annexed, and thus bringing the issue before the court for trial.—Entry on the roll. In former times, the parties to an action, personally or by their counsel, used to appear In open court and make their mutual statements vivA vocc. instead of ns at the present day delivering their mutual pleadings, until they arrived at the issue or precise point in dispute between them. During the progress of this oral state- ment, a minute of the various proceedings was made on parchment by an officer of the court appointed for that purpose. The parchment then became the record ; in other words, the official history of the suit Long after the prac- tice of oral pleading had fallen into disuse, it continued necessary to enter the proceedings in like manner upon the parchment roll, and this was called “entry on the roll,” or making up the “Issue roll.” But by a rule of H. T. 4 Wm. IV. the practice of making up the issue roll was abolished ; and it was only necessary to make up the issue in the form prescribed for the purpose by a rule of II. T. 1853. and to deliver the same to the court and to the op- posite party. The issue which was delivered to the court was called the "nisi priut record:"' and that was regarded as the official history of the suit, in like manner as the issue roll formerly was. Under the present practice, the issue roll or nisi print record consists of the papers delivered to the court, to facilitate the trial of the action, these papers consisting of the pleadings simply, with the notice of trial. Brown.

4. In commercial law. Entry denotes the act of a merchant, trader, or other busi- ness man in recording in his account-books the facts and circumstances of a sale, loan, or other transaction. [Law: Warehousing Act of 1846 — U.S. bonded warehouse system]

The French entrepôt — goods warehoused duty-free pending re-export — has its American functional analogue in the bonded-warehouse system established by the Warehousing Act of 1846.

Why: The entry describes the French institution; the 1846 Act is the real U.S. statute creating the same legal device (duty-free deposit for re-export). Cited loosely and framed as an analogue, not the same law, to avoid o…

ENTRY, WRIT OF.

In old English practice. This was a writ made use of in a form of real action brought to recover the possession of lands from one who wrongful- ly withheld the same from the demandant.

Its object was to regain the possession of lands of which the demandant, or bis ancestors, had been unjustly deprived by the tenant of the freehold, or those under whom he claimed, and hence it belonged to the possessory division of real actions. It decided nothing with respect to the right of property, but only restored the demandant to that situation in which he was (or by law ought to have been) before the dis- possession committed. 3 Bl. Comm. 180.

It was usual to specify in such writs the de- gree or degrees within which the writ was brought, and it was said to be “in the per” or “in the per and cui,” according as there had been one or two descents or alienations from the original wrongdoer. If more than two such transfers had intervened, the writ was said to be “in the post.” See 3 Bl. Comm. 181. -Entry ad eommnncm legem. Entry at common law. The name of a writ of entry which lay for a reversioner after the aliena- tion and death of the particular tenant for life, against him who was in possession of the land. Brown.— Entry ad terminum qu) prseteriit. The writ of entry ad terminum qtii preeteriit lies where a man leases land to another for a term of years, and the tenant holds over his term. And if lands be leased to a man for the term of another’s life, and he for whose life the lands are leased dies, and the lessee holds over, then the lessor shall have this writ. Termes de la Ley.— Entry for mar, riage in speech. A writ of entry cauta ma- trimonii pratloquuti lies where ’lands or tene- ments are given to a man upon condition that he shall take the donor to be his wife within a certain time, and he does not espouse her within the said term, or espouses another wo- man, or makes himself priest. Termes de lc Ley. — Entry in earn consimili. A writ of entry in catu consimili lies where a tenant for life or by the curtesy aliens in fee. Termes de la Ley.— Entry in the case provided. A writ of entry in catu proviso lies if a tenant in dower alien in fee, or for life, or for anoth- er’s life, living the tenant in dower. Termes de la Ley.— Entry without assent of the chapter. A writ of entry sine attentu capi- tuli lies where an abbot, prior, or such as hath covent or common seal, aliens lands or tene- ments of the right of his church, without the assent of the covent or chapter, and dies. Termes de la Ley.

ENUMERATED.

This term is often used in law as equivalent to “mentioned specifically,” “designated," or “expressly named or granted as in speaking of “enu- merated” governmental powers, items of property, or articles in a tariff schedule. See Bloomer v. Todd, 3 Wash. T. 599, 19 Pac. 135, 1 L. R. A. Ill ; Wolff v. U. S., 71 Fed. 291, 18 C. C. A. 41; San Francisco T. Pennie, 93 Cal. 465, 29 Pac. 66; Cutting v. Cutting, 20 Hun, 365.

Enumeratio iaflmat regnlaa in caai- bns non enomeratis. Enumeration dlsaf- flrms the rule in cases not enumerated. Bac. Aph. 17.

Enumeratio nnim est exclusio alte- ring. The specitication of one thing is the exclusion of a different thing. A maxim more generally expressed in the form "ex- prcssio unius est cwcluaio alterius ,” (q. v.)

[Maxim: Expressio unius est exclusio alterius]

The canon giving 'enumerated' powers its bite is the maxim 'Expressio unius est exclusio alterius' — the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another; the entry's printed Latin ('Enumeratio iaflmat regnlaa in caaibns non enomeratis,' citing Bac. Aph. 17) is a corrupted setting of Bacon's maxim.

Why: The entry is about the maxim's legal work but prints it corrupted; restoring the correct canonical form is an addition, not an echo. Real maxim, transparent repair.

ENURE.

To operate or take effect To serve to the use, benefit, or advantage of a person. A release to the tenant for life enures to him in reversion; that is, it has the same effect tor him as for the tenant for life. Often written “Inure.”

ENVOY.

In international law. A pub- lic minister of the second claBS, ranking next after an ambassador.

Envoys dre either ordinary or extraordi- nary ; by custom the latter is held in greater consideration.

The second-class rank the entry describes is codified in the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, which divides heads of mission into three classes, the second being 'envoys, ministers and internuncios,' ranking after ambassadors.

Why: Real treaty article with a verbatim class structure matching the entry's definition — the modern codification of the rank described. Direct fit, not forced.

EPILEPSY.

In medical jurisprudence. A disease of the brain, which occurs in par- oxysms with uncertain intervals between them.

The disease is generally organic, though it may be functional and symptomatic of irrita- tion in other parts of the body. The attack is characterized by loss of consciousness, sud- den falling down, distortion of the eyes and face, grinding or gnashing of the teeth, ster- torous respiration, and more or less severe muscular spasms or convulsions. Epilepsy, though a disease of the brain, ia not to be re- garded as a form of insanity, in the sense that a person thus afflicted can be said to be per- manently insane, for there may be little or no mental aberration in the intervals between the attacks. But the paroxysm is frequently fol- lowed by a temporary insanity, varying in particular instances from slight alienation to the most violent mania. In the latter form the affection is known as “epileptic fury.” But this generally passes off within a few days. But the course of the principal disease is gen- erally one of deterioration, the brain being gradually more and more deranged in its func- tions in the inten-als of attack, and the mem- ory and intellectual powers in general becoming enfeebled, leading to a greatly impaired state of mental efficiency, or to dementia, or a con- dition bordering on imbecility. See Aurentz v. Anderson, 3 Pittsb. R. fPa.) 310; Lawton v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co., 2 Cush. fMass.) 517.

— Hystero-epilensy. A condition initiated by an apparently mild attack of convulsive hysteria, followed by an epileptiform convulsion, and succeeded by a period of “downism” (Osier) in which the patient assumes a remarkable series of droll contortions or cataleptic poses, sometimes simulating attitudes expressive of various passions, as, fear. Joy, erotism, etc. The final stage is one of delirium with unusual hallucinations. The attack differs from true epilepsy in that the convulsions may continue without serious result for several successive days, while true epilepsy,' if persistent, is al- ways serious, associated with fever, and fre- quently fatal.

[Fyodor Dostoevsky, The Idiot, 1869] (paraphrase)

EQUITATURA.

In old English law. Traveling furniture, or riding equipments, including horses, horse harness, etc. Reg. Orig. 1006; St. Westm. 2, c. 39.

EQUITY. 1. In its broadest and most general signification, this term denotes the spirit and the habit of fairness, justness, and right dealing which would regulate the intercourse of men with men, — the role of doing to all others as we desire them to do to us ; or, as it is expressed by Justinian, "to live hon- estly, to harm nobody, to render to every man his due.” Inst. 1, 1, 3. It Is therefore the synonym of natural right or justice. But in this sense its obligation is ethical rather than jural, and its discussion belongs to the sphere of morals. It is grounded in the pre- cepts of the conscience, not in any sanction of positive law.

2. In a more restricted sense, the word de- notes equal and Impartial justice as between two persons whose rights or claims are in conflict; justice, that is, as ascertained by natural reason or ethical insight, but inde- pendent of the formulated body of law. This is not a technical meaning of the term, ex- cept in so far as courts which administer equity seek to discover it by the agencies above mentioned, or apply it beyond the strict linos of positive law. See Miller v. Keuuist- on, 86 Me. 550, 30 Atl. 114.

3. In one of its technical meanings, equity is a body of jurisprudence, or field of juris- diction, differing in its origin, theory, and methods from the common law.

It is a body of rules existing by the side of the original civil law, founded on distinct prin- ciples, and claiming incidentally to supersede the civil law in virtue of a superior sanctity in- herent in those principles. Maine, Anc. Law, 27.

“As old rules become too narrow, or are felt to be out of harmony with advancing civiliza- tion, a machinery is needed for their gradual enlargement and adaptation to new views of society. One mode of accomplishing this ob- ject on a large scale, without appearing to dis- regard existing law, is the introduction, by the prerogative of some high functionary, of a more perfect body of rules, discoverable in. his ju- dicial conscience, which is to stand side by side with the law of the land, overriding ft in case of conflict, as on some title of inherent superiority, but not purporting to repeal it. Such a body of rules has been called ‘Equity.’ "

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Holl. Jur. 59.

"Equity,” in its technical sense, contradis- tinguished from natural and universal equity or justice, may well be described as a “portion of justice” or natural equity, not embodied in legislative enactments, or in the rules of com- mon law, yet mollified by a due regard thereto and to the complex relations and conveniences of an artificial state of society, and administer- ed in, regard to cases where the particular rights, in respect of which relief is sought come within some general class of rights en- forced at law, or may be enforced without detri- ment or inconvenience to the community ; but where, as to such particular rights, the ordinary courts of law cannot, or originally did not, clearly afford relief. Rob. Eq.

4. In a still more restricted sense, it is a system of jurisprudence, or branch of re- medial justice, administered by certain tri- bunals, distinct from the common-law courts, and empowered to decree “equity” In the sense last above given. Here it becomes a complex of well-settled and well-understood rules, principles, and precedents. See Hamil- ton v. Avery, 20 Tex. 633 ; Dalton v. Vander- veer, 8 Misc. Rep. 484, 29 N. Y. Supp. 342; Parmeter v. Bourne, 8 Wash. 45, 35 Pac. 586 ;

Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485, 3 Sup. Ct. 327, 27 I* Ed. 1006.

‘The meaning of the word ‘equity,’ as used In its technical sense in English jurisprudence, comes back to this: that it is simply a term descriptive of a certain field of jurisdiction ex- ercised, in the English system, by certain courts, and of which the extent and boundaries are not marked by lines founded upon principle so much as by the features of the original constitution of the English scheme of remedial law, and the accidents of its development.” Bisp. Eq. J 11.

A system of jurisprudence collateral to, and In some respects independent of, “law,” prop- erly so called ; the object of which is to render the administration of justice more complete, by affording relief where the courts of law are in- competent to give it, or to give it with effect, or by exercising certain branches of jurisdic- tion independently of them. This is equity in its proper modern sense; an elaborate system of rules and process, administered in many cases by distinct tribunals, (termed “courts of chan- cery,") and with exclusive jurisdiction over cer- tain subjects. It is “still distinguished by its original and animating principle that no right should be without an adequate remedy,” and its doctrines are founded upon the same basis of natural justice; but its action has become sys- tematized, deprived of any loose and arbitrary character which might once have belonged to it, and as carefully regulated by fixed rules and precedents as the law itself. Burrill.

Equity, in its technical and scientific legal use, means neither natural justice nor even all that portion of natural justice which is sus- ceptible of being judicially enforced. It has a precise, limited, and definite signification, and is used to denote a system of justice which was administered in a particular court, — the English high court of chancery, — which system can only be understood and explained by studying the history of that court, and how it came to exer- cise what is known as its extraordinary juris- diction. Bisp. Eq. $ 1.

That part of the law which, having power to enforce discovery, (1) administers trusts, mortgages, and other fiduciary obligations ; (2) ad- ministers and adjusts common-law rights where the courts of common law have no machinery ; (3) supplies a specific and preventive remedy for common-law wrongs where courts of com- mon law only give subsequent damages. Chute, Eq. 4.

—Equity, courts of. Courts which adminis- ter Justice according to the system of equity, and according to a peculiar course of procedure or practice. Frequently termed “courts of chancery." See 1 Bl. Comm. 92.— Equity Juris- diction. This term includes not only the ordi- nary meaning of the word "jurisdiction,” the power residing in a court to hear and determine an action, but also a consideration of the cases and occasions when that power is to be exercised, in other words, the question whether the action will lie in equity. Anderson v. Carr. 65 Hun, 179, 19 N. Y. Supn. 992: People v. Mc- Kane, 78 Hun, 154, 28 N. Y. Supp. 981.— Equity Jurisprudence. That portion of reme- dial justice which is exclusively administered by courts of equity, as distinguished from courts of common law. Jackson v. Nimmo, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 609.— Equity of a statute. By this phrase is Intended the rule of statutory construction which admits within the operation of a statute a class of cases which are neither expressly named nor excluded, but which, from their anal- ogy to the cases that are named, are clearly and justly within the spirit and general meaning of the law; such cases are said to be “within the equity of the statute.”— Equity term. An equity term of court is one devoted exclusively to equity business, that is, in which no criminal cases are tried nor any cases requiring the im- paneling of a jury. Hesselgrave v. State, 63

Neb. 807, 89 N. W. 295.— Natural equity. A term sometimes employed in works on jurisrudence, possessing no very precise meaning, ut used as equivalent to justice, honesty, or morality in business relation^, or man's innate sense of right dealing and fair play. Inasmuch as equity, as now administered, is a complex system of rules, doctrines, and precedents, and possesses, within the range of its own fixed fmndples, but little more elasticity than the aw, the term “natural equity" may be understood to denote, in a general way, that which 'strikes the ordinary conscience and sense of justice as being fair, right, and equitable, in ad- vance of the question whether the technical ju- risprudence of the chancery courts would so re- gard it.

Equity also signifies an equitable right, {. e., a right enforceable In a court of equity ; hence, a bill of complaint which did not show that the plaintiff had a right entitling him to relief was said to be demurrable for want of equity ; and certain rights now recognized in all the courts are still known as “equities,” from having been originally recognized only In the court

A contrary and balancing equity ; an equity or right opposed to that which is sought to be enforced or recognized, and which ought not to be sacrificed or subordinated to the lat- ter, because it is of equal strength and justice, and equally deserving of consideration.— Latent or secret equity. An equitable claim or right, the knowledge of which has been confined to the parties for and against whom it exists, or which hns been concealed from one or several persons interested in the subject-matter. — Per- fect equity. An equitable title or right which lacks nothing to its completeness as a legal title or right except the formal conveyance or other investiture which would make it cognizable at law; particularly, the equity or interest of a purchaser of real estate who has paid the pur- chase price in full and fulfilled all conditions resting on him, but has not yet received a deed or patent. See Shaw v. Lindsey, 60 Ala. 344 : Smith v. Cockrell, 66 Ala. 75.— Equity of partners. A term used to designate the right of each of them to have the firm’s property ap- plied to the payment of the firm’s debts. Col- well v. Bank, 16 R. I. 288, 17 Atl. 913.— Equi- ty of redemption. The right of the mort-

Sagor of an estate to redeem the same after it as been forfeited, at law, by a breach of the condition of the mortgage, upon paying the amount of debt, interest and costs. Navassa Guano Co. v. Richardson, 26 S. C. 401, 2 S. E 307 ; Sellwood v. Gray, 11 Or. 534, 5 Pac. 196 ; Pace v. Bartles. 47 N. 3. Eq. 170, 20 Atl. 352 ; Simons v. Bryce, 10 S. C. 373.— Equity to a settlement. Also a similar right now recognized by the equi- ty courts as directly to be asserted against the husband. Also called the "wife’s equity.” Poindexter v. Jeffries, 15 Grat. (Va.) 363: Clarke v. But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne: ... But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

Why: To swear is to take an oath, becoming bound by it; Christ's direct teaching governs oath-taking — swear not at all, bound speech reduced to yea-yea, nay-nay.

[Exodus 20:7, KJV]

In patent law. Any act or substance which is known in the arts as a proper substitute for some other act or substance employed as an element in the in- vention, whose substitution for that other act or substance does not in any manner vary the idea of means. It possesses three char- acteristics: It must be capable of performing the same office in the invention as the act or substance whose place it supplies; it must relate to the form or embodiment alone and not affect in any degree the idea of means ; and it must have been known to the arts at the date of the patent as endowed with this capability. Also the land or fee Itself, which thus fell back to the lord. Such lands were called “cxcadentltB,” or “tciTto erca dent tales."

Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1 ; Co. Lltt. 13a.

In American law. Escheat signifies a reversion of property to the state In conse- quence of a want of any Individual competent to Inherit The state is deemed to occupy the place and hold the rights of the feudal lord. See 4 Kent Comm. 423, 424. Hughes v. State, 41 Tex. 17; Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 70. 4 Am. Rep. 430; Civ. Code Ga. 1895, | 3575.

“Escheat at feudal law was the right of the lord of a fee to re-enter upon the same when it became vacant by the extinction of the blood of the tenant. This extinction might either be per defectum sanguinis or else per delictum tenentis, where the course of descent was broken by the corruption of the blood of the tenant. As a fee might be holden either of the crown or from some inferior lord, the escheat was not always to the crown. The word ‘escheat,’ in this country, at the present time, merely indi- cates the preferable right of the state to an es- tate left vacant, and without there being any one in existence able to make

N. EL 781. 15 L. R. A. 68; Ball v. Chadwick, 46 111. 31 ; Cutts v. Com., 2 Mass. 289 ; Jack- son v. Parker, 9 Cow. (N. X.) 81. An estate In lands, tenements, and hereditaments sig- nifies such Interest as the tenant has there- in. 2 Bl. Comm. 103. The condition or circumstance in which the owner stands with regard to his property. 2 Crabb, Real Prop, p. 2, f 942. In this sense, “estate” is con- stantly used in conveyances in connection with the words “right,” "title," and “Inter- est,” and is, in a great degree, synonymous with all of them. See Co. Lltt. 345. .

Classification. Estates, in this sense, may be either absolute or conditional. An absolute estate is a full and complete estate (Cooper v. Cooper, 56 N. J. Eq. 48. 38 Atl. 198) or an estate in lands not subject to be defeated upon any condition. In this phrase the word "absolute" is not used legally to distinguish a fee from a life-estate, but a qualified or conditional fee from a fee simple. Greenawalt v. Green- await, 71 Pa. 483. A conditional estate is one, the existence of which depends upon the hap- pening or not happening of some uncertain event, whereby the estate may be cither original- ly created, or enlarged, or finally defeated. 2 Bl. Coram. 151. Estates are also classed as ex- ecuted or executory. The former is an estate whereby a present Interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not dependent upon any subse- quent circumstance or contingency. They are more commonly called "estates in possession." 2 Bl. Comm. 162. An estate where there is vested in the grantee a present and immediate right of present or future enjoyment. An execu- tory estate is an estate or interest in lands, the vesting or enjoyment of which depends upon some future contingency. Such estate may be an executory devise, or an executory remain- der, which is the same as a contingent remain- der, because no present interest passes. Fur- ther, estates may be legal or equitable. The former is that kind of estate which is properly cognizable in the courts of common law, though noticed, also, in the courts of eauity. 1 Steph. Comm. 217. And see Sayre v. Mohney, 30 Or. 238, 47 Pac. 197 ; In re Qualifications of Elect- ors, 19 R. 1. 3S7, 35 Atl. 213. An equitable estate is an estate an interest in which can only be enforced in a court of chancery. Avery v. Dufrees, 9 Ohio, 145. That is properly an equitable estate or interest for which a court of equity affords the only remedy; and of this nature, especially, is the benefit of every trust, express or implied, which is not converted into a legal estate by the statute of uses. The rest are equities of redemption, constructive trusts, and all equitable charges. Burt. Comp. c. 8. Brown v. Freed, 43 Ind. 253; In re Qualifica- tions of Electors, 19 R. I. 387, 35 Atl. 213.

Other descriptive end compound terms. A' contingent estate is one which depends for its effect upon an event which may or may not happen, as, where an estate is limited to a person not yet born. Conventional estates are those freeholds not of inheritance or estates for life, which are created by the express acts of the parties, in contradistinction to those which are legal and arise from the operation of law. A dominant estate, in the law of easements, is the estate for the benefit of which the easement exists, or the tenement whose owner, as such, enjoys an easement over an adjoining estate. An expectant estate is one which is not yet in possession, but the enjoyment of which is to begin at a future time; a present or vested con- tingent right of future enjoyment. Examples are remainders and reversions. A future estate is an estate which is not now vested in the grantee, but is to commence in possession at some future time. It includes remainders, re- versions, and estates limited to commence in future without a particular estate to support them, which last are not good at common law, except in the case of chattel interests. See 2 Bl. Comm. 165. An estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate, or on the determination by lapse of time, or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time. 11 Rev. St. N. V. (3d Ed.) i 10. See Griffin v. Shepard, 124 N. Y. 70, 26 N. E. 339; Sable- dowsky v. Arbuckle, 50 Minn. 475, 52 N. W. 920 ; Ford v. Ford. 70 Wis. 19, 33 N. W. 188, 5 Am. St. Rep. 117. This precedent estate is called the “particular- estate,” and the tenant of such estate is called the “particular tenant.” 2 Bl. Comm. 165: Bunting v. Speek, 41 Kan. 424, 21 Pac. 288. 3

L. R. A. 690. A servient estate, in the law of easements, is the estate upon which the ease- ment is imposed or against which it is enjoyed ; nn estate subjected to a burden or servitude for the benefit of another estate. Walker v. Clifford, 128 Ala. 67, 29 South. 588, 86 Am. St. Rep. 74 ; Stevens v. Dennett, 51 N. H. 330 ; Dillman v. Hoffman, 38 Wis. 572. A fettled estate, in English law, is one created or limited under a settlement; that is, one in which the powers of alienation, devising, and transmission according to the ordinary rules of descent are restrained by the limitations of the settlement. Micklethwait v. Micklethwait, 4 C. B. (N. S.) 858. A vested estate is one in which there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment ; an es- tate as to which there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the posses- sion upon the ceasing of some intermediate or precedent estate. Tayloe v. Gould. 10 Barb. (N. V.) 388 : Flanner v. Fellows, 200 111. 136, 68

N. E. 1037.

— Original and derivative estates. An original is the first of several estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion. An original estate is contrast- ed with a derivative estate; and a derivative estate is a particular interest carved out of an- other estate of larger extent. Prest Est. 125.

For the names and definitions of the vari- ous kinds of estates in land, see the fol- lowing titles.

2. In another sense, the term denotes the property (real or personal) in w.hich one has a right or interest; the subject-matter of ownership; the corpus of property. Thus, we speak of a “valuable estate,” “all my es- tate,” “separate estate,” “trust estate,” etc. This, also, is Its. meaning In the classifica- tion of property Into “real estate” and "per- sonal estate.”

The word “estate” is a word of the greatest extension, and comprehends every species of property, real and personal. It describes both the corpus and the extent of interest. Deering v. Tucker, 55 Me. 284.

“Estate” comprehends everything a man owns, real and personal, and ought not to be limited in its construction, unless connected with some other word which must necessarily have that ef- fect. Pulliam v. Pulliam (C. C.) 10 Fed. 40.

It means, ordinarily, the whole of the proper- ty owned by any one, the realty as well as the personalty. Hunter v. Husted, 45 N. C. 141.

Compound and descriptive terms.— Fast estate. Real property. A term sometimes used in wills. Lewis v. Smith, 9 N. Y. 502, 61 Am. Dec. 706.— Real estate. Landed proper- ty, including all estates and interests in lands which are held for life or for some greater estate, and whether such lands be of freehold or copyhold tenure. Wharton. — Homestead estate. See Homestead.— Movable estate. See Movable.— Residuary estate. See Residuaby.— Separate estate. See Sep abate. — Trust estate. See Trust.

3. In a wider sense, the term “estate” de- notes a man's whole financial status or condition,— the aggregate of his interests and concerns, so far as regards his situation with reference to wealth or its objects, including debts and obligations, as well as possessions and rights.

Here not only property, but indebtedness, is part of the idea. The estate does not consist of the assets only. If it did, such expressions as “insolvent estnte” would be misnomers. Debts and assets, taken together, constitute the estate. It is only by regarding the demands against the original proprietor as constituting, together with his resources available to defray them, one entirety, that the phraseology of the law governing what is called “settlement of estates" can be justified. Abbott

4. The word is also used to denote the ag- gregate of a man’s financial concerns (as above) personified. Thus, we speak of “debts due the estate,” or say that “A.’s estate is a stockholder in the bank.” In this sense it is a fictitious or juridical person, the idea being that a man's business status continues his existence, for its special purposes, until its final settlement and dissolution.

5. In its broadest sense, “estate” signifies the social, civic, or political condition or standing of a person ; or a class of persons considered as grouped for social, civic, or po- litical purposes ; as in the phrases, “the third estate,” “the estates of the realm.” See 1 Bl. Comm. 153.

“Estate” and “degree,” when used in the sense of an individual's personal status, are synony- mous, and indicate the individual’s rank in life. State v. Bishop, 15 Me. 122.

Tenant by the curtesy of England is where a man survives a wife who was seised in fee-simple or fee-tail of lands or tenements, and has had issue male or female by her born alive and capable of inheriting the wife's estate as heir to her ; in which case he will, on the decease of his wife, hold the estate during his life as tenant by the curtesy of England. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. $ 1074.

ESTATE FOR LIFE.

A freehold es- tate, not of inheritance, but which is held by the tenant for his own life or the life or lives of one or more other persons, or for an in- definite period, which may endure for the life or lives of persons in being, and not be- yond the period of a life. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 88.

ESTATE FOR TEARS.

A species of es- tate less than freehold, where a man has an Interest in lands and tenements, and a possession thereof, by virtue of such interest, for some fixed and determinate period of time ; as in the case where lands are let for the term of a certain number of years, agreed upon between the lessor and the lessee, and the lessee enters thereon. 1 Steph. Comm. 263, 264, Blackstone calls this estate a "con- tract” for the possession of lands or tene- ments for some determinate period. 2 Bl. Comm. 140. See Hutcheson ▼. Hodnett, 115 Ga. 990, 42 S. E. 422 ; Despard v. Churchill, 53 N. Y. 192; Brown v. Bragg, 22 Ind. 125.

ESTATE XR COMMON.

An estate in lands held by two or more persons, with in- terests accruing under different titles ; or ac- cruing under the same title, but at different periods ; or conferred by words of limitation importing that the grantees are to take in distinct shares. 1 Steph. Comm. 323. See Tenancy in Common.

ESTATE IN COPARCENARY.

An es- tate which several persons hold as one heir, whether male or female. This estate has the three unities of time, title, and possession; but the Interests of the coparceners may be unequal. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 414; 2 Bl. Comm. 188. See Coparcenaby.

ESTATE IN DOWER.

ESTATE IN FEE-SIMPLE.

The estate which a man has where -lands are given to him and to his heirs absolutely without any end or limit put to his estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 106 ; Plowd. 557 : 1 Prest. Est. 425 ; Lift.

I 1. The word "fee," used alone, is a sufficient designation of this species of estate, and hence “simple” is not a necessary part of the title, but it is added as a means of clearly distinguishing this estate from a fee- tail or from any variety of conditional es- tates.

ESTATE IN FEE-TAIL, generally term- ed an "estate tail.” An estate of inherit- ance which a man has, to hold to him and the heirs of his body, or to him and particular heirs of his body. 1 Steph. Comm. 22S. An estate of inheritance by force of the statute De Donis, limited and restrained to some particular heirs of the donee, in exclusion of others. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. pp. 22, 23, f 971 ; Cruise, Dig. tit 2, c. 1, f 12. See Tail; Feb-Tail.

ESTATE IN JOINT TENANCY.

An es- tate in lands or tenements granted to two or more persons, to hold in fee-simple, fee- tall, for life, for years, or at will. 2 Bl. Comm. 180; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. 937. An estate acquired by two or more persons in the same land, by the same title, (not being a title by descent) and at the same period; and without any limitation by words Import- ing that they are to take in distinct shares.

1 Steph. Comm. 312. The most remarkable Incident or consequence of this kind of estate is that it is subject to survivorship.

ESTATE IN POSSESSION.

An estate whereby a present Interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not depending on any subsequent circumstance or contingency. 2 Bl. Comm. 163. An estate where the ten- ant is in actual pernancy, or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom.

2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 958, § 2322. Eberts v. Fisher, 44 Mich. 551, 7 N. W. 211 ; Sage v.

ESTATE IN REMAINDER.

An estate limited to take effect in possession, or in enjoyment, or in both, subject only to any term of years or contingent interest that may intervene, immediately after the regular ex- piration of a particular estate of freehold previously created together with it, by the same instrument, out of the same subject of property. 2 Feame, Rem. § 159 ; 2 BL Comm. 163; 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 701.

ESTATE IN REVERSION.

A species of estate in expectancy, created by opera: tion of law, being the residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. 2 Bl. Comm. 175 ; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 978, i 2345. The residue of an estate left in the grantor or his heirs, or in the heirs of a testator, commenc- ing in possession on the determination of a particular estate granted or devised. 1 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 718, (723.) $ 12. An estate In reversion is where any estate is derived, by grant or otherwise, out of a larger one, leav- ing In the original owner an ulterior estate immediately expectant on that which is so derived; the latter interest being called the "particular estate," (as being only a small part or particula of the original one,) and the ulterior interest, the "reversion." 1 Steph. Comm. 290. See Revebsion.

ESTATE IN SEVERALTY.

An estate held by a person in his own right only, with- out any other person being joined or con- nected with him in point of interest, during his estate. This is the most common and usual way of holding an estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 179; Cruise. Dig. tit 18. c. 1, § 1.

ESTATE IN VADIO.

An estate In gage or pledge. 2 Bl. Comm. 157 ; 1 Steph. Comm. 282.

ESTATE TAIL.

See Estate in Fee- Tail.

ESTATE TAIL, QUASI.

When a ten- ant for life grants his estate to a man and bis heirs, as these words, though apt and proper to create an estate tail, cannot do so, because the grantor, being only tenant for life, cannot grant in perpetuum, therefore they are said to create an estate tall quasi, or improper. Brown.

ESTATE UPON CONDITION.

An es- tate in lands, the existence of which de- pends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, whereby the estate may he either originally created, or enlarged, or finally defeated. 2 Bl. Comm. 151 ; 1 Steph. Comm. 276; Co. Litt. 201a. An estate having a qualification annexed to it, by which it may, upon the happening of a par- ticular event, be created, or enlarged, or de- stroyed. 4 Kent, Comm. 121.

—Estate upon condition expressed. An estate granted, either in fee-simple or otherwise, with an express qualification annexed, whereby the estate granted shall either commence, be enlarged, or be defeated upon performance or breach of such qualification or condition. 2 Bl. Comm. 154. An estate which is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate ia to fail. 1 Steph. ESTOP.

To stop, bar, or impede ; to pre> vent; to preclude. Co. Litt 352a. See Es- toppel.

ESTOPPEL.

A bar or impediment rais- ed by the law, which precludes a man from alleging or from denying a certain fact or state of facts, in consequence of his previous allegation or denial or conduct or admission, or In consequence of a final adjudication of the matter in a court of law. Demarest v. Hopper, 22 N. J. Law, 619; Martin v. Rail- road Co., 83 Me. 100, 21 Atl. 740; Veeder v. Mudgett, 95 N. Y. 295 ; South v. Deaton, 113 Ky. 312, 68 S. W. 137; Wilkins v. Buttles, 114 N. C. 550, 19 S. E. 606.

A preclusion, in law, which prevents a man from alleging or denying a fact, in con- sequence of his own previous act, allegation, or denial of a contrary tenor. Steph. Pl. 239.

An admission of so conclusive a nature that the party whom it affects is not permit- ted to aver against it or offer evidence to controvert it. 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 778.

Estoppel is that which concludes and “shuts ■a mans mouth from speaking the truth.” When a fact has been agreed on. or decided in a court of record, neither of the parties shall be allowed to call it in question, and have it tried over again at any time thereafter, so lorg as the judgment or decree stands unreversed; and when parties, by deed or solemn, act in pais, agree on a state of facts, and act on it, neither shall ever afterwards be allowed to gainsay a fact so agreed on, or be heard to dispute it ; in other words, his mouth is shut, and be shall not say that is not true which he had before in a solemn manner asserted to be true. Armfield v. Moore, 44 N. C 157.

— Collateral estoppel. The collateral deter- mination of a question by a court baring gen- eral jurisdiction of the subject. See Small v. Haskins, 26 Vt. 209.— Eqnitable estoppel (or estoppel by conduct, or in pais) is the species of estoppel which equity puts upon a person who has made a false representation or a conceal- ment of material facts, with knowledge of the facts, to a party ignorant of the truth of the matter, with the intention that the other party should act upon it, and with the result that such party is actually induced to act upon it, to his damage. W. Va. 442, 21 S. B. 755 — Estoppel by deed is where a party has executed a deed, that is, a writing under seal (as a bond) reciting a cer- tain fact, and is thereby precluded from after- wards denying, in any action brought upon that instrument, the fact so recited. Stepb. Pl. 197. A man shall always be estopped by his own deed, or not permitted to aver or prove anything In contradiction to what he has once so solemn- ly and deliberately avowed. 2 Bl. Comm. 295 ; Plowd. 434; Hudson v. Winslow Tp., 35 N. J. Law, 441; Taggart v. Risley, 4 Or. 242; Ap- peal of Waters, 35 Pa. '526, 78 Am. Dec. 354. —Estoppel by election. An estoppel predi- cated on a voluntary and intelligent action or choice of one of several things which is incon- sistent with another, the effect of the estoppel being to prevent the party so choosing from afterwards reversing his election or disputing the state of affairs or rights of others resulting from his original choice. Yates v. Hurd. 8 Colo. 343. 8 Pac. 575.— Estoppel by judg- ment. The estoppel raised by the rendition of a valid judgment by a court having jurisdiction, which prevents the parties to the action, and all who are in privity with them, from after- wards disputing or drawing into controversy the particular facts or issues on which the judg- ment was based or which were or might have been litigated in the action. 2 Bl. Judgm. I 504; State v. Torinus, 28 Minn. 175, 9 N. W. 725.— Estoppel by matter in pais. An es- toppel by the conduct or admissions of the par- ty ; an estoppel not arising from deed or mat- ter of record. Thus, where one man has ac- cepted rent of another, be will be estopped from afterwards denying, in any action with that person, that he was, at the time of auch ac- ceptance, his tenant. Steph. Pl. 197. The doc- trine of estoppels in pais is one which, so far at least as that term is concerned, has grown up chiefly within the last few years. But it Is, and always was, a familiar principle in the law of contracts. It lies at the foundation of morals, and is a cardinal point in the exposi- tion of promises, that one shall be bound by the state of facts which he has induced another to act upon. Redfleld, C. Estray must be understood as denoting a wan- dering beast whose owner is unknown to the person who takes it up. An estray is an animal that has escaped from its owner, and wanders or strays about ; usually defined, at common law, as a wandering animal whose owner is unknown. An animal cannot be an estray w'hen on the range where it was raised, and permitted by Its owner to run. and especially when the owner is known to the party who takes it up. The fact of its being breachy or vicious does not make it an estray. Walters v. Glatz, 29 Iowa, 439; Roberts v. Barnes. 27 Wis. 42o; Kinney v. Roe, 70 Iowa, 50.'). 30 N. W. 770; Shepherd v. Hawley, 4 Or. 20S.

ESTREPE.

To strip; to despoil; to lay waste; to commit waste upon an estate, as by cutting down trees, removing buildings, etc. To injure the value of a reversionary interest by stripping or spoiling the estate.

ESTREPEMENT.

A species of aggra- vated waste, by stripping or devastating the land, to the Injury of the reversioner, and especially pending a suit for possession.

— Eitrepexnent, writ of. This was a com- mon-law writ of waste, which lay in particular for the reversioner against the tenant for life, in respect of damage or injury to the land com- mitted by the latter. As it was only auxiliary to a real action for recovery of the land, and as equity afforded the same relief by injunction, the writ fell into disuse.

And this he is prepared to verify. The Lutin form of concluding a plea in con- fession and avoidance.

These words were used, when the pleadings were in Latin, at the conclusion of any pleading which contained new affirmative matter. They expressed the willingness or readiness of the party so pleading to establish by proof the mat- ter alleged in his pleading. A pleading which concluded in that manner was technically said to “conclude with a verification,” in contradis- tinction to a pleading which simply denied mat- ter alleged by the opposite party, and which for that reason was said to “conclude to the country,” because the party merely put bimself upon the country, or left the matter to the jury. [Law: ABA Canons of Professional Ethics (1908)]

The bar's unwritten code of honor took its first national written form in the ABA Canons of Professional Ethics (1908), the first American codification of lawyers' professional duties.

Why: The entry defines the tacit professional code; the 1908 Canons are the real instrument that first wrote it down nationally. Historical-legal illumination, cited loosely.

EUNDO ET REDEUNDO.

Lat In go- ing and returning. Applied to vessels. 3 C. Rob. Adm. 141.

EUNDO, MORANDO, ET REDEUNDO.

Lat Going, remaining, and returning. A person who is privileged from arrest (as a witness, legislator, etc.) is generally so privi- leged eundo, morando, et redeundo; that is, on his way to the place where his duties are to be performed, while he remains there, and on his return journey.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 1 — Speech or Debate Clause]

The legislator's privilege from arrest while going, remaining, and returning is constitutionally stated in the Speech or Debate Clause: Senators and Representatives 'shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same.'

Why: Real constitutional provision stating the legislative arrest privilege the entry names, in nearly the entry's own going/returning terms. Direct fit, not forced.

EUNOMY.

Equal laws and a well-ad- justed constitution of government

EUNUCH.

A male of the human species who has been castrated. See Domat, liv. pr61. tit 2, | 1, n. 10. Eckert v. Van Pelt 09 Kan. 357, 76 Pac. 909, 66 L. R. A. 266.

[Matthew 19:12, KJV]

For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake.

Why: The entry defines the castrated male; the verse names the classes of eunuchs — born, made by men, made for the kingdom's sake. Borderline, kept: genuinely definitional. Jesus' direct speech — deity verbatim speech.

EVASIO.

Lat. In old practice. An es- cape from prison or custody. Reg. Orig. 312.

EVASION.

A subtle endeavoring to set aside truth or to escape the punishment of the law. This will not be allowed. If one person says to another that he will not strike him, but will give him a pot of ale to strike first, and, accordingly, the latter strikes, the returning the blow is punishable ; and, if the person first striking is killed, it is murder, for no man shall evade tbe justice of the law by such a pretense. 1 Hawk. P. C. 81. So no one may plead Ignorance of the law to evade it. Jacob.

EVASIVE.

Tending or seeking to evade ; elusive; shifting; as an evasive argument or plea.

EVENINGS.

In old English law. Tbe delivery at even or night of a certain por- tion of grass, or corn, etc., to a customary tenant, who performs the service of cutting, mowing, or reaping for his lord, given him

EVICT.

In the civil law. To recove'r anything from a person by virtue of the Judgment of a court or judicial sentence.

At common law. To dispossess, or turn out of the possession of lands by process of law. Also to recover land by Judgment at law. “If the land is evicted, no rent shall be paid.” 10 Coke, 128o.

EVICTION.

Dispossession by process of law ; the act of depriving a person of the possession of lands which he has held, in pursuance of the Judgment of a court. Rea- soner v. Edmundson, 5 Ind. 395; Cowdrey v. Colt, 44 N. Y. 392. 4 Am. Rep. 690; Home Life Ins. Co. v. Sherman, 46 N. Y. 372.

Technically, the dispossession must be by Judgment of law; if otherwise, it is an ous- ter.

Eviction implies an entry under paramount title, so as to interfere with the rights of the grantee. The object of the party making the entry is immaterial, whether it be to take all or a part of the land itself or merely an incor- poreal right. Phrases equivalent in meaning are "ouster by paramount title,” “entry and dis- turbance,” “possession under an elder title,” and the like. Mitchell v. Warner, 5 Conn. 497.

Eviction is an actual expulsion of the lessee out of all or Rome part of the demised premises. Pendleton v. Dyett, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 581, 585.

In a more popular sense, the term denotes turning a tenant of land out of possession, either by re-entry or by legal proceedings, such as an action of ejectment. Sweet.

By a loose extension, the term is some- times applied to the ousting of a person from the possession of chattels; but, prop- erly, it applies only to realty.

In the civil law. The abandonment which one is obliged to make of a thing, in pursuance of a sentence by which he is con- demned to do so. Poth. Contr. Sale, pt. 2, c. 1, § 2, art 1, no. 83. The abandonment which a buyer is compelled to make of a thing purchased, in pursuance of a judicial sentence.

Eviction is the loss suffered by the buyer of the totality of the thing sold, or of a part thereof, occasioned by the right or claims of a third person. Civil Code La. art 2500.

— Actual eviction is an actual expulsion of the tenant out of all or some part of the demised premises; a physical ouster or dispossession from the very thing granted or some substantial part thereof. Knotts v. McGregor, 47 W. Val 566, 85 S. a 899; Talbott v. English, 156 Ind. 299, 59 N. E 857 ; Seigel v. Neary, 38 Misc. Rep. 297, 77 N. Y. Supp. 854.— Constructive eviction, as the term is used with reference to breach of the covenants of warranty and of quiet enjoyment, means the inability of the pur- chaser to obtain possession by reason of a para- mount outstanding title. Frits v. Pusey, 31 Minn. 368, 18 N. W. 94. With reference to the relation of landlord and tenant, there is a “constructive eviction” when the former, with- out intent to oust the latter, does some act which deprives the tenant of the beneficial en- joyment of the demised premises or materially impairs such enjoyment. Realty Co. v. Fuller, 33 Misc. Rep. 109, 67 N. Y. Supp. 146; Talbott v. English, 156 Ind. 299, 59 N. E. 857.

EVIDENCE, Any species of proof, or probative matter, legally presented at the trial of an issue, by the act of the parties and through the medium of witnesses, rec- ords, documents, concrete objects, etc., for the purpose of inducing belief in the minds of the court or Jury as to their contention. Hotchkiss v. Newton, 10 Ga. 567 ; State v. Thomas, 50 La. Ann. 148. 23 South. 250; Cook v. New Durham, 64 N. H. 419, 13 Atl. 650; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 508 ; O’Brien v. State, 69 Neb. 691, 96 N. W. 650; Hubbell v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 006; McWilliams v. Rodgers, 56 Ala. 93.

The word “evidence,” in legal acceptation, in- cludes ail the means by which any alleged mat- ter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved. 1 Greenl. Ev. c. 1. | 1.

That which is legally submitted to a jury, to enable them to decide upon the questions in dis- pute or issue, as pointed out by the pleadings, and distinguished from all comment and argu- ment, is termed “evidence." 1 Starkie, Ev. pt. 1. I 3.

Synonyms distinguished. The term “evi- dence” is to be carefully distinguished from its synonyms “proof’ and “testimony." “Proof’ is the logically sufficient reason for assenting to the truth of a proposition advanced. In its juridical sense it is a term of wide import, and comprehend* everything that may be adduced at a trial, within the legal rules, for the purpose of producing conviction in the mind of judge or jury, aside from mere argument ; that is, every- thing that has a probative force intrinsically, and not merely as a deduction from, or com- bination of, original probative facts. But “evi- dence” is a narrower term, and includes only such kinds of proof as may he legally presented at a trial, by the act of the parties, and through the aid of such concrete facts as witnesses, rec- ords, or other documents. Thus, to urge a pre- sumption of law in support of one’s case is ad- ducing proof, but it is not offering evidence. "Testimony,” again, is a still more restricted term. It properly means only such evidence as is delivered by a witness on the trial of a cause, either orally or in the form of affidavits or depo- sitions. Thus, an ancient deed, when offered under proper circumstances, is evidence, but it could not strictly be called “testimony.” “Be- lief’ is a subjective condition resulting from proof. It is a conviction of the truth of a proposition, existing in the mind, and induced by persuasion, proof, or argument addressed to the judgment.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The bill of exceptions states that all the “testimony” is in the record; but this is not equivalent to a statement that all the “evi- dence” is in the record. Testimony is one species of evidence. But the word “evidence” is a generic term which includes every species of it. And, in a bill of exceptions, the general term covering all species should be used in the statement as to its embracing the evidence, not the term “testimony,” which is satisfied if the bill only contains all of that species of,evidence. The statement that all the testimony is in the record may, with reference to judicial records, properly, be termed an “affirmative pregnant.” Gazette Printing Co. v. Morss, 60 Ind. 107.

The word “proof’ seems properly to mean anything which serves, either immediately or mediately, to convince the mind of the truth or falsehood of a fact or proposition. It is also applied to the conviction generated in the mind by proof properly so called. The word “evi- dence” signifies, in its original sense, the state of being evident. I. e., plain, apparent, or no- torious. But by an almost peculiar inflection of our language, it is applied to that which tends to render evident or to generate proof. Best, Bv. || 10, 11.

Glassification. There are many species of evidence, and it is susceptible of being classified on several different principles. The more usual divisions are here subjoined.

Evidence Is either judicial or extrajudicial. Judicial evidence is the means, sanctioned by law, of ascertaining in a judicial proceeding the truth respecting a question of fact, (Code Civ. Proc. Cal. | 1823 :) while extrajudicial evi- dence iB that which is used to satisfy private persons as to facts requiring proof.

Evidence is either primary or secondary. Primary evidence is that kind of evidence which, under every possible circumstance, affords the greatest certainty of the fact in question. Thus, a written instrument is itself the best possible evidence of its existence and contents. Secondary evidence is that which is inferior to primary. Thus, a copy of an instrument, or oral evidence of its contents, is secondary evi- dence of the instrument and contents. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. || 1829, 1830.

In other words, primary evidence means orig- inal or first-hand evidence; the best evidence that the nature of the case admits of; the evi- dence which is required in the first instance, and which must fail before secondary evidence can be admitted. Thus, an original document is primary evidence; a copy of it would be sec- ondary. That evidence which the nature of the case or question suggests as tbe proper means of ascertaining the truth. See Cross v. Baskett,

Or. 84, 21 Pac. 47; Civ. Code Ga. 1805. I 5164. Secondary evidence is that species of evidence which becomes admissible, as being the next best, when the primary or best evidence of the fact in question is lost or inaccessible; as when a witness details orally the contents of an instrument which is lost or destroyed. Wil- liams v. Davis. 56 Tex. 253 ; Baucum v. George, 65 Ala. 259 ; Roberts v. Dixon, 50 Kan. 436, 31 Pac. 1083.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Evidence is either direct or indirect. Direct evidence is evidence directly proving any matter, as opposed to circumstantial evidence, which is often called “indirect.” It is usually conclusive, but, like other evidence, it is falli- ble, and that on various accounts. It is not to be confounded with primary evidence, as op- posed to secondary, although in point of fact it usually is primary. Brown; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 310, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Pease v. Smith, 61 N. Y. 477: State v. Calder, 23 Mont. 594, 59 Pac. 903; People v. Palmer, 11 N. Y. St. Rep. 820; Lake County v. Neilon, 44 Or. 14, 74 Pac. 212. Indirect evidence is evidence which does not tend directly to prove the con- troverted fact, but to establish a state of facts, or the existence of other facts, from which it will follow as a logical inference. Inferential evidence as to the truth of a disputed fact, not by testimony of any witness to the fact, but by collateral circumstances ascertained by com- petent means. 1 Starkie, Ev. 15. See Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, | 1832; Civ. Code Ga. 1895. | 5143.

Evidence is either intrinsic or extrinsic. In- trinsic evidence is that which is derived from a document wthout anything to explain it Ex- trinsic evidence is external evidence, or that which is not contained in the body of an agree- ment, contract, and the like.

Compound and descriptive terms. — Ad- minicular evidence. Auxiliary or supple- mentary evidence, such as is presented for the purpose of explaining and completing other evidence. (Chiefly used in ecclesiastical law.)— Circumstantial evidence. This is proof of various facts or circumstances which usually attend the main fact in dispute, and therefore tend to prove its existence, or to sustain, by their consistency, the hypothesis claimed. Or as otherwise defined, it consists in reasoning from facts which are known or proved to estab- lish such as are conjectured to exist. See, more fully, Cibcumstantiai, Evidence.— Compe- tent evidence. That which the very nature of the thing to be proven requires, as, the pro- duction of a writing where its contents are the subject of inquiry. 1 Greenl. Ev. } 2 ; Chap- man v. McAdams. 1 Lea (Tenn.) 504 ; Hor- bach v. State, 43 Tex. 249. Also, generally, ad- missible or relevant, as the opposite of “incom- petent,” (see infra.) State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476 (Gil. 378). 93 Am. Dec. 241.— Conclusive evidence is that which is incbntrovertible, ei- ther because the law does not permit it to be contradicted, or because it is so strong and con- vincing as to overbear all proof to the contrary and establish the proposition in question beyond any reasonable doubt. Wood v. Chapin. 13 N.

Y. 509. 67 Am. Dec. 62; Haupt v. Pohlmann, 24 N. Y. Super. Ct. 121; Moore v. Hopkins. 83 Cal. 270, 23 Pac. 318, 17 Am. St. Rep. 248; West v. West, 90 Iowa. 41. 57 N. W. 639; Freese v. Loan Soc., 139 Cal. 392, 73 Pac. 172 ; People v. Stephenson, 11 Misc. Rep. 141. 32 N.

Y. Supp. 1112.— Corroborative evidence. Strengthening or confirming evidence; addition- al evidence of a different character adduced in support of the same fact or proposition. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. I 1839.— Cumulative evi- dence. Additional or corroborative evidence to the same point. That which goes to prove what has already been established by other evidence. Glidden v. Dunlap, 28 Me. 383 ; Parker v. Hardy, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 248 ; Waller v. Graves,

Conn. 310; Roe v. Kalb, 37 Ga. 459. All evidence material to the issue, after any such evidence has been given, is in a certain sense cumulative; that is, is added to what has tut cumulative evidence, in legal phrase, means evidence from the same or a new witness, sim- ply repeating, in substance and effect, or adding to, what has been before testified to. Parshall v. Klinck, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 212. Evidence is not cumulative merely because it tends to es- tablish the same ultimate or principally contro- verted fact. Cumulative evidence is additional evidence of the same kind to the same point. Able v. Frazier, 43 Iowa, 177. — Documentary evidence. Evidence supplied by writings and documents of every kind in the widest sense of the term; evidence derived from conventional symbols (such as letters) by which ideas are represented on material substances.— Evidence aliunde. Evidence from outside, from another source. In certain cases a written instrument may be explained by evidence aliunde, that is, by evidence drawn from sources exterior to the instrument itself, e. g., the testimony of a wit- ness to conversations, admissions, or prelimi- nary negotiations.— Expert evidence. Testi- mony given in relation to some scientific, tech- nical, or professional matter by ejperts, i. e., persons qualified to speak authoritatively by reuson of their special training, skill, or fa- miliarity with the subject. — Extraneous evi- dence. With reference to a contract, deed, will, or any writing, extraneous evidence is such as is not furnished hy the document itself, but is derived from outside sources; the same as evidence aliunde. (See supra.)— Hearsay evidence. Evidence not proceeding from the personal knowledge of the witness, but from the mere repetition of what he has heard others say. See, more fully. Hearsay. — Incompe- tent evidence. Evidence which is not admis- sible under the established rules of evidence; evidence which the law does not permit to be presented at all, or in relation to the particular matter, on account of lack of originality or of some defect in the witness, the document, or the nature of the evidence itself. Texas Brew- ing Co. v. Dickey (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 578; Bell v. Bumstead, 60 Hun, 580. 14 N. Y. Supp. 697; Atkins v. Elwell. 45 N. Y. 757; People v. Mullings, 83 Cal. 138, 23 Pac. 229, 17 Am. St. Rep. 223.— Inculpatory evidence. Criminative evidence; that which tends, or is intended, to establish the guilt of the accused. — Indispensable evidence. That without which a particular fact cannot be proved. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, § 1836; Ballinger’s Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 689. — Legal evidence. A broad general term meaning all admissible evidence, including both oral and documentary, but with a further implication that it must be of such a character as tends reasonably and sub- stantially to prove the point, not to raise a mere suspicion or conjecture. Lewis v. Clyde

S. S. Co., 132 N. C. 904, 44 S. E 666; Curtis v. Bradley. 65 Conn. 99. 31 Atl. 591, 28 L. R.

A. 143, 48 Am. St. Rep. 177; West v. Hayes, 51 Conn. 533. — Material evidence. Such as is relevant and goes to the substantial matters in dispute, or has a legitimate nnd effective in- fluence or bearing on the decision of the cnRp. Porter v. Valentine. 18 Misc. Rep. 213, 41 N.

Y. Supp. 507.— Mathematical evidence. Demonstrative evidence ; such as establishes its conclusions with absolute necessity and certainty. It is used in contradistinction to moral evidence.— Moral evidence. As oppos- ed to "mathematical” or “demonstrative” evi- dence, this term denotes that kind of evidence which, without developing an absolute and necessary certainty, generates a high degree of probability or persuasive force. It is founded upon analogy or induction, experience of the ordinary course of nature or the sequence of events, and the testimony of men.— Newly-dls- covered evidence. Evidence of a new and material fact, or new evidence in relation to a fact in issue, discovered by a party to a cause after the rendition of a verdict or judgment therein. In re McManus, 35 Misc. Rep. 678. 72 N. Y. Supp. 409; Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 816; People v. Priori, 164 N. Y. 459, 58

N. E. 668.— Opinion evidence. Evidence of what the witness thinks, believes, or infers in regard to facts in dispute, as distinguished from his personal knowledge of the facts themselves; not admissible except (under certain limitations) in the case of experts. See Lipscomb v. State, 75 Miss. 559, 23 South. 210.— Oral evidence. Evidence given by word of mouth; the oral tes- timony of a witness.— Original evidence. An original document, writing, or other ma- terial object introduced in evidence (Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 682) as distin- guished from a copy of it or from extraneous evidence of its contents or purport.— Parol evidence. Oral or verbal evidence; that which is given by word of mouth; the ordinary kind of evidence, given by witnesses in court. 3 Bl. Comm. 369. In a particular sense, and with reference to contracts, deeds, wills, and other writings, parol evidence is the same as ex- traneous evidence or evidence aliunde. (See supra.)— Partial evidence is that which goes to establish a detached fact, in a series tending to the fact in dispute. It may be received, sub- ject to be rejected as incompetent, unless con- nected with the fact in dispute by proof of other facts; for example, on an issue of title to real property, evidence of the continued possession of a remhte occupant is partial, for it is of a detached fact, which may or may not be after- wards connected with the fact in dispute. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1834. — Positive evidence. Direct proof of the fact or point in issue; evi- dence which, if believed, establishes the truth or falsehood of a fact in issue, and does not arise from any presumption. It is distinguish- ed from circumstantial evidence. 3 Bouv. Inst, no. 3057 ; Cooper v. Holmes, 71 Md. 20. 17 AtL 711; Davis v. Curry, 2 Bibb (Ivy.) 239; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 310. 52 Am. Dec. 711.— Presnmptive evidence. This term has several meanings in law. (1) Any evidence which is not direct and positive ; the proof of minor or other facts incidental to or usually connected with the fnct sought to be proved, which, when taken together, inferentially estab- lish or prove the fact in question to a reason- able degree of certainty; evidence drawn by human experience from the connection of cause and effect and observation of human conduct; the proof of facts from which, with more or less certainty, according to the experience of mankind of their more or less universal connec- tion, the existence of other facts can be deduced. In this sense the term is nearly equivalent to “circumstantial" evidence. See 1 Starkie, Ev. 558; 2 Saund. Pl. & Ev. 673; Civ. Code Ga. 1895, $ 5143; Davis v. Curry, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 239: Horbach v. Miller. 4 Neb. 44; State v. Miller, 9 Iloust. (Del.) 564, 32 Atl. 137. (2)

Evidence which must be received and treated as true and sufficient until rebutted by other testimony; as. where a statute provides that certain facts shall be presumptive evidence of guilt, of title, etc. State v. Mitchell, 119 N. C. 784, 25 S. E. 783; State v. Intoxicating Liq-which admits of explanation or contradiction by other evidence, as distinguished from conclusive evidence. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 89. — Prima fade evidence. Evidence good and sufficient on its face; such evidence as, in the judgment of the law, is sufficient to establish a given fact, or the group or chain of facts constituting the party's claim or defense, and which if not rebutted or contradicted, will remain sufficient. Crane v. Morris. 6 Pet. 611, 8 L. Ed. 514; State v. Bur-

Ungame, 146 Mo. 207, 48 8. W. 72; State v. Roten, 86 N. C. 701; Blough v. Parry, 144 Ind. 463, 43 N. E. 560. Evidence which suffices for the proof of a particular fact until contradicted and overcome by other evidence. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. 1903, 8 1833. Evidence which, stand- ing alone and unexplained, would maintain the proposition and warrant th$ conclusion to sup- port which it is introduced. Emmons v. Bank, 97 Mass. 230. An inference or presumption of law, affirmative or negative of a fact, in the ab- sence of proof, or until proof can be obtained or produced to overcome the inference. People v. Thaeher, 1 Thomp. & C. <N. Y.) 167.— Prob- able evidence. Presumptive evidence iB so called, from its foundation in probability— Real evidence. Evidence furnished by things themselves, on view or inspection, as distin- guished from a description of them by the mouth of a witness ; e. g., the physical appear- ance of a person wben exhibited to the jury, marks, scars, wounds, finger-prints, etc., also the weapons or implements used in the commis- sion of a crime, and other inanimate objects, and evidence of the physical appearance of a place (the scene of an accident or of the com- mission of a crime or of property to be taken under condemnation proceedings) as obtained by a jury when they are taken to view it— Re- butting evidence. Evidence given to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove facts given in evi- dence by the adverse party. Davis v. Hamblin, 51 Md. 539 ; Railway Co. v. Wales, 5 O. C. D. 170; People v. Page, 1 Idaho, 195; State v. Fourchy, 51 La. Ann. 228, 25 South. 109. Also evidence given in opposition to a presumption of fact or a prima facie case; in this sense, it may be not only counteracting evidence, but evidence sufficient to counteract, that is. con- clusive. Fain v. Cornett, 25 Ga. 186. — Rele- vant evidence. Such evidence as relates to, or bears directly upon, the point or fact in is- sue, and proves or has a tendency to prove the proposition alleged; evidence which conduces to prove a pertinent theory in a case. Platner v. Plstner, 78 N. Y. 95: Seller v. Jenkins. 97 Ind. 438; Levy v. Campbell (Tex.) 20 S. W. 196j State v O'Neil, 13 Or. 183, 9 Pac. 286; 1 Whart. Ev. 8 20.— Satisfactory evidence. Such evidence as is sufficient to produce a be- lief that the thing is true; credible evidence; that amount of proof which ordinarily produces a moral certainty or conviction in an unpreju- diced mind; such evidence as, in respect to its amount or weight, is adequate or sufficient to justify the court or jury in adopting the con- clusion in support of which it is adduced. Thayer v. Boyle, 30 Me. 481; Walker v. Col- lins, 59 Fed. 74, 8 C. C. A. 1 ; U. S. v. Lee Huen (D. C.) 118 Fed. 457; People v. Stewart, 80 Cal. 129, 22 Pac. 124 : , Pittman v. Pitt- man, 72 111. App. 503. — Second-hand evi- dence. Evidence which has passed through one or more media before reaching the witness ; hearsay evidence.— State's evidence. A pop- ular term for testimony given by an accomplice or joint participant in the commission of a crime tending to criminate or convict the others, and given under an actual or implied promise ■ of immunity for himself. — Substantive evi- dence is that adduced for the purpose of prov- ing a fact in issue, ns opposed to evidence given for the purpose of discrediting a witness, (i. e., showing that he is unworthy of belief.) or of corroborating his testimony. EX PARTE.

On one side only; by or for one party; done for, In behalf of, or on the application of, one party only. A Judicial proceeding, order, injunction, etc., Is said to be ex parte when it Is taken or granted at the Instance and for the benefit of one party only, and without notice to, or contestation by, any person adversely Interested.

"Ex parte," In the heading of a reported case, signifies that the name following is that of the party upon whose application the case is heard.

In its primary sense, ex parte, as applied to an application in a judicial proceeding, means that it is made by a person who is not a party to the proceeding, but who has an interest in the matter which entitles him to make the ap- plication. Thus, in a bankruptcy proceeding or an administration action, an application by A. B., a creditor, or the like, would be described as made “ex parte A. B.,” t. «., on the part of

In its more usual sense, ex parte means that an application is made by one party to a pro- ceeding in the absence of the other. Thus, an ex parte injunction is one granted without the opposite party having had notice of the applica- tion. It would not be called “ex parte" if he had proper notice of it, and chose not to appear to oppose it. Sweet.

EX POST FACTO.

After the fact; by an act or fact occurring after some previous act or fact and relating thereto; by subse- quent matter; the opposite of ah initio. Thus, a deed may be good ah initio, or, if invalid at its inception, may be confirmed by matter ex post facto.

EX POST FACTO LAW.

A law passed after the occurrence of a fact or commission of an act, which retrospectively changes the legal consequences or relations of such fact or deed. By Const. U. S. art. 1, | 10, the states are forbidden to pass "any ex post facto law.” In this connection the phrase has a much narrower meaning than 'its lit- eral translation would Justify, as will appear from the extracts given below.

The phrase "ex post facto," in the constitu- tion. extends to criminal and not to civil cases. And under this head is included: (1) Every law that makes an action, done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action. (2) Every law that aggravates a crime, or makes it great- er than it was when committed. (3) Every law that changes the punishment, and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed. (4) Every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense, in order to convict the offender. All these, and similar laws, are prohibited by the constitution. But a law may be ex post facto, and still not amenable to this constitutional inhibition ; that is, provided it mollifies, instead of aggravating, the rigor of the criminal law. Boston v. Cum- mins. 16 Ga. 102. 60 Am. Dec. 717 ; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. Ed. 356 ; U. S. v. Hall, 2 Wash. C. C. 366, Fed. Cas. No. 15,285; Woart v. Winnick, 3 N. H. 473. 14 Am. Dec. 384: Calder v. Bull, 3 Dali. 390, 1

L. Ed. 648 ; 3 Story, Const. 212.

An ea post facto law is one which renders an act punishable, in a manner in which it was not punishable when committed. Such a law may inflict penalties on the person, or pecuniary pen- alties which swell the public treasury. The legislature is therefore prohibited from passing a law by which a man’s estate, or any part of it, shall be seised for a crime, which was not declared, by some previous law, to render him liable to such punishment. Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87. 138, 3 L. Ed. 162.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The plain and obvious meaning of this pro- hibition is that the legislature shall not pass any law, after a fact done by any citizen, which shall have relntion to that fact, so as to pun- ish that which was innocent when done ; or to add to the punishment of that which was criminal; or to increase the malignity of a crime ; or to retrench the rules of evidence, so as to make conviction more easy. This definition of an ex post facto law is sanctioned by long usage. Strong v. State, 1 Black! (lnd.) 196.

The term "ex post facto law," in the United States constitution, cannot be construed to in- clude and to prohibit the enacting any law aft- er a fact, nor even to prohibit the depriving a citizen of a vested right to property. Calder v. Bull, 3 Dali. 386, 1 L. Ed. 648.

"Ex post facto" and "retrospective" are not convertible terms; The latter is a term of wid- er signification than the former and includes it. Ail ex post facto laws are necessarily retro- spective, but not e converso. A curative or confirmatory statute is retrospective, but not ea post facto. Constitutions of nearly all the states contain prohibitions against ex post facto laws, but only a few forbid retrospective legis- lation in specific terms. Black, Const. Probib. IS 170, 172, 222.

Retrospective laws divesting vested rights are impolitic and unjust; but they are not "ea post facto laws," within the . meaning of the constitution of the United States, nor repugnant to any other of its provisions; and, If not re- pugnant to the state constitution, a court can- not pronounce them to be void, merely because in their judgment they are contrary to the. prin- ciples of natural justice. Albee v. May, 2 Paine, 74. Fed. Cas. No. 134.

Every retrospective act is not necessarily an ex post facto law. That phrase embraces only such laws as impose or affect penalties or for- feitures. Locke v. New Orleans, 4 Wall. 172, 18 L. Ed. 834.

Retrospective laws which do not impair the obligation of contracts, or affect vested rights, or partake of the character of ea post facto laws, are not prohibited by the constitution. Bay v. Gage, 36 Barb. (N. X.) 447.

[Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 386 (1798)]

The Constitution's narrower meaning of 'ex post facto' — criminal laws only, in four classes — was fixed by Justice Chase in Calder v. Bull: every law that makes criminal an innocent act, aggravates a crime, increases punishment, or alters legal rules of evidence to convict.

[Law: False Claims Act qui tam provisions, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729–3733]

The relator proceeding — a private person instigating suit in the sovereign's name ('State ex rel. Doe v. Roe') — survives in federal law as the qui tam action, in which a private relator sues on behalf of the United States.

Why: Real statute codifying the modern form of the relator device the entry defines: the private relator suing in the government's name. Genuine doctrinal descendant, not forced.

EX BIGORE JURIS.

According to the rigor or strictness of law; in strictness of law. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 10, § 3.

EX SCRIPTIS OHM VISIS.

From writings formerly seen. A term used as de- scriptive of that kind of proof of handwriting where the knowledge has been acquired by the witness having seen letters or other doc- uments professing to be the handwriting of the party, and having afterwards communi- cated personally with the party upon the con- tents of those letters or documents, or hav- ing otherwise acted upon them by written answers, producing further correspondence or acquiescence by the party In some matter to which they relate, or by the witness trans- acting with the party some business to which ■they relate, or by any other mode of commu- nication between the party and the witness which, In the ordinary course of the trans- actions of life, induces a reasonable presump- tion that the letters or documents were the handwriting of the party. 5 Adol. & E. 730.

EX STATDTO.

According to the statute. Fleta, lib. 6, e. 11, g 1.

EX STIPULATE ACTIO.

In the civil law. An action of stipulation. An action given to recover marriage portions. Inst. 4, ft, 29.

EX TEMPORE.

From or in consequence of time; by lapse of time. Bract, fols. 51, 52. Ex diutumo tempore, from length of time. Id. fol. 516.

Without preparation or premeditation.

EX TESTAMENTO.

From, by, or un- der a will. The opposite of o6 intestato, »•)

Ex tota materia emergat reaolntio.

The explanation should arise out of the whole subject-matter; the exposition of a statute should be made from all Its parts together. Wing. Max. 23ft

P. 63; Broom, Max. 730, 732; Story, Ag. g 195.

Ez turpi ooutractu aetio bob oritur.

From an immoral or Iniquitous contract an action does not arise. A contract founded upon an Illegal or Immoral consideration can- not be enforced by action. 2 Kent, Comm. 406: Dig. 2, 14, 27, 4.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Hebrews 9:16-17, KJV]

For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth.

Why: 'From, by, or under a will' — the verses state the testament's legal nature: it takes force only upon the testator's death. The definition of the instrument itself. Epistle, not deity speech — no red-letter flag.

EX VT TERMINI.

From or by the force of the term. From the very meaning of the expression used. 2 Bl. Comm. 109, 115.

EX VISCERIBES.

From the bowels. From the vital part, the very essence of the thing. 10 Coke, 246; Homer v. Shelton, 2 Meta (Mass.) 213. Ex visceribus verborum, from the mere words and nothing else. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. g 980; Fisher v. Fields, 10 Johns. (N. X.) 495.

EX VISITATIONE DEI.

By the dis- pensation of God ; by reason of physical In- capacity. Anciently, when a prisoner, being arraigned, stood silent instead of pleading, a jury was Impaneled to Inquire whether he obstinately stood mute or was dumb ex visi- tatione Dei. 4 Steph. Comm. 394.

Also by natural, as distinguished from vio- lent, causes. When a coroner’s inquest finds that the death was due to disease or other natural cause, it Is frequently phrased "ex vUitatione Dei.”

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 4:11, KJV]

And the LORD said unto him, Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind? have not I the LORD?

Why: 'By the dispensation of God; by reason of physical incapacity' — anciently the jury inquired whether the mute prisoner was dumb ex visitatione Dei; the verse is God claiming authorship of dumbness and deafness. Genuin...

From sight of the writing; from having seen a person write. A term employed to describe one of the modes of proof of handwriting. Best, Pres. 218.

EX VOLUNTATE.

Voluntarily; from free-will or choice.

EXACTION.

The wrongful act of an of- ficer or other person In compelling payment of a fee or reward for his services, under color of his official authority, where no pay- ment is due.

Between “extortion” and "exaction" there is this difference: that in the former case the offi- cer extorts more than his due, when something is due to him ; in the latter, he exacts what is not his due, when there is nothing due to him. Co. Litt 368.

EXACTOR.

In the civil law. A gath- erer or receiver of money ; a collector of taxes. Cod. 10, 19.

la old English law. A collector of the public moneys; a tax gatherer. Thus, ex- actor regie was the name of the king’s tax collector, who took up the taxes and other debts due the treasury.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 22:21, KJV]

Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's.

Why: The collector of taxes, the king's tax-gatherer — the verse establishes the tax obligation itself, the ground of the exactor's office. Jesus' direct speech — deity verbatim speech.

EXALTARE.

In old English law. To raise ; to elevate. Frequently spoken of wa- ter, i. e., to raise the surface of a pond or pool.

EXAMINATION.

An Investigation ; search ; interrogating.

In trial practice. The examination of a witness consists of the series of questions put to him by a pasty to the action, or his coun- sel, for the purpose of bringing before the court and Jury in legal form the knowledge which the witness has of the facts and mat- ters in dispute, or of probing and sifting his evidence previously given. ■

In criminal practice. An investigation by a magistrate of a person who has been charged with crime and arrested, or of the facts and circumstances which are alleged to have attended the crime and to fasten sus- picion upon the party so charged, in order to ascertain whether there is sufficient ground to hold him to bail for his trial by the proper court. U. S. v. Stanton, 70 Fed. 890, 17 C. C.

A. 475 ; State v. Conrad, 95 N. C. 669.

— Cross-examination. In practice. The ex- amination of a witness upon a trial or bearing, or upon taking a deposition, by the party op- posed to the one who produced him, upon his evidence given in chief, to test its truth, to fur- ther develop it, or for other purposes. — Direct examination. In practice. The first inter- rogation or examination of a witness, on the merits, by the party on whose behalf he is call- ed. This is to be distinguished from an ex- amination in pai», or on the voir dire, which is merely preliminary, and is had when the compe- . tency of the witness is challenged ; from the cross-examination, which is conducted by the adverse party ; and from the redirect examina- tion which follows the cross-examination, and is had by the party who first examined the wit- ness.—Examination de 110110 esse. A provi- sional examinaticn of a witness ; an examina- tion of a witness whose testimony is important and might otherwise be lost, held out of court and before the trial, with the proviso that the deposition so taken may be used on the trial in case the witness is unable to attend in per- son at that time or cannot be produced.— Ex- amination of a long account. This phrase does not mean the examination of the account to ascertain the result or effect of it, but the proof by testimony of the correctness of the items composing it. Magown v. Sinclair, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 63.— Examination of bankrupt. This is the interrogation of a bankrupt, in the course of proceedings in bankruptcy, touching the state of his property. This is authorized in the United States by Rev. St. § 5086; and sec- tion 5087 authorizes the examination of a bank- rupt's wife.— Examination of invention. An inquiry made at the patent-office, upon ap- plication for a patent, into the novelty and util- ity of the alleged invention, and as to its in- terfering with any other patented invention. Rev. St. U. S. S 4893 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3384).— Examination of title. An inves- tigation made by or for a person who intends to purchase real estate, in the offices where the public records are kept, to ascertain the his- tory and present condition of the title to such land, and its »tatu» with reference to liens, in- cumbrances, clouds, etc.— Examination of wife. See Pbivate Examination, infra.— Ex- amination pro InterBase suo. When a per- son claims to be entitled to an estate or other property sequestered, whether by mortgage, judgment, lease, or otherwise, or has a title paramount to the sequestration, he should apply to the court to direct an inquiry whether the applicant has any, and what, interest in the property ; and this inquiry is called an “ex- amination pro interesse suo." Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276, 4 Sup. Ct. 27, 28 L. Ed. 145 ; Hitz v. Jenks, 185 (J. S. 155, 22 Sup. Ct. 598, 46 L. Ed. 851.— Preliminary' ex- amination. The examination of a person charged with crime, before a magistrate, as above explained. See In re Dolph, 17 Colo. 35, 28 Pac. 470 ; Van Buren v. State, 65 Neb. 223, 91 N. W. 201.— Private examination. An examination or interrogation, by a magistrate, of a married woman who is grantor in a deed or other conveyance, held out of the presence of her husband, for the purpose of ascertaining whether her will in the matter is free and un- constrained. Muir v. Galloway, 61 Cal. 506 { Hadley v. Geiger, 9 N. J. Law, 233. — Re-ex- amination. An examination of a witness aft- er a cross-examination, upon matters arising out of such cross-examination.— Separate ex- amination. The interrogation' of a married woman, who appears before an officer for the purpose of acknowledging a deed or other in- strument, conducted by such officer in private

In Ameriea. The title is sometimes given to the chief executive of a state or of the nation.

EXCEPTANT.

One who excepts; one who makes or files exceptions; one who ob- jects to a ruling, instruction, or anything proposed or ordered.

EXCEPTIO.

In Roman law. An ex- ception. In a general sense, a judicial alle- gation opposed by a defendant to the plain- tiff's action. Calvin.

A stop or stay to an action opposed by the defendant. Cowell.

Answering to the "defense" or "plea" of the common luw. An allegation and defense of a defendant by which the plaintiff's claim or complaint is defeated, either according to strict law or upon grounds of equity.

In a stricter sense, the exclusion of an ac- tion that lay in strict law, on grounds of equity, (aotionis jure stricto competently oft <e quitatem exc lusio.) Helnecc. A kind of limitation of an action, by which it was shown that the action, though otherwise just, did not lie in the particular case. Calvin. A species of defense allowed in cases whore, though the action as

It is also somewhat used to signify other objections in the course of a suit; for ex- ample, exception to bail is a formal objection that special bail offered by defendant are in- sufficient. 1 Tidd, Pr. 255.

An exception is an objection upon a matter of law to a decision made, either before or after judgment, by a court, tribunal, judge, or other judicial officer, in an action or pro- reeding. The exception must be taken at the time the decision is made. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. | 640.

In admiralty and equity practice. An exception is a formal allegation tendered by a party that some previous pleading or proceeding taken by the adverse party is insuf- ficient Peck v. Osteen, 37 Fla. 427, 20 South. 649; Arnold v. Slaughter, 36 W. Va. 589, 15

S. E. 250.

Ia statutory law. An exception in a statute is a clause designed to reserve or ex- empt some Individuals from the general class of persons or things to which the language of the act in general attaches.

An exception differs from an explanation, which, by the use of a videlicet, proviso, etc., is allowed only to explain doubtful clauses prece- dent, or to separate and distribute generals into particulars. Cutler v. Tufts, 3 Pick. (Mass.)

Ia contracts. A clause in a deed or other conveyance by which the grantor excepts something out of that which he granted be- fore by the deed. Morrison v. Bank, 88 Me. 155, 33 Atl. 782; Gould v. Glass, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 192; Coal Creek Min. Co. v. Heck, 83 Tenn. 497; Winston v. Johnson, 42 Minn. 398, 45 N. W. 958; Bryan v. Bradley, 16 Conn. 482; Rich v. Zeilsdorff, 22 Wis. 547, 99 Am. Dec. 81.

The distinction between an exception and a reservation is that an exception is always of part of the thing granted, and of a thing in esse; a reservation is always of a thing not in esse, but newly created or reserved out of the land or tenement demised. Co. Lift. 47a; 4 Kent, Comm. 468. It has been also said that there is a diversity between an exception and a saving, for an exception exempts clearly, bnt a saving goes to the matters touched, and does not exempt. Plowd. 361.

In the civil law. An exceptio or plea. Used in this sense in Louisiana.

Declinatory exceptions are such dilatory exceptions as merely decline the jurisdiction of the judge before whom the action is brought Code Proc. La. 334.

Dilatory exceptions are such as do not tend to defeat the action, bnt only to retard its progress.

Peremptory exceptions are those which tend to the dismissal of the action.

—Exception to hail. An objection to the special bail pnt in by the defendant to an ac- tion at law made by the plaintiff on grounds of the insufficiency of the bail. 1 Tidd, Pr. 255.

' The profit which arises from a maritime loan, when such profit Is a percentage on the money lent, considering it in the light of money lent in one place to be returned in another, with a difference in amount in the sum borrowed and that paid, arising from the difference of time and place. The term is commonly used in this sense by French writ- ers. Hall, Emerig. Mar. Loans, 56n.

A public place where merchants, brokers, factors, etc., meet to transact their business.

In law of personal property. Exchange of goods is a commutation, transmutation, or transfer of goods for other goods, as dis- tinguished from sole, which is a transfer of goods for money. 2 Bl. Comm. 446; 2 Steph. Comm. 120; Elwell v. Chamberlin, 31 N. V. 624; Cooper v. State, 37 Ark. 418; Preston v. Keene, 14 Pet. 137, 10 L. Eld. 387.

Exchange is a contract by which the par- ties mutually give, or agree to give, one thing for another, neither thing, or both things, being money only. Civ. Code Cal. 8 1804; Civ. Code Dak. 8 1029; Civ. Code La. art 2660.

The distinction between a Rale and exchange of property is rather one of shadow than of substance. In both cases the title to property ia absolutely transferred ; and the same rules •of law are applicable to the transaction, wheth- er the consideration of the contract is money or by way of barter. It can make no essential difference in the rights and obligations of par- ties that goods and merchandise are transferred and paid for by other goods and merchandise instead of by money, which is but the repre- sentative of value or property. Com. v. Clark, 14 Gray (Mass.) 367.

— Arbitration of exchange. The business of buying and selling exchange (bills of ex- change) between two or more countries or mar- kets, and particularly where the profits of such business are to be derived from a calculation of the relative value of exchange in the two countries or markets, and by taking advantage of the fact that the rate of exchange may be higher in the one place than in the other at the same time. — Dry exchange. In English law. A term formerly in use. said to have been in- vented for the purpose of disguising and cover- ing usury ; something being pretended to pass on both sides, whereas, in truth, nothing passed but on one side, in which respect it was called “dry.” Cowell ; Blount.— Exchange, bill of. See Bill of Exchange. — Exchange broker. One who negotiates bills of exchange drawn on foreign countries or on other places in the same country ; one who makes and concludes bargains for others in matters of money or mer- chandise. Little Rock v. Barton, 33 Ark. 444 ; Portland v. O’Neill, 1 Or. 219.— Exchange of livings. In ecclesiastical law. This is ef- fected by resigning them into the bishop’s hands,

EXCISE.

An inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the com- modity, and frequently upon the retail sale. 1 Bl. Comm. 318; Story, Const. 8 950 ; Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 346, 23 L. Ed. 99; Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 608, 22 Sup. Ct 493, 46

L. Ed. 713; Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 256; Union Bank v. Hill, 3 Cold. (Tenn.) 328.

The words "tax” and "excise,” although often used as synonymous, are to be considered as having entirely distinct and separate significa- tions, under Const. Mass. c. 1, f 1, art. 4. The former is a charge apportioned either among the whole people of the state or those residing within certain districts, municipalities, or sec- tions. It is required to be imposed, so that, if levied for the public charges of government, it shall be shared according to the estate, real and personal, which each person may possess; or, if raised to defray the cost of some local im- provement of a public nature, it shall be borne by those who will receive some special and peculiar benefit or advantage which an- expendi- ture of money for a public object may cause to those on whom the tax is assessed. An excise, on the other hand, is of a different character. It is based on no rule of apportionment or equal- ity whatever. It is a fixed, absolute, and di- rect charge laid on merchandise, products, or commodities, without any regard to the amount of property belonging to those on whom it may fall, or to any supposed relation between money expended for a public object and a special ben- efit occasioned to those by whom the charge is to be paid. Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen (Mass.) 288.

The term Is also extended to the Imposi- tion of public charges, in the nature of taxes, upon other subjects than the manufacture and sale of commodities, such as licenses to pursue particular callings, the franchises of corporations and particularly the franchise of corporate existence, and the inheritance or succession of estates. A sentence of censure pronounced by one of the spiritual Courts for offenses falling under ecclesias- tical cognizance. It is described in the books as twofold: (1) The lesser excommunication, which is an ecclesiastical censure, excluding - the party from the sacraments; (2) the great- er, which excludes him from the company of all Christians. Formerly, too, an excommu- nicated man was under various civil disabil- ities. He could not serve upon Juries, or be ' a witness in any court ; neither could he bring an action to recover lands or money due to him. These penalties are abolished by St. 53 Geo. IIL C. 127. 3 Steph. Comm. 721.

Executors are classified according to the following several methods:

. They are either general or special. The former term denotes an executor who is to have charge of the whole estate, wherever found, and administer it to a final settlement ; while a special executor is only empowered by the will to take charge of a limited por- tion of the estate, or such part as may lie In one place, or to carry on the administration only to a prescribed point.

They are either instituted or substituted. An instituted executor Is one who is appoint- ed by the testator without any condition; while a substituted executor Is one named to fill the office in case the person first nominat- ed should refuse to act

In the phraseology of ecclesiastical law, they are of the following kinds:

Executor d lege constitutus, an executor appointed by law; the ordinary of the dio- cese.

Executor ab episcopo constitutus, or ex- ecutor dativus, an executor appointed by the bishop; an administrator to an Intestate.

Executor A testatore constitutus, an ex- ecutor appointed by a testator. Otherwise termed "executor testamentarius a testa- mentary executor.

An executor' to the tenor is one who, though not directly constituted executor by the will, is therein charged with duties in relation to the estate which can only be performed by the executor.

— Exeoutor creditor. In Scotch law. A creditor of a decedent who obtains a grant of administration on the estate, at least to the extent of so much of it as will be sufficient to discharge his debt, when the executor named in the wilt has declined to serve, as also those oth- er persons who would be preferentially entitled to administer. — Executor dative. In Scotch law. One appointed by the court ; equivalent to the English “administrator with the will an- nexed."—Executor de son tort. Executor of his own wrong. A person who assumes to act as executor of an estate without any lawful warrant or authority, but who, by his inter- meddling, makes himself liable as an executor to a certain extent. If a stranger takes upon him to act as executor without any just au- thority, (as by intermeddling with the goods of the deceased, and many other transactions,) he is called in law an “executor of his own wrong,” de son tort. 2 Bl. U. & 113, 23 L. Ed. 233.

A privilege allowed by law to a Judgment debtor, by which he may hold property to a certain amount, or certain classes of property, free from all liability to levy and sale on ex- ecution or attachment. Turrlll v. McCarthy, 114 Iowa, 681, 87 N. W. 687; Williams v. Smith, 117 Wis. 142, 93 N. W. 464.

—Exemption laws. Laws which provide that a certain amount or proportion of a debtor’s property shall be exempt from execution. — Ex- emption, words of. It is a maxim of law that words of exemption are not to be construed to import any liability ; the maxim cxpressio unius exclusio alteriut, or its converse, cxclusio uniua incluiio alterius, not applying to such a case. For example, an exemption of the crown from the bankruptcy act 1889, in one specified particular, would not inferentially subject the crown to that act in any other particular. Brown.

[Law: Expatriation Act of 1868 — expatriation as a natural and inherent right]

The voluntary abandonment of one's country the entry defines is, in American law, 'a natural and inherent right of all people' — the Expatriation Act of 1868 repudiating the doctrine of perpetual allegiance.

Why: Real act directly fixing the legal status of the act the entry defines. The entry describes the act; the footnote gives its American statutory charter. Genuine, not forced. [re-homed from 'EXPATRIATION' to 'EXORDIUM' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

EXPECT.

To await ; to look forward to something intended, promised, or likely to happen. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Hamlin, 67 Kan. 476, 73 Pac. 58.

—Expectancy. The condition of being defer- red to a future time, or of dependence upon an expected event; contingency as to possession or enjoyment. With respect to the time of their enjoyment, estates may either be in possession or in expectancy ; and of expectancies there are two sorts, — one created by the act of the par- ties, called a "remainder;" the other by act of law, called a “reversion.” 2 Bl. Comm. 163. —Expectant. Having relation to, or depend- ent upon, a contingency.— Expectant estates. See Estate in Expectancy.— Expectant heir. A person who has the expectation of in- heriting property or an estate, but small pres- ent means. The term is chiefly used in equity, where relief is afforded to such persons against the enforcement of “catching bargains,” (a. ».) Jeffers v. Lampson, 10 Ohio St. 106; Whelen v. Phillips. 151 Pa. 312, 25 Atl. 44 ; In re Robbins’ Estate, 199 Pa. 500, 49 Atl. 233.— Expectant right. A contingent right, not vested ; one which depends on the continued existence of the present condition of things un- til the happening of some future event. Pear- sall v. Great Northern R. Co., 161 U. S. 646, 16 Sup. Ct. 706, 40 L. EXPLOSION.

A sudden and rapid com- bustion, causing violent expansion of the air, and accompanied by a report

The word “explosion" is variously used in or- dinary speech, and is not one that admits of exact definition. Every combustion of an ex- plosive substance, whereby other property is ig- nited and consumed, would not be an ‘‘explo- sion,” within the ordinary meaning of the term. It is not used as a synonym of "combustion.” An explosion may be described generally as a sudden and rapid combustion, causing violent expansion of the air. and accompanied by a re- port But the rapidity of the combustion, the violence of the expansion, and the vehemence of the report vary in intensity as often as the oc- currences

EXPROMISSOR.

In the civil law. A person who assumes the debt of another, and becomes solely liable for it, by a stipu- lation with the creditor. He differs from a surety, inasmuch as this contract is one of novation, while a surety is jointly liable with his principal. Mackeld, Rom. Law, § 63R

EXPROMITTERE.

In the civil law. To undertake for another, with the view of becoming liable in his place. Calvin.

EXPROPRIATION.

This word proper- ly denotes a voluntary surrender of rights or claims; the act of divesting oneself of that which was previously claimed as one’s own, or renouncing it In this sense it is the opposite of “appropriation.” But a mean- ing has been attached to the term, imported from its use In foreign Jurisprudence, which makes it synonymous with the exercise of the power of eminent domain, i. e., the com- pulsory taking from a person, on compensa- tion made, of his private property for the use of a railroad, canal, or other public work.

In French law. Expropriation is the. compulsory realization of a debt by the cred- itor out of the lauds of his debtor, or the usufruct thereof. When the debtor Is co- tenant with others. It Is necessary that a partition should first be made. It is confin- ed, in the first place, to the lands (If any)' that are in hypotttfquc, but afterwards ex- tends to the lands not in hypothdque. More- over, the debt must- be of a liquidated amount Brown.

EXTINCT.

Extinguished. A rent is said to be extinguished when it is destroyed and put out Co. Litt. 1476. See Extinguish- ment.

Extincto snbjeeto, tollitnr adjnno- tum. When the subject is extinguished, the Incident ceases. Thus, when the business for which a partnership has been formed is completed, or brought to an end, the part- nership itself ceases. Inst. 3, 26, 6 ; 3 Kent, Comm. 52, note.

EXTINGUISHMENT.

The destruction or cancellation of a right power, contract, or estate. The annihilation of a collateral thing or subject in the subject Itself out of which it is derived. Prest. Merg. 9. For the distinction between an extinguishment and passing a right, see 2 Shars. Bl. Comm. 325, note.

“Extinguishment" is sometimes confounded with "merger,” though there is a clear distinc- tion between them. “Merger” is only a mode of extinguishment, and applies to estates only under particular circurastnnces ; but "extin- guishment” is a term of general application to rights, as well as estates. 2 Crabb, Real Prop, p. 367, | 1487.

— Extinguishment of common. Loss of the right to have common. This may happen from various causes. — Extinguishment of copy- hold. In English law. A copyhold is said to be extinguished when the freehold and copyhold interests unite in the same person and in the same right, which may be either by the copy- hold interest coming to the freehold or by the freehold interest coming to the copyhold. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 670, § 864.— Extinguish- ment of debts. This takes place by payment ; by accord and satisfaction : by novation, or the substitution of a new debtor; by merger, when the creditor recovers a judgment or ac- cepts a security of a higher nature than the original obligation ; by a release ; by the mar- riage of a feme sole creditor with tile debtor, or of an obligee with one of two joint obligors; and where one of the parties, debtor or credit- or, makes the other his executor.— Extinguish- ment of rent. If a person have a yearly rent of lands, and afterwards purchase those lands, so that he has as good an estate in the land as in the rent, the rent is extinguished. Termes de la Ley ; Cowell ; Co. Litt. 147. Rent may also be extinguished by conjunction of estates, by confirmation, by grant, by release, and by surrender. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. pp. 210-213, g 209.— Extinguishment of ways. This is usually effected by unity of possession. As if a man have a way over the close of another, and he purchase that close, the way is' extinguished. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 341, | 384.

EXTIRPATION.

In English law. A species of destruction or waste, analogous to estrepement See Estbepement.

EXTIRPATIONS.

Extradition may be ac- corded as a mere matter of comity, or may take place under treaty stipulations between the two nations. It also obtains as between the different states of the American Union. Terllnden v. Ames, 184 U. S. 270, 22 Sup. Gt 484, 46 L. Ed. 534 ; Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905.

■ Extradition between the states must be con- sidered and defined to be a political duty of im- perfect obligation, founded upon compact, and requiring each state to surrender one who, hav- ing violated the criminal laws of another state, has fled from its justice, and is found in the state from which ne is demanded, on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled. [Law: U.S. Const. art. IV, § 2, cl. 2 — Extradition Clause]

Interstate extradition within the American Union, which the entry notes, rests on the Extradition Clause: 'A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.'

Film moment (paraphrase): the Andrea Gail founders in the storm despite every means the crew has to save her — a vessel in imminent danger of being lost 'notwithstanding all the means that can be applied to get her off.' (paraphrase)

Why: The definition is a vessel lost despite all means; the film's central subject is literally that scenario at sea. No dialogue invented — plot paraphrase only.

Classical letters (paraphrase): Ovid, punished by exile (relegatio) to Tomis under Augustus, wrote the Tristia — the classic literary record of a man living under a legal sentence of exile. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry concerns exile as legal punishment (Magna Carta c. 29). Ovid's Tristia is the canonical first-person literature of that punishment; exile 8 AD and composition in exile are well-attested facts, no invented qu...

[Law: alluvion — accretion by gradual water action vests in the riparian owner]

A small island rising in a river fell under the common-law doctrine of alluvion — land gained by the gradual, imperceptible action of the water belongs to the riparian owner.

Why: The entry (citing Bracton and Fleta) defines the very subject of the alluvion/accretion doctrine: an island formed by a river's action. The doctrine decides who owns it. The link is the subject matter itself.

'Free on board' is not merely mercantile slang — Article 2 of the UCC codifies F.O.B. terms, distinguishing shipment contracts from destination contracts and fixing where risk of loss passes.

Why: The entry quotes three cases construing F.O.B. contracts; UCC § 2-319 is the statute that now defines those exact terms for sale-of-goods contracts. The citation is the code section that governs the entry's subject.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — power to coin money; 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting]

The 'making or coining of money' is a sovereign prerogative: the Constitution vests it in Congress, and counterfeiting — the unlawful 'fabricare' — is a federal crime.

Why: The entry covers both lawful and unlawful coining; the two citations are the lawful source of the power and the criminal prohibition of the unlawful making. Both are real and on point.

FABRIC ARE.

Lat To make. Used In old English law of a lawful coining, and also of an unlawful making or counterfeiting of coin. See 1 Salk. 842.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5; 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting]

See FABRICA: the lawful coining flows from Congress's constitutional power to coin money, and the unlawful making is the federal crime of counterfeiting.

Why: Same subject as FABRICA, including the entry's own reference to counterfeiting prosecutions (1 Salk. 842). The constitutional power and the counterfeiting statute are the genuine modern anchors. [re-homed from 'FABRICARE' to 'FABRIC ARE' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

FABRICATE.

To fabricate evidence Is to arrange or manufacture circumstances or indicia, after the fact committed, with the purpose of using them as evidence, and of deceitfully making them appear as if acci- dental or undesigned; to devise falsely or contrive by artifice with the intention to de- ceive. Such evidence may be wholly forged and artificial, or it may consist in so warping and distorting real facts as to create an erro- neous impression in the minds of those who observe them and then presenting such im- pression as true and genuine.

— Fabricated evidence. Evidence manufac- tured or arranged after the fact, and either wholly false or else warped and discolored by artifice and contrivance with a deceitful intent. See supra.— Fabricated fact. In the law of tvidence. A fact existing only in statement, without any foundation in truth. An actual or genuine fact to which a false appearance has been designedly given; a physical object placed in a false connection with another, or with a person on whom it is designed to cast suspicion.

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1519 — falsification/fabrication of evidence in federal matters]

Fabricating evidence — manufacturing or warping facts after the event with intent to deceive — is the core of federal obstruction-by-falsification law.

Why: The entry's definition ('to arrange or manufacture circumstances ... with the purpose of using them as evidence, and of deceitfully making them appear as if accidental') is the conduct § 1519 criminalizes. Direct fit.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 23:1, KJV]

[Malachi 2:14, KJV]

Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the LORD hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant.

Why: The entry gives fabula's special sense as a marriage contract in Lombardic/Visigothic law. The verse formulates marriage explicitly as a covenant witnessed by God, with treachery as breach — the scriptural statement o...

FAC SIMILE PROBATE.

In England, where the construction of a will may be af- fected by the appearance Of the original pa- per, the court will order the probate to pass in fac simile, as it may possibly help to show the meaning of the testator. 1 Williams, Ex’rs, (7th Ed.) 331, 386, 566.

[Law] — Law

[Law: the armchair rule of will construction]

Ordering probate 'in fac simile' so the court can read the testator's meaning from the paper's very appearance is the probate form of the armchair rule: the court seats itself in the testator's chair and weighs every surrounding circumstance.

Why: The entry's practice — let appearance illuminate meaning — is exactly what the armchair rule requires courts to do when construing wills. The doctrine genuinely illuminates the procedure, and vice versa.

FACE.

The face of an instrument is that which is shown by the mere language em- ployed, without any explanation, modifica- tion, or addition from extrinsic facts or evi- dence. Thus, if the express terms of the paper disclose a fatal legal defect, it is said to be “void on its face.”

Regarded as an evidence of debt, the face of an Instrument is the principal sum which it expresses to be due or payable, without any additions in the way of interest or costs. Thus, the expression "the face of a Judg- ment” means the sum for which the judg- ment was rendered, excluding the Interest accrued thereon. Osgood v. Brlngolf, 32 Iowa, 265.

[Law] — Law

[Law: facial invalidity — an instrument disclosing a fatal defect in its own terms is void on its face]

'Void on its face' remains live pleading doctrine: a complaint or instrument that discloses its own fatal defect is demurrable without extrinsic evidence.

Why: The entry's whole point is the legal force of what the paper shows 'by the mere language employed.' The pleading rule — defects patent on the face defeat the action — is that point in active use.

FACERE.

Lat To do; to make. Thus, facere defaltam, to make default; facere duellum, to make the duel, or make or do battle ; facere flnem, to make or pay a fine ; facere legem, to make one's law; facere sa- cramentum, to make oath.

FACT.

A thing done; an action per- formed or an Incident transpiring; an event or circumstance; an actual occurrence.

In the earlier days of the law “fact” was used almost exclusively in the sense of “ac- tion” or “deed;” but, although this usage survives, in some such phrases as “accessary before the fact,” it has now acquired the broader meaning given above.

A fact is either a state of things, that is, an existence, or a motion, that is, an event. 1 Benth. Jud. Ev. 48.

Ia the law of evidence. A circumstance, event or occurrence as it actually takes or took place; a physical object or appearance, as it actually exists or existed. An actual and absolute reality, as distinguished from mere supposition or opinion; a truth, as dis- tinguished from fiction or error. Burrlll, Ore. Ev. 218.

“Pact” is very frequently used in opposi- tion or contrast to "law.” Thus, questions of fact are for the Jury ; questions of law for the court So an attorney at law is an of- ficer of the courts of Justice ; an attorney in fact is appointed by the written authoriza- tion of a principal to manage business affairs usually not professional. Fraud in fact con- sists in an actual intention to defraud, car- ried into effect ; while fraud imputed by law arises from the man’s conduct in its neces- sary relations and consequences.

The word Is much used in phrases which con- trast it with law. Law is a principle; fact is an event. Law is conceived ; fact is actual. Law is a rule of duty : fact is that which has been according to or in contravention of the rule. The distinction is well illustrated in the rule that the existence of foreign laws is matter Of fact. Within the territory of its jurisdiction, law operates as an obligatory rule which judges must recognize and enforce ; but, in a tribunal outside that jurisdiction, it loses its obligatory force and its claim to judicial notice. The fact that it exists, if important to the rights of par- ties, must be alleged and proved the same as the actual existence of any other institution. Abbott.

The terms “fact” and “truth” are often used in common parlance as synonymous, but, as employed in reference to pleading, they are widely different. A fact in plead- ing is a circumstance, act, event, or incident; a truth is the legal principle which declares or governs the facts and their operative ef- fect Admitting the facts stated in a com- plaint the truth may be that the plaintiff is not entitled, upon the face of his complaint to what he claims. [Law: U.S. Const. amend. VII — right of trial by jury]

The entry's central contrast — 'questions of fact are for the jury; questions of law for the court' — is preserved by the Seventh Amendment's guarantee of jury trial in suits at common law.

Why: The entry states the fact/law division as the operating rule; the Seventh Amendment is the constitutional guarantee that keeps that division alive in federal civil cases. The link is the entry's own closing sentence.

FACTA.

In old Eugllsh law. Deeds. Facta armorum, deeds or feats of arms ; tbat Is, Jousts or tournaments. Cowell.

Facts. Facta et casus, facts and cases. Bract, fol. 16.

Facta rant potentiora verbis. Deeds are more powerful than words.

Facta tenent mnlta qnse fieri prohi- bentnr. 12 Coke, 124. Deeds contain many things which are prohibited to be done.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Facta sunt potentiora verbis — deeds are more powerful than words]

The entry itself preserves the maxim 'Facta sunt potentiora verbis' — deeds are more powerful than words — and anchors a second maxim to 12 Coke 124.

Why: The maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry; Black's maxims are within the Law well's sources ('maxims' listed in the brief's citation forms). The annotation records the genuine maxim the entry carries, not a paraphrase.

[Maxim: Facta sunt potentiora verbis]

Classical maxim: Facta sunt potentiora verbis — 'Deeds are more powerful than words.'

Why: The maxim is quoted in the entry itself and is the classical wisdom content of the headword; citing it verbatim is safe because the entry supplies the form.

[Walter Scott, Ivanhoe, 1819]

Novel passage (paraphrase): the tournament at Ashby, where knights break lances before the lists — the canonical fictional rendering of 'facta armorum,' feats of arms. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry glosses facta armorum as jousts or tournaments; Ivanhoe's Ashby tournament is the famous literary depiction. Plot paraphrase, no invented dialogue.

FACTXO TESTAMENTI.

In the civil law. The right, power, or capacity of mak- ing a will; called "lactic actica." Inst. 2, 10, 6.

The right or capacity of taking by will; called "factio passive." Inst. 2, 10, 6.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Banks v. Goodfellow (1870) — the leading testamentary-capacity test]

Capacity to make a will — the entry's 'factio activa' — is tested by the classic rule: the testator must understand the nature of the act, the extent of his property, and the claims of those he might benefit.

Why: The entry defines the capacity itself, citing the Institutes; Banks v. Goodfellow is the landmark statement of what that capacity requires in the common-law world. The case and its test are certain.

FACTO.

In fact; by an act; by the act or fact Ipso facto, by the act itself ; by the mere effect of a fact, without anything su- peradded, or any proceeding upon It to give it effect 3 Kent, Comm. 55, 58.

FACTOR. 1. A commercial agent em- ployed by a principal to sell merchandise consigned to him for that purpose, for and In behalf of the principal, but usually In his own name, being intrusted with the posses- sion and control of the goods, and being re- munerated by a commission, commonly called "factorage." Howland v. Woodruff, 60 N. Y. 80; In re Rabenau (D. C.) 118 Fed. 474; Lawrence v. Stonington Bank, 6 Conn. 527; Graham v. Duckwall, 8 Bush (Ky.) 17.

A factor Is an agent who, In the pursuit of an Independent calling, Is employed by an- other to sell property for him, and Is vested by the latter with the possession or control of the property, or authorized to receive pay- ment therefor from the purchaser. Civ. Code Cal. { 2026; Civ. Code Dak. { 1168.

, Classification. Factors are called "domes- tic" or "foreign" according as they reside and do business in the same state or country with the principal or in a different state or country. A domestic factor is sometimes called a "home" factor. Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 585.

Synonyms. A factor differs from a "bro- ker" in that he is intrusted with the possession, management, and control of the goods, (which gives him a special property in them,) while a broker acts as a mere intermediary without con- trol or possession of the property ; and further, a factor is authorized to buy and sell in his own name, as well as in that of the principal, which a broker is not. IV. c. 94; 5 & 6 Viet. c. 39; 40 & 41 Viet, c. 39) by which a factor is enabled to make a valid pledge of the goods, or of any part there- of, to one who believes him to be the bona fide owner of the goods.

2. The term is used in some of the states to denote the person who is elsewhere eallea "garnishee" or "trustee." See Factoriz- ing Process.

3. In Scotch law, a person appointed to transact business or manage affairs for an- other, but more particularly an estate-agent or one intrusted with the management of a landed estate, who finds tenants, makes leas- es, collects the rents, etc.

—Judicial factor. In Scotch law. A factor apixiintcd by the courts in certain eases where it becomes necessary to intrust the management of property to another than the owner, as, where the latter is insane or imbecile or the infant heir of a decedent

FACTORIZING PROCESS, in American law. A process by which the effects of a debtor are attached in the bands of a third person. A term peculiar to the practice in Vermont and Connecticut Otherwise termed "trustee process" and "garnishment" Cross v. Brown, 19 R. I. 220, 33 Atl. 147.

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 541(c)(1) — ipso facto clauses unenforceable in bankruptcy]

'Ipso facto' — by the act itself, without further proceeding — survives as a live bankruptcy term of art: clauses that terminate rights ipso facto upon insolvency or filing are unenforceable against the estate.

Why: The entry defines 'by the mere effect of a fact, without anything superadded'; the Bankruptcy Code provision is the modern statute that turns on exactly that phrase and its effect. The statutory language itself uses '...

The FACTOR sub-entry — a commercial agent entrusted with possession of goods to sell in his own name — was the subject of the Factors' Acts, which protected bona fide purchasers dealing with such agents.

Why: The entry describes the factor's powers (possession, sale in his own name); the Factors' Acts are the statutes that allocated the risk those powers created, validating sales to good-faith buyers. Direct statutory subj...

FACTORY.

In English law. The term includes all buildings and premises wherein, or within the close or curtilage of which, steam, water, or any mechanical power is used to move or work any machinery em- ployed in preparing, manufacturing, or finish- ing cotton, wool, hair, silk, flax, hemp, Jute, or tow. So defined by the statute 7 Viet. c. 15, § 73. By later acts this definition has been extended to various other manufactur- ing places. Mozley & Whitley.

[Law: the English Factory Acts (1802 onward; extended 1844) — early statutory labor protection]

The entry's statutory definition (7 Vict. c. 15) belongs to the Factory Acts — the first generation of labor-protective legislation, regulating hours and conditions in the mills the statute defines.

Why: The entry is itself a statute's definition; the annotation names the legislative tradition it belongs to and why the definition exists — to delimit the workplaces the new labor law reached. Honest context, no stretch.

FACTUM.

Lat In old English law.

A deed; a person’s act and deed; anything stated or made certain ; a sealed instrument ; a deed of- conveyance.

A fact ; a circumstance ; particularly a fact In evidence. Bract fol. 16.

In testamentary law. The execution or due execution of a will. The factum of an instrument means not barely the signing of it and the formal publication or delivery, but proof that the party well knew and un- derstood the contents thereof, and did give, will, dispose, and do. in all things, as in tbe said will is contained. Weatherhead v. Bask- erville, 11 How. 354, 13 L. Ed. 717.

The entry cites Weatherhead v. Baskerville, 11 How. 354, for the testamentary rule that due execution means proof the testator 'well knew and understood the contents' — knowledge, not mere signature.

Why: The citation is the entry's own; the annotation records what the entry says the case stands for, verbatim in substance: factum requires the testator's understanding of the will's contents. No year invented; no holding...

FACULTIES.

In the law of divorce.

The capability of the husband to render a support to the wife in the form of alimony, whether temporary or permanent including not only his tangible property, but also his income and his ability to earn money. 2 Bish. Mar. & Div. g 44G ; Lovett v. Lovett 11 Ala. 763 ; Wright v. Wright, 3 Tex. 168.

[Law] — Law

[Law: ability-to-pay — the standing measure of alimony and support awards]

The husband's 'faculties' — tangible property, income, and earning ability — survive as the central alimony inquiry: modern statutes and courts still measure support by the supporting spouse's ability to pay.

Why: The entry's definition (2 Bish. Mar. & Div.; Lovett; Wright) is the 19th-century form; the ability-to-pay standard is its living descendant. Same question — what can he render — asked in every support case today.

FACULTIES, COURT OF.

In English ecclesiastical law. A jurisdiction or tribunal belonging to the archbishop. It does not hold pleas in any suits, but creates rights to pews, monuments, and particular places, and modes of burial. It has also various powers under 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21, in granting li- censes of different descriptions, ns a license to marry, a faculty to erect an organ in a parish church, to level a church-yard, to re- move bodies previously buried. 4 Inst. 337.

A marriage gift made at the wedding sits inside the Statute of Frauds' marriage provision: promises made in consideration of marriage must be in writing to be enforceable.

Why: The entry is a gift from the bride's kin at marriage; the statute is the standing rule that governs enforceability of marriage-consideration promises. It illuminates the legal frame in which such gifts and promises op...

Why: The citation is the entry's own (via Wharton); the annotation records that the manufactured-vote problem was met by statute in 1695, framing the genuine historical anti-fraud lineage. Nothing added beyond the entry's...

FAIDA.

In Saxon law. Malice; open and deadly hostility ; deadly feud. The word designated the enmity between the family of a murdered man and that of his murderer, which was recognized, among the Teutonic peoples, as Justification for vengeance taken by any one of the former upon any one of the latter.

FAIL. 1, The difference between “fall” and “refuse” Is that the latter involves an act of the will, while the former may be an act of inevitable necessity. Taylor v. Mason, 9 Wheat. 344, 6 L. FAIR, ». In English law. A greater species of market; a privileged market. It is an incorporeal hereditament, granted by royal patent, or established by prescription presupposing a grant from the crown.

In the earlier English law, the franchise to hold a fair conferred certain important privileges; and fairs, as legally recognized institu- tions, possessed distinctive legal characteristics. Most of these privileges and characteris- tics, however, are now obsolete. In America, fairs, in the ancient technical sense, are un- known, and, in the modern and popular sense, they are entirely voluntary and non-legal, and [Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 — good-faith, non-frivolous pleadings; sanctions]

Fraudulent, false, or collusive pleading 'to the deception of a third person' is met by the modern rule that pleadings must be signed in good faith and non-frivolous, on pain of sanctions.

Why: The entry names the abuse (collusive pleading to deceive); Rule 11 is the procedural rule that polices exactly that abuse — sham and bad-faith pleading. Direct functional match.

FAIRLY.

• Justly; rightly; equitably. With substantial correctness.

"Fairly” is not synonymous with ‘‘truly,*’ and “truly” should not be substituted for it in a commissioner’s oath to take testimony fairly. Language may be truly, yet unfairly, reported ; that is, an answer may be truly written down, yet in a manner conveying a different meaning from that intended and conveyed. And lan- guage may be fairly reported, yet not -in accord- ance with strict truth. Lawrence v. Finch, 17

N. J. Eq. 234.

[Law] — Law

[Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N.J. Eq. 234 — Black's own cited authority on 'fairly' vs. 'truly']

The entry's own authority — Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N.J. Eq. 234 — holds that 'fairly' is not 'truly': testimony may be truly yet unfairly reported, and fairly yet not strictly true, fixing the commissioner's oath.

Why: The case is the entry's own citation and the whole entry is its holding; the annotation preserves that holding verbatim in substance. Allowed: authorities Black's itself cites.

FAIT.

L. Fr. Anything done. A deed; act; fact

A deed lawfully executed. Com. Dig.

Feme de fait. A wife de facto.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — land conveyances in writing]

A deed 'lawfully executed' is the sealed instrument at the root of conveyancing — and conveyances of land still require writing under the Statute of Frauds.

Why: The entry defines the deed; the statute is the standing formality rule that still governs the deed's principal subject, land. The link is the deed's continuing legal habitat.

FAIT ENROLLS.

A deed enrolled, as a bargain and sale of freeholds. 1 Keb. 568.

[Law] — Law

[Law: recording acts — enrollment/registration protects bona fide purchasers]

The enrolled deed — a bargain and sale made matter of record — is the ancestor of the recording acts, under which enrollment protects the bona fide purchaser against later claims.

Why: 1 Keb. 568 (the entry's citation) is the old practice; the recording acts are its modern form, serving the same function: public notice through enrollment. Genuine lineage.

FAIT JTTRIDIQUE.

In French law. A juridical fact One of the factors or ele- ments constitutive of an obligation.

FAITH. 1. Confidence; credit; reliance. Thus, an act may be said to be done “on the faith” of certain representations.

2. Belief; credence; trust Thus, the con- stitution provides that “full faith and credit” shall be given to the judgments of each state in the courts of the others.

3. Purpose; Intent; sincerity; state of knowledge or design. This is the meaning of the word in the phrases “good faith” and “bad faith.”

La Scotch law. A solemn pledge; an oath. “To make faith” is to swear, with the right hand uplifted, that one will declare the truth. 1 Forb. Inst pt 4, p. 235.

FAITHFULLY.

As used in bonds of pub- lic and private officers, this term Imports not only honesty, but also a punctilious discharge of all the duties of the office, requiring com- petence, diligence, and attention, without any malfeasance or nonfeasance, aside from mere mistakes. [Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 3 — the Take Care Clause]

'Faithfully' in an officer's bond imports punctilious discharge of duty — the same word the Constitution lays on the President: he 'shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed.'

Why: The entry's cases (State v. Chadwick and others) give the word its weight in bonds; the Take Care Clause is the most famous legal use of the identical term, imposing the identical duty — faithful execution of office....

[Law] — Law

[Law: La. Civ. Code arts. 1493–1496 — forced heirship]

The Spanish-law Falcidian fourth — one-fourth of the inheritance that could not be willed away from the heir — is the forced-heirship principle that survives in Louisiana, the Roman/Spanish law's American heir.

Why: The entry defines the inalienable heir's portion; Louisiana's forced-heirship articles are the genuine modern American form of that same Roman/Spanish rule. Same doctrine, living code.

FALCIDIAN LAW.

In Roman law. A law on the subject of testamentary disposi- tion, enacted by the people in the year of Rome 714, on the proposition of the tribune Falcidius. By this law, the testator’s right to burden his estate with legacies was sub- jected to an important restriction. It pre- scribed that no one could bequeath more than three-fourths of his property in legacies, and that the heir should have at least one-fourth of the estate, and that, should the testator violate this prescript, the heir may have the right to make a proportional deduction from each legatee, so far as necessary. The lex Falcidia (40 B.C.) — no more than three-fourths of an estate in legacies, one-fourth secured to the heir — is the Roman root of forced heirship, still living in Louisiana's Civil Code.

Why: The entry (Mackeld.; Inst. 2, 22) states the rule; the annotation traces its genuine survival — the Spanish-law channel into Louisiana — rather than treating it as dead antiquity. Black's own later entry FORCED HEIRS...

The heir's secured one-fourth — the Falcidian portion — is the ancestor of the forced heir's legitime in Louisiana, the portion of the estate the testator cannot defeat by will.

Why: Same lineage as FALCIDIAN LAW: the entry's 'at least one-fourth' is the fixed share that Louisiana still reserves to forced heirs under the name legitime. Direct descent.

Falsa* in mo, falsa* in omnibus.

False in one thing, false in everything. Where a party is clearly shown to have em- bezzled one article of property, it is a ground of presumption that he may have embezzled others also. The Boston, I Sumn. 328, 856, Fed. Cas. No. 1,673; The Santissima Trini- dad, 7 Wheat. 339, 5 L. Ed. 454. This maxim is particularly applied to the testimony of a witness, who, if he is shown to have sworn falsely in one detail, may be considered un- worthy of belief as to all the rest of his evi- dence. Grimes v. State, 63 Ala. 1C8 ; Wilson v. Coulter, 29 App. DIv. 85, 51 N. Y. Supp. 804; White v. Dlsher, 67 Cal. 402, 7 Pac. 826.

[Maxim: Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus — false in one thing, false in all]

The entry preserves the evidence maxim verbatim — 'Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus' — false in one thing, false in all: a witness shown to have sworn falsely in one detail may be disbelieved as to the rest.

Why: Quoted with the entry's own cases (The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. 339; Grimes v. State); the maxim remains a standard jury instruction on witness credibility. Recorded, not paraphrased. [re-homed from 'FALSUS' to 'F ALSUS' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

Verse, verbatim (Iago): 'But he that filches from me my good name / Robs me of that which not enriches him, / And makes me poor indeed.' — fama, the reputation that cannot be priced.

Why: The entry's core is reputation as a legal interest; Iago's speech is the famous dramatic statement of what a good name is worth. Three short verse lines, verbatim-certain.

F AMALIA.

In Roman law. A house- hold; a family. On the composition of the Roman family, see Agnati; Cognati; and see Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 144.

Family right ; the right or status of being the head of a family, or of exercising the patria potestas over others. This could be- long only to a Roman citizen who was a “man in his own right,” (homo sui juris.) Mackeld. Rom. Law, Si 133. 144.

In old English law. A household; the body of household servants; a quantity of laud, otherwise called “mansa," sufficient to maintain one family.

In Spanish law. A family, which might consist of domestics or servants. It seems that a single person owning negroes was the "head of a family,” within the meaning of the colonization laws of Coahulla and Tex- a& State ▼. Sullivan, 9 Tex. 156.

FAMILIES ERCISGUNSJE.

In Roman law. An action for the partition of the ag- gregate succession of a familia, where that devolved upon co-hwredcs. It was also ap- plicable to enforce a contribution towards the necessary expenses incurred on the familia. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 499.

FAMILIARES REGIS.. Persons of the king’s household. The ancient title of the “six clerks” of chancery in England. Crabb, Com. Law, 184; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 249, 201.

[Law: partition — the action dividing co-owned property, in kind or by sale]

The Roman action for partition of the aggregate succession among co-heirs is the ancestor of the modern partition suit, by which co-owners divide — or sell and divide the proceeds of — common property.

Why: The entry (Mackeld. Rom. Law § 499) describes the action's two offices — partition and contribution for expenses — which are the two offices of the modern partition suit. Genuine lineage.

FAMILY.

A collective body of persons who live in one house and under one head or management. .Tnrboe v. Jarboe, 106 Mo. App. 459, 79 S. W. 1162; Dodge v. Boston A

P. It. Corp., 154 Mass. 299. 28 N. E. 243, 13

L. R. A. 318; Tyson v. Reynolds, 52 Iowa, 431, 3 N. W. 469.

A family comprises a father, mother, and children. In a wider sense, it may include domestic servants; all who live in one house under one head. In a still broader sense, a group of blood-relatives; all the relations who descend from a common ancestor, or who spring from a common root. See Civil Code I*, art. 3522, no. 16; 9 Ves. 323.

A husband and wife living together may constitute a "family,” within the meaning of that word as used in a homestead law. Miller v. Finegan, 26 Fla. 29, 7 South. 140, 6 L. R. A. 813.

“Family,” in its origin, meant “servants;” but. in its more modern and comprehensive meaning, it signifies a collective body of persons living together in one house, or within the enrblagc, in legal phrase. Wilson ▼. Cochran, 31 Tex. 677, 98 Am. Dec. 653.

“Family” may mean children, wife and chil- dren, blood-relatives, or the members of the domestic circle, according to the connection in which the word is used. Spencer v. Spencer, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 159.

“Family.” in popular acceptation, includes parents, children, and servants, — all whose dom- icile or home is ordinarily in the same house and under the same management and head. In a statute providing that to gain a settle- ment in a town one must have “supported him- self and his family therein* for six years, it in- cludes the individuals whom it was the right of the head to control, and his duty to sup- port. The wife is a member of the family, within such an enactment. Cheshire v. Bur- lington, 31 Conn. 326.

—Family arrangement. A term denoting an agreement between a father and his chil- dren, or between the heirs of a deceased fa- ther, to dispose of property, or to partition it in a different manner than that which would result if the law alone directed it, or to divide np

The entry's homestead discussion (Miller v. Finegan) turns on 'family' as the operative word: homestead exemptions protect the family home, and the federal exemption preserves the debtor's interest in it.

The entry's statute — 13 Car. II c. 6, naming Quakers, Anabaptists, and dissenters 'fanatics' — is the persecuting law the American Religion Clauses answer: no established church, and free exercise protected against such acts.

Why: The entry documents the state-church penal regime; the First Amendment is the constitutional repudiation of that regime. The contrast genuinely illuminates both.

FAULT.

In the civil law. Negligence; want of care. An improper act or omission, injurious to another, and transpiring through negligence, rashness, or ignorance.

There are in law three degrees of faults,— the gross, the slight, and the very slight fault. The gross fault is that which proceeds from Inexcusable negligence or ignorance ; it is considered as nearly equal to fraud. The slight fault is that wnnt of care which a pru- dent man usually takes of his business. The very slight fault is that which is excusable, and for which no responsibility is incurred. [Law: negligence and comparative fault — liability graded by fault; cf. La. Civ. Code art. 3556, par. 13]

The entry's three civil-law degrees of fault — gross, slight, very slight (La. Civ. Code art. 3556, par. 13) — are the ancestors of modern negligence and comparative-fault analysis, which still grades liability by the quality of the defendant's care.

Why: The entry's own Louisiana source is the civilian statement; the annotation traces the grading-by-fault idea into modern tort law. Same analytical spine.

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiding and abetting; accomplices punishable as principals]

The fautor — favorer, abettor; in Spanish law the accomplice who aids another's crime — is the aider and abettor, punishable as a principal under federal law.

Why: The entry's Spanish-law sense ('accomplice ... who aids or assists another in the commission of a crime') is the § 2 definition. Direct statutory match for the entry's own definition.

FAUX.

In Freuoh law. A falsification or fraud- ulent alteration or suppression of a thing by words, by writings, or by acts without either. Biret.

"Faux may be understood in three ways. In Sta most extended sense it is the alteration of truth, with or without intention ; it is nearly synonymous with ‘lying.’ In a less .extended sense, it is the alteration of truth, accompanied with fraud, mutatio veritatis cum dolo facta. And lastly, in a narrow, or rather the legal, sense of the word, when it is a question to know if the faux be a crime, it is the fraudu- lent alteration of the truth in those cases as- certained and punished by the law.” Touillier, t. 9, n. 188.

FEAL AND DIVOT.

A right in Scot- land, similar to the right of turbary in Eng- land, for fuel, etc.

FEALTY, In feudal law. Fidelity; al- legiance to the feudal lord of the manor; the feudal obligation resting upon the tenant or vassal by which he was bound to be faithful and true to his lord, and render him obedi- ence and service. See De Peyster v. Mi- chael, 6 N. T. 497, 57 Am. Dec. 470.

Fealty signifies fidelity, the phrase “feal and leal” meaning simply “faithful and loyal.” Tenants by knights’ service and also tenants in socage were required to take an oath of fealty to the king or others, their immediate lords; and fealty was one of the conditions of their tenure, the breach Of which operated a for- feiture of their estates. Brown.

Although foreign jurists consider fealty and homage as convertible terms, because in some continental countries they are blended so as to form one engagement, yet they are not to be confounded in our country, for they do not im- ply the same thing, ho'mage being the acknowl- edgment of tenure, and fealty, the vassal oath of fidelity, being the essential feudal bond, and the animating .principle of a feud, without which it could not -subsist.

The entry points to the great trichotomy — malfeasance, misfeasance, nonfeasance — which still classifies wrongful doing in tort and in the law of public office: evil doing, wrongful doing, and failure to do.

Why: The entry defines feasance and cross-refers the three compounds; the annotation states what the trichotomy does in living law. The classification is the entry's own subject.

FEDERAX.

In constitutional law. A term commonly used to express a league or compact between two or more states.

In American law. Belonging to the gen- eral government or union of the states. Founded on or organized under the constitu- tion or laws of the United States.

The United States has been ' generally styled, in American political and judicial writings, a “federal government” The term has not been imposed by any specific constitutional author- ity. but only expresses the general sense and opinion upon the nature of the form of govern- ment. In recent years, there is observable a disposition to employ the term “national” in speaking of the government of the Union. Nei- ther word settles anything as to the nature or powers of the government. “Federal” is some- what more appropriate if the government is considered a union of the states ; “national” is preferable if the view is adopted that the state governments and the Union are two dis- tinct systems, each established by the people directly, one for local and the other for national purposes. See United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588; Abbott. —Federal courts. The courts of the United States. See Courts of tiie United States. —Federal government. The system of gov- ernment administered in a state formed by the union or confederation of several independent or guest independent states ; also the composite state so formed. In strict usage, there is a distinction between a confederation and a fed- eral government. The former term denotes a league or permanent alliance between several states, each of which is fully sovereign and in- dependent, and each of which retains its full dignity, organization, and sovereignty, though yielding to the central authority a controlling power for a few limited purposes, such as ex- ternal and diplomatic relations. In this case, the component states are the units, with re- spect to the confederation, and the central gov- ernment acts upon them, not upon the individ- ual citizens. In a federal government, on the other hand, the allied states form a union,— not, indeed, to such an extent as to destroy their separate organization or deprive them of quasi sovereignty with respect to the adminis- tration of tlieif purely local concerns, but so that the central power is erected into a true state or nation, possessing sovereignty both ex- ternal and internal, — while the administration of national affairs is directed, and its effects felt, not by the separate states deliberating as units, but by the people of all. in their collec- tive capacity, as citizens of the nation. The distinction is expressed, by the German writers, by the use of the two words “ Staatenbund" and "Bandesstaat the former denoting a league or confederation of states, and the latter a federal government, or state formed by means of a league or confederation.— Federal ques- tion. to the federal courts, are commonly described by the legal profession as cases involving a “federal question.” In re Sievers (D. C.) 91 Fed. 872;

U. S. v. Douglas. 113 N. C. 190, 18 8. E. 202; Williams v. Bruffy, 102 U. S. 248, 26 L. Bd. 185.

FEE. 1. A freehold estate in lands, held of a superior lord, as a reward for services, and on condition of rendering some service in return for it. The true meaning of the word “fee” is the same ns that of “feud” or “fief," and In its original sense it is taken In con- tradistinction to “allodium,” which latter is defined as a man’s own land, which he pos- sesses merely in his own right, without ow- ing any rent or service to any superior. 2 Bl. Comm. 105. See Wendell v. Crandall, 1

N. Y. 491.

In modern English tenures, “fee” signifies an estate of inheritance, being the highest and most extensive interest which a man can have in a feud; and when the term is used simply, without any adjunct, ok in the form “fee-simple,” it imports an absolute inher- itance clear of any condition, limitation, or restriction to particular heirs, but descend- ible to the heirs general, male or female, lin- eal or collateral. 2 Bl. Comm. 106.

—Base fee. A determinable or qualified fee; an estate having the nature of a fee, but not a fee simple absolute.— Conditional fee. An estate restrained to some particular heirs, ex- clusive of others, as to the heirs of a man’s body, by which only his lineal descendants were admitted, In' exclusion of collateral ; or to tbe heirs male of his body, in exclusion of beira female, whether lineal or collateral. It was called a “conditional fee,” by reason of the con- dition expressed or implied in the donation of it that, if the donee died without such particu- lar heirs, the land should revert to the donor. 2 Bl. Comm. 110; Kirk v. Furgerson, 6 Cold. (Tenn.) 483; Simmons v. Augustin, 3 Port. (Ala.) 60; Paterson v. Ellis, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 277; Moody v. Walker, 3 Ark. 190; Halbert v. Halbert, 21 Mo. 281.— Determinable fee, (Also called a “qualified” or “base” fee.) One which has a qualification subjoined to it, and which must be determined whenever the qual- ification annexed to it is at an end. 2 Bl. Comm. 109. [Law: U.S. Const. amend. X — powers not delegated are reserved]

The entry's long discussion of 'federal' versus 'national' is the Federalist debate in miniature; the Constitution's answer is the reserved-powers rule — what is not granted is retained by the states or the people.

Why: The entry weighs whether the Union is a compact of states or a national government; the Tenth Amendment is the textual settlement of that question. The annotation gives the entry's debate its constitutional locus.

FEE-FARM.

This is a species of tenure, where land is held of another in perpetuity at a yearly rent, without fealty, homage, or other services than such as are specially com- prised in the feoffment. It corresponds very nearly to the “emphyteusis" of the Roman law.

Fee-farm is where an estate in fee is granted subject to a rent in fee of at least one-fourth of tbe value of the lands at the time of its reservation. Such rent appears to be called “fee-farm” because a grant of lands reserving so considerable a rent is indeed only letting lands to farm in fee-simple, instead of the usu- al method of life or years. 2 Bl. Comm. 43; 1 Steph. Coram. 676.

Fee-farms are lands held in fee to render for them annually the true value, or more or less; so called because a farm rent is reserved upon a grant in fee. Such estates are estates of in- heritance. They are classed among estates in fee-simple. No reversionary interest remains in the lessor, and they are therefore subject to tbe operation of the legal principles which forbid restraints upon alienation in all cases where no feudal relation exists between gran- tor and grantee. De Peyster v. Michael, 6

N. Y. 407. 57 Am. Dec. 470.'

The fee-farm — land held in perpetuity at a yearly rent, 'very nearly the emphyteusis of the Roman law' — survives in America as the ground rent: a perpetual rent reserved on conveyance of the fee.

Why: The entry (2 Bl. Comm. 43) describes the tenure; the ground rent is its genuine American descendant — fee conveyed, rent reserved in perpetuity. Same structure, living form.

FEE-SIMPLE.

In English law. A

freehold estate of inheritance, absolute and unqualified. It stands at the heed of estates as the highest In dignity and the most ample In extent; since every other kind of estate is derivable thereout, and mergeable therein. It may be enjoyed not only in land, but also in advowsons, commons, estovers, and other hereditaments, as well as in personalty, as an annuity or dignity, and also in an upper chamber, though the lower buildings and soil belong to another. Wharton.

In American law. An absolute or fee- simple estate is one in which the owner Is entitled to the entire property, with uncondi- tional power of disposition during bis life, and descending to his heirs and legal repre- sentatives upon bis death intestate. Code Ga. 1882, | 2246. And see Friedman v. Stein- er, 107 111. 131 ; Woodberry v. Matherson, 19

Fla. 785; Lyle v. Richards, 9 Serg. & R. (Fa.) 374; Loventbal v. Home Ins. Co., 112 Ala. 108, 20 South. 419, 33 L. R. A. 258, 57 Am. St Rep. 17 ; Dumont v. Dufore, 27 Ind. 267.

Fee-simple signifies a pure fee; an absolute es- tate of inheritance; that which a person holds inheritable to him and his heirs general forever. It is called “fee-simple.” that is,

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

"pure," be- cause clear of any condition or restriction to particular heirs, being descendible to the heirs general, whether male or female, lineal or col- lateral. It is the largest estate and most ex- tensive interest that can be enjoyed in land, being the entire property therein, and it con- fers an unlimited power of alienation. Haynes v. Bourn, 42 Vt. 686.

A fee-simple is the largest estate known to the law, and where no words of qualification or limitation are added, it means an estate in possession, and owned in severalty. It is un- doubtedly true that a person may own a re- mainder or reversion in fee. But such an es- tate is not a fee-simple; it is a fee qualified or limited. So. when a person owns in com- mon with' another, he does not own the entire fee,— a fee-simple; it is a fee divided or shared with another. Brackett v. Ridlon, 54 He. 426.

Absolute and conditional. A fee simple absolute is an estate which is limited absolute- ly to a man and his heirs and assigns forever, without any limitation or condition. Frisby v. Ballance, 7 111. 144. At the common law, an estate in fee simple conditional was a fee limit- ed or restrained to some particular heirs, ex- clusive of others. But the statute "De Donis" converted all such estates into estates tail. 2 Bl. Comm. 110.

FEB-TAIL.

An estate tall; an estate of Inheritance given to a man and the heirs of his body, or limited to certain classes of par- ticular heirs. It corresponds to the feuduin talliatum Qf the feudal law, and the idea Is believed to have been borrowed from the Ro- man law, where, by way of fidei commissa, lands might be entailed upon children and freedmeu and their descendants, with restric- tions as to alienation. 1 AVasbb. Real Prop. *66. For the varieties and special character- istics of this kind of estate, see Tail.

[Law: abolition of the fee tail — statutory conversion to fee simple in most states]

The estate tail — inheritance limited to the heirs of the body — has been abolished by statute in most American states, typically converted into a fee simple absolute.

Why: The entry (1 Washb. Real Prop.) describes the estate; the annotation records its genuine modern fate — legislative abolition, the reason the estate tail is now a classroom topic rather than a conveyancer's tool.

Fictitious; pretended; sup- posititious: simulated.

—Feigned accomplice. One who pretends to consult and act witb others in the planning or commission of a crime, but only for the pur- pose of discovering their plans and confeder- ates and securing evidence against them. See People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal. 17, 11 Pac. 800. — Feigned action. In practice. An action brought on a pretended right, when the plain- tiff has no true cause of action, for some ille- gal purpose. In a feigned action the words of the writ are true. It differs from false action, in which case the words of the writ are false. Co. Litt. 361.— Feigned diseases. Simulated maladies. Diseases are generally feigned from one of three causes,— fear, shame, or the hope of gain.— Feigned Issne. An issue made up by' the direction of a court of equity, (or by con- sent of parties,) and sent to a common-law court, for the purpose of obtaining the ver- dict of a jury on some disputed matter of fact which the court has not jurisdiction, or is un- willing, to decide. [Sorrells v. United States, 287 U.S. 435 (1933) — entrapment]

The entry's 'feigned accomplice' — one who pretends to join a crime 'for the purpose of discovering their plans and securing evidence' (People v. Bolanger) — is the undercover operative, whose conduct is bounded by the entrapment defense.

Why: The entry describes the state's feigned conspirator; Sorrells is the Supreme Court's limit on that device — government inducement of the otherwise-unwilling. Certain of case, volume, page, year.

FELAGUS.

In Saxon law. One bound for another by oath; a sworn brother. A friend bound in the decennary for the good behavior of another. One who took the place of the deceased. Thus, if a person was mur- dered, the recompense due from the murderer went to the fclagus of the slain, in default of parents or lord. Cunningham.

The entry is a bare cross-reference to Sodomy; the modern constitutional status of sodomy prohibitions was settled when the Court struck them down as violating due-process liberty.

Why: The cross-reference points to the offense; the annotation gives the offense's current constitutional standing. Certain of case, volume, page, year.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 8:17, KJV]

And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.

Why: A fellow-heir is a co-heir, partner of the same inheritance. The verse states co-heirship directly — joint-heirs with Christ of one inheritance. Lean but genuine: the shared-inheritance concept is identical, though th…

[Law: the fellow-servant rule — superseded by workers' compensation statutes]

The entry states the fellow-servant rule at length (2 Thomp. Neg.; a string of railroad cases): at common law the master was not liable for injuries a servant suffered through a fellow servant's negligence.

Why: The entry is the rule's own exposition; the annotation records its genuine modern fate — legislative displacement by workers' compensation. The rule as stated is history; the annotation says so.

FELO DE SE.

A felon of himself; a suicide or murderer of himself. One who deliberately and intentionally puts an mid to

The 'felon of himself' — suicide, once punished by forfeiture (4 Bl. Comm. 189) — is no longer a crime; the modern constitutional line holds there is no fundamental right to assisted suicide, leaving the states to legislate.

Why: The entry (Hale, P.C. 411) states the old crime; Glucksberg states the current constitutional boundary. Certain of case, volume, page, year.

Why: Felo de se = one who deliberately ends his own life; Hamlet's soliloquy is the canonical dramatic treatment of that deliberation. Opening line verbatim-certain; the rest is a marked paraphrase, no invented text.

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make one guilty unless the mind is guilty]

The entry's 'per feloniam, with a criminal intention' (Co. Litt. 391) is the mens-rea element — the guilty mind without which the guilty act does not make a felon.

Why: The entry's Latin phrase states the element; the maxim states the principle. The annotation pairs the entry's own terminology with the principle it expresses.

FELONICE.

Feloniously. Anciently an indispensable word in indictments for felony, and classed by Lord Coke among those voces artis (words of art) which cannot be ex- pressed by any periphrasis or circumlocution. 4 Coke, 39; Co. Lltt 391o; 4 Bl. Conun. 307.

[Law: homicide — murder and manslaughter as the degrees of unlawful killing]

The entry's 'felonious homicide' — killing without justification or excuse, in the two degrees of murder and manslaughter (4 Bl. Comm. 188, 190) — is the common-law classification American homicide statutes still use.

Why: The entry states the classification with its own authorities; the annotation notes that the murder/manslaughter division remains the working structure of homicide law. The entry's doctrine, kept current.

FELONY.

In English law. Thjs term meant originally the state of having forfeited lands and goods to the crown upon convic- tion for certain offenses, and then, by transi- tion, any offense upon conviction for which such forfeiture followed, in addition to any other punishment prescribed by law ; as distinguished from a “misdemeanor,”, upon con- viction for which no forfeiture followed. All Indictable offenses are either felonies Or mis- demeanors, hut a material part of the dis- tinction is taken away by St 33 & 34 Vlct e. 23. which abolishes forfeiture for felony. Wharton la American law. The term has no very definite or precise meaning, except in some cases where it is defined by statute. For the most part, the state laws, in describing any particular offense, declare whether or not it shall be considered a felony. Apart from this, the word seems merely to imply a crime of a graver or more atrocious nature than those designated as “misdemeanors.” U. S. v. Coppersmith (C. C.) 4 Fed. 205; Bannon v. U. S„ 156 D. S. 464, 15 Sup. Ct 467, 39

The felony/misdemeanor line, which once turned on forfeiture (abolished by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), is drawn in federal law by authorized punishment: a felony is an offense punishable by more than one year's imprisonment.

FEOFFMENT.

The gift of any corpo- real hereditament to another, (2 Bl. Comm. 310), operating by transmutation of posses- sion, and requiring, as essential to its com- pletion, that the seisen be passed, (Watk. Conv. 183), which might be accomplished either by investiture or by livery of seisin. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 33. See Thatcher v. Omans, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 532 ; French v. French, 3 N. H. 260; Perry v. Price, 1 Mo. 554; Omdoff v. Turman, 2 Leigh (Va.) 233, 21 Am. Dec. 608.

Also the deel or conveyance by which such corporeal hereditament is passed.

A feoffment originally meant the grant of a feud or fee; that is, a barony or knight's fee, for which certain services were due from the feoffee to the feoffor. This was the proper sense of the word ; but by custom it came aft- erwards to signify also a grant (with livery of seisin) of a free inheritance to a man and his heirs, referring rather to the perpetuity of the estate than to the feudal tenure. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 90, 91. It was for ages the only method (in ordinary use) for conveying the freehold of land in possession, but has now fallen in great measure into disuse, even in England, having been almost entirely supplanted by some of that class of conveyances founded on the statute law of the realm. 1 Steph. Feoffment worked 'by transmutation of possession' through livery of seisin (2 Bl. Comm. 310) — the ceremony the Statute of Frauds displaced, requiring conveyances of land to be in signed writing, though delivery of the deed remains essential.

Why: The entry describes the old passing of seisin; the statute is what replaced the ceremony with writing. The annotation marks the genuine procedural succession.

FEOFFOB.

The person making a feoff- ment, or enfeoffing another in fee. 2 BL Comm. 310 ; Litt. || 1, 57.

FEOH.

This Saxon word meant originally cattle, and thence property or money, and, by a second transition, wages, reward, or fee. It was probably the original form from which the words “feod,” “feudurn," “fief,” “feu,” and “fee” (all meaning a feudal grant of land) have been derived.

Why: The entry (Fleet v. Hegeman; Gillet v. Mason) states the wild/tame distinction; Pierson is the classic American case applying it — the fox belongs to its captor, not its pursuer. Certain cite.

FERIA.

In old English law. A week- day ; a holiday ; a day on which process could not be served ; a fair ; a ferry. Cowell ; Du Cange; Spelman.

FERIAL In Roman law. Holidays ; gen- erally speaking, days or seasons during which free-born Romans suspended their po- litical transactions and their lawsuits, and during which slaves enjoyed a cessation from labor, all feria were thus dies nefasti. A1I ferice were divided into two classes, — " feria publica" and " feria private." The latter were only observed by single families or in- dividuals, in commemoration of some partic- ular event which had been of importance to- them or their ancestors. Smith, Diet Antiq,

[Law: dies non — process not servable on Sunday/holidays]

The feria as 'a day on which process could not be served' is the dies-non rule: at common law and still in many states, process may not be served on Sunday (or the service is voidable).

Why: The entry states the rule in its definition; the annotation names it — dies non juridicus — and its survival. The link is the entry's own stated rule.

FERIAL BATS.

Holidays; also week- days, as distinguished from Sunday. Cowell.

FERITA.

In old European law. A wound; a stroke. Spelman.

FERLXNG.

In old records. The fourth part of a penny ; also the quarter of a ward in a borough.

FERLIN GAT A.

A fourth part of a yard- land.

FERUNOU8.

A furlong. Co. Litt 56,

FERMI ...

FERM, or FEARM. A house or land, or both, let by lease. Cowell.

FERME.

A farm? a rent; a lease; a house or land, or both, taken by indenture or lease. Plowd. 195; Vlcat, See Fabm.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 21:33, KJV]

Hear another parable: There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a winepress in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country:

Why: Ferme is a rent, a lease — land taken by indenture, farmed out. The verse depicts the letting-out of a vineyard to husbandmen for its fruits, which is the farming/lease arrangement in its biblical dress. Lean but genu…

FERMENTED LIQUORS.

Beverages produced by, or which have undergone, a process of alcoholic fermentation, to which they owe their intoxicating properties, in- cluding beer, wine, hard cider, and the like, but not spirituous or distilled liquors. State v. Lemp, 1<J Mo. 391 ; State v. Biddle, 54 X.

H. 383; People v. Foster, 64 Mich. 715, 31

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XXI — repeal of Prohibition]

The entry's careful definition — beer, wine, hard cider, but not distilled liquors (State v. Lemp; State v. Biddle) — is prohibition-era liquor law; the Twenty-first Amendment repealed Prohibition and returned liquor control to the states.

Why: The entry's cases are the liquor prosecutions of the era; the amendment is the constitutional event that frames them. Genuine context for a definition built for that litigation.

FERMER, FERMOR.

A lessee ; a farm- er. One who holds a term, whether of lauds or an incorporeal right, such as customs or revenue.

FERMIER.

In French law. One who farms any public revenue.

FERMISONA.

In old English law. The winter season for killing deer.

FERMORY.

In old records. A place in monasteries, where they received the poor, C hospicio excipiebant ,) and gave them pro- visions, {term, firma.) Spelman. Hence the modern infirmary, used in the sense of a hos- pital.

FERNIGO.

In old English law. A waste ground, or place where fern grows. Cowell.

FERRX.

In the eivil law. To be borne; that is on or about the per; This was dis- tinguished from portari, (to . . carried,) which signified to be carried on an animal. Dig. 50, 16, 235.

FERRIAGE.

The toll or fare paid for the transportation of persons and property across a ferry.

laterally speaking, it is the price or fare fix- ed by law for the transportation of the trav- eling public, with such goods and chattels as they may have with them, across a river, bay, or lake. People v. San Francisco & A. R. Co.. 35 Cal. 606.

[Law] — Law

[Law: franchise and rate regulation — ferry tolls fixed by law; the ferry as common carrier]

Ferriage — 'the price or fare fixed by law' for public transportation across a river, bay, or lake (People v. San Francisco & A. R. Co.) — is rate regulation of a franchise: the ferry as common carrier serving the traveling public at lawful tolls.

Why: The entry's own definition makes the toll law-fixed and the service public; the annotation names the regulatory frame — franchised carriers with fixed rates — that the entry describes.

FERRIFODINA.

In old pleading. An iron mine, Townsh. PI. 273.

FERRUM.

Iron. In old English law. A horse-shoe. Ferrura, shoeing of horses.

FERRY.

A liberty to have a boat upon a river for the transportation of men, horses, and carriages with their contents, for a rea- sonable toll. The term is also used to desig- nate the .place where such liberty is exer- cised. See New York v. Starin, 8 X. Y. St. Rep. 65-5; Broadnax v. Baker, 94 X. C. 681, 56 Am. Itep. 633 ; Elnstman v. Black, 14 111.

App. 381 ; Chapelle v. Wells, 4 Mart. (Da.

N. S.) 426.

"Ferry" properly means a place of transit across a river or arm of the sea; but in law it is treated as a franchise, and defined as the exclusive right to carry pnssengers across a river, or arm of the sea. from one vill to an- other, or to connect a continuous line of road leading from one township or vill to another.- It is not a servitude or easement. It is wholly unconnected with the ownership or occupation of land, so much so that the owner of the ferrv need not have any property in the soil adjacent on either side. (12 C. B., N. S., 32.) Brown.

— Public and private. A public ferry is one to which all the public have the right to resort, for which a regular fare is established, and the ferryman is a common carrier, bound to take over all who apply, and bound to keep his ferry in operation and good repair. Hudspeth v. Hall, 111 Ga. 510, 36 S. E. 770; Broadnax v. Baker, 94 N. 0. 681, 55 Am. Rep. 633. A pri- vate ferry is one mainly for the use of the own- er, and though he may take pay for ferriage, he does not follow it as a business. His ferry is not open to the public at its demand, and he may or may not keep it in operation. Huds- peth v. Hall, supra.— Ferry franohise. The public grant of a right to maintain a ferrv at a particular' place ; a right conferred to land at a particular point and secure toll for the transportation of persons and property from that point across the stream. Mills v. St. Clair County, 7 111. 208.— Ferryman. One employed in taking persons across a river or other stream, in boats or other contrivances, at a ferry. State v. Clarke, 2 McCord (S. C.) 48, 13 Am. Dec. 701.

[Law] — Law

[Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 36 U.S. 420 (1837)]

The entry treats the ferry 'in law as a franchise' — the exclusive right to carry passengers across the water — and the great American franchise case held such grants strictly construed, implying no monopoly beyond the grant's terms.

Why: The entry's franchise analysis (12 C.B., N.S., 32) is the English side; Charles River Bridge is the American decision on ferry/bridge franchises and implied exclusivity. Certain of case, volume, page, year.

FESTA IN CAFPIS.

In old English law. Grand holidays, on which choirs wore caps. Jacob.

Festinatio Jnstltise eat noveroa infor- tnnii. Hob. 97. Hasty justice is the step- mother of misfortune.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Festinatio justitiae est noverca infortunii — hasty justice is the stepmother of misfortune]

The entry preserves Hobart's maxim — 'Festinatio justitiae est noverca infortunii' — hasty justice is the stepmother of misfortune: the classical warning that speed in adjudication breeds error.

Why: Quoted verbatim (Hob. 97); the maxim is the traditional counterweight to the demand for dispatch, underlying due-process deliberation requirements. Recorded as the entry carries it.

FESTING-MAIT.

In old English law. A frank-pledge, or one who was surety for the good behavior of another. Monasteries enjoyed the privilege of being “free from festlng-men,’* which means that they wer.» “not bound for any man’s forthcoming who should transgress the law.” Cowell. See Fbank-Pixdoe.

FESTTNG-PEinnr. Earnest given to servants when hired or retained. The same as arles-penny. Cowell.

in criminal cases.

Why: The entry (Cowell; the statute) names speed as a remedy's virtue; the amendment is the constitutional form of that virtue. The frankpledge headword itself is covered by FAESTING-MEN; the annotation attaches to the sub...

FESTUM.

A feast or festival. Fen turn stiiltorum, the feast of fools.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 23:4, KJV]

These are the feasts of the LORD, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons.

Why: Festum is a feast or festival. The verse is the scriptural institution of the appointed feasts as holy convocations proclaimed in their seasons — the festal calendar the entry's term denotes. Genuine (same verse serve...

[Victor Hugo, Notre-Dame de Paris, 1831]

Scene (paraphrase): the Feast of Fools in medieval Paris, where the crowd crowns Quasimodo Pope of Fools — the canonical literary rendering of the festum stultorum. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry glosses festum stultorum as the feast of fools; Hugo's Gringoire-chapter feast is the famous fictional depiction. Plot fact certain; no passage invented.

FETTERS.

Chains or shackles for the feet; irons used to secure the lens of con- victs, unruly prisoners, etc. Similar chains securing the wrists are called “handcuffs.”

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — cruel and unusual punishments]

Fetters — irons securing convicts and prisoners — sit under the Eighth Amendment: bodily restraints imposed by the state are bounded by the ban on cruel and unusual punishments.

Why: The entry defines the restraint; the amendment is the constitutional limit on the state's use of such restraints. It explains the modern law of the entry's subject.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Mark 5:4, KJV]

Because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces: neither could any man tame him.

Why: Fetters are chains or shackles for securing unruly prisoners. The verse is scripture's own attestation of the instrument — fetters bound upon a man who breaks them. Lean but genuine: it shows the term's material refer...

Shackled from head to toe

The entry defines fetters as 'chains or shackles'; Akon's line is the direct vernacular twin — the convict's body secured in irons on the way to Chino, the lived experience of the restraint the term names.

Why: Added because 'shackled' is the exact vernacular equivalent of the entry's 'chains or shackles for the feet... irons used to secure the legs of convicts.' The song is a first-person account of the confinement fetters...

Ice, makes his return In grain or money. Distinguished from ‘‘wardholding.'' which is the military tenure of the country. Bell.

—Fen annual*. The reddendo, or annual re- turn from the vassal to a superior in a feu hold- , ing.— Feu holding. A holding by tenure of rendering grain or money in place of military service. Bell.— Feuar. The tenant of a feu ; a feu-vassal. Bell.

FED ET LIEU.

Fr. In old French and Canadian law. Hearth and home. A term importing actual settlement upon laud by a tenant.

[Law] — Law

[Law: adverse possession — actual, open, and notorious possession ripening into title]

'Feu et lieu' — hearth and home, 'importing actual settlement upon land by a tenant' — states the actual-possession idea at the heart of adverse possession: title by real, settled occupancy.

Why: The entry is Canadian/French settlement law; the annotation links its operative concept — actual settlement — to the common-law doctrine that turns on the same fact. The concept, not the jurisdiction, is the link.

FEUD.

In feudal law. An estate in land held of a superior on condition of ren- dering him services. 2 Bl. Cornu). 105.

An Inheritable right to the use and occu- pation of lands, held on condition of render- ing services to the lord or proprietor, who himself retains the property in the lands. See Spel. Feuds, c. 1.

In this sense the word Is the same as "feod,” “feodum,” “feudum,” “lief,” or “fee.”

In Saxon and old Gorman law. An en- mity, or species of private war, existing be- tween the family of a murdered man and the family of his slayer; a combination of- the former to take vengeance upon the latter. See Deadly Feud; Faida.

—Military feud*. The genuine or original feuds which were in the hands of military men, who performed military duty for their tenures.

FEU 1>A. Feuds or fees,

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 4:10, KJV]

And he said, What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground.

Why: Feud bears the Saxon sense of enmity — private war between the murdered man's family and the slayer's. This verse is the primal scene of that enmity: the murdered brother's blood crying out, the curse, and the sevenfo...

FEUDAL.

Pertaining to feuds or fees; relating to or growing out of the feudal sys- tem or feudal law; haying the quality of a feud, as distinguished from “allodial.”

—Feudal action*. An ancient name for real actions, or such as concern real property only. 3 Bl. Comm. 117.— Feudal law. The body of jurisprudence relating to feuds ; the real-property law of the feudal system ; the law ancient- ly regulating the property relations of lord and vassal, and the creation, incidents, and trans- mission of feudal estates. The body of laws and usages constituting the “feudal law” was orig- inally customary and unwritten, but a compila- tion was made in the twelfth century, called “Feodamm Consuetudines,” which has formed the basis of later digests. The feudal law pre- vailed over Europe from the twelfth to the four- teenth century, and was introduced into Eng- land at the Norman Conquest, where it formed the entire basis of the law of real property un- til comparatively modern times. Survivals of the feudal law, to the present day, so affect and color that branch of jurisprudence as to re- quire a certain knowledge of the feudal law in order to the perfect comprehension of modern tenures and rules of real-property law.— Feudal possession. The equivalent of “seisin” under the feudal system.— Feudal system. The system of fends. A political and social system which prevailed throughout Europe during the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, and is supposed to have grown out of the peculiar usages and policy of the Teutonic nations who overran the continent after the fall of the West- ern Roman Empire, as developed by the ex- igencies of their military domination, and possi- bly furthered by notions token from the Roman jurisprudence. It was introduced into. England, in its completeness, by William I., A. D. 1085. though it may have existed in a rudimentary form among the Saxons before the Conquest. It formed the entire basis of the real-property law of England in medieval times; and surviv- als of the system, in modern days, so modify and color that branch of jurisprudence, both in England and America, that many of its princi- ples require for their complete understanding a knowledge of the feudal system. The feudal system originated in the relations of a military chieftain and his followers, or king and nobles, or lord and vassals, and especially their rela- tions as determined by the bond established by a grant of land from the former to the latter. From this it grew into a complete and intricate complex of rules for the tenure and transmis- sion of real estate, and of correlated duties and services ; while, by tying men to the land and to those holding above and below them, it creat- ed a close-knit hierarchy of persons, and de- veloped an aggregate of social and political in- stitutions. For an account of the feudal sys- tem in its juristic .relations, see 2 Bl. Comm. 44 ; 1 Steph. Comm. 100 ; 3 Kent, Comm. 487 ; Spel. Feuds ; Lift. Ten. : Sull. Lect. ; Spence, Eq. Jur. ; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 15 ; Dalr. Feu. Prop. For its political and social relations, see Hall. Middle Ages ; Maine, Anc. Law ; Rob. Car. V.: Mont esq. Esprit des Lois, bk. 30? Guizot, Hist. Civilization.— Feudal tenures. The tenures of real estate under the feudal sys- tem, such, as knight-service, socage, villenage, etc.

[Law: certainty of description — deeds and pleadings must describe with reasonable certainty]

The entry's rule — 'few' will not answer 'in cases where exact description is required' (Butts v. Stowe; Allen v. Kirwan) — is the certainty requirement for deeds, pleadings, and indictments: descriptions must be definite enough to identify.

Why: The entry states the rule with its cases; the annotation names the doctrine the rule belongs to. The link is the entry's own stated principle.

FF.

A Latin abbreviation for “Frag- ments,” designating the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian; so called because that work is made up of frag- ments or extracts from the' writings of nu- merous jurists. Mackeld. Rom. Law, | 74.

[Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — surety promises in writing]

The fianza in its special sense — a surety or guarantor, 'the contract or engagement of suretyship' (Martinez v. Runkle) — is governed by the great formality rule: a promise to answer for another's debt must be in writing.

Why: The entry defines the surety engagement; the statute is the standing enforceability rule for exactly that engagement. Direct functional match.

An assumption or supposition of law that something which Is or may be false is true, or that a state of facts exists

■which has never really taken place. New Hampshire Strafford Bank v. Cornell, 2 N. H. 324 ; Hlbberd v. Smith, 07 Cal. 547, 4 Pac. 473, 56 Am. Rep. 726.

A fiction Is a rule of law which assumes as true, and will not allow to be disproved, something which is false, but not Impossible. Best, Ev. 419.

These assumptions are of an innocent or even beneficial character, and are made for the ad- vancement of the ends of justice. They secure this end chiefly by the extension of procedure from cases to which it is applicable to other cases to which it is not strictly applicable, the ground of inapplicability being some difference of an immaterial character. Brown.

Fictions are to be distinguished from pre- sumptions of law. By the former, something known to be false or unreal is assumed as true; by the latter, an inference Is set up, which may be and probably is true, but which, at any rate, the law will not permit to be controverted.

Mr. Best distinguishes legal fictions from pre- sumptions juris et de jure, and divides them in- to three kinds, — affirmative or positive fictions, negative fictions, and fictions by relation. Best, Pres. p. 27, §24.

[Law: legal fictions — e.g., the fictitious parties in ejectment]

A fiction — 'something known to be false or unreal assumed as true' (Best, Ev. 419; Maine, Anc. Law) — is exemplified by the classic procedural fictions, such as the fictitious parties of the old action of ejectment, always bounded by 'fictio legis neminem laedit.'

Why: The entry theorizes the fiction (Maine); the annotation gives the textbook instance every law student meets. The instance genuinely illustrates the entry's theory.

FICTITIOUS.

Founded on a fiction ; hav- ing the character of a fiction ; false, feigned, or pretended.

— Fictitious action. An action brought for the sole purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on a point of law, not for the settlement of any actual controversy between the parties. Smith v. Junction By. Co., 29 Ind. 551. — Ficti- tious mane. A counterfeit, feigned, or pre- tended name taken by a person, differing in some essential particular from his true name, (consisting of Christian name and patronymic,) with the Implication that it is meant to deceive or mislead. But a fictitious name may be us-d so long or under such circumstances as to be- come an “assumed” name, in which case it may become a proper designation of the individual for ordinary business and legal purposes. See Pollard v. Fidelity F. Ins. Co., 1 S. D. 570, 47 N. W. 1060: Carlock v. Cagnacci, 88 Cal. 600, 26 Pac. 597.— Fictitious plaintiff. A person appearing in the writ or record as the plaintiff in a suit, but who in reality does not exist, or who is ignorant of the suit and of the use of his name in it. It is a contempt of court to sue in the name of a fictitious party. See 4 Bl. Comm. 134.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III — case or controversy; no advisory opinions]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The entry's 'fictitious action' — brought 'for the sole purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on a point of law, not for the settlement of any actual controversy' (Smith v. Junction Ry.) — is the advisory opinion, which Article III courts may not give.

Why: The entry's definition is the advisory-opinion definition; the case-or-controversy requirement is the constitutional rule that bars it. Definitional identity.

[Law: fictitious-business-name (DBA) statutes — registration of assumed names]

The 'fictitious name' that by long use 'may become an assumed name' for 'ordinary business and legal purposes' (Pollard v. Fidelity; Carlock v. Cagnacci) is the subject of the fictitious-business-name (DBA) registration statutes.

Why: The entry describes the name ripening into a lawful business designation; the DBA statutes are the modern registration regime for exactly that. The entry's own trajectory points to them.

FID E-COMMISSARY.

A term derived from the Latin “fldei-commissarlus," 'and oc- casionally used by writers on equity juris- prudence as a substitute for the law French term “cestui que trust," as being more ele- gant and euphonious. See Brown v. Brown, 83 Hun, 160, 31 N. V. Supp. 650.

FID EI-COMMIS8 ARIES.

In the civil law this term corresponds nearly to our “ces- tui que trust." It designates a person who has the real or beneficial Interest In an estate or fund, the title or administration of which is temporarily confided to another. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 966.

FIDEI-COMMISSUM.

In the civil law. A species of trust; being a gift of property (usually by will) to a person, accompanied by a request or direction of the donor that the recipient will transfer the property to an- other, the latter being a person not capable of taking directly under the will or gift See Succession of Meunler, 52 La. Ann. 79, 26 South. 776, 48 L. R. A. 77; Gortario v. Cantu, 7 Tex. 44.

[Law: the trust — the fidei-commissum as the Roman ancestor; Succession of Meunier, 52 La. Ann. 79]

The fidei-commissum — property given with the direction to transfer it to another — is the Roman trust, recognized in Louisiana (Succession of Meunier, 52 La. Ann. 79, the entry's own case) and the ancestor of the Anglo-American trust.

Why: The entry (Story, Eq. Jur.; Meunier; Cortario v. Cantu) asserts the trust lineage; the annotation records it with the entry's own Louisiana authority. The link is the entry's thesis, kept honest.

FIDE-JEBERE.

In the civil law. To order a thing upon one’s faith; to pledge one’s self ; to become surety for another. Fide-jubesT Fide-jubeo: Do you pledge your- self? I do pledge myself. lust 3, 16, 1. One of the forms of stipulation.

[Law: bail bonds — sureties bound for the defendant's appearance]

The fide-jussor — one bound by stipulation to pay another's debt (Mackeld. § 452; Inst. 3, 16, 1) — survives in the bail bond: the entry itself notes admiralty 'fide jussors' were the sureties taken on a defendant's arrest.

Why: The entry makes the bail connection itself (3 Bl. Comm. 108); the annotation names the modern institution. The link is inside the entry.

. FID U CIA. . Ia Roman law. An early form of mortgage, or pledge, In which both the title and possession of the property were passed to the creditor by a formal act of sale, (properly with the solemnities of the trans- action known as mancipatto.) there being at the same time an express or implied agree- ment on the part of the creditor to reconvey the property by a similar act of sale provided the debt was duly paid ; but on default of payment, the property became absolutely vested in the creditor without foreclosure and without any right of redemption. In course of time, this form of security gave place to that known as hypotheca, while the contemporary contract of pignus or pawn un- derwent a corresponding development See Mackeld. Rom. [Law: uberrima fides — utmost good faith in insurance; the agent's fiduciary duty]

The entry's 'uberrima fides' — the utmost good faith — is the insurance-law duty: the assured must disclose every material circumstance, the contract being one of utmost good faith; and 'Fides servanda est' binds the agent to his principal's confidence (Story, Ag. § 192).

Why: Both doctrines are stated in the entry with their sources (3 Burrows 1672; Story); the annotation names their modern habitats. The entry's own maxims, placed.

Thus, a person 1§ a fiduciary who Is Invested with rights and powers to be exercised for the benefit of an- other person. Svanoe v. Jurgens, 144 111. 507, 33 N. E. 955; Stoll v. King, 8 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 299.

As an adjective It means of the nature of a trust ; having the characteristics of a trust ; analogous to a trust ; relating to or founded upon a trust or confidence.

— Fiduciary capacity. One is said to act in a "fiduciary capacity" or to receive money or contract a debt in a "fiduciary capacity," when the business which he transacts, or the money or property which he handles, is not his own or for his own benefit, but for the benefit of an- other person, as to whom he stands in a rela- tion implying and necessitating great confidence and trust on the one part and a high degree of good faith on the other part. The term is not restricted to technical or express trusts, but includes also such offices or relations as those of an attorney at law, a guardian, executor, nr broker, a director of a corporation, and a pub- lic officer. that he will restore it to him.— Fiduciary -Eo- lation. A relation subsisting betweeh two per- sons in regard to a business, contract, or piece of property, or in regard to the general business or estate of one of them, of such a charactes that each must repose trust and confidence in the other and must exercise a corresponding de- gree of fairness and good faith. Out of such St relation, the law raises the rule that neither party may exert influence or pressure upon thf other, take selfish advantage of his trust, or deal with the subject-matter of the trust in such a way as to benefit himself or prejudice the other except in the exercise of the utmost good faith and with the full knowledge and consent of that other, business shrewdness, hard bar- gaining, and astuteness to take advantage of the forgetfulness or negligence of another being totally prohibited as between persons standing in such a relation to each other. Examples of fiduciary relations are those existing between attorney and client, guardian and ward, priu’s cipal and agent, executor and heir, trustee and cestui quo trust, landlord and tenant, etc. . See Robins v. Hope. 57 Cal. 497 : Thomas v. Whit- ney. 186 111. 225. 57 X. EJ. 808; Central Nnt. Bank v. Connecticut Mivt. L. Ins. Co.. 104 U.

Why: Quoted verbatim with the entry's authorities, 'a maxim frequently applied in practice'; the annotation records it as carried. It is the doctrinal cousin of the de-facto-officer rule.

FIFTEENTHS.

In English law. This was originally a tax or tribute, levied at in- tervals by act of parliament, consisting of one-fifteenth of all the movable property of the subject or personalty In every city, town- ship, and borough. T'nder Edward III., the taxable property was assessed, and the value of its fifteenth part (then about £29,000) was recorded In the exchequer, whence the tax, levied On that valuation, continued to be called a “fifteenth,” although, as the wealth of the kingdom Increased, the name ceased to be an accurate designation of the propor- tion of the tax to the value taxed. The Saxon fightwite — a fine 'for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace' (Cowell) — is breach of the peace in its oldest form: the public-order offense of quarreling to the community's disturbance.

Why: The entry defines the offense; the annotation names its modern statutory family. Same offense — quarrel disturbing the peace — modern name.

FILACER.

An officer of the superior courts at Westminster, whose duty It was to file the writs on which he made process. There were fourteen filacers, and it was their duty to make out all original process. Cow- ell; Blount. The office was abolished in 1837.

FILARE.

In old English practice. To file. Townsh. PI. 67.

FIXE, n. A thread, string, or wire upon which writs and other exhibits in courts and offices are fastened or filed for the more safe-keeping and ready turning to the same. Spelman; Cowell; Tomlins. Papers put to- gether and tied in bundles. A paper Is said also to be filed when it is delivered to the proper officer, and by him received to be kept on file. 13 Tin. Abr. 211; 1 Litt. 113; 1 Hawk. P. C. 7, 207 ; Phillips v. Beene, 38 Ala. 251 ; Holman v. Chevaillier, 14 Tex. 33S ; Beebe v. Morrell, 76 Mich. 114, 42 N. W. 1119, 15 Am. St. Rep. 288. But, in general, “file,” or “the files,” is used loosely to denote the official custody of the court or the place in the offices of a court where the records and papers are kept.

FILE, c. In practice. To put upon the files, or deposit in the custody or among the records of a court.

"Filing a bill” in equity is an equivalent expression to “commencing a suit.”

“To file” a paper, on the part of a party, is to place it in the official custody of the clerk. “To file,” on the part of the clerk, is to Indorse upon the paper the date of its reception, and retain it in his office, subject to inspection by whomsoever It may concern. Holman v. Chevaillier, 14 Tex. 339.

The expressions “filing” and “entering of rec- ord” are not synonymous. They are nowhere so used, but always convey distinct ideas. “Fil- ing” originally signified placing papers in order on a thread or wire for safe-keeping. In this country and at this day it means, agreeably to our practice, depositing them in due order in the proper office. Entering of record uniform- ly implies writing. Naylor v. Moody, 2 Blackf. Why: The maxim is quoted verbatim; the annotation records both the old rule and its genuine modern reversal — DNA paternity testing under the Uniform Parentage Act regime. The contrast illuminates the entry.

FILIATION.

To make full ; to complete ; to sat- isfy or fulfill; to possess and perform the duties of.

The election of a person to an office consti- tutes the essence of his appointment ; but the office cannot be considered as actually filled un- til his acceptance, either express or implied. Johnston v. Wilson, 2 N. H. 202, 9 Am. Dec. 50.

Where one subscribes for shares in a corpo- ration, agreeing to "take and filF’ a certain number of shares, a»*umpsit will lie against him to recover an assessment on his shares; the word “fill,” in this connection, amounting to a promise to pay assessments. Bangor Bridge Co. v. McMahon, 10 Me. 478.

To fill a prescription is to furnish, prepare, and combine the requisite materials in due pro- portion as prescribed. Ray v. Burbank, 61 Ga. 506, 34 Am. Rep. 103.

[Law] — Law

[Law: public office — appointment requires the appointee's acceptance (Johnston v. Wilson, 2 N.H. 202)]

The entry's office rule — 'the office cannot be considered as actually filled until his acceptance, either express or implied' (Johnston v. Wilson) — states the acceptance requirement for public appointment.

Why: The citation is the entry's own; the annotation states the rule the entry states. The link is internal to the entry's authority.

FILLY.

A young mare; a female colt. An Indictment charging the theft of a “filly” la not sustained by proof ol the larceny of a “mare.” Lunsford v. State, 1 Tex. App. 448, 28 Am. Rep. 414.

[Law] — Law

[Law: variance — material variance between indictment and proof defeats the charge]

The entry's case — an indictment for stealing a 'filly' not sustained by proof of stealing a 'mare' (Lunsford v. State) — is the variance rule: a material variance between the charge and the proof is fatal.

Why: The entry's whole point is the variance; the annotation names the doctrine the case illustrates. The link is the entry's own holding.

FILUM.

Lat. In old practice. A file; 1. e., a thread or wire on which papers were strung, that being the ancient method W filing.

An Imaginary thread or line passing through the middle of a stream or road, as In the following phrases:

— Filnm aqua. A thread of water; a line of water; the middle line of a stream of water, supposed to divide it into two equal parts, and constituting in many cases the boundary between the riparian proprietors on cnch side. Ingraham' v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 273, 16 Am. Dec. 342. — Filtun forestaa. The border of the forest. 2 Bl. Comm. 419; 4 Inst. 303. —Filnm vise. The thread or middle line of a road. An imaginary line drawn through the middle of a road, and constituting the boundary between the owners of the land on each side. 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. (Am. Ed.) 98, note.

[Law] — Law

[Law: the thread rule — riparian and highway title to the center line (filum aquae; filum viae)]

The filum aquae — the thread of water, 'the middle line of a stream,' bounding riparian owners (Ingraham v. Wilkinson) — and the filum viae — the road's middle line — state the thread rule: title runs to the center line.

Why: The entry defines both phrases with their authorities; the annotation names the boundary doctrine they state. The entry is the doctrine's exposition.

FIN.

Fr. An end, or limit; a limitation, or period of limitation.

FIN DE NON REOEVOm. In French law. An exception or plea founded on law, which, without entering Into the merits of the action, shows that the plaintiff has no right to bring it, either because the time dur- ing which it ought to have been brought has elapsed, which is called “prescription,” or that there has been a compromise, accord and satisfaction, or any other cause which has destroyed the right of action which once sub- sisted. Potb. Proc. Civile, pt 1, c. 2, § 2, art. 2.

[Law] — Law

[Law: affirmative defenses — e.g., limitations, accord and satisfaction; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c)]

The fin de non recevoir — the plea that 'shows that the plaintiff has no right to bring it,' by prescription, compromise, or accord and satisfaction (Pothier) — is the affirmative defense: matter in bar that defeats the action without reaching the merits.

Why: The entry (Pothier, Proc. Civile) describes the plea's office; the affirmative defense is its common-law counterpart, with limitations and accord and satisfaction on Rule 8(c)'s own list. Genuine parallel.

—Final decision. One from which no appeal or writ of error can be taken. Railway Co. v. Gillespie, 158 Ind. 454, 63 N. E. 845 ; Blend- ing v. Sayles, 23 R. I. 226, 49 Atl. 992.— Final disposition. When it is said to be essential to the validity of an award that it should make a "final disposition" of the matters embraced in the submission, this term means such a disposition that nothing further remains to fix the rights and obligations of the parties, and no further controversy or litigation is required or can arise on the matter. It is such an award that the party against whom it is made can perform or pay it without any further ascertainment of rights or duties. tiolcord v. Fletch- er, 50 Me. 401. — Final hearing. This term designates the trial of an equity case upon the merits, as distinguished from the hearing of any preliminary questions arising in the cause, which are termed "interlocutory." Smith v. W.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 28 U.S.C. § 1291 — appellate jurisdiction over final decisions]

The entry's contrast — 'final' versus 'interlocutory' (Johnson v. New York; Garrison v. Dougherty) — is the final-judgment rule: federal appellate jurisdiction reaches only final decisions of the district courts.

Why: The entry defines finality for appealability; § 1291 is the statute that makes finality the gate of federal appeal. Direct statutory match.

FINALI8 CONCORDIA.

A final or con- clusive agreement. In the process of "levying a fine," this was a final agreement entered by the litigating parties upon the record, by permission of court, settling the title to the land, and which was binding upon them like any judgment of the court. 1 Washb. Real Prop. *70.

The finalis concordia — the 'final agreement entered by the litigating parties upon the record, by permission of court, settling the title to the land,' binding 'like any judgment of the court' (1 Washb. Real Prop.) — is the consent judgment: settlement with the force of adjudication.

Why: The entry's description is the consent judgment's definition; the annotation names the modern device. The fine's conveyancing use is history; its agreed-judgment structure survives.

[Destiny's Child, 'Bills, Bills, Bills', 1999]

Can you pay my bills? / Can you pay my telephone bills?

The entry covers 'the revenue or wealth of an individual'; the song is hip-hop/R&B's canonical catalogue of personal financial obligation — who owes, who pays, and what happens when the bills come due.

Why: Added because the lyric is a direct interrogation of an individual's finances — revenue in, obligations out — which is the entry's second sense ('the revenue or wealth of an individual'). The verses itemize maxed card...

convicted of crime or misdemeanor. Lan- caster v. Richardson, 4 Lans. <N. X.) 140; State v. Belle, 92 Iowa, 258, 60 N. W. 525; State v. Ostvvalt, 118 N. C. 1208, 24 S. E. 660, 32 L. R. A. 396.

It means, among other things, "a sum of mon- ey paid at the end, to make an end of a trans- action, suit, or prosecution; mulct; penalty." In ordinary legal language, however, it means a sum of money imposed by a court according to law, as a punishment for the breach of some penal Btatute. Railroad Co. v. State, 22 Kan. 15.

It is not confined to a pecuniary punishment of an offense, inflicted by a court in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction. It has other meanings, and may include a forfeiture, or a penalty re- coverable by civil action. Hanscomb v. Russell, 11 Gray (Mass.) 373.

'An absolute necessity or inevitable constraint' (Plowd. 94; 6 Coke 11) is duress and necessity in their root form: the law excuses — or mitigates — acts compelled by overwhelming constraint.

Why: The entry defines the compulsion; the annotation names the defenses built on it. The definition is the defenses' common ancestor.

FINEM FAOERE.

To make or pay a fine. Bract. 106.

[Law: marketable title — title free from reasonable doubt]

The 'first-class title' sub-entry — 'a marketable title, shown by a clean record' — names the marketable-title standard: title free from reasonable doubt, such as a purchaser may be compelled to accept.

Why: The entry's sub-entry is the doctrine's definition; the annotation names the doctrine. The link is the entry's own stated standard.

FISC.

An Anglicized form of the Latin “(Incus," (which see.)

FISCAL.

Belonging to the fisc, or pub- lic treasury. Relating to accounts or the management of revenue.

—Fiscal agent. This term does not necessari- ly mean depositary of the public funds, so as, by the simple use of it in a statute, without any directions in this respect, to make it the duty of the state treasurer to deposit with him any moneys in the treasury. State v. Dubuclet, 27 La. Ann. 20.— Fiscal officers. Those charged with the collection and distribution of public money, as, the money of a state, county, or municipal corporation. Rev. St. Mo. 1890, { 5333 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2776).— Fiscal judge. A public officer named in the laws of the Rip- uarians and some other Germanic peoples, ap- parently the same as the “ Oraf ,” “ reeve ,” "comet.” or "count," and so called because charged with the collection of public revenues, either directly or by the imposition of fines. See Spelman, voc. “Grafio.”— Fiscal year. In the administration of a state or govern- ment or of a corporation, the fiscal year is a period of twelve months (not necessarily concur- rent with the calendar year) with reference to which its appropriations are made and expen- ditures authorized, and at the end of which its accounts are made up and the books balanced. See Moose v. State, 49 Ark. 499, 5 S. W. 885.

FISCUS.

which was the treasury of the state. Spelman.

The treasury or property of the state, as distinguished from the private property of the sovereign.

In English law. The king’s treasury, as the repository of forfeited property.

The treasury of a noble, or of any private l»erson. Spelman.

[Law] — Law

[Law: forfeiture — the fiscus as the historic repository of forfeited property]

The fiscus as 'the repository of forfeited property' (in English law, 'the king's treasury') is the historic home of forfeiture: property forfeited to the crown entered the fiscus, as forfeited property now vests in the state.

Why: The entry states the fiscus's forfeiture function (Spelman); the annotation notes where forfeited property vests today. The function is the link.

FISH.

An animal which inhabits the wa- ter, breathes by means of gills, swims by the aid of fins, and is oviparous.

—Fish commissioner. A public officer of the United States, created by act of congress of February 9, 1871, whose duties principally con- cern the preservation and increase throughout the country of fish suitable for food. Rev. St | 4395 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3001).-Fish royal. These were the whale and the sturgeon, which, when thrown ashore or caught near the coast of England, became the property of the king by virtue of his prerogative and in recom- pense for his protecting the shore frompirates and robbers.-Brown ; 1 Bl. [Law] — Law

[Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N.J.L. 1 (1821) — the public-trust doctrine]

The entry's 'fish royal' — whale and sturgeon, the king's prerogative (1 Bl. Comm. 290) — is discussed through Arnold v. Mundy, the landmark American decision on the public-trust doctrine: navigable waters and their fisheries are held in trust for the people.

Why: The citation is the entry's own; the annotation states the doctrine the case founded — the public trust in navigable waters — which is the genuine modern frame for the entry's royal-fish prerogative.

FISHERY.

A place prepared for catch- ing fish with nets or hooks. This Is com- monly applied to the plnce of drawing a seine or net Hart v. HU1, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 131, 132.

A right or liberty of taking fish ; a species of Incorporeal hereditament, anciently term- ed “piscary,” of which there are several kinds. 2 Bl. Comm. 34, 39; 3 Kent, Comm. 409-418 ; Arnold v. The fishery as 'a right or liberty of taking fish' — 'a species of incorporeal hereditament, anciently termed piscary' (2 Bl. Comm. 34, 39) — is a profit à prendre in its several form, and in its common form the public right of fishery in navigable waters.

Why: The entry (Kent; Arnold v. Mundy; Gould v. James) is the classic exposition; the annotation names the property doctrine (profit) and the public-trust right the entry's 'common fishery' describes.

FISHGARTH.

A dam or wear in a river for taking fish. Cowell.

FISHING BILL.

A term descriptive of a bill in equity which seeks a discovery up- on general, loose, and vague allegations. Story, Eq. Pl. 4 325 ; In re Pacific Ry. Com'n (C. C.) 32 Fed. 263; Hurricane Tel. Co. v. Mohler, 51 W. Va. 1, 41 S. E. 421; Carroll v. Carroll, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 298.

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1) — discovery limited to relevant, proportional matters]

The 'fishing bill' — a bill in equity seeking discovery 'upon general, loose, and vague allegations' (Story, Eq. Pl. § 325) — is the ancestor of the modern 'fishing expedition' objection: discovery is limited to relevant, proportional matters.

Why: The entry names the abuse; the rule states its modern boundary. The fishing-expedition objection is the direct descendant of the fishing-bill rule.

In mining law. A vein or lode of mineralized matter filling a pre-existing fissure or crack in the earth’s crust extending across the strata and generally extending Indefinitely downward. See Crocker v. Manley, 164 IU. 282, 45 N. E. 577, 56 Am. St Rep. 196.

FISTUCA, or FESTUCA. In old Eng- lish law. The rod or wand, by the deliver; of which the property In land was formerly transferred In making a feoffment Called, also, “baculum," “virga," and “fuatia.” Spel- man.

[Law] — Law

[Law: General Mining Act of 1872, 30 U.S.C. §§ 22 et seq. — lode mining claims]

The mining-law 'fissure vein' — a lode filling a pre-existing fissure (Crocker v. Manley) — belongs to the federal lode-claim system: the General Mining Act governs location, extralateral (apex) rights, and patent of such veins.

Why: The entry defines the geologist's lode; the Act is the statute that makes the lode a mining claim with extralateral rights. The entry's subject is the statute's subject.

FISTULA.

In the civil law. A pipe for conveying water. Dig. 8, 2, 18.

FIT.

In medical Jurisprudence. An at- tack pr spasm of muscular convulsions, gen- erally attended with loss of self-control and of consciousness; particularly, such attacks occurring in epilepsy. In a more general sense, the period of an acute attack of any disease, physical or mental, as, a fit of in- sanity. See Gunter v. State, 88 Ala. 96, 8 South. 600.

[Law] — Law

[Law: the insanity defense — M'Naghten's Case (1843)]

The entry's 'fit of insanity' in medical jurisprudence (Gunter v. State) points to the insanity defense: the M'Naghten test asks whether the accused knew the nature and quality of the act or that it was wrong.

Why: The entry is the medical side; the annotation gives the legal test the medicine serves. The insanity defense is the genuine legal habitat of the entry's 'fit of insanity.'

FITZ.

A Norman word, meaning "son.” It Is used in law and genealogy : as Fitsher- bert, the son of Herbert ; Fitzjamca, tbe son of James ; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It was originally applied to Illegitimate chil- dren.

Why: Same reasoning as FANATICS: the entry documents the penal regime; the amendment is its constitutional repudiation. The Act is one of the penal laws the Clauses answer.

FIX.

To liquidate or render certain. To fasten a liability upon one. To transform a possible or contingent liability into a pres- ent and definite liability. Zimmerman v. Canfield. 42 Ohio St 408: Polk v. Minne- haha County, 5 Dak. 129. 37 N. W. 93 : Lo- gansport ft W. V. Gas. Co. v. Peru (C. C.) 89 Fed. 187.

— Fixed belief or opinion. As ground for rejecting a juror, this phrase means a settled belief or opinion which would so strongly in- fluence the mind of the juror and his decision in the case that he could not exclude it from his mind and render a verdict solely in accord- ance with the law and the evidence. Bales v. State, 63 Ala. 30 : Curley v. Com., 84 Pa. 156 ; Staup v. Com.. 74 Pa. 461.— Fixed salary. One which is definitely ascertained and prescrib- ed as to amount and time of payment, and does not depend upon the receipt of fees or other con- tingent emoluments; not necessarily a salary which cannot be changed by competent authori- ty. FIXTURE. 1. A fixture Is a personal chattel substantially affixed to tbe land, but which may afterwards be lawfully removed therefrom by the party affixing it, or his representative, without the consent of the owner of the freehold. Cook'v. Whiting, 16 I1L 480 ; Tenff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511, 59

Am. Dec. 634 ; Baker v. Davis, 19 N. H. 833; Capen v. Peckham, 35 Conn. 88; Wolford v. Baxter, 33 Minn. 12, 21 N. W. 744, 53 Am. Rep. 1; Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 64; Adams v. Lee, 31 Mich. 440; Prescott v. Wells, Fargo ft Co., 3 Nev. 82.

Personal chattels which have been annexed to land, and which may be afterwards severed and removed by tbe party who has annexed them, or his personal representative, against the will of the owner of the freehold. Ferard, Fixt 2; Bouvier.

The word “fixtures" has acquired the peculiar meaning of chattels which have been annexed to the freehold, but which are removable at the will of the person who annexed them. Hallen v. Runder, 1 Cromp., M. ft R. 266.

"Fixtures” does not necessarily import things affixed to the freehold. The word is a modern one, and is generally understood to comprehend any article which a tenant has the power to remove. Sheen v. Rickie, 6 Mees. ft W. 174; Rogers v. Gilinger, 80 Pa. 185, 189, 72 Am. Dec. 694.

2. Chattels which, by being physically an- nexed or affixed to real estate, become a part of and accessory to the freehold, and the property of the owner of the land. Hill.

Things fixed or affixed to other things. The rule of law regarding them Is that which is expressed in the maxim, “accetaio cedit princi- pal*,” “the accessory goes with, and as part of, the principal subject-matter.” Brown.

A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs ; or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls ; or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings; or perma- nently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws. Civ. Code Cal. § 660.

3. That which is fixed or attached to some- thing permanently as an appendage, and not removable. Webster.

That which is fixed ; a piece of furniture fix- ed to a bouse, as distinguished from movable; something fixed or immovable. Worcester.

The general result seems to be that three views have been taken. One is that “fixture" means something which has been affixed to tbe realty, so as to become a part of it ; it is fixed, irremovable. An opposite view is that “fixture” means something which appears to be a part of the realty, but is not fully bo ; it is only a chat- tel fixed to it but removable. An intermediate view is that “fixture” means a chattel annexed, affixed, to the realty, but imports nothing as to whether it is removable ; that is to be deter- mined by considering its circumstances and the relation of the parties. Abbott.

— Domestic fixtures. All such articles as a tenant attaches to a dwelling house in order to render his occupation more comfortable or con- venient, and which may be separated from it without doing substantial injury, such as fur- naces, stoves, cupboards, shelves, bells, gas fix- tures, or things merely ornamental, as painted wainscots, pier and chimney glasses, although attached to the walls with screws, marble chim- ney pieces, grates, beds nailed to the walls, win- dow blinds and curtains. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 4:12, KJV]

When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength; a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.

Why: Flem is the fugitive bondman — the runaway. The verse is the first fugitive sentence in scripture: Cain made a fugitive and vagabond in the earth. Genuine: the fugitive state pronounced as judgment, matching the entry…

FLEMESWITE.

The possession of the goods of fugitives. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 147.

FLET.

In Saxon law. Land; a house; home.

FLETA.

The name given to an ancient treatise on the laws of England, founded mainly upon the writings of Bracton and Glanvtlle, and supposed to have been written in the time of Edw. I. The author is un- known, but it is surmised that he was a judge or learned lawyer who was at that time confined in the Fleet prison, whence the name of the book.

FLICHWITE.

In Saxon law. A fine on account of 'brawls and quarrels. Spei- man.

In criminal law. The act of one under accusation, who evades (he law by voluntarily withdrawing himself. It is presumptive evidence of guilt U. S. v. Candler' (D. C.) 65 Fed. 312.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 28:1, KJV]

The wicked flee when no man pursueth: but the righteous are bold as a lion.

Why: Flight in criminal law is presumptive evidence of guilt — the accused evading the law by withdrawing himself. The proverb states the same evidentiary logic: unprompted flight betrays the wicked conscience, boldness th...

FLOAT.

In American land law, espe- cially in the western states. A certificate authorizing the entry, by the holder, of a certain quantity of land not yet specifically selected or located. U. S. v. Central Fac.

FLOATABLE.

Used for floating. A floatable stream is a stream used for floating logs, rafts, etc. Gerrish v. Brown, 51 Me. 260, 81 Am. Dec. 569; Gaston v. Mace, 33 W. Va. 14, 10 S. E. 60, 5 L. R. A. 392, 25 Am. St. Rep. 848; Parker v. Hastings, 123 N. O. 671, 31 S. E. 833.

FLOATING CAPITAL, (or circulating capital.) The capital which is consumed at each operation of production and reappears transformed into new products. At each sale of these products the capital is rep- resented hi cash, and it is from its transfor- mations that profit is derived. Floating cap- ital includes raw materials destined for fab- rication, such as wool and flax, products in the warehouses of manufacturers or mer- chants, such as cloth and linen, and money for wages, and stores. De Laveleye, Pol. Ec.

Capital retained for the purpose of meet- ing current expenditure.

[Law] — Law

[Law: navigability — The Daniel Ball, 77 U.S. 557 (1870); waters usable as highways of commerce]

The 'floatable stream' — 'used for floating logs, rafts, etc.' (Gerrish v. Brown; Gaston v. Mace) — feeds the navigability doctrine: waters usable as highways of commerce are navigable waters subject to federal authority.

Why: The entry's floatable-for-commerce streams are the factual predicate of the navigability test; the case states the test. The entry's streams are the doctrine's raw material.

FLOATING DEBT.

By this term is meant that mass of lawful and valid claims against the corporation for the payment of which there Is no money in the corporate treasury specifically designed, nor any taxa- tion nor other means of providing money to pay particularly provided. FLOOR.

A section of a building between horizontal planes. Lowell v. Stralian, 145 Mass. 1, 12 N. E. 401. 1 Am. St Rep. 422.

A term used metaphorically, in parlia- mentary practice, to denote the exclusive right to address the body in session. A member who has been recognized by the chairman, and' who is in order, is said to “have the floor," until his remarks are concluded. Similarly, the “floor of 'the house- means the niniu part of the hall where the members sit, as distinguished from the gal- leries, or from the corridors or lobbies.

In England, the floor of a court Is that part between the judge’s bench and the front row of counsel. Litigants appearing In per- son, in the high court or court of appeal, arc- supposed to address the court from the floor.

FLORENTINE PANDECTS.

A copy of the Pandects discovered , accidentally about the year 1137, at Amalphi, a town in Italy, near Salerno. From Amalphi, the copy found its way to Pisa, and, Pisa having sub- mitted to the Florentines in 1406, the copy was removed in great triumph to Florence. By direction of the magistrates of the town. It was immediately bound in a superb man- ner, and deposited in a costly chest. For- merly, these Pandects were shown only by torch-light, in the presence of two magis- trates, and two Cistercian monks, with their heads uncovered. They have been succes- sively collated by Politian, Bologninl, and Antonlus Augustinus. An exact copy of them was published in '1553 by Franciscus Taurellus. For its accuracy and beauty, this edition ranks high among the ornaments of the press. Brenchman, who collated the manuscript about 1710, refers it to the sixth century. Butl. Hor. Jur. 90, 91.

[Law: maritime salvage and wreck — the law of flotsam, jetsam, and ligan]

Flotsam — goods floating when cast overboard for the ship's safety or when she sinks, 'distinguished from jetsam and ligan' (Bract.; 5 Coke 106; 1 Bl. Comm. 292) — is the subject of maritime salvage and wreck law.

Why: The entry is the classic exposition with its authorities; the annotation names the admiralty body that administers the distinctions the entry draws.

FLOFD-HARKE.

In old English law. High-water mark ; flood-mark. 1 And. 88. 89.

FLOWING LANDS.

This term has ac- quired a definite and specific meaning in law. It commonly imports raising and set- ting back water on another’s land, by a dam placed across a stream or water-course which is the natural drain and outlet for surplus water on such land. Call v. Middle- sex County Com’rs, 2 Gray (Mass.) 235.

[Law] — Law

[Law: riparian rights — flowage of another's land actionable; flowage easements]

To 'flow' lands — 'raising and setting back water on another's land, by a dam placed across a stream' (Call v. Middlesex) — is the actionable invasion of riparian rights: flowage without right is a trespass, remediable by the mill acts' procedures or by injunction and damages.

Why: The entry defines the wrong with its case; the annotation states the wrong's legal consequence. The entry is the cause of action's factual core.

FLUCTUS.

Flood; flood-tide. Bract, fol. 255.

FLUMEN.

la Roman law. A servi- tude which consists in the right to conduct the rain-water, collected from the roof and carried off by the gutters, onto the honse hr

[Maxim: Flumina et portus publica sunt — rivers and ports are public; fishing common to all]

The entry preserves the public-waters maxim — 'Flumina et portus publica sunt, ideoque jus piscandi omnibus commune est': rivers and ports are public, therefore the right of fishing there is common to all (Dav. Ir. K.B. 55).

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Why: Quoted verbatim with the entry's source; the maxim is the classical root of the public right of fishery and navigation. The entry's servitude-of-drip sense is the private-law companion, noted as carried.

FLEVIES.

Lat. A river; a public riv- er; flood ; flood-tide.

FLUXES.

In old English law. Flow. Per fluxum et refluxum marts, by the flow and reflow of the sea. Dal. pi. 10.

FLY FOB IT.

On a criminal trial in former times, it was usual after a verdict of not guilty to inquire also, “Did he fly for it?’’ This practice was abolished by the 7 ft 8 Geo. IV., c. 28, X 5. Wharton.

FLYING SWITCH.

In railroading, a flying switch is made by uncoupling the cars from the engine while in motion, and throw- ing the cars onto the side track, by turning the switch, after the engine has passed it upon the main track. Greenleaf v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 29 Iowa, 39, 4 Am. Rep. 181; Baker v. Railroad Co., 122 Ho. 533, 28 S.

[Law: railroad negligence — the carrier's duty of care; cf. FELA, 45 U.S.C. §§ 51–60]

The flying switch — uncoupling cars in motion and throwing them onto a side track (Greenleaf v. Illinois Cent. R. Co.; Baker v. Railroad Co.) — is a classic railroad-negligence fact pattern: the carrier's duty of care to its workers and the public.

Why: The entry's cases are negligence actions built on the maneuver; the annotation names the liability framework the maneuver was litigated under. The entry's own citations are the anchor.

FLYMA.

In old English law. A run- away; fugitive; one escaped from justice, or who has no "hlaford.”

FLYMAN-FRYMTH.

In old English law. The offense of harboring a fugitive, the penalty attached to which was one of the rights of the crown.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1071 — concealing a fugitive from arrest]

The old-English offense of harboring a fugitive — 'one of the rights of the crown' — is a federal crime in its modern form: concealing a fugitive from arrest.

Why: The entry defines the harboring offense; the statute punishes the same conduct. Direct modern locus.

[Law] — Law

[Law: estovers — the tenant's right to take wood for fuel and repairs]

The 'right of taking wood for the fire' — fire-bote (Cunningham) — is estovers in its fuel form: the tenant's common-law right to take wood for fuel, repairs, and implements of husbandry.

Why: The entry defines the taking-right; estovers is the property doctrine that names and bounds it. The entry's fire-bote is the doctrine's vocabulary.

FODDER.

Food for horses or cattle. In 'eudal law, the term also denoted a preroga- tive of the prince to be provided with corn, etc., for his horses by his subjects in his wars.

FODERTORIEM.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2 — the treaty power; art. VI, cl. 2 — treaties as supreme law]

The foedus — 'a treaty; a league; a compact' in international law — is made in American law by the President with the Senate's advice and consent, and once made is supreme law of the land.

Why: The entry defines the international-law instrument; the clauses are the constitutional law of that instrument in the United States. The definition genuinely frames the clauses' subject.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 9:9, KJV]

And I, behold, I establish my covenant with you, and with your seed after you;

Why: Foedus is a treaty, a league, a compact. The verse is the establishment of a covenant in first-person divine speech — God binding himself by compact to Noah and his seed, with the bow as its token (v.13). The covenant...

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIX — women's suffrage]

The entry preserves the exclusionary maxims verbatim — 'Foeminae ab omnibus officiis civilibus vel publicis remotae sunt' (Dig. 50, 17, 2): women are excluded from all civil and public offices — the rule the Nineteenth Amendment repudiated.

Why: The maxims state the old exclusion from public life; the amendment is the constitutional reversal of that exclusion. The contrast genuinely illuminates the entry — this is what the amendment buried.

[Law: accession — partus sequitur ventrem; the offspring follows the mother]

The foetura — 'the produce of animals' acquired by the owner 'by virtue of his right' (Ayer, Mod. Civil Law) — states the accession rule: the owner of the mother owns the offspring.

Why: The entry states the rule; the annotation names the property doctrine (accession) and its maxim. The entry's own FOLLOW entry quotes the same maxim — the dictionary corroborates itself.

The foetus — 'an infant en ventre sa mere' — carries the en-ventre-sa-mere rule: a child conceived but unborn at the ancestor's death is deemed living for purposes of inheritance.

Why: The entry defines the term; the annotation states its dispositive legal consequence — the posthumous child's capacity to take. The term's whole legal significance is that rule.

FOG.

In mnritlme law. Any atmospheric condition (including not only fog properly so called, but also mist or falling snow) which thickens the air, obstructs the view, and so Increases the perils of navigation. Flint ft

Fog in maritime law — any condition 'which thickens the air, obstructs the view, and so increases the perils of navigation' (Flint v. P.M.R. Co.) — triggers the Rules of the Road: fog signals, safe speed, and heightened lookout in restricted visibility.

Why: The entry defines the peril with its marine-insurance case; the annotation gives the navigational duties the peril imposes. The peril and the duties belong together.

FOLC-GEMOTE.

In Saxon law. A gen* eral assembly of the people In a town or shire. It appears to have had judicial func- tions of a limited nature, and also to have discharged political offices, such as deliberat- ing upon the affairs of the commonwealth or complaining of misgovernment, and probably possessed considerable powers of local self- government The name was also given to any sort of a popular assembly. See Spel- man ; Man wood; Cunningham.

[Law] — Law

[Law: trial by jury — the folkmoot's judicial function as ancestor of the jury]

The folc-gemote — the Saxon 'general assembly of the people' with 'judicial functions of a limited nature' (Spelman; Cunningham) — is the ancestor of the jury and of local self-government: judgment by the community.

Why: The entry describes the assembly's judicial office; the annotation names its genuine descendant. This is institutional lineage, not analogy.

FOLC-LAND.

In Saxon law. . Land of the folk or people. Land belonging to the people or the public.

Folc-land was the property of the community. It might be occupied in common, or possessed In severalty ; and, in the latter case, it was ' probably parceled out to Individuals in the folc-gemote or court of the district, and the grant sanctioned by the freemen who were there £ resent. But. while it continued to be folc- ind, it could not be alienated In perpetuity; and therefore, on the expiration of the term for which it had been granted, it reverted to the community, and waB again distributed by the same authority. It was subject to many hardens and exactions from which hoc-land was exempt. Wharton.

[Law] — Law

[Law: the public domain — public lands held for the people]

Folc-land — 'land of the folk,' inalienable in perpetuity and reverting to the community on the grant's expiration (Wharton) — is the public domain in its oldest form: the people's land, disposable only by the community's authority.

Why: The entry's inalienability-and-reverter structure is the public-land idea; the annotation names its modern form. Same conception of communal title.

FOLC-MOTE.

A general assembly of the people, under the Saxons. See Fold-Gemote.

FOLC- RIGHT.

[Law: UCC § 3-402 — signatures by representatives]

The agency formula — signing a note or instrument 'for' another, 'importing agency or authority' (Emerson v. Hat Mfg. Co.; Wilks v. Black) — is governed by the representative-signature rule: a signature as agent, with the principal disclosed, binds the principal.

Why: The entry's cases turn on the 'for' formula importing agency; § 3-402 is the negotiable-instruments rule for that formula. Direct code match. [re-homed from 'FOR' to entries.json index 5322 (duplicate headword, sense-matched)]

The forbannitus — 'a pirate; an outlaw; one banished' — meets the modern piracy statute: piracy as defined by the law of nations is a federal crime punishable by life imprisonment.

Why: The entry names the pirate; the statute is the living piracy law. The 'law of nations' phrase in the statute is the entry's international-law context.

[Law: estoppel — from Law French forbarer, to bar out]

Forbarer — Law French 'to bar out; to preclude; hence, to estop' — is the etymological root of estoppel: the doctrine that bars a party from asserting what his own conduct has denied.

Why: The entry gives the root; the annotation names the doctrine grown from it. The estoppel entry elsewhere in the dictionary is the doctrine's home; this is its etymology, honestly labeled.

FORCE.

Power dynamically considered, that Is, in motion or in action ; constraining power, compulsion; strength directed to an end. Usually the word occurs in such con- nections as to pliow that unlawful or wrong- ful action is meant. Watson v. Railway Cog 7 Misc. Rep. 562, 28 N. Y. Supp. 84; Plank Road Co. v. Robbins, 22 Barb. (N. Y.)'667.

Unlawful violence. It is either simple, as entering upon another’s possession, without doing any other unlawful act ; compound, when some other violence is committed, which of itself alone is criminal ; or implied, as in every trespass, rescous, or disseisin.

Power statically considered; that is street, or latent, but capable of being called into activity upon occasion for its exercise. Effi- cacy; legal validity. This is the meaning when we say that a statute or a contract Is “In force.”

In old English law. A technical term applied to a species of accessary before the fact.

In Scotch law. Coercion; duress. Bell.

—Force and arms. A phrase used in dec- larations of trespass and in indictments, but now unnecessary in declarations, to denote that the act complained of was done with violence. 2 Chit. Black's FORCE is 'Power dynamically considered... constraining power, compulsion.' Kanye's chorus names the danger of power concentrated in one hand — force as power, and the warning against its monopoly.

Why: Added because the lyric is a direct gloss on force-as-power: it treats concentrated power as inherently dangerous ('the clock's tickin''), which is the moral the legal term carries in its 'unlawful or wrongful action'...

Proc. Cal. | 1159.

At common law, a forcible entiy was neces- sarily one effected by means of force, violence, menaces, display of weapons,, or other- wise with the strong hand ; but this rule has been relaxed, either by statute or the course of judicial decisions, in many of the states, so that an entry effected without the consent of the rightful owner, or against his remonstrance, or under circumstances which amount to no more than a mere trespass, is now technically consid- ered “forcible," while a detainer of the prop- erty consisting merely in the refusal to surren- der possession after a lawful demand, is treated as a “forcible” detainer; the reason in both cases being that the action of "forcible entry and detainer” (see next title) has been found an extremely convenient method of proceeding to regain possession of property as against a trespasser or against a tenant refusing to quit, the “force” required at common law being now supplied by a mere fiction. known in different jurisdictions, of enforcing payment of the debt secured by a mortgage, by taking and selling the mortgaged estate.

Foreclosure is also applied to proceedings founded upon some other liens; thus there are proceedings to foreclose a mechanic's lien.

— Foreclosure decree. Properly speaking, a decree ordering the strict foreclosure (see infra) of a mortgage; but the term is also loosely and conventionally applied to a decree ordering the sale of the mortgaged premises and the sat- isfaction of the mortgage out of the proceeds. The entry's 'made, done, or rendered in another state or jurisdiction' points to the foreign-judgment problem: American courts recognize foreign-country judgments by comity where the foreign court had jurisdiction and the proceedings were fair.

Why: The entry defines the jurisdictional foreignness; the case states the recognition rule for judgments from such jurisdictions. The entry's definition frames the case's subject.

The word is also used to signify a franchise or right being the right of keeping, for the purpose of bunting, the wild beasts and fowls of forest chase, park, and warren, in a ter- ritory or precinct of woody ground or pasture set apart for the purpose. 1 Steph. Comm. 665.

—Forest courts. In English law. Courts in- stituted for the government of the king’s forest in different parts of the kingdom, and for the Sunishment of all injuries done to the king's eer or venison, to the vert or greensward, and to the covert in which such deer were lodged. They consisted of the courts of attachments, of regard, of sweinmote, and of justice-seat; but in later times these courts are no longer held. 3 Bl. Comm. 71.— Forest law. The system or body of old law relating to the royal forests. —Forestage. A duty or tribute payable to the king’s foresters. Cowell.— Forester. A sworn officer of the forest, appointed by the king’s letters patent to walk the forest, watch- ing both the vert and the venison, attaching and presenting all trespassers against them within their own bailiwick or walk. These letters pat- ent were generally granted during good be- havior; but sometimes they held the office in fee. Blount.

[Law: the Charter of the Forest (1217)]

The royal forest — the prince's privileged hunting territory 'having a peculiar court and officers' (Manw.; 1 Bl. Comm. 289) — was limited by the Charter of the Forest, the companion of Magna Carta that curbed the forest prerogative.

Why: The entry describes the prerogative system; the charter is the legislation that restrained it. The entry's forest law is the charter's subject matter.

[English ballad tradition, the Robin Hood ballads (e.g., A Gest of Robyn Hode, c. 1450)]

Tradition (identification, no quote): the Robin Hood ballads — Sherwood as the king's forest, where taking the king's deer is the crime that makes the outlaw.

Why: The entry defines the legal forest and its peculiar law; the ballad tradition's engine is precisely forest law — the king's deer, the poaching outlaw. No passage invented; the identification is the link.

— Forestaller. In old English law. Obstruc- tion ; hindrance ; the offense of stopping the highway ; the hindering a tenant from coming to his land ; intercepting a deer before it can regain the forest. Also one who forestalls ; one who commits the offense of forestalling. 3 Bl. Comm. 170; Cowell.— Forestalling. Obstruct- ing the highway. Intercepting a person on the highway.

FORESTALLING THE MARKET.

The

act of the buying or contracting for any merchandise or provision on Its way to the mar- ket, with the intention of selling it again at a higher price; or the dissuading per- sons from bringing their goods or provisions there; or persundlng them to enhance the price when there. 4 Bl. Comm. 158. Bar- ton v. Morris, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 361. Tills was formerly an indictable offense in England, but is now abolished by St. 7 & 8 Viet c. 24. 4 Steph. Comm. 291, note.

Forestalling differs from "engrossing," in that the lutter consists in buying up large quantities of merchandise already on the market, with a view to effecting a monopoly or acquiring so large a quantity as to be able to dictate prices. Both forestalling and engrossing may enter into the manipulation of what is now called a “cor- ner.”

FOREST ARIUS . In English law. A forester. An officer who takes care of the woods and forests. Do Jorcstario apponen- do, a writ which lay to appoint a forester to prevent further commission of waste when a tenant in dower had committed waste. Bract. 316 ; Du Cange.

In Scotch law. A forester or keeper of woods, to whom, by reason of his office, per- tains the bark and the hewn brandies. And, when he rides through the forest, he may take a tree ns high as his own head. Skene de Verb. Sign.

[Law: Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1–2 — monopolization and restraints of trade]

Forestalling — buying goods on their way to market to resell at a higher price (4 Bl. Comm. 158) — was the old market-manipulation offense; its modern form is monopolization and restraint of trade, and the entry itself notes both 'may enter into the manipulation of what is now called a corner.'

Why: The entry (Barton v. Morris) traces the offense to the 'corner'; the Sherman Act is the statute that polices the modern corner. The entry's own trajectory points to it. FORCHEAFUM declined as this entry's doublet.

The entry is 'Murder committed in consequence of a previous design' — malice aforethought. Pac's line is a disavowal of exactly that mental element: no previous design, only provocation ('don't push me'). It illuminates the term by negation.

4. The loss of goods or chattels, as a pun- ishment for some crime or misdemeanor in the party forfeiting, and as a compensation for the offense and injury committed against him to whom they are forfeited. 2 Bl. Comm. 420.

It should be noted that “forfeiture” is not ad identical or convertible term with “confisca- tion.” The latter is the consequence of tbe former. Forfeiture is the result which the law attaches as an immediate and necessary conse- quence to the illegal acts of the individual ; but confiscation implies the action of the state; and property, although it may be forfeited, cannot be said to be confiscated until tbe government has formally claimed or taken possession of it.

6. The loss of a corporate franchise or charter in consequence of some illegal act, or of malfeasance or non-tfeasance.

To forge (a metaphorical expression, borrow- ed from the occupation of the smith) means, properly speaking, no more than to make or form, but m our law it is always taken in an evil sense. 2 East, P. C. p. 852, c. 19, | 1.

1 To forge is to make in the likeness of some- thing else ; to counterfeit is to make in imita- tion of something else, with a view to defraud by passing the false copy for genuine or original. Both words, “forged” and “counterfeited,” con- vey the idea of similitude. State v. McKenzie, 42 Me. 392.

In common usage, however, forgery is almost always predicated of some private instrument or writing, as a deed, note, will, or a signature; and counterfeiting denotes the fraudulent imi- tation of coined or paper money or some sub- stitute therefor.

FORMEDON.

An ancient writ in Eng- lish law which was available for one who had a right to lands or tenements by virtue of a gift in tail. It was in the nature of a writ of right, and was the highest action that a tenant in tall could have; for he could not have an absolute writ of right, that being confined to such as claimed in fee-simple, and for that reason this writ of formedon was granted to him by the statute 4e donis, (Westm. 2, 13 Edw. I. c. 1,) and was emphatically called “his" writ of right. The writ was distinguished into three species, viz.; Formedon in the descender, in the re- mainder, and in the reverter. It was abol- ished in England by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27. See 3 Bl. Comm. 191; Co. LItt. 316; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 255.

— Formedon Is the descender . A writ of formedon which lay where a gift was made in tail, and the tenant in tail aliened the lands or was disseised of them and died, for the heir in tail to recover them, against the actual tenant of the freehold. 3 Bl. Comm. 192.— Formedon In the remainder. A writ of formedon which lay where a man gave lands to another for life or in tail, with remainder to a third person in tail or in fee, and he who had the particular estate died without issue in- heritable, and a stranger intruded upon him in remainder, and kept him out of possession. In this case he in remainder, or his heir, was en- titled to this writ. 3 Bl. Comm. 192. — Forme- don in the reverter. A writ of formedon which lay where there was a gift in tall, and nfterwards, by the death of the donee or his heirs without issue of his body, the reversion fell in upon the donor, his heirs or assigns. In such case, the reversioner had this writ to re- cover the lands. 3 Bl. Comm. 192.

[Law: Real Property Limitation Act 1833, 3 & 4 Wm. IV c. 27 — abolished formedon]

Formedon — 'his writ of right' for the tenant in tail, granted by De donis (Westm. 2, 13 Edw. I c. 1), in its three species of descender, remainder, and reverter — was abolished with the old real actions in England by 3 & 4 Wm. IV c. 27.

Why: The entry (3 Bl. Comm. 191; Co. Litt. 316) gives the writ's history and cites the abolishing statute; the annotation records the writ's genuine fate per the entry's own citation.

procedure called “per for- mulas," (i. e., by means of formula;) was gradually introduced, and eventually the le- gis actioncs were abolished by the Lex sEbu- tia, B. C. 164, excepting in a very few excep- tional matters. The formulas were four in number, namely: (1) The Demonstrate), wherein the plaintiff stated, i. e., showed, the facts out of which his claim arose; (2) the Intenlio, where he made his claim against the defendant; (3) the Adjudicatio, wherein the judex was directed to assign or adjudi- cate the property or any portion or portions thereof according to the rights of the par- ties; and (4) the Condemnatio, in which the judex was authorized and directed to con- demn or to acquit according as the facts were or were not proved. FORNAGIUM.

The fee taken by a lord of his tenant, who was bound to bake in the lord’s common oven, (in fumo domini) or for a commission to use his own.

FORNICATION.

Unlawful sexual in- tercourse between two unmarried persons. Further, If one of the persons be married and the other not, it is fornication on the part of the latter, though adultery for the former. In some jurisdictions, however, by statute, it is adultery on the part of both persons if the woman is married, whether the man is married or not Banks v. State, 96 Ala. 78, 11 South. 404; Hood v. Fornication — 'unlawful sexual intercourse between two unmarried persons' (Banks v. State; Hood v. State) — is the morals offense whose prosecutions the modern liberty cases have left desuetudinal: the state may not criminalize private consensual adult intimacy.

Why: The entry defines the offense with its cases; Lawrence states the constitutional liberty that now bars such morals-offense prosecutions. The annotation states the current standing honestly — desuetude via the liberty...

FORSWEAR.

In criminal law. To make oath to that which the deponent knows to be untrue.

This term is wider in its scope than “per- jury,” for the latter, as a technical term, in- cludes the idea of the oath being taken before a competent court or officer, and relating to a material issue, which is not implied by the word “forswear.” Fowle v. Bobbins, 12 Mass. 501 ; Tomlinson v. Brlttlebank, 4 Barn. & A. 632; Railway Co. v. McCurdy, 114 Pa. 554, 8 AH. 230, 60 Am. Rep. 363.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1621 — perjury]

To forswear — 'to make oath to that which the deponent knows to be untrue,' wider than technical perjury (Fowle v. Robbins) — is perjury in its generic sense; federal law punishes false statements under oath before a competent tribunal.

Why: The entry draws the forswear/perjury distinction with its cases; the statute is the federal perjury law the distinction serves. The entry's own analysis frames the cite.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:12, KJV]

And ye shall not swear by my name falsely, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the Lord.

Why: Forswear is making oath to what the deponent knows to be untrue — false swearing. The verse forbids it by name: swearing by God's name falsely. The offense under its ancient prohibition. Genuine.

FORT.

This term means "something inore than a mere military camp, post, or station. The term implies a fortiflcntion, or a place protected from attack by some such means as a moat, wall, or parapet.” U. S. r. Tichenor (C. C.) 12 Fed. 424.

[Law] — Law

[Law: garnishment — enforcement against the garnishee; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 69]

The Scots 'forthcoming' — the action 'by which an arrestment (garnishment) is made effectual' (2 Kames, Eq. 288) — is garnishment enforcement: the decree applying the arrested sum to the creditor's claim.

Why: The entry defines the enforcement action; garnishment is its modern procedural family — the creditor reaching the debtor's property in a third hand. Same office.

FORTHCOMING BOND.

A bond given to a sheriff who has levied on property, con- ditioned that the property shall be forthcom- ing, i. c., produced, when required. On the giving of such bond, the goods are allowed to remain in the possession of the debtor. Hill v. Manser, 11 Grat (Va.) 522; Nichols v. Chittenden, 14 Colo. App. 49, 59 Pac. 954.

The sheriff or other officer levying a writ of fieri facia*, or distress warrant, may take from the debtor a bond, with sufficient surety, pay- able to the creditor, reciting the service of such writ or warrant, and the amount due thereon, (including his fee for taking the hond, commis- sions. qnd other lawful charges, if any.) with condition that the property shall be forthcom- ing at the day and place of sale; whereupon such property may be permitted to remain in the possession and at the risk of the debtor. Code Va. 1887, $ 3617.

[Law] — Law

[Law: forthcoming (delivery) bonds — Code Va. 1887, § 3617, the entry's own statute]

The forthcoming bond — given to the levying sheriff, 'conditioned that the property shall be forthcoming' at sale, letting goods remain with the debtor (Hill v. Manser; Code Va. 1887, § 3617) — is the delivery bond of execution law.

Why: The citation is the entry's own; the annotation names the bond's place in execution procedure. The link is internal to the entry's authority.

FORTHWITH.

As soon as, by reason- able exertion, confined to the object, a thing may be done. Thus, when a defendant is ordered to plead forthwith, he must plead within twenty-four hours. When a statute enacts that an act is to be done "forthwith," it means that the act is to be done within a reasonable time. 1 Chit. Archb. Pr. (12th Ed.) 164 ; Diekerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. Why: The case is the entry's citation and the whole entry is its holding; the annotation preserves it. Year omitted as unverified.

FORTIA.

Force. In old English law. Force used by an accessary, to enable the principal to commit a crime, as by binding or holding a person while another killed him, or by aiding or counseling in any way, or commanding the act to be done. Bract fols. 138, 1386. According to Lord Coke, fortia was a word of art, and properly signified the furnishing of a weapon of force to do the fact, and by force whereof the fact was com- mitted, and he that furnished it was not pres- ent when the fact was done. 2 Inst. 182.

The entry is one Latin word: 'Strong.' Kanye's hook — a paraphrase of Nietzsche's maxim — is the vernacular definition of strength as what survives trial: strong and sound because tested.

Why: Added because the lyric is a direct one-line gloss on fortis: strength proven by endurance, 'staunch and strong' as the entry's fuller phrase has it ('strong and sound'). Verified verbatim across multiple lyric sources.

Code La. art. 3556, no. 15. There is a difference between a fortuitous event, or in- evitable accident, and irresistible force. By the former, commonly called the “act of God," is meant any accident produced by physical causes which are irresistible ; such as a loss by lightning or storms, by the perils of the seas, by inundations and earthquakes, or by sudden death or illness. By the latter is meant such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncon- trollable. Of this nature are losses occasioned by the inroads of a hostile army, or by pub- lic enemies. Story, Bailm. § 25.

Lat. Fortune; also treas- ure-trove. Jacob. .

[Law: treasure trove — the finder's title against all but the true owner; cf. Armory v. Delamirie]

The entry's 'treasure-trove' sense (Jacob) states the finder's rule: treasure trove belongs to the finder against all but the true owner — the Armory principle applied to hidden treasure.

Why: The entry names the subject; the annotation states its rule, the same finder-title principle annotated at FINDER. The partition-by-lots maxim ('Fortunam faciunt judicem,' Co. Litt. 167) is recorded as carried.

Fortune-tellers, 'punishable as rogues and vagabonds' (4 Bl. Comm. 62), were policed by the vagrancy laws — until the Court voided vagrancy ordinances for vagueness, ending the rogues-and-vagabonds regime.

The place of a person's birth, considered as a place of jurisdiction.— Forum regium. The king’s court. St. Westm* 2, c. 43. — Forum rei. This term may mean either (1) the forum of the defendant, that is, of his residence or domicile; or (2) the forum of the ret or thing in controversy, that is. of the place where the property is situated. The ambiguity springs from the fact that rei may be the genitive of either reut or ret.— Forum rei gestae. The forum or court of a ret getta, (thing done;) the place where an act is done, considered as a place of jurisdiction and rem- edy. 2 Kent. Comm. 463. — Forum rei sitae. The court where the thing in controversy is situated. The place where the subject-matter in controversy is situated, considered as a place of jurisdiction. 2 Kent, Comm. 463.— Forum seculare. The 'fraction of a day' rule — 'generally, the law does not allow the fraction of a day' (2 Bl. Comm. 141) — governs computation of time: the law counts whole days, disregarding intraday fractions.

As applied to tracts of land, particularly townships, sections, quar- ter sections, and other divisions according to the government survey, and also mining claims, this term means that the exterior boundary lines are laid down to include the whole of such a division or such a claim, but that the tract in question does not measure up to the full extent or include the whole acreage, because a portion of it is cut off by an overlapping survey, a river or lake, or some other external interference. S. 223, 23 L. Ed. 860.

A franchise is a privilege or immunity of a public nature, which cannot be legally exercised without legislative grant. To be a corporation is a franchise. The various powers conferred on corporations are franchises. The execution of a policy of insurance by an insurance company, and the issuing a bank-note by an incor-

? ore ted bank, are franchises. People v. Utica ns. Co., 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 387, 8 Am. Dec. 243. The word “franchise" has various significa- tions, both in a legal and popular sense. A corporation is itself a franchise belonging to the members of the corporation, and the corporation, itself a franchise, may bold other fran- chises. So, also, the different powers of a corporation, such as the right to hold and dis- pose of property, are its franchises. In a popular sense, the political rights of subjects and citizens are franchises, such as the right of suffrage, etc. Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. II. 484.

The term "franchise” has several significa- tions, and there is some confusion in its nae. When used with reference to corporations, _ the better opinion, deduced from the authorities, seems to be that it consists of the entire privi- leges embraced in and constituting the grant. It does not embrace the property acquired by the exercise of the franchise. Bridgeport v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 36 Conn. 255, 4 Am. Rep. 63.

— General ud special. The charter of • corporation is its "general" franchise, while a “special" franchise consists in any rights grant- ed by the public to use property for a public use but with private profit. Lord v. Equitable Idfe Assur. Soc.. 194 N. Y. 212, 87 N. E. 443, 22 value of the franchise, for purposes of taxation, may be measured by the amount of business done, or the amount of earnings or dividends, or by the total value of the capital or stock of the corpo ration in excess of its tangible assets, a fran- chise tax is not a tax on either property, capi- tal, stock, earnings, or dividends. See Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 10 S. Ct. 593, 33 L. Ed. 1025 : Worth v. Petersburg R. Co., 89 N. C. 305; Tremont & Suffolk Mills v. Lowell, 178 Mass. 469, 59 N. E. 1007 ; Chicago & p. R. A. 87. — Personal franchise. A franchise of corporate existence, or one which authorizes the formation and existence of a corporation, is sometimes called a “personal” franchise, as dis- tinguished from a “property” franchise, which authorizes a corporation so formed to apply its property to some particular enterprise or exer- cise some special privilege in its employment, as, for example, to construct and operate a rail- road. See Sandham v. Nye, 9 Misc. Rep. 541, 30 N. Y. Supp. 552.— Secondary franchises. The franchise of corporate existence being some- times called the “primary” franchise of a cor- poration, its “secondary” franchises are the spe- cial and peculiar rights, privileges, or grants which it may receive under its charter or from a municipal corporation, such as the right to use the public streets, exact tolls, collect fares, etc. See State v. [Law] — Law

The killing of a sibling is criminal only where the guilty act joins a guilty mind; homicide law punishes the culpable killing, not the bare act of killing.

Why: The entry defines only the act (killing of a brother or sister); the maxim genuinely illuminates the criminal-law half by supplying the mens rea requirement the definition assumes but does not state.

[Scripture] — Scripture

Fraud, as applied to contracts, is the cause of an error bearing on a material part of the contract, created or continued by artifice, with design to obtain some unjust advantage to the one party, or to cause an Inconven- ience or loss to the other. Civil Code La. art. 1847.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Fraud, In the sense of a court of equity, properly includes all acts, omissions, and concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence Justly reposed, and are injurious to another, or by which ap undue and unconscientious ad- vantage is taken of another. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 187.

Synonyms. The term "fraud" is sometimes used as synonymous with “covin,” “collusion,” or “deceit." But distinctions are properly taken in the meanings of these words, for which reference may be had to the titles Covin; Collu- sion ; Deceit.

Classification. Fraud is either actual or constructive. Actual fraud consists in deceit, artifice, trick, design, some direct and active operation of the mind ; it includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice used to circum- vent or cheat another; it is something said, done, or omitted by a person with the design of perpetrating what he knows to be a cheat or deception. Constructive fraud consists in any act of commission or omission contrary to legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence justly reposed, which is contrary to good conscience and operates to the injury of another. Or, as otherwise defined, it is an act, statement or omission which operates as a virtual fraud on an individual, or which, if generally permitted, would be prejudicial to the public welfare, and yet may have been unconnected with any selfish or evil design. Or, according to Story, con- structive frauds are such acts or contracts as, though not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a positive fraud or injury upon other persons, are yet, by their tendency to deceive or mislead other persons, or to violate private or public Confidence, or to impair or injure the public interests, deemed equally reprehensible with actual fraud. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. $ 258. And see, generally. Code Ga. 1882. 8 3173 ; People v. Kelly. 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 457 ; Jackson v. Jackson, 47 Ga. 99 ; Hatch v. Barrett, 34 Kan. 223, 8 Pnc. 129; Forker v. Brown, 10 Misc. Fraud is also classified as fraud in fact and fraud in law. The former is actual, positive, intentional fraud. Fraud disclosed by matters of fact, as distinguished from constructive fraud or fraud in law. McKibbin v. Martin, 64 Pa. 356. 3 Am. Rep. 588; Cook v. Burnham, 3 Kan. App. 27, 44 Pac. 447. Fraud in law is fraud in contemplation of law ; fraud implied or inferred by law ; fraud made out by con- struction of law, as distinguished from fraud found by a jury from matter of fact ; con- structive fraud (q. ».) See 2 Kent, Comm. 512-532; Delaney v. Valentine, 154 N. Y. 692, 49 N. E. 65; Burr v. Clement, 9 Colo. 1, 9 Pac. 633.

Fraud is also said to be legal or positive. The former is fraud made out by legal construction or inference, or the same tiling as construc- tive fraud. Newell v. Wagness, 1 N. D. 62, 44

N. W. 1014. Positive fraud is the same thing as actual fraud. See Douthitt v. Applegate, 33 Kan. 395, 0 Pae. 575, 52 Am. Rep. 533.

— Actionable fraud. See Actionable.— Frauds, statute of. This is the common designation of a very celebrated English statute, (29 Car. II. c. 3.) passed in 1077, and which has been adopted, in a more or less modified form, in nearly all of the United States. Its chief characteristic is the provision that no suit or action shall be maintained on certain classes of contracts or engagements unless there shall be a note or memorandum thereof in writ* ing signed by the party to be charged or by his authorized agent. Its object was to close the door to the numerous frauds which were be- lieved to he perpetrated, 'and the perjuries which were believed to be committed, when such ob- ligations could be enforced upon no other evi- dence than the mere recollection of witnesses. It is more fully named as the "statute of frauds and perjuries." — Pious fraud. A subterfuge or evasion considered morally justifiable on ac- count of the ends sought to be promoted ; par- ticularly applied to an evasion or disregard of the laws in the interests of religion or religious institutions, such as circumventing the statutes of mortmain. ,

[Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337 (1889)]

Common-law deceit requires a false representation made knowingly, without belief in its truth, or recklessly — the scienter backbone of the entry's 'actual fraud' as distinguished from constructive fraud.

Why: Genuine: this is the classic House of Lords authority on the fraud/scienter element, directly on the entry's actual-fraud doctrine, not a forced analogy.

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in meteyard, in weight, or in measure. Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin, shall ye have: I am the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt.

(paraphrase) The film follows con artist Frank Abagnale Jr., whose career is a catalog of the entry's elements — false representation, intent to deceive, gain at another's expense — through check forgery and impersonation. (paraphrase)

Why: Borderline-accept: the entry is doctrinal, but the film's plot turns entirely on fraud's legal elements, dramatizing the definition rather than merely naming it.

Civ. Code Cal. § 3439.— Fraudulent conveyances, stat- utes of, or against. The name given to two celebrated English statutes. — the statute 13 Eliz. c. 0, made perpetual by 29 Eliz. c. 5 ; and the statute 27 Eliz. e. 4. made perpetual by 29 Eliz. c. 18.— Fraudulent preferences. In English law. Every conveyance or transfer of property or charge thereon made, every judgment made, every obligation incurred, and every judicial proceeding taken or suffered by any person un- able to pay his debts as they become due from his own moneys, in favor of any creditor, with a view of giving such creditor a preference over other creditors, shall be deemed fraudulent and void if the debtor become bankrupt within three months. 32 & 33 Viet. c. 71, § 92.— Fraudu- lent representation. A false statement, made with knowledge of its falsity, with the in- tention to persuade another or influence his ac- tion, and on which that other relies and by which he is deceived to his prejudice. [Law: Statute of Fraudulent Conveyances, 13 Eliz. c. 5 (1571)]

The entry's 'fraudulent conveyance' doctrine — transfer of property with intent to delay or defraud creditors — descends from the Statute of Fraudulent Conveyances, 13 Eliz. c. 5 (1571), which the entry itself names.

Why: Genuine: the entry cites this statute by name; the footnote states the lineage the entry presupposes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 21:13, KJV]

And if a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand; then I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee.

Why: FREDSTOLE = sanctuaries, seats of peace. The Mosaic law's appointed place of refuge for the manslayer is the biblical archetype of legal sanctuary — God's own institution of it, in his own speech.

FREDUM.

A fine paid for obtaining par- don when the peace had been brokeu. Spel- man ; Blount. A sum paid the magistrate for protection against the right of revenge.

FREE. 1. Unconstrained; having power to follow the dictates of his own will. Not subject -to the dominion of another. Not compelled to involuntary servitude. Used in this sense as opposed to “slave."

2. Not bound to service for a fixed term of years; in distinction to being bound as an apprentice.

3. Enjoying full civic rights.

4. Available to all citizens alike without charge; as a free school.

5. Available for public use without charge or toll; as a free bridge.

6. Not despotic ; assuring liberty ; defend- ing individual rights against encroachment by any person or class ; instituted by a free people ; said of governments, institutions, etc. Webster.

7. Certain, and also consistent with an honorable degree in life; as free services, in the feudal law.

8. Confined to the person possessing, in- stead of being shared with others ; as a free fishery.

[Law: UCC § 2-319 — F.O.B. and F.A.S. terms]

The 'free on board' delivery term the entry defines is codified in the Uniform Commercial Code's provision on F.O.B. and F.A.S. terms.

Why: Genuine and direct: UCC § 2-319 is the modern uniform-law home of the exact commercial term the entry defines.

FREEDMAN.

In Roman law. One who was set free from a state of bondage; an emancipated slave. The word la used in the same sense in the United States, respecting negroes who were formerly slaves. Fairfield v. Lawson, 50 Conn. 513, 47 Am. Rep. 009; Davenport v, Caldwell, 10 S. C. 333.

The entry notes the term's U.S. usage 'respecting negroes who were formerly slaves'; the Thirteenth Amendment (1865) abolished slavery, making 'freedman' a living American legal category.

Why: Genuine: the constitutional anchor of the entry's American half; stated as the historical-legal fact, not

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 7:22, KJV]

For he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's freeman: likewise also he that is called, being free, is Christ's servant.

Why: The entry defines 'freedman' as one set free from bondage; the verse uses the very word — the Lord's freeman — for the servant called into liberty.

(paraphrase) Trimalchio, the vulgarly wealthy host of the dinner-party episode, is an ex-slave freedman — literature's archetypal freedman, satirized precisely for the anxieties of his new status. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the entry's Roman-law sense ('one set free from bondage') is exactly Trimalchio's status, and the novel satirizes the freedman class directly.

FREEDOM.

The state of being free ; liberty ; self-determination ; absence of re- straint; the opposite of slavery.

The power of acting, in the character of a moral personality, according to the dictates of the will, without other check, hindrance, or prohibition than such as may be Imposed by just and necessary laws and the duties of social life.

The prevalence, In the government and con- stitution of a country, of such a system of laws and institutions as secure civil liberty to the Individual citizen.

— Freedom of speech and of the press.

See Liberty.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 8:36, KJV]

If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.

Why: Christ's own definition of the state: freedom as liberation conferred by the Son — 'free indeed,' the opposite of bondage the entry describes.

[Exodus 20:2, KJV]

I am the LORD thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

Why: The archetype of freedom as the opposite of slavery: a whole people brought 'out of the house of bondage.' Spoken by God as the ground of the entire law that follows.

FREEHOLD.

An estate in laud or other real property, of uncertain duration ; that is, either of inheritance or which may possibly last for the life of tbe tenant at the least, (as distinguished from a leasehold ;) and held by a free tenure, (ns distinguished from copy- hold or villeinage.) Nevitt v. Woodbum, 175 111. 376, 51 N. E. 593 ; Railroad Co. v. Hemp- hill, 35 Miss. 22; Nellis v. Munson, 108 N.

Y. 453, 15 N. E. 739; Jones v. Jones, 20 Ga. 700.

Such an interest in lands of frank-tenement as may endure not only during the owner’s life, but which is cast after hia death upon the persons who successively represent him. ac- cording to certain rules elsewhere explained.

Such persons are called “heirs,” and he whom they thus represent, the "ancestor.” When the interest extends beyond the ancestor’s life, it is called a “freehold of inheritance," and, when it only endures for the ancestor’s life, it is a freehold not of inheritance.

An estate to be a freehold must possess these two qualities: (1) Immobility, that is. the projierty must be either land or some interest issuing out of or annexed to land; and (2) indeterminate duration, for, if the utmost peri- od of time to which an estate can endure be fixed and determined, it cannot be a freehold. Wharton.

—Determinable freeholds. Estates for life, which may determine upon future contingen- cies before the life for which they are created expires. As if an estate be granted to a wo- man during her widowhood, or to a man until he be promoted to a benefice ; in these and similar cases, whenever the contingency hap- pens,—when the widow marries, or when the gTantee obtains the Jjenefice,— the respective estates are absolutely determined and gone. Yet, while they subsist, they are reckoned es- tates for life; because they may by possibility last for life, if the contingencies upon which they are to determine do not sooner happen. 2 Bl. Comm. 121.— Freehold la law. A free- hold which has descended to a man, upon which he may enter at pleasure, but which he has not entered on. Termes de la Ley.— Free- hold land societies. Societies in England designed for the purpose of enabling mechan- ics, artisans, and other working-men to pur- chase at the least possible price a piece of freehold land of a sufficient yearly value to entitle the owner to the elective franchise for the county in which the land is situated. Whar- ton.—Freeholder. A person who possesses a freehold estate. Shively v. Lankford. 174 Mo. 535, 74 S. W. 835; Wheldon v. Cornett, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 421. 94 N. W. 626; People v Scott, 8 Hnn (N. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 13:22, KJV]

A good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children: and the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.

Why: A freehold is the inheritable estate in land — the interest 'cast' after the owner's life to his heirs. The proverb states the same transmission across generations as the righteous order of property.

FREEMAN.

This word has had various meanings at different stages of history. In the Roman law, it denoted one who was either horn free or emancipated, and was the opposite of “slave." In feudal law. It designated an allodial proprietor, as distin- guished from a vassal or feudal tenant. (And so in Pennsylvania colonial law. Fry’s Elec- tion Case, 71 Pa. 308, 10 Am. Rep. 698.) In old English law, the word described a free- holder or tenant by free services ; one who was not a villein. In modern legal phrase- ology, it Is the appellation of a member of a city or borough having the right of suffrage, or a member of any municipal corporation invested with full civic rights.

A person In the possession and enjoyment of all the civil and political rights accorded to the people under a free government.

— Freeman’s roll. A list of persons admitted as burgesses or freemen for the purposes of the rights reserved by the municipal corpora- tion act, (5 & 6 Wra. IV. c. 76.) Distinguished from the Burgess Roll. 3 Steph. Comm. 197. The term was used, in early colonial history, in some of tlie American colonies.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Galatians 3:28, KJV]

There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.

Why: The entry sets 'freeman' as the opposite of 'slave'; the verse holds 'bond nor free' as the same binary, dissolved in one fellowship.

FREIGHT.

Freight Is properly the price or compensation paid for the transportation of goods by a carrier, at sea, from port to port. But the term is also used to denote the hire paid for the carriage of goods on land from place to place, (usually by a rail- road company, not au express company,) or on Inland streams or lakes. The name Is also applied to the goods or merchandise transported by any of the above means. Brlt- tan v. Bamnby, 21 How. 533, 16 L. Ed. 177; Huth v. Insurance Co., 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 552; Christie v. Davis Coal Co. (D. C.) 95 Fed. 838; Hagar v. Donaldson. 154 l*a. 242, 25 Atl. 824; Paradise v. Sun Mut Ins. Co., 6 La. Ann. 596.

The term “freight” has several different mean- ings. as the price to be paid for the carriage of goods, or for the hire of a vessel under a charter-party or otherwise; and sometimes it designates goods carried, as “a freight of lime,” or the like. But, as a subject of in- surance, it is used in one of tbe two former senses. Lord v. Neptune Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Maas.) 109.

[William Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, c. 1597]

(paraphrase) Friar Laurence, a Franciscan friar, secretly marries Romeo and Juliet and devises the sleeping-draught scheme — a member of one of the entry's four orders driving the plot. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the entry names the four mendicant orders; the character belongs to one of them and his office moves the tragedy.

FRIBUSOULUM.

In the civil law. A temporary separation between husband and wife, caused by a quarrel or estrangement but not amounting to a divorce, because not accompanied with an Intention to dissolve the marriage.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 7:5, KJV]

Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer; and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.

Why: A separation of husband and wife that does not dissolve the marriage — the entry's exact legal shape, here by mutual consent 'for a time,' with reunion commanded. The verse shows scripture recognizing temporary separa...

FRIDHBURGUB.

In old English law. A kind of frank-pledge, by which the lords or principal men were made responsible for their dependents or servants. Bract fol. 124b.

FRIEND OF THE COURT.

See Amicus Curia:.

FRIENDLESS MAN.

In old English law. An outlaw; so called because he was denied all help of friends. Bract lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 12.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[English ballad tradition, "Robin Hood" ballads (traditional)]

(paraphrase) The ballad outlaw of Sherwood — a man outside the law's protection, living by wit against the sheriff — is the popular archetype of the entry's 'outlaw, denied all help of friends.' (paraphrase)

Why: Borderline-accept: the ballads never use the term 'friendless man,' but the entry DEFINES the word as 'outlaw,' and Robin Hood is the defining English outlaw — the link is definitional, not decorative.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

In English law. Associations supported by subscrip- tion, for the relief and maintenance of the members, or their wives, children, relatives, and nominees, in sickness, Infancy, advanced age, widowhood, etc. The statutes regulat- ing these societies were consolidated and amended by St. 38 & 39 Vlct. c. GO. Whar- ton.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Friendly Societies Act 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 60]

The consolidating statute for these mutual-relief associations is the Friendly Societies Act 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 60, which the entry itself cites.

Why: Genuine: drawn verbatim from the entry's own authority citation; the footnote names the statute the entry is about.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Acts 6:1, KJV]

there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration.

Why: Friendly societies exist for the relief of members' widows and kin; Acts records the earliest organized 'daily ministration' to widows — the same mutual-relief office, whose neglect was treated as a communal wrong.

FRIENDLY SUIT.

A suit brought by a creditor in chancery against an executor or administrator, being really a suit by the ex- ecutor or administrator, in the name of a creditor, against himself, in order to compel the creditors to take an equal distribution of the assets. 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1915.

Also any suit instituted by agreement be- tween the parties to obtain the opinion of the court upon some doubtful question In which they are interested.

[Muskrat v. United States, 219 U.S. 346 (1911)]

A suit brought by agreement to obtain the court's opinion on a doubtful question tests the Article III case-or-controversy requirement; federal courts refuse jurisdiction over non-adversarial, advisory suits.

Why: Genuine: Muskrat is the classic authority denying federal jurisdiction to collusive/advisory proceedings, directly illuminating the 'friendly suit' device the entry describes.

FRITH.

Sax. Peace, security, or protec- tion. This word occurs in many compound terms used in Anglo-Saxon law.

— Frithborg. Prank-pledge. Cowell.— Frith- bote. A satisfaction or fine for a breach of the peace. — FrlthbrCach. The breaking of the peace.— Fritbgar. The year of jubilee, or of meeting for peace and friendship.— Fritb- eilda. Guildhall ; a company or fraternity for the maintenance of peace and security ; al- so a fine for breach of the peace. Jacob.— Frlthman. A member of a company or fra- ternity.— Frithsocne. Surety of defense. Ju- risdiction of the peace. The franchise of pre- serving the peace. Also spelled “frithtoken." — Frithsplot. A spot or plot of land, encircl- ing some stone, tree, or well, considered sa- cred, and therefore affording sanctuary to crim- inals.—Frithstool. The stool of peace. A stool or chair placed in a church or cathedral, and which was the symbol and place of sanc- tuary to those who fled to it and reached it

---

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 14:27, KJV]

Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.

Why: Frith is peace, security, protection — the word's core sense. Christ's bequest of peace ('my peace I give unto you') is the divine speech on peace as a conferred, kept thing.

FRIVOLOUS.

An answer or plea is called “frivolous” when it is clearly insuffi- cient on its face, and does not controvert the material points of the opposite pleading, and is presumably interposed for mere pur- poses of delay or to embarrass the plaintiff. Erwin v. Lowery, 64 N. C. 321 ;

Strong v. Sproul, 53 N. T. 499 ; Gray v. GIdiere, 4 Rtrob. (S. C.) 442; Peacock v. Williams (C. C.) 110 Fed. 916.

A frivolous demurrer has been defined to be one which is so clearly untenable. Or its insufficiency so manifest upon a bare In- spection of the pleadings, that its character may be determined without argument or re- search. Cottrill v. Cramer, 40 Wis. 558.

Synonyms. The terms “frivolous” and “sham,” as applied to pleadings, do not mean the same thing. A sham plea is good on its face, but false in fact; it may. to all appear- ances, constitute a perfect defense, but is a pretence because false and because not plead- ed in good faith. A frivolous plea may be per- fectly true in its allegations, but yet is liable to be stricken out because totally insufficient in substance. Andre ae v. Bandler (Sup.) 56

FRONTAGE— FRONTAGER. In English law a frontager Is a person owning or occupying land which abuts on a highway, river, sea-shore, or the like. The term Is generally used with reference to the liability of frontagers on streets to contribute to- wards the expense of paving, draining, or other works on the highway carried out by a local authority, in proportion to the front- age of their respective tenements. Sweet.

The term is also In a similar sense In American law, the expense of local Improve- ments made by municipal corporations (such as paving, curbing, and sewering) being gen- erally assessed on abutting property owners In proportion to the “frontage” of their lots on the street or highway, and an assess- ment so levied being called a “frontage assessment” Neenan v. Smith, 50 Mo. 531 ; Lyon v. Tonawanda (C. C.) 98 Fed. 366.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 — sanctions for frivolous pleadings]

The frivolous pleading the entry defines — insufficient on its face, interposed for delay — draws its modern sanction from the federal rule against frivolous filings.

Why: Genuine: Rule 11 is the living procedural consequence of the pleading type the entry defines; the link is definitional, not decorative.

FRONTIER.

In international law. That portion of the territory of any country which lies close along -the border line of an- other country, and so “fronts” or faces it The term means something more than the boundary line Itself, and Includes a tract or strip of country, of Indefinite extent, con- tiguous to the line. Stoughton v. Mott 16 Vt. 169.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Mark 12:17, KJV]

And Jesus answering said unto them, Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's.

Why: Fuage is a tax laid by the sovereign on each hearth. Christ's ruling is the divine-law ground of rendering imposed dues: the tax is owed because the sovereign's stamp is on it.

FUER.

FUGAM FECIT.

Lnt. He has made flight ; he fled. A clause Inserted In an in- quisition, in old English law, meaning that a person indicted for treason or felony had fled. The effect of this is to make the party forfeit his goods absolutely, and the profits of his lands until he has been par- doned or acquitted.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. Art. III, § 3, cl. 2 — no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted]

The entry's operative rule is forfeiture: flight from a treason or felony indictment forfeited the party's goods and land profits; the Constitution bars that forfeiture beyond the attainted person's life.

Why: Genuine: the constitutional clause directly answers the forfeiture-upon-flight rule the entry states; it is the living repudiation of the old doctrine.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 28:1, KJV]

The wicked flee when no man pursueth: but the righteous are bold as a lion.

Why: Fugam fecit records the indicted felon's flight, and the law makes flight speak guilt — forfeiture follows. The proverb states the moral root the law presumes: the wicked flee though none pursues.

Why: The plea of fully administered is the executor's final account — that he has completely and legally disposed of the estate's assets. The steward called to 'give an account of thy stewardship' is the biblical form of t...

FUMAGE.

In old English law. The same as fuage, or smoke farthings. 1 Bl. Comm. 324. See Fuage.

FUNCTION.

Office; duty; fulfillment of a definite end or set of ends by the correct adjustment of means. The occupation of an office. By the performance of its duties, the officer is said to fill his function. Dig. 32, 65, 1. See State v. Hyde, 121 Ind. 20, 22 N.

E. 644.

FUNCTIONAL DISEASE.

In medical Jurisprudence. One which prevents, ob- structs, or interferes with the due perform- ance of its special functions by any organ of the body, without anatomical defect or ab- normality in the organ itself. See Hlgbee v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co., 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 472. Distinguished from “organic” disease, which Is due to some Injury to, or lesion or malformation in, the organ in question.

FUNCTIONARY.

A public officer or em- ploye. An officer of a private corporation is also sometimes so called.

Bl.Law Dict.(2d Ed.)— 34

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:4, KJV]

For he is the minister of God to thee for good.

Why: A functionary is a public officer. The verse states what a public officer is in scripture's political theology: 'the minister of God' — office as divine commission, for good and against evil.

[Nikolai Gogol, "The Overcoat", 1842]

(paraphrase) Akaky Akakievich, the titular councillor endlessly copying documents in a St. Petersburg department, is literature's definitive portrait of the petty functionary. (paraphrase)

Why: Borderline-accept: the story never uses the word, but it IS the cultural reference point for the low functionary, giving flesh to the entry's bare definition.

FUNCTUS OFFICIO.

Lat. Having ful- filled the function, discharged the office, or accomplished the purpose, and therefore of no further force or authority. Applied to an officer whose term has expired, and who has consequently no further official authority; and also to an instrument, power, agency, etc., which has fulfilled the purpose of its creation, and is therefore of no further vir- tue or effect.

FUND, v. To capitalize with a view to the production of interest. Stephen v. Mil- nor, 24 N. J. Eq. 376. Also, to put into the form of bonds, stocks, or other securities, bearing regular interest, and to provide or appropriate a fund or permanent revenue for the payment thereof. Merrill v. Montlcello (C. C.) 22 Fed. 596.

— Funded debt. To fund a debt is to pledge a specific fund to keep down the interest and reduce the principal. The term ‘fund” was originally applied to a portion of the national revenue set apart or pledged to the payment of a particular debt. Hence, as applied to the pecuniary obligations of states or municipal cor- porations, a funded debt is one for the payment of which (interest and principal) some fund is appropriated, either specifically, or by provision made for Tuture taxation and the quasi pledging in advance of the public revenue. Ketchum v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 356; People v. Carpenter, 31 App. Div. 603. 52 N. Y. Supp. 781. As applied to the financial management of corporations (and sometimes of estates in course of administration or properties under receiver- ship) funding means the borrowing of a suffi- cient sum of money to discharge a variety of floating or unsecured debts, or debts evidenced by notes or secured by bonds but maturing with- in a short time, and creating a new debt in lieu thereof, secured by a general mortgage, a series of bonds, or an issue of stock, generally ma- turing at a more remote period, and often at a lower rate of interest. The new debt thus substituted for the pre-existing debts is called the “funded debt.” See Ketchum v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 356 ; People v. Carpenter, 31 App. Div. 603, 32 N. Y. Supp. 781 ; Lawrey v. Ster- ling, 41 Or. 518. 69 Pac. 460. This term Is very seldom applied to the debts of a private individual ; but when so used it must be under- stood as referring to a debt embodied in se- curities of a permanent character and to the payment of which certain property has been ap- plied or pledged. Wells v. Wells (Super. N. Y.) 24 N. Y. Supp. 874.— Fimdin* system. The practice of borrowing money to defray the ex- penses of government, and creating a “sinking fund,” designed to keep down interest, and to effect the gradual reduction of the principal debt. Mernll v. Monticeilo (C. C.) 22 Fed. 596.

FUND, ». A sum of money set apart for a specific purpose, or available for the pay- ment of debts or claims.

In its narrower and more usual sense, "fund” signifies “capital,” as opposed to "interest” or “income;” aR where we speak of a corporation funding the arrears of interest due on its bonds, or the like, meaning that the interest is capital- ized and made to bear interest in its turn until it is repaid. Sweet.

In the plural, this word has a variety of slightly different meanings, as follows:

1. Money in hand: cash; money available for the payment of a debt, legacy, etc. 3a-lena Ins. Co. r. Kupfer, 28 111. 335, 81 Am. Dec. 284.

2. The proceeds of sales of real and per- sonal estate, or the proceeds of any other as- sets converted Into money. Doane v. Insur- ance Co., 43 N. J. Eq. 533, 11 Atl. 739.

3. Corporate stocks or government securi- ties ; In this sense usually spoken of as the “funds."

4. Assets, securities, bonds, or revenue of a state or government appropriated for the discharge of Its debts.

—No funds. This term denotes a lack of as- sets or money for a specific use. It is the return made by a bank to a check drawn upon it by a person who has no deposit to his credit there; also by an executor, trustee, etc., who has no assets for the specific purpose. — Public funds. An untechnical name for (1) the rev- enue or money of a government, state, or mu- nicipal corporation ; (2) the bonds, stocks, or other securities of a national or state govern- ment.—Sinking fund. The aggregate of sums of money (as those arising from particular taxes or sources of revenue) set apart and invested, usually at fixed intervals, for the extinguish- ment of the debt of a government or corpora- tion, by the accumulation of interest. Elser v. Ft Worth (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 740; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Buffalo County Com’rs, 9 Neb. 449. 4 N. W. 53; Brooke v. Philadel- phia, 162 Pa. 123, 29 Atl. 387, 24 L. R. A. 781. — General fund. This phrase, in New York, is a collective designation of all the assets of the state which furnish the means for the sup- port of government and for defraying the dis- cretionary appropriations of the legislature. People v. Orange County Sup’rs, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 575, 588.

[Law] — Law

[Law: arbitration — an arbitrator is functus officio upon issuing the final award]

The term's classic living application is arbitration: once the arbitrator issues the final award, the office is functus officio and the award cannot be revisited.

Why: Genuine: this is the operative modern use of the doctrine the entry defines. Loose [Law:] form; no case invented.

FUNDAMENTAL ERROR.

See Ebbob.

FUNDAMENTAL LAW.

The law which determines the constitution of government In a state, and prescribes and regulates the manner of Its exercise; the organic law of a state ; the constitution.

[Law] — Law

[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803)]

Fundamental law being the constitution itself, the judiciary's duty to enforce it against repugnant statutes was established in the charter case of judicial review.

Why: Genuine: Marbury is the American authority for fundamental-law (constitutional) supremacy over ordinary legislation, directly on the entry's definition.

FUNDAMUS.

said that “fundatio in- cipiens" is the incorporation or grant of cor- porate powers, while “fundatio perflciens" is the endowment or grant or gift of funds or revenues. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 667, 4 L. Ed. 629.

FUNDATOR.

A founder, (q. v.)

FUNDI PATRIMONY ALES.

Lands of Inheritance.

FUNDITORES.

Pioneers. Jacob.

FUNDUS.

In the civil and old English law. Land; land or ground generally ; land, without considering its specific use;- land, in- cluding buildings generally; a farm.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 24:1, KJV]

The earth is the LORD's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.

Why: Fundus is land as such — the legal thing underlying all tenure. The psalm states the ultimate title: every parcel is held, at the root, of the LORD. Feudal tenure's logic (all land held of a superior) terminates here.

FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Money expend- ed in procuring the interment of a corpse.

[Law] — Law

[Law: priority of funeral expenses in estate administration]

The legal significance of funeral expenses is their priority: they are a preferred claim against the decedent's estate, paid ahead of general creditors.

Why: Genuine: the one live doctrine the bare definition points to; loose form, no invented citation.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 23:16, KJV]

And Abraham hearkened unto Ephron; and Abraham weighed to Ephron the silver, which he had named in the audience of the sons of Heth, four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchant.

Why: Money expended in procuring interment: Abraham weighing out four hundred shekels for the field of Machpelah as a buryingplace is the first funeral expense on record — price stated, purchase witnessed.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Mark Twain, The Adventures of Tom Sawyer, 1876]

(paraphrase) Tom Sawyer, Huck Finn, and Joe Harper — presumed drowned — hide in the church gallery and attend their own funeral service, listening to their own eulogies. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the novel stages a funeral as its most famous set piece; the link is concrete, not thematic.

FUNGIBLE THINGS.

Movable goods which may be estimated and replaced accord- ing to weight, measure, and number. Things belonging to a class, which do not have to be dealt with in specie.

Those things one specimen of which is as good as another, as is the case with half-crowns, or pounds of rice of the same quality. Horses, slaves, and so forth, are non-fungible things, because they differ individually in value, and cannot be exchanged indifferently one for another. Holl. Jur. 88.

Where a thing which is the subject of an ob- ligation (which one man is bound to deliver to another) must be delivered in specie, the thing is not fungible; that very individual thing, and not another thing of the same or another class, in lieu of it, must be delivered. Where the subject of the obligation is a thing of a given class, the thing is said to be fungible ; t. e., the delivery of any object which answers to the generic description will satisfy the terms of the obligation. Aust. Jur. 483, 484.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 1-201 — "fungible" goods]

The civil-law definition — goods estimated and replaced by weight, measure, and number, one specimen as good as another — is carried verbatim into commercial law's definition of fungible goods.

Why: Genuine: definitional identity between the entry's concept and the uniform commercial definition; the link is textual, not decorative.

FUN GIBILE8 RES.

Lat. In the civil law. Fungible things. See that title.

FUR.

Lat. A thief. One who stole se- cretly or without force or weapons, as op- posed to robber.

—Fur manifestos. In the civil law. A man- ifest thief. A thief who is taken in the very act of stealing.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 20:15, KJV]

Thou shalt not steal.

Why: Fur is the thief — one who steals secretly. The commandment forbids the act itself in God's own speech; every law of theft answers to it.

FURANDI ANIMUS.

Lat. An inten- tion of stealing.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 15:19, KJV]

For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies:

Why: Furandi animus is the intention of stealing. Christ locates 'thefts' as proceeding 'out of the heart' — the animus, the formed intention, as the seat of the crime the law punishes.

FURCA.

In old English law. A fork. A gallows or gibbet. Bract, fol. 56.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

— Furca et flagellum. Gallows and whip. Tenure ad furcam et flagellum, tenure by gal- lows and whip. The meanest of servile tenures, where the bondman was at the disposal of his lord for life and limb. Cowell.— Furca et fos- sa. Gallows and pit, or pit and gallows. A term used in ancient charters to signify a juris- diction of punishing thieves, viz., men by hang- ing, women by drowning. Spelman; Cowell.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Esther 7:10, KJV]

So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. Then was the king's wrath pacified.

Why: Furca is the gallows or gibbet — and furca et fossa the jurisdiction of punishing. The verse shows the gallows as the law's appointed instrument: Haman hanged by the king's justice on the gallows he built.

FURIGELDUM.

A fine or mulct paid for theft.

Furiosi nulla voluntas est. A madman has no will. Dig. 50, 17, 40; Broom, Max. 314.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:1, KJV]

If a man shall steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep.

Why: Furigeldum is the fine paid for theft. The verse is the Mosaic tariff for theft — manifold restoration — spoken by God among the judgments: scripture's own schedule of the theft-fine.

FURIOSITY.

In Scotch law. Madness, as distinguished from fatuity or idiocy.

FURIOSUS.

Lat. An insane man ; a madman ; a lunatic.

Furiosus absentis loco est. A madman is the same with an absent person, [that is, his presence is of no effect.] Dig. 50, 17, 24, 1.

Furiosus nullum negotium contrahere potest. A 'madman can contract nothing, [can make no contrnct.] Dig. 50, 17, 5.

Furlosus solo furore punitur. A mad- man la punished by his madness alone ; that Is, he Is not answerable or punishable for his actions. Co. Lltt. 247b; 4 Bl. Comm. 24, 396 ; Broom, Max. 15.

Furlosus itlpnltn non potest nee *11- quid uegotlum ncere, qul non intellicit quid sell. 4 Coke, 126. A madman who knows not what he does cannot make a bar- gain, nor transact any business.

[Law] — Law

[M'Naghten's Case, 10 Cl. & Fin. 200 (1843)]

The entry's maxims hold the madman 'not answerable or punishable for his actions'; the modern insanity test asks whether the accused knew the nature of the act or that it was wrong.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Why: Genuine: M'Naghten's right-and-wrong rule is the direct descendant of the maxim 'furiosus solo furore punitur' the entry quotes; the lineage is the real history of the defense.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[William Shakespeare, Hamlet, c. 1601]

"Though this be madness, yet there is method in't." — Polonius's verdict on Hamlet's (possibly feigned) lunacy, the stage's great case study of the madman.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the legal category of the madman; the play supplies the archetypal instance and the classic judicial observation on discerning method in madness.

As used in the liquor laws, “furnish” means to pro- vide In any way, and includes giving as well as selling. State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 520; State v. Tague, 76 Vt. 118, 56 Atl. 535.

FURNITURE . This term includes that which furnishes, or with which anything is furnished or supplied; whatever must be supplied to a house, a room, or the like, to make it habitable, convenient, or agreeable; goods, vessels, utensils, and other append- ages necessary or convenient for housekeep- ing; whatever is added to the interior of a house or apartment, for use or convenience. Bell ▼. Golding, 27 Ind. 173.

The term “furniture” embraces everything about the house that has been usually enjoyed therewith, including plate, linen, china, and pic- tures. Eodicott v. Endicott, 41 N. J. Eq. 96, 3 Atl. 157.

The word “furniture” made use of in the dis- position of the law, or in the conventions or acts of persons, comprehends only such furni- ture as is intended for use and ornament of apartments, but not libraries which happen to be there, nor plate. — Further advance. A second or subsequent loan of money to a mortgagor by a mortgagee, either upon the same security as the original loan was advanced upon, or an additional se- curity. Equity considers the arrears of inter- est on a mortgage security converted into prin- cipal, by agreement between the parties, as a further advance. Wharton.— Further assur- ance, covennnt for. See Covenant.— Further consideration. In English practice, upon a motion for judgment or application for a new trial, the court may, if it shall be of opinion that it has not sufficient materials before it to enable it to give judgment, direct the motion to stand over for further consideration, and di- rect such issues or questions to be tried or de- termined, and such accounts and inquiries to be taken and made, as it may think fit Rules Sup. Ct. xl, 10.— Further directions. When a master ordinary in chancery made a report in pursuance of a decree or decretal order, the cause was again set down before the judge who made the decree or order, to be proceeded with. Where a master made a separate report, or one not in pursuance of a decree or decretal order, a petition for consequential directions had to be presented, since the cause could not be set down for further directions under such circum- stances. project or conspir- acy. Powers v. Comm., 114 Ky. 237, 70 S. W. 652.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — principals; aiding and abetting]

The 'furthering, helping forward' of a criminal project the entry defines is federal accomplice liability: one who aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures an offense is punishable as a principal.

Why: Genuine: the statute is the living codification of the criminal-law 'furthering' the entry describes; loose form, no invented case.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 50:18, KJV]

When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him, and hast been partaker with adulterers.

Why: Furtherance in criminal law is helping a criminal project forward — complicity. The psalm names its moral form: consenting with the thief, partaking with evildoers.

FURTIVE.

In old English law. Stealth- ily ; by stealth. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38. § 3.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 10:1, KJV]

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.

Why: Furtive is stealth — theft by stealth. Christ's image of the thief who 'climbeth up some other way' instead of entering by the door is the biblical figure of the furtive taker.

FURTUM.

Lat. Theft. The fraudulent appropriation to one’s self of the property of another, with an intention to commit theft without the consent of the owner. Fleta. 1. 1, c. 36; Bract, fol. 150; 3 Inst. 107.

The thing which has been stolen. Bract, fol. 151.

— Furtum conceptual. In Roman law. [Law: Model Penal Code § 223.1 — consolidation of theft offenses]

The entry's fragmented theft taxonomy — furtum manifestum, grave, oblatum, with intent to steal at the core — was answered by the modern consolidation of the common-law theft offenses into a single crime.

Why: Genuine: consolidation is the modern doctrinal answer to the entry's scattered Roman/Scots/common-law theft categories. Loose form.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:11, KJV]

Ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely, neither lie one to another.

Why: Furtum is fraudulent appropriation of another's property — theft with deceit. The command joins both elements in God's own speech: 'ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely.'

FUSTIGATXO.

In old English law. A beating with sticks or clubs ; one of the an- cient kinds of punishment of malefactors. Bract fol. 1046, lib. 3, tr. 1, c. 6.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 25:2-3, KJV]

And it shall be, if the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, that the judge shall cause him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face, according to his fault, by a certain number. Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed:

Why: Fustigatio is beating as judicial punishment. The verse is scripture's own law of that punishment — the judge causes the beating 'according to his fault,' capped at forty stripes: measure in the infliction.

FTJSTI8.

In old English law. A staff, used In making livery of seisin. Bract, fol. 40.

FUTURES.

This term has grown out of those purely speculative transactions, in which there is a nominal contract of sale for future delivery, but where in fact none la ever intended or executed. The nominal seller does not have or expect to have the stock or merchandise he purports to sell, nor does the nominal buyer expect to receive it or to pay the price. Instead of that, a per- centage or margin is paid, which is increas- ed or diminished as the market rates go up or down, and An excise; a tax on movables ; a rent, custom, or service. Co. Lltt. 213.

— Land gabel. See Land.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8, cl. 1 — the Taxing and Spending Clause]

An excise being 'a tax on movables,' the constitutional authority under which American excises are laid is the Taxing and Spending Clause.

Why: Genuine: the clause is the authority for the excise the entry defines; stated as the constitutional fact, not stretched.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:7, KJV]

Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour.

Why: Gabel is an excise — a tax, custom, or due on movables. The verse is scripture's schedule of rendering: 'tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom' — the gabel under its biblical name.

payment of money, and to be forfeited on failure or non-performance. Glanv. lib. 10, c. 6; Britt c. 27.

A mortgage is a dead-gage or pledge; for, whatsoever profit it yields, it redeems not it- self, unless the whole amount secured is paid at the -appointed time. Cowell.

In Frenoh law. The contract of pledge or pawn; also the article pawned.

—Gnge, estates in. Those held in radio, or pledge. They are of two kinds: (1) Vivum vadium, or living pledge, or vifgage ; (2) mor- tuum vadium, or dead pledge, better known as “mortgage.”

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:26, KJV]

If thou at all take thy neighbour's raiment to pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down:

Why: This block's substantive matter is GAGE — pawn or pledge, a thing deposited as security. The verse is the Mosaic law of pledge itself, spoken by God: the pledged garment must be returned by sundown — the pledgee's use...

GAGER BE DELIVERANCE.

Profits; winnings; Increment of value, Gray v. Darlington, 15 Wall. 65, 21

[Law] — Law

[Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189 (1920)]

The 'increment of value' the entry names is not taxable until realized: mere appreciation, without severance from the investment, is not income.

Why: Genuine: the realization doctrine decides exactly what counts as taxable 'increment of value' — the entry's own phrase.

GALE.

The payment of a rent, tax, duty, or annuity.

A gale is the right to open and work a mine within the Hundred of St. Brlavel's, or a stone quarry within the open lands of the Forest of Dean. The right is a license or interest in the nature of real estate, condi- tional on the due payment of rent and ob- servance of the obligations imposed on the' galee. It follows the ordinary rules as to the devolution and conveyance of real estate. The galee pays the crown a rent known ns a "galeage rent," "royalty," or some similar name, proportionate to the quantity of min- erals got from the mine or quarry. Sweet.

[Deuteronomy 25:13-15, KJV]

Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a small. Thou shalt not have in thine house divers measures, a great and a small. But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have: that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

Why: A gallon is a legal measure. The verse is scripture's law of measures: they must be 'perfect and just' — the moral ground on which every regulated measure, gallon included, stands.

GALLOWS.

A scaffold; a beam laid over either one or two posts, from which malefactors are hanged.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — cruel and unusual punishments]

The gallows being the instrument of capital punishment, the constitutional boundary on that punishment is the Eighth Amendment's bar on cruel and unusual punishments.

Why: Genuine: the amendment is the living limit on the punishment the gallows serves. Loose form, no invented case.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 25:22-23, KJV]

And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be to be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree: His body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day; (for he that is hanged is accursed of God;)

Why: The gallows as the law's instrument of capital punishment: the verse lays down scripture's own procedure for hanging — the sentence, the tree, and the same-day burial, 'for he that is hanged is accursed of God.'

GAMACTA.

In old European law. A stroke or blow. Spelman.

GAME. 1. Birds and beasts of a wild nature, obtained by fowling and hunting. Bacon, Abr. See Coolldge v. Choate, 11 Mete. (Mass.) 79. The term is said to include (In England) hares, pheasants, partridges, grouse, heath or moor game, black game, and bus- tards. Brown. See 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 32.

— Game-keeper. One who has the care of keeping and preserving the game on an estate, being appointed thereto by a lord of a manor. —Game-laws. Laws passed for the preserva- tion of game. They- usually forbid the killing of specified game during certain seasons or by certain described means. As to English game- laws, see 2 Steph. Comm. 82; 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 32.

2. A sport or pastime, played with cards, dice, or other appliances or contrivances. See Gaming.

— Game of chance. One in which the result, as to success or failure, depends less upon the skill and experience of the player than upon purely fortuitous or accidental circumstances, incidental to the game or the manner of play- ing it or the device or apparatus with which it is played, but not under the control of the player. A game of skill, on the other hand, al- though the element of chance necessarily cannot be entirely eliminated, is one in which success depends principally upon the superior knowl- edge, attention, experience, and skill of the play- er, whereby the elements of luck or chance in the game are overcome, improved, or turned to his advantage. [Fyodor Dostoevsky, The Gambler, 1867]

(paraphrase) The novella of compulsive roulette — written by Dostoevsky to pay his own gambling debts — is the literature of gambling as the entry defines it: play at a game for money. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the author lived the entry; the novella is the fiction of the gambler.

GAMING.

The act or practice of play- ing games for stakes or wagers; gambling; the playing at any game of hazard. An agreement between two 6r more persons to play together at a game of chance for a stake or wager which Is to become the property of the winner, and to which all contribute. In re Stewart (D. C.) 21 Fed. 398; People v. Todd, 51 Hun, 446, 4 N. Y. Supp. 25; State v. Shaw, 39 Minn. 153, 39 N. W. 305; State v. Morgan, 133 N. C. 743, 45 S. E. 1033.

Gaming is an agreement between two or more to risk money on a contest or chance of any kind, where one must be loser and the other gainer. Bell v. State, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 507.

In general, the words “gaming” and “gam- bling,’* in statutes, are similar in meaning, and either one comprehends the idei that, by a bet, by chance, by some exercise of skill, or by the transpiring of some event unknown until it oc- curs, something of value is, as the conclusion of premises agreed, to be transferred from a loser to a winner, without which latter element there is no gaming or gambling. Bish. St. Crimes, f 858.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

“Gaming” implies, when used as describing a condition, an element of illegality ; and, when people are said to be "gaming," this generally supposes that the “games” have been games in which money comes to the victor or his backers. When the terms “game” or “gaming” are used in statutes, it is almost always in connection with words giving them the latter rensa. and in such case it is only by averring and proving the differentia that the prosecution can be sustain- ed. But when "gaming” is spoken of in a stat- ute as indictable, it is to be regarded as con- vertible with “gambling.” 2 Whart. Crim. Law, i 14655.

“Gaming" is properly the act or engagement of the players. If by-standers or other third persons put up a stake or wager among them- selves, to go to one or the other according to the result of the game, this is more correctly termed "betting.”

—Gaming contracts. See Wager. — Gam- ing-houses. In criminal law. Houses in which gambling is carried on as the business of the occupants, and which are frequented by persons for that purpose. They are nuisances, in the eyes of the law, being detrimental to the public, as they promote cheating and other cor- rupt practices. 1 Russ. Crimes, 299; Rose. Cnm. Ev. 663; People v. Jackson, 3 Denio (N. Y.) 101, 45 Am. Dec. 449; Anderson v. State (Tex. App.) 12 S. W. 869; People v. Welthoff, 51 Mich. 203, 16 N. W. 442, 47 Am. Rep. ooi ; Morgan v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 422, 60 8. [Law: wagering contracts void as against public policy; Irwin v. Williar, 110 U.S. 499 (1884)]

The entry's agreement to risk money on chance is a wagering contract, and wagering contracts are held illegal and void as against public policy.

Why: Genuine: the verified Irwin holding states the rule generally ('in this country, wagering contracts are held to be illegal and void as against public policy'), directly on the entry's definition.

GANANCIAX.

PROPERTY. In Spanish

law. A species of community in property en- joyed by husband and wife, the property be- ing divisible between them equally on a dis- solution of the marriage. 1 Burge, Confl. Law, 418. See Cartwright v. Cartwright, 18 Tex. 634; Cutter v. Waddlngham, 22 Mo. 254.

[Law] — Law

[Law: community-property regime — e.g., Cal. Fam. Code § 760]

The Spanish ganancial system — marital acquisitions equally divisible on dissolution — is the direct ancestor of the American community-property regime.

Why: Genuine: community-property law descends from the Spanish ganancial system the entry defines; the link is genealogical, not decorative.

GANANOIAS.

In Spanish law. Gains or profits resulting from the employment of property held by husband and wife in com- mon. White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 7, c. 5.

G ANTELOPE, (pronounced “gauntlett.”) A military punishment, in which the crim- inal ruhning between the ranks receives a lash from each man. Enc. Lond. This was called “running the gauntlett.”

GAOL.

A prison for temporary confine- ment; a Jail; a place for the confinement of offenders against the law.

There is said to be a distinction between “gaol” and “prison the former being a place for temporary or provisional confinement, or for the punishment of the lighter offenses and mis- demeanors, while the latter is a place for per- manent or long-continued confinement, or for the punishment of graver crimes. In modern usage, this distinction is commonly taken be- tween the words "gaol” and "penitentiary,” (or state’s prison,) but the name "prison” is indis- criminately applied to either.

— Gaol liberties, gaol limits. A district around a gaol, defined by limits, within which prisoners are allowed to go at large on giving security to return. It is considered a part of the gaol. — Gaoler. The master or keeper of a prison; one who has the custody of a place where prisoners are confined.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. Art. I, § 9, cl. 2 — the Suspension Clause; habeas corpus]

The gaol being 'a place for the confinement of offenders,' the legal instrument that tests the lawfulness of that confinement is the writ of habeas corpus.

Why: Genuine: habeas is the remedy against unlawful gaol detention; the clause is its constitutional home. Loose form.

[Alexandre Dumas, The Count of Monte Cristo, 1844]

(paraphrase) Edmond Dantès's fourteen years in the island fortress of the Château d'If — wrongful confinement as the novel's engine — is the great 19th-century prison narrative. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the novel's engine is confinement; the entry defines the place of confinement.

GAOL DELIVERY.

In criminal law. The delivery or clearing of a gaol of the pris- oners confined therein, by trying them.

In popular speech, the clearing of a gaol by the escape of the prisoners.

—General gaol delivery. In English law. At the assizes (q. v.) the judges sit by virtue of five several authorities, one of which is the commission of "general gaol delivery.” This em- powers them to try and deliverance make of every prisoner who shall be in the gaol when

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — the right to a speedy trial]

Gaol delivery — 'clearing of a gaol of the prisoners confined therein, by trying them' — is the institutional ancestor of the guarantee that accused persons be tried promptly, not warehoused.

Why: Genuine lineage: the old commission to try-and-deliver and the modern speedy-trial right share the same principle — detention must end in trial. Loose form.

GABA1CITE.

In French law. This word corresponds to warranty or covenants for title in English law. In the case of a sale this garantie extends to two things: (1)

Peaceful possession of the thing sold; and (2) absence of undisclosed defects, (ddfauts caches.) Brown.

GARNISH, v. To warn or summon.

To issue process of garnishment against a person.

GARNISHEE.

One garnishhd ; a per- son against whom process of garnishment is issued; one who has money or property in his possession belonging to a defendant, or who owes the defendant a debt, which mon- ey, property, or debt is attached in his hands, with notice to him not to deliver or pay it over until the result of the suit be ascertain- ed. Welsh v. Blackwell, 14 N. J. Law, 318; Smith v. Miln, 22 Fed. Cas. 606.

GARNISHMENT.

In the process of at- tachment. A warning to a person in whose hands the effects of another are attached not to pay the money or deliver the property of the defendant in bis hands to him, but to ap- pear and answer the plaintiff’s suit. Stollenwerck, 122 Ala. 539, 25 South. 258; Jeary v. American Exch. Bank, 2 Neb. (I'nof.) 057. 89 N. W. 772.

A “garnishment." as the word is employed in this Code, is process to reach and subject money or effects of a defendant In attach- ment, or in a Judgment or decree, or in a pending suit commenced in the ordinary form, in the possession or under the control of a third person, or debts owing such de- fendant, or liabilities to him on contracts for the delivery of personal property, or on con- tracts for tlie payment of money which may be discharged by the delivery of personal property, or on a contract payable in person- al property; and such third person is called the ‘‘garnishee." Code Ala. 18SG, § 2904.

Garnishment is a proceeding to apply the debt due by a third person to a judgment defendant, to the extinguishment of that judgment, or to appropriate effects belonging to a defendant, in the hands of a third person, to its payment. Strickland v. Maddox, 4 Ga. 393.

Also a warning to any one for his appear- ance, in a cause in which he is not a party, for the Information of the court and explain- ing a cause. Cowell.

— Equitable garnishment. This term is sometimes applied to the statutory proceedings authorized in some states, upon the return of an execution unsatisfied, whereby an action some- thing like a bill of discjvery may be maintain- ed against the judgment debtor and any third person, to compel the disclosure of any money or property or chose in action belonging to the debtor or held in trust for him by such third person, and to procure satisfaction of the judg- ment out of such property. GAVELKIND.

A species of socage ten- ure common In Kent, In England, where the lands descend to all the sons, or heirs of the nearest degree, together ; may be disposed of by will ; do not escheat for felony ; may be aliened by the heir at the age of fifteen ; and dower and curtesy is given of half the land. Stim. Law Gloss.

[Law] — Law

[Law: intestacy statutes — per stirpes/per capita equal distribution among heirs]

Gavelkind's partible descent — lands dividing among all sons rather than passing to the eldest — is the ancestor of modern equal-share intestate distribution.

Why: Genuine lineage: the Kentish custom of partible inheritance and modern equal-share intestacy share the same distributive principle. Loose form.

GAVELLER.

An officer of the English crown having the general management of the mines, pits, and quarries in the Forest of Dean and Hundred of St. Briavel’s, subject, in some respects, to the control of the com- missioners of woods and forests. lie grants gales to free miners in their proper order, accepts surrenders of gales, and keeps the registers required by the acts. There is a deputy-gaveller, who appears to exercise most of the gaveller’s functions. Sweet.

GAZETTE.

The official publication of the English government, also called the “Lon- don Gazette.” It Is evidence of acts of state, and of everything done by the king in his political capacity. Orders of adjudica- tion in bankruptcy are required to be pub- lished therein ; and the production of a copy of the “Gazette,” containing a copy of the order of adjudication, Is evidence of the fact Mozley A TVhltley.

GEBOGOED.

An Anglo-Saxon term, meaning “conveyed.”

GEBOCIAN.

In Saxon law. To convey ; to transfer boo land, (book-land or land held by charter.) The grantor was said to gebo- dan the alienee. See 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 10.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ruth 4:7, KJV]

Now this was the manner in former time in Israel concerning redeeming and concerning changing, for to confirm all things; a man plucked off his shoe, and gave it to his neighbour: and this was a testimony in Israel.

Why: Gebocian is to convey — to transfer book-land. The verse records scripture's own form of conveyance: the witnessed, ceremonial act 'to confirm all things' by which land passed — conveyance as a formal testified act.

GEBURSCRIPT.

In old English law. Neighborhood or adjoining district. Cowell.

GEBURUS.

In old English law. A coun- try neighbor ; an inhabitant of the same geb- urscript, or village. Cowell.

GELD.

In Saxon law. Money or tribute. A mulct, compensation, value, price. Angeld was the single value of a thing; twigeld, double value, etc. So, t ceregeld was the val- ue of a man slain ; orfgeld, that of a beast Brown. ■

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 21:32, KJV]

If the ox shall push a manservant or a maidservant; he shall give unto their master thirty shekels of silver, and the ox shall be stoned.

Why: Geld is the money-value set on a thing or a man — weregeld the value of a slain man. The verse fixes such a value in God's judgments: thirty shekels of silver for the gored servant — the biblical form of the weregeld.

GELDABILIS.

In old English law. Tax- able ; geldable.

GELD ABLE.

Liable to pay geld; liable to be taxed. Kelham.

GELDING.

A horse that has been cas- trated, and which is thus distinguished from the horse in his natural and unaltered condition. A “rtdgllng” (a half-castrated horse) Is not a gelding, but a horse, within the de- nomination of animals in the statutes. Bris- co v. State, 4 Tex. App. 219, 30 Am. Rep. 162.

GEMMA.

Lat. In the civil law. A gem; a precious stone. Gems were distin- guished by their transparency ; such as em- eralds, chrysolites, amethysts. Dig. 34, 2, 19, 17.

GEMOT.

In Saxon law. A meeting or moot ; a convention ; a public assemblage. These were of several sorts, such, as the witena-gemot, or meeting of the wise men; the folc-gemot, or general assembly of the people ; the shire-gemot, or county court ; the burg-gemot, or borough court; the hundred- gemot, or hundred court ; the hali-gemot, or court-baron ; the hat-mote, a convention of citizens in their public hall ; the holy-mote, or holy court; the sicein-gcinotc, or forest court ; the ward-mote, or ward court. Whar- ton ; Cunningham.

GENEARCH.

The head of a family.

But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God.

Why: The genearch is the head of a family. The verse lays down the headship order — the biblical form of family headship, ascending from the household to God.

GENEATH.

In Saxon law. A villein, or agricultural tenant, (villaniis vitlicus;) a hind or farmer, (firmarius rustic it#.) Spelman.

GENER.

Lat. In the civil law. A son- in-law; a daughter's husband. (Filiw vir.) Dig. 38, 10, 4, 6.

GENERAL.

Pertaining to, or designat- ing, the genus or class, as distinguished from that which characterizes the species or indi- vidual. Universal, not particularized ; as op- posed to special. Principal or central ; as opposed to local. Open or available to all, as opposed to select. Obtaining commonly, or recognized universally ; as opposed to par- ticular. Universal or unbounded; as oppos- ed to limited. Comprehending the whole, or directed to the whole ; as distinguished from anything applying to or designed for a por- tion only.

As a noun, the word Is the title of a prin- cipal officer In the army, usually one who commands a whole army, division, corps, or brigade. In the United States army, the rank of "general" Is the highest possible, next to the commander in chief, aud is only occasionally created. The officers next In rank are lieutenant general, major general, and brigadier general.

—General assembly. A name given in some of the United States to the senate and house of representatives, which compose the legis- lative body. See State v. Gear, 5 Ohio Dee. raW.— General council. (1) A council con- sisting of members of the Roman Catholic Church from most parts of the world, but not from every part, as an ecumenical council. (2) One of the names of the English parliament.— General court. The name given to the leg- islature of Massachusetts and of New Hamp- shire, in colonial times, and subsequently by their constitutions; so called because the colonial legislature of Massachusetts grew out of the general court or meeting of the Massa- chusetts Company. Cent. Diet. See Citizens' Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 666, 22 L. Ed. 455. — General credit. The char- acter of a witness as one generally worthy of credit. According to Bouvier, there is a dis- tinction between this and "particular credit," which may be affected by proof of particular facts relating to the particular action. See Bemis v. Kyle, 5 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) (N. Y.) 233. — General field. Several distinct lots or pieces of land inclosed and fenced in as one Common field. Mansfield v. Hawkes. 14 Mass. 440.— General inolosnre act. The statute 41 Geo. III. c. 109, which consolidates a num- ber of regulations as to the inclosure of com- mon fields and waste lands.— General Inter- est. In speaking of matters of public and gen- eral Interest, the terms "public" and "general" are sometimes used as synonyms. But in re- gard to the admissibility of hearsay evidence, a distinction has been

GENS.

Lat. In Roman law. A tribe or clan ; a group of families, connected by com- mon descent and bearing the same name, be- ing all free-born and of free ancestors, and in possession of full civic rights.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 1:2, KJV]

Take ye the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, after their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of their names, every male by their polls;

Why: Gens is the tribe or clan — families joined by common descent and name. Israel's muster 'after their families, by the house of their fathers' is the biblical form of it, commanded by God for the census.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Robert Graves, I, Claudius, 1934]

(paraphrase) The novel narrates the Julio-Claudian gens from the inside — the Roman clan as a political organism across generations. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the novel is literally the history of a gens; the entry's Roman-law sense (tribe/clan of families) matches exactly.

GENTES.

Lat People. Contra omne» gent ex, against all people. Bract. Jfol. 376. Words used In the clause of warranty in old deeds.

GENTLEMAN.

In English law. A per- son of superior birth.

Under the denomination of “gentlemen” are comprised all above yeoman; whereby noblemen are truly called “gentlemen.” Smith de Rep. Ang. lilj, 1, cc. 20, 21.

A “gentleman’* is defined to be one who, without any title, beare a coat of arms, or whose ancestors have been freemen ; and, by the coat that a gentleman giveth, he is known to be, or not to be, descended from those of his name that lived many hundred years since. Jacob. See C res son v. C reason, 6 Fed. Gas. 809.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Charles Dickens, Great Expectations, 1861]

(paraphrase) Pip's 'great expectations' are the project of being made a gentleman — birth, manners, and money — the English imagination's fullest working-through of the entry's 'person of superior birth.' (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the novel turns on exactly the legal-social category the entry defines.

GENTLEMAN USHER.

One who holds a post at court to usher others to the pres- ence, etc.

GENTLEWOMAN.

A woman of birth above the common, or equal to that of a gen- tleman; an addition of a woman’s state or degree.

GENUINE.

As applied to notes, bonds, and other .written instruments, this term means that they are truly what they pur- port to be, and that they are not false, forged, fictitious, simulated, spurious, or counterfeit Baldwin v. Van Deusen, 37 N. Y. 492 ; Smelt- aer v. White, 92 U. S. 392, 23 L. Ed. 508 ; Dow v. Spenny, 29 Mo. 390; Cox v. North- western Stage Co., 1 Idaho, 379.

[Law] — Law

[Law: forgery and counterfeiting statutes]

Instruments that are not 'truly what they purport to be' — false, forged, or counterfeit — are the subject of the criminal law of forgery and counterfeiting.

Why: Genuine: the statutes punish exactly the falsity the entry's definition excludes. Loose form; no statute number invented.

GENUS.

In the civil law. A general class or division, comprising several species, in toto jure generi per speciem derogatur, et illud potissimum habetur quod ad spcciem directum est, throughout the law, the species takes from the genus, and that Is most par- ticularly

GERONTOCOMI.

In the civil law. Offi- cers appointed to manage hospitals for the aged poor.

GERONTOCOMIUM.

In the civil law. An institution or hospital for taking care of the old. Cod. 1, 3, 46, 1 ; Calvin.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:32, KJV]

Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man, and fear thy God: I am the LORD.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Why: A gerontocomium is an institution for taking care of the old. The verse is God's own command of that care's moral root: rise before the hoary head, honour the old — 'I am the LORD.'

GERRYMANDER.

A name given to the process of dividing a state or other territory into the authorized civil or political divi- sions, but with such a geographical arrange- ment as to accomplish a sinister or unlawful purpose, as, for instance, to secure a majority for a given political party in districts where the result would be otherwise if they were divided according to obvious natural lines, or to arrange school districts so that children of certain religions or nationalities shall be brought within one district and those of a different religion or nationality in another district. State v. Whitford, 54 Wis. 150, 11

N. W. 424.

[Law] — Law

[Shaw v. Reno, 509 U.S. 630 (1993)]

The 'sinister or unlawful purpose' districting the entry defines — including packing districts by race, religion, or nationality — is unconstitutional when drawn predominantly on racial lines, violating equal protection.

Why: Genuine: Shaw is the modern authority striking down racial gerrymandering, directly on the entry's 'unlawful purpose' examples.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Isaiah 10:1, KJV]

Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed;

Why: Gerrymander is the drawing of political lines to accomplish a sinister purpose — a decree of grievousness by cartography. Isaiah's woe falls on exactly that genus: 'them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write...

Management or transaction. Negotiorum gestio, the doing of another's business; an interference in the affairs of another in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority. Dig. 3, 5, 45; Id. 46, 3, 12, 4 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 616, note.

— Gestio pro luerede. Behavior as heir. This expression was used in the Roman law, and adopted in the civil law and Scotch law, to denote conduct on the part of a person appointed heir to a deceased person, or otherwise entitled to succeed as heir, which indicates an intention to enter upon the inheritance, and to hold himself out as heir to creditors of the deceased; as by receiving the rents due to the deceased, or by taking possession of his title- deeds, etc. Such acts will render the heir lia- ble to the debts of his ancestor. Mozley & Whitley.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 10:34-35, KJV]

And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him. And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee.

Why: Negotiorum gestio is doing another's business unasked, from benevolence, without authority. The Samaritan — binding, carrying, paying the host, answering for more — is the biblical form of managing another's affair wi...

N. E. 321.

A gift is a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily and without consideration. Civil Code Cal. g 1146.

In popular language, a voluntary convey- ance or assignment is called a “deed of gift.”

“Gift” and “advancement” are sometimes used interchangeably as expressive of the same operation. But, while an advancement is always a gift, a gift Is very frequently not an advancement. In re Dewees' Estate, 3 Brewst (Pa.) 314.

In English law. A conveyance of lands in tall; a conveyance of an estate tail in which the operative words are “1 give,” or “I have given." 2 Bl. Comm. 316; 1 Steph. Comm. 473.

— Absolute gift, as distinguished from one made in contemplation of death, is one by which the donee becomes in the lifetime of the donor the absolute owner of the thing given, whereas a donatio mortis causa leaves the whole title in the donor, unless the event occurs (the death of the donor) which is to divest him. Buecker v. Carr. 60 N. J. Eq. 300, 47 Atl. 34. As die- ttiiguished from a gift in trust, it is one where not only the legal title but the [Law: elements of a valid inter vivos gift — donative intent, delivery, acceptance]

The voluntary gratuitous transfer the entry defines is legally effective only where three elements concur: donative intent, delivery, and acceptance.

Why: Genuine: the elements test every 'voluntary conveyance... made gratuitously' the entry names. Loose form; no invented case.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 9:7, KJV]

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.

Why: A gift in law is a transfer 'voluntarily and without consideration.' The verse states the same act in morals: giving purposed in the heart, 'not grudgingly, or of necessity' — the gratuitous transfer's inner form.

GIFTOMAN.

In Swedish law. The right to dispose of a woman in marriage; or the person possessing such right, — her father, if living, or, if he be dead, the mother.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 7:38, KJV]

So then he that giveth her in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better.

Why: The giftoman holds the right to dispose of a woman in marriage. The verse names his office in the act itself: 'he that giveth her in marriage' — the giver whose right it is to give.

GILOUR.

L. Fr. A cheat or deceiver. Applied In Britton to those who sold false or spurious things for good, as pewter for sil- ver or laten for gold. Britt, c. 15.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 11:1, KJV]

A false balance is abomination to the LORD: but a just weight is his delight.

Why: A gilour sells the false for the good — pewter for silver: commercial deceit in the wares themselves. The false balance is scripture's type of that deceit, and it is 'abomination to the LORD.'

GIRANTE.

An Italian word, which sig- nifies the drawer of a bill. It is derived from “girare," to draw.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC Art. 3 — negotiable instruments; the drawer's liability]

The drawer of a bill engages that the instrument will be accepted and paid; the drawer's liability is governed by the law of negotiable instruments.

Why: Genuine: Article 3 is the uniform-law home of the bill-drawer the entry defines. Loose form.

GIRTH.

In Saxon and old English law. A measure of length, equal to one yard, de- rived from the girth or circumference of a man’s body.

GIRTH AND SANCTUARY . In old

Scotch law. An asylum given to murderers, where the murder was committed without any previous design, and in chaude mella, or beat of passion. Bell.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 35:11, KJV]

Then ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person at unawares.

Why: Girth and sanctuary is asylum for the murder 'without any previous design' — the undesigned killing. The cities of refuge are appointed by God precisely for him 'which killeth any person at unawares': the biblical for...

GISEMENT.

L. Fr. Agistment; cattle taken in to graze at a certain price; also the money received for grazing cattle.

GISER.

L. Fr. To lie. Gist en le touche, it lies in the mouth. Le action bien gist, the action well lies. Gisant, lying.

GISETAKER.

An agister ; a person who takes cattle to graze.

GISLE.

In Saxon law. A pledge. Fred- gisle, a pledge of peace. Qislebert, an illus- trious pledge.

GIST.

In pleading. The essential ground or object of the action in point of law, with- out which there would be no cause of action. Gould, Pl. c. 4, $ 12; Hathaway v. Bice, 19 Vt. 102.

The gist of an action is the cause for which an action will lie; the ground or foun- dation of a suit, without which it would not be maintainable; the essenlal ground or ob- ject of a suit, and without which there is not a cause of action. First Nat. Bank v. Bur- kett, 101 111. 391, 40 Am. Rep. 209; Hoffman v. Knight, 127 Ala. 149, 28 South. 593 ; Tar- bell v. Tarbell, 60 Vt. 486, 15 Atl. 104.

GIVE. 1. To transfer or yield to, or be- stow upon, another. One of the operative words in deeds of conveyance of real prop- erty, Importing at common law, a warranty or covenant for quiet enjoyment during the lifetime of the grantor. Mack v. Patchin, 29 How. Prae. (N. Y.) 23; Young v. Hargrave, 7 Ohio, 69, pt 2 ; Dow v. Lewis, 4 Gray (Mass.) 473.

8. To bestow upon another gratuitously or without consideration.

In their ordinary and familiar signification, the words “sell” and “give” have not the same meaning, but are commonly used -to express different modes of transferring the right to property from one person to another. “To sell’’ means to transfer for a valuable consider- ation, while “to give” signifies to transfer gra- tuitously, without any equivalent. Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 184. 74 Am. Dec. 522.

—Give and bequeath. These words, in a will, import a benefit in point of right, to take effect upon the decease of the testator and proof or the will, unless it is made in terms to depend upon Borne' contingency or condition precedent. Eldridge v. Eldridge, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 519.— Give bail. To furnish or put in bail or security for one’s appearance. — Give color. To admit an apparent or colorable right in the opposite party. See Colob.— Give Judgment. To render, pronounce, or declare the judgment of the court in an action at law ; not spoken of a judgment obtained by confession. Schuster v. Rader, 13 Colo. 329, 22 Pac. 505.— Give notice. To communi- cate to another, in any proper or nermissible legal manner, information or warning of an existing fact or state of facts or (more usually) of some intended future action. See O’Neil v. Dickson, 11 Ind. 254; In re Devlin, 7 Fed. Cas. 564; City Nat. Bank v. Williams, 122 Mass. 53a.— Give time. The act of a creditor in extending the time for the payment or satis- faction of a claim beyond the time stipulated in the original contract. If done without the consent of the surety, indorser, or guarantor, it discharges him. Howell v. Jones, 1 Cromp. M. Sc R. 107 ; Shipman v. Kelley. 9 App. Div. 316, 41 N. Y. Supp. 339.— Give way. In the rules of navigation, one vessel is said to “give way’’ to another when she deviates from her course in such a manner and to such an extent as to allow the other to pass without altering her course. See Lockwood v. Lashell, 19 Pa. 350.

GIVER.

A donor; he who makes a gift.

GIVING IN PAYMENT.

In Louisiana law. A phrase (translating the Fr. “dation en payement ”) which signifies the delivery and acceptance of real or personal property in satisfaction of a debt, Instead of a pay- ment in money. See Civil Code La. art 2655.

[Law] — Law

[Law: accord and satisfaction]

The Louisiana dation en paiement — delivery and acceptance of property 'in satisfaction of a debt, instead of a payment in money' — is the civil-law form of the common-law accord and satisfaction.

Why: Genuine: definitional identity between the entry's translated phrase and the common-law doctrine; the link is textual, not decorative.

GIVING RINGS.

A ceremony anciently performed in England by Serjeants at law at the time of their appointment. The rings were inscribed with a motto, generally in Latin.

GLADIOLUS.

GLADIUS.

Lat. A sword. An ancient emblem of defense. Hence the ancient earls or comites (the king’s attendants, advisers, and associates in his government) were made by being girt with swords, (gladio succincti.)

The emblem of the executory power of the law in punishing crimes. 4 Bl. Comm. 177.

In old Latin authors, and in the Norman laws, this word was used to signify supreme Jurisdiction, (jus gladii.)

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:4, KJV]

for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

Why: Gladius is the sword as emblem of the law's executory power in punishing crimes. The verse states the emblem's meaning outright: the ruler 'beareth not the sword in vain' — a revenger to execute wrath on the evildoer.

GLAIVE.

A sword, lance, or horseman’s staff. One of the weapons allowed in a trial by combat.

GLAN8.

In the civil law. Acorns or nuts of the oak or other trees. In a larger sense, all fruits of trees.

GLASS-MEN.

A term used In St. 1 Jac.

I. c. 7, for wandering rogues or vagrants.

GLATBA.

A hand dart Cowell.

GLEAMING.

The gathering of grain aft- er reapers, or of grain left ungathered by reapers. Held not to be a right at common law. 1 H. Bl. 51.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:9-10, KJV]

And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest. And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger: I am the LORD your God.

Why: Gleaming is gleaning — the gathering left after the reapers. The verse is God's own institution of it: the corners and gleanings 'shalt thou leave for the poor and stranger.' Notably, the entry records the common law…

GLEBA.

A turf, sod, or clod of earth. The soil or ground; cultivated land In gen- eral. Church land, (solum et dos ecclesies.) Spelman. See Glebe.

GLEB IE ASCRXPTTm. Villein-socmen, who could not be removed from the land while they did the service due. Bract, c. 7; 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 269.

GLEBABL2E.

Turfs dug out of the ground. Cowell.

GLEBE.

In eoolesiaitioal law. The land possessed as part of the endowment or revenue of a church or ecclesiastical benefice.

In Roman law. A Clod ; turf ; soil. Hence, the soil of an inheritance; an agra- rian estate. Servi addicti glebes were serfs attached to and passing with the estate. Cod. 11, 47, 7, 21 ; Nov. 54, 1.

GLISCTWA.

In Saxon law. A frater- nity.

GLOMERELLS.

Commissioners appoint- ed to determine differences between scholars in a 'school or university and the townsmen of the place. Jacob.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 6:5, KJV]

Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you? no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?

Why: Glomerells are commissioners appointed to determine differences between parties — private judges. The verse calls for exactly that office: 'one that shall be able to judge between his brethren' rather than going to law.

GLOS.

Lat. In the civil law. A hus- band’s sister. Dig. 38, 10, 4, 6.

GLOSS.

An interpretation, consisting of one or more words, interlinear or marginal ; an annotation, explanation, or comment on any passage in the text of a work, for pur- poses of elucidation or amplification. Par- ticularly applied to the comments on the Cor- l>U8 Juris.

GLOSSA.

Lat A gloss, explanation, or Interpretation. The glosses of the Roman law are brief illustrative comments or anno- tations on the text of Justinian's collections, made by the professors who taught or lec- tured on them about the twelfth century, (especially at the law school of Bologna,) and were hence called “glossators." These gloss- es were at first inserted In the text with the words to which they referred, and were call- ed “ glosses interlincarcs but afterwards they were placed In the margin, partly at the side, and partly under the text, and called “glosses marginales." A selection of them was made by Accurslus, between A. D. 1220 and 1200. under the title of “Olossa Ordin- orttf,” which Is of the greatest authority. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 90.

Cloim Tiperina eat quae oorrodlt viaoe- ra teztns. 11 Coke, 34. It is a poisonous gloss which corrupts the essence of the text.

GLOSSATOR.

In the civil law. A com- mentator or annotator. A term applied to the professors and teachers of the Roman law in the twelfth century, at the head of whom was Irnerius. Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 90.

GLOUCESTER, STATUTE OF.

The

statute is the 6 Edw. I. c. 1, A. D. 1278. It takes its name from the place of its enact- ment, and was the first statute giving costs in actions.

GLOVE SILVER.

Extraordinary re- wards formerly given to officers of courts, etc. ; money formerly given by the sheriff of a county in which no offenders are left for execution to the clerk of assize and judges' officers. Jacob.

GLOVES.

It was an ancient custom on a maiden assize, when there was no offender to be tried, for the sheriff to present the judge with a pair of white gloves. It is an immemorial custom to remove the glove from the right hand on taking oath. Wharton.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Hebrews 6:16, KJV]

For men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife.

Why: The glove removed from the right hand on taking oath marks the oath's solemnity. The verse states the oath's office in law: 'an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife.'

GLTN.

A hollow between two mountains ; a valley or glen. Co. Litt. 56.

GO.

To be dismissed from a court. To issue from a court. "The court said a man- damus must go." 1 W. Bl. 50. "Let a super- sedeas go." 5 Mod. 421. "The writ may go." 18 C. B. 35.

— Go ball. To assume the responsibility of a surety on a bail-bond. — Go hence. To de- part from the court ; with the further impli- cation that a suitor who is directed to "gp hence" is dismissed from further attendance up- on. the court in respect to the suit or proceed- ing which brought him there, and that he is finally denied the relief which he sought, or. as the case may be, absolved from the liability sought to be imposed upon him. See Hiatt v. Kinkaid, 40 Neb. 178. 58 N. W. 700.— Go to. In a statute, will, or other instrument, a direc- tion that property shall "go to" a designated person means that it shall pass or proceed to such person, vest in and belong to him. In re Ilitcbins' Estate, 43 Misc. Rep. 485. 89 N. Y. Supp. 472; Plass v. Plass. 121 Cal. 131, 53 Fac. 448. — Go to protest. Commercial paper is said to "go to protest" when it is dishonor- ed by non-payment or non-acceptance and is handed to a notary for protest.— Go without day. Words used to denote that a party is dismissed the court. He is said to go without day, because there is no day appointed for him to appear again. •

GOAT, GOTE.

In old English law. A contrivance or structure for draining waters out of the lnnd into the sea. Callis describes goats as "usual engines erected and built with portcullises and doors of timber and stone or brick, invented first in Lower Ger- many." Callis, Sewers, (91,) 112, 113. Cow- ell defines "gote," a ditch, sewer, or guttbr.

GOD AND MY COUNTRY.

Tbe an- swer made by a prisoner, when arraigned, in answer to tbe question, "How will you be tried?" In the ancient practice be had the choice (as appears by the question) whether to submit to the trial by ordeal (by God) or to be tried by a jury, (by the country ;) and It Is probable that the original form of the answer was, "By God or my country," where- by the prisoner averred his Innocence by de- clining neither of the modes of trial.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — trial by jury]

The prisoner's answer electing trial 'by the country' — by a jury — is the common-law form of the demand for jury trial.

Why: Genuine: the amendment is the living form of the jury-trial election the entry's own body describes; the link is textual.

GOD-BOTE.

An ecclesiastical or church One paid for crimes and offenses committed against God: Cowell.

GOD-GILD.

That which is offered to God or his service. Jacob.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 16:17, KJV]

Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the LORD thy God which he hath given thee.

Why: God-gild is that which is offered to God or his service. The verse gives the offering's rule: every man gives 'as he is able, according to the blessing' received — the measure of what is offered to God.

GOD'S PENNY.

In old English law. Earnest-money; money given as evidence of the completion of a bargain. This name is probably derived from the fact that such money was given to the church or distributed in alms.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 2-201(3)(c) — part-payment exception to the statute of frauds]

Earnest money 'given as evidence of the completion of a bargain' performs a legal function: part payment takes a contract for goods out of the statute of frauds.

Why: Genuine: the earnest's operative legal function is exactly the exception the section codifies; loose form.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 1:22, KJV]

Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.

Why: God's penny is earnest-money — part payment evidencing the completed bargain. Scripture uses the same earnest (arrabon): God has 'given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts' — his own down payment securing the prom…

GOGING-STOLE.

An old form of the word “cucking-stool," (g . v.) Cowell.

GOING.

In various compound phrases (as those which follow) this term implies either motion, progress, active operation, or present and continuous validity and efficacy.

— Goinp before the wind. In the language of manners and in the rules of navigation, a vessel is said to be going “before the wind” when the wind is free as respects her course, that is, comes from behind the vessel or over the stern, so that her yards may be braced square across. She is said to “going off large” when she has the wind free on either tack, that is, when it blows from some point abaft the beam or from the quarter. Hall v. The Buffalo. 11 Fed. Cas. 216; Ward v. The Fashion, 29 Fed. Cas. 188.'— Going- concern. A firm or corporation which, though embarrassed or even insolvent, continues to transact its ordinary business. White, etc.. M fe. Co. v. Pettes Im- porting Co. (C. C.) 30 Fed. 885; Corey v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 08, 11 South. 350, 23 L.

R. A. 618, 42 Am. St. Bep. 55.— Going off large. See "Goino before the Wind,” tv- pro. — Going price. The prevalent price : the current market value of the article in question at the time and place of sale. Kelsea v. Haines, 41 N. H. 254.— Going tbrongh the bar. The act of the chief of an. English common- law court in demanding of every ■ member of the bar, in order of seniority, if he has any- thing to move. This was done at the sitting of the court each dhy in term, except special paper days, crown paper days in the queen’s bench, and revenue paper days in the excheq- uer. Chi the last day of term this order is reversed, the first and second time round. In the exchequer the postman and tubman are first called on. Wharton. — Going to tbe country. When a party, under the common- law system of pleading, finished his pleading by the words “and of this he puts himself up- on the country," this was called “going to the country.” It was the essential termination to a pleading which took issue upon a material fact in the preceding pleading. Wharton. — Going value. As applied to the property or plant of a manufacturing or industrial cor- poration, a public-service corporation, etc., this means the value which arises fronr having an established business which is in active opera-

(paraphrase) The film builds its premise on the law's fictitious-person device: an invented ordinary man, 'John Doe' — the very name of the law's fictitious plaintiff — who becomes real to the public. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the film takes the entry's device (the fictitious plaintiff in ejectment, kin to John Doe and Richard Roe) as its central conceit, illuminating WHY the law invents persons.

GOODS.

In contracts. The term “goods” is not so wide as “chattels,” for it applies to Inanimate objects, and does not in- clude animals or chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, which “chattels” does include. Co. Lift. 118; St. Joseph Hydraulic Co. v. Wilson, 133 Ind. 465, 33 N. E. 113;

Van Patten v. Leonard, 55 Iowa, 520, 8 N. W. 334; Putnam v. Westeott, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 76.*

In wills. In wills “goods” is nomen gcn- eralissimum, and, if there is nothing to limit it, will comprehend all the personal estate of the testator, as stocks, bonds, notes, money, plate, furniture, etc. Kendall v. Kendall, 4 Russ. 370; Chamberlain v. Western Transp. Co., 44 N. Y. 310, 4 Am. Rep. 681 ; Foxall v. McKenney, 9 Fed. Cas. 645 ; Bailey v. Dun- can, 2 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 22 ; Keyser v. School Dist., 35 N. H. 483.

—Good* and chattels. This phrase is a gen- eral denomination of personal property, as dis- tinguished from real property; the term "chat- tels” having the effect of extending its scope to any objects of that nature which would not properly be included by the term “goods” alone, e. g.. living animals, emblements, and fruits, and terms under leases for years. The general phrase also embraces choses in action, as well as personalty in possession. In wills. The term “goods and chattels” will, unless restrain- ed by the context, pass all the personal

[Law: UCC § 2-105 — "goods" defined]

The entry defines 'goods' in contracts; the Uniform Commercial Code defines the term for the sale of goods.

Why: Genuine and direct: the uniform-law definition of the entry's headword.

GOOLE.

In old English law. A breach in a bank or sea wall, or a passage worn by the flux and reflux of the sea. St. 16 & 17 Car. II. c. 11.

GORGE, or GORS. A wear, pool, or pit of water. Tenues de la Ley.

GORE.

In old English law. a small, nar- row slip of ground. Cowell. In modem laud law, a small triangular piece of land, such as may be left between surveys which do not close. In some of the New England states (as, Maine and Vermont) the term is applied to a subdivision of a county, having a scanty population and for that reason not organized as a town.

GOSSIFRED.

In canon law. Compa- teruity; spiritual affinity.

GOUT.

In medical jurisprudence. An inflammation of the fibrous and ligamentous parts of the joints, characterized or caused by an excess of uric acid in the blood ; usual- ly, but not invariably, occurring in the joints of the feet, and then specifically called “poda- gra."

nation or state Is governed, or by which Individual members of a body politic are to regulate their social actions; a con- stitution, either written or unwritten, by which the rights and duties of citizens and public officers are prescribed and defined, as a monarchical government, a republican gov- ernment, etc. Webster.

3. An empire, kingdom, state or Inde- pendent political community ; as in the phrase, “Compacts between Independent gov- ernments.”

4. The sovereign or supreme power In a state or nation.

5. The machinery by which the sovereign power in a state expresses its will and exer- cises its functions ; or the framework of po- litical institutions, departments, nnd offices, by means of which the executive, judicial, legislative, and administrative business of the state is carried on.

6. The whole class or body of office-holders or functionaries considered in the aggregate, upon whom devolves the executive, Judicial, legislative, and administrative business of the state.

7. In a colloquial sense, the United States or its representatives, considered as the pros- ecutor in a criminal action ; as In the phrase, “the government objects to the witness."

—Federal government. The government of the United States of America, as distinguished from the governments of the several states. — Government annuities societies. These societies are formed in England under 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 14, to enable the industrious classes to make provisions for themselves by purchas- ing, on advantageous terms, a government an- nuity for life or term of years. By 16 & 17 Viet. c. 4o, this act, as well as 7 ■ & 8 Viet, c. 83. amending it, were repealed, and the whole law in relation to the purchase of government annuities, through the medium of savings banks, was consolidated. And by 27 & 28 Viet. c. 43, additional facilities were afforded for the pur- chase of such annuities, and for assuring pay- ments of money on death. Wharton.— Govern- ment da facto. A government of fact. A government actually exercising power and con- trol in the state, as opposed to the true and lawful government; a government not estab- lished according to the constitution of the state, or not lawfully entitled to recognition or su- premacy, but which has nevertheless supplant- ed or displaced the government de jure. A gov- ernment deemed unlawful, or deemed wrongful or unjust, which, nevertheless, receives present- ly habitual obedience from the bulk of the com- munity. Aust. Jur. 324. There are several de- grees of what is called "de facto government.” ouch a government, in its highest degree, as- sumes a character very closely resembling that of a lawful government This is when the usurping government expels the regular author- ities from their customary seats and functions, and establishes itself in their place, and so becomes the actual government of a country. The distinguishing characteristic of such a gov- ernment iB that adherents to it in war against the government de jure do not incur the pen- alties of treason ; and, under certain limita- tions, obligations assumed by it in behalf of the country or otherwise will, in general, be respect- ed by the government de jure when restored.

But there is another description of govern- ment, called also by publicists a “government de facto" but which might, perhaps, be more aptly denominated a “government or paramount force.” Its distinguishing characteristics are (1) that its existence is maintained by active mili- tary power, within the territories, and against the rightful authority, of an established and lawful government ; and (2) that, while it ex- ists, it must necessarily be obeyed in civil mat- ters by private citizens who, by acts of obedi- ence, rendered in submission to such force, do not become responsible, as wrong-doers, for those acts, though ndt warranted by the laws of the rightful government. Actual governments of this sort are established over districts differ- ing greatly in extent and conditions. They are usually administered directly by military author- ity, but they may be administered, also, by civil authority, supported more or less by military force. Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall. 8. 9. 19

L. Ed. 361. The term "de facto." as descrip- tive of a government, has no well-fixed nnd def- inite sense. It is, perhaps, most correctly used as signifying a government completely, though only temporarily, established in the place of the lawful or regular government, occupying its capitol, and exercising its power, and which is ultimately overthrown, and the authority of the government de jure re-established. Thomas v. Taylor, 42 Miss. 651, 703, 2 Am. Rep. 625. A government de facto is a government that un- lawfully gets the possession and control of the rightful legal government, and maintains itself there, by force and arms, against the will of such legal government, and claims to exercise the powers thereof. Chisholm v. Colemnn, 43 Ala. 204. 94 Am. Dec. 677. And see further Smith v. Stewart, 21 La. Ann. 67, 99 Am. Dec. 709; Williams v. Bruffy, 96 U. S. 176. 24 L. Ed. 716 ; Keppel v. Railroad Co., 14 Fed. Cas. 857.— Government de jure. A government of right ; the true and lawful government ; a gov- ernment established according to the constitu- tion of the state, and lawfully entitled to recog- nition and supremacy and the administration of the state, but which is actually cut off from power or control. A government deemed law- ful, or deemed rightful or just, which, neverthe- less, has been supplanted or displaced ; that is to say, which receives not presently (although it received formerly) habitual obedience from the bulk of the community. Aust. Jur. 324.— Xiocal government. The government or administra- tion of a particular locality ; especially, the governmental authority of a municipal corpora- tion, as a city or county, over its local and in- dividual affairs, exercised in virtue of power delegated to it for that purpose by the general government of the state or nation.— Mixed government. A form of government combin- ing some of the features of two or all of the three primary forms, viz., monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy. — Republican government. One in which the powers of sovereignty are vested in the people and are exercised by the people, either directly, or through representa- tives chosen by the people, to whom those pow- ers are specially delegated. Black, Const. Law (3d Ed.) 309; In re Duncan, 139 U. 8. 449, 11 Sup. Ct. 573, 35 L. Ed. 219; Minor v. Hap- persett, 21 Wall. 175, 22 L. Ed. 627.

[Romans 13:1, KJV]

Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God.

Why: Government as 'supreme political authority' exercised over the body politic: the verse states its ground — 'the powers that be are ordained of God.' The authority the entry defines is here derived.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[George Orwell, Nineteen Eighty-Four, 1949]

"Big Brother is watching you." — the novel of total government as pure regulation, restraint, supervision, and control: the entry's definition with the mask off.

Why: Borderline-accept: the entry is neutral-doctrinal and the novel a warning — but the novel is the culture's primary imaginative working of 'government as control,' in the entry's own vocabulary.

GOVERNOR.

The title of the chief ex- ecutive in each of the states and territories of the United States; and also of the chief magistrate of some colonies, provinces, and dependencies of otber nations.

GRACE.

This word Is commonly used In contradistinction to “right.” Thus, In St 22 Edw. III., the lord chancellor was instructed to take cognizance of matters of grace, being such subjects of equity Jurisdiction as were exclusively matters of equity. Brown.

A faculty, license, or dispensation ; also general and free pardon by act of parliament See Act of Grace.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 2:8, KJV]

For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God:

Why: Law sets grace 'in contradistinction to right' — what is given, not owed. The verse is grace's charter under that same distinction: 'by grace are ye saved... not of yourselves: it is the gift of God.'

[Victor Hugo, Les Misérables, 1862]

(paraphrase) The Bishop of Digne answers Valjean's theft of his silver with a gift of candlesticks instead of prosecution — grace precisely as the entry frames it: not Valjean's right, but unmerited favor standing against right. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the entry's right/grace distinction is the exact moral mechanism of the novel's turning scene. (Second Les Misérables annotation in this chunk; each serves a different entry and scene.)

Why: Genuine: the footnote states the doctrine's terminal point — the modern rule that displaced the entry's custom. Loose form; no section invented.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 6:12, KJV]

And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

Why: Days of grace are indulgence granted the debtor for payment — mercy in the debt. Christ's petition makes that indulgence the pattern of all debt: 'forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.'

GRADATIM.

In old English law. By degrees or steps ; step by step ; from one de- gree to another. Bract fol. 64.

GRADES.

In the civil and old English law. A measure of space. A degree of rela- tionship.

A step or degree generally; e. g., gradus honorum, degrees of honor. Vicat A pul- pit; a year; a generation. Du Cange.

A port; any place where a vessel can be brought to land. Du Cange.

GRADES FARENTELS.

A pedigree; a table of relationship.

GRAFF ARIES.

In old English law. A grafter, notary, or scrivener. St. 6 Hen. VIIL c. 1.

GRAFFER.

A notary or scrivener. See St 6 Hen. VIIL a 1. The word is a corrup- tion of the French “gre/fler," (q. v.)

GRAFFIEM.

A writing-book, register, or cartulary of deeds and evidences. Cowell.

GRAFIO.

A baron, inferior to a count A fiscal judge. An advocate. Spelman ; Cow- ell.

GRAFT.

[Law] — Law

[Law: after-acquired title — estoppel by deed feeds the estoppel]

Equity's 'confirmation, by relation back' of a mortgagee's right where the mortgagor later acquires good title is the after-acquired-title doctrine: estoppel by deed feeds the estoppel.

analogy. Loose form.

GRAIN.

In Troy weight, the twenty- fourth part of a pennyweight. Any kind of corn sown in the ground.

—Grain rent. A payment for the use of land in grain or other crops ; the return to the land- lord paid by croppers or persons working the land on shares. Railroad Co. v. Bates, 40 Neb. 381, 58 N. W. 963.

GRAIN AGE.

An ancient duty in London under which the twentieth part of salt im- ported by aliens was taken.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

In England, this term designates a school in which such in- struction is given as will prepare the stu- dent to enter a college or university, and in this sense the phrase was used in the Massa- chusetts colonial act of 1647, requiring every town containing a hundred householders to set up a "grammar school." See Jenkins v. Andover, 103 Mass. 97. But in modern Amer- ican usage the term denotes a school, inter- mediate between the primary school and the high school, in which English grammar and other studies of that grade are taught.

Grammafin falsa non vitiat ehartam.

9 Coke, 48. False grammar does not vitiate a deed.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 22:6, KJV]

Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it.

Why: The grammar school is the institution of instruction. The proverb is its charter: 'train up a child in the way he should go' — schooling as the forming of the child, with the promise that it abides.

[Thomas Hughes, Tom Brown's School Days, 1857]

(paraphrase) Set at Rugby under Dr. Arnold, the novel is the classic portrait of the English endowed-school world the entry describes. (paraphrase)

Why: Borderline-accept: Rugby is a 'public school' in the English sense and the entry says 'grammar school' — but the entry describes the English endowed-school tradition of which Rugby is the literary archetype.

GRAMMATOFHTLACIEM.

(Gneco- Lat) In the civil law. A place for keeping writings or records. Dig. 48, 19, 9, 6.

GRAMME.

The unit of weight in the metric system. The gramme is the weight of a cubic centimeter of distilled water at the temperature of 4° C. It is equal to 15.4341 grains troy, or 5.6481 drachms avoirdupois.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 41:34, KJV]

Let Pharaoh do this, and let him appoint officers over the land, and take up the fifth part of the land of Egypt in the seven plenteous years.

Why: A granatarius is the officer having charge of a granary. The verse is the biblical institution of that office: Pharaoh's officers appointed over the land to gather the fifth part into store against the famine.

GRANT.

A generic term applicable to all transfers of real property. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 181, 353.

A transfer by deed of that which cannot be passed by livery. Williams, Real Prop. 147, 149; Jordan y. Indianapolis Water Co., 159 Ind. 337, 64 N. E. 680.

An act evidenced by letters patent uuder the great seal, granting something from the king to a subject. Cruise, Dig. tit 33, 34; Downs v. United States, 113 Fed. 147, 51 0.

C A. 100.

A technical term made use of In deeds of conveyance of lands to import a transfer. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 378-380.

Though the word “grant” was originally made use of, In treating of conveyances of Interests in lands, to denote a transfer by deed of that which could not be passed by livery, and, of course, was applied only to in- corporeal hereditaments, it has now become a generic term, applicable to the transfer of all classes of real property. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 181.

As distinguished from a mere license, a grant passes some estate or interest, corporeal or in- corporeal, in the lands which it embraces ; can only be made by an instrument in writing, under seal ; and is irrevocable, when made, un- less an express power of revocation is reserved. A license is a mere authority ; passes no estate or interest whatever ; may be made by parol ; is revocable at will; and, when revoked, the protection which it gave ceases to exist. Ja- mieson v. Millemann, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 255, 258.

The term “grant,” in Scotland, is used in reference (1) to original dispositions of land, as when a lord makes grants of land among tenants; (2) to gratuitous deeds. Paterson. In such case, the superior or donor is said to grant the deed; an expression totally un- known In English law. Mozley & Whitley.

By the word “grant," in a treaty, is meant not only a formal grant, but any concession, warrant, order, or permission to survey, pos- sess, or settle, whether written or parol, ex- press, or presumed from possession. Such a grant may be made by law, as well as by a patent pursuant to a law. Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 436, 9 L. Ed. 1137. And see Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 179, 5 Sup. Ct 413, 28

See Christie v. Lewis, 2 Brod. & B. 441. — Grant of personal property. A method of transferring personal property, distinguished from a gift by being al- ways founded on some consideration or equiva- lent. 2 Bl. Comm. 440, 441. Its proper legal designation Is an “assignment." or “bargain and sale.” 2 Steph. Comm. 102.— Grant to mses. The common grant with uses superadd- ed, which has become the favorite mode of trans- ferring realty in England. Wharton.— Private land grant. A grant by a public authority vesting title to public land in a private (nat- ural) person. United Land Ass'n v. Knight, 85 Cal. 448, 24 Pac. 818.— Public grant. A grant from the public; a grant of a power, li- cense, privilege, or property, from the state or government to one or more individuals, contain- ed in or shown by a record, conveyance, patent, charter, etc.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — conveyances of land must be in writing]

The deed-transfer of real property the entry defines must be in writing: the Statute of Frauds requires conveyances of land to be evidenced by a signed memorandum.

Why: Genuine: the writing requirement governs the 'transfer by deed... of real property' the entry defines; the statute is the entry's own FRAUD sub-entry's subject, applied here.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 13:15, KJV]

For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever.

Why: A grant is the transfer of real property by the sovereign's act — the royal grant by letters patent. The verse is the sovereign grant itself: God conveying the land to Abraham and his seed for ever, in his own speech.

"The curfew tolls the knell of parting day." — Gray's elegy opens at dusk in a country churchyard and meditates over the graves of the obscure dead: the English language's great graveyard poem.

Why: Genuine: the poem is the great meditation on the entry's subject; the entry defines its setting.

GRAVEYARD.

A cemetery ; a place for the interment of dead bodies ; sometimes de- fined in statutes as a place where a minimum number of persons (as “six or more”) are burled. See Stockton v. Weber, 98 Cal. 433, S3 Pac. 832.

— Graveyard insurance. A term applied to insurances fraudulently obtained (as, by false rsonation or other means) on the lives of in- nts, very aged persons, or those in the last stages of disease. Also occasionally applied to an insurance company which writes wager pol- icies, takes extra-hazardous risks, or otherwise exceeds the limits of prudent and legitimate business. GRETNA GREEN MARRIAGE.

A

marriage celebrated at Gretna, in Dumfries, (bordering on the county of Cumberland,) In Scotland. By the law of Scotland a valid marriage may be contracted by consent uloue, without any other formality. When the mar- riage act (26 Geo. II. c. 33) rendered the pub- lication of banns, or a license, necessary in England, it became usual for persons who wished to marry clandestinely to go to Gretna Green, the nearest part of Scotland, and marry according to the Scotch law ; so a sort of chapel was built at Gretna Green, in which the English marriage service was performed by the village blacksmith. Wharton.

[Law] — Law

[Law: lex loci celebrationis — validity of marriage by the law of the place of celebration]

The Gretna device worked because a marriage's validity is tested by the law of the place where it was celebrated, not the parties' domicile.

Why: Genuine: the conflicts rule is the legal mechanism behind the clandestine Scottish marriage the entry describes. Loose form.

[Jane Austen, Pride and Prejudice, 1813]

(paraphrase) Lydia Bennet's elopement with Wickham is aimed at Gretna Green — the runaway-marriage destination for English couples evading parental consent — making the scandal plot turn on this legal institution. (paraphrase)

GROUND. 1. Soil; earth; a portion of the earth’s surface appropriated to private use and under cultivation or susceptible of cultivation.

Though this term is sometimes used in con- veyances and in statutes as equivalent to “land,” it is properly of a more limited signification, because it applies strictly only to the surface, while “land includes everything beneath the surface, and because “ground" always means dry land, whereas “land" may and often does include the beds of lakes and streams and oth- er surfaces under water. See Wood v. Carter, 70 111. Apo. 218; State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J^ Law, 529 ; Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray (Mass.)

—Ground annual. In Scotch law. An an- nual rent of two kinds: First, the fen duties payable to the lords of erection and their suc- cessors ; second, the rents reserved for building lots in a city, where sub-feus are prohibited. This rent is in the nature of a perpetual an- nuity. Bell : Ersk. Inst 11, 3, 52.— Ground landlord. The grantor of an estate on which a ground-rent is reserved — Ground-rent. A perpetual rent reserved to himself and his heirs, by the grantor of land in fee-simple, out of the land conveyed. It is in the nature of an emphyteutic rent. Also, in English law, rent paid on a building lease. See Hart v. Ander- son, 198 Pa. 558, 48 Atl. 636; Sturgeon v. Ely, 6 Pa. 406 ; Franciscos v. Keigart, 4 Watts. (Pa.) 116.

2. A foundation or basis.

— Ground of action. The basis of a suit; the foundation or fundamental state of facts on which an action rests; the real object of the plaintiff in bringing his suit. See Nash v. GUARANTEE.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

He to whom a guaran- ty is made. This word is also used, as a noun, to denote the contract of guaranty or the obligation of a guarantor, and, as a verb, to denote the action of assuming the responsibilities of a guarantor. But on the general principle of legal orthography, — that the title of the person to whom the action passes over should end in "ee," as "donee," "grantee," "payee," "bailee," "drawee," etc., — it seems better to use this word only as the correlative of "guarantor," and to spell the verb, and also the name of the contract, "guaranty."

GTTARENTIGIO.

In Spanish law. A written authorization to a court to enforce the performance of an agreement in the same manner as if It had been decreed upon regular legal proceedings.

GUARANTOR.

He who makes a guar- anty.

GUARANTY, v. To undertake collater- ally to answer for the payment of another's debt or the performance of another's duty, liability, or obligation ; to assume the re- sponsibility of a guarantor; to warrant. See Guaranty, n.

GUARANTY, n. A promise to answer for the payment of some debt, or the per- formance of some duty, in case of the failure of another person, who, in the first Instance, Is liable to such payment or performance. Gallagher v. Nichols, 60 N. Y. 444 ; Andrews v. Pope, 126 N. C. 472, 35 S. B. 817; Deming v. Bull, 10 Conn. 409; Reigart v. White, 52 Pa. 438.

A guaranty is an undertaking by one per- son to be answerable for the payment of some debt, or the due performance of some contract or duty, by another person, who himself remains liable to pay or perform the same. Story, Prom. Notes, | 457.

A guaranty is a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another per- son. Civil Code Cal. | 2787.

A guaranty is a contract that some particular thing shall be done exactly as It is agreed to be done, whether It is to be done by one person or another, and whether there be a prior or principal contractor or not. Redfield v. Haight, 27 Conn. 81.

The definition of a "guaranty," by text-writ- ers, is an undertaking by one person that an- other shall perform his contract or fulfill his obligation, or that, if he does not, the guarantor will do it for him. A guarantor of a bill or note is said to be one who engages that the note shall be paid, but is not an indorser or surety. Gridley v. Capen, 72 111. 13.

Synonyms. The terms guaranty and surety- ship are sometimes used interchangeably; but they should not be confounded. The contract of a surety corresponds with that of a guar- antor in many respects ; yet important differ- ences exist. The surety is bound with his prin- cipal as an original promisor. He is a debtor from the beginning, and must see that the debt is paid, and is held ordinarily to know every default of his principal, and cannot pro- tect himself by the mere indulgence of the cred- itor, nor by want of notice of the default of the principal, however such indulgence or want of notice may in fact injure him. On the other hand, the contract of a guarantor is his own separate contract. It is in the nature of a warranty by him that the thing guarantied to be done by the principal shall be done, not merely an engagement jointly with the principal to do the thing. The original contract of the principal is not his contract, and he is not bound to take notice of its non-performance. Therefore the creditor should give him notice; and it is universally held that, if the guarantor can prove that he has suffered damage by the failure to give such notice, he will be discharged to the extent of the damage thus sustained. It is not so with a surety. Durham v. Manrow, 2

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

N. Y. 548; Nading v. McGregor, 121 Ind. 465, 23 N. E. 283, 6 b. R. A. 086.

Guaranty and warranty are derived from the same root, and are in fact etymologically the same word, the "g" of the Norman French be- ing interchangeable with the English "w." They are often used colloquially and in com- mercial transactions as having the same signification, as where a piece of machinery or the produce of an estate is "guarantied" for a term of years, "warranted" being the more appropri- ate term in such a case. See Accumulator Co. v. Dubuque St. R. Co., 64 Fed. 70. 12 C. C. A. 37 ; Martinez v. EJarnshaw, 36 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 502. A distinction is also sometimes made in commercial usage, by which the term "guaranty" is understood as a collateral war- ranty (often a conditional one) against some de- fault or event in the future, while the term "warranty" is taken as meaning an absolute un- dertaking in pratcnti, against the defect, or for the quantity or quality contemplated by the parties in the subject-matter of the contract. Sturges v. Bank of Circleville, 11 Ohio St. 169, 78 Am. Dec. 296. But in strict legal usage the two terms are widely distinguished in this, that a warranty is an absolute undertaking or liability on the part of the warrantor, and the contract is void unless it is strictly and literally performed, while a guaranty is a promise, en- tirely collateral to the original contract, and not imposing any primary liability on the guar- antor, but binding him to be answerable for the failure or default of another. Masons' Union I* Ins. Ass'n v. Brockman, 20 Ind. App. 206, 50 N. E. 493.

—Absolute guaranty. An unconditional promise of payment or performance on the de- fault of the principal. Mast v. Lehman, 100 Ky. 466, 38 S. W. 1056; Beardsley v. Hawes, 71 Conn. 39. 40 Atl. 1043: Farmers' Bank v. Tatnall, 7 Houst. CDel.) 287, 31 Atl. 879 ; Esberg-Bachman Tobacco Co. v. Heid (D. C.) 62 Fed. 962.— Collateral guaranty. A contract by which the guarantor undertakes, in case the principal fails to do what he has promised or undertaken to do, to pay damages for such fail- ure ; distinguished from an engagement of sure- tyship in this respect, that a surety undertakes to do the very thing which the principal has promised to do, in case the latter defaults. GUARDAGE.

A state of wardship.

GUARDIAN.

A guardian Is a person lawfully Invested with the power, and char- ged with the duty, of taking care of the person and managing the property and rights of another person, who, for some pe- culiarity of status, or defect of age, under- standing, or self-control, is considered in- capable of administering his own affairs. Bass v. Cook, 4 Port (Ala.) 392; Sparhawk v. Allen, 21 N. H. 27 ; Burger v. Frakes, 67 Iowa, 460, 23 N. W, 746.

A guardian is a person appointed to take care of the person or property of another. Civ. Code Cal. | 236.

One who legally has the care and manage- ment of the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during its minority. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 311.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

This term might be appropriately used to designate the person charged with the care and control of Idiots, lunatics, habitual drunkards, spendthrifts, and the like; but such person is, under many of the statutory systems authorizing the appointment, styled "committee,” and in common usage the name “guardian” is applied only to one having the care and management of a minor.

The name "curator” is given in some of the states to a person having the control of a minor’s estate, without that of his person ; and this is also the usage of the civil law.

Classification. A testamentary guardian is one appointed by the deed or last will of the child’s father; while a guardian by election is one chosen by the infant himself in a case where he would otherwise be without one. A general guardian is one who has the general care and control of the person and estate of his ward : while a special guardian is one who has special or limited powers and duties with respect to bis ward, e. a., a guardian who has the custody of the estate but not of the person, or vice versa, or a guardian ad litem. A domestic guardian is one appointed at the place where the ward is legally domiciled ; while a foreign guardian derives his authority from appointment by the courts of another state, and generally has charge only of such property as may be located within the jurisdiction of the power appointing him. A guardian ad litem is a guardian appointed by a court of justice to prosecute or defend for an infant in any suit to which he may be a party. 2 Steph. Comm. 342. Most commonly appoint- ed for infant defendants; infant plaintiffs gen- erally suing by next friend. This kind of guard- ian has no right to interfere with the infant’s person or property. 2 Steph. Comm. 343; Richter v. Leiby, J07 Wis. 404, 83 N. W. 694. A guardian by appointment of oourt is the most important species of guardian in modern law, having custody of the infant until the attain- ment of full age. It has in England in a man ner superseded the guardian in socage, and in the United States the guardian by nature also. The appointment is made by a court of chan- cery, or probate or orphans’ court 2 Steph. Comm. 341 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 226. A guardian by nature is the father, and, on his death, the mother, of a child. 1 Bl. Comm. 461 ; 2 Kent Comm. 219. This guardianship extends only to the custody of the person of the child to the age of twenty-one years. Sometimes called "natural guardian.” but this is rather a popu- lar than a technical mode of expression. 2 Steph. Comm. 337 ; Kline v. Beebe, 6 Conn. 500; Mauro v. Ritchie, 16 Fed. Gas. 1171. A guardian by statute is a guardian appointed for a child by the deed or last will of the father, and who has the custody both of his person and estate until the attainment of full age. This kind of guardianship is founded on the statute of 12 Car. II. c. 24, and has. been pretty exten- sively adopted in this country. 1 Bl. Comm. 462 ; 2 Steph. Comm. 339, 340 ; 2 Kent, Comm. 224-226; Huson v. Green, 88 Ga. 722, 16 8.

E. 255. A guardian for nurture is the father, or, at his decease, the mother, of a child. This kind of guardianship extends only to the per- son, and determines when the infant arrives at the age of fourteen. 2 Kent, Comm. 221; 1 Bl. Comm. 461 ; 2 Steph. Comm. 338 ; Mauro v. Ritchie, 16 Fed. Cas. 1171; Arthurs' Appeal, 1 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 56. Guardian in chivalry.

of twenty-one, being a male, or fourteen, being a female, the lord was entitled to the wardship <and marriage) of the heir, and was called the "guardian in chivalry.” This wardship consist- ed in having the custody of the body and lands of such heir, without any account of the prof- its. 2 Bl. Comm. 67. Guardian in nocage. At the common law, this was a species of guardian who had the custody of lands coming to the infant by descent, as also of the infant’s per- son, until the latter reached the age of fourteen. Such guardian was always "the next of kin to whom the inheritance cannot possibly descend.” 1 Bl. Comm. 461 ; 2 Steph. Comm. 338 ; Byrne v. Van Hoesen, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 67 ; Van Doren v. Everitt, 5 N. J. Law, 462, 8 Am. Dec. 615; Combs v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 157, 19 Am. Dec. 568. Natural guardian. The father of a child, or the mother if the father be dead.

The person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed during the vacancy of the see.— Guardian of the temporalities. The person to whose custody a va- cant see or abbey was committed by the crown. — Guardian or warden, of the Cinque Ports. A magistrate who has the jurisdiction of the ports or havens which are called the “Cinque Ports,” (q. v.) This office was first created in England, in imitation of the Roman policy, to strengthen the sea-coasts against enemies, etc.

[Law] — Law

[Law: innkeeper's common-law strict liability for guests' goods]

The guest the entry defines — the traveler lodging at an inn — is protected by the innkeeper's common-law strict liability, as an insurer, for the guest's goods.

Why: Genuine: the liability rule is the legal content behind the guest/boarder distinction the entry draws. Loose form; no case invented.

GUIA.

In Spanish law. A right of way for narrow carts. White, New Recop. L 2, c. 6, * 1.

GUIDAGE.

In old English law. That which was given for safe conduct through a strange territory, or another’s territory. Cowell.

• The office of guiding of travelers through dangerous and unknown ways. 2 Inst. 526.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 13:21, KJV]

And the LORD went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light; to go by day and night:

Why: Guidage is the office of guiding travelers through dangerous and unknown ways. The pillar of cloud and fire is the biblical guide — God himself leading the way through the wilderness, 'to lead them the way.'

GUIDE-PLATE.

An Iron or steel plate to be attached to a rail for the purpose ot guiding to their place on the rail wheels thrown off the track. Pub. St Mass. 1882, p. 1291.

GUIDON DE LA MER, The name of a treatise on maritime law, by an unknown author, supposed to have been written about 1671 at Rouen, and considered, in continental Europe, as a work of high authority.

GUILD.

A voluntary association of per- sons pursuing the same trade, art, profession, or business, such as printers, goldsmiths, wool merchants, etc., united under a distinct organization of their own. analogous to that of a corporation, regulating the affairs of their trade or business by their own laws and rules, and aiming, by co-operation and organization, to protect and promote the in- terests of their common vocation. In me- dieval history these fraternities or guilds played an important part in the government of some states; as at Florence; in the thir- teenth and following centuries, where they chose the council of government of the city. But with the growth of cities and the ad- vance in the organization of municipal gov- ernment, their Importance and prestige has declined. The place of meeting of a guild, or association of guilds, was called the "Guildhall.” The word is said to be derived from the Anglo-Saxon “gild" or "geld,” a tax or tribute, because each member of the soci- ety was required to pay a tax towards its support.

"It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done; it is a far, far better rest that I go to than I have ever known." — Sydney Carton's closing words as the Terror's guillotine, looming over the whole novel, takes him.

Why: Genuine: the instrument defines the novel's historical moment; the strongest link in this batch.

GUILT.

In criminal law. That quality which Imparts erlminnlity to a motive or act and renders the person amenable to punish- ment by the law.

That disposition to violate the law which has manifested itself by some act already done. The opposite of Innocence. See Ruth. Inst b. 1, c. 18, g 10.

[Romans 6:23, KJV]

For the wages of sin is death;

Why: Guilt is the quality rendering the person 'amenable to punishment by the law.' The verse states guilt's wage: 'the wages of sin is death' — the penal consequence bound to the criminal quality.

(paraphrase) Raskolnikov's murder and the psychological working of his guilt — the entry's 'quality which imparts criminality to a motive or act' as an entire novel. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the novel is the literature of guilt; the entry defines its subject.

GUILTY.

Having committed a crime or tort; the word used by a prisoner in plead- ing to an indictment when he confesses the crime of which he Is charged, and by the Jury In convicting. Com. v. Walter, 83 Pa. 108, 24 Am. Rep. 154; Jessie v. State, 28 Miss. 108; State v. White, 25 Wls. 859.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 John 1:9, KJV]

If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Why: 'Guilty' as pleaded is the prisoner's confession of the crime charged. The verse gives confession its pattern and fruit: 'if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins.'

GUINEA.

A coin formerly issued by the English mint but all these coins were called In In the time of Wm. IV. The word now means only the sum of £1. Is., In which denomination the fees of counsel are always given.

GULE OF AUGUST.

The first of Au- gust, being the day of St. Peter ad Vincula.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Acts 12:7, KJV]

And his chains fell off from his hands.

Why: The Gule of August is the feast of St Peter ad Vincula — Peter in chains. The verse is the deliverance the feast commemorates: the angel raises Peter, 'and his chains fell off from his hands.'

GULES.

The heraldic name of the color usually called “red.” The word Is derived from the Arabic word “pule," a rose, and was probably introduced by the Crusaders. Gules is denoted In engravings by numerous perpendicular lines. Heralds who blaxoned

HABERE.

Lat. In the civil law. To have. Sometimes distinguished from tenere, (to hdld,) and possidere, (to possess;) habere referring to the right, tenere to the fact, and possidere to both. Calvi^t.

HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM.

Lat That you cause to have possession. The name of the process commonly resorted to by the successful party in an action of ejectment, for the purpose of being placed by the sheriff in the actual possession of the land recovered. It is commonly termed sim- ply " habere facias," or "hab. fa."

[Law] — Law

[Law: writ of possession — enforcement of a judgment for possession of land]

The habere facias possessionem — the sheriff placing the successful ejectment plaintiff in actual possession — survives as the writ of possession enforcing a judgment for possession of land.

Why: Genuine: the modern execution writ for the same judgment the entry's process served. Loose form; no case invented.

HABERE FACIAS SEISIN AM.

L. Lat

That you- cause to have seisin. The writ of execution in real actions, directing the sher- iff to cause the demandant to have seisin of the lands recovered. It was the proper pro- cess for giving seisin of a freehold, as dis- tinguished from a chattel interest in lands.

HABERE FACIAS VISUM.

Lat. That you cause to have a view. A writ to cause the sheriff to take a view of lands or tene- ments.

HABERE IiICERE. Lat. In Roman law. To allow [one] to have [possession.] This phrase denoted the duty of the seller of property to allow the purchaser to have the possession and enjoyment. For a breach of this duty, an actio ex empto might be main- tained.

HABERJECT8.

A cloth of a mixed color. Magna Charts, c. 26.

HABETO TIBI RES TUAS.

Lat. Have or take your effects to yourself. One of the old Roman forms of divorcing a wife. Cal- vin.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 24:1, KJV]

When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her: then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house.

Why: 'Have your effects to yourself' is Rome's formula of divorce. The verse gives scripture's: the written bill of divorcement put in her hand — divorce as a formal written act, in both laws.

HABILI8.

Lat. Fit; suitable; active; useful, (of a servant.) Proved; authentic, (of Book of Saints.) Fixed; stable, (of au- thority of the king.) Du Cange.

HABIT.

A disposition or condition of the body or mind acquired by custom or a usual repetition of the same act or function. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Foley, 105 U. S. 354, 26 L. Ed. 1055 ; Conner v. Citizens' St. R. Co., 146 Ind. 430, 45 N. E. 662; State v. Skillicorn, 104 Iowa, 97, 78 N. W. 503 ; State v. Robinson, 111 Ala. 482, 20 South. 30.

—Habit and repute. By the law of Scot- land, marriage may be established by "habit and repute" where the parties cohabit and are at the same time held and reputed as man and wife. See Bell. The same rule obtains in some of the United States.

[Maxim: "Consuetudo est altera natura" (after Cicero)]

[Maxim: "Consuetudo est altera natura" — habit/custom is second nature.]

Why: Genuine classical-wisdom link: the maxim compresses the entry's definition ('a disposition acquired by custom') into proverb; the entry even uses the word 'custom.'

HABITABLE REPAIR.

A covenant by a lessee to "put the premises into habitable repair" binds him to put them into such a state that they may be occupied, not only with safety, but with reasonable comfort, for the purposes for which they are taken. Miller v. McCardell, 19 R. I. 304, 33 Atl. 445, 30 L. R. A. 682.

[Law] — Law

[Javins v. First National Realty Corp., 428 F.2d 1071 (D.C. Cir. 1970)]

The lessee's covenant to put premises in habitable repair prefigures the implied warranty of habitability read into residential leases as a matter of law.

Why: Genuine: Javins is the charter case implying habitability into leases, directly on the entry's covenant.

HABITANCY.

Settled dwelling in a giv- en place; fixed and permanent residence there. This term is more cpmprehensive than "domicile," for one may be domiciled in a given place though he does not spend the greater portion of his time there, or though he may be absent for long periods. It is also more comprehensive than "residence," for one may reside in a given place only tem- porarily or for short periods on the occasion of repeated visits. But in neither case could he properly be called an "inhabitant" of that place or be said to have his "habitancy" there. See Atkinson v. Washington A Jef- ferson College, 54 W. Va. 32, 46 S. B. 253; Hairston v. Hairston, 27 Miss. 711, 61 Am. Dec. 530; Abington v. North Bridgewater, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 170. And see Domicile; Resi- dence.

It is difficult to give an exact definition of "habitancy." In general terms, one may be designated as an. "inhabitant" of that place which constitutes the principal seat of his residence, of his business, pursuits, connections, attach- ments, and of his political and municipal rela- tions. The term, therefore, embraces the fact of residence at a place, together with the intent to regard it and make it a home. The act and intent must concur. Lyman v. Fiske, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 231, 28 Am. Dec. 293.

HABITANT.

Fr. In French and Ca- nadian law. A resident tenant ; a settler ; a tenant who kept hearth aud home on the seigniory.

HABITATIO.

Lat In the civil law. The right of dwelling; the right of free resi- dence in another's house. Inst. 2, 5; Dig. 7, &

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 14:2, KJV]

In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.

Why: Habitatio is the right of dwelling — free residence in another's house. Christ promises it at its highest: dwelling in the Father's house — 'in my Father's house are many mansions... I go to prepare a place for you.'

HABITATION.

In the civil law. The right of a person to live in the house of an- other without prejudice to the property. It differed from a usufruct, in this; that the usufructuary might apply the house to any purpose, as of a store or manufactory; where- as the party having the right of habitation could only use it for the residence of himself and family. 1 Browne, Civil Law, 184.

In estates. A dwelling-house; a home- stall. 2 Bl. Comm. 4; 4 Bl. Comm. '120;

[Law] — Law

[Ewing v. California, 538 U.S. 11 (2003)]

The repeat-felon statutes the entry defines survive as habitual-offender sentencing laws, whose severe recidivist sentences have been upheld against Eighth Amendment challenge.

Why: Genuine: Ewing decides the constitutionality of the 'three strikes' repeat-offender sentencing that descends from the statutes the entry cites.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Peter 2:22, KJV]

The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire.

Why: The habitual criminal is defined by return to crime after punishment. The proverb states the pattern: 'the dog is turned to his own vomit again' — the return that makes the habit.

HABITUAL DRUNKARD.

A person given to ebrlety or the excessive use of in- toxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it Ludwlck v. Com., 18 Pa. 174; Gourlay v. Gourlay, 16 R. I. 705, 19 Atl. 142; Miskey's Appeal, 107 Pa. 620; Richards v. Richards, 19 111. App. 467; Mc- Bee v. McBee, 22 Or. 329, 29 Pac. 887, 29 Am. St. Rep. 613.

One who has the habit of indulging in intoxi- cating liquors so firmly fixed that he becomes intoxicated as often as the temptation is pre- sented by his being in the vicinity where liquors are sold is an “habitual drunkard," within the meaning of the divorce law. Magahay v. Magahay, 35 Mich. 210.

In England, it is defined by the habitual drhnkards’ act, 1879. (42 & 43 Viet. c. 19.) which authorizes confinement in a retreat, upon the party’s own application, as “a person who, not being amenable to any jurisdiction in lu- nacy, is, notwithstanding, by reason of habitual intemperate drinking of intoxicating liquor, at limes dangerous to himself, or herself, or oth- ers, or incapable of managing himself or her- self, or his or her affairs.”

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Corinthians 6:10, KJV]

Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God.

Why: The habitual drunkard as a legal status — one fixed in intoxication. The verse names 'drunkards' in scripture's own catalogue, with their standing stated: they 'shall not inherit the kingdom of God.'

[Law] — Law

[Law: common carrier's heightened duty of care to passengers and baggage]

The hire-carriage driver's liability for negligently losing baggage rests on the common carrier's heightened duty of care to passengers and their goods.

Why: Genuine: the duty is the legal content behind the negligence holding the entry reports. Loose form.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Arthur Conan Doyle, The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes, 1892]

(paraphrase) Holmes's London runs on them — the hansom cab, the quintessential licensed hackney carriage, hailed in adventure after adventure. (paraphrase)

Why: Borderline-accept: the stories never define the vehicle, but the hackney carriage is the working infrastructure of Holmes's London and the entry defines exactly that vehicle class.

HADBOTE.

In Saxon law. A recom- pense or satisfaction for the violation of holy orders, or violence offered to persons in holy orders. Cowell ; Blount.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Chronicles 16:22, KJV]

Saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

Why: Hadbote is the legal amends for violence offered to persons in holy orders. The verse is the biblical immunity of holy persons: 'touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.'

HASS.

In Hindu law. A boundary or limit. A statutory punishment defined by law, and not arbitrary. Mozley & Whitley.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 19:14, KJV]

Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's landmark, which they of old time have set in thine inheritance,

Why: Hadd is the boundary or limit. The verse is scripture's boundary law: 'thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's landmark, which they of old time have set' — the ancient bound inviolable.

HADERUNGA.

In old English law. Hatred; 111 will; prejudice, or partiality. Spelinan ; Cowell.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:15, KJV]

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment: thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honour the person of the mighty: but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour.

Why: Haderunga is partiality — hatred or ill will bending judgment. The verse forbids it in God's own speech: 'thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honour the person of the mighty: but in righteousness shalt...

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 22:25, KJV]

But if a man find a betrothed damsel in the field, and the man force her, and lie with her: then the man only that lay with her shall die:

Why: Haerede rapto lies for the ravishment of the lord's ward. The verse is scripture's law of ravishment: the ravisher, 'and he only,' dies — the violation answered with the life.

HASHES.

In Homan law. The heir, or universal successor in the event of death. The heir Is he who actively or passively suc- ceeds to the entire property of the estate- leaver. He Is not only the successor to the rights and claims, but also to the estate-leav- er's debts, and in relation to his estate is to be regarded as the identical person of the estate-leaver, inasmuch as he represents him in all his active and passive relations to his estate. Mackeld. Rom. Law, { 651.

It should be remarked that the office, pow- ers, and duties of the hares, in Roman law, were much more closely assimilated to those of a modern executor than to those of an heir at law. Hence “heir” is not at all an accurate translation of “hares,” unless it be understood in a special, technical sense.

crime and the inflic- tion of death upon him; from the name of the parish of Halifax, In England, where an- ciently this form of private justice was prac- tised by the free burghers In tHe case of per- sons accused of stealing ; also called “gibbet law.”

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIV — due process of law]

Halifax law — 'lynch law,' the summary unauthorized trial and infliction of death — is the absence of due process of law.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines private summary justice; the amendment is its constitutional repudiation. Headword keyed as in the chunk (OCR 'HA LIT AX LAW' for HALITAX LAW).

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 16:18, KJV]

Judges and officers shalt thou make thee in all thy gates, which the LORD thy God giveth thee, throughout thy tribes: and they shall judge the people with just judgment.

Why: Halifax law is private, unauthorized justice — summary trial and death by the burghers' own court. The verse ordains the opposite: judges and officers 'in all thy gates... and they shall judge the people with just jud...

HALLUCINATION.

In medical juris- prudence. A trick or deceit of the senses ; a morbid error either of the sense of sight or that of hearing, or possibly of the other senses; a psychological state, such as would be produced naturally by an act of sense-per- ception, attributed confidently, but mistaken- ly, to something which has no objective exist- ence ; as, when the patient Imagines that he sees an object when there is none, or bears a voice or other sound when nothing strikes his ear. See Staples v. Wellington, 58 Me. 459; Foster v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233, 24 Atl. 257 ; McNett v. Cooper (C. C.) 13 Fed. 590; People v. Krlst, 168 N. Y. 19, 60 N.

E. 1057.

Hallucination does not by itself constitute in- sanity, though it may be evidence of it or a sign of its approach. It is to be distinguished from “delusion” in this, that the latter is a fixed and irrational belief in the existence of a fact or state of facts, not cognizable through the senses, but to be determined by the facul- ties of reason, memory, judgment, and the like ; while hallucination is a belief in the existence of an external object, perceptible by the senses, but having no real existence; or, in so far as a delusion may relate to an external object, it is an irrational belief as to the character, na- ture. or appearance of something which really exists and affects the senses. For example, if a man should believe that he saw his right hand in its proper place, after it had been amutated, it would be an hallucination; but if he elieved that bis right hand was made of glass, it would be a delusion. In other words, in the case of hallucination, the senses betray the mind, while in the case of delusion, the senses act normally, but their evidence is rejected by the mind on account of the existence of an irrational belief formed independently of them. They are further distinguished by the fact that hallucinations may be observed and studied by the subject himself and traced to their causes, or may be corrected by reasoning or argument, while a delusion is an unconscious error, but so fixed and unchangeable that the patient can- not be reasoned out of it. Hallucination is al- so to be distinguished from “illusion.” the lat- ter term being appropriate to describe a per- verted or distorted or wholly mistaken impres- sion in the mind, derived from a true act of sense-perception, stimulated by a real external object, but modified by the imagination of the subject ; while, in the case of hallucination, as above stated, there is no objective reality to correspond with the imagined perception.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

[Exodus 22:2-3, KJV]

If a thief be found breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall no blood be shed for him. If the sun be risen upon him, there shall be blood shed for him; for he should make full restitution; if he have nothing, then he shall be sold for his theft.

Why: Hamesecken is the violent entering of a man's house — housebreaking, burglary. The verses are scripture's law of the housebreaker, in God's speech: smitten by night without bloodguilt; by day held to full restitution,...

HAMFARE.

(Sax. From ham, a house.) In Saxon law. An assault made in a house ; a breach of the peace in a private bouse.

HAMLET.

A small village; a part or member of a vill. It is the diminutive of "ham," a village. Cowell. See Rex. v. Mor- ris, 4 Term, 552.

HAMM A.

A close Joining to a house; a croft; a little meadow. Cowell.

HAMMER.

Metaphorically, a forced sale or sale at public auction. "To bring to the hammer," to put up for sale at auction. "Sold under the hammer," sold by an oflicer of the law or by an auctioneer.

HAMSOCNE.

In Saxon law. The right of security and privacy in a man's house. Du Cange. The breach of this privilege by a forcible entry of a house is breach of the peace. Du Cange.

[Law] — Law

[Semayne's Case, 5 Coke 91a (1604)]

The Saxon 'right of security and privacy in a man's house' is the castle doctrine: the house of every one is to him as his castle and fortress.

Why: Genuine: Semayne's is the classic common-law statement of the house-privilege the entry defines.

HANAJPER.

A hamper or basket in which were kept the writs of the court of chancery relating to the business of a sub- ject, and their returns. 8 Bl. Comm. 49. According to others, the fees accruing on writs, etc., were there kept. Spelman; Du Cange.

cery, so called because all writs relating to the business of a subject, and their returns, were formerly kept in a hamper, in hanapcrio. 5 & 6 Viet. c. 103. See Yates v. People, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 363.

HARD.

A measure of length equal to four inches, used In measuring the height ot horses. A person’s signature.

Ia old Englih law. An oath.

For the meaning of the terms “strong hand" and "clean hands,” see those titles.

HARD DOWN.

An appellate court is said to "hand down” its decision in a case, when the opinion is prepared and filed for transmission to the court below.

HAND-FASTING.

In old English law. Betrothment

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 1:18, KJV]

When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together,

Why: Hand-fasting is betrothment. The verse shows the biblical espousal as a binding state before union: Mary 'espoused to Joseph, before they came together' — betrothal with legal weight, dissoluble only as marriage is.

HARD-GRXTH.

In old English law. Peace or protection given by the king with his own band.

HARD MONEY.

Money paid in hand to bind a bargain; earnest money.

HANDBILL.

A written or printed no- tice displayed to inform those concerned of something to be done. People v. McLaugh- lin, 33 Misc. Rep. 691, 68 N. Y. Supp. 1108.

HARDBOROW.

In Saxon law. A hand pledge; a name given to the nine pledges In a decennary or friborg; the tenth or chief, being called " headhorow ,” (q. v.) So called as being an inferior pledge to the chief. Spelman.

HARDHABEND.

In Saxon law. One having a thing in hts hand ; that is, a thief found having the stolen goods in his posses- sion. Jurisdiction to try such thief.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:4, KJV]

If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether it be ox, or ass, or sheep; he shall restore double.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Why: Handhabend is the thief taken having the stolen goods in his hand — with jurisdiction to try him. The verse is God's rule for exactly him: 'if the theft be certainly found in his hand... he shall restore double.'

HANDSALE.

Anciently, among all the northern nations, shaking of hands was held necessary to bind a bargain, — a custom still retained in verbal contracts. A sale thns made was’ called “handsale," (venditio per muluam tnanum complexioncm.) In pro- cess of time the same word was used to sig- nify the price or earnest which was given immediately after the shaking of bands, or instead thereof. 2 Bl. Comm. 448.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 2-204 — formation in general; contract by conduct]

The handsale — shaking of hands 'held necessary to bind a bargain' — is contract formation by conduct: agreement may be shown by the parties' acts.

Why: Genuine: the section codifies formation by conduct, the modern form of the handsale custom the entry describes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Job 17:3, KJV]

who is he that will strike hands with me?

Why: Handsale is the bargain bound by the shaking — the joining — of hands. Job's plea names the hand-strike as the seal that binds: 'who is he that will strike hands with me?'

HANDSEL.

Handsale, or earnest money.

HANDWRITING.

The chirography of a person; the cast or form of writing pecul- iar to a person, including the size, shape, and style of letters, tricks of penmanship, and whatever gives individuality to his writ- ing, distinguishing It from that of other per- sons. In re Hyland’s Will (Surr. Ct.) 27 N.

Y. Supp. 963.

Anything written by hand ; an instrument written by the hand of a person, or a speci- men of his writing.

Handwriting, considered under the law of evidence. Includes not only the ordinary writing of one able to write, but also writ- ing done in a disguised hand, or in cipher, and a mark made by one able or unable to write. 9 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, '264. See Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 301, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 901(b)(3) — authentication by comparison]

Handwriting 'considered under the law of evidence' is authenticated by comparison — by the trier of fact or by expert witnesses — with specimens.

Why: Genuine: the rule is the modern home of the handwriting comparison the entry describes.

HANG.

In old practice. To remain un- determined. “It has hung long enough ; it Is time it were made an end of.” Holt, C. J.. 1 Show. 77.

Thus, the present participle means pend-

Ins; during the pendency. .“If the tenant alien, hanging the p rtecipe.” Co. Lltt. 266a.

HANGING.

In criminal law. Suspen- sion by the neck; the mode of capital pun- ishment used in England from time imme- morial, and generally adopted in the United States. 4 Bl. Comm. 403.

—Hanging In chains. In atrocious cases it wag at one time usual, in England, for the court to direct a murderer, after execution, to be hanged upon a gibbet in chains near the place where the murder was committed, a prac- tice quite contrary to the Mosaic law. (Deut. xxi. 23.) Abolished by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 26. Wharton.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Oscar Wilde, "The Ballad of Reading Gaol", 1898]

"Yet each man kills the thing he loves." — Wilde's ballad narrates the hanging of a fellow prisoner at Reading Gaol and its moral aftermath: the English lyric on judicial hanging.

Why: Genuine: the poem is the lyric on the entry's subject ('suspension by the neck' as capital punishment); the entry defines it.

HANGMAN.

An executioner. One who executes condemned criminals by hanging.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Mark 6:27, KJV]

And immediately the king sent an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought: and he went and beheaded him in the prison.

Why: The hangman is the executioner of the condemned. Mark names the office in scripture: the king's executioner sent to do the beheading — the appointed doer of the sentence.

HAN G WITE.

In Saxon law. A fine for Illegal hanging of a thief, or for allowing him to escape. Immunity from such fine. Du Cange

HANSE.

An alliance or confederation among merchants or cities, for the good or- dering and protection of the commerce of Its members. An imposition upon merchandise. Du Cange.

—House towns. The collective name of cer- tain German cities, including Lubeck, Ham- burg, and Bremen, which formed an alliance for the mutual protection and furtherance of their commercial interests, in the twelfth cen- tury. The powerful confederacy thus formed was called the “Hanseatic League.” The league framed and promulgated a code of maritime law, which was known as the “Laws of the Hanse Towns.” or Jus Hanseaticum Mariti- mum. — House towns, lows of the. HANSGRAVE.

The chief of a company ; the head man of a corporation.

HAWTELOD . In old European law. An • arrest or attachment. Spelmnn.

HAH.

To catch. Thus, “hap the rent,” “hap the deed-poll,” were formerly used.

HAPPINESS.

The constitutional right of men to pursue their “happiness” means the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation, In any manner not Inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity, or develop their faculties, so as to give to them their highest enjoyment. Butchers’ Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., Ill U. S. 757. 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; 1 Bl. Comm. 41. And see Eng- lish v! English, 32 N. J. Eq. 750.

[Law] — Law

[Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U.S. 757]

The 'constitutional right of men to pursue their happiness' the entry defines is the liberty to pursue any lawful calling, as stated in the entry's own cited authority.

Why: Genuine: the footnote re-states the entry's own authority on the liberty of pursuit; year omitted because the entry does not supply it and it is not invented.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Gabriele Muccino, The Pursuit of Happyness, 2006]

(paraphrase) The film takes the entry's quoted phrase — the constitutional right to pursue happiness — as title and theme: one man's pursuit of happiness against destitution. (paraphrase)

Why: Borderline-accept: the film never litigates the constitutional right, but the entry quotes the Declaration's phrase and the film dramatizes the pursuit it names — titular and thematic match, not coincidence.

HAGUE.

In old statutes. A hand-gun, about three-quarters of a yard long.

Bl.Law Dict.(2d Ed.)— 36

HARACIUM.

In old English law. A race of horses and mares kept for breed ; a stud. Spelman.

HARBINGER.

In England, an officer of the royal household.

HARBOR, v. To receive clandestinely and without lawful authority a person for the purpose of so concealing him that an- other having a right to the lawful custody of such person shall be deprived of the same. Jones v. Van Zandt, 5 How. 215, 227, 12 L. Ed. 122. A distinction has been taken, in some decisions, between “harbor” and “con- ceal.” A person may be convicted of har- boring a slave, although he may not have concealed her. McElhaney v. State, 24 Ala. 71.

HARBOR, ». A haven, or a space of deep water so sheltered by the adjacent land as to afford a safe anchorage for ships. Rowe v. Smith, 51 Conn. 271, 50 Am. Hep. 16; The Aurania (D. C.) 29 Fed. 103; Peo- ple v. Klrsch, 67 Mich. 539, 35 N. W. 157.

“Port” is a word of larger import than “har- bor,” since it implies the presence of wharves, or at any rate the means and opportunity of receiving and discharging cargo.

—Harbor authority. In England a harbor authority is a body of persons, corporate or unincorporate, being proprietors of. or intrust- ed with the duty of constructing. Improving, managing, or lighting, any harbor. St. 24 & 25 Viet. c. 47. — Harbor line. A line mnrking the boundary of a certain part of a public wa- ter which is reserved for a harbor. Engs v. Peckham, 11 R. I. 224.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 23:15-16, KJV]

Thou shalt not deliver unto his master the servant which is escaped from his master unto thee: He shall dwell with thee, even among you, in that place which he shall choose in one of thy gates, where it liketh him best: thou shalt not oppress him.

Why: This block's substantive matter is HARBOR — receiving and concealing a person from lawful custody, the cases naming harboring a slave. The verse is scripture's law of the harborer, and it commands the opposite of the...

HARD LABOR.

A punishment, addi- tional to mere imprisonment, sometimes im- posed upon convicts sentenced to a peniten- tiary. But the labor Is not, as a rule, any harder than ordinary mechanical labor. Brown ▼. State, 74 Ala. 483.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIII — involuntary servitude permitted "as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted"]

Hard labor as a convict punishment lives inside the Thirteenth Amendment's express exception: involuntary servitude is permitted 'as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.'

Why: Genuine: the exception is the constitutional home of the punishment the entry defines; stated as the constitutional fact.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Henri Charrière, Papillon, 1969; film by Franklin J. Schaffner, 1973]

(paraphrase) Charrière's memoir of the French bagne in Guiana — where hard labor WAS the sentence, additional to imprisonment — and its film telling, is the culture's defining account of penal hard labor. (paraphrase)

Why: Genuine: the book/film is the defining account of the entry's punishment.

HARD MONEY.

Lawful coined money. Henry v. Bank of Salina, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 523, ' 536.

HARDHEIDIS.

In old Scotch law. Lions ; coins formerly of the value of three half-pence. 1 Pltc. Crlm. Tr. pt. 1, p. 64, note.

HARDSHIP.

The severity with which a proposed construction of the law would bear upon a particular case, founding, sometimes, an argument against such construction, which is otherwise termed the “argument ab inconvenienti."

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Argumentum ab inconvenienti plurimum valet in lege — an argument drawn from inconvenience is very strong in law]

The 'argument ab inconvenienti' the entry defines — hardship as an argument against a construction of law — is itself a maxim of interpretation.

Why: Genuine: the entry's own body names the argument the maxim formulates; the link is textual.

HARMLESS ERROR.

See Ebbob.

HARNASCA.

In old European law. The defensive armor of a man; harness. Spelmnn.

HARNESS.

All warlike Instruments; also the tackle or furniture of a ship.

HARO, HARROW.

Fr. In Norman and early English law. An outcry, or hue and cry after felons and malefactors. Cowell.

[Law] — Law

[Law: citizen's arrest — the common-law hue and cry]

The Norman hue and cry after felons is the ancestor of the common-law citizen's arrest.

Why: Genuine lineage: the hue and cry is the historical form of the citizen's power to arrest felons. Loose form.

HARRIOTT.

The old form of “heriot," <9. v.) Williams, Sets. 203.

HART.

A stag or male deer of the forest five years old complete.

HASP AND STAPLE.

In old Scotch law. The form of entering an heir In a sub- ject situated within a royal borough. It consisted of the heir's taking hold of the hasp and staple of the door, (which was the symbol of possession,) with other formali- ties. Bell ; BurrllL

HASPA.

In old English law. The hasp of a door; by which livery of seisin might anciently be made, where there was a house on the premises.

HASTA, Lab A spear. In the Homan law. a spear was the sign of a public sale of goods or sale by auction. Hence the phrase “ftoat® subjicere" (to put under the spear) meant to put up at auction. Calvin.

Is feudal law. A spear. The symbol used in making Investiture of a fief. Feud, lib. 2, tit. 2.

HAT MONEY.

In maritime law. Pri- mage ; a small duty paid to the captain and mariners of a ship.

HATTBER.

O. Fr. A high lord; a great baron. Spelman.

HAUGH, or HOWGH. A green plot In a valley.

HAUL.

The use of this word. Instead of the statutory word “carry,” In an indict- ment charging that the defendant “did felo- niously steal, take, and haul away” certain personalty, will not render the Indictment bad, the words being In one sense equiva- lent. Spittorff v. State, 108 Ind. 171, 8 N.

R. 911.

HAUR.

In old English law. Hatred. Leg. Wm. I. c. 16; Blount.

HAUSTUS.

Lat. In the civil law. A species of servitude, consisting in the right to draw water from another's well or spring, in which the iter, (right of way to the well or spring,) so far as it is necessary, Is tacit- ly included. Dig. 8, 3, 1; Maekeld. Rom. Law, § 318.

[Law] — Law

[Law: easements — servitudes appurtenant to land]

The civil-law servitude of drawing water from another's well has its common-law counterpart in the easement — a servitude appurtenant to land.

Why: Genuine: the easement is the common-law form of the servitude the entry defines. Loose form.

[Alfred Noyes, "The Highwayman", 1906]

(paraphrase) Noyes's ballad of the highwayman who 'came riding, riding, riding' is the culture's canonical highway piece — the king's highway and those who worked it. (paraphrase)

Why: Borderline-accept: the entry is two words ('highway') and the poem romanticizes highway robbery rather than defining the road — but the poem is the canonical highway piece and the entry names the legal thing it rides on.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

HAUT ESTRET.

L. Fr. High street; highway. Yearb. P. 11 Hen. VI. 2.

HAUTHONER.

In old English law. A man armed with a coat of mail. Jacob.

HAVE.

Lat. A form of the salutatory expression “Ave," used In the titles of some of the constitutions of the Theodostan and Justlnlanean codes. See Cod. 7, 62, 9; Id. 9. 2, 11.

HAVE.

To possess corporally. “No one, at common law, was said to have or to be In possession of land, unless it were con- veyed to him by the livery of seisin, which gave him the corporal investiture and bod- ily occupation thereof.” Bl. Law Tracts, 113.

— Have and hold. A common phrase in con- veyancing, derived from the habendum et ten- endum of the old common law. See Haben- dum et Tenendum.

HAVEN.

A place of a large receipt and safe riding of ships, so situate and secured by the land circumjacent that the vessels thereby ride and anchor safely, and are pro- tected by the adjacent land from dangerous or violent winds; as Milford Haven, Plym- outh Haven, and the like. Hale de Jure Mar. par. 2, c. 2. And see Lowndes v. Board of Trustees, 153 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 758, 38

L. Ed. 615; De Longuemere v. New York Ins. Co., 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 125(a) ; De Lovio v. Bolt, 7 Fed. Cas. 429.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 107:30, KJV]

Then are they glad because they be quiet; so he bringeth them unto their desired haven.

Why: A haven is the safe riding where ships are sheltered from violent winds. The psalm gives the haven its biblical meaning: storm-tossed sailors brought 'unto their desired haven' — safe harbor as divine deliverance.

HAW.

HAWKER.

A trader who goes from place to place, or along the streets of a town, selling the goods which he carries with him.

It is perhaps not essential to the idea, but la generally understood from the word, that a hawker is to be one who not only carries goods for sale, but seeks for purchasers, either by outcry, which some lexicographers conceive as intimated by the derivation of the word, or by attracting notice and attention to them, as goods for sale, by an actual exhibition or exposure of them, by placards or labels, or by a conventional signal, like the sound of a horn, for the sale of fish. (paraphrase) Chaucer's Pardoner — riding town to town selling pardons and counterfeit relics, confessing the seller's art in his own prologue — is literature's great itinerant seller. (paraphrase)

Why: Borderline-accept: the entry contemplates lawful street trade and the Pardoner is a fraud — but the entry's DEFINITION (place-to-place selling) fits him exactly, and the moral irony illuminates rather than distorts.

HAY-BOTE.

Another name for "hedge- bote,” being one of the estovers allowed to a tenant for life or years, namely, material for repairing the necessary hedges or fences of bis grounds. 2 Bl. Comm. 35; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 129.

HAYWARD.

In old English law. An officer appointed In the lord’s court to keep

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 30:13, KJV]

This they shall give, every one that passeth among them that are numbered, half a shekel after the shekel of the sanctuary:

Why: This block's 'head money' in its first sense is a capitation or poll tax — a fixed sum per head. The verse is the biblical poll tax, in God's speech: 'every one that passeth among them that are numbered' gives half a…

they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

Why: A healer in this entry cures 'without medicine or any material means.' The verse commissions exactly that: 'they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover' — healing by the hand, in Christ's own charge.

HEADING ACT.

Another name for a curative act or statute. See Lockhart v. Troy, 48 Ala. 5S4.

HEALTH.

Freedom from sickness or suffering. The right to the enjoyment of health is a subdivision of the right of per- sonal security, one of the absolute rights of persons. 1 Bl. Comm. 129, 134. As to in- juries affecting health, see 3 Bl. Comm. 122.

prescribing sanitary measures, and designed to promote or preserve the health of the commu- nity.—Health officer. The officer charged with the execution and enforcement of health laws. The powers and duties of health officers are regulated by local laws. — Public health. As one of the objects of the police power of the state, the “public health” means the pre- vailingly healthful or sanitary condition of the general body of people or the community in mass, and the absence of any general or wide-spread disease or cause of mortality.

[Law] — Law

[Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11 (1905)]

The entry names 'public health' as 'one of the objects of the police power of the state'; the charter case upholding compulsory health measures under that power is Jacobson.

Why: Genuine: Jacobson decides the police-power health authority the entry's own body names.

merits, as dis- tinguished from the bearing of any preliminary questions arising in the cause, and which are termed “interlocutory.” Akerly v. Vilas, 24 Wis. 171, 1 Am. Rep. 166.

In criminal law. The examination of a prisoner charged with a crime or misde- meanor, and of the witnesses for the ac- cused.

—Final hearing. See Final.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Audi alteram partem — hear the other side]

The hearing of the parties' counsel is the procedural embodiment of the principle that both sides must be heard.

Why: Genuine: the maxim is the principle the hearing procedure serves; stated as the principle, not stretched.

HEARS AT.

A term applied to that spe- cies of testimony given by a witness who relates, not what he knows personally, but wbat others have told him, or what he has heard said by others. Hopt v. Utah, 110

U. S. 574, 4 Sup. Ct 202. 28 L. Ed. 262; Morell v. Morell, 157 Ind. 179, 60 N. E. 1092; Stockton v. Williams, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 570; People v. Kraft, 91 Hun, 474, 36 N. T. Supp. 1034.

Hearsay evidence is that which does not derive its value solely from the credit of the witness, but rests mainly on the veracity and competency of other persons. The very nature of the evidence shows its weakness, and it is admitted only In specified cases from necessity. Code Ga. 1882, $ 3770; 1 Phil. Ev. 185.

Hearsay evidence Is second-hand evidence, as distinguished from original evidence; it is the repetition at second-hand of what would be original evidence if given by the person who originally made the statement.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. Art. VIII — the hearsay rule and its exceptions]

The second-hand testimony the entry defines at length — 'admitted only in specified cases from necessity' — is codified in the federal hearsay rule and its exceptions.

Why: Genuine and direct: Article VIII is the rule's home for the doctrine the entry defines.

HEAT OF PASSION.

In criminal law. A state of violent and uncontrollable rage engendered by a blow or certain other provo- cation given, which will reduce a homicide from the grade of murder to that of man- slaughter. A state of mind contradistin- guished from a cool state of the blood. State v. Wieners, 66 Mo. 25; State v. Andrew, 76 Mo. 101 ; State v. Seaton, 106 Mo. 198, 17 S.

S. w; 367.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Model Penal Code § 210.3 — manslaughter; homicide committed under extreme emotional disturbance is manslaughter, not murder]

A homicide committed in heat of passion upon adequate provocation is mitigated from murder to voluntary manslaughter — the classic 'cool state of the blood' line drawn by the entry.

Why: Genuine, not forced: the entry's entire definition is the mitigation doctrine itself, and its cited Missouri authorities (State v. Wieners, 66 Mo. 25; State v. Seaton, 106 Mo. 198) are real precedents applying it. MPC...

[Deuteronomy 19:6, KJV]

Lest the avenger of the blood pursue the slayer, while his heart is hot, and overtake him, because the way is long, and slay him; whereas he was not worthy of death, inasmuch as he hated him not in time past.

Why: The cities-of-refuge law draws the same line the doctrine draws: killing in heat, without prior hatred (malice aforethought), is distinguished from murder worthy of death. Scripture's 'while his heart is hot' is the a...

HEAVE TO.

In maritime parlance and admiralty law. To stop a sailing vessel’s headway by bringing her head “into the wind,” that is, In the direction from which the wind blows. [Law] — Law

[Law: 4 Hen. VII c. 15 — statute regulating fishing in the Thames below London Bridge, cited in the entry as authority]

The unlawful Thames fisher is a creature of the cited statute, 4 Hen. VII c. 15, which restricted fishing below London Bridge.

Why: Genuine: the entry itself cites the statute as its authority, and the statute is the term's legal source — the offense exists because the statute created it. No forcing; the link is the entry's own.

[Law] — Law

[Law: St. 23 Hen. VIII c. 5 — statute concerning fish weirs, cited in the entry]

Fish weirs in ebbing water were prohibited by statute; the term denotes the regulated device under St. 23 Hen. VIII c. 5.

Why: Genuine: the statute cited in the entry is the legal source of the term's significance; without it the word would be a mere dictionary curiosity.

HEBDOMADIUS.

A week’s man; the canon or prebendary In a cathedral church, who had the peculiar care of the choir and the offices of It for his own week. Cowell.

[Law: 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 35 — common of estovers, cited in the entry]

Hedge-bote is a species of estovers — the common-law right of a tenant to take wood from the demised land for repairs — treated by Blackstone alongside house-bote and plough-bote.

Why: Genuine: the entry cites 2 Bl. Comm. 35 as its authority, and Blackstone's estovers doctrine is exactly what gives the term legal meaning — the right is limited to what is needed for repair and cannot be sold.

HEIR.

At common law. A person who succeeds, by the rules of law, to an estate In lands, tenements, or hereditaments, upon the death of his ancestor, by descent and right of relationship. Hoover v. Smith, 96 Md. 393, 54 Atl. 102; Fletcher v. Holmes, 32 Ind. 510; Sewall v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 268; Dodge’s Appeal, 106 Pa. 216, 51 Am. Rep. 519; Howell v. Gifford, 64 N. J. Eq. 180, 53 Atl. 1074.

The term "heir” has a very different significa- tion at common law from wbat it has in those states and countries which have adopted the civil law. In the latter, the term is indis- criminately applied to all persons who are call- ed to the succession, whether by the act of the party or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the “testamentary heir;” and the next of kin by bloood is, in cases of intestacy, call- ed the "heir at law,” or “heir by intestacy.” The executor of the common law in many re- spects corresponds to the testamentary heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by in- testacy. By the common law, executors and administrators have no right except to the per- sonal estate of the deceased ; whereas the heir by the civil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. Story, Confl. Laws, IS 57, 508.

In the civil law. A universal successor in the event of death. He who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property or estate, rights and obligations, of a decedent, and occupies his place.

The term “heir” has several significations. Sometimes it refers to one who has formally ac- cepted a succession and taken possession there- of; sometimes to one who is called to succeed, but still retains the faculty of accepting or re- nouncing, and it is frequently used as ap- plied to one who has formally renounced. Mumford v. Bowman, 26 La. Ann. 417.

Estate, 2 Fed. Cas. 42 ; McKinney v. Stew- art, 5 Kan. 394. — Heir beneficiary. In the civil law. One who has accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Heirs are divided into two classes, ac- cording to the manner in which they accept the successions left to them, to-wit, unconditional and beneficiary heirs. Unconditional heirs are those who inherit without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether their acceptance be express or tacit. Beneficiary heirs are those who have accepted the succes- sion under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Civ. Code La. art. 881.— Heir by adop- tion. An adopted child, “who is in a limited sense made an heir, not by the law, but by the contract evidenced by the deed of adoption." In re Sessions’ Estate, 70 Mich. 297, 38 N. W. 249, 14 Am. St. Rep. 500. — Heir by custom. In English law. One whose right of inheritance depends upon a particular and local custom, such as gavelkind, or borough English. Co. Litt. 140.— Heir by devise. One to whom lands are devised by will ; a devisee of lands. Answering to the hmres factue (q. v.) of the civil law. — Heir collateral. One who is not lineally related to the decedent, but is of col- lateral kin ; e. g., bis uncle, cousin, brother, nephew.— Heir conventional. In the civil law. One who takes a succession by virtue of a contract or settlement entitling him thereto. —Heir, forced. One who cannot be disinher- ited. See Forced Heirs.— Heir general. An heir at law. The ordinary heir by blood, suc- ceeding to all the lands. Forrest v. Porch, 100 Tenn. 391, 45 S. W. 676.— Heir institute. In Scotch law. One to whom the right of suc- cession is ascertained by disposition or ex- ress deed of the deceased. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. , p. 75.— Heir, irregular. In Louisiana. Ir- regular heirs are those who are neither testa- mentary nor legal, and who have been establish- ed by law to take the succession. See Civ. Code La. art. 874. When there are no direct or collateral relatives surviving the decedent, and the succession consequently devolves upon the surviving husband or wife, or illegitimate children, or the state, it is called an “irreg- ular succession.’’— Heir, legal. In the civil law. A legal heir is one who takes the suc- cession by relationship to the decedent and by force of law. This is different from a tes- tamentary or conventional heir, who takes the succession in virtue of the disposition of man. See Civ. Code La. arts. 873, 875. The term is also used in Anglo-American law in substan- tially the same sense, that is, the person to whom the law would give the decedent’s prop- erty, real and personal, if he should die in- testate.
