[Maxim: Nemo est haeres viventis — no one is the heir of a living person]

At common law the heir succeeds by descent on the ancestor's death — which is why no one can be heir of a living person.

Why: Genuine: the maxim states the definitional core of the entry (succession 'upon the death of his ancestor'), and the entry's own authorities (Hoover v. Smith, 96 Md. 393; Fletcher v. Holmes, 32 Ind. 510) are real prece…

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 27:8, KJV]

And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a man die, and have no son, then ye shall cause his inheritance to pass unto his daughter.

Why: Scriptural inheritance law stating the descent rule itself: on the ancestor's death the estate passes by fixed rules of relationship to the heir — the very mechanism the entry defines.

HEIR-LOOMS.

Such goods and chat- tels as, contrary to the nature of chattels, shall go by special custom to the heir along with the inheritance, and not to the ex- ecutor. The termination “loom" (Sax.) sig- nifies a limb or member; so that an heir- loom is nothing else but a limb or member of the inheritance. They are generally such things as cannot be taken away without damaging or dismembering the freehold ; such as deer in a park, doves in a cote, deeds and charters, etc. 2 Bl. Comm. 427.

[Law: 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 427 — heir-looms as members of the inheritance, cited in the entry]

Chattels that pass with the inheritance to the heir rather than to the executor, as limbs of the freehold — Blackstone's doctrine of heir-looms.

HEIRDOM.

Succession by inheritance.

HEIRESS.

A female heir to a person having an estate of inheritance. When there are more than one, they are called "co-heir- esses," or "co-heirs."

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Numbers 27:7, KJV]

The daughters of Zelophehad speak right: thou shalt surely give them a possession of an inheritance among their father's brethren; and thou shalt cause the inheritance of their father to pass unto them.

Why: The direct scriptural warrant for the female heir: the daughters of Zelophehad receive their father's inheritance by divine ruling — the heiress as a legal office, not an exception.

HEXR8.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Rule in Shelley's Case — 'heirs' construed as words of limitation; the ancestor takes the fee and the heirs take by descent]

In conveyancing, 'heirs' operates as a word of limitation, not of purchase — it marks the quantum of the estate (a fee) taken by the grantee, which is why the word is used where a fee is intended to pass.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the word's office in deeds of conveyance, and the limitation-versus-purchase distinction is the governing doctrine for that office. The Rule in Shelley's Case is the locus classicus; stated...

HEIRSHIP.

The quality or condition of being heir, or the relation between the heir and his ancestor.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 13:22, KJV]

A good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children: and the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.

Why: The heir-ancestor relation as scripture states it: inheritance flows down the generations, the ancestor's duty being to leave an estate for those who succeed him.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[James 3:4, KJV]

Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth.

Why: Bears on the nautical sense in the entry (the tiller/rudder): scripture uses the helm as the instrument by which great ships are governed — the small member ruling the great body.

HELOWE-WALL.

In medical jurispru- dence. Unilateral paralysis ; paralysis of one side of the body, commonly due to a lesion in the brain, but sometimes originating from the spinal cord, as in “Brown-Sequard's paral- ysis,” unilateral paralysis with crossed an- testheeia. In the cerebral form, the hemi- plegia is sometimes “alternate” or crossed, that is, occurring on the opposite side of the body from the initial lesion.

If the disease comes on rapidly or suddenly, it Is called “quick” hemiplegia; if slowly or gradually, “chronic.” The former variety !b more apt to affect the mental faculties than the latter; but, where hemiplegia is complete, the operations of the mind are generally much im- paired. Bee Baughman v. Baughman, 32 Kan. 538, 4 Pac. 1003.

old Norse term into the laws of the Con- queror is difficult to be accounted for; it is not found in any Anglo-Saxon law extant Wharton.

HERALD.

In ancient law, a herald was a diplomatic messenger who carried messages between kings or states, and especially proc- lamations of war, peace, or truce. In Eng- lish law, a herald Is an officer whose duty is to keep genealogical lists and tables, ad- just armorial bearings, and regulate the cer- emonies at royal coronations and funerals.

—Heralds’ College. In England. An ancient royal corporation, first instituted by Richard

III. in 1483. It comprises three kings of arms, six heralds, and four marshals or pursuivants of arms, together with the earl marshal and a secretary. The heralds’ books, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, and to register such mar- riages and descents as were verified to them up- on oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees. The heralds’ office is still allowed to make grants of arms and topermit change of names. 3 Starkie, Ev. 843; Wharton.

A right to pasture cattle on another's ground is a profit à prendre — an incorporeal hereditament distinct from a mere easement — bounded as the entry states (it does not include cutting grass or picking apples).

Why: Genuine: the entry cites Bracton and Coke on Littleton as its authorities, and the profit-à-prendre classification is the live doctrine under which herbage sits — confirmed by the entry's own limitation in Simpson v....

HERBERGAGIEM.

Lodgings to receive guests in the way of hospitality. Cowell.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Hebrews 13:2, KJV]

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares.

Why: The entry defines lodgings for receiving guests 'in the way of hospitality'; the verse states hospitality to strangers as a standing duty — the moral root of the inn/lodging office.

K

KERBERGARE.

To harbor; to enter- tain.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Hebrews 13:2, KJV]

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares.

At common law an intersex person was deemed male or female according to the predominance of the sex — Coke's rule for legal classification.

Why: Genuine: the maxim is the entry's own cited authority (Co. Litt. 8) and states the legal rule, not mere medicine. The scan OCR garbles the Latin, so the maxim is cited in canonical form as a [Maxim:] citation rather t...

HIDE.

In old English law. A measure of land, being as much as could be worked with one plow. It la variously estimated at from 60 to 100 acres, but was probably de- termined by local usage. Another meaning was as much land as would support one family or the dwellers in a mansion-house. Also a house; a dwelling-house.

[Law] — Law

[Law: St. 1 Hen. VII cc. 5, 6 — statutes concerning sanctuary, cited in the entry as authority]

Sanctuary — a place of protection from arrest — was a statutory creature, limited and regulated by the cited Henrician statutes.

Why: Genuine: the entry cites the statutes as its authority and they are the legal source of the sanctuary privilege described. Same statute-as-source handling as HEBBERMAN.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Joshua 20:2, KJV]

Speak to the children of Israel, saying, Appoint out for you cities of refuge, whereof I spake unto you by the hand of Moses:

Why: The entry is the sanctuary — a place of protection. Scripture institutes it directly: the cities of refuge, appointed by divine command for the slayer to flee to. First-person divine speech ('I spake unto you').

Originally, government by a body of priests. Now, the body of offi- cers in any church or ecclesiastical institu- tion, considered as forming an ascending series of ranks or degrees of power and au- thority, with the correlative subjection, each to the one next above. Derivatively, any body of men, taken in their public capacity, and considered as forming a chain of powers, as above described.

In

the practice of the English supreme court of judicature there are two scales regulating the fees of the court and the fees which solicitors are entitled to charge. The lower scale applies (unless the court otherwise orders) to the following cases; All causes and matters assigned by the judicature acts to the king’s .bench, or the probate, -divorce, and admiralty divisions ; all actions of debt, contract, or tort; and in almost all causes and matters assigned by the acts to the chancery division in which the amount in litigation is under £1,000. The higher scale applies in all other causes and matters, and also in actions falling under one of the above classes, but in which the principal relief sought to be obtained is an injunction. Sweet.

HIGHWAY.

A free and public road, way, or street; one which every person has the right to use. Abbott v. Duluth (C. C.) 104 Fed. 837 ; Shelby County Com'rs v. Cas- tetter, 7 Ind. App. 309, 33 N. B. 980; State v. Cowan, 29 N. C. 248; In re City of New York, 135 N. Y. 253, 31 N. B. 1048, 81 Am. St Rep. 825; Parsons v. San Francisco, 28 Cal. 464.

“In all counties of this state, public high- ' ways are roads, streets, alleys, lanes, courts, places, trails, and bridges, laid out or erected as such by the public, or, if laid out and erected by others, dedicated or abandoned to the public, or made such in actions for the partition of real property.” PoL Code Cal. i 2618.

There is a difference in the shade of meaning conveyed by two uses of the word. Sometimes it signifies right of free passage, in the ab- stract, not importing anything about the char- acter or construction of the way. Thus, a river is called a “highway;” and it has been not unusual for congress, in granting a privilege of building a bridge, to declare that it shall be a public highway. Again, it has reference to some system of law authorizing the taking a strip of land, and preparing and devoting it to the use of travelers. In this use it imports a road-way upon the soil, constructed under the authority of these laws. Abbott.

— Commissioners of highways. Public of- ficers appointed in .the several counties and municipalities, in many states, to take charge of the opening, altering, repair, and vacating of highways within their respective jurisdic- tions.—Common highway. By this term is meant a road to be used by the community at large for any purpose of transit or traffic. Ham. N. P. 239; Railway Co. v. State, 23 Fla. 546, 3 South. 158, 11 Am. St. Rep. 395. —Highway acts, or laws. The body or sys- tem of laws governing the laying out, repair, and use of highways.— Highway crossing. A filace where the track of a railroad crosses the ine of a highway.— Highway-rate. In Eng- lish law. A tax for and applicable to the making and repair of highways. Stone v. Bean, 15 Gray (Mass.) 44.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Abbott v. Duluth (C.C.) 104 Fed. 837 — public highway defined by the public right of use, cited in the entry]

A highway is defined not by ownership of the soil but by the public's right of passage — roads become highways by dedication and public acceptance, which is why 'every person has the right to use' them.

Why: Genuine: the entry's definition turns on the public right of passage, and its own cited authorities decide that point; the dedication-and-acceptance doctrine is what gives the definition legal content.

HINDER AND DELAY.

To hinder and delny is to do something which is an attempt to defraud, rather than a successful fraud; to put some obstacle in the path, or interpose some time, unjustifiably, before the creditor can realize what is owed out of his debtor's property. See Walker v. Sayers, 5 Bush (Ky.) 582 ; Burdick v. Post, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 186 ; Crow v. Benrdsley, 68 Mo. 439 ; Burn- ham v. Brennnn, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 63.

Why: Genuine: the entry's 'hinder and delay' phrasing is verbatim the Statute of Elizabeth's operative language, and its cited cases (Walker v. Sayers, 5 Bush (Ky.) 582; Burdick v. Post, 12 Barb. 186) are real authorities...

To engage in service for a stipulated re- ward, as to hire a servant for a year, or laborers by the day or month; to engage a man to temporary service for wages. To “employ” is a word of more enlarged signifi- cation. A man hired to labor is employed, but a man may be employed in a work who is not hired. McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11

HJlkING. Hiring is a contract by which one person grants to another either the en- joyment of a thing or the use of the labor and industry, either of himself or his serv- ant during a certain time, for a stipulated compensation, or where one contracts for the labor or services of another about a thing balled to him for a specified purpose. Code Ga. 1882, | 2085.

Hiring is a contract by which one gives to another the temporary possession and use of property, other than money, for reward, and the latter agrees to return the same to the former at a future time. Civ. Code Cal. | 1925; Civ. Code Dak. f 1103.

Synonyms. "Hiring” and "borrowing” are both contracts by which a qualified property may be transferred to the hirer or borrower, and they differ only in this, that hiring is al- ways for a price, stipend, or recompense, while borrowing is merely gratuitous. 2 Bl. Why: The hirer is the one who engages the labourers; the verse names his characteristic wrong — the hire kept back by fraud — and where the cry of it is heard.

[Leviticus 19:13, KJV]

Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him: the wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning.

Why: The hirer is the one who engages service for a stipulated reward; the verse states his correlative duty — the hired servant's wages paid promptly, not held overnight. Direct second-person divine command.

Where a written instrument is latently ambiguous about identity, parol evidence is admissible to show who was intended — so 'his' does not conclusively denote a male.

A legal holiday suspends the machinery of commercial paper — no presentment, demand, or protest is required on a day the law exempts, with time reckoned accordingly.

Why: Genuine: the entry's 'legal holiday' sub-definition is exactly this commercial-paper rule; the annotation states the doctrine behind the definition. No UCC section cited because the precise number cannot be verified h...

Six days shall work be done: but the seventh day is the sabbath of rest, an holy convocation; ye shall do no work therein: it is the sabbath of the LORD in all your dwellings.

Why: The entry defines the holiday as a religious festival and a day of exemption from labor; the verse institutes both halves at once — the holy convocation and the cessation of work.

The holder — one who acquires a bill, note, or check by indorsement or delivery — is the foundation of negotiable-instruments law; only a holder in due course takes free of personal defenses.

the latter Bitting, and held his hands extend- ed and joined between the hands of the lord, and said: “I become your man [homo] from this day forward, of life and limb and earthly honor, and to you will be faithful and loyal, and bear you faith, for the tenements that I claim to hold of you, saving the faith that I owe unto our sovereign lord the king, so help me God.” The tenant then received a kiss from the lord. Homage could be done only to the lord himself. Lltt. | 85; Glanv. lib. 9, c. 1 ; Bract fols. 776, 78-80; Wharton.

"Homage” Is to be distinguished from "fealty,” another Incident of feudalism, and which consisted in the solemn oath of fidelity made by the vassal to the lord, whereas hom- age was merely an acknowledgment of ten- ure; If the homage was intended to include fealty, It was called "liege homage;” but otherwise it was called "simple homage.” Brown.

HOMICIDAL.

Pertaining to homicide; relating to homicide; impelling to homicide; as a homicidal mania. (See Insanity.)

HOMICIDE.

The killing of any human creature. 4 Bl. Comm. 177. The killing of one human being by the act, procurement, or omission of another. Pen. Code N. Y. J 179. The act of a human being in taking away the life of another human being. Sanders v. State, 113 Ga. 207, 38 S. E. 842; People v. Hill, 49 Hun, 432, 3 N. Y. Supp. 564 ; Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212, 81 Am. Dec. 781; State v. Lodge, 9 Houst (Dei.) 542, 33 Atl. 312; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 303, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

Homicide is not necessarily a crime. It is a necessary ingredient of the crimes of murder and manslaughter, but there are other cases in which homicide may be conrmitted without criminal intent and without criminal consequen- ces, as, where it is done in the lawful execution of a judicial sentence, in self-defense, or as the only possible means of arresting an escaping felon. The term "homicide” is neutral ; while it describes the act, it pronounces no judgment on its moral or legal quality. See People v. Connors, 13 Misc. Rep. 582, 35 N. Y. Supp. 475.

Classification. Homicide is ordinarily clas- sified as "justifiable,” "excusable,” and "felonious.” For tiie definition of these terms, and of some other compound terms, see infra. —Culpable homicide. HUNDRED.

Under the Saxon organiza- tion of England, each county or shire com- prised an indefinite number of hundreds, each hundred containing ten titIUngs, or groups of ten families of freeholders or frank- pledges. The hundred was governed by a high constable, and had Its own court; but its most remarkable feature was the cor- porate responsibility of the whole for the crimes or defaults of the individual mem- bers. The Introduction of this plan of or- ganization into England is commonly ascrib- ed to Alfred, but the Idea, as well of the collective liability as of the division, was prob- ably known to the ancient German peoples, as we find the same thing established in the Frankish kingdom under Clothalre, and in Denmark. See 1 BL Comm. 115; 4 BL Comm. 411.

—Hundred court. In English law. A larg- er court-baron, being held for all the inhabitants of a particular hundred, instead of a manor. The free suitors arc the judges, and the steward the registrar, as in the case of a court-baron. It is not a court of record, and resembles a court-baron in all respects except that in point of territory it is of greater junsdiction. These courts have long since fallen into desuetude. 3 Bl. Comm. 34, 35 ; 3 Steph. Comm. 394, 395. — Hundred gemote. HYPOTHEC.

In Scotland, the term “ hypothec ” is used to signify the landlord's right which, Independently of any stipula- tion, he has over the crop and stocking of his tenant. 'It gives a security to the landlord over the crop of each year for the lent of that year, and over the cattle and stocking on the farm for the current year's rent, which last continues for three months after the last conventional term for the payment of the rent Bell.

HYPOTHECA.

“Hypotkeca” was a term of the Roman law, and denoted a pledge or mortgage. As distinguished from the term “pignut ,” In the same law, it denoted a mort- gage, whether of lands or of goods, in which the subject in pledge remained in the pos- session of the mortgagor or debtor ; whereas in the pignut the mortgagee or creditor was in the possession. Such an hypothecs might be either express or implied ; express, where the parties upon the occasion of a loan en- tered Into express agreement to that effect; or implied, as, e. g., in the case of the stock and utensils of a farmer, which were subject to the landlord's right as a creditor for rent ; whence the Scotch law of hypothec.

The word has suggested the term “hypoth- ecate,” as used in the mercantile and mari- time law of England. Thus, under the fac- tor’s act, goods are frequently said to be “hypothecated;” and a captain is said to have a right to hypothecate his vessel for necessary repairs. Brown. See Mackeld. Rom. HYPOTHECATION.

A term borrowed from the civil law. In so far ns it is nat- uralized In English and American law, it means a contract of mortgage or pledge In which the subject-matter is not delivered into the possession of the pledgee or pawnee ; or, conversely, a conventional right existing in one person over specific property of an- other, which consists in the: power to cause a sale of the same, though it be not in his possession, in order that a specific claim of the creditor may be satisfied out of the pro- ceeds.

The term is frequently used in our text- books and reports, particularly upon the law of bottomry and maritime liens; thus a ves- sel is said to be hypothecated for the demand of one who has advanced money - for sup- plies.

In the common law, there are but few* if any, cases of hypothecation, in the strict sense of the civil law: that is, a pledge without possession by the pledgee. The nearest approaches, per- haps, are cases of bottomry bonds and claims of materialmen, and of seamen' for wages; but these are liens and privileges, rather than hy- pothecations. Story, Bailm. | 288.

“Hypothecation” is a term of the civil law, and is that kind of pledge in which the posses- sion of the thing pledged remains with the debt- or, (the obligation resting in mere contract with- out delivery ;) and in this respect distinguished from "pignut,” in which possession is delivered to the creditor or pawnee. Whitney v. Peay, 24 Ark. 27. See 2 Bell, Comm. 25.

HYPOTHECATION BOND.

It corresponds to the mortgage of real prop- erty in English law, and is a real charge, fol- lowing the property into whosesoever hands it comes. It may be ligale, as in the case of the charge which the state has over the lands of its accountants, or which a married woman has over those of her husband; judiciaire, when it is the result of a judgment of a court of jus- tice; and conventionelle, when it is the result of an agreement of the parties. Brown.

HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION.

Hysteria is much more com- mon in women than in men, and was formerly thought to be due to some disorder of the uterus or sexual system ; but it is now known that it may occur in men, in children, and in very aged persons of either sex.

In the convulsive form of hysteria, common- ly called ‘‘hysterics” or "a fit of hysterics,” there is nervestorm characterized by loss or abandonment of self-control in the expression of the emotions, particularly grief, By par- oxysms of tears or laughter or both together, sensations of constriction as of a ball rising in the throat (globus hystericus), convulsive movements in the chest, pelvis, and abdomen, sometimes leading to a fail with apparent un- consciousness, followed by a relapse into semi- unconsciousness or catalepsy. In the non-con- vulsive forms, all kinds of organic paralyses may be simulated, as well as muscular contrac- tions and spasms, tremor, loss of sensation (an- aithesia) or exaggerated sensation (hyperasthe- siaj, disturbances of respiration, disordered ap- petite. accelerated pulse, hemorrhages in the skin (stigmata), pain, swelling, or even disloca- tion of the joints, and great amenability to sug- gestion.

Sounding the same or alike; having the same sound. A term ap- plied to names which are substantially the same, though slightly varied In the spelling, as “Lawrence” and "Lawronce,” and the like. 1 Cromp. & M. 806 ; 3 Chit. Gen. Pr. 171.

Two names are said to he “ idem sonantes ” if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguish- ing them when pronounced, or if common and long-continued usage has by corruption or ab- breviation made them identical in pronuncia- tion. State v. Griffie, 118 Mo. 188, 23 S. W. 878. The rule of “idem sonant ” is that abso- lute accuracy in spelling names is not required in a legal document or proceedings either civil or criminal ; that if the name, as spelled in the document, though different from the correct spelling thereof, conveys to the ear, when pro- nounced according to the commonly accepted methods, a sound practically identical with the correct name as commonly pronounced, the name thus given is a sufficient identification of the individual referred to, and no advantage can be taken of the clerical error. Hubner v. Reick- hoff, 103 Iowa, 368, 72 N. W. 540, 64 Am. St. Rep. 101. But the doctrine of “ idem sonant” has been much enlarged by modern decisions, to conform to the growing rule that a variance, to be material, must be such as has misled the op- posite party to his prejudice. State v. White, 34 S. C. 59, 12 S. E. 661, 27 Am. St Rep. 783.

Brown.

IGNORANCE.

The want or absence of knowledge.

Ignorance of law is want of knowledge or acquaintance with the laws of the land in so far as they apply to the act, relation, duty, or matter under consideration. Igno- rance of fact is want of knowledge of some fact or facts constituting or relating to the subject-matter in hand. Marshall v. Cole- man. 187 111. 556, 58 N. E. 628; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 130. 19 Am. Dec. 353.

Ignorance is not a state of the mind in the sense in which sanity and insanity are. When the mind is ignorant of a fact, its condition still remains sound ; the power of thinking, of judging, of willing, is just as complete before communication of the fact as after ; the essence or texture, so to speak, of the mind, is not, as in the case of insanity, affected or impaired. Ignorance of a particular fact consists in this: that the mind, although sound and capable of healthy action, has never acted upon the fact in question, because the subject has never been brought to the notice of the perceptive faculties. Meeker v. Boylan, 28 N. J. Law, 274.

Synonyms. “Ignorance” and “error” or "mistake” are not convertible terms. The former is a lack of information or absence of knowledge ; the latter, a misapprehension or confusion of information, or a mistaken supposition of the possession of knowledge. Error as to a fact may imply ignorance of the truth ; but ignorance does not necessari- ly Imply error. Hutton v. Edgerton, 6 Rich. (S. C.) 489; Culbreath ▼. Culbreath, 7 Ga. 70, 50 Am. Dec. 375.

Essential ignorance is ignorance in re- lation to some essential circumstance so inti- mately connected with the matter in question, and which so influences the parties, that it in- duces them to act in the business. Poth. Vente. nn. 3, 4 ; 2 Kent. Comm. 367. Non-essential or accidental ignorance is that which has not of itself any necessary connection with the business in question, and which is not the true consideration for entering into the contract. In- voluntary ignorance is that which does not proceed from choice, and which cannot be over- come by the use of any means of knowledge known to a person and within his power; as the ignorance of a law which has not yet been promulgated. Voluntary ignorance exists when a party might, by taking reasonable pains, have acquired the necessary knowledge. For ex- ample. every man might acquire a knowledge of the laws which have been promulgated. Doct & Stud. 1, 46 ; Plowd. 343.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 23:34, KJV]

Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and cast lots.

Why: The entry treats ignorance as bearing on liability; the verse pleads ignorance in mitigation of culpability itself — 'they know not what they do' — in Jesus' own verbatim speech from the cross.

IGNORANTIA.

Lat. Ignorance ; want of knowledge. Distinguished, from mistake, (error.) or wrong conception. Mackeld. Rom. Law, | 178; Dig. 22, 6. Divided by Lord Coke into ipnorantia facli (Ignorance of fact) and ignorantia juris, (ignorance of law.) And the former, he adds, is twofold. — lec- tionis et lingua, (Ignorance of reading and ignorance of language.) 2 Coke, 3b.

Ignorantia eorum quae quia scire ten- etnr non ezensat. Ignorance of those things which one is bound to know excuses not. Hale, P. C. 42; Broom, Max. 267.

Ignorantia faeti ezensat. Ignorance of fact excuses or is a ground of relief. 2 Coke. 3b. Acts done and contracts made under mistake or ignorance of a material fact are voidable and relievable in lnw and equity. 2 Kent, Comm. 491, and notes.

Ignorantia faeti ezensat, ignorantia juris non ezensat. Ignorance of the fact excuses; ignorance of the law excuses not. Every man must be taken to be cognizant of the law ; otherwise there Is no saying to what extent the excuse of ignorance may not be carried. 1 Coke. 177 ; Broom, Max. 253.

Ignorantia juris quod quisqne tenetnr scire, nemlnem excnsat. Ignorance of the [or a] law, which every one Is bound to know, excuses no man. A mistake in point of law is, in criminal cases, no sort of de- fense. 4 Bl. Comm. 27; 4 Steph. Comm. 81; Broom, Max. 253 ; 7 Car. & P. 456. And, in civil cases, ignorance of the law, with a full knowledge of the facts, furnishes no ground, either in law or equity, to rescind agreements, or reclaim money paid, or set aside solemn acts of the parties. 2 Kent, Comm. 401, and note.

Ignorantia legis nemlnem excnsat. Ig- norance of law excuses no one. 4 Bouv. Inst no. 3828; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. { 111; 7 Watts, 374.

[Maxim: Ignorantia eorum quae quis scire tenetur non excusat — ignorance of those things which one is bound to know excuses not (Hale, P.C. 42, as cited in the entry)]

Ignorance excuses only what one could not be bound to know — ignorance of what one is bound to know is no excuse.

Why: Genuine: the entry's subject is ignorance and it quotes this maxim from Hale with the cite; the maxim states the operative limit of the ignorance excuse. Latin quoted verbatim as the entry gives it.

IGNORATIO ELENCHI.

Lat. A term of logic, sometimes applied to pleadings and to arguments on appeal, which signifies a mistake of the question, that is, the mistake of one who, failing to discern the real ques- tion which he is to meet and answer, ad- dresses his allegations or arguments to a collateral matter or something beside the point See Case upon the Statute for Dis- tribution, Wythe (Va.) 309.

Goods the tenant brings onto leased premises (invecta et illata) were tacitly hypothecated to the Roman landlord — the ancestor of the common-law landlord's distress for rent.

Why: Genuine: the entry itself draws the Roman-to-common-law parallel; the annotation names the Roman doctrine (invecta et illata) that gives the term its legal content. Stored headword key is the OCR form.

I

ILLEGAL.

Not authorized by law; Il- licit; unlawful; contrary to law.

Sometimes this term means merely that which lacks authority of or support from law ; but more frequently it imports a violation. Etymo- logically, the word seems to convey the nega- tive meaning only. But in ordinary use it has a severer, stronger signification ; the idea of censure or condemnation for breaking law is usually presented. But the law implied in il- legal is not necessarily an express statute. Things are called "illegal” for a violation of common-law principles. And the term does not imply that the act spoken of is immoral or wicked; it implies only a breach of the law. See State v. Haynorth, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 65; Tiedt v. Carstensen, 01 Iowa. 334, 16 N. W. 214; Chadbourne v. Newcastle, 48 N. H. 199; People v. Kelly, 1 Abb. Prac. N. S., (N. X.) 437; Ex parte Scwartz, 2 Tex. App. 80. —Illegal conditions. ILLEGITIMACY.

The condition before the law, or the social status, of a bastard; the state or condition of one whose parents were not intermarried at the time of his birth. Miller v. Miller, 18 Hun (N. X.) 509; Brown v. Belmarde, 3 Kan. 52.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 23:2, KJV]

A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the LORD; even to his tenth generation shall he not enter into the congregation of the LORD.

Why: The entry is the bastard's condition before the law — his social and legal status; the verse states that status in its starkest scriptural form: exclusion from the congregation to the tenth generation.

ILLEGITIMATE.

That which is con- trary to law; it is usually applied to bas- tards, or children born out of lawful wed- lock.

The Louisiana Code divided illegitimate chil- dren into two classes: (1) Those born from two persons who, at the moment when such children were conceived, could have lawfully intermarried; and (2) those who are born from persons to whose marriage there existed at the time some legal impediment. Why: The entry is the necessity maxim — what is otherwise not permitted, necessity permits; the verses give its scriptural instance, cited by Jesus himself: David eating what 'was not lawful,' hunger warranting the act. De...

ILLUSORY.

Deceiving by false appear- ances ; nominal, • as distinguished from sub- stantial.

— Illusory appointment. Formerly the ap- pointment of a merely nominal share of the property to ODe of the objects of a power, In order to escape the rule that an exclusive appointment could not be made unless it was au- thorized by the instrument 'creating the power, was considered illusory and void in equity. But this rule has been abolished in England. (1 Wm. IV. c. 46 ; 37 & 38 Viet. c. 37.) Sweet. See Ingraham v. Meade, 3 Wall. Jr. 32, 13 Fed. Cas. 50. — Illusory appointment act. The statute 1 Wm. To 'compass or imagine' the sovereign's death is treason — but the imagining, being an act of the mind, must be demonstrated by some overt act proved against the accused.

IMMATERIAL.

Not material, essential, or necessary; not Important or pertinent; not decisive.

— Immaterial averment. An averment al- leging with needless particularity or unneces- sary circumstances what is material and neces- sary, and which might properly have been stat- ed more generally, and without such circum- stances and particulars; or, in other words, ■a statement of unnecessary particulars in con- nection with and as descriptive of what is ma- terial. Gould, PL c. 3, 8 188; Pharr v. Bach- elor, 3 Ala. 245; Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 416, 76 Am. Dec. 402; Dunlap v. Kelly, 105 Mo. App. 1, 78 S. W. 664.— Immaterial Is- sue. In pleading. An issue taken on an Im- material point ; that is, a noint not proper to decide the action. Steph. Pl. 09, 130 ; 2 Tidd, Pr. 921.

IMMEDIATE. 1. Present; at once; without delay ; not deferred by any Interval of time. In this sense, the word, without any very precise signification, denotes that action is or must be taken either instantly or without any considerable loss of time.

Immediately does not, in legal proceedings, necessarily import the exclusion of any inter- val of time. It is a word of no very definite signification, and is much in subjection to its grammatical connections. Howell v. Gaddis, 31 N. J. Law, 313.

2. Not separated in respect to place; not separated by the Intervention of any Inter- mediate object, cause, relation, or right. Thus we speak of an action as prosecuted for the “Immediate benefit” of A., of a devise ns made to the “Immediate Issue” of B., etc.

— Immediate cause. The last of a series or chain of causes tending to a given result, and which, of itself, and without the intervention of any further cause, directly produces the result or event. A cause may be immediate in this sense, and yet not “proximate;” and con- versely, the proximate cause (that which di- rectly and efficiently brings about the result) mav not be immediate. The familiar illus- tration is that of a drunken man falling into the water and drowning. His intoxication is the proximate cause of his death, if it ran be said that he would not have fallen into the water when sober; but the immediate Cause of death is suffocation, by drowning. See Davis v. Standish. 26 Hun (N. Y.), 615; Deisenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malting Co.. 97 Wis. 279. 72

N- 'V. 735. Compare Longabaugh v. Railroad Co.. 9 Nev. 271. See. also. Proximate.— Im- mediate descent. See Descent.

IMMEDIATELY.

“It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to what Is the meaning of the word ‘Immediately’ in all cases. The words ‘forthwith’ and ‘Im- mediately’ have the same meaning. They are stronger than the expression *wlthln a reasonable time.’ and Imply prompt, vigor- ous action, without any delay, and whether there has been such action is a question of fact having regard to the circumstances of the particular case.” Cockburn, C. J., in Reg. v. Justices of Berkshire, 4 Q. B. Div. 471.

A practice which has existed time out of mind; cuBtom; prescription. Miller v. Garlock, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 154.

IMMEDBLES.

Fr. These are, in French law, the immovables of English law. Things are inimeubles from any one of three causes: (1) From their own nature, e. g., lands and houses; (2) from their destina- tion, e. g., animals and instruments of agri- culture when supplied by the landlord; or (3) by the object to which they are annexed, e. p., easements. Brown.

IMMIGRATION.

The coming into a country of foreigners for purposes of per- manent residence. The correlative term “emigration” denotes the act of such per- sons in leaving their former country.

IMMINENT DANGER.

In relation to homicide in self-defense, this term means immediate danger, such as must be instant- ly met, such as cannot be guarded against by calling for the assistance of others or the protection of the law. D. 8. v. Outer- bridge, 27 Fed. Cas. 390; State v. West, 45 La. Ann. 14, 12 Sonth. 7; State v. Smith, 43 Or. 109, 71 Pac. 973. Or, as otherwise defined, such an appearance of threatened and impending injury as would put a rea- sonable and prudent man to his instant de- fense. State v. Fontenot, 50 La. Ann. 537, 23 South. 634, 69 Am. St. Rep. 455 ; Shorter v. People, 2 N. Y. 201, 51 Am. Dec. 286.

Deadly force in self-defense is justified only against imminent danger — danger so immediate it must be met at once and cannot await the law's protection — judged by what would put a reasonable and prudent man to his instant defense.

Why: Genuine: the entry defines the self-defense standard with real authorities; the annotation states the doctrine those authorities establish. Citations taken from the body.

[Law: Contract Clause — U.S. Const. Art. I, §10, cl. 1: 'No State shall ... pass any Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts']

'Impairing the obligation of contracts' is the constitutional phrase barring states from retroactively undermining contractual obligations.

IMPANEL.

Ia English practice. To impanel a jury signifies the entering by the sheriff upon a piece of parchment, termed a “panel,” the names of the jurors who have been summoned to appear in court on a certain day to form a jury of the country to hear such matters as may be brought • before them. Brown.

In American practice. Besides the meaning above given, “impanel” signifies the act of the clerk of the court in making up a list of the jurors who have been selected for the trial of a particular cause.

Impaneling has nothing to do with drawing, selecting, or swearing jurors, but means simply making the list of those who have been select- ed. Porter v. People, 7 How. Prac. (N. Y.)

IMPARL.

IMPARLANCE.

In early practice, im- parlance meant time given to either of the parties to an action to answer the pleading of the other. It thus amounted to a con- tinuance of the action to a further day. Literally the term signified leave given to the parties to talk together; i. e., with a view to settling their differences amicably. But in modern practice it denotes a time given to the defendant to plead.

A general imparlance is the entry of a genera] prayer and allowance of time to plead till the next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception ; so that after such an imparlance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any mat- ter m abatement. This kind of imparlance is always from one term to another.

Colby v. Knapp, 13 N. H. 175; Mack v. Lewis, 67 Vt. 383, 31 Atl. 888.

A general special imparlance contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the defendant after this may plead not only in abate- ment, but he may also plead a plea which af- fects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea.

A special imparlance reserves to the defend- ant all exceptions to the writ, bill, or count: and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court. 1 Tidd, Pr. 462, 463.

IMPLICATION.

Intendment or infer- ence, as distinguished from the actual ex- pression of a thing in words. In a will, an estate may pass by mere implication, with- out any express words to direct its course. 2 BL Comm. 381.

An inference of something not directly de- clared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed.

In construing a will conjecture must not be taken for implication ; but necessary implica- tion means, not natural necessity, but so strong a probability of intention that an intention con- trary to that which is imputed to the testator cannot be supposed. 1 Ves. A B. 466.

"Implication" is also used in the sense of "inference;" i. e., where the existence of an Intention is inferred from acts not done for the sole purpose of communicating it, but for some other purpose. Sweet — Necessary implication. In construing a will, necessary Implication means not natural necessity, but so strong a probability of in- tention that an intention contrary to that which is imputed to the testator cannot be supposed. [Luke 11:8, KJV]

I say unto you, Though he will not rise and give him, because he is his friend, yet because of his importunity he will rise and give him as many as he needeth.

Why: The entry defines importunity as pressing, persistent solicitation; the verse uses the very word for it — the friend at midnight prevailing not by friendship but by importunity — in Jesus' own verbatim speech.

IMPOSSIBILITY.

That which, In the constitution and course of nature or the law, no man can do or perform. See Klauber v. San Diego Street-Car. Co., 05 Cal. 353, 30 Pac. 555 ; Reid v. Alaska Packing Co., 43 Or. 420, 73 Pac. 337.

Impossibility la of the following several sorts:

An act is physically Impossible when it is contrary to the course of nature. Such an Impossibility may be either absolute, i. e., Impossible In any case. (e. g., tor A. to reach the moon,) or relative, (sometimes called “Impossibility in fact,”) i. e., arising from the circumstances of the case, (e. g., for A. to make a payment to B., he being a de- ceased person.) To the latter class belongs what Is sometimes called “practical impossi- bility,” which exists when the act can be done, but only at an excessive or unreason- able cost. An act Is legally or juridically Impossible when a rule of law makes It Impossible to do It; e. g., tor A. to make a valid will before his majority. This class of acts must not be confounded IMPOSSIBLE CONTRACTS.

An Im- possible contract is one which the law will not hold binding upon the parties, because of the natural or legal Impossibility of the per- formance by one party of that which is the consideration for the promise of the other. 7 Wait Act. A Def. 124.

Impossible contracts, which will be deemed void in the eye of the law, or of which the performance will be excused, are such con- tracts as cannot be performed, either be- cause of the nature of the obligation under- taken, or because of some supervening event which renders the performance of the obliga- tion either physically or legally impossible. 10 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 176.

IMPRISONMENT.

The act of putting or confining a man in prison ; the restraint of a man’s personal liberty; coercion exer- cised upon a person to prevent the free exer- cise of his powers of locomotion. State v. It Is not a necessary part of the definition that the confinement should be in a place usually appropriated to that purpose ; it may be in a locality used only for the specific occasion; or it may take place without the actual application of any physical agencies of restraint, (such as locks or bars,) but by verbal compulsion and the display of avail- able force. See Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491.

An “improvement,” under our land system, does not mean a general enhancement of the value of the tract from the occupant’s opera- tions. It has a more limited meaning, which has in view the population of our forests, and the increase of agricultural products. All works which are directed to the creation of homes for families, or are substantial steps towards bring- ing lands into cultivation, have in their results the special character of “improvements,” and, under the land laws of the United States and of the several states, are encouraged. [Maxim: In favorem libertatis — in favor of liberty, the entry's headword]

The law favors liberty: presumptions and constructions resolve in favorem libertatis — toward freedom, not bondage.

I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live:

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 82:3, KJV]

Defend the poor and fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy.

This phrase, as applied to a legal transaction, primarily means that it has taken place without legal proceedings. Thus a widow was said to make a request in pais for her dower when she simply applied to the heir without issuing a writ (Co. Litt. 32ft.) So conveyances are divided into those by matter of record and those by matter In pais. In some cases, however, ‘‘mat- ters in pals" are opposed not only to “mat- ters of record,” but also to “matters In writ- ing,” i. e., deeds, as where estoppel by deed Is distinguished from estoppel by matter in pais. [Law] — Law

The Digest maxim quoted whole — 'In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet,' in an equal cause he who has possession is to be preferred — is the classical root of the possession-favoring tie-breaker in property disputes.

Why: The entry IS this maxim, quoted from Dig. 50, 17, 128, 1; annotating it as a maxim of law is verbatim and genuine — no stretching needed.

Where the parties are equally at fault, courts leave them as found — the in pari delicto defense bars recovery on illegal bargains.

Why: Black's states the maxim verbatim (Broom, Max. 290, 729; Story, Ag. s 195); it remains the live illegality defense in contract law, so citing the maxim itself genuinely illuminates the entry.

IN PARI MATERIA.

Upon the same matter or subject. Statutes in pari materia are to construed together. United Society v. Eagle Bank, 7 Conn. 457; State v. Ger- hardt 145 Ind. 439, 44 N. E. 469, 33 L. R. Statutes in pari materia — upon the same subject — are construed together as one system, a live canon of statutory interpretation.

Why: The entry defines the term by its operative legal use (citing United Society v. Eagle Bank, 7 Conn. 457 verbatim from the body); the canon named is the genuine law-well content of the term.

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 27 — depositions to perpetuate testimony]

Depositions taken to preserve testimony beyond the immediate action survive as depositions to perpetuate testimony under Fed. R. Civ. P. 27.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 28 U.S.C. s 1654 — parties may plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel]

Appearing 'in person' is the historic form of pro se representation, secured federally by the statute permitting parties to plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel.

Why: The entry defines appearing in person instead of through counsel; 28 U.S.C. s 1654 codifies exactly that right, so the link is direct and illuminating.

IN PERSONAM, IN REM.

In the Ro- man law, from which they are taken, the ex- pressions “in rem” and “in personam” were always opposed to one another, an act or proceeding in personam being one done or directed against or with reference to a spe- cific person, while an act or proceeding in rem was one done or directed with refer- ence to no specific person, and consequently against or with reference to all whom it might concern, or “all the world.” The phrases were especially applied to actions; an actio in personam being the remedy where a claim against a specific person arose out of an obligation, whether ex contractu or ex maleflcio, while an actio in rem was one brought for the assertion of a right of prop- erty, easement, status, etc., against one who denied or infringed it. See Inst 4, 6, 1 ; Gaius, 4, 1, 1-10; 5 Sav. Syst. 13, et seq. ; Dig. 2, 4, 7, 8; Id. 4, 2, 9, 1.

From this use of the terms, they have come to be applied to signify the antithesis of “available against a particular person," and “available against the world at large.” Thus, jura in personatti are rights primarily available against specific persons; jura in rem, rights only available against the world at large.

So a judgment or decree is said to be In rem when it binds third persons. Such is the sentence of a court of admiralty on a question of prize, or a decree of nullity or dissolution of marriage, or a decree of a court in a foreign country as to the status of a person domiciled there.

Lastly, the terms are sometimes used to signify that a judicial proceeding operates on a thing or a person. Thus, it is said of the court of chancery that it acts In perso- nam, and not In rem, meaning that its de- crees operate by compelling defendants to do what they are ordered to do, and not by producing the effect directly. Sweet See Cross v. Armstrong, 44 Ohio St 613, 10 N.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The in personam/in rem divide is the foundation of American jurisdiction: a court needs personal jurisdiction over the defendant for in personam judgments, and only power over the thing for in rem dispositions.

Why: Pennoyer is the landmark case drawing the territorial line between in personam and in rem jurisdiction that the entry explicates; no other case more directly illuminates the distinction.

[International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310 (1945)]

Modern personal jurisdiction replaced Pennoyer's territorial presence test with minimum contacts, refining — not abolishing — the in personam/in rem boundary.

Why: International Shoe is the governing modern statement of in personam jurisdiction (minimum contacts, fair play and substantial justice); pairing it with Pennoyer gives the reader the doctrine's arc.

'For pious uses' is the civil-law root of charitable-use jurisdiction, the class of gifts the Statute of Charitable Uses and the cy-pres doctrine exist to protect.

Why: The entry's whole content is gifts for religious/pious purposes (2 Bl. Comm. 505); the 1601 statute is the historical anchor of charitable-trust law for exactly such gifts — a genuine lineage link.

[Scripture] — Scripture

IN REM.

A technical term used to des- ignate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to per- sonal actions, which are said to be in perso- nam. See In Personam.

It is true that, in a strict sense, a proceeding in rem is one taken directly against property, and has for its object the disposition of prop- erty, without reference to the title of individual claimants; but, in a larger and more general sense, the terms are applied to actions between parties, where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. Such are cases commenced by attachment against the property of debtors, or instituted to partition real estate, foreclose a mortgage, or enforce a lien. So far as they affect property in this state, they are substan- tially proceedings in rem in the broader sense which we have mentioned. Pennoyer v. Neff, 96 U. S. 734, 24 L. Ed. 565.

— Quasi in rem. A term applied to proceed- ings which are not strictly and purely in rem, but are brought against the defendant personal- ly, though the real object is to deal with par- ticular property or subject property to the dis- charge of claims asserted ; for example, foreign attachment, or proceedings to foreclose a mort- gage, remove a cloud from title, or [Law: tenancy in severalty — exclusive ownership by one person, opposed to joint tenancy and tenancy in common]

'In several; in severalty' is the property term for sole ownership — a tenancy in severalty, where one person holds exclusively, as opposed to joint or common tenancy.

Why: The entry defines the phrase purely as a property concept (Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54); the live estate of tenancy in severalty is its direct doctrinal continuation.

IN SOLIDO.

In the civil law. For the whole; as a whole. An obligation in solido is one where each of the several obligors is liable for the whole; that is, it is joint and several. Henderson v. Wadsworth, 115 D.

S. 264, 6 Sup. Ct 140, 29 L. Ed. 377. Pos- session in solid urn is exclusive possession.

When several persons obligate themselves to the obligee by the terms “in solido," or use any other expressions which clearly show that they intend that each one shall be separately bound to perform the whole of the obligation, it is called an “obligation in solido” on the part of the obligors. Civ. Code La. art. 2082.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Louisiana Civil Code art. 2082 — solidary (in solido) obligation, each obligor bound for the whole]

An obligation in solido — each obligor liable for the whole — is the civil-law form of joint-and-several liability, codified for Louisiana in La. Civ. Code art. 2082 as cited in the entry.

Why: The entry's operative content is the solidary obligation with its Louisiana codification quoted; citing that article verbatim from the body is the genuine law-well link.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 11:15, KJV]

He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it: and he that hateth suretiship is sure.

Ownership of the soil carries the column of space above and the earth below — the ad coelum maxim governing airspace and subsurface rights.

Why: The entry treats rights in solo alieno versus in solo proprio; the ad coelum maxim is the classic statement of what soil ownership entails, genuinely illuminating the entry's property content.

[Law: contra proferentem — Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 206, ambiguities construed against the drafter]

Ambiguous agreement language is construed against the party who chose it — the contra proferentem rule stated in the body's maxim that in the construction of agreements words are interpreted against the person using them.

Why: The entry quotes the Digest maxim (Dig. 45, 1, 33, 15) stating exactly this rule; Restatement (Second) s 206 is its modern American formulation — a genuine lineage, not a stretch.

No-contest (in terrorem) clauses in wills are the modern form of the entry's conditional legacy: generally unenforced against contests brought with probable cause.

Why: The entry defines in terrorem conditions as threats against disputing the will; UPC s 3-905 is the modern statute governing exactly those no-contest clauses.

[Maxim: In toto et pars continetur (Dig. 50, 17, 113)]

The maxim quoted whole — 'In toto et pars continetur,' in the whole the part is contained — is the interpretive canon that the greater includes the lesser.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC s 2-705 — seller's stoppage of delivery in transit]

Goods in transit give the unpaid seller a right of stoppage — the seller may retake delivery while the goods are still in transit to an insolvent buyer.

Why: The entry defines 'in transitu' in the commercial-carriage context (2 Kent, Comm. 540-552); UCC s 2-705 codifies the classic stoppage-in-transitu right by name — a direct, genuine link.

[Law: UCC Article 9 — attachment and perfection of security interests in pledged collateral]

Property 'in gage or pledge' is the historic form of the secured transaction: a creditor's interest in collateral securing a debt, now governed by UCC Article 9's attachment and perfection rules.

Why: The entry defines the pledge (2 Bl. Comm. 157); Article 9 is the modern codification of pledge and secured transactions — a genuine lineage.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:26, KJV]

If thou at all take thy neighbour's raiment to pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down:

[Law: Uniform Probate Code s 2-108 — afterborn (posthumous) heirs deemed living at the decedent's death]

A child en ventre sa mere — in the mother's womb — is treated as living for purposes of taking under a will or by intestacy, the posthumous-heir rule.

Why: The entry's whole legal content is the unborn child's status; UPC s 2-108 codifies exactly that fiction of deemed birth for inheritance.

[Maxim: In verbis, non verba, sed res et ratio quaerenda est (Jenk. Cent. 132)]

The bundled maxim — that in the construction of words not the mere words but the thing and the meaning are to be inquired after — is the purposive-construction canon.

Why: Quoted whole in the body; the maxim genuinely states the anti-literalist canon of construction, so citing it verbatim is illumination, not force-fit.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Psalm 139:13, KJV]

For thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb.

Why: The entry means 'in his mother's womb; spoken of an unborn child.' The verse speaks of the unborn child covered in the mother's womb by God's own hand — the precise subject, in the precise terms.

Sterne's novel opens at the very moment of Tristram's conception and treats the unborn child — the child en ventre sa mere — as a narrator and legal-moral person before birth. (paraphrase of the novel's premise) is its genuine modern legal expression.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Hebrews 13:3, KJV]

Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body.

Why: The entry means 'in chains; in actual custody.' Hebrews 13:3 commands remembrance of 'them that are in bonds' — the verse that names the same condition, literal and figurative, as the entry's two senses. [re-homed from 'IN VINCULIS' to 'IN VTNCULIS' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

Why: The entry is the deed's witnessing clause ('in cujus rei testimonium'). Deuteronomy 19:15 is the law that a matter is established by witnesses — the scriptural ground of the witnessing function the clause invokes.

INADEQUATE.

Insufficient; dispropor- tionate; lacking in effectiveness or in con- formity to a prescribed standard or meas- ure.

—Inadequate damage*. See Damages.— In- adequate price. A term applied to indicate the want of a sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as would ordinarily be en- tirely incommensurate with its intrinsic value. State v. Purcell, 131 Mo. 312, 33 S. W. 13; Stephens v. Ozbourne, 107 Tenn. 572, 64 S. W. 903, 89 Am. St. Rep. 95 7 . — Inadequate rem- edy at law. Within the meaning of the rule that equity will not entertain a suit if there is an adequate remedy at law, this does not mean that there must be a failure to collect money or damages at law, but the remedy is considered inadequate if it is, in its nature and character, unfitted or not adapted to the end in view, as, for instance, when the relief sought is preven- tive rather than compensatory. Cruiokshank v. Bidwell. 176 U. S. 73, 20 Sup. Ct. 280, 44 L. Ed. 377 ; Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Annis- ton (C. C.) 96 Fed. 663; Crawford County v. Laub, 110 Iowa, 355, 81 N. W. 590.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: equity acts only where the remedy at law is inadequate — the jurisdictional basis of equitable relief]

An 'inadequate remedy at law' is the jurisdictional gate of equity: only where damages or legal relief are unfitted to the end in view will equity entertain the suit.

Why: The entry defines the term precisely as equity's gatekeeping standard (citing Cruikshank v. Bidwell, 176 U.S. 73); the axiom restates the operative doctrine without inventing authority.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

[Law: gross inadequacy of consideration — equity may relieve only where the price shocks the conscience]

Mere inadequacy of price does not void a sale; only gross inadequacy that shocks the conscience will move equity to set a bargain aside.

Why: The entry defines 'inadequate price' with State v. Purcell and Stephens v. Ozbourne; the gross-inadequacy rule is the genuine doctrinal content of that sub-definition.

INADMISSIBLE.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC s 2-202 / Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 213 — parol evidence rule]

The entry's own example — parol evidence to contradict a written contract — is the parol evidence rule, barring extrinsic terms that contradict a complete writing.

Why: Black's illustrates inadmissibility with the parol-evidence example verbatim; the rule named is the genuine law-well content of the illustration.

INADVERTENCE.

Heedlessness ; lack of attention : failure of a person to pay care- ful and prudent attention to the progress of a negotiation or a proceeding In court by which his rights may be affected. Used chiefly in statutory enumerations of the grounds on which a Judgment or decree may be vacated or set aside; as, “mistake. Inad- vertence. surprise, or excusable neglect.” See Skinner v. 'Mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect' is the statutory formula for relief from a judgment — the grounds enumerated in Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(1).

Why: The entry defines inadvertence as used 'chiefly in statutory enumerations' of vacatur grounds and quotes the exact four-word formula; Rule 60(b)(1) contains that formula verbatim — a direct, genuine link.

Liberty is the entry's own example of an inalienable personal right — the unalienable rights of life and liberty proclaimed as the American founding's first legal axiom.

Why: Black's names liberty as the exemplar of inalienability; the Declaration's verbatim unalienable-rights clause is the genuine American law-well expression of exactly that idea.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 25:23, KJV]

The land shall not be sold for ever: for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Samuel 16:13, KJV]

Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him in the midst of his brethren: and the Spirit of the LORD came upon David from that day forward.

Why: The entry defines installing into office with formal ceremony — coronation of a sovereign, consecration of a prelate. Samuel's anointing of David is scripture's archetypal inauguration into kingship: oil, ceremony, an...

—Legal in capacity. This expression implies that the person in view has the right vested in him, but is prevented by some impediment from exercising it; as in the case of minors, femes covert, lunatics, etc. An administrator has no right until letters are issued to him. Therefore he cannot benefit (as respects the time before obtaining letters) by a saving clause in a stat- ute of limitations in favor of persons under a legal incapacity to sue. Gates v. Brattle, 1 Root (Conn.) 187.

[Law] — Law

[Law: contractual capacity — Restatement (Second) of Contracts ss 12-14 (minors and mentally ill persons lack full capacity)]

Legal incapacity — minority, mental illness, and like impediments — defeats contractual capacity, and legal disability tolls limitation periods, as the entry's saving-clause discussion shows.

Why: The entry's operative content is want of legal ability to act (minors, femes covert, lunatics) plus tolling for legal disability; the Restatement capacity sections are the modern doctrinal home of exactly that.

The maxim quoted whole — 'Inde datae leges ne fortior omnia posset,' laws are made to prevent the stronger from having the power to do everything — states the protective purpose of law.

Why: Quoted whole in the body; the maxim genuinely states a jurisprudential axiom about law's purpose — verbatim annotation, no stretch.

[Maxim]

"Inde datae leges ne fortior omnia posset" — "Laws are made to prevent the stronger from having the power to do everything."

INDEBITATUS.

Lat Indebted. <Vun- gua m indebitatus, never indebted. The title of the plea substituted in England for nO debet.

— Indebitatus assumpsit. Lat. Being in- debted, he promised or undertook. ' This is the name of that form of the action of assumpsit in which tbe declaration alleges a debt or obligation to be dne from the defendant, and then avers that, in consideration thereof, he promised to pa; or discharge the same.

[Law: indebitatus assumpsit — common count for a debt; ancestor of quasi-contract and restitution]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Indebitatus assumpsit — 'being indebted, he promised' — is the common count for debt, the ancestor of modern quasi-contract and restitution for money owed.

Why: The entry defines the form of action (debt alleged, promise to pay averred); its genuine modern expression is quasi-contract/restitution — stated as lineage, no invented citation.

INDEBITI SOLUTIO.

Lat In the civ- il and Scotch law. A payment of what is not due. When made through ignorance or by mistake, the amount paid might be re- covered back by an action termed "conditio indeUti." (Dig. 12, 6.) Bell.

[Law: Restatement (Third) of Restitution and Unjust Enrichment s 6 — recovery of payment made by mistake (condictio indebiti)]

Payment of what is not due, made through ignorance or mistake, is recoverable by condictio indebiti — the civil-law root of restitution for mistaken payment.

Why: The entry defines the payment-not-due and its recovery action (Dig. 12, 6; Bell); Restatement (Third) s 6 is the modern American statement of exactly that recovery.

INDEBITUM.

In the civil law. Not due or owing. (Dig. 12, 6.) Calvin.

INDEBTEDNESS.

The state of being In debt, without regard to the ability or ina- bility of the party to pay the same. See 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 343 ; 2 Hill, Abr. 421.

The word implies an absolute or complete lia- bility. A contingent liability such as that of a surety before the principal has made default, does not constitute indebtedness. On the other hand, the money need not be immediately pay- able. Obligations yet to become due constitute indebtedness, as well as those already due. St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Goodfellow, 9 Mo. 149.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 11 U.S.C. s 101 — definitions distinguishing 'debt,' 'claim,' and contingent liabilities]

Indebtedness implies absolute liability — a contingent surety obligation before default is not indebtedness — the distinction the Code draws between matured debts and contingent claims.

Why: The entry's operative point is the absolute-versus-contingent liability line (St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Goodfellow); Title 11's definitions section is where that line is drawn in modern law — a genuine, modestly...

Why: The entry defines the bare state of being in debt; Dickens's novel is the canonical fictional treatment of debt as a legal status that imprisons. The chapter title is verbatim-certain; the rest is marked paraphrase.

A. 74 ; McJunklns v. State, 10 Ind. 144 ; Ardery v. State, 56 Ind. 328.

This is scarcely a technical term of the law, and is not susceptible of exact definition or description in its juridical uses. The ques- tion whether or not a given act, publication, etc., is Indecent is for the court and Jury in the particular case.

— Indecent exposure. Exposure to sight of the private parts of the body in a lewd or in- decent manner in a public place. It is an in- dictable offense at common law, and by statute in many of the states. State v. Bauguess. 106 Iowa, 107, 76 N. W. 508.— Indecent liberties. In the statutory offense of “taking indecent liberties with the person of a female child," this phrase means such liberties as the common sense of society would regard as indecent and improper. According to some authorities, it in- volves an assault or attempt at sexual inter- course, (State v. Kunz, 90 Minn. 526, 97 N. W. 131.) but according to others, it is not necessary that the liberties or familiarities should have related to the private parts of the child. (People v. Hicks, 98 Mich. 86, 56 N. W. 1102.)— In- decent publications. Such as are offensive to modesty and delicacy : obscene ; lewd ; tend- ing to the corruption of morals. Dunlop v. U. S~ 163 U. S. 486. 17 Sup. Ct. 375. 41 L. Ed. 799; U. S. v. Britton (Com. C.) 17 Fed. 733; People v.- Muller, 96 N. Y. 408, 48 Am. Rep. 635. —Public indecency. This phrase has no fix- ed legal meaning, is vague and indefinite, and cannot, in itself, imply a definite offense. The courts, by a kind of judicial legislation, in Eng- land and the United States, have usually lim- ited the operation of the term to public displays of the naked person, the publication, sale, or exhibition of obscene books and prints, or the exhibition of a monster,— acts which have a di- rect bearing on public morals, and affect the body of society. The Indiana statute punish- ing public indecency, without defining it, can be construed only as that term is used at com- mon law, where it is limited to indecencies in conduct, and does not extend to indecent words. Mcjunkins v. State, 10 Ind. 140.

[Law] — Law

[Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973)]

Indecent publications — obscene, lewd, tending to corrupt morals — are the obscenity category whose constitutional boundary is the Miller test.

Why: The entry defines indecent publications as obscene/lewd (citing Dunlop v. U.S., 163 U.S. 486); Miller is the governing obscenity test — the genuine law-well anchor for the entry's publication sense.

Payment without specification — a debtor owing several debts pays without directing application — is governed by the appropriation-of-payments rules: the debtor's direction controls, then the creditor's, then the law's (earliest debts first).

Why: The entry (Bell; Scotch law) states exactly the unspecified-payment problem; the appropriation rules including Clayton's Case are its genuine doctrinal answer — stated as principle, no invented volume/page.

INDEMNIS.

Lat. Without hurt harm, or damage; harmless.

INDEMNITEE.

The person who, in a contract of indemnity, is to be indemnified or protected by the other.

INDEMNITOR.

The person who IS bound, by an indemnity contract to indent nify or protect the other.

INDEMNITY.

An indemnity Is a col- lateral contract or assnrance, by which one person engages to secure another against an anticipated loss or to prevent him from be- ing damnified by the legal consequences of an act or forbearance on the part of one of the parties or of some third person. See Civ. Code CaL i 2772, Davis v. Phoenix Ins. Co., Ill Cal. 409, 43 Pae. 1115; Vandiver v. Poliak, 107 Ala. 547, 19 South. 180, 54 Am. St Rep. 118; Henderson-Achert Lithograph- ic Co. v. John ShlUito Co., 64 Ohio St 236, 60 N. E. 295, 83 Am. St Rep. 745. Thus, in- surance is a contract of indemnity. So an indemnifying bond is given to a sheriff who fears to proceed under an execution where the property is claimed by a stranger.

The term is also used to denote a compen- sation given to make the person whole from a loss already sustained ; as where the gov- ernment gives indemnity for private proper- ty taken by it for public use.

A legislative act assuring a general dis- pensation from punishment or exemption from prosecution to persons involved in of- fenses, omissions of official duty, or acts ip excess of authority, is called an indemnity; strictly it is an act of indemnity.

INDENT, n. In American law. A cer- tificate or indented certificate issued by the government of the United States at the close of the Revolution, for the principal or inter- est of the public debt Webster. See U- S. r. Irwin, 26 Fed. Cas. 546.

INDENT, v. To cut in a serrated or waving line. In old conveyancing, if a deed was made by more purties than one, it was usual to make as many copies of it as there were parties, and each was cut or Indented (either in acute angles, like the teeth of a saw, or in a waving line) at the top or side, to tally or correspond with the others, and the deed so made was called an “Indenture.” Anciently, both parts were written on the same piece of parchment, with some word or letters written between them through which the parchment was cut, but afterwards, the word or letters being omitted, indenting came into use, the idea of which was that the gen- uineness of each part might be proved by Its fitting into the angles cut in the other. But at length even this was discontinued, and at present the term serves only to give name to the species of deed executed by two or more parties, as opposed to a deed-poll, (j. v.) 2 Bl. Comm. 295.

To bind by indentures; to apprentice; as to indent a young man to a shoe-maker. Webster.

Indenization — the making of a denizen, or naturalizing — is the historic form of conferring subjectship, now governed by the federal naturalization statutes under the Fourteenth Amendment's citizenship clause.

Why: The entry defines naturalization; the cited Code sections are the modern naturalization framework — a genuine lineage link.

INDENTURE.

A deed to which two or more persons are parties, and in which these enter into reciprocal and corresponding grants or obligations towards each other; whereas a deed-poll is properly one in which only the party making it executes it, or binds himself by it as a deed, though the grantors or grantees therein may be several in num- ber. 3 Washb. A presentment differs from an indictment in that it is an accusation made by a grand jury of their own motion, either upon their own ob- servation and knowledge, or upon evidence be- fore them ; while an indictment is preferred at the suit of the government, and is usually fram- ed in the first instance by the prosecuting of- ficer of the government, and by him laid before the grand jury, to be found or ignored. Minority; the state of a per- son who is under the age of legal majority, — at common law, twenty-one years. Ac- cording to the sense in which this term is used, it may denote the condition of the per- son merely with reference to his years, or the contractual disabilities which non-age entails, or his status with regard to other powers or relations. Keating v. Railroad Co., 94 Mich. 219, 53 N. W. 1053; Anony- mous, 1 Salk. 44; Code Miss. 1892, S 1505.

[Law: infancy doctrine — contracts of minors voidable; Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 14]

Infancy — minority — carries contractual disabilities: the contracts of minors are voidable at the minor's option, the infancy doctrine.

[Law: common-law infancy defense — under seven, irrebuttable presumption of incapacity for crime]

The infans — a child under seven — 'does not differ much from a lunatic' in capacity: at common law a child under seven is irrebuttably incapable of criminal intent.

Why: The entry quotes the maxim (Bracton; Dig. 50, 17, 5, 40; 1 Story, Eq. Jur.) stating the incapacity; the common-law infancy defense is its genuine expression — stated as doctrine, no invented case.

INFANT.

And he said, When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, and see them upon the stools; if it be a son, then ye shall kill him: but if it be a daughter, then she shall live.

INFECTION.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

In medical Jurisprudence. The transmission of disease or disease germs from one person to another, either directly by contact with morbidly affected surfaces.

or qiore remotely through Inhalation, ab- sorption of food or liquid tainted with ex- cremental matter, contact with contaminated clothing or bedding, or other agencies.

A distinction is sometimes made between “in- fection” and "contagion,” by restricting the lat- ter term to the communication of disease by direct contact See Grayson v. Lynch, 163 U.

S. 408, 16 Sup. Ct. 1064, 41 I* Ed. 230; Wirth v. State, 63 Wis. 51. 22 N. W. 860; Stryker v. Crane, 33 Neb. 690, 50 N. W. 1133. But "infection” is the wider term and in proper use includes “contagion,” and is frequently extended so as to include the local inaugura- tion of disease from other than human sources, as, from miasmas, poisonous plants, etc. In another, and perhaps more accurate sense, con-' tagion is the entrance or lodgment of patho- genic germs in the system as a result of direct contact ; infection is their fixation in the sys- tem or the inauguration of disease as a conse- quence. In this meaning, infection does not always result from contagion, and on the other hand it may result from the introduction of disease germs into the system otherwise than by contagion.

— Auto-infection. The communication of disease from one part of the body to another by mechanical transmission of virus from a diseased to a healthy, part. — Infectious dis- ease. One capable of being transmitted or communicated by means of infection.

[Law: Cal. Code Civ. Proc. s 1958 — inference defined, as cited in the entry]

An inference — the deduction the jury's reason makes from proved facts, without express direction of law — is the evidentiary inference the Code defines.

INFERIOR COURT.

This term may de- note any court subordinate to the chief ap- pellate tribunal in the particular judicial sys- tem; but it is commonly used as the designa- tion of a court of special, limited, or statuto- ry jurisdiction, whose record must show the existence and attaching of jurisdiction in any given case, in order to give presumptive va- lidity to its judgment Bee Ex parte Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280, 9 Sup. Ct 703, 33 h. Ed. 154; Kempe v. Kennedy, 5 Cranch, 185, 3 L. Ed. 70 ; Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 341, 11 L. Ed. 283 ; Swift v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 64 Mich. 479, 31 N. W. 434; Kirkwood v. Washington County, 32 Or. 068, 52 Pac. 568.

The English courts of judicature are class- ed generally under two heads, — the superior courts and the inferior courts; the former' division comprising the courts at Westmin- ster, . the latter comprising all the other courts in general, many of which, however, are far from being of inferior importance in the common acceptation of the word. Brown.

[Law: courts of limited jurisdiction — jurisdiction must appear of record; Ex parte Cuddy, 131 U.S. 280, 9 Sup. Ct. 703, 33 L. Ed. 154, as cited in the entry]

Inferior courts — of special, limited, or statutory jurisdiction — must show jurisdiction affirmatively on the record for presumptive validity of their judgments.

Why: The entry states the limited-jurisdiction rule citing Ex parte Cuddy verbatim; the annotation preserves that authority and names the doctrine — genuine.

U. S. 444, 12 Sup. Ct. 935, 36 L. Ed. 768; The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. 245, 4 L. Ed. 226.

“The words ‘inhabitant,’ ‘citizen,’ and ‘resi- dent,’ as employed in different constitutions to define the qualifications of electors, mean sub- stantially the same thing; and one is an in- habitant. resident, or citizen at the place where he has his domicile or home.” Cooley, Const. Urn. *600. But the terms “resident” and “in- habitant” have also been held not synonymous, the latter implying a more fixed and permanent abode than the former, and importing privileges and duties to which a mere resident would not be subject. [Law: inhabitant defined by domicile — Ex parte Shaw, 145 U.S. 444, 12 Sup. Ct. 935, 36 L. Ed. 768, as cited in the entry]

An inhabitant — actually and permanently resident, with domicile there — is defined by domicile, the test the entry's own authority states.

Why: The entry defines inhabitant through domicile citing Ex parte Shaw verbatim; the annotation preserves the entry's own authority — genuine.

INHERENT POWER.

An authority possessed without its being derived from an- other. A right ability, or faculty of doing a thing, without receiving that right ability, or faculty from another.

[Law] — Law

[Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991)]

Authority possessed without derivation from another — inherent power — is the courts' inherent power to manage proceedings and sanction abuse, independent of rule or statute.

Why: The entry defines inherent power as underived authority; Chambers is the modern landmark on federal courts' inherent power — the genuine anchor for the concept.

INHERETRIX.

The old term for “heir- ess.” Co. Litt 13o.

INHERIT.

To take by inheritance; to take as heir on the death of the ancestor. Warren v. Prescott 84

INHERITABLE BLOOD.

Blood which has the purity (freedom from attainder) and legitimacy necessary to give its possessor the character of a lawful heir; that which is capable of being the medium for the trans- mission of an inheritance.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, s 3, cl. 2 — 'no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted']

Blood 'free from attainder' — capable of transmitting inheritance — is the purity the Constitution protects by forbidding corruption of blood for treason.

Why: The entry defines inheritable blood by freedom from attainder; the Treason Clause's corruption-of-blood prohibition is its constitutional counterpart, quoted verbatim.

INHERITANCE.

An estate in things real, descending to the heir. 2 Bl. Comm. 201; In re Donahue’s Estate, 36 Cal. 332; Dodge’s Appeal, 106 Pa. 220, 51 Am. Rep. 519; Rountree v. Pursell, 11 Ind. App. 522, 39 N. EL 747; Adams v. Akerlund, 168 111. 632, 48 N. E. 454.

An estate descending to the heir — inheritance ab intestato — passes under the intestacy statutes distributing the estate to heirs at law.

INHIBITION.

In ecclesiastical law.

A writ issuing from a superior ecclesiastical court, forbidding an inferior Judge to pro- ceed further in a cause pending before him. In this sense it is closely analogous to the writ of prohibition at common law.

Also the command of a bishop or ecclesias- tical judge that a clergyman shall cease from taking any duty.

In Scotch law. A species of diligence or process by which a debtor is prohibited from contracting any debt which may be- come a burden on his heritable property, in competition with the creditor at whose in- stance the inhibition is taken out ; and from granting any deed of alienation, etc., to the prejudice of the creditor. Brande.

In the civil law. A prohibition which the law mnkes or a judge ordains to an indi- vidual. Hallifax, Civil Law, p. 120.

—Inhibition against a wife. In Scotch law. A writ in the sovereign’s name, passing the signet, which prohibits all and sundry from having transactions with a wife or giving her credit. Bell; Ersk. Inst. 1, 6, 26.

[Law: writ of prohibition — extraordinary writ restraining an inferior tribunal from exceeding jurisdiction]

The ecclesiastical inhibition — a superior court forbidding an inferior judge to proceed — is closely analogous, as the entry says, to the common-law writ of prohibition.

Why: The entry itself draws the analogy to prohibition; naming the writ is illumination of the entry's own comparison — genuine, stated as doctrine.

INN.

An inn is a bouse where a traveler is furnished with everything which he has occasion for while on his way. Thompson v. Lacy, 3 Barn. A Aid. 287; WIntermute v. Clark, 5 Sandf. (N. X.) 242 ; Walling v. Pot- ter, 35 Conn. 180. And see Hotel.

Under the term “inn” the law includes all taverns, hotels, and houses of public general entertainment for guests. Code Ga. 1882, | 2114.

The words “inn," "tavern,” and “hotel" are used synonymously to designate what is ordi- narily and popularly known as an “inn” or "tavern,” or place for the entertainment of travelers, and where all their wants can be supplied. A restaurant where meats only are furnished is not an inn or tavern. People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. X.) 311; Carpenter v. Taylor. 1 Hilt. (N. X.) 193.

An inn is distinguished from a private board- ing-house mainly in this: that the keeper of the latter is at liberty to choose his guests, while the innkeeper is obliged to entertain and furnish all travelers of good conduct and means of payment with what they may have occasion for, as such travelers, while on their way. Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557, 91 Am. Dec. 657.

— Common inn. A house for the entertain- ment of travelers and passengers, in which lodging and necessaries are provided for them and for their horses and attendants. Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. X.) 15. The word “common," in this connection, does not ap- pear to add anything to the common-law defini- tion of an inn, except in so far as it lays stress on the fact that the house is for the entertain- ment of the general public or for all suitable persons who apply for accommodations.

[Law: 42 U.S.C. s 2000a — inns and hotels as places of public accommodation]

The innkeeper's common-law duty — obliged to entertain all travelers of good conduct with means of payment — survives as the public-accommodation duty of inns and hotels.

Why: The entry states the innkeeper's public duty (Pinkerton v. Woodward; Code Ga. 1882, s 2114); Title II covers inns as public accommodations — the genuine modern form of that public duty.

INNUENDO.

This Latin word (common- ly translated “meaning”) was the technical beginning of that clause in a declaration or indictment for slander or libel in which the meaning of the alleged libelous words was explained, or the application of the language charged to the plaintiff was pointed out Hence it gave its name to the whole clause ; and tids usage is still retained, although an equivalent English word is now substituted. Thus, it may be charged that the defendant said “he (meaning the said plaintiff) is a per- jurer.”

The word is also used, (though more rare- ly,) in other species of pleadings, to introduce an explanation of a preceding word, charge, or averment.

It is said to mean no more than the words "id cut,” "scilicet,” or “meaning," or “afore- said,” as explanatory of a subject-matter suf- ficiently expressed before; as “such a one, meaning the defendant,” or “such a subject, meaning the subject in question.” Cowp. 083. It is only explanatory of some matter al- ready expressed. It serves to point out where there is precedent matter, but never for a new charge. It may apply what is already expressed, but cannot add to or en- large or change the sense of the previous words. 1 Chit. PI. 42 2. See Grand v. Drey- rus, 122 Cal. 58, 54 Pac. 380 ; Naulty v. As to all other forms of insanity, lunacy was originally distinguished by the occurrence of lucid Intervals, and hence might be described as a periodical or recurrent insanity. In re Anderson, 132 N. 0. 243, 43 S. E. 649; Hiett v. Shull, 36 W. Va. 563, 15 S. E. 146. But while these dis- tinctions are still observed in some jurisdic- tions, they are more generally disregarded; so that, at present, in inquisitions of lunacy and other such proceedings, the term “lun- acy” has almost everywhere come to be syn- onymous with "insanity,” and is used as a general description of all forms of derange- ment or mental unsoundness, this rule being established by statute in many states and by judicial decisions in others. In re Clark, 175

N. Y. 130, 67 N. E. 212 ; Smith v. Hickenbot- tom, 57 Iowa, 733, 11 N. W. 664; Cason v. Owens, 100 Ga. 142, 28 S. E. 75; In re Hill, 31 K. J. Eq. 203. Cases of arrested mental development would come within the definition of luuaey, that is, where the patient was born with a normal brain, but the cessation of mental growth occurred in infancy or so near it that “he never acquired any greater intelligence or discretion than belongs to a normally healthy child. Such a subject might be scientifically denominated an “idi- ot,” but not legally, for in law the latter term is applicable only to congenital amen- tia. The term “lucid Interval” means not an apparent tranquility or seeming repose, or cessation of the violent symptoms of the disorder, or a simple diminution or remission of the disease, but a temporary cure — an intermission so clearly marked that it per- fectly resembles a return of health ; and it must be such a restoration of the faculties as enables the patient beyond doubt to com- prehend the nature of his acts and transact his affairs as usual ; and it must be continued for a length of time sufficient to give cer- tainty to the temporary restoration of rea- son. Godden v. Burke. 35 La. Ann. 160. 173 ; Iticketts v. Joliff, 62 Miss. 440; Ekin v. Mc- Cracken. 11 Philn. (Pn.) 534 ; Frazer v. Fraz- er, 2 Del. Ch. 260.

Idiocy is congenital amentia, that is, a want of reason and intelligence existing from birth and due to structural defect or mal- formation of the brain. It is a congenital obliteration of the chief mental powers, and is defined in law as that condition in which the patient hns never had, from his birth, even the least glimmering of reason; for a man is not legally an “idiot” if he can tell his parents, his age, or other like common matters. This is not the condition of a deranged mind, but that of a total absence of mind, so that, while idiocy is generally classed under the general designation of “in- sanity,” it is rather to be regarded as a nat? ural defect than as a disease or as the re- sult of a disease. It differs from “lunacy,” because there are no lucid intervals or periods of ordinary intelligence. See In re Beaumont, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 53, 29 Am. Dec. 33 ; Clark v. Robinson, 88 111. 502; Crosswell v. People, 13 Mich. 427, 87 Am. Dec. 774; Hiett v. Shull, 36 W. Va. 563, 15 S. E. 146; Thompson v. Thompson, 21 Barb. (N. Imbecility. A more or less advanced decay and feebleness of the intellectual facul- ties ; that weakness of mind which, without depriving the person entirely of the use of his reason, leaves only the faculty of con- ceiving the most common and ordinary ideas and such as relate almost always to physioal wants and habits. It varies in shades aud degrees from merely excessive folly and ec- centricity to an almost total vacuity of mind or amentia, and the test of legal capacity, in this condition, is the stage to which the weakness of mind has advanced, as measur- ed by the degree of reason, judgment, and memory remaining. It may proceed from pnresis or general paralysis, from senile de- cay, or from the advanced stages of any of the ordinary forms of insanity; and the term is rather descriptive of the consequen- ces of insanity than of any particular type of the disease. See Calderon v. Martin, 50 La. Ann. 1153, 23 South. 909; Delafleld v. Par- ish, 1 Redf. (N. Y.) 115; Campbell v. Camp- bell, 130 111. 466, 22 N. E. 620, 6 L. R. A. 167; Messenger v. Bliss, 35 Ohio St 592.

Non compos mentis. Lat. Not of sound mind. A generic term applicable to all in- sane persons, of whatsoever specific type the insanity may be and from whatever cause arising, provided there be an entire loss of reason, as distinguished from mere weakness of mind. Somers v. Pumphrey, 24 Ind. 244; In re Beaumont, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 53; Bum- ham v. Mitchell, 34 Wls. 130; Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 537, 84 Am. Dec. 97; Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 350, 50. Am. Dec. C29 ; Jack- son v. King, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 207, 15 Am. Dec. 354; Stanton v. Wetherwax, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 262.

Derangement. This term Includes all forms of mental unsoundness, except of the natural born idiot. Hiett v. Shull. 36 W. Va. 663, 15 S. E. 147.

Delusion is sometimes loosely used as syn- onymous with insanity. But this is incor- rect. Delusion is not the substance but the evidence of insanity. The presence of an in- sane delusion is a recognized test of insanity in all cases except amentia and imbecility, aud where there is no frenzy or raving madness ; and In this sense an insane delusion Is a fixed belief In tlie mind of the patient of the existence of a fact which has no objec- tive existence but is purely the figment of his Imagination, and which Is so extravagant that no sane person would believe it under the circumstances of the case, the belief, nevertheless, being so unchangeable that the patient Is incapable of being permanently dis- abused by argument or proof. The charac- teristic which distinguishes an “Insane” de- lusion from other mistaken beliefs is that it is not a product of the reason but of the Imagination, that is,' not a mistake of fact in- duced by deception, fraud, insufficient evi- dence, or erroneous reasoning, but the spon- taneous conception of a perverted imagina- tion, having no basis whatever In reason or evidence. Forms and varieties of insanity. With- out attempting a scientific classification of the numerous type6 and forms of insanity, (as to which it may be said that there is as yet no final agieement among psychologists and alienists either as to analysis or nomenclature,) defini- tions and explanations will here be appended of the compound and descriptive terms most com- monly met with in medical jurisprudence. And, first, as to the origins or causes of the disease: Trsamstie insanity is such as results from a wound or injury, particularly to the head or brain, such as fracture of the skull or concus- sion of the brain. — Idiopathic insanity is such as results from a disease of the brain it- self, lesions of the cortex, cerebral anemia, etc. -—Congenital insanity is that which exists from the birth of the patient, and is (in law) properly called “idiocy. ’ See supra.— Cretin- ism is a form of imperfect or arrested mental development, which may amount to idiocy, with physical degeneracy or deformity or lack of development ; endemic in Switzerland and some other parts of Europe, but the term is applied to similar states occurring elsewhere. — Pella- gra ns insanity. Insanity caused by or de- prived from pellagra, which is an endemic dis- ease of southern Europe, (though not confined to that region.) characterized by erythema, di- gestive derangement, and nervous affections. (Cent. Diet.) — Polyneuritic Insanity is in- sanity arising from an inflammation of the nerves, of the kind called “polyneuritis” or “mul- tiple neuritis” because it involves several nerves at the same time. This is often preceded by tuberculosis and almost always by alcoholism, and is characterized specially by delusions and falsification of the memory. It is otherwise called “Korssakoffs disease.” (Kraepelin.) — Choreic insanity is insanity arising from chorea, the latter being a nervous disease, more commonly attacking children than adults, char- acterized by irregular and involuntary twitch- ings of the muscles of the limbs and face, popularly called “St. Vitus’ dance." — Puerperal In- sanity is mental derangement occurring in women at the time of child-birth or immediately after: it is also called “eclampsia parturien- iium.— Folio brightiqae. A French term sometimes used to designate an access of in- sanity resulting from nephritis or “Bright's dis- ease.” See In re McKean’s Will, 31 Misc. Rep. 703, 66 N. Y. Supp. 44. — Delirium tremens.

A disease of the nervous system, induced by the excessive and protracted use of intoxicating liq- uors, and affecting the brain so as to produce incoherence and lack of continuity in the intel- lectual processes, a suspension or perversion of the power of volition, and delusions, particular- ly of a terrifying nature, but not generally prompting to violence except in the effort to es- cape from imaginary dangers. It is recognized in law as a form of insanity, and may be of such a nature or intensity as to render the pa- tient legally incapable or . committing a crime. United States v. McGlue, 1 Curt. 1, 26 Fed. Cas. . 1093; Insurance Co. v. Deming, 123 Ind. 384, 24 N. E. 86; Maconnehey v. State. 5 Ohio St.

77 ; Erwin v. State, 10 Tex. App. 700 ; Carter v. State, 12 Tex. 500, 62 Am. Dec. 539. In some states the insanity of alcoholic intoxica- tion is classed as “temporary,” where induced by the voluntary recent use of ardent spirits and carried to such a degree that the person becomes incapable of judging the consequences or the moral aspect of his acts, and “settled,” where the condition is that of delirium tremens. Settled insanity, in this sense, excuses from civil or criminal responsibility ; temporary in- sanity docs not. The ground of the distinction is that the former is a remote effect of imbibing alcoholic liquors and is not voluntarily incurred, while the latter is a direct result voluntarily sought for. Evers v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 318, 20 S. W. 744, 18 L. R. A. 421, 37 Am. St. Rep. 811: Maconnehey v. State, 5 Ohio St. 77. — Syphilitic insanity is paresis or progres- sive imbecility resulting from the infection of syphilis. It is sometimes called fas being a se- quence or result of that disease) “meta syphilis" or “parasyphilis." — Tabetic dementia. A form of mental derangement or insanity com- plicated with “tabes dorsalis” or locomotor ataxia, which generally precedes, or sometimes follows, the mental attack. As to insanity re- sulting from cerebral embolism, see Embolism; from epilepsy, see Epilepst. As to chronic alcoholism as a form of insanity, see Alcohol- ism.

General descriptive and clinical terms.

— Affective insanity. A modern comprehen- sive term descriptive of all those forms of in- sanity which affect or relate to the feelings and emotions and hence to the ethical and social relations of the individual.— Involutional in- sanity. That which sometimes accompanies the "involution” of the physical structure and physiology of the individual, the reverse of their “evolution,” hence practically equivalent to the imbecility of old age or senile dementia.— Ma- niacal-depressive insanity. A form of in- sanity characterized by alternating periods of high maniacal excitement and of depressed and stuprous conditions in the nature of or resem- bling melancholia, often occurring as a series or cycle of isolated attacks, with more or less com- plete restoration to health in the intervals. (Kraepelin.) This is otherwise called “circular insanity” or "circular stupor.”— Circular in- sanity. Another name for maniacal-depressive insanity, which see.— Partial insanity, as a legal term, may mean either monomania (see infra) or an intermediate stage in the develop- ment of mental derangement. In the former sense, it does not relieve the patient from re- ' sponsibility for his acts, except where instigat- ed directly by his particular delusion or obses- sion. Com. v. Mosler, 4 Pa. 264; Com. v. Bar- ner, 199 Pa. 335. 49 Atl. 60; Trich v. Trich. 100 Pa. 586, 30 A0. 1053. In the latter sense.

it denotes a clouding or weakening of the mind, not inconsistent with some measure of memory, reason, and judgment. But the term, in this sense, does not convey any very definite mean- ing, since it may range from mere feeble-mind- edness to almost the last stages of imbecility. State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 383, 9 Am. Rep. 242; Appeal of Dunham, 27 Conn. 205.— Recurrent insanity. Insanity which returns from time to time, hence equivalent to “lunacy” (see supra) in its common-law sense, as a mental disorder broken by lucid intervals. There is no presump- tion that fitful and exceptional attacks of in- sanity are continuous. Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 3 S. W. 538, 58 Am. Rep. 638— Moral Insanity. A morbid perversion of the feelings, affections, or propensities, but without any illusions or derangement of the Intellectual faculties; irresistible impulse or an incapacity to resist the prompting of the passions, though accompanied by the power of discerning the moral or immoral character of the act. Moral insanity is not admitted as a bar to civil or criminal responsibility for the patient's acts, un- less there is also shown to be intellectual dis- turbance, as manifested by insane delusions or the other recognised criteria of legal insanity. Leache v. State, 22 Tex. App. 279, 3 S. W. 539, 58 Am. Rep. 638; In re Forman's Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 291 ; State v. Leehman, 2 S. D. 171, 49 N. W. 3. The term ''emotional in- sanity" or mania transitoria applies to the case of one in the possession of his ordinary reasoning faculties who allows his passions to convert him into a temporary maniac. Mutual

L. Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. 580, 583, 21 L. Ed. 236— Psychonenrofls. Mental disease without recognizable anatomical lesion, and without evidence and history of preceding chron- ic mental degeneration. Under this head come melancholia, mania, primary acute dementia, and mania hallucinatoria. Cent. Diet. "Neuro- sis," in its broadest sense, may include any dis- ease or disorder of the mind, and hence all the forms of insanity proper. But the term "psy- choneurosis" is now employed by Freud and oth- er European specialists to describe that class of exaggerated individual peculiarities or idiosyn- crasies of thought towards special objects or topics which are absent from the perfectly nor- mal mind, and which yet have so little influence upon the patient's conduct or his general modes of thought that they cannot properly be describ- ed as "insanity" or ns any form of "mania," especially because ordinarily unaccompanied by any kind of delusions. At most, they lie on the debatable border-land between sanity and in- sanity. These idiosyncrasies or obsessions may arise from superstition, from a real incident in the patient's past history upon which he has brooded until it has assumed an unreal impor- tance or significance, or from general neuras- thenic conditions. Such, for example, are a ter- rified shrinking from certain kinds of animals, unreasonable dread of being shut up in Borne enclosed place or of being alone in a crowd, excessive fear of being poisoned, groundless con- viction of irredeemable sinfulness, and countless other prepossessions, which may range from mere weak-minded superstition to actual mono- mania.— Katatoniu. A form of insanity dis- tinguished by periods of acute mania and melan- cholia and especially by cataleptic states or con- ditions ; the "insanity of rigidity." (Kahl- bautn.) A type of insanity characterized par- ticularly by "stereotypism, ' an instinctive in- clination to purposeless repetition of the same expressions of the will, and "negativism," a senseless resistance against every outward in- fluence. (Kraepelin.)— Folle ciroulaire. The French name for circular insnnity or maniacal- depressive insanity— General paralysis. De- mentia paralytica or paresis.

Amentia, dementia, and mania. The classification of insanity into these three types er forms, though once common, has of late given way to a more scientific nomenclature, based chiefly on the origin or cause of the disease in the particular patient and its clinical history. These terms, however, are still occasionally encountered in medical jurisprudence, and the names of some of their subdivisions are in constant use.

Amentia. A total lack of intelligence, rea- son, or mental capacity. Sometimes so used as to cover imbecility or dotage, or even as ap- plicable to all forms of insanity ; but properly restricted to a lack of mental capacity due to original defective organization of the brain (idiocy) or arrested cerebral develop.ment, as distinguished from the degeneration of intellec- tual faculties which once were normal.

Dementi*. A form of insanity resulting from degeneration or disorder of the brain (ideopathic or traumatic, but not congenital) and characterized by general mental weakness and decrepitude, forgetfulness, loss of coherence, and total inability to reason, but not accompanied by delusions or uncontrollable impulses. Pyott v. Pyott, 90 111. App. 221 ; Hall v. Unger, 2 Abb. U. S. 510, Fed. Cas. No. 5,949; Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 531, 84 Am. Dec. 97 ; People v. Lake, 2 Parker, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 218.

some writers dementia is classed as a ter- minal stage of various forms of insanity, and hence may follow mania, for example, as its final condition. Among the sub-divisions of dementia should be noticed the following: Acute primary dementia is a form of temporary dementia, though often extreme in its intensity, and occurring in young people or adolescents, accompanied by general physical debility or ex- haustion and induced by conditions likely to produce that state, as malnutrition, overwork, dissipation, or too rapid growth. Dementia par- ralytica is a progressive form of insanity, be- ginning with slight degeneration of the physical, intellectual, and moral powers, and leading to complete loss of mentality, or imbecility, with Seneral paralysis. Also called paresis, paretic ementia, or cirrhosis of the brain, or (popularly) "softening of the brain.” Dementia prwcom. A term applicable either to the early stages of dementia or to the dementia of adolescence, but more commonly applied to the latter. It is often (but not invariably) attributable to onan- ism or self-abuse, and is characterized by men- tal and moral stupidity, absence of any strong feeling of the impressions of life or interest in its events, blunting or obscuration of the moral sense, weakness of judgment, flightiness of thought, senseless laughter without mirth, auto- matic obedience, and apathetic despondency. (Kraepelin.) Senile dementia. Dementia occur- ring in persons of advanced age. and character- ized by slowness and weakness of the mental processes and general physical degeneration, verging on or passing into imbecility, indicat- ing the breaking down of the mental powers in advance of bodily decay. Hiett v. Shull, 36 W. Va. 563. 15 S. E. 140: Pyott v. Pyott, 191

HI. 280. 61 N. E. 88 : McDaniel y. McCoy, 68 Mich. 332. 36 N. W. .84; Hnmon v. Hamon, 180 Mo. 685, 79 S. W. 422. Toxic dementia. Weakness of mind or feeble cerebral activity, approaching imbecility, resulting from contin- ued administration or use of slow poisons or of the mere active poisons in repeated small doses, as in ci.ses of load poisoning and in some cakes of addiction to such drugs as opium or alcohol.

Maul*. That form of insanity in which the patient is subject to hallucinations ard illusions, accompanied by a high state of general mental excitement, sometimes amounting to fury. See Hall v. Unger, 2 Abh. U. S. 510, 11 Fed. Cas. 261 ; People v. Lake, 2 Parker Cr. R. (N. Y.) 218: Smith v. Smith, 47 Miss. 211: In re Gannon’s Will, 2 Misc. Rep. 329, 21 N. Y. Supp. 960. In the case first above cited, the following description is given by Justice Field: “Mania is that form of insanity where the man-

tal derangement is accompanied with more or less of excitement. Sometimes the excitement amounts to a fury. The individual in such cas- ts is subject to hallucinations and illusions. Be is impressed with the reality of events which have never occurred, and of things which do not exist, and acts more or less in conformity with his belief in these particulars. The mania may be general, and affect all or most of the op- erations of the mind ; or it may be partial, and be confined to particular subjects. In the lat- ter case it is generally termed ‘monomania.’ In a more popular but less scientific sense, “mania” denotes a morbid or unnatural or ex- cessive craving, issuing in impulses of such fix- ity and intensity that they cannot be resisted by the patient in the enfeebled state of the will and blurred moral concepts which accompany the disease. It is used in this sense in such compounds as “homicidal mania," “dipsomania,” and the like.— Hypomania. A mild or slight- ly developed form or type of mania.— Mono* mania. A perversion or derangement of the reason or understanding with reference to a single subject or small class of subjects, with considerable mental excitement and delusions^ while, as to all matters outs'de the range of the' peculiar infirmity, the intellectual faculties re- main unimpaired and function normal y. Hopps v. People, 31 111. 390, 83 Am. Dec. 231; In re Black's Estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.) 27 ; Owing’s Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 388, 17 Am. Dec. 311; Merritt v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 70, 45 S. W. 21 ; In re Gannon’s Will, 2 Misc. Rep. 329, 21 N. Y. Supp. 960.— Paranoia. Monomania in general, or the obsession of a delusion or sys- tem of delusions which dominate without de- stroying the mental capacity, leaving the patient sane as to all matters outside their particular range, though subject to perverted ideas, false beliefs, and uncontrollable impulses within that range; and particularly, the form of monomania where the delusion is as to wrongs, injuries, or persecution inflicted upon the patient and his consequently justifiable resentment or rvenep. Winters v. State, 61 N. J. Law, 613, 41 Atl. 220; People v. Braun, 158 N. Y. 558. 53 N. E. 529; Flanagan v. State, 103 Ga. 619, 30 S. E. 550. Paranoia is called by Kraepelin "progres- sive systematized insanity,” because the delu- sions of being wronged or of persecution and of excessive self-esteem develop quite slowly, with- out independent disturbances of emotional life or of the will becoming prominent, and because there occurs regularly a mental working up of the delusion to form a delusionaiy view of the world,— in fact, a system, — leading to a derange- ment of the stand-point which the patient takes up towards the events of life.— Homicidal mania. A form of mania in which the morbid state of the mind manifests itself in an irresist- able inclination or impulse to commit homicide, prompted usually by an insane delusion either as to the necessity of self-defense or the avenging of injuries, or as to the patient being the appoint- ed instrument of a superhuman justice. Com. v. Sayre, 6 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.)

425; Com. v. M osier, 4 Pa. 266.— Methomania. An irre- sistible craving for alcoholic or other Intoxica- ting liquors, manifested by the periodical re- currence of drunken debauches. State v. Savage, 89 Ala. 1, 7 South. 183, 7L.B.A. 426.— Dipso- mania. Practically the same thing as metho- mania, except that the irresistible impulse to intoxication is extended by some writers to in- clude the use of such drugs as opium or cocaine as well as alcohol. See State v. Reidell, 9 Houst. (Del.) 470. 14 Atl. 550; Ballard v. State, 19 Neb. 609, 28 N. W. 271.— Mania a potvt. Delirium tremens, or a species of tem- porary insanity resulting as a secondary effect produced by the excessive and protracted indulftence in intoxicating liquors. See State v. Hur- ey, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 28, 35,— Tozico- mania. An excessive addiction to the use of toxic or poisonous drugs or other substances ; a form of mania or affective insanity characteris- ed by an irresistible impulse to indulgence in opium, cocaine, chloral, alcohol, etc. — Mania fanatioa. A form of insanity characterized by a morbid state of religious feeling. Ekin v. McCracken, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 540.— Sebastoma- nia. Religious insanity; demonomania.— Me- galomania. The so-called “delirium of gran- deur” or “folie de grandeur ;” a form of mania in which the besetting delusion of the patient is that he is some person of great celebrity or ex- alted rank, historical or contemporary. — Klep- tomania. A species (or symptom) of mania, consisting in an irresistible propensity to steal. Looney v. State, 10 Tex. App. 525, 38 Am. Rep. 646; State v. Reidell, 9 Houst. (Del.) 470, 14 Atl. 550.— Pyromania. Incendiarism; a form of affective insanity in which the mania takes the form of an irresistible impulse to bum or set fire to things.— Oikei mania, a form of in- sanity manifesting itself in a morbid state of the domestic affections, as an unreasonable dislike of wife or child without cause or provocation. Ekin v. McCracken, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 540.— Nym- phomania. A form of mania characterized by a morbid, excessive, and uncontrollable craving for sexual intercourse. This term is applied only to, women. The term for a corresponding mania in men is “satyriasis.”— Erotomania. A form of mania similar to nymphomania, ex- cept that the present term is applied to patients of both sexes, and that (according to some au- thorities) it is applicable to all cases of exces- sive sexual craving irrespective of origin ; while nymphomania is restricted to cases where the disease is caused by a local disorder of the sex- ual organs reacting on the brain. And it is to be observed that the term “erotomania" is now often used, especially by French writers, to describe a morbid propensity for “falling in love” or an exaggerated and excited condition of amativeness or love-sickness, which may af- fect the general physical health, but is not necessarily correlated with any sexual craving, and which, though it may unnaturally color the imagination and distort the subject’s view of life and affairs, does not at all amount to in- sanity, and should not be so considered when it leads to crimes of violence, as in the too com- mon case of a rejected lover who kills his mis- tress.—Necrophilism. A form of affective in- sanity manifesting itself in an unnatural and re- volting fondness for corpses, the patient desir- ing to be in their presence, to caress them, to exhume them, or sometimes to mutilate them, and even (in a form of sexual perversion) to violate them.

Melancholia. Melancholia is a form of in- sanity the characteristics of which are extreme mental depression, associated with delusions and hallucinations, the latter relating especially to the financial or social position of the patient or to impending or threatened dangers to his per- son, property, or reputation, or issuing in dis- torted conceptions of his relations to society or his family or of his rights and duties in general. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Groom, 86 Pa. 92, 27 Am. Rep. 689 ; State v. Reidell, 9 Houst. (Del.) 470, 14 Atl. 551; People v. Krfst, 168

N. Y. 19, 60 N. E. 1057. Hypochondria or hypochondriaait. A form of melancholia in which the patient has exaggerated or causeless fears concerning his health or suffers from imag- inary disease. Toxiphobia. Morbid dread of being poisoned ; a form of insanity manifeating itself by an excessive and unfounded apprehen- sion of death by poison.

Specific definitions and applications la law. There are numerous legal proceedings where insanity may be shown, and the rule for establishing mental capacity or the want of it varies according to the object or purpose of the proceeding. Among these may be enu- merated the following: ▲ criminal prosecutlon where Insanity Is alleged as a defense; a proceeding to defeat a will on the ground of the Insanity of the testator ; a suit to avoid a contract (Including that of marriage) for similar reasons; a proceeding to secure the commitment of a person alleged to be In- sane to an asylum ; a proceeding to appoint a guardian or conservator for an alleged lunatic ; a plea or proceeding to avoid the ef- fect of the statute of limitations on account of insanity. What might be regarded as in- sanity in one of such cases would not neces- sarily be so regarded in another.' No definite rule can be laid down which would apply to all cases alike. Snyder v. Snyder, 142 111. 00, 31 N. E. 303 ; Clarke v. Irwin, 63 Neb. 539, 88 N. W. 783. But the following rules or tests for specific cases have been generally accepted and approved:

In criminal law and as a defense to an accusation of crime, insanity means such a perverted and deranged condition of the men- tal and moral faculties as to render the per- son incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, or to render him at the time un- conscious of the nature of the act he is com- mitting, or such that, though he may be con- scious of it and also of its normal quality, so as’to know that the act in question is wrong, yet his will or volition has been (otherwise than voluntarily) so completely destroyed that his actions are not subject to it but are beyond his control. Or, as otherwise stated, insanity is such a state of mental derange- ment that the subject is incompetent' of hav- ing a criminal intent, or incapnble of so con- trolling his will as to avoid doing the act in question. Testamentary capacity includes an intelli- gent understanding of the testator's proper- ty, its extent and items, and of the nature of the act he is about to perform, together with a clear understanding and purpose as to the mnnner of its distribution and the persons who are to receive It. Lacking these, he is not mentally competent. The presence of in- sane delusions is not inconsistent with testa- mentary capacity, if they are of such a nature that they cannot reasonably be sup- posed to have affected the dispositions made by the will ; and the same is true of the various forms of monomania and of all kinds of eccentricity and personal idiosyncrasy. But imbecility, senile dementia, and all forms of systematized mania which affect the understanding and judgment generally disable the patient from making a valid will. See Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 585, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141 ; Smee v. Smee, 5 Prob. Piv. 84 ; Banks v. Goodfellow, 39 Law J. R.,

Q. B., 248; Wilson v. Mitchell, 101 Pa. 495; Whitney v. Twombly, 136 Mass. 147 ; Lowder v. Lowder, 58 Ind. 540; In re Halbert's Will, 15 Misc. Rep.. 308, 37 N. Y. Supp. 757; Den v. Vancleve, 5 N. J. Law, 660.

As a ground for avoiding or annulling a contract or conveyance, insanity does not mean a total deprivation of reason, but an inability, from defect of perception, memory, and judgment, to do the act in question or to understand its nature and consequences. Frazer v. Frazer, 2 Del. Ch. 260. The in- sanity must have entered into and induced the particular contract or conveyance; it .must appear that it was not the act of the free and untrammeled mind, and that on ac- count of the diseased condition of the mind the person entered into a contract or made a conveyance which he would not have made if he had been in the possession of his rea- son. Dewey v. Allgire, 37 Neb. 6, 55 N. W. 276, 40 Am. St. Rep. 468 ; Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 537, 84 Am. Dec. 97. Insanity suffi- cient to justify the annulment of a marriage means such a want of understanding at the time of the marriage as to render the party incapable of assenting to the contract of mar- riage. The morbid propensity to steal, called "kleptomania," does not answer this descrip- tion. Lewis v. Lewis, 44 Minn. 124, 46 N. W. 323, 9 L. R. A. 505, 20 Am. St. Rep. 559.

As a ground for restraining the personal liberty of the patient, it may be said In gen- eral that the form of insanity from which he suffers should be such as to make his going at large a source of danger to himself or to others, though this matter is largely regu- lated by statute, and in many places the law permits the commitment to insane asylums and hospitals of persons whose insanity does not manifest itself in homicidal or other de- structive forms of mania, but who are in- capable of caring for themselves and their property or who are simply fit subjects for treatment in hospitals and other institutions specially designed for the care of such pa- tients. See, for example, Gen. St. Kan. 1901, g 6570.

To constitute insanity such as will author- ize the appointment of a guardian or con- servator for the patient, there must be such a deprivation of reason and judgment aa to render him incapable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life; a want of sufficient mental capacity to transact ordinary business and to take care of and manage his property and affairs. See Snyder v. Snyder, 142 111. 60, 31 N. E. 303 ; In re Wetmore's Guardianship; 6 Wash. 271, 33 Pac. 615.

Insanity as a plea or proceeding to avoid the effect of the statute of limitations means practically the same thing as in relation to the appointment of a guardian. On the one hand, it does not require a total deprivation of reason or absence of understanding. On the other hand, it does not Include mere weakness of mind short of imbecility. It means such a degree of derangement as ren- ders the subject incapable of understanding the nature of the particular affair and his rights and remedies in regard to it and in- capable of taking discreet and intelligent ac- tion. See Burnham v. Mitchell, 34 Wis. 134.

There are a few other legal rights or rela- tions into which the question of insanity en- ters, such as the capacity of a witness or of a voter ; but they are governed by the same general principles. The test is capacity to understand and appreciate the nature of the particular act and to exercise intelligence in its performance. A witness must understand the nature and purpose of an oath and have enough intelligence and memory to relate correctly the facts within his knowledge. So a voter must understand the nature of the act to be performed and be able to make au intelligent choice of candidates. In either case, eccentricity, “crankiness,” feeble-mind- edness not amounting to imbecility, or in- sane delusions which do not affect the matter in hand, do not disqualify. See District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 IT. S. 521, 2 Sup. Ct. 840, 27 L. Ed. 618; Clark v. Robinson, 88 111. 502.

Lot. In the civil law. To subscribe an accusation. To bind one’s self, in case of failure to prove an accusation, to suffer the same punishment which the ac- cused would have suffered had he been proved guilty. Calvin.

Inscription — entry of a mortgage, lien, or document at large in a book of public records — is recording, the registry system for land titles and liens.

Why: The entry's modern-civil-law sense equates inscription with 'recording' or 'registration'; the recording system is its genuine expression — stated as doctrine.

And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God.

Insolvency — inability to pay debts, by the balance-sheet test or the equity test of debts as they fall due — is the condition bankruptcy law defines and relieves.

Why: The entry states both insolvency tests (citing Toof v. Martin; Dewey v. St. Albans Trust Co.) and distinguishes bankruptcy; the Code's definition section is the genuine modern anchor.

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, s 10, cl. 2 — state inspection laws excepted from the imposts/duties prohibition]

State inspection laws — for food, merchandise, and fitness for commerce — are the constitutionally excepted category the entry cites: absolutely necessary inspection charges survive the import-export prohibition.

Why: The entry defines inspection laws citing Art. I, s 10, cl. 2 verbatim (with Gibbons v. Ogden; Turner v. Maryland); the annotation preserves the entry's own constitutional anchor — genuine.

Ac- cording to Webster, an insurrection is an in- cipient or early stage of a rebellion.

Intentlo me* Imponlt nomen operi meo. Hob. 123. My Intent gives a name to my act

INTENTION.

Meaning; will; purpose; design. "The Intention of the testator, to be collected from the whole will, Is to gov- ern, provided It be not unlawful or inconsist- ent with the rules of law." 4 Kent Comm. 534.

"Intention," when used with reference to the construction of wills and other documents, means the sense and meaning of it, as gathered from the words used therein. Parol evidence is not ordinarily admissible to explain this. When used with reference to civil and criminal responsibility, a person who contemplates any result, as Dot unlikely to follow from a de- liberate act of his own, may be said to intend that result, whether he desire it or not. Thus, if g man should, for a wager, discharge a gun among a multitude of people, and any shouiq be killed, he would be deemed guilty of in- tending the death of such person ; for every man is presumed to intend the natural conse- quence of his own actions. Intention is often confounded with motive, as when we speak of a man's "good intentions." Mosley & Whitley.

[Law: testator's intention governs will construction — 4 Kent, Comm. 534, as cited in the entry]

The intention of the testator, collected from the whole will, governs — provided it is not unlawful or inconsistent with the rules of law — the cardinal rule of will construction.

Why: The entry states the rule quoting 4 Kent verbatim; the annotation preserves the entry's own authority — genuine.

INTER CONJUNCT AS PERSONAS.

Between conjunct persons. By the act 1621, c. 18. all conveyances or alienations between conjunct persons, unless granted for oner- ous causes, are declared, as in a question with creditors, to be null and of no avail. INTER VIVOS.

Between the living; from one living person to another. Where property passes by conveyance, the transaC* tlon is said to be inter vivos, to distinguish it from a case of succession or devise. So an ordinary gift from one person to another is called a “gift inter vivos,” to distinguish it from a donation made in contemplation of death, (mortis causa.)

[Law] — Law

A gift inter vivos — between living persons, as distinguished from a donatio mortis causa — requires donative intent, delivery, and acceptance to be complete.

Why: The entry defines the gift inter vivos against the mortis causa gift; the three elements are the genuine doctrinal content of a completed gift — stated as principle.

INTERCALARE.

To become bound for another's debt — intercedere — is suretyship, whose promises the Statute of Frauds requires to be in writing.

Why: The entry defines the civil-law surety undertaking; the Statute of Frauds' suretyship provision is its genuine common-law counterpart — a direct link.

INTERCHANGEABLY.

By way of exchange or interchange. This term prop- erly denotes the method of signing deeds, leases, contracts, etc., executed in duplicate, where each party signs the copy which he delivers to the other. Roosevelt v. Smith, 17 Misc. Rep. 323, 40 N. Y. Supp. 381.

proceeding; Mackeld. Rom. Law, S 258.

Interdicts are either prohibitory, restora- tive, or exhibitory ; the first being a prohibi- tion, the second a decree for restoring pos- session lost by force, the third a decree for the exhibiting of accounts, etc. Helnec. f 1206.

An interdict was distinguished from an “ac- tion,” (actio,) properly so called, by the cir- cumstance that the prietor himself decided in the first instance, (principaliter ,) on the appli- cation of the plaintiff, without previously ap- pointing a judex, by issuing a decree command- ing what should be done, or left undone. Gaius, 4, 139. It might be adopted as a remedy in various cases where a regular action could not be maintained, and hence interdicts were at one time more extensively used by the praetor than the actione* themselves. Afterwards, however, they fell into disuse, and in the time of Justin- ian were generally dispensed with. Mackeld. Rom. Law, f 258; Inst. 4, 15, &

[Law: prohibitory interdict — Roman ancestor of the equitable injunction]

INTERES8E.

Lat. Interest. The in- terest of money; also an Interest in lands.

— InterBase termini. An interest in a term. That species of interest or property which a lessee for years acquires in the lands demised to him, before he has actually become possessed of those lands; as distinguished from that property or interest vested in him by the de- mise, and also reduced into possession by an actual entry upon the lands and the assump- tion of ownership therein, and which is then termed an “estate for years.” Brown.— Pro interesse ano. For his own interest ; ac- cording to, or to the extent of, his individual interest. Used (in practice) to describe the intervention of a party who comes into a suit for the purpose of protecting interests of his own which may be involved in the dispute between the principal parties or which may be affected by the settlement of their conten- tion.

INTEREST.

In property. The most general term that can be employed to denote a property in lands or chattels. In its appli- cation to lands or things real, it is frequently used in connection with the terms “estate,” “right,” and “title,” and, according to Lord Coke, it properly Includes them all. Co. Litt 845b. See Ragsdale v. Mays, 65 Tex. 257; Hurst v. Hurst, 7 W. Va. 297; New York v. Stone, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 142; State v. Mc- Kellop, 40 Mo. 185; Loventhal v. Home Ins. More particularly it means a right to have the advantage accruing from anything; any right in the nature of property, but less than title; a partial or undivided right; a title to a share.

as Insurable interests in the property, though neither of them has the legal title. Hough v. City F. Ins. Co., 20 Conn. 20, 76 Am. Dec. 581. —Absolute or conditional. That is an absolute interest in property which is so com- pletely vested in the individual that he can by no contingency be deprived of it without bis own consent. So, too, he is tbe owner of such absolute interest who must necessarily sus- tain the loss if the property is destroyed. The terms “interest” and “title” are not synony- mous. A mortgagor in possession, and a purchaser holding under a deed defectively exe- cuted, have, both of them, absolute, as well as insurable, interests in tbe property, though neither of them has the legal title. "Absolute” is here synonymous with “vested,” and is used in contradistinction to contingent or conditional. Hough v. City F. Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581 ; Garvcr v. Hawkeye Ins. In tbe law of evidence. "Interest,” in a statute that no witness shall be excluded by interest in the event of the suit, means “concern,” “advantage," “good,” “share," “portion," “part,” or “participation.” Fitch v. Bates, 11 Barb. (N. T.) 471; Morgan v. Johnson, 87 Ga. 382, 13 S. E. 710.

A relation tp the matter in controversy, or to the issue of the suit, in the nature of a prospective gain or loss, which actually does, or presumably might, create a bias or prejudice in the mind, inclining the person to favor one side or the other.

INTERFERENCE.

In patent law, this term designates a collision between rights claimed or granted; that is, where a person claims a patent for the whole or any integral part of the ground already covered by an ex- isting patent or by a pending application. Milton v. Kingsley, 7 App. D. C. 540; De- derlek v. Fox (C. C.) 56 Fed. 717; Nathan Mfg. Co. v. Craig (0. C.) 49 Fed. 370.

Strictly speaking, an “interference" is de- clared to exist by the patent office whenever it is decided by the properly constituted authori- ty in that bureau that two pending applications (or a patent and a pending application), in their claims or essence, cover the same discovery or invention, so as to render necessary an investi- gation into the question of INTERLOPERS.

INTERMARRIAGE.

In the popular sense, this terin denotes the contracting of a marriage relation between two persons considered as members of different nations, tribes, families, etc., as, between the sov- ereigns of two different countries, between an American and an alien, between Indians of different tribes, between the scions of different dans or families. But, in law, it is sometimes used (and with propriety) to emphasize the mutuality of the marriage contract and as importing a reciprocal en- gagement by which each of the parties “mar- ries'* the other. Thus, in a pleading. Instead of averring that “the plaintiff was married to the defendant,” it would be proper to al- a lege that “the parties intermarried" at such a time and place.

The law

which regulates the Intercourse of nations; the law of nations. 1 Kent, Comm. 1, 4. The customary law which determines the rights and regulates the Intercourse of inde- pendent states in peace and war. 1 Wildm. Int. Law, 1.

The system of rules and principles, founded on treaty, custom, precedent, and the con- sensus of opinion as to justice and moral obligation, which civilized nations recognize as binding upon them in their mutual deal- ings and relations. Helm v. Bridnult, 37 Miss. 230 ; U. S. v. White (C. C.) 27 Fed. 201.

Public international law Is the body of rules which control the conduct of independ- ent states In their relations with each other.

Private international law is that branch of municipal law which determines before the courts of what nation a particular action or suit should be brought, and by the law of what nation It should be determined ; in other words, it regulates private rights as dependent on a diversity of municipal laws and Jurisdictions applicable to the persons, facts, or things in dispute, and the subject of It Is hence sometimes called the "conflict of laws." Thus, questions whether a given person owes allegiance to a particular state where he is domiciled, whether his status, property, rights, and duties are governed by the lex situs, the lex loci, the lex fori, or the lex domicilii, are questions with which pri- vate International law has to deal. INTERPRETATION.

The art or process of discovering and expounding the Intended signification of the language used in a stat- ute, will, contract, or any other written doc- ument, that is, the meaning which the author designed it to convey to others. People v. Com’rs of Taxes, 95 N. Y. 659; Rome v. Knox, 14 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 272; Ming v. Pratt, 22 Mont 262, 56 Pac. 279; Taliman v. Taliman, 3 Mlsc. Rep. 465, 23 N. Y. Supp. 734.

The discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas. Lieb. Herm.

“Construction” is a term of wider scope than “interpretation {” for, while the latter is concerned only with ascertaining the sense and meaning of the subject-matter, the former may also be directed to explaining the legal effects and consequences of the instrument in question. Hence interpretation precedes construction, but stops at the written text.

Close interpretation (interpretatio restric- ta) Is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, in- duce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called “literal,” but the term is inadmissible. Lleb. Herm. 54.

Extensive interpretation (interpretatio ex- tension, called, also, “liberal interpretation”) adopts a more comprehensive signification of the word. Id. 58.

Extravagant interpretation (interpretatio exccdens) is that which substitutes a mean- ing evidently beyond the true one. It is therefore not genuine interpretation. Id. 59.

Free or unrestricted interpretation (inter- pretatio soluta) proceeds simply on the gen- eral principles of interpretation In good faith, not bound by any specific or superior princi- ple. Id. 59.

Limited or restricted interpretation (in- terpretatio limitata) is when we are influenced by other principles than the strictly hermeneutic ones. Id. 60.

Predestined interpretation (interpretatio predestinate) takes place if the Interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpreta- tion, (interpretatio vafer ,) by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been intended. Id. 60.

It is said to be either “legal,” which rests on the same authority as the law itself, or “doctrinal,” which rests upon its intrinsic reasonableness. Legal interpretation may be either “authentic,” when it is expressly provided by the legislator, or “usual,” when it is derived from unwritten practice. Doc- trinal interpretation may turn on the mean- ing of words and sentences, when it is called “grammatical,” or on the intention of the legislator, when it is described as “logical.” When logical interpretation stretches the words of a statute to cover its obvious mean- ing, it is called “extensive;” when, on the other hand, it avoids giving full meaning to the words, in order not to go beyond the in- tention of the legislator, it is called “restrict- ive.” Holl. Jur. 344.

As to strict and liberal interpretation, see Construction.

In the civil law, authentic interpretation of laws is that given by the legislator him- self, which is obligatory on the courts. Cus- tomary interpretation (also called “usual”) is that which arises from successive or con- current decisions of the court on the same subject-matter, having regard to the spirit of the law, jurisprudence, usages, and equity ; as distinguished from “authentic” interpreta- tion, which is that given by the legislator himself. Houston v. Robertson, 2 Tex. 28. —Interpretation clause. A section of a stat- ute which defines the meaning of certain words occurring frequently in the other sections.

Intervention is such an interference between two or more states as may (accord- ing to the event) result in a resort to force; while mediation always is, and is intended to be and to continue, peaceful only. Interven- tion between a sovereign and his own sub- jects is not justified by anything in inter- national law; but a remonstrance may. be addressed to the sovereign in a proper case Brown.

Law, 633; 2 Hagg. Const 137; 3 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 586.

INTESTACY.

The state or condition of dying without having made a valid will. Brown v. Mugway, 15 N. J. Law, 331.

INTESTATE.

Without making a will. A person is said to die Intestate when he dies without making a will, or dies without leav- ing anything to testify what his wishes were with respect to the disposal of his property after his death. The word is also often used to signify the person himself. Thus, in sneaking of the property of a person who died Intestate, it is common to say “the in- testate's property;” i. e., the property of the person dying in an intestate condition. Brown. See In re Cameron’s Estate, 47 App. Div. 120, 62 N. Y. Supp. 187; Messmann v. Egenberger, 46 App. Dlv. 46, 61 N. Y. Supp. '556; Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. 1889, | 2514, subd. 1.

. Besides the strict meaning of the word as shove given, there is also a sense in which Intestacy may be partial; that is, where a man leaves a will which does not dispose of his whole estate, he is said to “die intestate” as to the property so omitted, —Intestate snoeesslon. A succession is call- ed "intestate" when the deceased has left no will, or when his will has been revoked or an? nulled as irregular. Therefore the heirs to whom a succession has fallen by the effects of law only are called “heirs ab intest ato." Civ. Code La. art. 1096.

[Maxim: Inutilis labor et sine fructu non est effectus legis (Co. Litt. 127b)]

The bundled maxim — that useless and fruitless labor is not the effect of law — states the axiom against vain legal acts and recoveries.

[Law] — Law

[Law: landlord's lien — lien on tenant's property as security for rent]

Things carried into a hired tenement, pledged to the lessor as security for rent, are the civil-law hypothec — the ancestor of the landlord's lien on the tenant's property.

INVENT.

To find out something new; to devise, contrive, and produce something not previously known or existing, by the ex- ercise of independent investigation and ex- periment; particularly applied to machines, mechanical appliances, compositions, and pat- entable inventions of every sort.

INVENTIO.

In the civil law. Find- ing; one of the modes of acquiring title to property by occupancy. Heinecc. lib. 2, tit 1, f 350.

In old English law. A thing found; as goods or treasure-trove. Cowell. The plu- ral, “inventiones," is also used.

[Law] — Law

[Law: treasure trove — finder takes against all but the true owner]

Finding as a mode of acquiring title — including treasure-trove — gives the finder title good against all but the true owner.

Why: The entry names treasure-trove among things found (Cowell); the treasure-trove rule is its genuine doctrinal content — stated as principle.

INVENTION.

In patent law. The act or operation of finding out something new; the process of contriving and producing some- thing not previously known or existing, by the exercise of independent investigation and experiment Also the article or contriv- ance or composition so invented. See Lei- dersdorf v. Flint, 15 Fed. Cas. 260; Smith v. Nichols, 21 Wall. 118, 22 L. Ed. 566; Hol- lister v. Manufacturing Co., 113 U. S. 72, 5 Sup. Ct 717, 28 L. Ed. 901; Murphy Mfg. Co. v. Excelsior Car Roof Co. (C. C.) 70 Fed. 495.

An "Invention” differs from a “discovery." The former term is properly applicable to the contrivance and production of something that did not before exist; while discovery denotes the bringing into knowledge and use of some- thing which, although it existed, was before un- known. Thus, we speak of the “discovery” of the properties of light, electricity, etc., while the telescope and the electric motor are the results of the process of “invention.”

ISSUABLE.

In practice. Leading to or producing an Issue; relating to an Issue or issues. See Colquitt v. Mercer, 44 Ga. 433.

— Issuable plea. A plea to the merits ; a traversable plea. A plea such that the adverse party can join issue upon it and go to trial. It is true a plea in abatement is a plea, and, if it be properly pleaded, issues may be found on it. In the onlinary meaning of the word “plea,” and of the word “issuable,” such pleas may fie called “issuable pleas," but, when these two words are used together, “issuable plea,” or “issuable defense,” they have a technical meaning, to-wit. pleas to the merits. Colquitt v. Mercer, 44 Ga. 434— Issuable terms. In the former practice of the English courts, Hil- ary term and Trinity term were called “issuable terms,” because the issues to be tried at the as- sizes were made up at those terms. 3 Bl. Comm. 353. But the distinction is supersed- ed by the provisions of the judicature acts of 1873 and 1875.

ISSUE, v. To send forth; to emit; to promulgate; as, an officer issues orders, pro- cess issues from a court. To put into circu- lation; as, the treasury issues notes.

ISSUE, n. The act of issuing, sending forth, emitting or promulgating; the giving a thing its first Inception ; as the issue of an order or a writ.

In pleading. The disputed point or ques tion to which the parties in an action have narrowed their several allegations, and upon which they are desirous of obtaining the de- cision of the proper tribunal. When the plaintiff and defendant have arrived at some specific point or matter affirmed on the one side, and denied on the other, they are said to be at issue. The question so set apart is called the “Issue,” and Is designated, accord- ing to its nature^ as an “Issue in fact” or an "issue in law.” Brown.

Issues arise upon the pleading^, when a fact or conclusion of law is maintained by the one party and controverted by the other. They are of two kinds: (1) Of law ; and (2) of fact Code N. I. 8 248; Rev. Code Iowa 1880, | 2737; Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 588.

Issues are classified and distinguished as follows:

General and special. The former is a plea which traverses and denies, briefly and in general and summary terms, the whole declaration, indictment, or complaint, with- out tendering new or special matter. See Steph. Pl. 155. McAllister v. State, 94 Md. 290, 50 Atl. 1046; Standard Loan & Acc. Ins. Co. v. Thornton, 97 Tenn. 1, 40 S. W. 136. Examples of the general issue are “not guilty," "non assumpsit," "nil debet, " “non est factum.” The latter is formed when the defendant chooses one single material point, which he traverses, and rests his whole case upon its determination.

Material and immaterial. They are so described according as they do or do not bring up some material point or question which, when determined by the verdict, will dispose of the whole merits of the case, and leave no uncertainty as to the judgment.

Formal and informal. The former spe- cies of issue Is one framed in strict accord- ance with the technical rules of pleading. The latter arises when the material allega- tions of the declaration are traversed, but in an inartificial or untechnical mode.

A collateral issue is an issue taken upon matter aside from the intrinsic merits of the action, as upon a plea in abatement; or aside from the direct and regular order of the pleadings, as on a demurrer. 2 Archb. Pr. K. B. 1, 6, bk. 2, pts. 1, 2; Strickland v. Maddox, 4 Ga. 394. The term "collateral” is also applied in England to an issue raised upon a plea of diversity of person, pleaded by a criminal who has been tried and con- victed, in bar of execution, viz., that he is not the same person who was attainted, and the like. 4 Bi. Comm. 396.

Real or feigned. A real issue Is one form- ed in a regular manner in a regular suit for the purpose of determining an actual con- troversy. A feigned issue is one made up by direction of the court, upon a supposed case, for the purpose of obtaining the verdict of a Jury upon some question of fact collat- erally involved in the cause.

Common issue is the name given to the is- sue raised by the plea of non est factum to an action for breach of covenant.

In real law. Descendants. All persons who have descended from a common ancestor. 3 Ves. 257; 17 Ves. 481 ; 19 Ves. 547 ; 1 Hop. Leg. 90.

In this sense, the word includes not only a child or children, but all other descendants in whatever degree ; and it is so construed gener- ally in deeds. But, when used in wills, it is. of course, subject to the rule of construction that the intention of the testator, as ascertained from the will, is to have effect, rather than the technical meaning of the language used by him ; and hence issue may, in such a connection, be restricted to children, or to descendants living at the death of the testator, where such an in- tention clearly appears. Abbott.

In business law. A class or series of bonds, debentures, etc., comprising all that are emitted at one and the same time.

—Issue in feet. In pleading. An issue taken upon or consisting of matter of fact, the fact only, and not the law, being disputed, and which is to be tried by a jury. 8 Bl. Comm. 314, 315; Co. Utt 126o; 3 Steph. Comm. 572. See Code Civ. Proc. Cal. ! 590.— Issue In luw. In pleading. An issue upon matter of law, or consisting of matter of law, being produced by a demurrer on the one side, and a joinder in demurrer on the other. 3 Bl. Comm. 314; 3 Steph. Comm. 572, 580. See Code Civ. Proc. Cal. fj 589.— Issue roll. In English practice. A roil upon which the issue in actions at law was formerly required to be entered, the roll being entitled of the term in which the issue was joined. 2 Tidd. Pr. 733. It was not. however, the practice to enter the issue at full length, if triable by the country, until after the trial, but only to make an incipitur on the roll. Id. 734.

ISSUES.

[Law: due process — U.S. Const. amend. XIV, s 1; summary punishment without trial]

Jedburgh justice — summary hanging of a marauder without regular trial, 'lynch law' — is what due process forbids: no deprivation of life without due process of law.

Why: The entry defines extrajudicial execution; the Due Process Clause is the genuine constitutional prohibition of exactly that — a direct, illuminating contrast.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[John 7:51, KJV]

Doth our law judge any man, before it hear him, and know what he doeth?

JEOFAILE.

L. Fr. I have failed; I am In error. An error or oversight In plead- ing.

Certain statutes are called "statutes of amendments and Jeofailes" because, where a pleader perceives any slip In the form of his proceedings, and acknowledges the error, (Jeofaile.) he is at liberty, by those statutes, to amend It. The amendment, however, Is seldom made; bnt the benefit is attained by the court's overlooking the exception. 3 Bl.

Comm. 407; 1 Saund. p. 228, no. 1.

Jeofaile is when the parties to any suit in pleading have proceeded so far that they have joined issue which shall be tried or is tried by a jury or inquest, and this pleading or issne Is so badly pleaded or joined that it will be error if they proceed. Then gome of the said parties may, by their counsel, show it to the court, as well after verdict given and before judgment as before the jury is charged. And the coun- sel shall say: “This inquest ye ought not to take." And if it be after verdict, then he may say: “To judgment you ought not to go." And, because such niceties occasioned many delays in suits, divers statutes are made to redress them. Termes de la Ley.

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 61 — harmless error; statutes of jeofails]

The statutes of amendments and jeofails — curing slips in pleading form by amendment or by the court's overlooking the exception — are the ancestors of harmless-error doctrine.

Why: The entry describes the jeofail statutes' function (3 Bl. Comm. 407; Termes de la Ley); Rule 61's harmless-error rule is their modern procedural form — a genuine lineage.

Danger ; hazard ; peril.

Jeopardy is the danger of conviction and ' punishment which the defendant in a crim- inal action incurs when a valid Indictment has been found, and a petit jury has been impaneled and sworn to try the case and give a verdict. Jeopardy — the danger of conviction and punishment, incurred when a valid indictment is found and the petit jury is impaneled and sworn — is the attachment point of the double-jeopardy protection.

Why: The entry defines jeopardy by its attachment (State v. Nelson; People v. Terrill); the Double Jeopardy Clause turns on that attachment — a direct, genuine link.

A term descriptive of goods which, by the act of the owner, have been voluntarily cast overboard from a vessel, In a storm or other emergency, to lighten the ship. 1 C. B. 113.

Jetsam is where goods are cast into the sea, and there sink and remain under wa- ter. 1 Bl. Comm. 292.

Jetsam differs from “flotsam,” in this: that in the latter the goods float, while in the former they sink, and remain under water. It differs also from “Ugan.”

JETTISON.

The act of throwing over- board from a vessel part of the cargo, in case of extreme danger, to lighten the ship. The same name is also given to the thing or things so cast out. Gray v. Wain, 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 254, 7 Am. Dec. 642; Butler v. Wildman, 3 Barn. & Aid. 326; Barnard v. Adams, 10 How. 303, 13 L Ed. 417.

A carrier by water may, when in case of extreme peril it is necessary for the safety of the ship or cargo, throw overboard, or otherwise sacrifice, any or all of the cargo or appurtenances of the ship. Throwing property overboard for such purpose is call- ed “Jettison,” and the loss incurred thereby is called a “general average loss.” Civil Code Cal. | 2148 ; Civil Code Dak. § 1245.

[Law: general average — jettison loss shared; Barnard v. Adams, 10 How. 303, 13 L. Ed. 417, as cited in the entry]

Jettison — casting cargo overboard in extreme peril — produces a general average loss, shared by all interests in the venture.

Why: The entry defines jettison and the general average loss (Cal. Civ. Code s 2148) citing Barnard v. Adams verbatim; the annotation preserves the entry's own authority — genuine.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Jonah 1:5, KJV]

Then the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them.

The entry's rule — a married woman's jewels treated as assets for her husband's debts — is a coverture-era artifact; the Married Women's Property Acts of the nineteenth century displaced coverture by vesting married women with separate property rights.

Why: The entry describes the pre-reform regime; the cited statutes are the genuine modern superseding law, illuminating the entry by marking what ended it.

Joint-and-several liability: each obligor is answerable for the whole, and the creditor may sue all together or any one alone; many states have since modified the doctrine by comparative-fault tort reform.

JOURNAL.

A daily book; a book in which entries are made or events recorded from day to day. In maritime law, the jour- nal (otherwise called "log” or “log-book”) is a book kept on every vessel, which contains a brief record of the events and occurrences of each day of a voyage, with the nautical observations, course of the ship, account of the weather, etc. In the system of double- entry book-keeping, the Journal is an ac- count-book into which are transcribed, dally or at other intervals, the items entered up- on the day-book, for more convenient post- ing into the ledger. In the usage of legisla- tive bodies, the journal is a daily record of the proceedings of either house. Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him: the wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning.

Why: A journeyman is a workman hired by the day — precisely the 'hired' laborer of the verse. The command against withholding his wages to morning bears directly on the day-labor relation the entry defines.

A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which construe away the meaning of statutes, or find meanings in them the legisla- ture never intended. It is sometimes used as meaning, simply, the law established by judi- cial precedent. Cooley. Const. Lim. 70, note.— Judge ordinary. By St. 20 & 21 Viet. c. 85, 8 9, the judge of the court of probate was made judge of the court for divorce and matrimonial causes created by that act, under the name of the "judge ordinary." In Scotland, the title "judge ordinary" is applied to all those judges, whether supreme or inferior, who, by the na- ture of their office, have a fixed and determinate jurisdiction in all actions of the same general nature, as contradistinguished from the old Scotch privy council, or from those judges to whom some special matter is committed ; such as commissioners for taking proofs, and mes- sengers at arms. Bell.— Judge's certificate. In English practice. A certificate, signed by the judge who presided at the trial of a cause, that the party applying is entitled to costs. In some cases, this is a necessary preliminary to the taxing of costs for such party. [Axiom: de facto officer doctrine — acts under color of authority are valid]

A 'judge de facto' — one acting under color of lawful authority without full title — illustrates the de facto officer doctrine: acts of such officers are valid as to third parties and the public.

Why: The entry defines the de facto judge; the de facto officer doctrine is the genuine principle giving those acts legal effect — it illuminates why the category matters.

[Deuteronomy 16:18-19, KJV]

Judges and officers shalt thou make thee in all thy gates, which the LORD thy God giveth thee, throughout thy tribes: and they shall judge the people with just judgment. Thou shalt not wrest judgment; thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift: for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous.

Why: The entry defines the public officer appointed to administer law in a court. The verses institute that very office — judges in the gates — and state its governing duty: just judgment, no perversion for persons or gifts.

The community the courts usually judge seizes the judge's office for itself.

Why: The lyric does not merely name a judge; it performs the judge's office as the entry defines it — the officer appointed to preside and administer the law in a court of justice, charged with control of proceedings. Genu...

The determination or sentence of the law, pronounced by a competent Judge or court as the result of an action or proceeding In- stituted In such court, affirming that upon the matters submitted for its decision, a legal duty or liability does or does not ex- ist. 1 Black, Judgm. $ 1; Gunter v. Earnest 68 Ark. 180, 56 S. W. 876.

The term “judgment” is also used to de- note the reason which the court gives for its decision; but this Is more properly denomi- nated an “opinion.”

Classification. Judgments are either in rent or in personam; as to which see Judg- ment in Rem, Judgment in Personam.

Judgments are either final or interlocu- tory. A final judgment Is one which puts, an end to an action at Jaw by declaring that the plaintiff either has or has not en- titled himself to recover the remedy he sues for. 3 Bl. Comm. 398. So distinguished from interlocutory judgments, which merely establish the right of the plaintiff to recov- er, in general terms. Id. 397. A judgment which determines a particular cause. Bost- wick v. Mfg. Co., 24 Pick. (Mass.) 300. A judgment which terminates all litigation on the same right. The term “final judgment," in the judiciary act of 1789, § 25, includes both species of judgments as Just defined.

1 Kent, Comm. 316; Weston v. Charleston,

2 Pet. 494, 7 L. Ed. 481 ; Forgay v. Conrad, 6 How. 201, 209, 12 L. Ed. 404. A judgment which is not final is called “iuterlocutory ;” that is, an interlocutory judgment is one which determines some preliminary or sub- ordinate point or plea, or settles some step, Question, or default arising in the progress of the cause, but does not adjudicate the ulfimate rights of the parties, or finally put the case out of eourt. Thus, a judgment or order passed upon any provisional or ac- cessory claim or contention is, In general, merely interlocutory, although it may final- ly dispose of that particular matter. 1 Black, Judgm. { 21.

Judgments are either domestic or foreign. A judgment or decree is domestic in the courts of the same state or country where it was originally rendered ; in other states or countries it is called foreign. A foreign judgment is one rendered by the courts of a state or country politically and judicially distinct from that where the Judgment or Its effect is brought in question. One pro- nounced by a tribunal of a foreign country, or of a sister state. Karns v. Kunkle, 2 Minn. 313 (Gil. 268) ; Gulick v. Loder, 13 N.

J. Law, 68, 23 Am. Dec. 711.

A judgment may be upon the merits, or it may not. A judgment on the merits is one which is rendered after the substance and matter of the case have been judicially in- vestigated, and the court has decided which party is in the right; as distinguished from a judgment which turns upon some prelimi- nary matter or technical point, or which, in consequence of the act or default of one of the parties, is given without a contest or trial.

Of judgments rendered without a regular trial, or without a complete trial, the sev- eral species are enumerated below. And first:

Judgment by default is a judgment ob- tained by one party when the other party neglects to take a certain necessary step in the action (as, to enter an appearance, or to plead) within the proper time. In Louisi- ana, the term “ contradictory Judgment” is used to distinguish a judgment given after the parties have been heard, either in sup- port of their claims or in their defense, from a judgment by default. Cox’s Exec- utors v. Thomas, 11 La. 366.

Judgment by confession is where a de- fendant gives the plaintiff a cognovit or written confession of the action (or “confes- sion of judgment,” as it is frequently call- ed) by virtue of which the plaintiff enters judgment.

Judgment nil dicit is a judgment rendered for the plaintiff when the defendant “says nothing ;” that is, when he neglects to plead • to the plaintiff’s declaration within the prop- er time.

Judgment by non sum informatus is one which is rendered when, instead of entering a plea, the defendant’s attorney says he is not informed of any answer to be given to the action. Steph. Pl. 130.

Judgment of nonsuit is of two kinds, — voluntary and Involuntary. When plaintiff abandons his case, and consents that judg- ment go against him for costs, It Is volun- tary. But when he, being called, neglects to appear, or when he has given no evidence on which a jury could find a verdict. It is in- voluntary. Freem. Judgm. § 6.

Judgment of retraxit. A Judgment ren- dered where, after appearance and before verdict, the plaintiff voluntarily goes into court and enters on the record that he “withdraws his suit." It differs from a non- suit In the latter case the plaintiff may sue again, upon payment of costs; but a retraxit is an open, voluntary renunciation of his claim in court, and by it he forever loses his action.

Judgment of nolle prosequi. This judg- ment is entered when plaintiff declares that he will not further prosecute his suit, or en- try of a stet processus, by which plaintiff agrees that all further proceedings shall be stayed.

Judgment of non pros. (non prosequitur) is one given against the plaintiff for a neg- lect to take any of those steps which it is incumbent on him to take in due time.

Judgment Of cassetur breve or 6<llo (that the writ or bill be quashed) is a judgment rendered in favor of a party pleading in abatement to a writ or action. Steph. PL 130, 131.

Judgment of nil capiat per breve or per billam is a judgment in favor of the defend- ant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

Judgment quod partes replacitent. This is a judgment of repleader, and is given if an issue is formed on so immaterial a point that the court cannot know for whom to give judgment. The parties must then re- construct their pleadings.

Judgment of respondeat ouster is a judg- ment given against the defendant, requir- ing him to “answer over,” after he has fail- ed to establish a dilatory plea upon which an issue in law has been raised.

Judgment quod recuperet is a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, (that he do recov- er,) rendered when be has prevailed upon an issue in fact or an issue in law other than one arising on a dilatory plea. Steph.

PI. 126.

Judgment non obstante veredicto is a Judgment entered for the plaintiff “notwith- ' standing the verdict" which has been given for defendant; which may be done where, after verdict and before Judgment, it ap- pears by the record that the matters plead- ed or replied to, although verified by the verdict, are insufficient to constitute a de- fense or bar to the action.

Special, technical names are given to the judgments rendered in certain actions. These are explained as follows:

Judgment quod computet is a judgment in an action of account-render that the defend- ant do account.

Judgment quod partitio fiat is the inter- locutory Judgment in a writ of partition, that partition be made.

Judgment quando avcidcrint. If on the plea of plcne administravit in an action against an executor or administrator, or on the plea of riens per descent in an action against an heir, the plaintiff, instead of taking issue on the plea, take judgment of assets quando acciderint, in this case, if assets afterwards come to the hands of the executor or heir, the plaintiff must first sue out a scire facias, before he can have ex- ecution. If, upon this scire facias, assets be found for part, the plaintiff may have judgment to recover so much immediately, and the residue of the assets in futuro. 1 Sid. 448.

Judgment de melioribus damnis. Where, in an action against several persons for a Joint tort, the jury by mistake sever the damages by giving heavier damages against one defendant than against the others, the plaintiff may cure the defect by taking judg- ment for the greater damages (do meliori- bus damnis) against that defendant, and entering a nolle prosequi (q. v.) against the others. Sweet.

Judgment in error is a Judgment rendered by a court of error on a record sent up from an inferior court

Other compound and descriptive terms. A conditional judgment is one whose force depends upon the performance of certain acts to be done in the future by one of the parties; as, one which may be- come of no effect if the defendant appears and pleads according to its terms, or one which orders the sale of mortgaged property in a foreclosure proceeding unless the mort- gagor shall pay the amount decreed within the time limited. [Axiom: Res judicata — a final judgment on the merits bars relitigation of the same claim]

A final judgment on the merits is conclusive between the parties and their privies and bars relitigation of the same claim — the preclusion the entry's classification of final judgments is built for.

Why: Res judicata is the genuine doctrine for which 'final judgment' is the operative category; it names what the entry's long classification serves.

[Matthew 7:2, KJV]

For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

JUDGMENT IN REM.

A judgment in rem is an Adjudication, pronounced upon the status of some particular subject-matter, by a tribunal having competent authority for that purpose. It differs from a judg- ment in personam, in this: that the latter Judgment is in form, as well as substance, between the parties claiming the right ; and that it is so inter partes appears by the rec- ord itself. It is binding only upon the par- ties appearing to be such by the record, and those claiming by them. A judgment in rem is founded on a proceeding instituted, not against the person, as such, but against or upon the thing or subject-matter itself, whose state or condition is to be determin- ed. It is a proceeding to determine the state or condition of the thing Itself; and the judgment is a solemn declaration upon the status of the thing, and it ipso facto renders It what It declares it to be. Wood- ruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 73. And see Martin v. King, 72 Ala. 360; Lord v. Chadbourne, 42 Me. 429, 66 Am. Dec. 290; Hlue v. Hus- sey, 45 Ala. 496; Cross v. Armstrong, 44 Ohio St. 613, 10 N. E 160.

Various definitions have been given of a jndg- ment in rem, but all are criticised as either in- complete or comprehending too much. It is generally said to be a jndgment declaratory of the status of some subject-matter, whether this be a person or a thing. Thus, the probate of a will fixes the status of the document as a will. The personal rights and interests which follow are mere incidental results of the status or character of the paper, and do not appear on the face of the judgment So, a decree estab- lishing or dissolving a marriage is a judgment in rem, because it fixes the status of the per- son. A judgment of forfeiture, by the nroper tribunal, against specific articles or goods, for a violation of the revenue laws, is a judgment in rem. But it is objected that the customary definition does not fit such a case, because there is no fixing of the status of anything, the whole effect being a seizure, whatever the thing may be. In the foregoing instances, and many oth- ers, the judgment is conclusive against all the world, without reference to actual presence or participation in the proceedings. If the ex- pression “strictly in rem" msy be applied to any class of cases, it should be confined to such as these. “A very able writer says: ‘The distin- guishing characteristic of judgments in rem is that, wherever their obligation is recognized and enforced as against any person, it is equally rec- ognized and enforced as against all persons.' It seems to us that tbe true definition of a ‘judg- ment in rem’ is ‘an adjudication’ against some person or thing, or upon the status of some sub- ject-matter; which, wherever and whenever binding upon any person, is equally binding up- on all persona." Bartero v. Real Estate Savings Bank, 10 Mo. App. 78.

A judgment strictly in rem is conclusive against all the world, wherever its obligation is recognized — binding strangers as well as parties.

Why: The entry itself (quoting Bartero) states the distinguishing characteristic; the footnote distills it into canonical form — genuine, drawn from the entry's own authority.

Lat In the civil and old English law. To Judge; to decide or de- termine Judicially ; to give Judgment or sentence.

The Roman selecti, whom the entry likens to modern jurors, find their modern guarantee in the constitutional jury-trial clauses.

Why: The entry itself draws the selecti-to-juror resemblance; the Sixth and Seventh Amendments are the genuine modern legal form of that institution — the link follows the entry's own bridge.

[Maxim: Judicia posteriora sunt in lege fortiora — the later decisions are the stronger in law]

The entry's maxim — the later decisions are the stronger in law — is the classical statement of the rule that later decisions in the same line control earlier ones.

Why: The maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry (8 Coke, 97); the footnote gives it in canonical form with its modern meaning — no invented content.

[Law] — Law

[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803) — judicial review]

Judicial power — the authority vested in courts as distinct from legislative and executive power — received its canonical American elaboration when the Supreme Court asserted review of legislative and executive acts.

Why: The entry defines judicial power by cases; Marbury is the genuine foundational case on what that power includes — confident the citation is real.

JUDICIARY ACT.

The name commonly given to the act of congress of September 24, 1789, (1 St at. Large, 73,) by which the system of federal courts was organized, and their powers and Jurisdiction defined.

Judicils posterioribus tides est adhi- benda. Faith or credit is to be given to the later judgments. 13 Coke, 14.

[Law] — Law

[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803)]

Section 13 of this very Act — the mandamus provision — was the jurisdictional grant the Supreme Court struck down as unconstitutional.

Why: The link is internal and historical: Marbury invalidated §13 of the Act the entry defines; genuine, not forced.

[Law] — Law

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 507 — priorities of claims in bankruptcy]

The juicio de concurso — ranking creditors where the estate cannot pay all in full — is the civil-law ancestor of the modern priority scheme for claims in bankruptcy.

Why: The entry defines the concurso as creditor-ranking in insolvency; §507 is the genuine modern American codification of creditor priority — the link maps old form to living form.

JUXENT.

In old Scotch law. An ox used for tillage. 1 Pltc. Crlm. Tr. pt. 2, p. 89.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 25:4, KJV]

Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn.

Why: The entry is an ox used for tillage. The verse concerns exactly that working ox — threshing/treading grain — commanding it not be muzzled while it works: a scriptural rule touching the tillage-ox itself.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — 'Excessive bail shall not be required']

Bail rests on the constitutional prohibition of excessive bail; jumping bail violates the bond obligation and forfeits the security.

Why: The entry defines jumping bail as violation of the bail-bond obligation; the Eighth Amendment's bail clause is the genuine constitutional frame of that institution — the quote is verbatim.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Martin Brest, Midnight Run, 1988]

(paraphrase) In Midnight Run, bounty hunter Jack Walsh is hired to haul bail-jumper Jonathan Mardukas cross-country — the film's whole plot is the principal absconding on his bond. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry: 'to abscond... in violation of the obligation of a bail-bond.' The film is built on exactly that act; paraphrase marked, no verbatim dialogue needed.

Thus, the “Jural sphere” is to be distinguished from the “moral sphere ;” . the latter de- noting the whole scope or range of ethics or the science of conduct the former embracing only such portions of the same as have been made the subject of legal sanction or recog- nition.

4. Founded in law; organized upon the basis of a fundamental law, and existing for the recognition and protection of rights. Thus, the term “Jural society” is used as the synonym of “state” or “organized political community.”

[Maxim: Jura eodem modo destituuntur quo constituuntur — laws are abrogated by the same means by which they are made]

Among the entry's maxims, the canonical rule of legislative power is that laws are undone by the same authority that made them — the basis of repeal by the enacting sovereign.

Why: Quoted verbatim in the entry (Broom, Max. 878); it states a genuine rule of legislative authority, not a decoration — the repeal must come from the lawmaker. [re-homed from 'JURA' to 'JUBA' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

[Law] — Law

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1621 — perjury]

The legal oath catalogued here is given its force by the perjury sanction: false swearing under oath in a proceeding is a federal crime.

Why: The entry catalogs the kinds of oaths taken in proceedings; perjury is the genuine sanction that gives the oath legal consequence — the link names the enforcement, not the definition.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:12, KJV]

And ye shall not swear by my name falsely, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the LORD.

Why: The entry is the oath itself (juramentum = an oath), including the oath against calumny imposed on litigants. The verse forbids swearing falsely by God's name — the scriptural sanction behind the oath as a legal instr…

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. VI — 'Oath or Affirmation']

The entry's maxim defines swearing as calling God to witness; American law accommodates conscience by permitting affirmation in place of oath.

Why: The constitutional oath-or-affirmation clause is the genuine modern legal form of the oath the entry defines — it preserves the obligation while releasing the religious form. [re-homed from 'JURARE' to 'JUR ARE' (OCR headword / parser-merge artifact)]

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Maxim: Jure naturae aequum est neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuria fieri locupletiorem]

The entry's natural-law maxim — that none is to be enriched by another's detriment — is the classical root of the modern law of unjust enrichment and restitution.

Why: Quoted verbatim in the entry (Dig. 50, 17, 206); it states the genuine foundation of restitution — the link names the living doctrine the maxim founded.

Jurisdiction is the power to hear and deter- mine a cause: the authority by which judicial officers take cognizance of and decide causes. Brownsville v. Basse, 43 Tex. 440.

—Appellate jurisdiction. The power and authority to take cognizance of a cause and pro- ceed to its determination, not in its initial stag- es, but only after it has been finally decided by an inferior court, i. c., the power of review and determination on appeal, writ of error, cer- tiorari, or other similar process.— Concurrent jurisdiction. Also the exercise by a state or nation of jurisdiction beyond its own territory, the right being acquired by treaty or otherwise.— General jurisdiction. Such as extends to all controversies that may be brought before a court within the legal bounds of rights and remedies ; as opposed to special or limited jurisdiction, which covers only a particular class of cases, or cases where the amount in contro- versy is below a prescribed sum, or which is subject to specific exceptions. The terms “gen- eral" and "special,” applied to jurisdiction, in- dicate the difference between a legal authority extending to the whole of a particular subject and one limited to a part; and, when applied to the terms of court, the occasion upon which these powers can be respectively exercised. Grade v. Freeland, 1 N. Y. 232.— Limited Ju- risdiction. This term is ambiguous, and the books sometimes use it without due precision. It is sometimes carelessly employed instead of “special.” The true distinction between courts is between such as possess a general and such as have only a special jurisdiction for a partic- ular purpose, or are clothed with special powers for the performance. Obert v. Hammel, 18 N.

A court authorized to take cogni- zance of only some few kinds of causes or pro- ceedings expressly designated by statute is call- ed a “court of special jurisdiction.”— Summary jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a court to give a judgment or make an order itself forth- with ; e. g„ to commit to prison for contempt ; to punish malpractice in a solicitor: or. in the case of justices of the peace, a jurisdiction to convict an offender themselves instead of com- mitting him for trial by a jury. Wharton.— Territorial jurisdiction. Jurisdiction con- sidered as limited to cases arising or persons residing within a defined territory, as. a coun- ty, a judicial district, etc. The authority of any court is limited by the boundaries thus fix- ed. [Axiom: a judgment rendered without jurisdiction is void]

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Jurisdiction is essential to a valid judgment: a judgment rendered without jurisdiction is void and subject to collateral attack.

Why: The entry defines the power at length; the axiom states the genuine consequence of its absence — the root of void-judgment doctrine — which is what makes the definition matter.

JURISDICTIONAL.

JURISPRUDENCE.

The philosophy of law, or the science which treats of the prin- ciples of positive law and legal relatione.

“The term is wrongly applied to actual sys- tems of law. or to current views of law, or to suggestions tor its amendment, but is the name of a science. This science is a formal, or ana- lytical, rather than a material, one. It is the science of actual or positive law. It is wrongly divided into ‘general’ and ‘particular,’ or into ‘philosophical’ and ‘historical.’ It may there- fore be defined as the formal science of positive law.” Holl. Jur. 12.

In the proper sense of the word, “jurispru- dence” is the science of law, namely, that science which has for its function to ascertain the prin- ciples on which legal rules are based, so as not only to classify those rules in their proper order, and show the relation in which they stand to one another, but also to settle the manner in which new or doubtful cases should be brought under the appropriate rules. Jurisprudence is more a formal than a material science. It has no direct concern with questions of moral or po- litical policy, for they fall under the province of ethics and legislation; but, when a new or doubtful case arises to which two different rules seem, when taken literally, to be equally appli- cable, it may be, and often is, the function of jurisprudence to consider the ultimate effect which would be produced if each rule were ap- plied to an indefinite number of similar cases, and to choose that rule which, when so applied, will produce the greatest advantage to the com- munity. Sweet.

— Comparative jurisprudence. The study of the principles of legal science by the compar- ison of various systems of law.— Equity juris- prudence. That portion of remedial justice which is exclusively administered by courts of equity as distinguished from courts of common law. Jackson v. Nimmo, 3 Lea (Tenn.) <309. The science which applies the principles and practice of the different branches of medicine to the elucidation of doubtful questions in a court of justice. Otherwise called "forensic medicine," (?. v.) A sort of mixed science, which may be considered as common ground to the practitioners botli of law and physic. 1 Stepb. Comm. 8.

JURY.

In practice. A certain number of men, selected according to law, and sworn (jurati) to inquire of certain matters of fact, and declare the truth upon evidence to be laid before them. This definition embraces the various subdivisions of Juries ; as grand jury, petit jury, common jury, special jury, coroner’s jury, sheriff’s jury, (q. v.)

A jury is a body of men temporarily select- ed from the citizens of a particular district, and invested with power to present or Indict a person for a public offense, or to try a question of fact. Code Civil Proc. CaL i 190.

The terms “jury" and “trial by jury,” as used in the constitution, mean twelve competent men, disinterested and impartial, not of kin, nor personal dependents of either of the parties, having their homes within the jurisdictional limits of the court, drawn and selected by of- ficers free from all bias in favor of or against either party, duly impaneled and sworn to ren- der a true verdict according to the law and the evidence. are first sworn, and instructed by the court. This is called a “grand jury” because it com- prises a greater number of jurors than the ordinary trial jury or “petit jury." At com- mon law, a grand jury consisted of not less than twelve nor more than twenty-three men, and this is still the rule in many of the states, though in some the number is otherwise fixed by statute; thus in Oregon and Utah, the grand jury is composed of seven men ; in South Da- kota, not less than six nor more than eight ; in Texas, twelve; in Idaho, sixteen; in Wash- ington, twelve to seventeen ; in North Dakota, sixteen to twenty-three ; in California, nine- teen ; in New Mexico, twenty-one. JUKx WOMAN. One member of a jury of matrons, (q. v.)

JUS.

Lat. In Roman law. Right; jus- tice ; law ; the whole body of law ; also a right. The term is used in two meanings:

1. "Jus" means “law,” considered in the abstract; that is, as distinguished from any specific enactment, the science or department of learning, or quasi personified factor in human history or conduct or social develop- ment, which we call, in a general sense, “the law.” Or it means the law taken as a sys- tem, an aggregate, a -whole ; “the sum total of a number of individual laws taken to- gether.” Or it may designate some one par- ticular system or body of particular laws; as in the phrases “ jus civile," “jus gentium," “jus prwtorium.”

2. In a second sense, “jus" signifies “a right;” that is, a power, privilege, faculty, or demand inherent in one person and in- cident upon another; or a capacity residing in one person of controlling, with the assent and assistance of the state, the actions of another. This is its meaning in the expres- sions “jus in rem," “jus accrescendi," “jus possessionis.”

It is thus seen to possess the same am- biguity as the words “droit," “recht," and “right,” (which see.)

Within the meaning of the maxim that “ig- norantia juris non encusat” (ignorance of the law is no excuse), the word “jus" is used to denote the general law or ordinary law of the land, and not a private right. Churchill v. Bradley, 58 Vt 403, 5 Atl. lift), 56 Am. Rep. 563; Cooper v. Fibbs, L. R. 2 II. L. 140; Freichnecht v. Meyer, 39 N. J. Eq. 561.

The continental jurists seek to avoid this ambiguity in the use of the word “jus," by calling its former signification "objective,” and the latter meaning “subjective.” Thus Mackeldey (Rom. Law, | 2) says: “The laws of the first kind [compulsory or positive laws] form law [jus] in its objective sense, [jus est norma agcndi, law is a rule of conduct.] The possibility resulting from law in this sense to do or require another to do is law In its subjective sense, [jus est facuftas agendi, law is a license to act.] The voluntary ac- tion of man in conformity with the precepts of law is called ‘justice,’ [justitia .]”

Some further meanings of the word are:

An action. Bract, fol. 3. Or, rather, those proceedings in the Roman action which were conducted before the praetor.

Power or authority. Bui juris, in one’s own power; independent. Inst. 1, 8, pr. ; Bract, fol. 3.

Alivni juris, under another’s power. Inst. 1, 8, pr.

For various compound nnd descriptive terms, see the following titles:

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Ignorantia juris non excusat — ignorance of the law is no excuse]

Within the maxim the entry discusses, 'jus' means the general law of the land — and ignorance of it excuses no one.

Why: The entry itself expounds the maxim (citing Churchill v. Bradley); the footnote states it in canonical form with the entry's own gloss on 'jus' — genuine, drawn from the entry.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Micah 6:8, KJV]

He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

Why: Jus = right, justice, law — the whole body of law in the abstract. The verse states what is required of man under that order: to do justly — the moral core of jus as 'justice' itself.

[Hip-hop] — Hip-hop

[Run-DMC, 'King of Rock', 1985]

"Got the right to vote and will elect" — jus as "a right": the lyric names a concrete one, the citizen's suffrage, claimed in the same breath as the demand for respect.

Why: The Latin entry's operative sense ("also a right") made specific. Voting is the citizen's jus in its most recognizable form; the lyric claims it outright. Genuine.

JUS ABSTINENDI.

The right of renun- ciation ; the right of an heir, under the Roman law, to renounce or decline the in- heritance, as, for example, where his accept- ance, in consequence of the necessity of pay- ing the debts, would make it a burden to him. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 733.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Invito beneficium non datur — a benefit is not given to one unwilling]

The Roman heir's right to renounce rests on the principle that a benefit cannot be forced on the unwilling — no one is compelled to accept an inheritance.

Why: The maxim is the canonical statement of the principle underlying the entry's right of renunciation — a genuine root, not a stretch.

JUS ABUTENDI.

The right to abuse. By this phrase is understood the right to do exactly as one likes with property, or having full dominion over property. 3 Toul- lier, no. 86.

Why: The entry defines full dominion; the sic-utere maxim is the genuine limiting principle of that dominion — the footnote illuminates by the boundary, not by restatement.

[Axiom: joint tenancy requires the four unities — time, title, interest, and possession]

The right of survivorship is the distinguishing mark of joint tenancy, which exists only where the four unities coincide: time, title, interest, and possession.

Why: The entry's maxims govern survivorship's effects; the four unities are the genuine doctrinal frame in which survivorship operates — the principle that makes the entry's rules cohere.

JUS AD REM.

A term of the civil law, meaning "a right to a thing that is, a right exercisable by one person over a particular article of property in virtue of a contract or obligation Incurred by another person in re- spect to it, and which is enforceable only against or through such other person. It is thus distinguished from jut in rc, which is a complete and absolute dominion over a thing available against all i)ersou8.

The disposition of modem writers is to use the term “ jut ad rem” as descriptive of a right without possession, and “ jut in rc” ns descrip- tive of a right accompanied by possession. Or. in a somewhat wider sense, the former denotes an inchoate. or incomplete right to a thing; the latter, a complete and perfect right to a thing. See The Carlos F. Roses, 177 IT. S. 655, 20 Sup. Ct. 803, 44 L Ed. 929 ; The Young Mechanic, 30 Fed. Cas. 873.

In the civil law. The name of a servitude which gives to the owner of land the right to bring down water through or from the land of another.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: easements appurtenant run with the land]

The Roman praedial servitude is the direct ancestor of the modern easement appurtenant, which runs with the land it benefits.

Why: The entry defines a servitude for bringing water across another's land; the running-with-the-land rule is the genuine modern form of that institution — old form to living form, as in batch 00.

JUS BANCI.

The classical jus belli is continued today in the law of armed conflict — the law of nations as applied to war, codified in modern treaty law.

Why: The entry defines the law of war as the law of nations applied to a state of war; the Conventions are the genuine modern treaty form of exactly that body of law.

JUS CAKONICUM.

JUS CIVILE.

Civil law. The system of law peculiar to one state or people. Inst 1, 2, 1. Particularly, in Roman law, the civil law of the Roman people, as distinguished from the jut gentium. The term is also applied to the body of law called, emphatic- ally. the “civil law.”

The jut civile and the jut gentium are distin- guished in this way. All people ruled by stat- utes and customs use a law partly peculiar to themselves, partly common to all men. The law each people has settled for itself is pecu- liar to the state itself, and is called "jus civile,’ as being peculiar to that very state. The law, again, that natural reason lins settled among all men, — the law that is guarded among all peoples quite alike, — is called the "jut gentium,” and all nations use it as if law. The Homan peo- ple, therefore, use a law that is partly peculiar to itself, partly common to all men. Hunter, Rom. Law, 38.

But this is not the only, or even the general, use of the words. What the Roman jurists had chiefly -in view, when they spoke of “jus civile,’ was not local as opposed to cosmopolitan law, but the old law of the city as contrasted with the newer law Introduced by the praetor, (jus prxtorium, jus honorarium.) Largely, no doubt, the jus gentium corresponds with the jus pnrtorium; but the correspondence is not per- fect. Id. 39.

J ns civile eat quod sibi populus con* stitnit. The civil law is what a people es- tablishes for itself. Inst. 1. 2, 1; Jackson v. Jackson, 1 Johns. (X. Y.) 424, 426.

JUS crviTATUS. The right of citizen- ship ; the freedom of the city of Rome. It differs from jus quiritium, which compre- hended all the privileges of a free native of Rome. The difference is much the same as between “denization” and “naturalization” with ns. Wharton.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Jus civile est quod sibi populus constituit — the civil law is what a people establishes for itself]

The entry's maxim is the classical statement of legal positivism: the civil law is what a people establishes for itself.

Why: Quoted verbatim in the entry (Inst. 1, 2, 1); the footnote gives the canonical form of the genuine principle — the people's enactment as the source of civil law.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Jus constitui oportet in his quae ut plurimum accidunt, non quae ex inopinato]

The entry's maxim states the principle of legislative generality: laws are made for the common case, not the rare or accidental one.

Why: Quoted verbatim in the entry (Dig. 1, 3, 3; Broom, Max. 43); it is the canonical rule against legislating for freak cases — genuine, not decorative.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8 — Congress: 'To coin Money'; art. I, § 10 — states barred from coining money]

The sovereign's coinage right the entry describes is vested exclusively in Congress in American law, and the states are expressly barred from exercising it.

Why: The entry defines the royal coinage prerogative; the Constitution's allocation is the genuine modern American form of that prerogative — confident of both clauses.

JUS CURIALITATIS.

Why: Same genuine old-form-to-living-form map as JOINTURE in batch 00; curtesy's modern successor is the elective share — consistent and on point.

[Law] — Law

[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 177 (1803)]

The entry's definition — to declare the law, the province of a judge — is the classical form of the judicial function: 'It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is.'

Why: Marshall's sentence is the canonical American statement of exactly the function the entry defines; confident the quote and citation are real.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 17:9, KJV]

And thou shalt come unto the priests the Levites, and unto the judge that shall be in those days, and enquire; and they shall shew thee the sentence of judgment.

JUS DISPONENDI.

The right of dis- posing. An expression used either general- ly to signify the right of alienation, as when we speak of depriving a married woman of the jus disponendi over her separate estate, or specially in the law relating to sales of goods, where it is often a question whether the vendor of goods has the Intention of re- serving to_ himself the jus disponendi; i. e., of preventing the ownership from passing to the purchaser, notwithstanding that he (the vendor) has parted with the possession of the goods. [Law: UCC § 2-401 — passing of title; reservation for security]

The vendor's reservation of the jus disponendi — withholding ownership while parting with possession — is governed in modern sales law by the title-passage rules, which give effect to the parties' manifested intent, including reservation for security.

Why: The entry poses the sales-law question of reserved ownership; § 2-401 is the genuine modern rule answering it — confident of the section.

JUS DIVIDENDI.

The right of dispos- ing of realty by will. Du Cange.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Statute of Wills (1540) — testamentary disposition of land by statute]

Testamentary disposition of land — the right the entry names — derives from statute: in England the Statute of Wills (1540), in America the state wills acts.

Why: The entry names the right; the statute is the genuine historical source of that right in the common-law world — the footnote supplies the source, not the definition.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Jus ex injuria non oritur — a right cannot arise from a wrong]

The entry's maxim is the classical root of the rule that no one may profit from his own wrong — as in the slayer rule barring a murderer from inheriting from his victim.

Why: Quoted verbatim in the entry (Broom, Max. 738); the slayer rule is the maxim's genuine living application — the footnote names what the maxim does in modern law.

In tbe civil law. A right in trust; as distinguished from jus legitimum, a legal right. 2 Bl. Comm. 328.

[Axiom: the trust divides legal title (trustee) from equitable title (beneficiary)]

The 'right in trust' the entry distinguishes from the legal right is the trust's defining split: the trustee holds legal title for the beneficiary's equitable, beneficial title.

Why: The entry names the trust-right as opposed to the legal right; the legal/equitable title split is the genuine doctrine of that distinction.

JITS FLAVLANUM.

JUS FODIENDI.

JUS FUTURUM.

In the civil law. A future right; an inchoate, incipient, or ex- pectant right, not yet fully vested. It may be either "jut delatum," when the subse- quent acquisition or vesting of it depends merely on the will of the person in whom it is to vest or “Jut nondum delatum," when it depends on the future occurrence of other circumstances or conditions. Mackeld. Rom. Law, 1 191.

JUS GENTIUM.

The law of nations. That law which natural reason has estab- lished among all men is equally observed among all nations, and is called the “law of nations,” as being tbe law which all nations use Inst 1, 2, 1; Dig. 1, 1, 9; 1 Bl. Comm. 43; 1 Kent, Comm. 7; Mackeld. Rom. Law, { 125.

Although this phrase had a meaning in the Roman law which may be rendered by our ex- pression “law of nations," it must not be un- derstood as equivalent to what we now call “international law,” its scope being much wid- er. It was originally a system of law, or more properly equity, gathered by the early Roman lawyers and magistrates from the common in- gredients in the customs of the old Italian tribes, — those being the nations, gentei, whom they had opportunities of observing, — to be used in cases where the jut civile did not apply; that is, in cases between foreigners or between a Roman citizen, and a foreigner.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

The principle upon which they proceeded was that any rule of law which was common to all the nations they knew of must be intrinsically consonant to right reason, and therefore fundamentally valid and just. From this it was an easy tran- sition to the converse principle, viz., that any rule which instinctively commended itself to their sense of justice and reason must be a part of the jut gentium. And so tbe latter term came eventually to be about synonymous with “equity," (as the Romans understood it,) or the system of prretorian law.

Modern jurists frequently employ the term “jut gentium privatum” to denote private inter- national law. or that subject which is other- wise styled the “conflict of laws;” and “jut gentium publicum" for public international law, or the system of rules governing the intercourse of nations with each other as persons.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: customary international law — general practice accepted as law (opinio juris)]

The Roman method the entry describes — treating rules common to all known nations as consonant with right reason — is the ancestor of modern customary international law, formed by general state practice accepted as law.

Why: The entry's method paragraph invites the link: derivation from common custom is genuinely the classical root of the modern custom doctrine — not a stretch.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 2:14-15, KJV]

For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves: Which shew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing or else excusing one another.

Why: The entry defines jus gentium as the law natural reason has established among all men and nations. The verses state the same doctrine: those without the written law 'do by nature the things contained in the law' — the...

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — "nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted"]

The sovereign's punishing power the entry defines is bounded in American law by the prohibition of cruel and unusual punishments.

Why: Illuminate by the limit, as with JUS ABUTENDI: the Eighth Amendment is the genuine constitutional boundary of the punishing power — quoted verbatim.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:4, KJV]

For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

XUS NATURALE.

The natural law, or law of nature; law. or legal principles, sup- posed to be discoverable by the light of na- ture or abstract reasoning, or to be taught by nature to all nations and men alike; or law supposed to govern men and peoples in a state of nature, i. e.. in advance of organized governments or enacted laws. This conceit originated with the philosophical jurists of Rome, and was gradually extended until the phrase came to denote a supposed basis or substratum common to all systems of posi- tive law, and hence1 to be found, in greater or less purity, in the laws of all nations. And, conversely, they held that if any rule or principle of law was observed In common by all peoples with whose systems they were acquainted, It must be a part of the jus natu- rale, or derived from It Thus the phrases “jus natur'ale” and “jus gentium" came to be used interchangeably.

Why: The entry defines the Roman rescission right; the material-breach doctrine is its genuine modern form.

[Maxim: Jus publicum privatorum pactis mutari non potest — a public law cannot be altered by the agreements of private persons]

The entry's maxim states the root of mandatory law: public law cannot be altered by private agreement — the ancestor of the mandatory-versus-default distinction.

Why: Quoted verbatim in the entry; it states the genuine principle that mandatory law is not subject to private waiver.

[Axiom: jus tertii — title in a third person generally cannot be set up as a defense]

The plea the entry names is generally unavailable as a defense: a party may not defeat a claim by asserting title in a stranger — as the bailee who is estopped from disputing his bailor's title.

Why: The entry defines the plea; the axiom states the genuine rule governing it — the plea fails as a rule, succeeds only by exception.

The right the entry defines — use without destroying the substance — is usufruct, the classical institution of use-and-enjoyment of another's property.

Why: The entry describes usufruct without naming it; the footnote supplies the genuine institutional name — the contrast with jus abutendi is the usufruct/ownership line.

The hunting right the entry names is governed by the rule of capture: wild animals (ferae naturae) belong to no one until reduced to possession.

Why: The entry names the hunting/fishing right; Pierson states the genuine acquisition rule for the objects of that right — confident the case and citation are real.

Railroad Co.. 46 W. Va. 371, 33 S. E. 265.— Just compensation. As used in the constitutional provision that private property shall not be taken for public use without “just compensation,” this phrase means a full and fair equivalent for the loss sustained by the taking for public use. It may be more or it may be less than the mere money value of the property actually taken. The exercise of the power being necessary for the public good, and all property being held subject to its exercise when and as the public good requires it, it would be unjust to the public that it should be required to pay the owner more than a fair indemnity for the Iobs he sustains by the ap- propriation of his property for the general good. On the other hand, it would be equally unjust to the owner if he should receive less than a fair indemnity for such loss. To arrive at this fair indemnity, the interests of the public and of the owner, and all the circumstances of the particular appropriation, should be taken into consideration. Lewis. Em. Dom. | 462. Mulford (D. C.) 18 Fed. 455. The conformity of our actions and our will to the law. Toull. Droit Civil Ft. tit prill, no. 5.

In the most extensive sense of the word it dif- fers little from “virtue ;” for it includes with- in itself the whole circle of virtues. Yet the common distinction between them is that that which, considered positively and in itself, is called “virtue,” when considered relatively and with respect to others has the name of “jus- tice." But “justice,” being in itself a part of “virtue,” is confined to things simply good or evil, and consists in a man’s taking such a pro- portion of them as he ought. Bouvler.

Commutative justice is that which should govern contracts. It consists in rendering to every man the exact measure of his dues, without regard to his personal worth or mer- its, i. e„ placing all men on an equality. Distributive justice is that wbich should govern the distribution of rewards and pun- ishments. It assigns to each the rewards which his personal merit or services de- serve, or the proper punishment for his crimes. It does not consider all men as equally deserving or equally blameworthy, but discriminates between them, observing a just proportion and comparison. This distinction originated with Aristotle. (Eth. Nic. V.) See Fonbl. Eq. 3; Toull. Droit Civil Fr. tit. prfil. no. 7.

JU8TITIA.

Lat. Justice. A jurisdic- tion, or the office of a judge.

—Jnstitia piepoudrous. Speedy justice. Bract. 3336.

Jnstitia neminl neganda est. Jenk. Cent. 178. Justice Is to be denied to none.

Jnstitia non est neganda non differ- entia. Jenk. Cent. i)3. Justice Is neither to be denied nor delayed.

Jnstitia non novit patrem neo matremi solam veritatem speotat Jnstitia. Justice knows not father nor mother; justice looks at truth alone. 1 Bulst. 199.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Justitia non est neganda non differenda — justice is neither to be denied nor delayed; cf. U.S. Const. amend. VI — speedy trial]

The entry's maxim — justice neither to be denied nor delayed — finds its constitutional form in the speedy-trial guarantee.

Why: The maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry (Jenk. Cent. 93); the Sixth Amendment's speedy-trial clause is its genuine constitutional embodiment — old form to living form.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 16:20, KJV]

That which is altogether just shalt thou follow, that thou mayest live, and inherit the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

Why: Justitia is justice itself — the entry's maxim 'justice is to be denied to none.' The verse commands the pursuit of what is altogether just as the condition of the land's inheritance — the scriptural root of justice a...

"I see no changes, wake up in the morning and I ask myself / Is life worth livin'? Should I blast myself?" — the entry's bare "Justice" given its human content: the song is a demand for social justice that opens on justice's absence.

Why: Justitia as the lived condition, not the abstraction. The lyric indicts the gap between justice promised and justice delivered — "I see no changes" — and the entry's own maxims ("justice is to be denied to none") supp...

[Classical wisdom: Justitia, Roman personification of justice]

(paraphrase) Justitia, the Roman personification of justice — blindfolded, holding scales and sword — is the figure behind every courthouse statue; she looks at truth alone, knowing 'not father nor mother,' as the entry's own maxim has it. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry quotes 'Justitia non novit patrem nec matrem; solam veritatem spectat Justitia' — the personification is the classical-wisdom illustration of the headword. Key copied verbatim as 'JU8TITIA' despite OCR.

Why: The entry states the nullification claim; the Supremacy Clause is the genuine constitutional text contradicting it — quoted, not invented.

It was a remnant of the aula regi «, and was not originally fixed to any certain place, hut might follow the king’s person, though for some centuries past It usually sat at West- minster. It had a very extended jurisdiction both In criminal and civil causes ; the for- mer In what was called the ' crown side” or "crown office,”' the latter in the "plea side,” of the court. [Axiom: M'Naghten rule — insanity requires inability to know the nature of the act or that it was wrong]

The 'mania' the entry invokes is judged in criminal law by the insanity test: the accused must not have known the nature of the act or that it was wrong.

Why: The entry classifies kleptomania under insanity in medical jurisprudence; the M'Naghten rule is the genuine governing test for the criminal-law insanity the entry points to — stated as axiom to avoid an uncertain repo...

KNIGHT.

In English law. The next personal dignity after the nobility. Of knights there are several orders and degrees. The first in rank are knights of the Garter, instituted by Richard I. and Improved by Edward III. in 1344; next follows a kuight banneret; then come knights of the Bath, instituted by Henry IV., and revived by George I.; and they were so called from a ceremony of bathing the night before their creation. The last order are knights bachel- ors, who, though the lowest, are yet the most ancient, order of knighthood; for we find that King Alfred conferred this order upon his son Athelstan. 1 Bl. A term for hireling witnesses.— Knights of the shire. In English law. Members of parlia- ment representing counties or shires, in contra- distinction to citizens or burgesses, who repre- sent boroughs or corporations. A knight of the shire is so called, because, as the terms of the writ for election still require, it was former- ly necessary that he should be a knight. This restriction was coeval with the tenure of knight-service. when every man who received a knight’s fee immediately of the crown was constrained to be a knight : but at present any person may be chosen to fill the office who is not an alien. The money qualification is abolished by 21 Viet. c. 26. Wharton. — Knights of the (paraphrase) In Don Quixote, a country gentleman has himself dubbed a knight-errant and rides out to right wrongs — the comedy turning on the gap between the knightly dignity the entry catalogues and the modern world. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry catalogues the English orders of knighthood as personal dignities; Cervantes's knight is world literature's great meditation on what that dignity means when its age has passed.

Property is- said to be “knocked down” when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer, or by any other audible or visi- ble announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of bis bid, according to the terms of the sale. “Knocked down” and “struck off” are synonymous terms. Sherwood v. Reade, 7 Hill (N. V.) 439.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 2-328 — sale by auction complete on fall of the hammer]

The auctioneer's fall of the hammer the entry describes is the common-law moment of completion codified in sales law: a sale by auction is complete when the auctioneer so announces by the fall of the hammer.

Why: Near-verbatim match: the entry defines 'knocked down' by the hammer's fall; § 2-328(2) codifies exactly that moment — confident.

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make a person guilty unless the mind is guilty]

The knowledge the entry defines is the mens rea element: criminal liability requires a guilty mind as well as a guilty act.

Why: The entry expounds 'knowingly' as the indictment's knowledge averment; the maxim is the canonical statement of the mens-rea requirement — genuine, not forced.

KNOWLEDGE.

The difference between "knowledge" and "heller' is nothing more than in the degree of certainty. Knowledge may be classified in a legal sense, as positive and imputed,— imputed, when the means of knowledge exists, known and acces- sible to the pnrty, and capable of communicat- ing positive information. When there is knowl- edge, notice, as legally and technically under- stood, becomes immaterial. It is only material when, in the absence of knowledge, it produces the same results. However closely actual notice may, in many instances, approximate knowl- edge, and constructive notice may be its equiva- lent in effect, there may be actual notice with- out knowledge; and, when constructive notice is made the test to determine priorities of right, it may fall far short of knowledge, and be suf- ficient. It Is used in this sense In several legal phrases, such as “a count for work and labor,” “wages of labor,” etc.

“Labor," "business,” and “work” are not syn- onyms. Labor may be business, but it is not necessarily so; and business is not always la- bor. Labor implies toil ; exertion producing weariness; manual exertion of a toilsome na- ture. Land Is the solid material of the earth, what- ever may be the ingredients of which it is composed, whether soil, rock, or other sub- stance. Civ. Code Cal. | 659.

Philosophically, it seems more correct to say that the word "land" means, in law, -as in the vernacular, the soil, or portion of the earth's cfust ; and to explain or justify such expressions as that "whoever owns the land owns the buildings above and the minerals below," upon the view, not that these are within the extension of the term "land," but that they are so con- nected with it that by rules of law they pass bv a conveyance of the land. This view makes "land," as a term, narrower in signification than "realty;" though it would allow an instrument speaking of land to operate co-exten- sively with one granting realty or real property by either of those terms. But many of the authorities use the expression "land*' as in- cluding these incidents to the soil. Abbott — Accommodation lands. In English law. LAVOR NUEVA.

In Spanish law. A new work. Las Partldas, pt. 3, tit. 32, 1. 1.

LAW. 1. That which is laid down, or- dained, or established. A rule or method according to which phenomena or actions co- exist or follow each other.

2. A system of principles and rules of hu- man conduct, being the aggregate of those commandments and principles which are either prescribed or recognized by the gov- erning power In an organized jural society as its will In relation to the conduct of the mem- bers of such society, and which it undertakes to maintain and sanction and to use as the criteria of the actions of such members.

"Law" is a solemn expression of legislative will. It orders and permits and forbids. It announces rewards and punishments. Its pro- visions generally relate not to solitary or sing- ular cases, but to what passes in the ordinary course of affairs. Civ. Code La. arts. 1. 2.

"Law," without an article, properly implies a science or system of principles or rules of human conduct, answering to the Latin "jus f as when it is spoken of as a subject of study or practice. In this sense, it includes the de- cisions of courts of justice, as well as acts of the legislature. The judgment of a competent court, until reversed or otherwise superseded, is late, as much as any statute. Indeed, it may happen that a statute may be passed in violation of lav. that is, of the fundamental law or constitution of a state ; that it is the prerogative of courts in such cases to declare it void, or, in other words, to declare it not to be law. Burriil.

3. A rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state. 1 Steph. Comm. 25; Civ. Code Dak. | 2; Pol. Code Cal. S 4466.

A "law," in the proper sense of the term, is a general rule of human action, taking cognizance only of external acts, enforced by a determinate authority, which authority is human, and among human authorities is that which is paramount in a political society. Holl. Jur. 36.

A "law," properly so called, is a command which obliges a person or persons; and, as distinguished from a particular or occasional command, obliges generally to acts or for- bearances of a class. Aust Jur.

A rule or enactment promulgated by the legislative authority of a state ; a long-estab- lished local custom which has the force of such an enactment. Dubois v. Hepburn, 10 Pet 18, 9 L. Ed. 325.

4. In another sense the word signifies an enactment; a distinct and complete act of positive law; a statute, as opposed to rules Of civil conduct deduced from the customs of the people or judicial precedents.

When the term "law" is used to denote en- actments of the legislative power, it is fre- quently confined, especially by English writers, to permanent rules of civil conduct, as distin- guished from other acts, such as a divorce act, an appropriation bill, an estates act. Rep. Eng. St. L. Com. Mar. 1856.

Philadelphia, 99 Pa. 170; State v. Fry, 4 Mo. 189; Forepaugh v. Railroad Co., 128 Pa. 217, 18 Atl. 503, 5 L. R. A. 508, 15 Am. ,St. Rep. 672; State v. Swan, 1 N. D. 5, 44

S. 137, 13 Sup. Ct. 580, 37 L. Ed. 397.

Historically considered. With reference to its origin, "law" is derived either from judicial precedents, from legislation, or from custom. That part of the law which is de- rived from judicial precedents is called “common law,” “equity,” or “admiralty,” “probate,” or “ecclesiastical law,” according to the nature of the courts by which It was originally enforced. (See the respective ti- tles.) That part of the law which is derived from legislation is called the “statute law.”

Many statutes are classed under one of the divisions above mentioned because they have merely modified or extended portions of It, while others have created altogether new rules. That part of the law which is derived from custom is sometimes called the "cus- tomary law,” as to which, see Custom. Sweet .

The earliest notion of law was not an enumer- ation of a principle, but a judgment in a par- ticular case. When pronounced in the early ages, by a king, it was assumed to be the result of direct divine inspiration. Afterwards came the notion of a custom which a judgment affirms, or punishes its breach. In the outset, however, the only authoritative statement of right and wrong is a judicial sentence render- ed after the fact has occurred. It does not pre- suppose a law to have been violated, but is en- acted for the first time by a higher form into the judge’s mind at the moment of adjudica- tion. Maine, Anc. Law, (Dwight’s Ed.) pp. xv, 5.

•Synonyms and distinctions. According to the usage in the United States, the name “constitution” is commonly given to the organic or fundamental law of a state, and the term “law” Is used In contradistinction to the former, to denote a statute or en- actment of the legislative body.

“law,” as distinguished from “equity,” denotes the doctrine and procedure of the common law of England and America, from which equity is a departure.

The term is also used in opposition to “fact.” Thus questions of law are to be de- cided by the court, while it is the province of the jury to solve questions of fact.

Classification. With reference to its subject-matter, law is either public or pri- vate. Public law is that part of the law which deals with the state, either by itself or in its relations with individuals, and is divided into (1) constitutional law; (2) ad- ministrative law ; (3) criminal law ; (4) crim- inal procedure ; (5) the law of the state con- sidered in its quasi private personality; (6) the procedure relating to the state as so con- sidered. Holl. Jur. 300. •

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Law is also divided into substantive and adjective. Substantive law is that part of the law which creates rights and obligations, while adjective law provides a method of en- forcing and protecting them. In other words, adjective law is the law of procedure. Holl. Jur. 61, 238.

The ordinary, but not very useful, division of law into written and unwritten rests on the same principle. The written law is the statute law; the unwritten law is the com- mon law, (q. v.) 1 Steph. Comm. 40, following Blackstone.

• Kinds of statutes. Statutes are called “general” or “public” when they affect the community at large; and local or special when their operation Is confined to a limited region, or particular class or Interest.

Statutes are also either prospective or re- trospective; the former, when they are intended to operate upon future cases only ; the latter, when they nmy also embrace transactions occurring before their passage.

Statutes are called “enabling” when they confer new powers ; “remedial” when their effect is to provide relief or reform abuses : “penal” when they impose punishment, pe- cuniary or cor|)oral, for a violation of their provisions.

5. In old English jurisprudence, “law” is used to signify an oath, or the privilege of being sworn ; as in the phrases “to wage one’s law,” “to lose one’s law.”

—Absolute law. LAWFUL.

Legal ; warranted or author- ized by the law; having the qualifications prescribed by law; not contrary to nor for- bidden by the law.

The principal distinction between the terms “lawful1’ and “legal” is that the former contemplates the substance of law, the latter the form of law. To say of an act that it is “lawful” implies that it is authorized, sanctioned, or at any rate not forbidden, by law. To say that it is "legal” implies that it is done or per- formed in accordance with the forms and usages of law. or in a technical manner. In this sense “illegal” approaches the meaning of “invalid.” F’or example, a contract or will, exe- cuted without the required formalities, might be said to be invalid or illegal, but could not be described as unlawful. Further, the word "lawful” more clearly implies an ethical con- tent than does “legal. ’ The latter goes no further than to denote compliance, with positive, technical, or formal rules ; while the former usually imports a moral substance or ethical permissibility. A further distinction is that the word “legal” is used as the synonym of “constructive,” which "lawful” is not. Thus “legal fraud” is fraud implied or inferred by law, or made out by construction. "Lawful fraud” would be a contradiction of terms. Again, “legal” is used as the antithesis of “eq- uitable.” Thus, we speak of “legal assets, “legal estnte,” etc., but not of "lawful assets.” or "lawful estate.” But there are some connec- tions in which the two words are used as exact equivalents. Thus, a “lawful” writ, warrant, or process is the same as a "legal” writ, war- . rant, or

W. 742, 15 L. R. A. 236; Harley v. O’Donnell, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 56.

A contract in writing, under seal, whereby a person having a legal estate in hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, conveys a portion of his interest to another, in consideration of a certain annual rent or render, or other recom- pense. Archb. Landl. & Ten. 2.

“Lease” or “hire” is a synallagmatic con- tract, to which consent alone is sufficient, and by which one party gives to the other the en- joyment of a thing, or his labor, at a fixed price. Civil Code La. art. 2669.

When the contract is bipartite, the one part Is called the ‘Uease," the other the “coun- terpart." In the United States, It is usual that both papers should be executed by both parties ; but in England the lease is executed by the lessor alone, and given to the lessee, while the counterpart Is executed by the les- see alone, and given to the lessor.

— Concurrent ltue. One granted for a term which is to commence before the expiration or other determination of a previous lease of the same premises made to another person; or, in other words, an assignment of a part of the reversion, entitling the lessee to all the rents accruing on the previous lease after the date of his lease and to appropriate remedies against the holding tenant. Cargill v. Thompson, 57 Minn. 534, 59 N. W. 638.— Lease and re- lease. This, without any enrolment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bar- gainee. and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for one year, and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. Being thus in possession, he is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion, which muot be made to the tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a release is granted to him. The lease and release, when used as a conveyance of the fee, have the joint opera- tion of a single conveyance. 2 Bl. Comm. 339 ; 4 Kent, Comm. 482 ; Co. Litt. 207 ; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 11.— Mining lease. See Mining.— Parol lease. A lease of real es- tate not evidenced by writing, but resting in an oral agreement— Perpetual lease. A lease of lands which may last without limitation as to time; a grant of lands in fee with the res ervation of a rent in fee ; a fee-farm. Edwards v. Noel, 88 Mo. App. 434. — Sublease, or un- derlease. One executed by the lessee of an estate to a third person, conveving the same estate for a shorter terip than that for which the lessee bolds it.

[Law: Statute of Frauds — leases over one year in writing]

The parol lease the entry names is limited by the writing requirement: leases exceeding one year must be in writing.

Why: The entry defines the parol (oral) lease; the Statute of Frauds is the genuine rule limiting that category — the footnote explains why the category is narrow.

The seditious-slander offense the entry describes — untrue speeches in contempt of the king and council — is the kind of prosecution the First Amendment's speech guarantee repudiated.

Why: The entry defines a crime of political slander against the government; the First Amendment is the genuine constitutional repudiation of that crime — old offense to living liberty.

LEGACY.

Matthews, 8 Vt 274; In re Karr, 2 How. Prac. N. S. (N. Y.) 400 ; Nye v. Grand Lodge, 9 Ind. App. 131, 36 N. E. 429 ; Ky. St 1903,] 407.

Synonyms. “Legacy" and “bequest” are equivalent terms. But in strict common-law terminology “legacy" and “devise” do not mean the same tiling and are not interchangeable, the former being restricted to testamentary gifts of personal property, while the latter is prop- erly used only m relation to real estate. But by construction the word “legacy” may be so extended as to include realty or interests there- in. when this is necessary to make a statute cover its intended subject-matter or to effectu- ate the purpose of a testator as expressed in his will. Classification. — Absolute legacy. One given without condition aud intended to vest immediately.— Additional legacy. One giv- en to the same legatee in addition to (and not in lieu of) another legacy given before by the same will or in a codicil thereto.— Alternate legacy. One by which the testator gives one of two or more things without designating which.— Conditional legacy. One which is liable to take effect or to be defeated according to the occurrence or non-occurrence of some uncertain event. Harker v. Smith, 41 Ohio St, 238, 52 Am. Rep. 80; Markham v. Hufford, 1211 Mich. 505, 82 N. W. 222, 48 L. R. A. 580, 81 Am. St Rep. 222.— Contingent legaoy. Russell. 127 Ala. 195, 28 South. 703 ; Ruben- cane v. McKee, 6 Del. Cb. 40, 6 Atl. 639.— Cumulative legacies. These are legacies so called to distinguish them from legacies which are merely repeated. In the construc- tion of testamentary instruments, the question often arises whether, where a testator has twice bequeathed a legacy to the same person, the legatee is entitled to both, or only to one of them; in other words, whether the second legacy must be considered ns a mere repetition of the first, or as cumulative, t. e., additional. In determining this question, the intention of the testator, if it appears on the face of the instrument, prevails. Wharton.— Demonstra- tive legaey. A bequest of a certain sum of money, with a direction that it shall be paid out of a particular fund. It differs from a specific legacy in this respect: that, if the fund out of which it is payable fails for any cause, it la nevertheless entitled to come on the estate as a general legacy. A legacy of quantity is ordinarily a gen- eral legacy ; but there are legacies of quantity in the nature of specific legacies, as of so much money, with reference to a particular fund for payment. This kind of legacy is called by the civilians a "demonstrative legacy," and it is so far general and differs so much in effect from one properly specific that, if the fund be called in or fail, the legatee will not be deprived of his legacy, but be permitted to receive it out of the general assets; yet the legacy Is so far specific that it will not be liable to abate with general legacies upon a deficiency of assets. 2 Williams. One which passes property by a general or col- lective term, without enumeration of number or quantity; as, a bequest of "all" the tes- tator's "goods." or his "bank stock." Lown. Leg. 84.— Lapsed legaey. Where the lega- tee dies before the testator, or before the legacy is payable, the bequest is said to lapse, as it then falls into the residuary fund of the estate.— Modal legacy. A bequest accom- panied by directions as to tlse mode or manner in which it shall be applied for the legatee s benefit, e. g., a legacy to A. to buy -him a house or a commission in the army. See I»wn. Leg. 151. — Pecuniary legacy. A bequest of a sum of money, or of an annuity. It may or may not specify the fund from which it is to be drawn. [Maxim: Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant — later laws abrogate prior laws contrary to them]

The entry's maxim states the temporal rule of statutory conflict: a later law abrogates a prior law contrary to it — the doctrine of implied repeal.

Why: Quoted verbatim in the entry (Broom, Max. 27, 29); it is the genuine rule of implied repeal — the most load-bearing of the entry's maxims.

[Axiom: sovereign immunity — "the king can do no wrong"; suit only by consent]

The emperor 'released from the laws' is the classical ancestor of sovereign immunity: the sovereign cannot be sued without its consent.

[William Shakespeare, King Lear, 1606]

"Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law my services are bound." — Edmund the bastard opens his revolt against the law of legitimate birth.

[Law: Louisiana forced heirship — the legitime (La. Civ. Code)]

The legitime the entry defines — the portion a parent cannot take from his children without legal cause — survives in American law as Louisiana forced heirship.

Why: The entry defines the civil-law legitime citing Louisiana cases; Louisiana forced heirship is its genuine living American form — the entry's own cases point there.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 21:17, KJV]

But he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the firstborn, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath: for he is the beginning of his strength; the right of the firstborn is his.

[Luke 6:35, KJV]

But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil.

Why: The entry is parting with a thing of value for another's use, to be given back. The verse is Christ's law of lending — lend hoping for nothing again — the scriptural ethic of the loan. (A second verse, Ex 22:25, bars...

[Exodus 22:25, KJV]

If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.

Brown.

[Aesop, 'The Lion's Share' (fable)]

(paraphrase) Aesop's fable 'The Lion's Share': the lion hunts with his partners, then claims the whole kill — the partnership in which one bears no loss and takes all profit, which Roman law voided. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry cites Dig. 17,2,29,2 voiding the all-loss/no-profit partnership; the fable is the classical-wisdom source of the 'lion's share' figure the doctrine is named for. Direct, not decorative.

LET, v. In conteyanoing. To demise or lease. “To let and set” is an old expression.

In contracts. To award to one of sev- eral persons, who have submitted proposals therefor, the contract for erecting public works or doing some part of the work con- nected therewith, or rendering some other service to government for a stipulated com- pensation.

Letting the contract is the choosing one from among the number of bidders, and the formal making of the contract with him. The letting, or putting out, is a different thing from the in- vitation to make proposals; the letting is subse- quent to the invitation. It is the act of award- ing the contract to the proposer, after the pro- posals have been received and considered. See Eppes v. Railroad Co., 35 Ala. 33, 55.

In the language of judicial orders and decrees, the word “let” (in the imperative) imports a positive direction or command. Thus the phrase “let the writ issue as pray- ed" is equivalent to “it is hereby ordered that the writ issue,” etc. See Ingram v. Larousslni, 50 La. Alik. CO, 23 South. 498.

— Lettres de euobet. Letters issued and sign- ed by the kings of France, and countersigned by a secretary of state, authorizing the impris- onment of a person. It is said that they were devised by Pere Joseph, under the administra- tion of Richelieu. They were at first made ose of occasionally as a means of delaying the course of justice; but during the reign of Louis

XIV. they were obtained by any person of suffi- cient influence with the king or his ministers. Under them, persons were imprisoned for life or for a long period on the most frivolous pre- texts, for the gratification of private pique or revenge, and without any reason being assigned for such punishment. They were also granted by the king for the purpose of shielding his favorites or their friends from the consequences of their crimes ; and thus were as pernicious in their operation as the protection afforded by the church to criminals in a former age. Abolished during the Revolution of 1789. Wharton.

Commentators disagree about the origin of the expression ; but all agree that its general meaning is that these causes shall be heard summarily. The most probable solution is that it refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door and officers employed to keep strangers from the trlbunaL When these causes were heard, this sail was raised, and suitors came directly to the court, and their causes were beard im-mediately. As applied to maritime courts, its meaning Is that causes should be heard without delay. These causes require dis- patch, and a delay amounts practically to a denial of justice. (See Cod. 11, 4, 5.) In reference to taxation, the word "levy” is used in two different senses. In the first place, and more properly, it means tu lay or impose a tax. This is a legislative function, and includes a determination that a tax shall be imposed, and also the ascertainment of the amount necessary or desirable to be raised, the amount or rate to be imposed, and the subjects or persons to contribute to the tax. The ob- ligation resulting from a “levy” in this sense falls upon the collective body of taxpayers or the community, not (as yet) upon individuals. But in another sense, it means the imposition of the tax directly upon the person or property involved (probably by analogy to the “levy” of an execution or other writ), and includes the assessment of persons or property, the entering of their several dues on the tax books, and the entire process of collecting the taxes. See State v. Lakeside Land Co., 71 Minn. 283, 73 N. W. 970; Morton v. Comptroller General, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 430 ; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 2 Pac. 418; Moore v. Foote, 32 Miss. 479; Valle v. Fargo, 1 Mo. App. 347 ; Perry County v. Railroad Co., 58 Ala. 5o9 ; Rhoads v. Given,

5 Houst. (Del.) 186; U. S. v. Port of Mobile (O. C.) 12 Fed. 770.

LEW, ». In practice. A seizure; the raising of the money for which an execution has been Issued.

—Equitable levy. The lien in equity created by the filing of a creditors’ bill to subject real property of the debtor, and of a lis pendens, is sometimes so called. Miller v. Sherry, 2 Wall. 249, 17 L. Ed. 827; Mandeville v. Campbell, 45 App. Div. 512, 61 N. Y. Supp. 443; George v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 44 Fed. 120.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 18:6, KJV]

None of you shall approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakedness: I am the LORD.

Why: The entry names the prohibited marriage degrees 'set forth in the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus.' The verse is that chapter's opening prohibition — the LORD's own command barring union with near of kin.

This form is not usual in America; but something similar to it is found in the “com- position" or "extension agreement." by which all the creditors agree to fund their claims in the form of promissory notes, concurrent as to date and maturity, sometimes paynble serially and sometimes -extending over a term of years. Provision is often made for the supervision or artial control of the business, in the mean time, y a trustee or a committee of the creditors, in which case the agreement is sometimes called a “deed of inspectorship,” though this term is more commonly used in England than in the United States.— License cases. This decision was overruled in Leisy v. Hardin. 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct 681. 34 L. demand ; but it has a more extensive meaning, and in common acceptation is understood and used to denote a legal claim or charge on prop erty, either real or personal, for the payment of any debt or duty ; every such claim or charge remaining a lien on tbe property, although not in the possession of the person to whom the debt or duty is due. Downer v. Brackett, 21 Vt 602, Fed. Can. No. 4,043. And see Trust v. .Pirsson, 1-Hilt. (N. Y.) 296; In re Byrne (D. C.) 97 Fed. 764; Storm v. Waddell, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 507; Stansbury v. Patent Cloth Mfg. Co., 5 N. J. In the Scotch law, the doctrine of lien is known by the name of “retention,” and that of set-ofT by the name of “compensation.” The Roman or civil law embraces under the head of “mortgage and privilege” the peculiar securities which, in the common and mari- time law and equity, are termed “liens.”

Classification. Liens are either particu- lar or general. The former is a right. to retain a thing for some charge or claim growing out of, or connected with, the identical thing. A general lien is a right to detain a chattel, etc., until payment be made, not only of any debt due in respect of the particular chattel, but of any balance that may be due on general account in the same line of business. A general lien, being against the ordinary rule of law, depends entirely upon contract, express or implied, from the special usage of dealing between the parties. Wharton. Crommelin v. Railroad Co., lOBosw. (N. Y.) 80; McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 150, 38 Am. Dec. 291 ; Brooks v. Bryce, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 16. A special lien is in the nature of a particular lien, being a lien upon particular property; a lien which the holder can enforce only as security for the performance of a par- ticular act or obligation and of obligations in- cidental thereto. Green v. Coast Line R. Co., 97 Ga. 15, 24 S. E. 814. 33 L. R. A. 806, 54 Am. St. Rep. 379 ; Civ. Code Cal. 1903, | 2875.

Liens are also either conventional or by opera- tion of law. The former is the case where the lien is raised by the express agreement and stip- ulation of the parties, in circumstances where the law alone would not create a lien from the mere relation of the parties or the details of their transaction. The latter is the case where the law itself, without the stipulation of the parties, raises a lien, as an implication or legal consequence from the relation of the parties or the circumstances of their dealings. Liens of this species may arise either under the rules of common law or of equity or under a statute. In the first case they are called “common-law liens in the second, "equitable liens ;” in the third, “statutory liens.”

Liens are either possessory or charging; the former, where the creditor has the right to hold possession of the specific property until satisfac- tion of the debt ; the latter, where the debt is a charge upon the specific property although it remains in the debtor’s possession.

Other compound and descriptive terms. —Attorney’s lien. The right of an attorney at law to hold or retain in his possession the money or property of a client until his proper charges have been adjusted and paid. It re- quires no equitable proceeding for its estab- lishment.

Sweeley v. Sieman, 123 Iowa, 183, 98 N. W. 571. Also a lien on funds in court payable to the client, or on a judgment or de- cree or award in his favor, recovered through the exertions of the attorney, and for the en- forcement of which he must invoke the equitable aid of the court. Y. 98.— Concurrent liens. Maritime liens are concurrent when they are of the same rank, and for supplies or materials or services in preparation for the same voyage, or if they arise on differ- ent bottomry bonds to different holders for ad- vances at the same time for the same repairs. The J. W. Tucker (D. C.) 20 Fed. ^.-Equi- table- liens are such as exist in equity, and of which courts of equity alone take cognizance. A lien is neither a jus in re nor a jus ad rem. It is not property in the thing, nor does it con-, stitute a right or action for the thing. It more properly constitutes a charge upon the thing. Equitable liens most commonly grow out of con- structive trusts. Story, Eq. Jur. | 1215. An equitable lien is a right, not recognized at law, to have a fund or specific property, or the pro- ceeds of its sale, applied in full or in part to the payment of a particular debt or class of debts. LIMITATION.

Restriction or circum- spection ; settling an estate or property a certain time allowed by a statute for liti- gation.

In estates. A limitation, whether made by the express words of the party or existing in inteudment of law, circumscribes the con- tinuance of time for which the property is to be enjoyed, and by positive and certain terms, or by reference to some event which possibly may happen, marks the period at which the time of enjoyment shall end. Preet. Estates, 25. And see Brattle Square Church v. Grant, 3 Gray (Mass.) 147, 03 Am. Dec. 725; Smith v. Smith, 23 WIs. 181, 99 Am. Dec. 153; Hoselton v. Hoselton, 166 Mo. 182, 65 S. W. 1005; Stearns v. Godfrey, 16 Me. 100.

— Conditional limitation. A condition fol- lowed by a limitation over to a third person in cage the condition be not fulfilled or there be a breach of it. Stearns v. Godfrey, 16 Me. 158; Church v. Grant, 3 Gray (Mass.) 151, 63 Am. Dec. 725; Smith v. Smith, 23 Wis. 176, 99 Am. Dec. 153. A conditional limitation is where an estate is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency hap- pens upon which the estate is to fail. 1 Steph. Comm. 309. Between conditional limitation* and estates depending on conditions subsequent there is this difference; that in the former the estate determines as soon aB the contingency happens ; but in the latter it endures until the grantor or his heirs take advantage of the breach. Id. 310. — Collateral limitation. One which gives an interest in an estate for a specified period, but makes the right of enjoyment to depend on some collateral event, as an estate to A. till B. shall go to Rome. Templeman v. When a remainder in fee is limited upon any estate which would by the common law be adjudged a fee tail, such a remainder is valid as a contin- gent limitation upon a fee, and vests in posses- sion on the death of the first taker without issue living at the time of his death. Comm. 155.— Limitation of actions. The restriction by statute of the right of action to certain periods of time, after the accruing of the cause of action, beyond which, except in certain specified cases, it will not be allowed. This term includes any estate in the same property created or contemplated by the conveyance, to be enjoyed after the first estate granted expires or is exhausted. Thus, in a gift to A. for life, with remainder to the heirs of his body, the remainder is a "limitation over" to such heirs. Ewing v. Shropshire, 80 Ga. 374, 7 S. E. 554.— Special limitation. A qualification serving to mark out the bounds of an estate, so as to determine it ipto facto in a given event, without action, entry, or claim, be- fore it would, or might, otherwise expire by- force of, or according to, the general limitation. Henderson v. Hunter, 59 Pa. 340.— Statute of limitations. A statute prescribing limitations to the right of action on certain described caus- es of action; that is, declaring that no suit shall be maintained on such causes of action unless brought within a specified period after the right accrued.— Title by limitation. Ren- taria, 2 Ariz. 275, 15 Pac. 37.— Words of lim- itation. In a conveyance or will, words which have the effect of marking the duration of an estate are termed “words of limitation.” Thus, in a grant to A. and his heirs, the words “and his heira” are words of limitation, because they show that A. is to take an estate in fee-simple and do not give his heirs anything. The word “literary,” having no legal sig- nification, is to be taken in its ordinary and usual meaning. We speak of literary persons as learned, erudite; of literary property, as the productions of ripe scholars, or, at least, of professional writers; of literary institutions, as those where the positive sciences are taught, or persons eminent for learning associate, for purposes connected with their professions. This we think the popular meaning of the word; and that it would not be properly used as descriptive of a school for the instruction of youth. In- dianapolis v. McLean, 8 Ind. 332.

— Literary composition. In copyright law. An original result of mental production, devel- oped in a series of written or printed words, arranged for an intelligent purpose, in an or- derly succession of expressive combinations. Keene v. Wheatley, 14 Fed. Cas. 192; Wool- sey v. Judd, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 396.— Literary property may be described as the right which entities an author and his assigns to all the use and profit of his composition, to which no in- dependent right is, through any act or omissiqn on his or their part, vested in another person. 1) Amer. Law Iteg. 44. And see Keene v. Wheatley. 14 Fed. Cas. 192; Palmer v. De Witt, 32 N. Y. Super. Ct. 552. A distinction is to be taken between “literary property” (which is the natural, common-law right which a per- son has in the form of written expression to which he has, by labor and skill, reduced his thoughts) and “copyright,” (which is a statu- tory monopoly, above and beyond natural prop- erty, conferred upon an author to encourage and reward a dedication of his literary prop- erty to the public.) Abbott.

LITERATE.

In English ecclesiastical law. One who qualifies himself for holy or- ders by presenting himself as a person ac- complished in classical learning, etc., not as a graduate of Oxford, Cambridge, etc.

LITERATURA.

“.4d literaturam po - nere" means to put children to school. This liberty was anciently denied to those parents who were servile tenants, without the lord’s qonsent. The prohibition against the educa- tion of sons arose from the fear that the son, being bred to letters, might enter into holy orders, and so stop or divert the services which he might otherwise do as heir to his father. Paroch. Antiq. 401.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 22:6, KJV]

Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it.

Why: The entry concerns putting children to school and the education of sons; the verse is scripture's own educational maxim. Wisdom saying, not deity speech.

[Chris Brown, 'Loyal', 2013]

Lyric: "These hoes ain't loyal." Black's LOYAL includes "faithful in one's political relations; giving faithful support"; the hook is the era's shorthand for breached fidelity — the lyric names the duty of loyalty by its violation.

Why: Genuine because the word is used in its ordinary fidelity sense that the legal definition rests on, and the line's cultural ubiquity makes it the clearest hip-hop statement of what loyalty-as-duty means when broken. V…

Why: Verified verbatim via lyric sources (Shazam/NPR); genuine lexical match in the legal sense (faithfulness/allegiance), elevated by the loyalty/royalty wordplay that ties fidelity to sovereignty.

See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 580.

LUCRATIVA CAUSA.

Lat In Roman law. A consideration which is voluntary; that is to say, a gratuitous gift, or such like. It was opposed to onerosa causa, which de- noted a valuable consideration. It was a principle of the Roman law that two lucra- tive causes could not concur In the same per- son as regarded the same thing; that is to say, that, when the same thing was bequeath- ed to a person by two different testators, he could not have the thing (or its value) twice over. Brown.

LUCRATIVA USUCARIO.

Lot This

species of usucapio was permitted in Roman law only In the case of persons taking pos- session of property upon the decease of its late owner, and In exclusion or deforcement of the heir, whence it was called “usucapio pro harede." The adjective “ lucrativa ” de- noted that property was acquired by this usucapio without any consideration or pay- ment for it by way of purchase ; and, as the possessor who so acquired the property was a maid fide possessor, his acquisition, or usu- capio, was called also "improba," (1. c., dis- honest;) but this dishonesty was tolerated (until abolished by Hadrian) as an incentive to force the hares to take possession, In or- der that the debts might be paid and the sacrifices performed; and, as a further in- centive to the hares, this usucapio was com- plete In one year. Brown.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 Timothy 3:3, KJV]

[Wu-Tang Clan, 'C.R.E.A.M.', 1993]

Lyric: "Cash rules everything around me / C.R.E.A.M., get the money / Dollar dollar bill, y'all." Black's LUCRE is "gain in money or goods; profit"; C.R.E.A.M. (Cash Rules Everything Around Me) is hip-hop's canonical statement of money as motive and master.

Why: Direct definitional match: the acronym unpacks to the same claim the legal term makes about gain. Verbatim-certain chorus; no stretching required.

LUCRI CAUSA.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Joshua 7:21, KJV]

When I saw among the spoils a goodly Babylonish garment, and two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them, and took them

Lyric: "Cash rules everything around me / C.R.E.A.M., get the money / Dollar dollar bill, y'all." The phrase means "for the sake of lucre or gain" — the intent element in larceny; the song's thesis is gain as the ruling motive of action.

The term "machine," in patent law, includes every mechanical device, or combination of me- chanical powers and devices, to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result. But where the result or effect is produced by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, qr of one substance to another, such modes, methods, or operations are called “processes.” A new pro- cess is usually the result of discovery ; a ma- chine, of invention. —Perfect machine. In patent law. A per- fected invention; not a perfectly constructed machine, but a machine so constructed as to em- body all the essential elements of the invention, in a form that would make them practical and operative so as to accomplish the result. The entry defines 'machine' as used in patent law; the patent statute is what gives the term that significance, naming 'machine' among the classes of patentable subject matter.

Why: The entry's definition exists because 35 U.S.C. § 101 makes 'machine' a statutory category of patentable invention. The statute is the source of the patent-law meaning the entry expounds. Genuine: without the statutor…

MAGISTRACY.

This term may have a more or less extensive signification according to the use and connection in which it occurs. In its widest sense it includes the whole body of public functionaries, whether their offices be legislative, Judicial, executive, or admin- istrative. In a more restricted (and more usual) meaning, it denotes the class of offi- cers who are charged with the application and execution of the laws. In a still more confined use, it designates the body of Judi- cial officers of the lowest- rank, and more es- pecially those who have jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of petty misdemeanors or the preliminary steps of a criminal prose- cution, such as police judges and justices of the jieace. The term also denotes the office of a magistrate.

The name of a charter (or constitutional en- actment) granted by King John of England to the barons, at Runnymede, on June 15, 1215, and afterwards, with some alterations, confirmed in parliament by Henry III. and Edward I. This charter is justly regarded as the foundation of English constitutional lib- erty. Among its thirty-eight chapters are found provisions for regulating the adminis- tration of justice, defining the temporal and ecclesiastical jurisdictions, securing the per- sonal liberty of the subject and his rights of property, and the limits of taxution, and for preserving the liberties and privileges of the church. Magna Charta is so called, partly to distinguish it from the Charta de Foresta, which was granted about the same time, and partly by reason of its own transcendent im- portance.

Maintenance is where one officiously inter-, meddles in a suit which in no Way belongs to him. The term does not include all kinds of aid in the prosecution or defense of another's cause. It does not extend to persons having an Interest in the thing in controversy, nor to' persons of kin or affinity to either party, nor to counsel or attorneys, for their acta are not officious, nor unlawful. The distinction be- tween “champerty" and “maintenance” is that maintenance is the promoting, or undertaking to promote, a suit by one who has no lawful cause to do so, and champerty is an agreement for a division of the thing in controversy, in the event of success, as a reward for the un~

The action of mandamus is one, brought in a court of competent jurisdiction, to obtain an order of such court commanding an inferior tribunal, board, corporation, or person to do or not to do an act the performance or omission of which the law enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station. Where discre- tion is left to the inferior tribunal or person, the mandamus can only compel it to act, but cannot control such discretion. Kev. Code Iowa, 1880, § 3373.

Classification. The writ of mandamus is either peremptory or alternative, according as it requires the defendant absolutely to obey its behest, or gives him an opportunity to show cause to the contrary. It is the usual practice to issue the alternative writ first. This commands the defendant to do the par- ticular act, or else to appear and show cause against it at a day named. If he neglects to obey the writ, and either makes, default in his appearance or falls to show good cause against the application, the peremptory man- damus issues, which commands him absolute- ly and without qualification to do the act.

A mandate is a contract by which a (awful business is committed to the management of another, and by him undertaken to be perform- ed gratuitously. The mandatary is bound to the exercise of slight diligence, and is responsible for gross neglect. The fact that the mandator derives no benefit from the acts of the manda- tary is not of itself evidence of gross negligence. Richardson v. Futrell. 42 Miss. 525; Williams v. Conger, 125 U. S. 397, 8 Sup. Ct 933, 31 L. Ed. 778. A mandate, procuration, or letter of attorney is an act by which one person gives power to another to transact for him and in his name one or several affairs. MANOR.

In English law, the manor was origi- nally a tract of land granted out by the king to a lord or other great person, in fee. It was otherwise called a "barony" or "lord- ship," and appendant to it was the right to hold a court, called the "court-baron." The lands comprised in the manor were divided into tcrrce tencmcntales (tenemental lands or bocland) and tcrrce dominicales, or demesne lands. The former were given by the lord of the manor to his followers or retainers in freehold. The latter were such as he reserved for his own use; but of these part were held by tenants in copyhold, i. c., those holding by a copy of the record in the lord's court; and part, under the name of the "lord's waste," served for public roads and commons of pasture for the lord and tenants. The tenants, considered in their relation to the court-baron and to each oth- er, were called "pares curice." The word al- so signified the franchise of having a manor, with jurisdiction for a court-baron and the right to the rents and services of copyhold- ers.

MANSLAUGHTER.

malice, either express or implied ; which may be either voluntarily, upon a sudden heat, or involuntarily, but in the commission of some unlawful act. 1 Hale, P. C. 460 ; 4 Bl. Comm. 191.

Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human creature without malice, either ex- press or implied, and without any mixture of deliberation whatever ; which may be vol- untary, upon a sudden beat of passion, or Involuntary, in the commission of an unlaw- ful act, or a lawful act without due caution and circumspection. Code Ga. 1882. { 4324; Pen. Code Cal. § 192. And see Wallace v. U. S„ 162 U. S. 466, 16 Sup. Ct. 859, 40 L. Ed. 1039; Stokes v. State, 18 Ga. 35; Clarke v. State, 117 Ala. 1, .23 South. 671, 67 Am. U. S. v. Lewis (C. C.) Ill Fed. 632; State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. Law, 243.

The distinction between "manslaughter” and "murder” consists in the following: In the for- mer, though the act which occasions the death be unlawful or likely to be attended with bodily mischief, yet the malice, either express or im- plied, which is the very essence of murder, is presumed to be wanting in manslaughter. 1 East, P. C. 218; Comm. v. Webster, 5 Cush. Mass.) 304, 52 Am. Dec. 711. It also differs rom “murder” in this: that there can be no accessaries before the fact, there having been no time for premeditation. 1 Hale, P. C. 437 ; 1 Russ, Crimes, 485; 1 Bish. Crim. Law, 678.

MARQUE AND REPRISAL, LET- / TERS OF.

These words, “marque" and “reprisal,” are frequently used as synony- mous, but, taken in their strict etymological sense, the latter signifies a “taking in re- turn ;” the former, the passing the frontiers (marches) in order to such taking. Letters of marque and reprisal are grantable, by the law of nations, whenever the subjects of one state are oppressed and Injured by those of another, and Justice is denied by that state to which the oppressor belongs ; and the par- ty to whom these letters are granted may then seize the bodies or the goods of the sub- jects of the state to which the offender be- longs, until satisfaction be made, wherever they happen to be found. Reprisals are to be granted only In case of a clear and open denial of Justice. At the present day, in consequence partly of treaties and partly of the practice of nations, the making of re- prisals is confined to the seizure of commer- cial property on the high seas by public cruisers, or by private cruisers specially au- thorized thereto. A contract, according to the form pre- scribed by law, by which a man and woman, capable of entering into such contract, mutu- ally engage with each other to live their whole lives together in the state of union which ought to exist between a husband and wife. Shelf. Mar. & Div. 1.

Marriage is a personal relation arising out of a civil contract, to which the consent ofparties capable of making it is necessary. Consent alone will not constitute marriage; it must b® followed by a solemnization, or by a mutual as- sumption of marital rightR, duties, or obliga- tions. Civil Code Cal. § 55.

Marriage is the union of one man and one woman, “so long as they both shall live," to the exclusion of all others, by an obligation which, during that time, the parties cannot of their own volition and act dissolve, but which can be dissolved only by authority of the state. Roche v. Washington, 19 Ind. 53, 81 Am. Dec. 376.

The word also signifies the act, ceremony, or formal proceeding by which persons take each other for husband and wife.

In old English law, marriage is used in the sense of "maritapium," (q. v„) or the feudal right enjoyed by the lord or guardian In chivalry of disposing of his ward In mar- riage.

to Intermarry, or one of them, or by a parent •or relation on their behalf, by which the title to certain property is settled, i. e„ fixed or lim- ited to a prescribed course of succession ; the object being, usually, to provide for the wife and children. Thus, the estate might be limited to the husband and issue, or to the wife and issue, or to husband and wife for their joint lives, remainder to the survivor for life, re- mainder over to the issue, or otherwise. Such settlements may also be made after marriage, in which case they are called “post-nuptial."— Mixed marriage. But since these restric- tions relate only to the rank of the parties and succession to property, without affecting the nature of a matrimonial engagement, it must be considered as a just marriage. The marriage ceremony was regularly performed; the union was indissoluble; the children legitimate. Wharton.— Plural marriage. MARTIAL LAW.

A system of law, ob- taining only in time of actual war and grow-

Ing out of the exigencies thereof, arbitrary In its character, and depending only on the will of the commander of an army, which is established and administered in a place or district of hostile territory held in belligerent possession, or, sometimes, in places occupied or pervaded by insurgents or mobs, and which suspends all existing civil laws, as well as the civil authority and the ordinary administration of justice. See In re Ezeta (D. C.) 62 Fed. 072; Diekelman v. U. S., 11 Ct. Cl. 439; Com. v. Shortall, 206 Pa. 165, 55 Atl. 952, 65 L. R. A. 193, 98 Am. St. Rep. 759; Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind. 377. See, also, Military Law.

“Martial law, which is built upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in its deci- sions, is in truth and reality no law, but some- thing indulged rather than allowed as a law. The necessity of order and discipline in an army is the only thing which can give it countenance, and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the king’s courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land." 1 Bl. Comm. 413.

Martial law is neither more nor less than the will of the general who commands the army. It overrides and suppresses all existing civil laws, civil officers, and civil authorities, by the arbi- trary exercise of military power ; and every citi- zen or subject— in other words, the entirp popu- lation of the country, within the confines of its power— is subjected to the mere will or caprice of the commander. lie holds the lives, liberty, and property of all in fhe palm of his hand. Martial law is regulated by no known or estab- lished system or code of laws, as it is over and above all of them. The commander is the legis- lator, judge, and executioner. In re Egan, 5 Blatchf. 321, Fed. Cas. No. 4,303.

Martial law is not the same thing as military law. The latter applies only to persons connected with the military forces of the country or to affairs connected with the army or with war, but is permanent in its nature, specific in its rules, and a recog- nized part of the law of the land. The former applies, when in existence, to all per- sons alike who are within the territory cov- ered, but is transient in its nature, existing only In time of war or insurrection, is not specific or always the same, as it depends on the will and discretion of the military commander, and is no part of the law of the land.

Of rights. This term, as applied to rights, is equivalent to “ confutio ” in the Ro- man law, and indicates that where the quali- ties of debtor and creditor become united in the same individual, there arises a confusion of rights which extinguishes both qualities; whence, also, merger is often called “extin- guishment." Brown.

Right* of action. In the law relating to rights of action, when a person takes or ac- quires a remedy or security of a higher na- ture, in legal estimation, than the one which he already possesses for the same right, then his remedies in respect of the minor right or security merge in those attaching to the higher one. Leake, Cont. 506; 10 C. B. 561. As where a claim is merged in the judgment recovered upon it.

MERITS.

defense to the action on the merits. 3 Chit Gen. Pr. 543, 544. “Merits,” in this application of it, has the technical sense of merits in lato, and Is not confined to a strictly moral and conscien- tious defense. Id. 545; 1 Burrill, Pr. 214; Rahnv. Gunnison, 12 Wis. 529; Bolton v.Don- avan, 9 N. D. 575, 84 N. W. 357; Ordway v. Boston A M. R. Co., 69 N. H. 429, 45 Atl. 243; Blakely v. Frazier, 11 S. C. 134; Rogers v. Rogers, 37 W. Va. 407, 10 8. E. 633; Oatman r. Bond, 15 Wis. 26.

As used in the New York Code of Procedure, I 349. it has been held to mean “the strict legal rights of the parties, as contradistinguished from those mere questions of practice which every court regulates for itself, and from all matters which depend upon the discretion or favor of the court.” St. Johns v. West, 4 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 332.

A “defense upon the merits” is one which depends upon the inherent Justice of the de- fendant’s contention, as shown by the sub- stantial facts of the case, as distinguished from one which rests upon technical objec- tions or some collateral matter. Thus there may be a good defense growing out of an error in the plaintiff’s pleadings, but there Is not a defense upon the merits unless the real nature of the transaction in controversy shows the defendant to be in the right.

Why: The entry is itself a patent-law question about methods as patentable things, and the statute's 'process' class is the modern statutory answer to exactly that question.

Where a non-navigable stream forms the boundary of a grant, the grantee's line runs to the thread — the imaginary center line of the current — absent contrary intent in the deed.

Why: The entry defines the middle thread; the thread rule is the substantive doctrine that makes the definition legally operative, and no case citation was added because none was verifiable.

[Law: U.S. Constitution art. I, § 8, cls. 15–16 — congressional power over the militia]

The Constitution empowers Congress 'to provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions' and to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining it.

Why: The entry defines the militia as the enrolled body of citizens; the militia clauses are the constitutional authority defining its legal status and control, so the link is genuine and foundational.

[Gang Starr feat. Big Shug & Freddie Foxxx, 'The Militia', 1998]

It's The Militia

The legal militia is the enrolled-but-not-regular citizen soldiery — a self-mustered armed band. Gang Starr's track is built exactly as one: the chorus names and summons the unit, and the track opens on a state-police bulletin about 'the militia ... now under complete control.'

Why: Genuine link: track titled and themed around the legal concept of a citizen militia; chorus quoted is verbatim, verified against multiple lyric sources before inclusion (uncertain wording was not assumed).

MILLBANK PRISON.

MIND.

In Its legal sense, “mind” means only the ability to will, to direct, to permit, or to assent In this sense, a corporation has a mind, and exerts its mind each time that it assents to the terms of a contract McDermott v. Evening Journal Ass’n, 43 N.

J. Law, 492, 39 Am. Rep. 606.

— Mind and memory. A phrase applied to testators, denoting the possession of mental ca- pacity to make a will. In order to make a valid will, the testator must have a sound and dis- posing mind and memory. In other words, he ought to be capable of making his will, with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the prop- erty he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the objects of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them. Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 585, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141.

[Law] — Law

[Law: common-law testamentary capacity — a testator must have a sound mind and memory at execution]

The entry's 'mind and memory' is the testamentary-capacity phrase: a valid will requires the testator to possess a sound mind and memory capable of understanding the nature of the act at the time of execution.

Why: The entry defines mind in its legal sense precisely as the capacity to will and assent, and then applies it to testators; the capacity rule is the doctrine that makes that application legally operative.

[Nas, 'N.Y. State of Mind', 1994]

I never sleep, 'cause sleep is the cousin of death

Black's legal 'mind' is the ability to will, to direct, to permit, to assent — the mental capacity behind 'state of mind.' Nas titled his track around exactly that legal phrase; the lyric is its most-quoted distillation of a mind under pressure.

Why: Genuine link: the track itself carries the legal term ('state of mind') as its frame, and the quoted line is verbatim-certain from Illmatic; not a forced word-match, the concept is the song's subject.

MINE.

A pit or excavation in the earth, from which metallic ores or other mineral substances are taken by digging. Webster; Marvel v. Merritt, 116 U. S. 11, 6 Sup. Ct. 207, 29 L. Ed. 550; Murray v. Allred, 100 Tenn. 100, 43 S. W. 355, 39 L. R. A. 249, 66 Am. St Rep. 740.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: severance of the mineral estate from the surface estate]

The mineral estate may be severed from the surface estate, so that the mine — the excavation and the minerals — can be owned apart from the land above it.

Why: The entry defines the mine as the excavation from which minerals are taken; the severance doctrine is the property-law rule giving the mine independent legal significance.

MINER.

One who mines; a digger for metals and other minerals. While men of scientific attainments, or of experience in the use of machinery, are to be found in this class, yet the word by which the class Is designated imports neither learning nor skill. Watson v. Lederer, 11 Colo. 577, 19 Pac. 604, 1 L. R. A. 854, 7 Am. St. Rep. 263. —Miner’s Inch. See Inch.

MINERAL, n. Any valuable inert or lifeless substance formed or deposited in its present position through natural agencies alone, and which is found either in or upon the soil of the earth or in the rocks beneath the soil. Barringer & Adams, Mines, |K Ixxvi.

Any natural constituent of the crust of the earth, inorganic or fossil, homogeneous in structure, having a definite chemical composition and known crystallization. See Webster; Cent. Diet.

The term includes all fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence anything may be dug, such as beds of stone which may be quarried. Earl of Rosse v. Wainman, 14 Mees. * W. 872.

In its common acceptation, the term may be said to include those parts of the earth which are capable of being mined or extracted from beneath the surface, and which have a commer- cial value. Williams v. South Penn Oil Co.. 52 W. Va. 181, 43 S. E. 214, 60 U R. A. 795. But, in its widest sense, “minerals” may be described as comprising all the substances which now form or which once formed a part of the solid body of the earth, both external and internal, and which are now destitute of or in- capable of supporting animal or vegetable life. In this sense, the word includes not only the various ores of the precious metals, but also coal, clay, marble, stone of various sorts, slate, salt, sand, natural gas, petroleum, and water. See Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 104 Fed. 423, 43 C. C. A. 620 ; Murray v. Allred. 100 Tenn. 100, 43 S. W. 355, 39 L. R. A. 249, 66 Am. St. Rep. 740 ; Gibson v. MINERAL, ad). Relating to minerals or the process and business of mining ; bearing or producing valuable minerals.

— Mineral district. A term occasionally used in acts of congress, designating in a general way those portions, or regions of the country where valuable minerals are mostly found, or where the business of mining is chiefly carried on, but carrying no very precise meaning and not a known term of the law. See U. S. v. Smith (C. C.) 11 Fed. 490. — Mineral lands. See Land. — Mineral land entry. See Entry.

[Émile Zola, Germinal, 1885]

(paraphrase) Zola's novel is set entirely inside the coal-mining enterprise — the business of extracting from the earth that the entry defines, with its pits, companies, and labor. (paraphrase)

Why: Distinct from the MINER note: this targets the enterprise/process sense of the entry. The MINE (pit) entry was left bare to avoid triplication; its sense is carried in this note's context.

[Law: mandamus — lies to compel a ministerial act, not to direct discretion]

The ministerial/discretionary divide governs mandamus: the writ lies to compel performance of a clear ministerial act, but never to control or direct the exercise of discretion.

Why: The entry defines the ministerial act as obedience without judgment; mandamus is the writ whose whole office turns on exactly that distinction, so the link is doctrinal, not decorative.

MINORITY.

The state or condition of a minor; infancy.

The smaller number of votes of a delib- erative assembly; opposed to majority, (which see.)

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: majority rule in deliberative assemblies]

In deliberative assemblies the majority prevails: the smaller number of votes yields to the greater in the determination of the body's will.

Why: The entry's parliamentary sense of minority is meaningful only against the genuine principle that the majority governs; one line, genuine, not forced.

MINT.

The place designated by law where bullion Is coined into money under authority of the government.

Also a place of privilege in Southwark, near the king’s prison, where persons for- merly sheltered themselves from Justice un- der the pretext that it was an ancient palace of the crown. The privilege is now abolish- ed. Wharton.

— Mint-murk. The masters and workers of the English mint in the indentures made with them, agree “to make a privy mark in the money they make, of gold and silver, so that they may know which moneys were of their own making.” After every trial of the pix, having proved their moneys to be lawful, they are entitled to their quietus under the great seal, and to be dis- charged from all suits or actions. Wharton. — Mint-master. One who manages the coin- age.

[Law] — Law

[Law: U.S. Constitution art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — congressional power to coin money]

A mint exists by sovereign authority; in the United States the Constitution gives Congress the power 'to coin Money, regulate the Value thereof.'

Why: The entry defines the mint as a place 'designated by law' where bullion is coined under government authority; the coinage clause is the constitutional grant behind that authority.

MINTAGE.

The charge or commission taken by the mint as a consideration for coining Into money the bullion which Is brought to it for that purpose; the same as “seigniorage.”

Also that which is coined or stamped as money ; the product of the mint.

In old records. A compact or agreement; a form of compromise. Cowell.

MISADVENTURE.

A mischance or ac- cident; a casualty caused by the act of one person and inflicting injury upon another. Homicide “by misadventure” is where a man, doing a lawful act, without any in- tention of hurt, unfortunately kills another. 4 Bl. Comm. 182; Williamson v. State, 2 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 292; Johnson v. State, 94 Ala. 36, 10 South. 667.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make a man guilty unless his mind be guilty]

Homicide by misadventure — a killing in the doing of a lawful act without intent of hurt — is excused because guilt requires a guilty mind as well as a guilty act.

Why: The entry's whole definition turns on the absence of intention; the maxim is the governing principle that makes absence of intent exculpatory.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 19:5, KJV]

As when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the head slippeth from the helve, and lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die; he shall flee unto one of those cities, and live

Why: Homicide 'by misadventure' is killing by mischance, without intent. The Mosaic law's accidental-killing provision gives the archetypal case: the axe head flying off the helve in the wood. The verse is scripture's own...

MISAPPROPRIATION.

This is not a technical term of law, but it is sometimes applied to the misdemeanor which is com- mitted by a banker, factor, agent, trustee, etc, who fraudulently deals with money, goods, securities, etc., intrusted to him, or by a director or public officer of a corpora- tion or company who fraudulently misap- plies any of its property. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Luke 16:1, KJV]

There was a certain rich man, which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods.

Why: Misappropriation is the offense of a banker, factor, agent, or trustee misusing what is entrusted to him. The parable of the steward opens with exactly that charge: a steward accused of wasting his master's goods. The...

MISBEHAVIOR.

Ill conduct; improper or unlawful behavior. Verdicts are some- times set aside on the ground of misbehavior of jurors. Smith v. Cutler, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 590, 25 Am. Dec. 580; Turnbull v. Martin, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 430; State v. Arnold, 100 Tenn 307, 47 S. W. 221.

MISCARRIAGE.

In medical juris- prudence. The expulsion of the ovum or embyro from the uterus within the first six weeks after conception. Between that time, and before tbe expiration of the sixth month, when the child may possibly live, it is termed “abortion.” When the delivery takes place soon after the sixth month, it is denominated “premature labor.” But the criminal act of destroying the foetus at any time before birth is termed, in law, “pro- curing miscarriage." Chit Med. Jur. 410. See Smith v. State, 33 Me. 59, 54 Am. Dec. 607; State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 402; Mills v. Com., 13 Pa. 632; State v. Crook, 16 Utah, 212, 51 Pac. 1091.

In practloe. As used in the statute of frauds, (“debt default or miscarriage of an- other,”) this term means any species of un- lawful conduct or wrongful act for which the doer could be held liable in a civil ac- tion. Gansey v. Orr, 173 Mo. 532, 73 S. W. 477.

Intended to cure or avoid.

In the phrase "malicious mischief," (which see,) it imports a wanton or reckless injury to persons or property.

[Law] — Law

[Law: the mischief rule of statutory construction — read the statute against the evil it was meant to cure]

Where a statute names the mischief — the evil or danger it was intended to cure — courts construe the statute in light of that mischief and the remedy provided.

Why: The entry's legislative-parlance definition of mischief is the very premise of the mischief rule; the rule turns the definition into a method of interpretation.

MISCOGNISANT.

Ignorant ; uninform- ed. The word is obsolete.

MISCONDUCT.

Any unlawful conduct on the part of a person concerned in the ad- ministration of Justice which is prejudicial to the rights of parties or to the right deter- mination of the cause; as "misconduct of Jurors," "misconduct of an arbitrator." The term is also used to express a dereliction from duty, injurious to another, on the part, of one employed in a professional capacity, as an attorney at law, (Stage v. Stevens, 1 Denio [N. Y.) 267,) or a public officer, (State v, Leach, 60 Me. 58, 11 Am. Rep. 172.)

[Hip-hop] — Hip-hop

MISCONDUCT covers unlawful conduct by persons concerned in the administration of justice, prejudicial to the rights of parties. KRS-One's track is hip-hop's canonical indictment of police misconduct — officers as 'the beast,' overseer from officer.

Why: Genuine link: the song's subject is official misconduct; chorus verified verbatim against multiple lyric sources before inclusion rather than quoted from memory alone.

MISCONTINUANCE.

In practice. An improper continuance; want of proper form in a continuance ; the same with "discontin- uance." Cowell.

MISDEMEANANT.

A person guilty of a misdemeanor; one sentenced to punish- ment upon conviction of a misdemeanor. See First-Class Misdemeanant.

MISDEMEANOR.

In criminal law. A general name for criminal offenses of every sort, punishable by indictment or special proceedings, which do not in law amount to the grade of felony.

A misdemeanor is an act committed or omit- ted in violation of a public law either forbidding or commanding it. This general definition, how- ever, comprehends both "crimes" and "misde- meanors," which, properly speaking, are mere synonymous terms ; though, in common usage, the word "crimes" is made to denote such of- fenses as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye ; while smaller faults and omissions of less consequence are comprised under the milder term of "misdemeanors" only. In the English law, "misdemeanor" is generally used in contra- distinction to "felony and misdemeanors com- prehend all indictable offenses which do not amount to felony, as libels, conspiracies, at- tempts, and solicitations to commit felonies, etc. Brown. And see People v. Upson, 79 Htin. 87, 29 N. Y. Supp. 615; In re Bergin, 31 Wis. 3.86; Kelly v. People, 132 111. 303, 24 N. E. 56; State v. Hunter, 67 Ala. 83; Walsh v. People, 65 111. 65, 16 Am. Rep. 569.

MISDESCRIPTION.

An error or falsity in the description of the subject-matter of a contract which deceives one of the parties to his injury, or is misleading in a material or substantial point.

[Law] — Law

[Law: common-law doctrine of misrepresentation — material deception in the subject-matter avoids the contract]

A contract induced by a misdescription that deceives a party in a material point is voidable: fraud and material misrepresentation vitiate consent.

Why: The entry defines misdescription as error deceiving a party to his injury; the misrepresentation doctrine is the genuine rule of consequence for exactly that fact pattern.

MISDIRECTION.

[Axiom: reversible error must be prejudicial; harmless error does not reverse]

An error in instructing the jury reverses the judgment only if prejudicial; harmless error — error not affecting the substantial rights of the parties — does not warrant reversal.

Why: The entry states that misdirection is error for which judgment may be reversed; the axiom states the genuine condition — prejudice — that appellate review actually requires.

MISE.

MISERABILE DEPOSITUM.

Lat. In the civil law. The name of an involuntary deposit, made under pressing necessity ; as. for Instance, shipwreck, fire, or other inevi- table calamity. Poth. Proc. Civile, pt. 5. c. 1, 8 1; Code La. 2935.

[Law] — Law

[Law: Roman-law rule of the necessary deposit (depositum necessarium) — the depositary in extremity answered in double damages]

The necessary deposit — made in extremity, as by shipwreck, fire, or other calamity — was guarded by a heightened duty: Roman law gave the depositor an action in double damages against a faithless depositary.

Why: The entry defines the involuntary deposit under pressing necessity; the duplum action is the genuine doctrine that made the classification matter, kept in loose form since no Digest citation was verified.

MISERERE.

The name and first word of one of the penitential psalms, being that which was commonly used to 'be given by the ordinary to such condemned malefactors as were allowed the benefit of clergy; whence It is also called the "psalm of mercy.” Whar- ton.

[Scripture] — Scripture

MISFEASANCE.

A misdeed or trespass. The doing what a party ought to do improp- erly. 1 Tidd, Pr. 4. The improper perform- ance of some act which a man may lawfully do. 3 Steph. Comm. 460. And see Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray (Mass.) 309, 63 Am. Dec. 741 ; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Foulks, 191 111. 57, 60 N. E. 890; Dudley v. Flemingsburg, 115 Ky. 5, 72 S. W. 327, 60 L. R. A. 575, 103 Am. St. Rep. 253.

Misfeasance, strictly, is not doing a lawful act in a proper manner, omitting to do it as it should be done ; while malfeasance is the doing an act wholly wrongful ; and non-feasance is an omission to perform a duty, or a total neglect of duty. But "misfeasance" is often carelessly used in the sense of "malfeasance." Coite v. Lynes, 33 Conn. 109.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: misfeasance is actionable as undertaken performance done improperly; nonfeasance requires a pre-existing duty]

One who undertakes a lawful act answers for injury caused by its improper performance; mere nonfeasance — failure to act — is actionable only where a duty to act already existed.

Why: The entry defines misfeasance against the implied nonfeasance contrast; the undertaking/duty distinction is the genuine tort doctrine that gives the contrast legal content.

MISFEAZANCE.

See Misfeasance.

MISFORTUNE.

An adverse event, ca- lamity, or evil fortune, arising by accident, (or without the will or concurrence of him who suffers from it,) and not to be foreseen or guarded against by care or prudence. See 20 Q. B. Div. 816. In its application to the law of homicide, this term alw'ays Involves the further idea that the person causing the death is not at the time engaged in any un- lawful act. 4 Bl. Comm. 182.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make a man guilty unless his mind be guilty]

In homicide law misfortune always implies the actor was engaged in no unlawful act; without a guilty mind the killing is misadventure, not crime.

Why: Same doctrine as misadventure by the entry's own cross-reference to 4 Bl. Comm. 182; the maxim is the genuine rule, applied here independently since the entry stands alone.

MISJOINDER.

See Join deb.

MI8KENNING.

In Saxon and old Eng- lish law. An unjust or irregular summoning to court; to speak unsteadily in court ; to vary In one's plea. Cow.ell; Blount; Spel- man.

MISLEADING.

Delusive; calculated to lead astray or to lead Into error. Instruc- tions which are of such a nature as to be misunderstood by the Jury, or to give them a wrong impression, are said to be “mislead- ing.”

MISNOMER.

Mistake in name; the giv- ing an incorrect name to a person In a plead- ing, deed, or other instrument.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat — error in the name is nothing where the person is certain]

A misnomer does not vitiate the instrument where the person is otherwise certainly identified: error in the name is nothing when there is certainty as to the body.

Why: The entry defines misnomer as an incorrect name in a pleading or deed; the maxim is the genuine rule of consequence — the misnaming is immaterial if identity is certain.

MISPLEADING.

Pleading incorrectly, or omitting anything in pleading which is es-

‘sentlal to the support or defense of an action, is so called ; as In the case of a plaintiff not merely stating his title in a defective manner, but setting forth a title which is essentially defective in itself ; or if, to an action of debt, the defendant pleads “not guilty” instead of nil dcbet. Brown. See Lovett v. Pell, 22 Wend. (N. T.) 376; Chicago & A. R. Co. T. Murphy, 198 111. 462, 64 N. E. 1011.

MISPRISION.

In criminal law. A term used to signify every considerable mis- demeanor which has not a certain name giv- en to it by law. 3 Inst. 36. But more par- ticularly and properly the term denotes ei- ther (1) a contempt against the sovereign, the government, or the courts of justice, includ- ing not only contempts of court, properly so called, but also all forms of seditious or dis- loyal conduct and leze-majesty; (2) malad- ministration of high public office, including peculation of the public funds; (3) neglect or light account made of a crime, that is, fuilure in the duty of a citizen to endeavor to pre- vent the commission of a crime, or, having knowledge of its commission, to reveal it to the proper authorities. See 4 Bl. Comm. 119- 126.

—Misprision o f felony. The offense of con- cealing a felony committed by another, but with- out such previous concert with or subsequent assistance to the felon as would make the party concealing an accessory before or after the fact. 4 Steph. The concealment of something which ought to be revealed ; that is, mis- prision in the third of the specific meanings given above.— Positive misprision. The com- mission of something which ought not to be done ; that is, misprision in the first and second of the specific meanings given above.

In practice. A clerical error or mistake made by a clerk or other Judicial or minis- terial officer in writing or keeping records. See Merrill v. Miller, 28 Mont 134, 72 Pac. 427.

[Law] — Law

[Law: common-law misprision of felony — concealment of a known felony is itself an offense]

Misprision of felony is the concealment of a known felony without making it known to authority; mere knowledge unreported, without assent to the crime, is itself the offense.

Why: The entry defines misprision in terms of concealment and contempt; the duty-to-disclose principle is the genuine doctrine giving the definition legal content, kept loose-form to avoid anachronistic code citation.

MISREADING.

Reading a deed or other instrument to an illiterate or blind man (who la a party to it) in a false or deceitful man- ner, so that he conceives a wrong idea of Its tenor or contents. See 5 Coke, 19; 6 East 309; Halleubeck v. Dewitt, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 404.

[Law] — Law

[Law: non est factum — a deed misread to an illiterate or blind man is not his deed]

A deed whose contents were falsely read to an illiterate or blind party is not his deed: the plea of non est factum defeats an instrument the party never understood himself to be signing.

Why: The entry is the classic non est factum fact pattern and cites 5 Coke, 19 itself; the plea is the genuine defense the definition exists to support.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 19:14, KJV]

Thou shalt not curse the deaf, nor put a stumblingblock before the blind, but shalt fear thy God: I am the LORD.

Why: Misreading is reading a deed falsely to an illiterate or blind party so he conceives a wrong meaning — exploiting the vulnerable in a legal instrument. Leviticus 19:14 is scripture's law against exactly that exploitat...

[Law: UCC § 2-721 — remedies for material misrepresentation or fraud]

A contract induced by an intentional, material false statement of fact is voidable for fraud, and the defrauded party is not limited to rescission but may affirm and sue for damages.

Why: The entry defines fraudulent misrepresentation inducing a contract; UCC § 2-721 is the real statutory section governing remedies for exactly that wrong in the sale of goods.

[Law: marine-insurance presumption of loss from lapse of time — a missing ship is presumed lost]

In marine insurance, a vessel missing beyond the average duration of similar voyages at the same season is presumed lost, and the presumption supports a claim for total loss.

Why: The entry defines the missing ship by elapsed time exceeding the ordinary voyage; the presumption of loss is the genuine insurance-law consequence of that definition.

That result of ignorance of law or fact which has misled a person to commit that which, if he had not been in error, be would not have done. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 358.

A mistake exists when a person, under some erroneous conviction of law or fact, does, or omits to do, some act which, but for the erroneous conviction, he would not have done or omitted. It may arise either from unconsciousness. Ignorance, forgetfulness, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Bisph. Eq. 1 185. And see Allen v. Elder, 76 Ga. 677, Bl.Law Dict.(2d Ed.)— 00

Mistake of fact is a mistake not caused by the neglect of a legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake, and consisting in (1) an unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact, past or present, material to the contract; or (2) belief in the present existence of a thing material to the contract which does not exist, or in the past existence of such a thing which has not existed. Civ. Code Cal. 8 1577.

A mistake of lata happens when a party, hav- ing full knowledge of the facts, comes to an er- roneous conclusion as to their legal effect. It is a mistaken opinion or inference, arising from an imperfect or incorrect exercise of the judg- ment, upon facts as they really are ; and, like a correct opinion, which is law, necessarily pre- supposes that the person forming it is in full possession of them. The facts precede the law, and the true and false opinion alike imply an acquaintance with them. Neither can exist without it. The one is the result of a correct application to them of legal principles, which every man is presumed to know, and is called “law ;” the other, the result of a faulty applica- tion, and is called a “mistake of law.” Hurd v. Hall, 12 Wis. 124.

Mutual mistake is where the parties have a common intention, but it is induced by a com- mon or mutual mistake.

[Law] — Law

[Law: equitable relief for mutual mistake of material fact; mistake of law generally no excuse]

Equity relieves against mutual mistake of material fact, but the classical rule denied relief for bare mistake of law — the ignorance-of-law/ignorance-of-fact divide the entry's own definitions raise.

Why: The entry defines mistake as the product of ignorance of law or fact; the fact/law divide in granting relief is the genuine doctrine that divide exists to serve.

[United States v. Perez, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 579 (1824)]

Retrial after a mistrial does not offend double jeopardy where the first trial was discharged for manifest necessity: the defendant's 'valued right' to one trial yields to the public interest in fair adjudication.

Why: The entry defines the nugatory trial; Perez is the genuine foundational authority on the consequence that matters — when the state may try again — and the citation is used only because it is certain.

MISUSER.

Abuse of an office or fran- chise. 2 Bl. Comm. 153.

[Law] — Law

[Law: quo warranto — the writ to forfeit an office or franchise abused by misuser]

Abuse of an office or franchise (misuser) may work its forfeiture, and the writ of quo warranto lies to try the right and oust the usurper.

Why: The entry defines misuser as abuse of office or franchise citing 2 Bl. Comm. 153; forfeiture by quo warranto is the genuine remedy for exactly that abuse.

MITIGATION.

Alleviation; abatement or diminution of a penalty or punishment im- posed by law. "Mitigating circumstances" are such as do not constitute a justification or excuse of the offense in question, but which, in fairness and mercy, may be con- sidered as extenuating or reducing the degree of moral culpability. See Heaton v. Wright, 10 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 82; Wandell v. Ed- wards, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 500; Hess v. New York Press Co., 26 App. Div. 73, 49 N. Y, Supp. 894.

—Mitigation of damages. A reduction of the amount of damages, not by proof of facts which are a bar to a part of the plaintiff' s cause of action, or a justification, nor yet of facts which constitute a cause of action in favor of the defendant, but rather facts which show that the plaintiff's conceded cause of action does not entitle him to so large an amount as the show- ing on his side would otherwise justify the jury in allowing him. 1 Suth. Dam. 226.

[Law] — Law

[Law: mitior sensus — allegedly defamatory words are taken in their more favorable acceptation]

In defamation, words reasonably capable of an innocent meaning are construed in the milder sense — mitior sensus — and cannot be strained into a libel.

Why: The entry is the Latin name of the doctrine itself; the defamation-construction rule is its entire legal office, so the link is definitional, not forced.

MITOYENNETR.

In French law. The joint ownership of two neighbors In a wall, ditch, or hedge which separates their estates.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: party-wall doctrine — mutual easements of support in a common dividing structure]

A wall, ditch, or hedge dividing two estates and owned in common gives each neighbor mutual rights of support and maintenance — the party-wall doctrine of reciprocal easements.

Why: The entry's French joint-ownership term is genuinely illuminated for an English-law reader by the common-law party-wall doctrine, which governs the same physical and legal situation.

MITTENDO MANUSCRIPTUM PEDIS / FINIS.

An abolished Judicial writ address- ed to the treasurer and chamberlain of the . exchequer to search for and transmit the foot of a fine acknowledged before Justices in eyre into the common pleas. Reg. Orlg. 14.

Tldd, Pr. 745.

— Mixed laws. A name sometimes given to those which concern both persons and property. —Mixed questions. 'This phrase may mean either those which arise from the conflict of foreign and domestic laws, or questions arising on a trial involving both law and fact. See Bennett v. Eddy. 120 Mich. 300, 79 N. W. 481. —Mixed subjects of property. Such as fail within the definition of things real, but which are attended, nevertheless, with some of the legal qualities of things personal, as emblements, fixtures, and shares in public undertakings, con- nected with land. Besides these, there are oth- ers which, though things personal in point of definition, are. in respect of some of their legal qualities, of the nature of things real : such are animals fern naturtr. charters and deeds, court roils, and other evidences of the land, together with the chests in which they are contained, ancient family pictures, ornaments, tombstones, coats of armor, with pennons and other ensigns, and especially heir-looms. Wharton.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Ad quaestionem juris respondent judices, ad quaestionem facti juratores — judges answer questions of law, jurors questions of fact]

On a trial, questions of law are for the judge and questions of fact for the jury; a mixed question — law applied to found facts — is resolved by the jury under the court's instruction.

Why: The entry defines mixed questions as involving both law and fact; the maxim is the genuine allocation rule that makes the classification matter.

MIXTION.

The mixture or confusion of goods or chattels belonging severally to different owners, in such a way that they can no longer be separated or distinguished ; as where two measures of wine belonging to different persons are poured together into the same cask.

[Law] — Law

[Law: doctrine of confusion of goods — the wrongful commingler bears the loss]

Where one wrongfully commingles his goods with another's so they cannot be separated, the wrongdoer bears the loss and the innocent party takes the whole mass.

Why: The entry defines the confusion of goods; the loss-allocation rule is the genuine property doctrine the definition exists to trigger.

MOB.

An assemblage of many people, acting in a violent and disorderly manner, defying the law, and committing, or threat- ening to commit, depredations upon property or violence to persons. Alexander v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 395, 50 S. W. 716; Marshall v. Buffalo, 50 App. Div. 149, 64 N. Y. Supp. 411; Champaign County v. Church, 62 Ohio St 318, 57 N. E. 50, 48 L. R. A. 738, 78 Am. St Rep. 718.

The word, in legal use, is practically syn- onymous with “riot,” but the latter is the more correct term.

[Law] — Law

[Law: common-law riot — tumultuous disturbance by three or more persons]

At common law a riot is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three or more persons acting in concert toward a common unlawful purpose.

Why: The entry defines the mob as a violent, disorderly assemblage defying law; the riot elements are the genuine criminal-law content of that definition.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 23:2, KJV]

Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil; neither shalt thou speak in a cause to decline after many to wrest judgment.

Why: A mob is 'an assemblage of many people, acting in a violent and disorderly manner, defying the law.' Exodus 23:2 is scripture's mob law: do not follow a multitude to do evil, nor let the crowd wrest judgment. It bears...

[William Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, c. 1599]

"Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears" — Antony's funeral oration turns the Roman crowd into exactly the violent, disorderly assemblage defying order that the entry defines.

Why: The play stages the legal 'mob' in action: a crowd swayed by rhetoric into violence. The quoted opening line is verbatim-certain and is the pivot of the mob scene.

MOBBING AND RIOTING.

In Scotch law. A general term including all those convocations of the lieges for violent and un- lawful purposes, which are attended with in- jury to the persons or property of the lieges, or terror and alarm to the neighborhood in which it takes place. The two phrases are usually placed together: but, nevertheless, they have distinct meanings, and are some- times used separately in legal language, the word “mobbing” being peculiarly applicable to the unlawful assemblage nnd violence of a number of persons, nnd that of “rioting” to the outrageous behavior of a single indi- vidual. Alls. Crlm. Law, c. 23, p. 509.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Mobilia sequuntur personam — movables follow the law of the person]

Movables follow the law of the person: succession to and disposition of movable property are governed by the law of the owner's domicile, not the situs of the goods.

Why: The entry itself quotes the maxim as its authority; the conflicts rule for movables is the genuine doctrine the maxim states, so the annotation explains rather than invents.

MOCKADOES.

A kind of cloth made in England, mentioned in St 23 Eli*, c. 9.

MODEL.

A pattern or representation of something to be made. A fac simile of Something invented, made on a reduced scale, in compliance with the patent laws. See State v. Fox, 25 N. J. Law, 566; Montana Ore Pur- chasing Co. v. Boston, etc., Min Co., 27 Mont. 288, 70 Pac. 1126.

MODERAMEN INCULPATES TU- / TELS.

Lat. In Roman law. The regula- tion of justifiable defense. A term used to express that degree of force in defense of the person or property which a person might safely use, although it should occasion the death of the aggressor. Calvin; Bell.

[Law] — Law

[Law: moderamen inculpatae tutelae — self-defense is limited to proportionate, necessary force]

Justifiable defense is bounded by the due measure of blameless defense: force used in self-defense must be proportionate to the threat and cease when the danger ceases.

Why: The entry is the Roman-law name of the proportionality rule itself; the note states the rule's genuine content rather than importing anything foreign.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 22:2, KJV]

If a thief be found breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall no blood be shed for him.

Amercements must be proportioned to the offense: the writ lies where a court not of record amerces beyond the quality or quantity of the transgression.

Why: The entry says the writ is 'founded on Magna Charta'; the proportionality principle of the Charter's amercement chapter is the genuine source, cited loosely per the entry's own attribution.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Axiom: substance over form in usury — a transaction's true character as a loan is determined by its substance, not its disguise]

A sham sale on credit at a high price with immediate resale for cash is a device to evade usury laws; courts look through the form of the transaction to its substance and treat the disguised premium as interest.

Why: The entry defines mohatra as a fraudulent device to evade usury laws; the substance-over-form rule is the genuine doctrine courts use to defeat exactly such devices.

Joint tenants hold by moieties — each seised per my et per tout, of the half and of the whole — with the right of survivorship; and 'moiety acts' are penal statutes giving half the fine to the informer, the qui tam lineage.

MONET.

A general, indefinite term for the measure and representative of value ; currency; the circulating medium; cash.

“Money" is a generic term, and embraces every description of coin or bank-notes rec- ognized by common consent as a representa- tive of value in effecting exchanges of prop- erty or payment of debts. Hopson v. Foun- tain, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 140.

Money is used in a specific and also in a gen- eral and more comprehensive sense. In its spe- cific sense, it means what is coined or stamped by public authority, and has its determinate value fixed by governments. In its more com- prehensive and general sense, it means wealth,— the representative of commodities of all kinds, of lands, and of everything that can be trans- ferred in commerce. Paul v. Bail, 31 Tex. 10.

In its strict technical sense, “money” means coined, metal, usually gold or silver, upon which the government stamp has been impressed to in- dicate its value. In its more popular sense, “money” means any currency, tokens, bank- notes, or other circulating medium in general iise as the representative of value. Kennedy v. Briere, 45 Tex. 305.

The term “moneys" is not of more extensive signification than "money,” and means only cash, and not things in action. Mann v. Mann, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, 7 Am. Dec. 416.

In Eng- lish practice. These “money claims" correspond very nearly to the “money counts" hitherto in use. Mozley & Whitley. — Money demand. A claim for a fixed and liquidated amount of money, or for a sum which can be ascertained by mere calculation; in this sense, distinguished from a claim which must be passed upon and liquidated by a jury, called “dam- ages.” Roberts v. Money is the just medium and measure of commutable things; tender of lawful money discharges a debt, and a creditor cannot be compelled to accept anything else in payment.

In practice. A monition Is a formal order of the court commanding something to be done by the person to whom it is directed, and who is called the “person monished." Thus, when money is decreed to be paid, a monition may be obtained com- manding its payment. In ecclesiastical pro- cedure, a monition is an order monishing or warning the party complained against to do or not to do a certain act “under pain of the law and contempt thereof.” A monition nmy also be appended to a sentence inflicting a punishment for a past offense; in that case the monition forbids the repetition of the offense. The monition, in American admiralty practice, is, in effect, a summons, citation, or notice, though in form a command to the marshal to cite and admonish the defendant to appear and answer, and not a summons addressed to the party. 2 Conk. Adm. (2d Ed.) 147.

[Law] — Law

[Law: bigamy — a second marriage during the subsistence of the first is criminal]

Marriage contracted between one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others; contracting a second marriage while the first subsists is the crime of bigamy.

Why: The entry defines monogamy expressly against bigamy and polygamy; the criminal prohibition of bigamy is the genuine legal content of that opposition.

[Genesis 2:24, KJV]

Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh.

(paraphrase) In Pushkin's verse novel, Onegin kills his friend Lensky in a duel — the single combat the entry defines, once allowed by law for the trial or proof of causes. (paraphrase)

MONTH.

One of the divisions of a year. The space of time denoted by this term varies according as one or another of the following varieties of months is intended:

A high degree of impression of the truth of a fact, fall- ing short of absolute certainty, but sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty, even in a capital case. See Burrill, Circ. Bv. 198-200. The phrase "moral certainty” has been introduced into our jurisprudence from the publicists and metaphysicians, and signifies only a very high degree of probability. It was observed by Puf- fendorf that, "when we declare such a thing to be morally certain, because it has been confirm- ed by credible witnesses, this moral certitude is nothing else but a strong presumption grounded on probable reasons, and which very seldom fails and deceives us.” “Probable evidence,” says Bishop Butler, in the opening sentence of his Analogy, "is essentially distinguished from demonstrative by this:

MORT CIVILE.

In French law. Civil death, as upon conviction for felony. It was nominally abolished by a law of the 31st of May, 1854, but something very similar to It In effect at least still remains. Thus, the property of the condemned, possessed by him at the date of his conviction, goes and be- longs to his successors, (hdritiers,) as in case of an Intestacy; and his future acquired property goes to the state by right of Its pre- rogative, (par droit de ddshdrence,) but the state may, as a matter of grace, make it over In whole or In part to the widow and chil- dren. [Law: attainder — felony conviction worked corruption of blood and forfeiture at common law] the genuine common-law doctrine behind those consequences.

MORT D'ANCESTOR.

An assize of mort d'ancestor was a writ which lay for a person whose ancestor died seised of lands in fee-simple, and after his death a stranger abated; and this writ di- rected the sheriff to summon a jury or as- size, who should view the land in question and recognize whether such ancestor were seised thereof on the day of his death, and whether the demandant were the next heir.

A conditional conveyance of land, designed as a security for* the payment of money, the fulfillment of some contract, or the perform- ance of some act, and to be void upon such payment, fulfillment, or performance. Mit- chell v. Burnham, 44 Me. 299.

A debt by specialty, secured by a pledge of lands, of which the legal ownership is vested in the creditor, but of which, in equity, the debtor and those claiming under him remain the actual owners, until debarred by Judicial sentence or their own laches. Coote, Mortg. 1.

The foregoing definitions are applicable to the common-law conception of a mortgage. But in many states in modern times, it is regarded as a mere lien, and not as creating a title or estate. It is a pledge or security of particular property for the payment of a debt or the performance of some other obligation, whatever form the transaction may take, but is not now regarded as a convey- ance in effect, though it may be cast in the form of a conveyance. See Muth v. Goddard, 28 Mont. 237, 72 Pac. 621, 98 Am. St. Rep. 553 ; Johnson v. Robinson, 68 Tex. 399, 4 S.

conventional mortgage is a contract by which a person binds the whole of his property, or a portion of it only, in favor of another, to secure the execution of some engagement, but without divesting himself of possession. Civ. Code La. art. 3290; Succession of Benjamin, 39 La. Ann. 612, 2 South. 187. It is distinguished from the ‘‘legal” mortgage, which is a privilege which the law alone in certain cases gives to a creditor over the property of his debtor, without stipu- lation of the parties. This last is very much like a general lien at common law, created by the law rather than by the act of the parties, such as a judgment lien. — Equitable mort- gage. A specific lien upon real property to se- cure the payment of money or the performance of some other obligation, which a court of eq- uity will recognize and enforce, in accordance with the clearly ascertained intent of the par- ties to that effect, but which lacks the essential features of a legal mortgage, either because it grows out of the transactions of the parties without any deed or express contract to give a lien, or because the instrument used for that purpose is wanting in some of the character- istics of a common-law mortgage, or, being ab- solute in form, is accompanied by a collateral reservation of a right to redeem, or because an explicit agreement to give a mortgage has not been carried into effect. See 4 Kent, Comm. 150; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. ! 1018: Ketchum v. St. Louis, 101 U. S. 306. 25 L. Ed. 999 ; Payne v. Wilson, 74 N. Y. 348; Gessner v. Palmateer, 89 Cal. 89, 26 Pac. 789, 13 L. R. A. 187 : Cum- mings v. Jackson, 55 N. J. Eq. 805. 38 Atl. 763 ; Hall v. Railroad Co., 58 Ala. 23; Bradley v. Merrill, 88 Me. 319, 34 Atl. 160; Carter v. Holman, 60 Mo. 504. In English law, the fol- lowing mortgages are equitable: (1) Where the subject of a mortgage is trust property, which security is effected either by a formal deed or a written memorandum, notice being given to the trustees in order to preserve the priority. (2) Where it is an equity of redemption, which is merely a right to bring an action in the chan- cery division to redeem the estate. (3) Where there is a written agreement only to make a mortgage, which creates an equitable lien on the land. {4) Where a debtor deposits the title- deeds of his estate with his creditor or some person on his behalf, without even a verbal com- munication. The deposit itself is deemed evi- dence of an executed agreement or contract for a mortgage for such estate. Wharton. — First mortgage. The first (in time or right) of a series of two or more mortgages covering the same property and successively attaching as liens upon it; also, in a more particular sense.

a mortgage which is a first lien on the property, not only as against other mortgages, but as against any other charges or incumbrances. Green's Appeal, 97 Pa. 347. — First mortgage bonds. Bonds the payment of which is secur- ed by a first mortgage on property. Bank of Atchison County v. Byers, 139 Mo. 627, 41 S.

W. 325; Minnesota & P. It. Co. v. Sibley. 2 Minn. 18 (Gil. 1) : Com. v. Williamstown, 156 Maas. 70, 30 N. E. 472. — Second mortgage. One which takes rank immediately after a ‘first mortgage on the same property, without any intervening liens, and is next entitled to satis- faction out of the proceeds of the property. Green’s Appeal, 97 Pa. 347. Properly speak- ing, however, the term designates the second of a series of mortgages, not necessarily the second lien. For instance, the lien of a judg- ment might intervene between the first and sec- ond mortgages; in which case, the second mort- gage would be the third lien.— General mort- gage. Mortgages are sometimes classified as general and special, a mortgage of the former class being one which binds all property, pres- ent and future, of the debtor (sometimes called a "blanket" mortgage); while a special mort- gage is limited to certain particular and speci- fied property. Barnard v. Erwin, 2 Rob. (La.) 415. — Judicial mortgage. In the law of Lou- isiana. The lien resulting from judgments, whether rendered on contested cases or by de- fault, whether final or provisional, in favor of the person obtaining them. Civ. Code La. art. 3321. — Legal mortgage. A term used in Lou- isiana. The law alone in certain cases gives to the creditor a mortgage on the property of his debtor, without it being requisite that the par- ties should stipulate it. This is called "legal mortgage." Civ. Code La. art. 3311.— Mort- gage of goods. A conveyance of goods in gage or mortgage by which tile whole legal title passes conditionally to the mortgagee ; and, if the goods are not redeemed at the time stipu- lated, the title becomes absolute in law, al- though equity will interfere to compel a redemp- tion. It is distinguished from a "pledge" by the circumstance that possession by the mort- gagee is not or may not be essential to create or to support the title. Stow. Bailm. g 287. See Chattel Mortgage.— Purchase-money mortgage. A mortgage given, concurrently with a conveyance of land, by the vendee to the vendor, on the same land, to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price. See Baker v. Clepper, 26 Tex. 620. 84 Am. Dec. 591.— Tacit mortgage. In Louisiana. The same as a "legal" mortgage. See supra. — Welsh mort- gage. In English law. A species of security which partakes of the nature of a mortgage, as there is a debt due, and an estate is given as security for the repayment, but differs from it in the circumstances that the rents and profits are to be received without account till the prin- cipal money is paid off, and there is no remedy to enforce payment, while the mortgagor has a perpetual power of redemption. It is now rare- ly used. 1 Pow. Mortg. 373a. See O'Neill v. Gray, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 566 ; Bentley v. Phelps, 3 Fed. Cas. 250.

[Maxim: Once a mortgage, always a mortgage — the equity of redemption cannot be clogged]

Once a mortgage, always a mortgage: the mortgagor's equity of redemption cannot be clogged or fettered by any stipulation in the mortgage itself.

Why: The entry defines the mortgage as a conditional conveyance defeasible on performance; the equity-of-redemption maxim is the genuine equitable doctrine that defines the mortgagor's protected interest.

MORTGAGEE.

He that takes or re- ceives a mortgage.

—Mortgagee In possession. A mortgagee of real property who is in possession of it with the agreement or assent of the mortgagor, ex- press or implied, and in recognition of his mort- gage and because of it, and under such circum- stances as to make the satisfaction of his lien an equitable prerequisite to his being dispossess- ed. [Law: mortgagee in possession — equitable duty to account for rents and profits]

A mortgagee in possession must account for the rents and profits received from the mortgaged premises, applying them toward the debt.

Why: The entry defines the mortgagee in possession by reference to satisfaction of his lien; the duty to account is the genuine equitable obligation attached to that possession.

MORTGAGOR.

He that gives a mort- gage.

MORTH.

Sax. Murder, answering ex- actly to the French “assassinat" or “muertre de guet-apens.”

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 9:6, KJV]

Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man.

Why: Morth is murder (the Saxon term, 'assassinat'). Genesis 9:6 is the Noahic murder law: the shedding of man's blood answered by man's blood, grounded in the image of God. God's own speech to Noah — red-letter.

[Law: donatio mortis causa — revocable deathbed gift requiring delivery]

A donatio mortis causa — a gift in contemplation of death — is revocable until the donor's death, requires delivery, and fails if the donor recovers.

Why: The entry introduces the phrase through donatio mortis causa; the revocability-and-delivery requirements are the genuine doctrine distinguishing it from an inter vivos gift.

MORTMAIN.

A term applied to denote the alienation of lands or tenements to any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. These purchases having been chiefly made by religious bouses, in conse- quence of which lands became perpetually inherent in one dead hand, this has occa- sioned the general appellation of “mortmain" to be applied to such alienations. 2 BL Comm. 268 ; Co. Lltt. 26; Perln v. Carey, 24 How. 495, 16 L. Ed. 701.

—Mortmain acts. These acts had for their object to prevent lands getting into the pos- session or control of religious corporations, or, as the name indicates, in mortua mans. After numerous prior acts dating from the reign of Edward I., it was enacted by the statute 9 Geo.

II. c. 36, (called the “Mortmain Act” par ex- cellence,) that no lands should be given to chari- ties unless certain requisites should be observ- ed. Brown. Yates v. Yates, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 324.

[Law] — Law

[Law: statutes of mortmain — restraints on alienation of land to corporations]

The statutes of mortmain restrained the alienation of lands to corporations — the 'dead hand' — lest land become perpetually inalienable in ecclesiastical or corporate ownership.

Why: The entry defines mortmain as alienation to corporations producing perpetually inherent land; the statutes are the genuine legislative response the term exists to name.

MORTUARY.

A kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift of the second best living animal belonging to the deceased, claimed by and due to the -minister in many parishes, on the death of his parishioners, whether buried in the church-yard or not 2 Bl. [Law] — Law

[Law: mortality tables — admissible to prove life expectancy in damage computation]

Mortality tables are admissible in evidence to establish a party's life expectancy in computing damages for wrongful death and personal injury.

Why: The entry defines the tables as estimating probable duration of life; admissibility for life-expectancy proof is the genuine evidentiary use the definition serves.

MORTUUM VADIUM.

MOTHER is the woman who has borne a child — the female parent. 'Dear Mama' is the canonical hip-hop song on motherhood: maternal sacrifice and devotion held up against hardship.

Why: Genuine link: the track's subject is the maternal bond itself; lines are verbatim-certain from Me Against the World.

A motion is a written application for an order addressed to the court or to a judge in vacation by any party to a suit or proceeding, or by any one interested therein. Rev. Code Iowa 18S0, $ 2911 ; Code N. Y. § 401.

In parliamentary law. The formal mode in which a member submits a proposed measure or resolve for the consideration and action of the meeting.

—Motion tor deoree. Under the chancery practice, the most usual mode of bringing on a suit for hearing when the defendant has answer- ed is by motion for decree. To do this the plaintiff serves on the defendant a notice of his Intention to move for a decree. Hunter, Suit Eq. 59; Daniell, Ch. Pr. 722.— Motion for judgment. In English practice. A proceed- ing whereby a party to an action moves for the judgment of the court in his favor. See Sup. Ct. Rules 1883, ord. 40.— Motion In error.

A motion in error stands on the same footing as a writ of error ; the only difference .is that, on a motion in error, no service is required to be made on the opposite party, because, being before the court when the motion is filed, he is bound to take notice of it at his peril. Tread- way v. Coe, 21 Conn. 283. — Motion to set aside judgment. This is a step taken by a party in an action who is dissatisfied with the judgment directed to be entered at the trial of the action.— Special motion. A motion ad- dressed to the discretion of the court, and which must be heard and determined ; as distinguish- ed from one which may be granted of course. Merchants' Bank v. Crysler, 67 Fed. 390, 14

C. C. A. 444.

MOTIVE.

The inducement, cause, or reason why a thing is done. An act legal in itself, and which violates no right, is not actionable on account of the motive which actuated it. Chatfleld v. Wilson, 5 Am. Law Reg. (O. S.) 528.

"Motive" and "intent" are not identical, and an intent may exist where a motive » wanting. Motive is the moving power which impels to ac- tion for a definite result; intent is the pur- pose to use a particular means to effect such result. In the popular mind intent and motive are often regarded as the same thing; but in law there is a clear distinction between them. When a crime is clearly proved to have been committed by a person charged therewith, the question of motive may be of little or no im- portance, but criminal intent is always essen- tial to the commission of a crime. People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L.

R. A. 193: Warren v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 29 Fed. Cas. 287. But motive is often an important subject of inquiry in criminal prosecutions, par- ticularly where the case depends mainly or en- tirely on circumstantial evidence, the combina- tion of motive and opportunity (for the commis- sion of the particular crime by the person ac- cused) being generally considered essential links in a chain of such evidence, while the absence of all motive on the part of the prisoner is an admissible and important item of evidence ip his favor.

[Axiom: bad motive does not make a lawful act actionable; motive distinguished from intent]

An act lawful in itself and violating no right is not actionable merely because done from a bad motive; motive — the inducement — is distinct from intent — the purpose.

A state of being many. That quality of a pleading which involves a variety of matters or particulars; undue variety. 2 Saund. 410. A multiply- ing or increasing. Story. Eq. Pl. g 287.

— Multiplicity of notions. A phrase de- scriptive of the state of affairs where several different suits or artions are brought upon the same issne. It is obviated in equity by a bill of peace; in courts of law, by a rule of court for the consolidation of different actions. Williams v. Millington, 1 H. BI. 81 ; Murphy v. [Law] — Law

[Law: bill of peace — equity prevents multiplicity of actions]

Equity takes jurisdiction to prevent a multiplicity of suits: where many actions would lie on the same issue, a bill of peace settles the right once for all.

Why: The entry defines multiplicity of actions as obviated by the bill of peace; the prevention-of-multiplicity head of equity jurisdiction is the genuine doctrine the phrase names.

MULTITUDE.

An assemblage of many people. According to Coke it is not a word of very precise meaning; for some authori- ties hold that there must be at least ten persons to make a multitude, while others maintain that no definite number is fixed by law. Co. Litt. 207.

This was the designation of one born in the provinces or in a city politically connected with Rome, and who, having become a Roman citizen, was entitled to hold any offices at Rome ex- cept some of the highest. MUNICIPAL.

“Municipal” signifies that which belongs to a corporation or a city. The term Includes the rules or laws by which a particular district, community, or nation is governed. It may also mean local, par- ticular, Independent Horton v. Mobile School Com’rs, 48 Ala. 698.

“Municipal,” in one of its meanings, is used in opposition to “international,” and denotes that which pertains or belongs properly to an in- dividual state or separate community, as distin- guished from that which is common to, or ob- served between, all nations. Thus, piracy is an "international offense,” and is denounced by “international law,” but smuggling is a “munic- ipal offense,” and cognizable by "municipal law.”

[Law: Dillon's Rule — a municipal corporation has only state-granted powers]

A municipal corporation is the creature of the state: it possesses only those powers expressly granted to it, those necessarily implied, and those essential to its declared objects.

Rev. Code Miss. 1880, i 2875. Serous to the lives of others, and evidencing a epraved mind, regardless of human life, al- though without any preconceived purpose to de- prive any particular person of life,— is murder in the first degree ; and every other homicide com- mitted under such circumstances as would have constituted murder at common law is murder in the second degree. Code Ala. 1886, | 3725.

Degrees of murder. These were unknown at common law, but have been introduced in many states by statutes, the terms of which are too variant to be here discussed in detail. In general, however, it may be said that moat states only divide the crime into “murder in the first degree” and “murder in the second degree,” though in a few there are as many as five de- grees ; and that the general purport of these statutes is to confine murder in the first degree to homicide committed by poison, lying in wait, and other killings committed in pursuance of a deliberate and premeditated design, and to those which accompany the commission of some of the more atrocious felonies, such as burglary, arson, and rape ; while murder in the second degree occurs where there is no such deliberately form- ed design to take life or to perpetrate one of the enumerated felonies as is required for the first degree, but where, nevertheless, there was- a purpose to kill (or at least a purpose to inflict the particular injury without caring whether it caused death or not) formed instantaneously in the mind, and where the killing was without justification or excuse, and without any such provocation as would reduce the crime to the grade of manslaughter. In a few states, there- Fa a crime of “murder in the third degree," which is defined as the killing of a human being without any design to effect death by a person who is engaged in the commission of a felony. The fourth and fifth degrees (in New Mexico) correspond to certain classifies tiona of man- slaughter elsewhere.

MUTUAL.

Interchangeable ; reciprocal ; each acting in return or correspondence to the other ; given and received ; spoken of an engagement or relation in which like duties and obligations are exchanged.

“Mutual” is not synonymous with “common." The latter word, in one of its meanings, denotes that which is shared, in the same or different degrees, by two or more persons ; but the for- mer implies reciprocal action or interdependent connection.

As to mutual “Accounts,” “Assent," “Com- bat,” “Conditions,” “Contracts,” “Cove- nants,” “Credits,” “Debts,” “Insurance," “Insurance Company," “Mistake," “Prom- ise,” and “Testaments,” see those titles.

In every agreement the parties must, as re- gards the principal or essential part of the transaction, intend the same thing; t. e., each must know what the other is to do. This is called “mutuality of assent.” Chit. Cont. 13.

In a simple contract arising from agreement, it is sometimes the essence of the transaction that each party should be bound to do some- thing under it. This requirement is called “mu- tuality.” Sweet.

NAME is the designation of an individual person. The track is a declaration of identity and self-designation — the name as who one is.

Why: Genuine link: the title hook is verbatim-certain and the song's subject is identity by name; the legal entry is precisely about designation.

[Law: territorial sea — coastal sovereignty over adjacent waters (cannon-shot rule)]

Waters running between coasts not far apart raise the question of the territorial sea: the coastal state has sovereignty over the waters adjacent to its shores, historically measured by the cannon-shot or three-mile rule.

Why: The entry defines the narrow seas geographically; the territorial-sea doctrine is the genuine legal question that definition exists to raise.

A. 642, 8 Am. St Rep. 744.

Besides the element of autonomy or self-gov- ernment, that is, the independence of the com- munity as a whole from the interference of any foreign lxiwer in its affairs or any subjection to such power, it is further necessary to the con- stitution of a nation that it should be an or- ganized jural society, that is, both governing jts own members by regular laws, and defining and protecting their rights, and respecting the rights and duties which attach to it as a constituent member of the family of nations. Such a so- ciety, says Vattel, has her affairs and her inter- ests ; she deliberates and takes resolutions in common ; thus becoming a moral person, who possesses an understanding and will peculiar to herself, and is susceptible of obligations and rights. Vattel, §§ 1. 2.

The words “nation” and “people” are fre- uently used as synonyms, but there is a great ifference between them. A nation is an aggre- gation of men speaking the same language, hav- ing the same customs, and endowed with certain moral qualities which distinguish them from oth- er groups of a like nature. It would follow from this definition that a nation is destined to form only one state, and that it constitutes one indivisible whole. Nevertheless, the history of every age presents us with nations divided into several states. Thus, Italy was for centuries divided among several different governments. The people is the collection of all citizens with- out distinction of rank or order. All men liv- ing under the same government compose the people of the state. In relation to the state, the citizens constitute the people ; in relation to the human race, they constitute the nation. A free nation is one not subject to a foreign gov- ernment, whatever be the constitution of the state ; a people is free when all the citizens oan participate in a certain measure in the direc- tion and in the examination of public affairs. The people is the political body brought into ex- istence by community of laws, and the people may perish with these laws. The nation is the moral body, independent of political revolutions, because it is constituted by inborn qualities which render it indissoluble. The state is the Civil Law, 99.

This expression, “natural law," or jut nat- urals, was largely used in the philosophical speculations of the Roman jurists of the Anto- mne age, and was intended to denote a system of 'rules and principles f<5r the guidance of hu- man conduct which, independently of enacted law or of the systems peculiar to any one peo- ple, might be discovered by the rational intelli- gence of man, and would be.found to grow out of and conform to his nofure, meaning by that word his whole mental, moral, and physical con- stitution. The point of departure tor this con- ception was the Stoic doctrine of a life ordered “according to nature," which in its turn rested upon the purely supposititious existence, in primitive times, of a “state of nature;” that is, a condition of society in which men uni- versally were governed solely by a rational and consistent obedience to the needs, impulses, and promptings of their true nature, sucli nature being as yet undefaced by dishonesty, falsehood, or indulgence of the baser passions. See Maine, Anc. Law, 50, et seq.

We understand all laws to be either human or divine, according as they have man or God for their author; and divine laws are of two kinds, that is to say: (1) Natural laws; <2) positive or revealed laws. A natural law is denned by Burlamaqui to be “a rule which bo necessarily agrees with the nature and state of man that,- without observing its maxims, the peace and happiness of society can never be preserved.” Ana he says that, these are called “natural' laws” because a knowledge of them may be at- tained merely by the light of reason, from the fact of their essential agreeableness with the constitution of human nature; while, on the contrary, positive or revealed laws are not founded upon the general constitution of human nature, but only upon the will of God ; though in other respects such law is established upon very good reason, and procures the ad- vantage of those to whom it is sent. The ceremonial or political laws of the Jews are of this latter class. Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 527, 44 Am. Dec. 217.

NAVIGABLE.

Capable of being navi- gated; that may be navigated or passed over in ships or vessels. But the term is gen- erally understood in a more restricted sense, viz., subject to the ebb and flow of the tide.

"The doctrine of the common law as to the navigability of waters has no application in this country. Here the ebb and flow of the tide do not constitute the usual test, as in England, or any test at all, of the navigability of waters. There no waters are navigable in fact, or at least to any considerable extent, which are not subject to the tide, and from this circumstance tide-water and navigable water there signify substantially the same thing. But in this coun- try the case is widely different. Some of our rivers are as navigable for many hundreds of miles above as they are below the limits of tide-water, and some of them are navigable for great distances by large vessels, which are not even affected by the tide at any point during their entire length. A different test must there- fore be applied to determine the navigability of our rivers, and that is found in their navigable capacity. Those rivers must be regarded as public navigable rivers, in law, which are navi- gable in fact. And they are navigable in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes Of trade and travel on water. And they consti- tute navigable waters of the United States, within the meaning of the acts of congress, in contradistinction from the navigable waters of the states, when they form, in their ordinary condition, by themselves, or by uniting with other waters, a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other states or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water." The T>aniel Ball, 10 Wall. 503. 19 L. Ed. 999. And see Packer v. Bird. 137 U. S. 001. 11 Sup. Ct. 210, 34 L. Ed. 819; The Genesee Chief. 12 How. 455, 13 T,. Ed. 1058; Illinois Cent. It. Co. v. State. 140 U. S. 387, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 30 L. Ed. 10ia

It is true that the flow and ebb of the tide Is not regarded, in this country, as the usual, or any real, test of navigability; and it only op- erates to impress, prima facie, the character of being public and navigable, and to place the onus of proof on the party affirming the con- trary. Rut the navigability of tide-waters does not materially depend upon past or present actual public use. Such use may establish navi- gability. but it is not essential to give the char- acter. Otherwise, streams in new and unsettled sections of the country, or where the increase, growth, and development have not been suffi- cient to call them into public use, would be excluded, though navigable in fact, thus making the character of being a navigable stream de- pendent on the occurrence of the necessity of public use. Capability of being used for useful purposes of navigation, of trade and travel, in the usual and ordinary modes, and not the ex- tent and manner of the use, is the test of navi- gability. Sullivan v. Spotswood, 82 Ala. 10C, 2 South. 716.

NECESSARIES.

Lat Necessary; un- avoidable; Indispensable; not admitting of choice or the action of the will; needful.

NECESSARY.

As used in jurisprudence^ the word “necessary” does not always import an absolute physical necessity, so strong that one thing, to which another may be termed “necessary,” cannot exist without that other. It frequently imports no more than that one thing is convenient or useful or essential to another. To employ the means necessary to an end is generally understood as employing any means calculated to produce the end, and not as being confined to those single means without which the end would be entirely un- attainable. McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 413, 4 L. Ed. 579.

NEGLECT.

Omission ; failure to do something that one Is bound to do; care- lessness.

The term Is used In the law of bailment as synonymous with “negligence." But the latter word Is the closer translation of the Latin “neoligentia.”

As used in respect to the payment of mon- ey, refusal is the failure to pay money when demanded ; neglect is the failure to pay money which the party Is hound to pay with- out demand. Kimball v. Howland, 6 Gray (Mass.) 224.

The term means to omit, as to neglect busi- ness or payment or duty or work, and is gen- erally used in this sense. It does not generally imply carelessness or imprudence, but simply an emission to do or perform some work, duty, or act. Rosenplaenter v. Boessle, 54 N. Y. 262. —Culpable neglect. In this phrase, the word “culpable” means not criminal, but censurable ; and, when the term Is applied to the omission by a person to preserve the means of enforcing his own rights, censurable is more nearly an equivalent. As he has merely lost a right of action which he might voluntarily relinquish, and has wronged nobody but himself, _ culpable neglect conveys the idea of neglect which exists where the loss can fairly be ascribed to the pnrtv's own carelessness, improvidence, or folly. Bank v. Wright, 8 Allen (Mass.) 121 ; Ben- nett v. Bennett, 93 Me. 241, 44 Atl. 894.— Willful neglect. Willful neglect is the neg- lect of the husband to provide for his wife the common necessaries of life, he having the abil- ity to do so ; or it is the failure to do so by reason of idleness. profligacy, or dissipation. Negligence or carelessness signifies want of care, caution, attention, diligence, or discre- tion in one having no positive intention to in- jure the person complaining thereof. The words “reckless,” “indifferent,” *rcareless," and “wan- ton” are never understood to signify positive will or intention, unless when joined with oth- er words which show that they are to receive an artificial or unusual, if not an unnatural. Interpretation. Lexington v. Lewis, 10 Bush (Ky.) 677.

Negligence is any culpable omission of a pos- itive duty. It differs from heedlessness, in that heedlessness is the doing of an act in vio- lation of a negative duty, without adverting to its possible consequences. In both cases there is inadvertence, and there is breach of duty. Aust. Jur. § 630.

— Actionable negligence. See Actionable. —Collateral negligence. [Law: reasonable-person standard — negligence measured objectively]

Negligence is judged by the objective standard: the omission to do what a reasonable person, guided by the considerations ordinarily regulating human conduct, would do in the same situation.

Why: The entry states the classic reasonable-man definition; the objective-standard rule is the genuine doctrine the definition states, framed as [Law:] rather than quoted back.

The whole office of negotiability is the holder in due course: one who takes a negotiable instrument for value, in good faith, and without notice takes free of the transferor's personal defenses.

—Next devisee. By the term ‘‘first devisee” is ■understood the person to whom the estate is first given by toe will, while the term “next devisee” refers to the person to whom the remainder is given. Young v. Robinson, 5 N. J. Law, 689.— Next friend. The legal designa- tion of the person by whom an infant or other person disabled from suing in his own name brings and prosecutes an action either at law or in equity ; usually a relative. Strictly speaking, a next friend (or “prochein amp”) is not appointed by the court to bring or maintain the suit, but is simply one who volunteers for that purpose, and is merely admitted or permitted to sue in behalf of the infant ; but the practice of suing by a next friend has now been almost en- tirely superseded by the practice of appointing a guardian ad litem. See McKinney v. Jones, 55 Wis. 39. 11 N. W. 606 ; Guild v. Cranston. 8 Cush. (Mass.) 506 ; Tucker v. Dabbs, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 18; Leopold v. Meyer, 10 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 40.— Next of kin. Lat. In Roman law. In an- cient times the nexvm seems to have been a species of formal contract, involving a loan of money, and attended with peculiar conse- quences, solemnized with the “copper and bal- ance.” Later, it appears to have been used as a general term for any contract struck with those ceremonies, and hence to have included the special form of conveyance called “ mancipatio .” In a general sense it means the obligation or bond between con- tracting parties. See Maine, Anc. Law, 305, «f *eq.; Hadl. Rom. Law, 247.

In Roman law, this word expressed the tie or obligation Involved in the old conveyance by mancipatio; and came latterly to be used inter- changeably with (but less frequently than) the word “obligatio" itself. Brown.

NISI.

Lat Unless. The word is often affixed, as a kind of elliptical expression, to the words “rule,” “order,” “decree,” “Judg- ment,” or “confirmation,” to indicate that the adjudication spoken of is one' which is to stand as valid and operative unless the par- ty affected by it shall appear and show cause against it or take some other appro- priate step to avoid it or procure its revoca- tion. Thus a “decree nisi” is one which will definitely conclude the defendant’s rights unless, within the prescribed time, he shows cause to set it aside or successfully appeals. The word, in this sense, is opposed to “ab- solute.” And when a rule niti is finally con- firmed, for the defendant’s failure to show cause against it it is said to be “mude abso- lute.”

Only the injurious nuisance is remedied: a nocumentum damnosum — mere loss without legal injury — gives no action, while special damage beyond the public's makes the nuisance actionable.

NOLLE PROSEQUI.

Lat In practice. A formal entry upon the record, by the plaintiff in a civil suit or the prosecuting officer in a criminal action, by which he de- clares that he “will no further prosecute" the case, either as to some of the counts, or some of the defendants, or altogether. State v. Primm, 61 Mo. 171; Com. v. Casey, 12 Allen (Mass.) 214; Davenport v. Newton, 71 Vt 11, 42 Atl. 1087.

A nolle prosequi is in the nature of an ac- knowledgment or undertaking by the plaintiff in an action to forbear to proceed any farther either in the action altogether, or as to some part of it, or as to some of the defendants; and is different from a non pros., by which the plaintiff is put out of court with respect to all the defendants. Brown.

[Law] — Law

[Law: prosecutorial discretion — the nolle prosequi as formal discontinuance]

The prosecutor may formally declare that he will no further prosecute — as to counts, defendants, or the whole case — an exercise of the executive discretion over criminal prosecution.

Why: The entry defines the nolle prosequi as the prosecuting officer's declaration; prosecutorial discretion is the genuine doctrine the entry procedure expresses.

NOLO CONTENDERE.

Lat I will not contest it The name of a plea in a crim- inal action, having the same legal effect as a plea of guilty, so far as regards all pro- ceedings on the indictment and on which tlie defendant may be sentenced. U. S. v. Hartwell, 3 Cliff. 221, Fed. Can. No. 15.31R Like a demurrer this plea admits, for the puritoses of the case, all the facts which are well pleaded, but is not to be used as an admission elsewhere. Com. v. Tilton, 8 Mete. (Mass.) 232. Not available as an estoppel In a civil action. Com. v. Horton, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 208.

[Law] — Law

[Law: nolo contendere — conviction without collateral admission in civil proceedings]

Nolo contendere has the effect of a guilty plea for sentencing on the indictment, but it is not an admission of the facts usable against the defendant in a collateral civil action.

Why: The entry states the plea's dual effect itself; the note frames it as the genuine doctrine — punishment without estoppel — rather than quoting the entry back.

[Law: nominal damages — the law infers damage from invasion of a right]

A voluntary nonsuit is one incurred by the plaintiff’s own act or omission, and is a judgment entered against him as a conse- quence of his abandoning or not following up his cause, or being absent when his pres- ence is required. Sandoval v. Rosser, 86 Tex. 682, 26 S. W. 933; Deeley v. Heintz, 169 N. Y. 129, 62 N. E. 158 ; Boyce v. Snow. 88 111. App. 405.

An involuntary nonsuit is one which takes place when the plaintiff fails to nppear when his case Is before the court for trial or at the time when the Jury are to deliver their verdict, or when he has given no evidence on which a Jury may find a verdict, or when his case is put out of court by some adverse ruling which precludes a recovery. Boyce v. Snow, 187 111. 181, 58 N. E. 403; Deeley v. Heintz, 160 N. X. 120, 62 N. E. 158; Stults v. Forst, 135 Ind. 297, 34 N. E. 1125; Wil- liams v. Finks, 156 Mo. 597, 57 S. W. 732.

A peremptory nonsuit is a compulsory or involuntary nonsuit, ordered by the court upon a total failure of the plaintiff to sub- stantiate his claim by evidence. Jacques v. Fourthman, 137 Pa. 428, 20 Atl. 802.

A nonsuit is not a judgment on the merits and therefore does not bar the plaintiff from suing again on the same cause.

Why: Genuine because it states the entry's operative legal consequence — the whole point of a nonsuit versus a dismissal with prejudice — rather than restating the definition.

The lan- guage, having remained the same since the date of the Conquest, at which it was in- troduced into England, is very different from the French of this day, retaining all the pe- culiarities which at that time distinguished every province from the rest A peculiar mode of pronunciation (considered authentic) is handed down and preserved by the officials who have, on particular occasions, to speak the tongue. Norman French was the language of English legal procedure till the 36 Edw.

The maxim embedded in this entry, noscitur a sociis — 'the meaning of a word is known from the accompanying words' — is a genuine canon of construction cited by Black's itself from Broom's Maxims, 588.

Why: Genuine because the maxim is quoted at length in the entry and attributed to its own authorities (1 Vent. 225; 3 Term R. 87; Broom, Max. 588); the footnote documents the maxim the entry itself teaches rather than impo...

[Law] — Law

[Coffin v. United States, 156 U.S. 453 (1895)]

A verdict of not guilty vindicates the presumption that the accused is innocent until the prosecution proves guilt.

Why: Genuine because Coffin is the classic Supreme Court articulation of the presumption of innocence, which is the doctrinal ground of a not-guilty verdict; it illuminates the entry's function rather than restating it.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[1 John 1:9, KJV]

"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

Why: The verdict of acquittal answers confession: faithfulness and justice are reconciled in forgiveness. The entry

(paraphrase) The jury room deliberating its way to the 'not guilty' verdict — the form of verdict in criminal cases where the jury acquit the prisoner, dramatized in real time. (paraphrase)

Why: Entry names both the plea and the verdict form. The film is the canonical dramatization of a jury reaching 'not guilty.' Marked paraphrase.

NOT GUILTY BY STATUTE.

In Eng- lish practice. A plea of the general issue by a defendant in a civil action, when he intends to give special matter in evidence by virtue of some act or acts of parliament, in which case he must add the reference to such act or acts, and state whether such acts are public or otherwise. But, if a defendant so plend, he will not be allowed to plead any other defense, without the leave of the court or a judge. Mozley & Whitley.

NOT SATISFIED.

A return sometimes made by sheriffs or constables to a writ of execution; but it is not a technical formula, and is condemned by the courts as ambigu- ous and insufficient. See Martin v. Martin, 60 N. C. 346 ; Langford v. Few, 146 Mo. 142, 47 S. W. 927, 69 Am. St Rep. 606; Merrick v. Garter, 205 I1L 73, 68 N. B. 750.

NOT TRANSFERABLE.

[Law] — Law

[Law: UCC § 3-104 — negotiable instrument; must be payable to order or bearer]

Writing 'not transferable' across an instrument destroys negotiability because a negotiable instrument must be payable to order or bearer.

Why: Genuine because it states the operative rule that makes the entry's statement true; UCC § 3-104 is the real, current statement of the negotiability requirement the entry presupposes.

Why: The notary is the keeper of true instruments and measures; the entry's core duty is fidelity to authentic weights. The Torah/KJV proverbs on honest scales are the direct spiritual form of that office's duty.

NOTATION.

In English probate prac- tice, notation Is the act of making a memo- randum of some special circumstance on a probate or letters of administration. "And I subscribed the evidence, and sealed it, and took witnesses, and weighed him the money in the balances."

NOTICE.

Knowledge; Information; the result of observation, whether by the senses or the mind ; knowledge- of the existence of a fact or state of affairs; the means of knowledge. Used in this sense In such phras- es as “A. had notice of the conversion," “a purchaser without notice of fraud,” etc.

Notice is either (1) statutory, i. e., made so by legislative enactment; (2) actual, which brings the knowledge of a fact directly home to the party; or (3) constructive or implied, which is no more than evidence of facts which raise such a strong presumption of notice that equity will not allow the presumption to be rebutted. Constructive notice may be subdivided into: (a) Where there exists actual notice of matter, to which equity has added constructive notice of facts, which an inquiry after such matter would have elicited ; and (6) where there has been a designed abstinence from inquiry for the very purpose of escaping notice. Wharton.

In another sense, "notice" means Infor- mation of an act to be done or required to be done; as of a motion to be made, a trial to be had, a plea or answer to be put in, costs to be taxed, etc. In this sense, "notice" means an advice, or written warning, In more or less formal shape, intended to ap- prise a person of some proceeding in which his interests are Involved, or Informing him of some fact which it is his right to know and the duty of the notifying party to com- municate.

Classification. Notice is actual or construc- tive. Actual notice is notice expressly and actually given, and brought home to the party directly, in distinction from notice inferred or imputed by the law on acount of the existence of means of knowledge. Jordan v. Pollock, 14 Ga. 145; Johnson v. Dooly, 72 Ga. 297 ; Mor- ey v. Milliken, 86 Me. 404, 30 Atl. 102; Mc- Cray v. Clar, 82 Pa. 457; Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498; White v. Fisher, 77 Ind. 65. 40 Am. Rep. 287 ; Clark v. Lambert, 55 W. Va. 512, 47 S. E. 312. Constructive notice is in- formation or knowledge of a fact imputed by law to a person, (although he may not actually have it,) because he could have discovered the fact by proper diligence, and his situation was such as to cast upon him the duty of inquiring into it. Baltimore v. Whittington. 78 Md. 231, 27 Atl. 984; Wells v. Sheerer, 78 Ala. 142; Jordan v. Pollock, 14 Ga. 145 ; Jackson v. Waldstein (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 26: Acer v. Westcott, 46 N. Y. 384, 7 Am. Rep. 355. Further as to the distinction between actual and constructive notice, see Baltimore v. Whit- tington. 78 Md. 231, 27 Atl. 984: Thomas v. Flint, 123 Mich. 10, 81 N. W. 936, 47 L. R.

A. 499; Vaughn v. Tracy, 22 Mo. 420.

Notice is also further classified as express or implied. Express notice embraces not only knowledge, but also that which ia communicated by direct Information, either written or oral, from those who are cognizant of the fact com- municated. Baltimore v. Whittington, 78 Md. 281, 27 Atl. 084. 'Implied notice is one of the varietiea of actual notice (not constructive) and is distinguished from "express'' actual notice. It is notice inferred or imputed to a party by reason of his knowledge of facts or circum- stances collateral to the main fact, of such a character as to put him upon inquiry, and which, if the inquiry were followed up with due diligence, would lead him definitely to the knowledge of the main fact Uliodes v. Outcalt, 48 Mo. 370; Baltimore v. Whittington, 78 Md. 231, 27 Atl. 984; Wells v. Sheerer, 78 Ala. 147. Or as otherwise defined, implied notice may be said to exist where the fact in question lies open to the knowledge of the party, so that the exercise of reasonable observation and watcbfulnss would not fail to apprise him of it, although no one has told him of it in so many words. See Philadelphia v. Smith (Pa.) 16 Atl. 493.

R. A. 623, 61 Am. St. Rep. 30. — Legal notice. Such notice as is adequate in point of law ; such notice as the law requires to be given for the specific purpose or in the particular case. See Sanborn v. Piper, 64 N. H. 335, 10 Atl. 680; People's Bank v. Ktting, 17 Phila. (Pa.) 285. — Notice, averment of. In pleading. The allegation in a pleading that notice lias been gryen. — Notice In lien of servloe. In lieu of personally serving a writ of summons (or other legal process.) in English practice, the court occasionally allows the plaintiff (or other party) to give notice in lieu of service, such no- tice being such as will in ail probability reach the party. This notice is peculiarly appropriate in the case of a foreigner out of the jurisdiction, whom it is desired to serve with a writ of sum- mons. Sweet.— Notice of action. When it is intended to sue certain particular individuals, as in the case of actions against justices of the peace, it is necessary in some jurisdictions to give them notice of the action some time before. —Notice of appearance. The time allowed for taking an appeal runs from such notice.— Notion of motion. A no- tice in writing, entitled in a cause, stating that, on a certain day designated, a motion will be made to the court for the purpose or object stated. Field v. Park. 20 Johns. (N. X.) 140. — Notice of trial. A notice given by one of the parties in an action to the other, after an issue has been reached, that he intends to bring the cause forward for trial at the next term of the court.— Notice to admit. In the practice of the English high court, either party to an action may call on the other party by notice to admit the existence and execution of any document, in order to save the expense of prov- ing it at the trial ; and the party refusing to admit must bear the costs of proving it unless the judge certifies that the refusal to admit was reasonable. No costs of proving a document will in general be allowed, unless such a notice is given. Rules of Court, xxxii. 2; Sweet.— No- tice to plead. This is a notice which, in the practice of some states, is prerequisite to the taking judgment by default. It proceeds from the plaintiff, and warns the defendant that he must plead to the declaration or complaint with- in a prescribed time.— Notice to produce. In practice. See Ixieh v. Huddleston, 105 Ala. 257, 16 South. 714 ; Pearson v. Lovejoy, 53 Barb. (N. X.) 407.— Presumptive notice. Implied actual notice. [Axiom: a bona fide purchaser for value without notice takes free of prior equitable interests]

The doctrine turns on the bona fide purchaser: one who takes for value without notice of a prior claim takes free of it.

Why: Genuine because the entry's elaborate taxonomy of statutory, actual, and constructive notice exists to serve exactly this consequence; it states the principle the definition is built for, not a paraphrase.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 8:34, KJV]

"Blessed is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates, waiting at the posts of my doors."

[Maxim: Notitia dicitur a noscendo; at notitia non debet claudicare — notice is named from knowledge, and notice ought not to halt]

The entry quotes Coke's maxim that notice is named from knowledge and 'ought not to halt,' i.e., be imperfect.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from the entry's own authority (6 Coke, 29); the footnote records the maxim Black's itself cites rather than importing one.

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 201 — judicial notice of adjudicative facts]

Proof by notoriety is the ancestor of judicial notice: courts dispense with proof of matters of common knowledge.

Why: Entry: the state of being notorious or universally well known. The preface line is the classic literary statement of notoriety as a condition. Short verbatim quote, certain.

NOTORIOUS.

In the law of evidence, matters deemed notorious do not require to be proved. There does not seem to be any recognized rule as to what matters are deem- ed notorious. —Notorious Insolvency. A condition of in- solvency which is generally known throughout the community or known to the general class of persons with whom the insolvent has busi- ness relations.— Notorious possession. In the rule that a prescriptive title must be founded on open and “notorious" adverse possession, this term means that the possession or character of the holding must in its nature possess such elements of notoriety that the owner may be presumed to have notice of it and of its extent. [Law] — Law

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 201 — judicial notice of adjudicative facts]

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Romans 13:7, KJV]

"Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour."

Why: The entry defines nova custuma as a new imposition or duty; 'custom to whom custom' is the scriptural command of the same duty owed to the sovereign. Reported instruction, not deity speech — no flag.

[Matthew 22:21, KJV]

"Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's."

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Leviticus 25:4, KJV]

"But in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land, a sabbath for the LORD: thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard."

Why: The entry is land rested from tillage by legal rule; the sabbath of the land is its scriptural form — rest commanded for the soil itself. Reported divine law, not first-person divine speech — no flag.

NOVATION.

Novation Is the substitu- tion of a new debt or obligation for an exist- ing one. Civ. Code Cal. § 1530; Civ. Code Dak. | 863; Hard v. Burton, 62 Vt. 314, 20 Atl. 269; McCartney v. Kipp, 171 Pa. 644, 33 Atl. 233; McDonnell v. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co., 85 Ala. 401, 5 South. 120 ; Shafer’s Appeal, 99 Pa. 246.

Novation is a contract, consisting of two stipulations, — one to extinguish an existing obligation; the other to substitute a new one in its place. Civ. Code La. art. 2185.

The term was originally a technical term of the civil law, but is now in very general use in English and American jurisprudence.

In the civil law, there are three kinds of nova- tion: (1) Where the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new debt takes the place of the old one ; (2) where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted ; (3) where the debt and debtor remain, but a new creditor is substituted. Adams v. Power, 48 Miss. 451.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Novatio non praesumitur — novation is not presumed]

Novation is not presumed; the intention to substitute a new obligation for the old must appear.

Why: Genuine because the maxim is the governing Roman-law rule of novation, quoted in the neighboring entry

NOVELLAS, (or NOVELLAS CONSTI- TUTIONES.) After his death, a col- lection of 168 Novels was made, 154 of which had been issued by Justiuian, and the rest by his successors. These were afterwards included in the Corpus Juris Civilis, (q. v.,) and now constitute one of its four prin- cipal divisions. Mackeld. Rom. Law, | 80; 1 Kent, Comm. 541.

NOVELTY.

An objection to a patent or claim for a patent on the ground that the invention is not new or original is called an objection “for want of novelty."

[Law] — Law

[Law: 35 U.S.C. § 102 — conditions for patentability; novelty]

Novelty is the threshold condition of patentability: an invention already known or used cannot be patented.

Why: Genuine because the entry's 'want of novelty' objection is precisely the § 102 novelty bar; it names the statute the definition presupposes.

Lat In the civil law. A step-mother.

[Perrault, Cendrillon (Histoires ou contes du temps passé), 1697]

(paraphrase) Cinderella's stepmother — the fairy-tale noverca, the civil law's word for stepmother wearing a story's face. (paraphrase)

NOVERZNT UNIVEKSI PER PRJE- / BENTES.

Know all men by these presents. Formal words used at the commencement of deeds of release in the Latin forms.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Daniel 3:4, KJV]

"Then an herald cried aloud, To you it is commanded, O people, nations, and languages."

Why: 'Know all men by these presents' is the formal deed-opening addressed to all; the herald's cry to all peoples in Daniel is the scriptural form of such a public proclamation. Narrative, not deity speech — no flag.

NOVI OPERXS NUNCIATIO.

Lat De- nunciation of, or protest against a new work. This was a species of remedy in the civil law, available to a person who thought his rights or bis property were threatened with injury by the act of his nelgbber in erecting or demolishing any structure, (which was called a “new work." In such case, he might go upon the ground, while the work was in progress, and publicly protest against or forbid its completion, in the presence of the workmen or of the owner or bis repre- sentative.

NOVI GELD.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 6:31, KJV]

"But if he be found, he shall restore sevenfold; he shall give all the substance of his house."

Why: The entry is manifold pecuniary satisfaction for an injury — ninefold in Saxon law; sevenfold restitution for theft is its biblical twin. Not deity speech — no flag.

[Maxim: Novitas non tam utilitate prodest quam novitate perturbat — a novelty does not benefit so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty]

The entry quotes Jenkyns' maxim that a novelty 'does not benefit so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty.'

Why: Genuine because the maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry from the entry's own authority (Jenk. Cent. p. 167, case 23); the footnote records Black's own cited maxim rather than importing one.

NOVODAKUB.

In old Scotch law. (We give anew.) The name given to a charter, or clause in a charter, granting a renewal of a right Bell.

Novum judicium non dot nonun Jm, sod deolant antiquum; quia judicium ost juris dictum •« per judicium jus est noviter revela turn quod din fuit vela- 4am. [Law] — Law

[Maxim: Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum — a new adjudication does not make a new law, but declares the old]

The entry quotes the maxim that a new adjudication does not make new law but declares the old — the declaratory theory of adjudication.

Why: Genuine because the maxim is quoted in the entry itself; it states the declaratory theory under which courts discover rather than make law, illuminating why a renewed charter (novodamus) re-declares rather than re-cre... [Scripture] — Scripture

[2 Corinthians 5:17, KJV]

"Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

Why: The entry applies 'new man' to the pardoned criminal; the verse is the spiritual form of the same figure — pardon making the man new. Paul's epistle, not deity speech — no flag.

NONA.

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

Lat In the civil law. This term denoted any damage or Injury done to persons or property by an unlawful act com- mitted by a man’s slave or animal. An ac- tion for damages lay against tbe master er owner, who, however, might escape further responsibility by delivering up the offending agent to the party Injured. “Woxo” was al- so used as the designation of the offense committed, and of its punishment and some- times of the slave or animal doing the dam- age.

Noxm acquitur caput. The injury [(. a., liability to make good an Injury caused by a slave] follows the head or person, [I. e., at- taches to his master.] Helnecc. Elem. L 4, t & I 1231.

"But if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death."

Why: The entry is the master's liability for harm done by his animal; the goring-ox law states the same rule: a known-dangerous beast unkept makes the owner answerable. Third-person legal command, not first-person divine s…

NOXAL ACTION.

An action for dam- age done by slaves or irrational animals. Sandars, Just Inst (6th Ed.) 467.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 21:30, KJV]

"But if there be laid on him a sum of money, then he shall give for the ransom of his life whatsoever is laid upon him."

Why: The noxal action makes the master answer in money for the harm done by his beast or slave; the goring-ox law lays exactly that ransom on the owner. Third-person legal command, not first-person divine speech — no flag.

NOXALI8 ACTIO.

Lat In the Civil law. An action which lay against the mas- ter' of a slave, for some offense (as theft or robbery) committed .or damage or injury done by the slave, which was called “noxa.” Usually translated “noxal action.”

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Nuda pactio obligationem non parit — a naked agreement does not beget an obligation]

The entry quotes the Roman maxim that a naked agreement — one without consideration — does not beget an obligation.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Dig. 2,14,7,4 and Broom, Max. 746; it states the consideration requirement, the operative rule behind unenforceable bare promises.

NUDA PATIENTIA.

Lat. Mere suf- ferance.

NUDA POSSE8SIO.

Lat. Bare or mere possession.

[Maxim: Nuda ratio et nuda pactio non ligant aliquem debitorem — naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor]

The entry quotes Fleta's maxim that naked reason and naked promise bind no debtor.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25; the same consideration doctrine that defines the entry's subject of bare possession and bare promise.

NUDE.

Naked. This word is applied metaphorically to a variety of subjects to indicate that they are lacking in some essen- tial legal requisite.

— Nude contract. One made without any consideration ; upon which no action will lie, in conformity with the maxim “ex nudo pacta non oritur actio." 2 Bl. Comm. 445.— Nnde matter. A bare allegation of a thing done, unsupported by evidence.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio — from a naked pact no action arises]

The entry quotes the maxim that from a naked pact no action arises — the consideration rule stated negatively.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 2 Bl. Comm. 445; it is the operative maxim defining the entry's 'nude contract' (one made without consideration).

NUDUM FACTUM.

The entry quotes the maxim defining nudum pactum: where no cause underlies the agreement beyond the convention itself it is a naked pact; where a cause underlies it, obligation and action follow.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry; it states the consideration rule that makes the entry's subject operative in American law, reinforced by the entry's own cited cases (Justice v. Lang; Wardell v. Wil...

[Law] — Law

[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803)]

A legislative act repugnant to the Constitution is void — the classic ground on which a statute is 'nugatory.'

^Classification. Nuisances are commonly classed as public and private, to which is sometimes added a third class called mixed. A pub- lic nuisance is one which affects an indefinite number of persons, or all the residents of a particular locality, or all people coming within the extent of its range or operation, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflict- ed upon individuals may be unequal; and hence, though only a few persons may be actually Injured or annoyed at any* given time, it is none the less a public nuisance if of such a character that it must or will injure or an- noy all that portion of the. general public which may be compelled to come into contact with it, or within the range of its influence. See Burn- ham V. Hotchkiss, 14 Conn. 317; Chesbrough v. Com’rs, 37 Ohio St. 508; Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 30, 21 Am. Dec. 89; Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668, 38 Atl. 703; Kelley v. New York, 6 Misc. Rep. 516, 27 N.

Y. Supp. 164; Kissel v. Lewis, 156 Ind. 233, 59 N. E. 478 ; Burlington v. Stockwell, 5 Kan. App. 569, 47 Pac. 988; Jones v. Cbanute, 63 Kan. 243, 65 Pac. 243; Civ. Code Cal. g 3480. A private nuisance was originally defined as anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. 3 Bi. Comm. 216. But the modern definition includes any wrongful act which destroys or deteriorates the property of another or interferes with his lawful use or enjoyment thereof, or any act which unlawfully hinders him in the enjoyment of a common or public right and causes him a special injury. Therefore, although the ground bf distinction between pub- lic and private nuisances is still the injury to the community at large or, on the other hand, to a single individual, It is evident that the same thing or. act may constitute a public nui- sance and at the same time a private nuisance, being the latter as to any person who sustains from it, in his person or property, a special injury different from that of the general pub- lic. See Heeg v. Licht, 80 N. Y. 582. 36 Am. Rep. 654; BaHzeger v. Carolina Midland R. Co., 54 S. C. 242, 32 S. E. 358, 71 Am. St. Rep. 789 ; Kavanagh v. Barber. 131 N. Y. 211, 30 N. E. 235, 15 L. R. NULLITY.

Nothing; no proceeding; an act or proceeding In a cause which the op- posite party may treat as though it had not taken place, or which has absolutely no legal force or effect Salter v. HUgen, 40 Wis. 363; Jenness v. Lapeer County Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 469, 4 N. W. 220 ; Johnson v. Hines, 61 Md. 122.

—Absolute anility. In Spanish law, nullity is either absolute or relative. The former is that which arises from the law, whether civil or criminal, the principal motive for which Is the public interest, while the latter is that which affects one certain individual. Sunol ▼. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 281. No such distinction, however, is recognized in American law, and the term “absolute nullity” is used more for emphasis than as indicating a degree of invalid- ity. As to the ratification or subsequent valida- tion of “absolute nullities,” see Means v. Rob- inson, 7 Tex. 502, 516. — Nullity of marriage. The entire invalidity of a supposed, pretended, or attempted marriage, by reason of relation- ship or incapacity of the parties or other diri- ment impediments. An action seeking a decree declaring such an assumed marriage to be null and void is called a suit of “nullity of mar- riage.” It differs from an action for divorce, because the latter supposes the existence of a valid and lawful marriage. [Maxim: Nullius hominis auctoritas apud nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequamur si quis attulerit — the authority of no man ought to prevail with us so as to prevent our following better opinions if anyone should present them]

The entry quotes Coke's rule of legal reasoning: no man's authority ought to prevail against better opinions.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Co. Litt. 383b; it is recorded as the entry's own cited authority on the method of legal argument, not as a comment on bastardy.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 23:2, KJV]

"A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the LORD; even to his tenth generation shall he not enter into the congregation of the LORD."

Why: The entry is the legal status of the bastard — 'the son of nobody'; the verse states that status's scriptural consequence in the congregation. Moses' law, third person — no flag.

[Shakespeare, The Taming of the Shrew, c. 1594]

(paraphrase) Kate's closing speech lays out the period doctrine of wifely obedience — compliance with commands prescribed by authority, preached at length as duty. (paraphrase)

Why: The entry defines obedience as compliance with a command, prohibition, or known rule of duty prescribed by authority; the speech is the era's doctrine of obedience in dramatic form. Marked paraphrase — no verbatim claim.

OBEDIENTIA.

An office, or the admin- istration of it ; a kind of rent ; submission ; obedience.

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Obedientia est legis essentia — obedience is the essence of law]

The entry quotes Coke's maxim that obedience is the essence of law.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 11 Coke, 190; recorded as the entry's own cited authority — the classical statement of law's claim to be obeyed.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ecclesiastes 12:13, KJV]

"Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man."

Why: The entry's maxim is 'Obedience is the essence of law'; the Preacher's conclusion makes obedience — fearing God and keeping commandments — the whole duty of man. Not deity speech — no flag.

OBEDIENTIABIUS.

A monastic officer. Du Cange.

OBIT SINE PROLE.

Lat. ' [He] died without issue. Yearb. M. 1 Edw. II. 1.

"If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger: her husband's brother shall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of an husband's brother unto her."

Why: The entry is the legal state of dying without issue; the levirate law opens on exactly that contingency — a brother dead with no child — and orders the remedy. Third-person law — no flag.

OBIT.

In old English law. A funeral solemnity, or office for the dead. Cowell. The anniversary of a person’s death ; the an- niversary office. Cro. Jac. 51.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Genesis 50:10, KJV]

"And they came to the threshingfloor of Atad, which is beyond Jordan, and there they mourned with a great and very sore lamentation: and he made a mourning for his father seven days."

Why: The entry is the funeral solemnity — the office for the dead; the seven days' mourning for Jacob is its scriptural form. Narrative, not deity speech — no flag.

OBITER.

Lat. By the way ; in passing ; incidentally ; collaterally.

^-Obiter dictum. A remark made, or opin- ion expressed, by a judge, in his decision upon a cause, “by the way,’’ that is, incidentally or collaterally, and not directly upon -the question before him, or upon a point not necessarily in- volved in the determination of the cause, or introduced by way of illustration, or analogy or argument.

OBJECT, n. This term “includes what- ever is presented to the mind, as well as what may be presented to the senses; whatever,- also, is acted upon, or operated upon, ■ af- firmatively, or intentionally Influenced by anything done, moved, or applied thereto.” Woodruff, J„ Wells v. Shook, 8 Blatchf. 257, Fed. Cas. No. 17,406.

—Object ot an action. The thing sought to be obtained by the action ; the remedy demanded or the relief or recovery sought or prayed for ; not the same thing as the cause of action or the subject of the action. Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 406; Lassiter v. Norfolk & C. It Co.,' 136 N. C. 89, 48 S. B. 643.— Object of a stat- ute. The "object” of a statute is the aim or purpose of the enactment, the end or design which it is meant to accomplish, while the “sub- ject” is the matter to which it relates and with which it deals. [Law] — Law

An obiter dictum is not binding: only the ratio decidendi — the reason necessary to the decision — carries precedential force.

Why: Genuine because the entry defines obiter dictum as remarks made incidentally and 'not directly upon the question'; the axiom states the precedential consequence the definition presupposes.

OBJURGATRICES.

In old English law.: Scolds or unquiet women, punished with the cucking-stool.

OBLATA.

Gifts or offerings made to the king by any of his subjects; old debts, brought, as It were, together from preceding years, and put on the present sheriff’s charge. Wharton.

Why: Oblata are gifts or offerings made to the king; the Magi's presentation of gifts to the newborn King is the concept's scriptural form. Narrative, not deity speech — no flag.

Why: The oblati were voluntary slaves of churches or monasteries; the law of the Hebrew servant who chooses perpetual service for love is the biblical form of voluntary bondage. Third-person law — no flag.

OBLATIO.

Lat In the civil law. A tender of money in payment of a debt made by debtor to creditor. Whatever is offered to the church by the pious. Galvin.

[2 Corinthians 9:7, KJV]

"Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver."

OBLIGATE.

To bind or constrain; to bind to the observance or performance of a duty.; to place under an obligation. To bind one’s self by an obligation or promise ; to as- sume a duty ; to execute a written promise or covenant; to make a writing obligatory. Wachter v. Famachon, 62 Wis. 117, 22 N. Why: To obligate is to bind; Christ's words give the binding act its highest form — what is bound on earth is bound in heaven. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

OBLIGATIO.

Lat In Roman law. The legal relation existing between two fcertaln persons whereby one (the creditor) is au- thorized to demand of the other (the debtor) a certain performance which has a money vfdue. In this sense obligatio signifies not only the duty of the debtor, but also the right of the creditor. The fact establishing such claim and debt, .as also the instrument evi- dencing it, is termed “obligation.” Mackeld. Rom. Law,, f 360.

That legal relation subsisting between two persons by which one is bound to the other for a certain performance. The passive re- lation sustained by the debtor to the creditor is likewise called an "obligation.” Some- times, also, the term "obligatio" is used for the causa obligation is, and the contract it- self is designated an "obligation.” There are passages in which even the document which affords the prbof of a contract Is call- ed an “obligation.” Such applications, however, are but a loose extension of the term, which, according to its true idea, is only prop- erly employed when it is used to denote the debt relationship, in its totality, active and passive, subsisting between the creditor and the debtor. Tomk. A J. Mod. Rom. Law, 301.

Obligations, ' in the civil law, are of the several descriptions enumerated below.

Obligatio civilii is an obligation enforceable by action, whether it derives its origin from jut 0* vile, as the obligation engendered by formal contracts or the obligation, enforceable by bilat- erally penal suits, or from Buck portion of the iut gentium as had been completely naturalized In the civil law and protected by all its reme- dies, such as the obligation engendered by form- less contracts.

Obligatio naturalit is an obligation not imme- diately enforceable by action, or an obligation imposed by that portion of the jut gentium which is only imperfectly recognized by civil law.

Obligatio ex contractu, an obligation arising from contract, or an antecedent jut in perto- nam. In this there are two stages.— first, a pri- mary or sanctioned personal right antecedent to wrong, and, afterwards, a secondary or sanc- tioning personal right consequent on a wrong. Poste's Galus’ Inst. 359.

Obligatio ex delicto, an obligation founded on wrong or tort, or arising from the invasion of a jut in rent. In this there is the second stage, a secondary or sanctioning personal right con- sequent on a wrong, but the first stage is not a personal right, (jut in p ertonam,) but a real right, (jut «» rent,) whether a primordial right right or statue, or of property. Poste’s Gains Inst. 359.

Obligationet ex delicto are obligations arising from the commission of a wrongful injury to the person or property of another. “Delictum” is not exactly synonymous with “tort,” for, while it includes most of the wrongs known to the common law as torts, it is also wide enough to cover some offenses (snch as theft and rob- bery) primarily injurious to the individual, but now only punished as crimes. Such acts gave rise to an obligatio, which consisted in the lia- bility to pay damages.

Obligationet quasi em contractu. Often per- sons who have not contracted with each other, under a certain state of facts, are regarded by the Roman law as if they had actually conclud- ed a convention between themselves. The legal relation which then takes place between these persons, which has always a similarity to a con- tract obligation, is therefore termed “ obligatio guati ex contractu." Snch a relation arises from the conducting of affairs without authority, (n egotiorum gestioj) from the management of property that is in common when the community arose from casualty, (communit incident ;) from the payment of what was not due, (tolutio in- dsbiti ;) from tutorship and curatorship ; and from taking possession of an inheritance. Mack- eld. Rom. Law, { 491.

Obligationet guati em delicto. This class em- braces all torts not coming under the denomina- tion of “ delicto ” and not having a special form of action provided for them by law. They dif- fered widely in character, and at common laW would in some cases give rise to an action on the case; in others to an action on an implied contract. Ort. Inst f| 1781-1792.

OBLIGATION.

An obligation is a legal duty, by which a person is bound to do or not to do a certain thing. Civ. Code OaL $ 1427 : Civ. Code Dnk. { 798. •

The binding power of a vow, promise, oath, or contract, or of law, civil, political, or moral, Independent of a promise; that which constitutes legal or moral duty, and which renders a person liable to coercion and pun- ishment for neglecting It Webster.

“Obligation" is the correlative of “right." Taking the latter word in its politico-ethical sense, as a power of free action lodged in a per- son, “obligation” is the corresponding duty, con- straint', ot binding force which should prevent all other persons from denying, abridging, or ob- structing such right, or interfering with its ex- ercise. And the same' is its meaning as the cor- relative of a “jut in rem." Taking “right” as meaning a “jut in peraonam," (a power, demand, claim, or privilege inherent in one person, and incident upon another,) the “obligation” is tho coercive force or control imposed upon tho per- son of incidence by the moral law and the posi- tive law, (or the moral law as recognized and sanctioned by the positive law,) constraining him to accede to the demand, render up the thing claimed, pay the money due, or otherwise perform what is expected of him with respect to the subject-matter of the right.

In a limited and arbitrary sense, it means a penal bond or “writing obligatory," that is, a bond containing a penalty, with a con- dition annexed for the payment of money or performance of covenants. Co. Litt. 172.

Obligation is (1) legal or moral duty, as op- posed to physical compulsion ; (2) a duty in- cumbent upon an individual, or a specific and limited number of individuals, as opposed to a duty imposed upon the world at large; (3) the right to enforce such a duty, (jut in pertonam,) as opposed to such a right as that of property, (jut in rem,) which avails against the world at large; (4) a bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed, for the payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like. Mozley ft Whitley.

In English expositions of the Roman law, and works upon general jurisprudence, “ob- ligation” is used to translate the Latin “o6- linatio." In this sense its meaning is much wider than as a technical term of English law. See Obligatio.

Classification. The various sorts of obliga- tions may be classified and defined as follows: They are either perfect or imperfect. A perfect obligation is one recognized and sanctioned by positive law ; one of which the fulfillment can be enforced by the aid of the law. Aycock ▼. Martin, 37 Ga. 124, 92 Am. Dec. 60. But if the duty created by the obligation operates only on the moral sense, without being enforced by any positive law, it is called an “imperfect ob- ligation," and creates no right of action, nor has it any legal operation. The duty of exerj rising gratitude, charity, and the other merely moral duties is an example of this kind of obli- gation. ' Civ. Code La. art. 1757 : Edwards v. Kearaey, 96 TJ. S. 600, 24 L. Ed. 793.

They are either natural or ciriJ. A natural obligation is one which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and according to natural justice. Blair v. Williams, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 41. A civil obligation is a legal tie. which gives the party with whom it is contracted the right of enforcing its performance by law. Civ. Code La. art. 1757; Poth. Obi. 173. 191.

They are either express or implied; the for- mer being those by which the obligor binds him- self in express terms to perform his obligation; while the latter are such as are raised by the implication or inference of the law from the nature of the transaction.

They are determinate or indeterminate ; the former being the caae where the thing contracted to be delivered is specified as an individual ; the latter, where it may be any one of a particu- lar class or species.

They are divisible or indivisible, according as the obligation may or may not be lawfully brok- en into several distinct obligations without the consent of the obligor.

They are joint or several; the former, where there are two or more obligors binding them-) selves jointly for the performance of the obliga- tion; the latter, where the obligors promise,- each for himself, to fulfill the engagement. - f

They are personal or real; the formerv being* the case when the obligor bintBeif is personally* liable for the performance of the engagement^ but does not directly bind his property : the lat- ter, where real estate, not the person of the obr ligor, is primarily liable for performance. ,

They are heritable or personal. The former, Is the case when the heirs and assigns of ona party may enforce the. performance against the heirs of the other; the latter, wbehtbe obligor binds himself only, not his heirs or representa-i tives. ■ ■ : 6 b ,

They are either principal or atoettortp. ■ A) principal obligation is one which Is the most im- portant object of the engagement of ■ the con* trading parties ; while an accessory obligation depends upon or is collateral to the principal. •

They may be either conjunctive or alternative^ The former is one in which the several objects In It are connected by a copulative, or in any; other manner which shows that all of them arq severally comprised in the contract. This, con- tract creates as many different obligations as there are different objects ; and the debtor; when he wishes to discharge himself, -macy force the creditor to receive them separately;' ■ But where the things which form the object of this contract are separated by a disjunctive, them the obligation is alternative. A promise to deliver.a> certain thing or to pay a specified’ sum of money, is an example of this kind of obligation. 'Civ; Code La. art. 2063;

They are either simple or conditional,'. Simple obligations are such as are not dependent for their execution on any . event provided, for by the parties, and which are not agreed to become void on the happening of any snch event Coh-i ditional obligations are such as are made tor depend on an uncertain event If the obliga- tion is not to take effect until the event happens,' it is a suspensive condition ; if the obligation takes effect immediately, bnt la liable to be de- feated when the event happens, it is then area- olutory condition. Civ. Code La. arts.: 2020. 2021; Moss v. Smoker. 2 Lai Ann. 989. !

They may be either tingle or penal; the lattefc1 when a penal clanse is attached to the undertake ing. to be enforced in case .the obligor fails to perform; the former, when, bo such penalty is added. '

Other compound and descriptive terms- — Moral obligation. A duty which is' valid and binding in the forum of the conscience but is not recognized by the law as adequate ,to set in motion the machinery of justice ; that is, one which rests upon ethical consideration^ alone, and is not imposed or enforced by post-f tive law. [Scripture] — Scripture

[Ecclesiastes 5:4, KJV]

"When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou hast vowed."

Why: The entry names the binding power of vow, promise, oath, and contract; the verse states that power directly — a vow made must be paid. Not deity speech — no flag.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Exodus 32:33, KJV]

"And the LORD said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book."

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Orwell, Nineteen Eighty-Four, 1949]

The entry defines obreption as acquisition by fraud; the governing principle is that fraud vitiates every transaction it touches.

Why: Genuine because it states the operative legal consequence of obtaining a thing by fraud or false representations (the entry's definition), in axiom form to avoid fabricating a Latin citation.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Proverbs 20:17, KJV]

"Bread of deceit is sweet to a man; but afterwards his mouth shall be filled with gravel."

Why: Obreption is acquisition by false representations; the proverb traces the same gain — deceit sweet in the getting, gravel in the keeping. Not deity speech — no flag.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 5:17, KJV]

"Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil."

"But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints; Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks."

Why: The entry defines the obscene as what shocks the moral sense by disregard of chastity; the epistle sets the scriptural standard — filthiness and foolish talking not once named among saints. Not deity speech — no flag.

OBSCENITY.

The character or quality of being obscene ; conduct tending to corrupt tbe public morals by its indecency or lewd- ness. State v. Pfenninger, 76 Mo. App. 813;

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Ephesians 4:29, KJV]

"Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers."

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Deuteronomy 6:3, KJV]

"Hear therefore, O Israel, and observe to do it; that it may be well with thee."

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 24:35, KJV]

"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

OBSTA PRINCIPIIS.

Lat. Withstand beginnings; resist the first approaches or encroachments. “It is the duty of courts to be 'watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen, and against any stealthy en- croachments thereon. Their motto should be 'Obtta principiis.’ ” Bradley, J., Boyd v.

[Law] — Law

[Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 635 (1886)]

The entry quotes Justice Bradley's charge that courts must be 'watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen, and against any stealthy encroachments thereon' — 'Obsta principiis.'

Why: Genuine because the maxim is embedded in the entry as a verbatim quotation from the entry's own cited Supreme Court authority; recorded, not imported.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[James 4:7, KJV]

"Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you."

Why: The maxim is 'withstand beginnings' — resist the first encroachments; the verse is the scriptural form of that resistance, met at the approach. Not deity speech — no flag.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Maxim: Ovid, Remedia Amoris 91]

Maxim: “Principiis obsta, sero medicina paratur” — “Resist the beginnings; the medicine is prepared too late once the disease has grown strong.”

Why: The entry quotes Bradley J. invoking 'Obsta principiis' as a judicial motto; the annotation supplies the classical source of the motto itself — Ovid's line on withstanding beginnings. Genuine attribution, no invention.

OCCUPANCY.

Occupancy Is a inode of acquiring property- by which a thing which belongs to nobody becomes the property of the person who took possession of It, with the intention of acquiring a right of owner- ship in it. Civ. Code La. art. 3412; God- dard v. WlncheU, 86 Iowa, 71, 52 N. W. 1124, 17 L. R. A. 788, 41 Am. St Rep. 481.

The taking possession of things which be- fore belonged to nobody, with an Intention of appropriating them to' one’s own use.

‘‘Possession” and "occupancy,” when applied to land, are nearly synonymous terms, and may exist through a tenancy. Thus, occupancy of a homestead, such as will satisfy the statute, may be by means other than that of actual residence on the premises by the widow or child. Walters v. People, 21 111. 17&

There is a use of the word in public-land laws, homestead laws, “occupyiqg-clafmant” laws, cas- es of landlord and tenant, and like connections, which seems to require the broader sense of possession, although there is. in most of these uses, a shade of meaning discarding any prior title as a foundation of right Perhaps both uses or views may be harmonized, by saying that in jurisprudence occupancy or occupation is pos- session, presented independent of the idea of a chain of title, of any earlier owner. Or "occu- pancy” and “occupant” might be used for as-* suming property which has no owner, and "oc- cupation and "occupier” for the more genera! idea of possession. Judge Bouvier’s definitions seem partly founded on such a distinction, and there are indications of it in English usage. It dogs not appear generally drawn in American books. Abbott.

[Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (N.Y. 1805)]

Occupancy as a mode of acquiring ownerless things is governed by the capture rule: pursuit alone is not possession; occupancy requires actual control.

Why: Genuine because Pierson is the classic American case on acquisition by occupancy (the fox-hunt), stating the rule the entry's definition of occupancy presupposes.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Joshua 1:3, KJV]

"Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you."

Why: Occupancy acquires by taking possession with intent to own; the verse makes treading — entry and possession — the very mode of acquisition. First-person divine speech ('have I given') — flagged per the red-letter rule.

At common law where a man was tenant pur autre viet or had an es- tate granted to himBelf only (Without mention- ing his heirs) for the life of another man, and died without alienation during the life of cestui que vie, or him by whose life it was holden, he that could first enter on the land might lawfully retain the possession, so long as cestui que vis lived, by right of occupancy, and was hence termed a .“general” or common “occupant.” 1 Steph. OFFICE.

“Office” ls defined to be a right to exercise a public or private employment, and to take the fees and emoluments there- unto belonging, whether public, as those of magistrates, or private, as of bailiffs, re- ceivers, or the like. 2 Bl. Comm. 36. Row- land v. New York, 83 N. Y. 372; Dailey v. State, 8 Blackf. (Iud.) 330; Blair v. Marye, 80 Va. 495; Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N. C. 202; People v. Duane, 121 N. Y. 367, 24 N.

E. 845; U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. 393, 18

L. Ed. 830.

That function by virtue whereof a person has some employment in the affairs of an- other, whether judicial, ministerial, legisla- tive, municipal, ecclesiastical, etc. Cowell.

An employment on behalf of the govern- ment in any station or public trust, not merely transient, occasional, or Incidental. In re Attorneys’ Oaths, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 493.

The most frequent occasions to use the word arise with reference to a duty and power conferred on an individual by the government; and, when this is the connection, “public office” is a usual and more discriminating expression. But a power and duty may exist without immediate grant from government, and may be properly called an “office;” as the office of executor, the office of steward. Here the individual acts towards legatees or towards tenants in per- formance of a duty, and in exercise of a power not derived from their consent, but devolved on him by an authority which quoad hoo is supe- rior. Abbott.

Offices may be classed as civil and military; and civil offices may be classed as political, judicial, and ministerial. Political offices are such as are not connected immediately with the ad- ministration of justice, or the execution of the mandates of a superior officer. Judicial arte those which relate to the administration of jus- tice. Ministerial are those which give the of- ficer no power to judge of the matter to be done, and require him to obey the mandates of a su- perior. It is a general rule that a judicial of- fice cannot be exercised by deputy, while a min- isterial one may. Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 569.

—Lucrative office. See Lucrative. — Office- hook. Any book for the record of official or other transactions, kept under authority of the state, in public offices not connected with the courts.— Office-copy. A copy or transcript of a deed or record or any filed document made by the officer having it in custody or under his sanction, and by him sealed or certified.— Of- fice found. In English law. Inquest of office found ; the finding of certain facts by a jury on an inquest or inquisition of office. 3 Bl. Comm. 258. 259. This phrase has been adopted in American law. 2 Kent. Comm. 61. See Phillips v. Moore, 100 U. S. 212, 25 L. Ed. 603; Baker v. Shy, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 89. — Office graut. A designation of a conveyance made by some officer of the law to effect certain pur- poses, where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass the title : such, for example, as a tax-deed. 3 private injury, is regarded as a proceeding ema- nating from the office of the judge, and may be instituted by the mere motion of the judge. But, in practice, these suits are instituted by

K' te individuals, with the permission of the or his surrogate ; and the private prosecu- tor in any such case is, accordingly, said to “promote the office of the judge.” Mosley & Whitley.— Political office. Civil offices are usually divided into three classes,— political, ju- dicial, and ministerial. Political offices are such as are not immediately connected with the ad- ministration of justice, or with the execution of the mandates of a superior, such as the presi- dent or the head of a department. Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 669; Fitzpatrick v. U. S., 7 Ct. Cl. 293.— Principal office. The principal office of a corporation is its headquarters, or the place where the chief or principal affairs and business of the corporation are transacted. Usually it is the office where the company’s books are kept, where its meetings of stockhold- ers are held, and where the directors, trustees, or managers assemble to discuss and transact the important general business of the company; but no one of these circumstances is a controll- ing test. See Jossey v. Georgia A A. Ry., 102 Ga. 706. 28 S. E. 273: Milwaukee Steamship Co. v. Milwaukee, 83 Wis. 590, 63 N. W. 839. 18 L. R. A. 353: Standard Oil Co. v. Com., 110 Ky. 821. 62 S. [Law] — Law

[Maxim: Omnia praesumuntur contra spoliatorem — all things are presumed against a despoiler or wrong-doer]

The entry quotes the leading evidence maxim that all things are presumed against a despoiler.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry, which itself calls it 'a leading maxim in the law of evidence' (Best, Ev. p. 340; Broom, Max. 938); recorded as the entry's own cited authority.

[Scripture] — Scripture

 | All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice | Flagpole of Claim and Coinage reserved

[John 17:4, KJV]

"I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."

Why: The plea is 'he has done all' — full performance as a bar; Christ's words are the perfect performance plea — the work given, finished. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

OMNIUM.

In mercantile law. A term used to express the aggregate value of the different stock in which a loan is usually funded. Tomlins.

Omnium contributions sarciatur quod pro omnibus datum est. 4 Bing. 12L That which is given for all is recompensed by

[Law] — Law

[Maxim: Omnium contributione sarciatur quod pro omnibus datum est — that which is given for all is recompensed by the contribution of all]

The entry quotes the general-average principle that what is given for all is made good by the contribution of all.

Why: Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 4 Bing. 121, which the entry itself identifies as 'a principle of the law of general average'; recorded as the entry's own cited authority.

ON ACCOUNT OF WHOM IT MAT / CONCERN.

When a policy of Insurance expresses that the Insurance Is made “on ac- count of whom it may concern,” it will cover all persons having an Insurable Interest in the subject-matter at the date of the policy and who were then contemplated by the par- ty procuring the Insurance. 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 30.

ON CALL.

There is no legal difference between an obligation payable “when de- manded” or “on demand” and one payable “on call” or "at any time called for.” In each case the debt Is payable immediately. Bowman v. McChesuey, 22 Grat. (Va.) 609.

ON CONDITION.

These words may be construed to mean “on the terms,” in order to effectuate the intention of parties. Mea- nor v. McKowan, 4 Watts & S. (Pa.) 302.

ON DEFAULT.

In case of default; upon failure of stipulated action or performance; upon the occurrence of a failure, omission, or neglect of duty.

ON DEMAND.

A promissory note pay- able “on demand” is a present debt, and is payable without any demand. Young v. Weston, 39 Me. 492 ; Appeal of Andress, 99 Pa 421.

ON FILE.

Piled; entered or placed upon the files; - existing and remaining upon or among the proper flies. Slosson v. Hall, 17 Minn. 95 (GU. 71) ; Snider v. Methvin, 60 Tex. 487.

ON OR ABOUT.

A phrase used in re- citing the date of an occurrence or convey- ance, to escape the necessity of being bound by the statement of an exact date.

ON OR BEFORE.

These words, Insert- ed In a stipulation to do an act or pay mon- ey, entitle the party stipulating to perform at any time before the day; and upon per- formance, or tender and refusal, he Is im- mediately vested with all the rights which would have attached if performance were made on the day. Wall v. Simpson, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 156, 22 Am. Dec. 72.

Once a fraud, always a fraud. 13 VIn. Abr. 539.

ONCE A MORTGAGE, ALWAYS A / MORTGAGE.

This rule signifies that an Instrument originally intended as a mort- gage, and not a deed, cannot be converted into anything else than a mortgage by any subsequent clause or agreement.

Once a recompense, always a recom- pense. 19 Vln. Abr. 277.

[Law] — Law

[Axiom: equity will not permit a clog on the equity of redemption]

The rule protects the equity of redemption: equity will not permit a mortgagor's right to redeem to be clogged or fettered by any subsequent agreement.

Why: Genuine because 'once a mortgage, always a mortgage' is the classic statement of the anti-clogging rule; the axiom names the equitable principle the entry's rule serves rather than re-quoting the rule.

ONCE IN JEOPARDY.

A phrase used to express the condition of a person charged with crime, who has once already, by legal proceedings, been put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense. See Com. v. Fitzpatrick, 121 Pa. 109, 15 AtL 466, 1 L. R. A. 451, 6 Am. St. Rep. 757.

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — double jeopardy]

Double jeopardy: no person shall be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb for the same offense.

Why: Genuine because the entry defines the condition of one already put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense; the Fifth Amendment clause is the governing American authority for the protection.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Nahum 1:9, KJV]

"What do ye imagine against the LORD? he will make an utter end: affliction shall not rise up the second time."

Why: Once in jeopardy is the bar against a second trial for the same offense; 'affliction shall not rise up the second time' is the traditional scriptural warrant for that bar. Third-person prophecy — no flag.

[Humanity] — Humanity / Fiction & Film

[Beresford, Double Jeopardy, 1999]

(paraphrase) The thriller's entire premise turns on the rule the entry states: acquitted once of the killing by legal proceedings, she cannot be put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense again. (paraphrase) required to sustain the wall or beams of the adjoining house.

Why: Entry: a person once already, by legal proceedings, put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense. The film dramatizes precisely this doctrine. Marked paraphrase — premise certain, no dialogue quoted.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Galatians 6:2, KJV]

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

Why: The servitude of support requires one's wall to sustain the adjoining house; the verse commands the same structure in morals — bearing another's load. Not deity speech — no flag.

ONEROUS.

A contract, lease, share, or other right is said to be “onerous” when the obligations attaching to it counter-balance or exceed the advantage to be derived from it, either absolutely or with reference to the particular possessor. Sweet.

As used in the civil law and in the systems derived from it, (French, Scotch, Spanish. Mexican.) the term also means based upon, supported by, or relating to a good and valoable consideration, i. e., one which imposes a burden or charge in return for the benefit conferred.

[Scripture] — Scripture

[Matthew 11:30, KJV]

Why: Onerous is the obligation whose burdens exceed its advantage; Christ's yoke is the counterpoint — a burden that is light. Christ's verbatim words — flagged per the red-letter rule.

Dutch. Immovable and fast estate, that is, land or real estate. The phrase is used in Dutch wills, deeds, and antenuptial contracts of the early colonial period in New York. See Spraker v. Van Alstyne, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 208.

To enter upon the duties under a commission, or commence to act under a commission, is so termed in English law. Thus, the judges of assise and m*» print derive their authority to act under or by virtue of commissions directed to them for that purpose ; and, when they com- mence acting under the powers so committed to them, they are said to open the commissions; and the day on which they so commence their proceedings is thence termed the “commission day of the assizes.’’ Brown. — Open a court.
