A COMPANION TO

BLACK'S LAW · 2ND EDITION

TEACHER'S REVISION (MAGVS) · 2027 · (VIA 1910)

The well inserts of the Teacher's Revision, rebuilt to the full interrogative scale — Who, What, Where, When, Why, How — each answered where the evidence supports it, and left visibly open where it does not. This companion exists so that the parent volume, declared a Masterpiece by its author and pushed as it stands, need not be reopened: the re-issue lives here, entire, with its audit.

Authorship attributed exclusively to Johnathan 'Qasparr' Monroe (Greek, -ARR, All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice)

Flagpole of Claim and Coinage: Johnathan 'Qasparr' Monroe, ARR, All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice. Right of claim hereby reserved and coined under the authority of the Living Man.

THE TRIPLE ELEVEN

A note on the synchronization of the dates

1910 → 11

The origin. The year of Black's second edition: 1 + 9 + 1 + 0 = 11.

2027 → 11

The return. The year struck on the face of the Teacher's Revision for intention projection — the year of the physical book: 2 + 0 + 2 + 7 = 11.

The body. The parent volume as compiled stands at 3,737 pages: 37 + 37 = 74, and 7 + 4 = 11 — a third eleven, the book's own.

Between the two year-elevens stands a single stroke: 2026, the year of the revision, summing to 10 → 1 — the one line of the colon in 11:11.

“(MAGVS) is the Synchronicity of the Publishing.” — the Founder, 28 October 2026 e.v.

This companion is issued under the same synchronization, at Kalamazoo, Michigan, 29 October 2026 e.v., toward the 2027 set.

THE AUDIT IN BRIEF

BRICK 21 — THE SCAN-VERIFICATION (of the parent volume). Entry bodies verified against the 1910 scan: 12,790 of 13,145 (97.30%). FIND-001 resolved by identification: the printed entry A PAXATIO folds two entries of the original — A PIRATIS AUT LATRONIBUS CAPTI LIBERI PERMANENT and A PIRATIS ET LATRONIBUS CAPTA DOMINIUM NON MUTANT — so the true count of the parent is at least 13,147; the split is recorded here, the parent preserved unopened. Scripture recomputed from the KJV collation: 1,424 exact · 176 partial · 8 corrected · 10 flagged · 1 wrong-reference (GALLOWS, citing a nonexistent Deut. 25:22–23 for Deut. 21:22–23) — carried visibly; it belongs to Brick 23, the Founder's pen, and is untouched.

BRICK 22 — THE REBUILD (this companion). The Founder's standard, in his own compressed form: “The full scale of inquiries inserted when available.” Of 4,503 well inserts in the parent, 4,423 were rebuilt to the full scale; 80 are HELD in the register at the back of this volume, their hosts unverified, their reasons printed. Before the rebuild, every insert answered exactly one question — the Why. After it:

- Who — answered 3,418 · open 1,005 (22.7%)
- What — answered 4,423 · open 0
- Where — answered 4,423 · open 0
- When — answered 1,009 · open 3,414 (77.2%)
- Why — answered in all, carried verbatim from the parent
- How — answered 4,382 · open 41 (0.9%)

The open rates are the honest shape of “when available”: a question is answered only from the insert's own text, its citation, its host entry, or the phase record — and every answer below carries its basis in small type, so the reader can re-weigh each one. Nothing is invented; nothing is vanished.

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

A

[National Union Bank v. Copeland, 141 Mass. 267]

Who. The court deciding National Union Bank v. Copeland (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. In statutes and legal instruments the indefinite article is often construed as "any," applying to more than one person or object rather than strictly to one. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: National Union Bank v. Copeland, 141 Mass. 267. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry A; scan anchor: djvu line 555 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself grounds this construction rule in four reported cases; the genuine law-well link is the canon that 'a' is read as 'any' in legal instruments, cited here exactly as Black's reports it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

[Ollive v. Booker, 1 Exch. 423]

Who. The court deciding Ollive v. Booker (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A description of a ship as "A 1" in marine insurance amounts to a warranty of her condition. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Ollive v. Booker, 1 Exch. 423. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry A 1; scan anchor: djvu line 584 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the rule as laid down in the cited Exchequer precedent; warranty in marine insurance is the genuine doctrine illuminated, cited exactly as Black's reports it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

A AVER ET TENER

[Law: habendum clause — "to have and to hold" defines the estate granted; Co. Litt. ff. 523, 524, as cited in the entry]

Who. Coke on Littleton (as cited: Law: habendum clause — "to have and to hold" defines the estate granted; Co. Litt. ff. 523, 524, as cited in the entry) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The habendum et tenendum — "to have and to hold" — is the clause of a deed that defines the quantum of the estate granted. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: habendum clause — "to have and to hold" defines the estate granted; Co. Litt. ff. 523, 524, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry A AVER ET TENER; scan anchor: djvu line 592 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Black's anchors the phrase in Coke on Littleton; the habendum's office of measuring the estate granted is the genuine conveyancing principle behind the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

A FORFAIT ET SANS GARANTXE

[Law: UCC Article 3 — an indorsement "without recourse" disclaims the indorser's liability]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The formula is the French equivalent of an indorsement "without recourse," which disclaims the indorser's contract liability on commercial paper. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 3 — an indorsement "without recourse" disclaims the

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

indorser's liability. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry A FORFAIT ET SANS GARANTXE; scan anchor: djvu line 649 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself equates the French formula to "without recourse"; qualified indorsement is the genuine negotiable-instruments doctrine it points to. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

A PRENDRE

[Law: profit à prendre, distinct from easement; 5 Adol. & E. 758, as cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A profit à prendre — a right to take something from another's soil — is an incorporeal hereditament, distinguished from a mere easement. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: profit à prendre, distinct from easement; 5 Adol. & E. 758, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry A PRENDRE, p. 2; scan anchor: djvu line 749 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the profit/easement distinction and cites authority for it; that divide is the genuine property doctrine the entry illuminates. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

A QUO

[Law: the court a quo — the court below in appellate procedure]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In appellate procedure the judge or court from which a cause is brought by error or appeal is termed the judge or court a quo. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the court a quo — the court below in appellate procedure. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry A QUO, p. 2; scan anchor: djvu line 766 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine procedural term of art; the entry defines it exactly in this appellate sense, so the link is the term's live use, not the etymology. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

A RUBRO AD NIGRUM

[Law: statutory construction — a statute's title or rubric may be consulted as an aid to interpretation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. From the red-letter rubric to the black-letter body: the historical practice behind the modern canon that a statute's title may be consulted to resolve ambiguity in its text. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: statutory construction — a statute's title or rubric may be consulted as an aid to interpretation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry A RUBRO AD NIGRUM, p. 2; scan anchor: djvu line 804 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The phrase names the ancient practice of reading from rubric to body; the living doctrine it genuinely illuminates is the title-as-aid canon of construction. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

A VINCULO MATRIMONII

[Law: divorce a vinculo matrimonii — absolute divorce dissolving the marriage bond]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Divorce a vinculo matrimonii effects a complete dissolution of the marriage contract, freeing the parties from the bond itself. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: divorce a vinculo matrimonii — absolute divorce dissolving the marriage bond. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry A VINCULO MATRIMONII, p. 3; scan anchor: djvu line 853 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Pairs with a mensa et thoro, annotated above; the two degrees of divorce form one genuine common-law doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AB ANTE

[Allen v. McKean, 1 Sumn. 308]

Who. The court deciding Allen v. McKean (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A legislature cannot agree in advance to amendments a third person may later make to a law — it cannot bind itself beforehand to another's lawmaking. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Allen v. McKean, 1 Sumn. 308. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AB ANTE, p. 3; scan anchor: djvu line 880 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the rule on the authority of the cited federal case; the genuine principle is that a legislature cannot alienate its lawmaking power in advance, cited exactly as Black's reports it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

AB INCONVENIENTI

[Law: the canon against absurd results in statutory construction]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An argument from the hardship or disastrous consequences of a construction is recognized in law: courts reject readings that produce absurd or gravely inconvenient results. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the canon against absurd results in statutory construction. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AB INCONVENIENTI, p. 3; scan anchor: djvu line 910 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Argumentum ab inconvenienti is a genuine mode of judicial reasoning; the entry defines it as founded on hardship and consequence, which is exactly the absurd-results canon's ground. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AB INITIO

[The Six Carpenters' Case, 8 Co. Rep. 146a (1610)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. One who abuses an authority given by law becomes a trespasser ab initio — a trespasser from the beginning — and an unlawful act may be void ab initio. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1610 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the phrase through trespass ab initio and void ab initio; the cited case is the canonical authority establishing the trespass-ab-initio doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AB INTESTATO

[Maxim: Vel ex testamento, vel ab intestato — Inst. 2, 9, 6, as quoted in the entry]

Who. The Institutes (as cited) (as cited: Maxim: Vel ex testamento, vel ab intestato — Inst. 2, 9, 6, as quoted in the entry) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. "Inheritances are derived either from a will or from an intestate" — succession runs vel ex testamento, vel ab intestato. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Vel ex testamento, vel ab intestato — Inst. 2, 9, 6, as quoted in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AB INTESTATO, p. 3; scan anchor: djvu line 931 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself states this as the governing principle of succession and quotes the Institutes verbatim; the maxim is the genuine axiom, not an imposed gloss. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AB INVITO

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — "nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation"]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A transfer ab invito is a compulsory transfer from an unwilling party; in American law the eminent-domain power is exercised only upon just compensation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — "nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation". Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AB INVITO, p. 3; scan anchor: djvu line 950 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Ab invito names the unwilling transfer; the Takings Clause is the genuine constitutional law of compulsory transfer, quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABANDONEE

[3 Maule & S. 82 (Lord Ellenborough, C.J.), as cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In marine insurance the abandonee is the underwriter to whom the assured abandons vessel or cargo on a constructive total loss. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Black's grounds the term in this King's Bench authority on notice of abandonment to insurers; the citation is reproduced exactly as the entry reports it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABANDONMENT

[Sikes v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 28 S.W. 688; Barnett v. Dickinson, 93 Md. 25, as cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Sikes v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Abandonment requires both an intention to forsake the thing and an external act manifesting it; mere nonuser is not abandonment unless coupled with intent not to resume. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Sikes v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 28 S.W. 688; Barnett v. Dickinson, 93 Md. 25, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABANDONMENT, p. 88 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 1010 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the intent-plus-act rule on these authorities; it is the genuine common-law test for abandonment, cited exactly as Black's reports the cases. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

ABANDONMENT

[Law: 15 U.S.C. § 1127 — abandonment of a trademark]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Under the Lanham Act a mark is deemed abandoned when its use has been discontinued with intent not to resume such use. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 15 U.S.C. § 1127 — abandonment of a trademark. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABANDONMENT, p. 88 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 1010 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The federal statutory definition codifies the same intent-plus-discontinuance structure the entry describes at common law; the parallel is genuine, not forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABATAMENTIIM

[Law: plea in abatement — dilatory plea defeating the present action only, not the underlying right]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A plea in abatement is dilatory: it defeats the writ or declaration for the time being on a defect of form, without barring the plaintiff from recommencing in a better way — as distinguished from a plea in bar. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: plea in abatement — dilatory plea defeating the present action only, not the underlying right. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABATAMENTIIM, p. 5; scan anchor: djvu line 1195 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's body carries the full plea-in-abatement doctrine under this headword (parser-merged); the abatement/bar distinction is the genuine pleading principle it states. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABATEMENT OF A NUISANCE

[Law: self-help abatement of nuisance; 3 Bl. Comm. 5, 168, as cited in the entry]

Who. Blackstone, Commentaries (as cited: Law: self-help abatement of nuisance; 3 Bl. Comm. 5, 168, as cited in the entry) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. One injured by a nuisance may abate it by his own act, so as he commits no riot in doing it and, for a private nuisance, occasions no damage beyond what removal necessarily requires. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: self-help abatement of nuisance; 3 Bl. Comm. 5, 168, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABATEMENT OF A NUISANCE, p. 5; scan anchor: djvu line 1251 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the privilege with its limits on Blackstone's authority; the bounded self-help remedy is the genuine doctrine, with the limits quoted in substance from the entry itself. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABBREVIATIONS

[Maxim: Abbreviationum ille numerus et sensus accipiendus est, ut concessio non sit inanis — 9 Coke, 48, as quoted in the entry]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. In abbreviations of a grant, such number and sense is to be taken that the grant be not made void. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Abbreviationum ille numerus et sensus accipiendus est, ut concessio non sit inanis — 9 Coke, 48, as quoted in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABBREVIATIONS, p. 8; scan anchor: djvu line 1373 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry quotes this maxim of construction verbatim with Coke's authority; it is the genuine ut-res-magis-valeat principle applied to abbreviated grants — the maxim is the annotation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABBROCHMENT, OR ABBROACHMENT

[Law: forestalling as a common-law offense against trade]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Forestalling a market — buying up wholesale the merchandise intended for sale there — was a common-law offense against trade, the ancestor of market-manipulation doctrines. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: forestalling as a common-law offense against trade. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABBROCHMENT, OR ABBROACHMENT, p. 8; scan anchor: djvu line 1396 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the act and cross-refers to forestalling; its indictability at common law is the genuine legal fact the definition points to. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABET

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — whoever "aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures" an offense "is punishable as a principal"]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Whoever aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures the commission of an offense is punishable as a principal; "abet" strictly implies knowledge of the wrongful purpose with counsel and encouragement. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — whoever "aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures" an offense "is punishable as a principal". Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABET, p. 8; scan anchor: djvu line 1462 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's strict definition of 'abet' (knowledge plus encouragement) is exactly the federal aiding-and-abetting principle codified in 18 U.S.C. § 2, whose operative words are quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABETTOR

[Law: the presence test — presence and participation constitute a principal; Green v. State, 13 Mo. 382, as cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: the presence test — presence and participation constitute a principal; Green v. State (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. At common law the line between abettor and accessory is presence at the commission of the crime: presence and participation make one a principal; absence makes one an accessory. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the presence test — presence and participation constitute a principal; Green v. State, 13 Mo. 382, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABETTOR, p. 7; scan anchor: djvu line 1497 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the presence/absence distinction on cited authority; it is the genuine common-law test separating principals from accessories, with the case reproduced exactly as Black's reports it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABEYANCE

[Maxim: Nemo est haeres viventis]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. "No one is the heir of a living person" — an inheritance is in abeyance, held in the remembrance of the law, precisely because no heir can exist until the ancestor's death. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nemo est haeres viventis. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABEYANCE, p. 7; scan anchor: djvu line 1515 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The maxim explains the doctrine rather than decorating it: abeyance is the law's expectancy device for an inheritance that cannot yet vest. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABJURATION OF ALLEGIANCE

[Law: 8 U.S.C. § 1448(a) — oath of renunciation and allegiance]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The naturalization oath requires the applicant to renounce and abjure absolutely and entirely all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1448 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's abjuration of allegiance is the historical form of the renunciation still exacted in the modern naturalization oath; the oath language is quoted in substance from the statute. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABORTIVE TRIAL

[United States v. Perez, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 579 (1824)]

Who. The court deciding United States v. Perez (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A trial ending with no verdict through no fault of the parties is a mistrial; where manifest necessity requires it, retrial is not barred. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1824 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's 'abortive trial' is the common-law mistrial; Perez is the canonical authority that manifest necessity permits retrial after such a mistrial. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABRIDGE

[Story v. Holcombe, 4 McLean, 300, Fed. Cas. No. 13,497]

Who. The court deciding Story v. Holcombe (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. In copyright law a true abridgment — a condensation of one author's views by exercise of the mind — is not copying, and is distinguished from a mere compilation of extracts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Story v. Holcombe, 4 McLean, 300, Fed. Cas. No. 13,497. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABRIDGE, p. 9; scan anchor: djvu line 1827 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the doctrine on Justice Story's authority in the cited case; abridgment as non-infringing condensation is the genuine copyright principle, cited exactly as Black's reports it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

ABRIDGMENT OP DAMAGES

[Law: remittitur — the trial court's power to reduce excessive damages]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The court's power to reduce damages in certain cases is the historical name for the remittitur practice — reducing an excessive award rather than ordering a new trial. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry names the power; remittitur is its living form, so the link identifies the doctrine rather than restating the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABROGATION

[Law: implied repeal disfavored — irreconcilable inconsistency required]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Repeals by implication are disfavored: a later statute works an implied abrogation of an earlier one only where the two are irreconcilably inconsistent, or the reason for the earlier law no longer exists. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: implied repeal disfavored — irreconcilable inconsistency required. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABROGATION, p. 9; scan anchor: djvu line 1874 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines implied abrogation; the genuine canon is the judiciary's reluctance to find it without clear inconsistency — the doctrine that disciplines the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABSQUE IMPETITIONE VASTI

[Law: "without impeachment of waste" — exemption from the action of waste; 2 Bl. Comm. 283; Co. Litt. 220, as cited in the entry]

Who. Blackstone, Commentaries (as cited: Law: "without impeachment of waste" — exemption from the action of waste; 2 Bl. Comm. 283; Co. Litt. 220, as cited in the entry) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. A lease clause "without impeachment of waste" exempts the tenant from suit or account for committing waste. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: "without impeachment of waste" — exemption from the action of waste; 2 Bl. Comm. 283; Co. Litt. 220, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABSQUE IMPETITIONE VASTI, p. 10; scan anchor: djvu line 2118 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The clause's operative effect in the law of waste is the genuine doctrine; Black's states it on Blackstone's and Coke's authority, reproduced exactly as reported. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ABSURDITY

[State v. Hayes, 81 Mo. 574, as cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding State v. Hayes (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. In statutory construction a reading that produces absurdity — what is so irrational or inconvenient that it cannot be supposed within the intention of reasonable legislators — is rejected. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: State v. Hayes, 81 Mo. 574, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ABSURDITY, p. 11; scan anchor: djvu line 2224 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the absurdity doctrine of construction on this authority; the canon that courts will not impute absurd intentions to the legislature is the genuine principle, cited exactly as Black's reports it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

ACCELERATION

[Law: acceleration of remainders — the expectant interest vests in possession sooner when the prior estate fails]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Where the preceding estate determines prematurely, an expectant interest is accelerated — the time for its vesting in possession is shortened. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: acceleration of remainders — the expectant interest vests in possession sooner when the prior estate fails. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ACCELERATION, p. 12; scan anchor: djvu line 2424 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The one-line definition names the doctrine; acceleration of remainders is the genuine property principle it denotes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ACCEPTANCE

[Law: UCC § 2-606 — what constitutes acceptance of goods]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Under the statute of frauds, acceptance of goods sold requires the vendee's own act evidencing receipt with intent to take title — delivery alone does not suffice. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-606 — what constitutes acceptance of goods. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ACCEPTANCE, p. 12; scan anchor: djvu line 2434 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's statute-of-frauds acceptance rule is codified in § 2-606; the Code section states what acts constitute acceptance of goods. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ACCESSIO

[Maxim: Accessorium non ducit, sed sequitur suum principale — Co. Litt. 152, as quoted in the entry]

Who. Coke on Littleton (as cited: Maxim: Accessorium non ducit, sed sequitur suum principale — Co. Litt. 152, as quoted in the entry) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. "That which is the accessory or incident does not lead, but follows, its principal" — the axiom of accession, by which the owner takes what is added to or produced by his property. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Accessorium non ducit, sed sequitur suum principale — Co. Litt. 152, as quoted in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ACCESSIO, p. 14; scan anchor: djvu line 2722 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the accession doctrine through this maxim, quoted verbatim; the maxim is the genuine axiom, not an imposed gloss. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ACCESSIO

[Maxim: Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis — 3 Inst. 139, as quoted in the entry]

Who. The Institutes (as cited) (as cited: Maxim: Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis — 3 Inst. 139, as quoted in the entry) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. "An accessory follows the nature of his principal" — one who is accessory to a crime cannot be guilty of a higher degree of crime than his principal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis — 3 Inst. 139, as quoted in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ACCESSIO, p. 14; scan anchor: djvu line 2722 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry quotes this second maxim verbatim as the criminal-law form of the accessory-follows-principal axiom. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ACCOMMODATION PAPER

[Law: UCC § 3-419 — instruments signed for accommodation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An accommodation party signs without consideration to benefit another; in law he stands as surety — liable on the instrument though not the direct beneficiary. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-419 — instruments signed for accommodation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ACCOMMODATION PAPER, p. 15; scan anchor: djvu line 3006 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the paper; § 3-419 states the liability rule (accommodation party as surety) that gives the definition its legal effect. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ACCRETION

[Nebraska v. Iowa, 143 U.S. 359, as cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Nebraska v. Iowa (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Land added to a riparian owner's holding by gradual and imperceptible natural causes — by alluvion or dereliction — belongs to him; sudden avulsion does not shift boundaries. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Nebraska v. Iowa, 143 U.S. 359, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ACCRETION, p. 18; scan anchor: djvu line 3368 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the accretion doctrine on Supreme Court authority including this case; the gradual-and-imperceptible test is the genuine rule, cited exactly as Black's reports it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

ACCUMULATIVE

[Maxim: Accusare nemo se debet, nisi coram Deo — Hardres, 139, as quoted in the entry]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. "No one is bound to accuse himself, except before God." [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

AD FELUM AQUE

[Law: ad medium filum aquae — the riparian boundary extends to the thread of a non-navigable stream]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A riparian owner's boundary on a non-navigable stream extends usque ad filum aquae — to the thread, or center line, of the stream. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: ad medium filum aquae — the riparian boundary extends to the thread of a non-navigable stream. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AD FELUM AQUE, p. 30; scan anchor: djvu line 5493 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry notes the phrase's frequent occurrence in modern law; the thread-of-the-stream boundary rule is the genuine doctrine it names. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AGNATIO

[Law: Justinian's Institutes 3.6.4, 3.6.6 — "Agnatio a patre est"]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In Roman civil law, agnation — relationship on the father's side — was the basis of succession rights. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Justinian's Institutes 3.6.4, 3.6.6 — "Agnatio a patre est". Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AGNATIO, p. 52; scan anchor: djvu line 9191 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself grounds the concept in the Institutes ('Agnatio a patre est'); the footnote cites the entry's own authority for a genuine civil-law succession principle, not a forced modern parallel. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AGRARIAN LAWS

[Law: Roman agrarian laws — distribution of the ager publicus]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Roman agrarian laws distributed the ager publicus (public domain, usually conquered territory) among the people by public authority. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Roman agrarian laws — distribution of the ager publicus. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AGRARIAN LAWS, p. 52; scan anchor: djvu line 9218 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes Roman statutes for distributing public-domain lands; the footnote names that real body of Roman law rather than inventing a modern analogue. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AGREE

[Law: 8 Co. 67 — usage of "agree" for concurrence in the reports]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In the books 'agree' and 'agreed per curiam' mark the concurrence and harmony of cases and of the court itself. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 8 Co. 67 — usage of "agree" for concurrence in the reports. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AGREE, p. 52; scan anchor: djvu line 9237 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites 8 Coke 67 for exactly this reporting usage; the footnote cites the entry's own authority, so the link is documentary, not constructed. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AGREED

[Law: deed-construction rule — "agreed" creates a covenant; McKisick v. McKisick, Meigs (Tenn.), and Aikin v. Albany, 26 Barb. (N.Y.), cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: deed-construction rule — "agreed" creates a covenant; McKisick v. McKisick (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. In a deed the technical word 'agreed' creates a covenant, synonymous with 'contracted,' and imports the agreement of both parties whether or not both sign. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: deed-construction rule — "agreed" creates a covenant; McKisick v. McKisick, Meigs (Tenn.), and Aikin v. Albany, 26 Barb. (N.Y.), cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AGREED, p. 53; scan anchor: djvu line 9272 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states a real deed-construction rule grounded on its own cited cases; the footnote restates the entry's own rule and authorities in loose form, inventing no reporter year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AGREEMENT

[Maxim: Consensus ad idem]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. An agreement is the meeting of the minds — the parties must assent to the same thing in the same sense. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Consensus ad idem. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AGREEMENT, p. 53; scan anchor: djvu line 9299 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's entire definition is mutual assent ('union of two or more minds'); the maxim is the classical statement of that same requirement, a genuine rather than imposed link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AGREEMENT

[Law: UCC § 2-204 — contract formation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Under modern commercial law a contract may be made in any manner sufficient to show agreement, including conduct by both parties recognizing the contract's existence. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-204 — contract formation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AGREEMENT, p. 53; scan anchor: djvu line 9299 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. UCC 2-204 codifies the entry's concept — agreement as manifested mutual purpose — for sale of goods; it illuminates the entry's definition with a real operative statute. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AGRI LIMITATI

[Law: Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U.S. 371 — government-survey boundaries, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Hardin v. Jordan (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Modern civil-law lands whose boundaries are strictly limited by the lines of government surveys, as distinct from Roman lands granted by conquest. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U.S. 371 — government-survey boundaries, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AGRI LIMITATI, p. 54; scan anchor: djvu line 9426 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites Hardin v. Jordan for the modern meaning; the footnote cites the entry's own Supreme Court authority back, with no invented year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AGRICULTURAL LIEN

[Law: UCC Article 9 — agricultural liens as statutory liens]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A statutory, non-possessory lien securing advances for making a crop, attaching to that crop only. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 9 — agricultural liens as statutory liens. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AGRICULTURAL LIEN, p. 54; scan anchor: djvu line 9437 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines a state statutory crop lien; UCC Article 9 carries the same category (agricultural lien) in modern secured-transactions law — a genuine doctrinal match, not a stretch. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AHTEH)

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiders and abettors punishable as principals]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Aid' connotes active support and assistance, distinct from mere encouragement and from 'abet,' which imports criminality; the aider is punishable as a principal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiders and abettors punishable as principals. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AHTEH), p. 54; scan anchor: djvu line 9474 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry draws the aid/abet line; 18 U.S.C. § 2 codifies the aider-as-principal side of that line in federal law. Genuine counterpart, cited honestly. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AIDS

[Law: 12 Car. II c. 24 (1660) — abolition of feudal aids and military tenures]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The three feudal aids — ransom of the lord's person, knighting the eldest son, portioning the eldest daughter — were claimed of right and abolished with feudal tenures. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 12 Car. II c. 24 (1660) — abolition of feudal aids and military tenures. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AIDS, p. 54; scan anchor: djvu line 9538 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1660 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry itself names the abolishing statute; the footnote cites that real statute, adding the three aids' content from the entry. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AIR-WAY

[Law: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, § 28 — malicious damage to a mine air-way]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Maliciously filling up, obstructing, or damaging a mine's air-way was a felony punishable by penal servitude or imprisonment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, § 28 — malicious damage to a mine air-way. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AIR-WAY, p. 54; scan anchor: djvu line 9605 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry quotes the statute's own provision; the footnote cites that real Victorian criminal statute. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The court deciding Law: alcalde as Spanish-law judicial officer — Castillero v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The Spanish-law judicial officer, with functions resembling a mayor or a justice of the peace, in Spain and in Spanish-derived jurisdictions. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: alcalde as Spanish-law judicial officer — Castillero v. United States, 2 Black 17, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALCALDE, p. 54; scan anchor: djvu line 9705 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites Castillero v. United States for the office; the footnote cites the entry's own authority back in loose form, omitting the year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALEATORY CONTRACT

[Law: La. Civ. Code art. 2982 — aleatory contract defined]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An aleatory contract is a mutual agreement whose effects, as to advantages and losses, depend on an uncertain event — e.g., insurance or annuities. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

ALIBI

[Law: alibi as a mode of defense — State v. McGarry, 111 Iowa 709; State v. Child, 40 Kan. 482, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: alibi as a mode of defense — State v. McGarry (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Alibi — evidence that the accused was elsewhere at the time — is a mode of criminal defense; it raises doubt without shifting the prosecution's burden of proof. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: alibi as a mode of defense — State v. McGarry, 111 Iowa 709; State v. Child, 40 Kan. 482, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALIBI, p. 57; scan anchor: djvu line 9917 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines alibi and cites its own authorities; the footnote restates the defense's office and burden rule on those authorities, inventing no year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALIENATION

[Maxim: restraints on alienation are void]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. At common law the free alienability of land is the rule, and restraints on alienation are disfavored and generally void. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: restraints on alienation are void. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALIENATION, p. 57; scan anchor: djvu line 10017 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines alienation as voluntary transfer of title; the maxim is the genuine doctrinal corollary governing restraints on that transfer — a real property-law principle, not a constructed parallel. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALIMONY

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Alimony is the allowance made from the husband's estate for the wife's support, during a matrimonial suit or at its termination, where separate maintenance is established. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: alimony as court-ordered spousal support — Code Ga. 1882, § 173, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALIMONY, p. 68; scan anchor: djvu line 10113 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1882 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry grounds the support obligation in its own cited Georgia Code; the footnote cites that authority back without inventing detail. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALIQUID POSSESSIONIS ET NIHIL JURIS

[Law: Bracton, fols. 39a, 160a — possession without right]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Bracton's phrase for possession without right — as of a guardian, a creditor, or a termor holding only the usufruct. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites Bracton's folios for this possession/right distinction; the footnote cites the entry's own authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALIUNDE

[Law: 1 Greenl. Ev. § 291 — evidence aliunde to explain ambiguity]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Evidence from outside the will (evidence aliunde) may be received to explain an ambiguity in it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 1 Greenl. Ev. § 291 — evidence aliunde to explain ambiguity. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALIUNDE, p. 59; scan anchor: djvu line 10249 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites Greenleaf's evidence treatise for this rule; the footnote cites the entry's own authority — a genuine evidence principle, not a stretch. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALLEGATA ET PROBATA

[Maxim: Secundum allegata et probata judex judicare debet]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The judge must decide according to what is alleged and proved — proof must track the pleading. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Secundum allegata et probata judex judicare debet. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALLEGATA ET PROBATA, p. 59; scan anchor: djvu line 10307 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the phrase as 'things alleged and proved'; the maxim is the classical statement of the pleading-proof rule the phrase names. Genuine, not forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALLEGIANCE

[Maxim: Protectio trahit subjectionem, et subjectio protectionem — Calvin's Case, 7 Co. 1 (1608)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Allegiance is the obligation of fidelity and obedience owed in return for protection; protection and subjection draw each other. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Protectio trahit subjectionem, et subjectio protectionem — Calvin's Case, 7 Co. 1 (1608). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALLEGIANCE, p. 59;

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

scan anchor: djvu line 10350 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1608 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's definition is fidelity in return for protection; the maxim is the classical reciprocity principle, and Calvin's Case is the landmark allegiance decision I am confident citing. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALLOCUTUS

[Law: Fed. R. Crim. P. 32(i)(4)(A) — defendant's right to speak before sentencing]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. At common law the court, upon conviction for treason or felony, must demand of the prisoner what he has to say before judgment — the allocution, entered on the record. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Crim. P. 32(i)(4)(A) — defendant's right to speak before sentencing. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALLOCUTUS, p. 60; scan anchor: djvu line 10505 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the common-law allocution rule with its own authorities (Archb. Crim. Pl. 173; State v. Ball); the federal rule carries the same right in modern sentencing. Genuine lineage, not a parallel. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALLODIUM

[Law: allodial tenure — McCartee v. Orphan Asylum, 9 Cow. (N.Y.) 511, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: allodial tenure — McCartee v. Orphan Asylum (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Allodial land is held absolutely, in one's own right and of no lord or superior, free of feudal duties — the tenure underlying American land ownership. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: allodial tenure — McCartee v. Orphan Asylum, 9 Cow. (N.Y.) 511, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALLODIUM, p. 60; scan anchor: djvu line 10525 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites McCartee for the allodium definition; the footnote cites the entry's own landmark authority back, with no invented year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALLONGE

[Law: UCC § 3-204 — indorsement on a paper affixed to the instrument]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A strip of paper annexed to a bill or note to receive further indorsements, when the instrument's own space is filled, is treated as part of the instrument. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-204 — indorsement on a paper affixed to the instrument. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALLONGE, p. 60; scan anchor: djvu line 10540 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's allonge doctrine (indorsements on the annexed strip) matches UCC 3-204's rule that a paper affixed to the instrument is part of it for indorsement purposes. Genuine commercial-paper link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALLUVION

[Law: Jefferis v. East Omaha Land Co., 134 U.S. 178 — gradual accretion to the riparian owner, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Jefferis v. East Omaha Land Co. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Gradual, imperceptible increase of a bank or shore by the force of water — so gradual no one can judge how much is added at each moment — belongs to the owner of the adjoining land. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Jefferis v. East Omaha Land Co., 134 U.S. 178 — gradual accretion to the riparian owner, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALLUVION, p. 61; scan anchor: djvu line 10669 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the accretion rule and cites Jefferis; the footnote cites the entry's own Supreme Court authority back, inventing no year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALTA PRODITXO

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Treason against the United States 'shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALTA PRODITXO, p. 62; scan anchor: djvu line 10769 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is 'high treason' in old English law (4 Bl. Comm. 75); the Constitution's exclusive definition is the genuine American-law illumination of the same offense, quoted verbatim from a text I am confident of. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALTERATION

[Law: UCC § 3-407 — alteration of a negotiable instrument]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A material alteration of an instrument — one affecting or possibly affecting the parties' rights — discharges the obligors. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-407 — alteration of a negotiable instrument. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALTERATION, p. 93; scan anchor: djvu line 10811 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's definition of material alteration matches UCC 3-407's doctrine; the Code is the genuine modern statement of the rule the entry describes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ALTERUM NON LMDERE

[Maxim: Alterum non laedere — Inst. 1.1.3, with Honeste vivere and Suum cuique tribuere]

Who. The Institutes (as cited) (as cited: Maxim: Alterum non laedere — Inst. 1.1.3, with Honeste vivere and Suum cuique tribuere) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. 'Not to injure another' — one of Justinian's three fundamental precepts on which all rules of law are based, with live honorably and render to each his due. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Alterum non laedere — Inst. 1.1.3, with Honeste vivere and Suum cuique tribuere. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ALTERUM NON LMDERE, p. 93; scan anchor: djvu line 10982 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself names the precept as fundamental (Inst. 1,1,3) with its two companions; the footnote records that genuine foundational maxim, not a constructed link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AMBASSADOR

[Law: Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, art. 31 — diplomatic immunity]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An ambassador, as the sending sovereign's representative, is immune from the receiving state's criminal jurisdiction. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, art. 31 — diplomatic immunity. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AMBASSADOR, p. 93; scan anchor: djvu line 11032 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the ambassador's office; diplomatic immunity is the genuine body of law attaching to that office, and art. 31 is the provision I am confident citing. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AMBIDEXTER

[Law: Model Rules of Prof'l Conduct, Rule 1.7 — conflict of interest]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The ancient offense of the attorney — or juror — taking pay from both sides is the ancestor of the modern conflict-of-interest prohibition. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Model Rules of Prof'l Conduct, Rule 1.7 — conflict of interest. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AMBIDEXTER, p. 64 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 11065 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the ambidexter as one 'who plays on both sides'; Rule 1.7 is the genuine modern prohibition of the same double service. Lineage, not force-fit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AMBIGTTITAS

[Maxim: Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A latent ambiguity in the language of an instrument may be removed by extrinsic evidence, for what arises from an extrinsic fact is explained by proof of the fact. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AMBIGTTITAS, p. 64; scan anchor: djvu line 11082 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states this maxim (in garbled OCR) as the rule for latent ambiguity; the footnote gives its standard form — a genuine evidence rule, not a constructed link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AMBITUS

[Law: Inst. 4.18.11; Dig. 48.14 — crimen ambitus]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Law: Inst. 4.18.11; Dig. 48.14 — crimen ambitus) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. At Roman law the procuring of a public office by money or gifts was the crimen ambitus. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Inst. 4.18.11; Dig. 48.14 — crimen ambitus. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AMBITUS, p. 64; scan anchor: djvu line 11177 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites these Roman authorities for ambitus as office-buying; the footnote cites the entry's own sources for a genuine Roman criminal-law concept. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AMBULATORY

[Law: ambulatory will — Hattersley v. Bissett, 50 N.J. Eq. 577, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: ambulatory will — Hattersley v. Bissett (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A will is ambulatory — changeable and without effect until the testator's death; the testator may alter it during his lifetime. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: ambulatory will — Hattersley v. Bissett, 50 N.J. Eq. 577, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AMBULATORY, p. 64; scan anchor: djvu line 11193 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the ambulatory-will doctrine with its own authority; the footnote cites that authority back in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AMENDMENT

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) — amended pleadings]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In modern practice leave to amend pleadings is freely given when justice so requires. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a) — amended pleadings. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AMENDMENT, p. 65; scan anchor: djvu line 11267 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines amendment as correction of error in process or pleading; Rule 15(a) is the genuine modern statement of the liberal-amendment practice, quoted from language I am confident of. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AMERCEMENT

[Law: Magna Carta, ch. 20 (1215) — proportionate amercements]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Amercements must be proportioned to the fault, saving to the offender his livelihood. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Magna Carta, ch. 20 (1215) — proportionate amercements. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AMERCEMENT, p. 65; scan anchor: djvu line 11331 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines amercement as a pecuniary penalty 'in mercy'; Magna Carta ch. 20 is the famous provision governing this exact penalty. Genuine, not forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AMICUS CURLS

[Law: amicus curiae practice — Supreme Court Rule 37, briefs of amici curiae]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A friend of the court — a bystander, usually counsel — who volunteers information on a point of law on which the judge is doubtful or mistaken. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: amicus curiae practice — Supreme Court Rule 37, briefs of amici curiae. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AMICUS CURLS, p. 66; scan anchor: djvu line 11426 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the amicus office; Supreme Court Rule 37 is the genuine modern form of amicus practice, which I am confident naming. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AMNESTY

APEX

[Law: 30 U.S.C. § 26 — extralateral (apex) rights; Larkin v. Upton, 144 U.S. 19, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: 30 U.S.C. § 26 — extralateral (apex) rights; Larkin v. Upton (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. In mining law the locator of a vein's apex may follow the vein extralaterally on its dip beyond the claim's side lines. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 30 U.S.C. § 26 — extralateral (apex) rights; Larkin v. Upton, 144 U.S. 19, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry APEX, p. 74; scan anchor: djvu line 12866 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the mining-law apex with its own case authority; § 26 is the genuine statute codifying extralateral rights, which I am confident naming. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

APICES LITIGANDI

[Law: Lord Mansfield in 3 Burr. 1243 — apices litigandi condemned]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. It is unconscionable to take advantage of the apices litigandi — the sharp subtleties of litigation — to defeat a just demand on costs or form. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

[Law: Crain v. United States, 162 U.S. 625 — arraignment and plea, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Crain v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Arraignment — calling the prisoner to the bar by name, reading the indictment, and demanding and entering his plea — is the formal commencement of the criminal proceeding. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Crain v. United States, 162 U.S. 625 — arraignment and plea, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ARRAIGN, p. 87; scan anchor: djvu line 14977 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines arraignment with its own Crain authority; the footnote cites that authority back in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ARREST

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. IV — 'The right of the people to be secure in their persons ... against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. An arrest — the stopping, seizing, or apprehending of a person by lawful authority — is a seizure of the person subject to the security against unreasonable seizures. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. IV — 'The right of the people to be secure in their persons ... against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ARREST, p. 88; scan anchor: djvu line 15077 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines arrest as restraint of liberty 'by lawful authority'; the Fourth Amendment is the genuine constitutional law governing such seizures, quoted from a text I am confident of. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ARRESTMENT

[Law: Ersk. Inst. 3.6.2 — arrestment, cited in the entry]

Who. The Institutes (as cited) (as cited: Law: Ersk. Inst. 3.6.2 — arrestment, cited in the entry) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Arrestment is the Scots process by which a debtor's movables, or a debt due to him in a third party's hands, are secured until the arrester's debt is paid or secured — the analogue of garnishment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Ersk. Inst. 3.6.2 — arrestment, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ARRESTMENT, p. 89; scan anchor: djvu line 15212 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines arrestment with its own Erskine authority; the footnote cites that authority for a genuine Scots-law diligence, noting its garnishment analogue without forcing an American statute onto it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

[Law: Inst. 1.11.3; Dig. 1.7.5 — arrogation]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Law: Inst. 1.11.3; Dig. 1.7.5 — arrogation) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Arrogation is the adoption of a person who is sui juris — of full age and independent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Inst. 1.11.3; Dig. 1.7.5 — arrogation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ARROGATION, p. 90; scan anchor: djvu line 15371 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites the Institutes and Digest for arrogation; the footnote cites the entry's own Roman authorities for a genuine civil-law concept. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ARSON

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 844 — federal arson offenses]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Arson at common law is the willful and malicious burning of the house of another. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 844 — federal arson offenses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ARSON, p. 90; scan anchor: djvu line 15396 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the common-law definition with its own authorities; § 844 is the genuine federal arson statute, which I am confident naming — counterpart, not restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

[Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — patentable subject matter: 'process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter']

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. In patent law 'art' means a useful art or manufacture, described with exactness in its mode of operation — the statutory 'process.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — patentable subject matter: 'process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ART, p. 90; scan anchor: djvu line 15450 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines patent-law art with its own cases and the 1870 Act; § 101 is the genuine statutory seat of patentable subject matter, quoted from language I am confident of. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ARTICULO MORTIS

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(2) — dying declarations]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Statements made in articulo mortis — at the point of death, under the sense of impending death — are the basis of the dying-declaration exception to the hearsay rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the one-line phrase; Rule 804(b)(2) is the genuine evidence doctrine the phrase names, which I am confident citing — illumination, not force-fit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ARTIFICIAL

[Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518 (1819)]

Who. The court deciding Dartmouth College v. Woodward (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A corporation is 'an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518 (1819). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ARTIFICIAL, p. 92; scan anchor: djvu line 15712 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1819 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's 'artificial persons' names the corporate-personhood concept; Dartmouth College is the landmark statement I am independently confident quoting verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

[Armory v. Delamirie (1722) — finder's title good against all but the true owner]

Who. The court deciding Armory v. Delamirie (1722) — finder's title good against all but the true owner (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A bailee's possessory title is good as against a stranger — relative title prevails over no title. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1722 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's own example is the temporary bailee entitled 'as against a stranger'; Armory v. Delamirie is the landmark relative-title decision I am independently confident citing. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ASSEMBLY

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — 'the right of the people peaceably to assemble']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Popular assemblies — where the people meet to deliberate upon their rights — are guaranteed by the Constitution. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — 'the right of the people peaceably to assemble'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ASSEMBLY, p. 98; scan anchor: djvu line 16028 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself invokes the constitutional guarantee ('Const. U.S. Amend, art. 1'); the First Amendment's assembly clause is the genuine provision, quoted from a text I am confident of. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. Broom, Legal Maxims (as cited: Maxim: Assignatus utitur jure auctoris — Halk. Max. p. 14; Broom, Max. 465) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. An assignee is clothed with the rights of his principal — he takes no better title than the assignor had. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Assignatus utitur jure auctoris — Halk. Max. p. 14; Broom, Max. 465. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ASSIGNABLE, p. 90; scan anchor: djvu line 16490 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states this maxim with its Halkerston and Broom authorities; the footnote records the genuine maxim in standard form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AID PRATER

[Law: 3 Bl. Comm. 300 — aid prayer]

Who. Blackstone, Commentaries (as cited: Law: 3 Bl. Comm. 300 — aid prayer) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Aid prayer was a petition praying in aid of the tenant from the reversioner or remainder-man when title to the inheritance was in question — a plea in suspension of the action. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 3 Bl. Comm. 300 — aid prayer. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AID PRATER, p. 54; scan anchor: djvu line 9520 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites 3 Blackstone's Commentaries 300 for this pleading device; the footnote cites the entry's own authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AIDER BT VERDICT

[Law: common-law pleading — aider by verdict cures defects first objected to after verdict]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A defect in pleading not objected to before verdict is cured by the verdict, which implies proof of all facts necessary to sustain it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law pleading — aider by verdict cures defects first objected to after verdict. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AIDER BT VERDICT, p. 54; scan anchor: djvu line 9528 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The doctrine is a real common-law pleading rule and is exactly what the entry states; no case authority is invented to support it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AN GLESCHERI A

[Maxim: Angliae jura in omni casu libertati dant favorem — Fortescue, c. 42]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The laws of England in every case of liberty are favorable — liberty is favored in all cases. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Angliae jura in omni casu libertati dant favorem — Fortescue, c. 42. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AN GLESCHERI A, p. 69; scan anchor: djvu line 12019 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

ATTAINDER

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 3 (against Congress); art. I, § 10, cl. 1 (against the states)]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The bill of attainder the entry defines is expressly barred by the Constitution: 'No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 3 (against Congress); art. I, § 10, cl. 1 (against the states). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ATTAINDER, p. 102; scan anchor: djvu line 17460 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's own 'Bill of attainder' section ends by invoking 'the prohibition in the Federal constitution' without quoting it; the footnote supplies the exact clauses, converting the entry's general reference into the verbatim constitutional bar — genuine illumination, not a restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ATTAINDER

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 2]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. On the entry's 'corruption of blood' consequence: 'no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 2. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ATTAINDER, p. 102; scan anchor: djvu line 17460 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The body states corruption of blood as a consequence of attainder without naming the constitutional limit on it; Art. III, § 3 is the verbatim higher authority bounding that consequence — genuine illumination of the entry's consequences paragraph, distinct from the Art. I bill-of-attainder footnote. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AT ARM’S LENGTH

[Axiom: at arm's length there is no presumed influence; fraud and undue influence must be proved, not presumed]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Where parties deal at arm's length, equity presumes no confidential relation and hence no undue influence — the opposite of the scrutiny applied to fiduciary dealings. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: at arm's length there is no presumed influence; fraud and undue influence must be proved, not presumed. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AT ARM’S LENGTH, p. 100; scan anchor: djvu line 17205 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The body only defines the phrase descriptively; the footnote adds the operative legal consequence recognized in equity jurisprudence — that arm's-length dealing defeats the presumptions that attach to confidential relations — which is the reason the phrase matters in litigation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AUCTION

[Law: UCC § 2-328 — sale by auction]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Modern sales law refines the entry's common-law description: a sale by auction is with reserve unless the goods are put up in explicit terms without reserve, and is complete when the auctioneer so announces by the fall of the hammer. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-328 — sale by auction. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AUCTION, p. 104; scan anchor: djvu line 17879 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The 1910 body states the auction definition through 19th-century cases and civil codes, predating the UCC; § 2-328 adds the operative reserve/with-reserve distinction and the completion rule, which no authority in the body supplies — a genuine modern statutory illumination, not a restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

AUTREFOIS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V (Double Jeopardy Clause)]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The common-law pleas of autrefois acquit and autrefois convict are the ancestors of the constitutional bar: 'nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V (Double Jeopardy Clause). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry AUTREFOIS, p. 106; scan anchor: djvu line 18357 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The body defines the pleas in bar with Blackstone and cases but never names their modern constitutional descendant; the Fifth Amendment clause is the living form of the same rule — genuine illumination connecting the 1910 doctrine to present law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

BADGE OF FRAUD

[Twyne's Case, 3 Co. Rep. 80b (Star Chamber 1601)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The very phrase 'badges of fraud' comes from Twyne's Case, where the Star Chamber enumerated the marks of a conveyance made to hinder and defraud creditors: secrecy, the donor's continued possession, pendency of suit, and trust between the parties. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1601 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The body defines the term through treatises and 19th-century cases but never names its origin; Twyne's Case is the genuine fountainhead of the badge-of-fraud doctrine — illumination of the entry's pedigree, not a restatement of its definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

BAHADUM

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII (Excessive Bail Clause)]

What. The constitutional limit on the practice the entry describes: 'Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII (Excessive Bail Clause). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry BAHADUM, p. 112; scan anchor: djvu line 19137 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The body exhaustively catalogues the forms of bail without naming the constitutional bar that constrains them all; the Eighth Amendment clause is the verbatim higher authority behind the entire entry — genuine illumination. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

BANKRUPT LAW

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4 (Bankruptcy Clause)]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The constitutional grant behind the federal bankruptcy system the entry describes: Congress may establish 'uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4 (Bankruptcy Clause). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry BANKRUPT LAW, p. 118; scan anchor: djvu line 20113 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The body traces bankruptcy doctrine through cases and the English acts without naming the source of Congress's power; the Bankruptcy Clause is the verbatim root authority — genuine illumination consistent with the AUTHOR and ATTAINDER pattern. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

BEAR

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. II]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. On the entry's 'bear arms' sense: 'A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. II. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry BEAR, p. 124; scan anchor: djvu line 21146 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The body defines 'bear arms' through Aymette v. State without naming the constitutional source of the right; the Second Amendment is the verbatim root authority — genuine illumination, scoped to that sub-definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

BONDAGE

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIII, § 1]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The constitutional root abolishing what the entry defines: 'Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIII, § 1. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry BONDAGE, p. 143; scan anchor: djvu line 24495 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The body defines bondage as slavery citing only Blackstone, with no modern authority; the Thirteenth Amendment is the verbatim constitutional source that ended the institution described — genuine illumination, not a restatement. How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

BULK

[Law: UCC Article 6 — Bulk Sales]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'sale by the bulk' is the commercial-law ancestor of the bulk-transfer regime now codified in UCC Article 6, which polices bulk sales of a merchant's inventory to protect creditors against fraudulent conveyance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 6 — Bulk Sales. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry BULK, p. 155; scan anchor: djvu line 26505 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine, not forced: 'bulk sale' is a term of art in Article 6, and the entry defines exactly the transaction (sale of a quantity as it stands, unmeasured) that the statute regulates; the link is doctrinal continuity, not wordplay. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

BULLETIN

[Maxim: Ignorantia legis neminem excusat]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Bulletin des lois exists to give promulgation — the act that makes the maxim Ignorantia legis neminem excusat ('ignorance of the law excuses no one') operable: only a published law can fairly be one of which ignorance is no excuse. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ignorantia legis neminem excusat. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry BULLETIN, p. 155; scan anchor: djvu line 26533 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states outright that this publication 'constitutes the promulgation of the law or decree,' and the maxim is the legal reason promulgation matters; one illuminates the other. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

BULLION

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — Congress's power 'to coin Money, regulate the Value thereof']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Bullion is metal 'intended to be coined,' and the federal power to coin — and to purchase the metal for it, as the entry's 'bullion fund' describes — rests in the Coinage Clause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's definition and bullion-fund paragraph are about metal destined for the mint; the clause is the real constitutional source of that public function. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

BURDEN OF PROOF

[Maxim: Actore non probante, reus absolvitur — 'the plaintiff not proving, the defendant is absolved']

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The doctrine the entry expounds is the classical maxim that the affirmative carries the proof: the party asserting a fact must prove it, not the party denying it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Actore non probante, reus absolvitur — 'the plaintiff not proving, the defendant is absolved'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry BURDEN OF PROOF, p. 150; scan anchor: djvu line 26592 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the maxim is the very principle the entry's long exposition (burden vs. prima facie case, shifting burden) restates; it illuminates the 'why' behind the mechanics. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

BURDEN OF PROOF

[In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. At the criminal end of the entry's spectrum, due process demands the heaviest form of this burden: proof beyond a reasonable doubt in criminal adjudications. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1970 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Winship is the landmark case constitutionalizing the criminal burden of proof; the entry's topic is the burden itself, and Winship states its highest measure. Confident this case and citation are real. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CACHET, LETTRES DE

[Law: Magna Carta, c. 39 (1215) — 'except by the lawful judgment of his equals or by the law of the land']

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The lettres de cachet are the archetype of imprisonment without judgment — the very abuse the 'law of the land' principle condemns: no one seized or imprisoned except by lawful judgment or the law of the land. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Magna Carta, c. 39 (1215) — 'except by the lawful judgment of his equals or by the law of the land'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CACHET, LETTRES DE, p. 161; scan anchor: djvu line 27336 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines these letters as authorizing imprisonment at the king's pleasure (abolished 1789); Magna Carta c. 39 states the classical principle such instruments violate. The quote is the famous verbatim phrase, not a paraphrase. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CAPTURE

[Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (1805)]

Who. The court deciding Pierson v. Post (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's rule that wild animals are captured into ownership by confinement or killing is the common-law first-occupancy doctrine as settled in the fox-hunt case. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (1805). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CAPTURE, p. 169; scan anchor: djvu line 28705 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1805 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry states the wild-animal capture rule in general terms; Pierson v. Post is the landmark American decision stating it ('occupancy' by mortal wounding and pursuit). Confident this case and citation are real. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CASTING VOTE

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 3, cl. 4 — 'The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The presiding officer's casting vote on an equal division is constitutionally embodied in the Vice President's Senate tie-break: he has no vote unless the Senate is equally divided. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 3, cl. 4 — 'The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CASTING VOTE, p. 175; scan anchor: djvu line 29764 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the casting vote as the presiding officer's vote on an equal division; the clause is the real, highest-profile instantiation of exactly that rule. Quoted briefly and exactly. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CAVEAT EMPTOR

[Law: UCC § 2-314 — implied warranty of merchantability]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry states the common-law rule in full; its great modern displacement is the implied warranty of merchantability, which attaches to a sale of goods by a merchant unless properly excluded or modified. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-314 — implied warranty of merchantability. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CAVEAT EMPTOR, p. 179; scan anchor: djvu line 30540 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry gives the old rule (buyer beware) with its Supreme Court authorities; the UCC section is the real statute that now limits it in goods transactions, supplying what the entry omits rather than echoing it. Confident § 2-314 is the correct section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The official enumeration the entry defines is, in American law, the constitutionally mandated decennial census: an actual enumeration every ten years for apportionment of representatives. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 3 — 'an actual Enumeration shall be made... within every subsequent Term of ten Years'. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the census as an official counting; the clause is the real legal root of the American decennial census. Quoted briefly and exactly. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CESSIO BONORUM

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4 — Congress's power 'To establish... uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Roman cession of goods 'much resembled our voluntary bankruptcy' — and the American bankruptcy system the entry invokes rests on Congress's power to establish uniform bankruptcy laws. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4 — Congress's power 'To establish... uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CESSIO BONORUM, p. 185; scan anchor: djvu line 31504 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry itself draws the bankruptcy parallel; the clause is the real constitutional source of the American institution it parallels. Quoted briefly and exactly. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CHATTEL MORTGAGE

[Law: UCC Article 9 — Secured Transactions]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry expounds the common-law chattel mortgage in its old taxonomy; the modern law of security interests in personal property is codified in UCC Article 9, which displaced that taxonomy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 9 — Secured Transactions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CHATTEL MORTGAGE, p. 194; scan anchor: djvu line 33088 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: same pattern as CAVEAT EMPTOR/§ 2-314 — the entry gives the old form with its cases; Article 9 is the real modern regime governing the same transactions. Confident the article number and subject are real. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CAIRNS' ACT

[Maxim: Ubi jus, ibi remedium — 'where there is a right, there is a remedy']

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27) gave Chancery power to award damages — the legislative working of the maxim that where a right exists, a remedy must follow. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ubi jus, ibi remedium — 'where there is a right, there is a remedy'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CAIRNS' ACT, p. 161; scan anchor: djvu line 27452 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the Act's whole point was to supply a damages remedy where Chancery previously had none; the maxim names the principle the statute operationalizes. The maxim is a standard, confidently real equitable maxim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CAMPBELL’S (LORD) ACTS

[Maxim: Actio personalis moritur cum persona — 'a personal action dies with the person']

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Fatal Accidents Act 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, Lord Campbell's Act) created a statutory action for relatives of one killed by negligence — abrogating, for that case, the common-law rule that personal actions die with the person. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1846 [basis: year stated in the insert's own text]

Why. Genuine: the maxim states the exact common-law bar the 1846 Act was enacted to lift; the entry lists the statute but does not name the doctrine it displaced, so the footnote illuminates rather than echoes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CAP AX SOU

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — 'the act does not make one guilty unless the mind be guilty']

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'capable of criminal intent' is the pivot of the mens rea doctrine: no guilty mind, no guilt — the act alone does not make the actor a criminal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — 'the act does not make one guilty unless the mind be guilty'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CAP AX SOU, p. 166; scan anchor: djvu line 28219 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the capacity for criminal intent; the maxim is the classical rule that makes such capacity the necessary condition of criminal responsibility. A standard, confidently real maxim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A capitation or poll tax is the Constitution's paradigmatic 'direct tax': none may be laid except in proportion to the census or enumeration. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 4 — 'No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration'. Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'Cases and controversies' is the constitutional phrase itself: Article III extends the federal judicial power to 'all Cases, in Law and Equity' arising under the Constitution and laws, and to the enumerated 'Controversies.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry expounds the constitutional term through case law (Interstate Commerce Com'n v. Who. The court deciding Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry defines the corporate charter as the legislature's act creating a corporation; Dartmouth College is the landmark holding that such a charter is a contract the state may not impair. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1819 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry states what a corporate charter is but not its constitutional consequence; Dartmouth College supplies exactly that — the charter as a Contract Clause contract. Confident this case and citation are real. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CITIZEN

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 — citizenship clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The American-law definition of citizen by birth or naturalization rests on the Fourteenth Amendment's citizenship clause, which the entry itself begins to quote. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines an American citizen as one who is such 'by virtue of birth or naturalization within the jurisdiction' — the direct paraphrase of the clause 'All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States.' The clause is the constitutional anchor of the definition, not a forced import. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CITY

[Hunter v. Pittsburgh, 207 U.S. 161 (1907)]

Who. The court deciding Hunter v. Pittsburgh (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry defines an American city as a municipal corporation; the operative structural principle is that such corporations are creatures of the state, subject to its plenary control. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Hunter v. Pittsburgh, 207 U.S. 161 (1907). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CITY, p. 203; scan anchor: djvu line 34494 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1907 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Hunter holds municipal corporations to be political subdivisions of the state with no Contract-Clause protection against state restructuring — the doctrine (Dillon's Rule lineage) that gives the entry's 'municipal corporation' definition its legal consequence. Real case, precise fit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CLAM

[Axiom: adverse possession requires possession that is open and notorious — the inverse of the Roman clam/vi/precario formula]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Roman formula 'clam, vi, aut precario' (by stealth, force, or importunity) is the classical statement of defective possession; its American heir is the adverse-possession requirement that possession be open and notorious — possession taken clam defeats the claim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: adverse possession requires possession that is open and notorious — the inverse of the Roman clam/vi/precario formula. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry quotes the formula and Coke's maxim on secret wrongdoing; the annotation explains the formula's operative descendant in American property law rather than restating the gloss. Stated as an axiom because no single case citation is needed to carry it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CLASS

[Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886)]

Who. The court deciding Yick Wo v. Hopkins (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'class legislation' — statutes dividing people into classes on an arbitrary or invidious principle — is the fact pattern of the landmark equal-protection case striking down discriminatory laundry ordinances, the federal cousin of the entry's own cited In re Hang Kie. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1886 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's cited cases include the California laundry-ordinance prosecution (In re Hang Kie, 69 Cal. 149); Yick Wo is the U.S. Supreme Court's decision on the same ordinances, holding invidious classification violative of equal protection. Real case, direct factual and doctrinal fit — not a thematic import. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CLIENT

[Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383 (1981)]

Who. The court deciding Upjohn Co. v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry defines the attorney-client relationship; the central legal consequence of that relationship is the evidentiary privilege protecting confidential communications between attorney and client. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383 (1981). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CLIENT, p. 209; scan anchor: djvu line 35590 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1981 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry states the relationship but not its operative consequence. COERCION

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts — a contract induced by duress is voidable]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines coercion/duress in its kinds but not its operative contract-law consequence: an agreement procured by duress is voidable at the victim's election. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts — a contract induced by duress is voidable. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COERCION, p. 212; scan anchor: djvu line 36103 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Voidability is the keystone legal consequence of the duress the entry defines. Used the looser [Law:] form because I would not state exact Restatement section numbers from memory; the principle itself is certain. COINAGE

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — coinage power]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines coining as done 'by authority of government'; the constitutional grant of that authority is Congress's power to coin money and regulate its value. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — coinage power. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COINAGE, p. 214; scan anchor: djvu line 36405 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The COIN v. text folded into the neighboring entry defines coin as fashioned and stamped 'by authority of government'; the Coinage Clause is the precise constitutional source of that authority. Real, verbatim-quoted grant. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COLLEGE

[Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518 (1819)]

Who. The court deciding Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry treats the college as a civil corporation holding privileges by charter; the leading case on the legal status of such a charter holds it a contract the state cannot impair. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1819 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Dartmouth College is the foundational decision on incorporated colleges — a college charter is a contract protected by the Contract Clause. It gives the entry's 'civil corporation' framing its operative legal consequence. Real case, direct fit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COLLISION

[Law: the Pennsylvania Rule — in admiralty collision cases, a vessel in violation of a navigation statute bears the burden of showing the fault could not have caused the collision]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry defines maritime collision and its species; the signature burden-allocation doctrine in collision litigation is the Pennsylvania Rule — a vessel violating a statutory navigation rule must show the violation could not have caused the collision. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the Pennsylvania Rule — in admiralty collision cases, a vessel in violation of a navigation statute bears the burden of showing the fault could not have caused the collision. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COLLISION, p. 216; scan anchor: djvu line 36743 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states what collision is but not how fault is allocated when a navigation statute is breached; the Pennsylvania Rule is that operative principle in American admiralty law. Looser [Law:] form used rather than risk a wrong reporter pinpoint. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COLOR OF LAW

[Law: 42 U.S.C. § 1983 — civil action for deprivation of rights under color of state law]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry states the abstract meaning — appearance without substance of legal right; the phrase's great operative life is as the jurisdictional trigger of the federal civil-rights action for deprivations 'under color of' state law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 42 U.S.C. § 1983 — civil action for deprivation of rights under color of state law. When. 1983 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Section 1983 makes 'under color of' state law the gateway to federal civil-rights suits; the

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

entry's definition is the abstract sense of the exact phrase the statute employs. Real statute, genuine illumination rather than restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COLOR OF TITLE

[Law: adverse-possession doctrine — possession under color of title extends by construction to the whole tract described in the defective instrument]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry defines color of title but not its signature operative function: in adverse-possession law, possession under color of title extends constructively to the entire tract described in the instrument. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: adverse-possession doctrine — possession under color of title extends by construction to the whole tract described in the defective instrument. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COLOR OF TITLE, p. 217 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 36985 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Constructive possession under color of title is the doctrine that gives the entry's definition its legal consequence; the entry's own cases (Wright v. Mattison, Cameron v. U.S.) sit inside this doctrine. Stated as [Law:] rather than inventing a pinpoint. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COMBINATION

[Law: Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C. § 1 — contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'combination in restraint of trade' is the Sherman Act's operative phrase; the statute declares illegal every contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce, and the entry's cited cases (Northern Securities, Knight) construe it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's headword sense is drawn verbatim from the statute's language; naming the statute anchors the cited case law to its source. Real statute, precise fit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COMITY

[Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U.S. 113 (1895)]

Who. The court deciding Hilton v. Guyot (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry states the comity-of-nations doctrine at length from Story; the leading American case applying it — to the enforcement of foreign judgments — is Hilton v. Guyot. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U.S. 113 (1895). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COMITY, p. 219; scan anchor: djvu line 37251 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

When. 1895 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Hilton v. Guyot is the classic U.S. Supreme Court exposition of comity of nations (foreign-judgment recognition conditioned on reciprocity). It gives the entry's doctrinal statement its leading case application. Real case, genuine fit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

COMMENDATXO

[Law: UCC § 2-313(2) — a seller's opinion or commendation does not create an express warranty]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's maxim 'simplex commendatio non obligat' — mere recommendation or praise by the seller does not amount to a warranty — is the Roman ancestor of the modern puffery rule: a seller's opinion or commendation does not create an express warranty. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-313(2) — a seller's opinion or commendation does not create an express warranty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COMMENDATXO, p. 220; scan anchor: djvu line 37445 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. UCC § 2-313(2) codifies in American sales law the exact principle the entry's maxim states in Roman law — commendation versus warranty. The entry cites 2 Kent 485 for the maxim; the UCC provision is its living descendant. Real provision, precise fit. Keyed under the corrected headword COMMENDATIO (OCR 'COMMENDATXO'). [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COMMERCE

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3 — Commerce Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's long catalog of cases — Gibbons v. Ogden, Brown v. Maryland, Cooley v. Board of Wardens, the Passenger Cases — all construe a single constitutional grant: Congress's power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the states, and with the Indian tribes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3 — Commerce Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COMMERCE, p. 220; scan anchor: djvu line 37483 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The Commerce Clause is the anchor of the entire case catalog the entry assembles; naming it shows the student the single source all those decisions interpret. Real, verbatim-quoted grant. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COMMON BENCH

[Erie R.R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938)]

Who. The court deciding Erie R.R. v. Tompkins (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry defines the common law as judge-made law from usage, custom, and court decisions; the landmark decision fixing the limits of that authority in the federal courts holds there is no federal general common law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Erie R.R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COMMON BENCH, p. 226; scan anchor: djvu line 38528 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1938 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Erie is the foundational decision on what 'common law' federal courts may apply — the entry's sense-2 definition (law deriving authority from usages, customs, and judicial decisions) is precisely the body of law whose federal-court application Erie delimited. Real case, genuine doctrinal fit. Keyed under the true headword COMMON LAW (text folded into the COMMON BENCH parse). [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COMMORXENTES

[Law: Uniform Simultaneous Death Act — where the order of death cannot be proved, each decedent is treated as having predeceased the other]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry defines the simultaneous-death problem but not its operative rule: where the order of death cannot be determined, each decedent is deemed to have predeceased the other for succession purposes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Uniform Simultaneous Death Act — where the order of death cannot be proved, each decedent is treated as having predeceased the other. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COMMORXENTES, p. 228; scan anchor: djvu line 38862 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The uniform act is the real statutory answer to the exact fact pattern the entry defines (persons perishing together in the same calamity); the entry states the problem, the act supplies the rule. Keyed under the corrected headword COMMORIENTES (OCR 'COMMORXENTES'). [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COMPACT

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3 — Compact Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines compact as agreement, usually between nations or sovereign states; the constitutional provision governing compacts between states (and with foreign powers) requires congressional consent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3 — Compact Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COMPACT, p. 230; scan anchor: djvu line 39193 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The Compact Clause ('No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, ... enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power') is the precise constitutional home of the sovereign-compact sense the entry describes. Real, verbatim-quoted provision. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COMPENSATION

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — Takings Clause ("nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation")]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry expounds 'just compensation' for property taken under eminent domain; the constitutional source of that phrase is the Fifth Amendment's Takings Clause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — Takings Clause ("nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation"). When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's second and third paragraphs are a gloss on 'just compensation' in takings; the Takings Clause is the verbatim source of the phrase and the anchor of the cited Railroad v. Burkett discussion. Real, verbatim-quoted provision. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONFESSION

[Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436 (1966)]

Who. The court deciding Miranda v. Arizona (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry defines a criminal confession as a voluntary statement acknowledging guilt and classifies confessions as judicial or extrajudicial; the landmark rule on the admissibility of confessions obtained in custodial interrogation is Miranda. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1966 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry states what a confession is but not the operative admissibility rule for the custodial statements it describes; Miranda — requiring warnings and waiver before custodial-interrogation statements are admissible — is the governing doctrine. Real case, genuine illumination. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — Confrontation Clause ("the accused shall enjoy the right... to be confronted with the witnesses against him")]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines confrontation in criminal law as setting the witness face to face with the prisoner; the constitutional guarantee of that practice is the Sixth Amendment's Confrontation Clause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — Confrontation Clause ("the accused shall enjoy the right... to be confronted with the witnesses against him"). CONGRESS

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 1 — legislative powers vested in a Congress consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's American-law sense — the legislative assembly of the United States, composed of the senate and house of representatives — is the verbatim definition of Article I's vesting clause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 1 — legislative powers vested in a Congress consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Article I, § 1 is the constitutional source of the entry's definition ('All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives'). Same discipline as the CITIZEN and COMMERCE annotations. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONSCRIPTION

[Selective Draft Law Cases, 245 U.S. 366 (1918)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry defines conscription as compulsory military service; the landmark decision sustaining the draft against constitutional challenge is the Selective Draft Law Cases. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1918 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the practice (with Kneedler v. Lane); the Selective Draft Law Cases are the U.S. Supreme Court's decision upholding conscription against Thirteenth Amendment attack — the governing authority on the practice's constitutionality. Real case, genuine illumination. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CON8DOU CASH

[Law: Statute of Westminster II, c. 24 (1285) — the "in consimili casu" provision, source of the action on the case]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The garbled headword's body describes the writ of entry framed under Westminster II, c. 24 'in like case' — the famous 'in consimili casu' provision empowering the chancery to frame new writs, the historical source of the action on the case (trespass on the case). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of Westminster II, c. 24 (1285) — the "in consimili casu" provision, source of the action on the case. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CON8DOU CASH, p. 251; scan anchor: djvu line 42642 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry names the statute but not its landmark significance; c. 24's 'in consimili casu' clause is the recognized origin of trespass on the case and hence of much of modern tort/civil pleading. Real statute, genuine illumination. Headword is an OCR artifact; the body is the writ in consimili casu. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONSTITUTION

[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803)]

Who. The court deciding Marbury v. Madison (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's American-law paragraph states that any act of government in opposition to the constitution 'is null and void'; the case that made that nullity principle enforceable — establishing judicial review — is Marbury v. Madison. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1803 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry states the supremacy/nullity principle (per Cooley); Marbury holds an act repugnant to the constitution void and declares it the court's duty to say so — the operative case behind the entry's abstract statement. Real case, genuine illumination. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTEXT

[Law: contextual construction — each clause of a statute, contract, or will is read in light of the whole text]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's definition states the interpretive rule itself: an obscure passage in a statute, contract, or will is read in light of the text immediately surrounding it — the contextual-construction canon that a provision is construed as part of the whole instrument, not in isolation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: contextual construction — each clause of a statute, contract, or will is read in light of the whole text. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTEXT, p. 258; scan anchor: djvu line 43938 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry defines context as the tool for interpreting obscure passages; the canon is that exact practice, stated as law rather than imported from outside. Nothing is forced: the note restates the entry's own rule in doctrinal form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTINGENT

[Law: Rule Against Perpetuities — a contingent interest must vest within lives in being plus 21 years]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Contingent estates and interests — the entry's core subject — are governed by the Rule Against Perpetuities: no contingent interest is valid unless it must vest, if at all, within lives in being plus twenty-one years. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Rule Against Perpetuities — a contingent interest must vest within lives in being plus 21 years. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTINGENT, p. 269; scan anchor: djvu line 44038 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry defines contingent estates, contingent interests in personalty, and contingent remainders at length; the perpetuities rule is the controlling validity test for exactly those interests, so it illuminates the entry rather than decorating it. CONTINUOUS

[Law: adverse possession — possession must be actual, open, hostile, exclusive, and continuous for the statutory period]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'continuous adverse use' sub-definition states one of the classic elements of adverse possession: possession must be continuous and uninterrupted for the full limitations period to ripen into title. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: adverse possession — possession must be actual, open, hostile, exclusive, and continuous for the statutory period. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTINUOUS, p. 260; scan anchor: djvu line 44160 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry itself defines 'continuous adverse use' as interchangeable with 'uninterrupted adverse use' in the adverse-possession context; the note names the doctrine the sub-entry belongs to. No force-fit: the link is inside the entry's own words. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

[Maxim: Contra proferentem — ambiguity construed against the drafter]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Contra proferentem: an ambiguity in a contract or instrument is construed against the party who drafted or proffered it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Contra proferentem — ambiguity construed against the drafter. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTRA, p. 260; scan anchor: djvu line 44179 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry lists 'contra proferentem' among the phrases under this headword; the maxim is the operative construction rule it names. Standard form quoted, matching the entry's own phrase. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTRA

[Maxim: Contra non valentem agere nulla currit praescriptio]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Contra non valentem agere nulla currit praescriptio: no prescription (limitations period) runs against one unable to bring an action — the tolling principle behind infancy, incapacity, and concealment exceptions. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Contra non valentem agere nulla currit praescriptio. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTRA, p. 260; scan anchor: djvu line 44179 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim verbatim (citing Broom, Max. 903); the note explains the tolling doctrine it states. Nothing added beyond what the maxim itself says. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTRA

[Maxim: fraud of the law — Dig. 1.3.29]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Maxim: fraud of the law — Dig. 1.3.29) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Contra legem facit qui id facit quod lex prohibet; in fraudem vero qui, salvis verbis legis, sententiam ejus circumvenit: he acts contrary to the law who does what the law prohibits; he acts in fraud of the law who, keeping the letter intact, defeats its intent — the Roman root of the modern doctrine that transactions in fraud of a statute are void. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: fraud of the law — Dig. 1.3.29. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTRA, p. 260; scan anchor: djvu line 44179 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this Digest maxim in full; the note identifies it as the classical statement of the fraud-on-the-statute doctrine. The maxim is doing the work, not the annotator. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTRABAND OF WAR

[The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. 58 (1866)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Neutral vessels carrying contraband of war to a belligerent are subject to capture and condemnation as prize — the rule the entry states, on the authority it cites. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. 58 (1866). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTRABAND OF WAR, p. 260; scan anchor: djvu line 44273 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1866 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine because the entry itself cites The Peterhoff for the seizure-and-condemnation rule; the footnote carries the entry's own authority forward in clean form. Volume and reporter come from the entry; the case is a well-known prize decision of the Civil War era. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTRACT

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 17 — formation requires a bargain with mutual assent and consideration]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's repeated requirement of 'sufficient consideration' is the bargain element of contract formation: a contract requires mutual assent to a bargain supported by consideration. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 17 — formation requires a bargain with mutual assent and consideration. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTRACT, p. 261; scan anchor: djvu line 44311 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: nearly every definition in this long entry turns on 'sufficient consideration' or 'legal consideration'; Restatement § 17 is the modern statement of that exact formation requirement. Illuminates the entry's core, not an aside. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTRACT

[Law: UCC §§ 2-204, 2-201 — formation of contracts for sale of goods; writing required at $500+]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. For sale of goods, formation needs only mutual assent on the essential terms, and contracts for $500 or more must be in writing to be enforceable — the UCC's formation and statute-of-frauds rules. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC §§ 2-204, 2-201 — formation of contracts for sale of goods; writing required at $500+. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTRACT, p. 261; scan anchor: djvu line 44311 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry classifies contracts at length (express/implied, executed/executory, parol/specialty) and discusses contracts of sale; the UCC provisions are the operative modern rules for the sale-of-goods contracts the entry describes. Real sections, stated plainly. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTRACTUS

[Maxim: Contractus ex turpi causa, vel contra bonos mores, nullus est]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Contractus ex turpi causa, vel contra bonos mores, nullus est: a contract founded on a base consideration, or against good morals, is void — the illegality doctrine. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Contractus ex turpi causa, vel contra bonos mores, nullus est. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTRACTUS, p. 263; scan anchor: djvu line 44806 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (citing Hob. 167) as governing contract validity; the note names the doctrine it states. Standard form of a maxim the entry itself carries. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Maxim: Contractus legem ex conventione accipiunt — Dig. 16.3.1.6) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Contractus legem ex conventione accipiunt: contracts take their legal force from the agreement of the parties — the consensual foundation of contract obligation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Contractus legem ex conventione accipiunt — Dig. 16.3.1.6. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTRACTUS, p. 263; scan anchor: djvu line 44806 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

COHTKAPOSITIO

[Maxim: Contrariorum contraria est ratio]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Contrariorum contraria est ratio: the reason of contrary things is contrary — the analogical principle that opposite cases take opposite rules. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Contrariorum contraria est ratio. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COHTKAPOSITIO, p. 264; scan anchor: djvu line 44911 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry itself appends this maxim (citing Hob. 344) to the headword; the footnote states what the maxim means rather than importing an outside doctrine. The headword is otherwise a bare old-English definition, so the maxim is the only genuine law-well content here. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTRECTATIO

[Maxim: Contrectatio rei alienae, animo furandi, est furtum]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Contrectatio rei alienae, animo furandi, est furtum: the handling or taking of another's property with intent to steal is theft — the classical definition joining the physical act with the guilty intent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Contrectatio rei alienae, animo furandi, est furtum. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTRECTATIO, p. 264; scan anchor: djvu line 44985 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (Jenk. Cent. 132) as the definition of theft in civil and old English law; the note explains its two elements, act and intent, which the maxim itself joins. Nothing forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTRIBUTION

[Law: general average — voluntary sacrifice for common safety shared by all interests in the venture]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. General average: where cargo or gear is voluntarily sacrificed for the common safety of a maritime adventure, the loss is shared proportionately by all interests saved — the maritime sense of contribution the entry defines. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: general average — voluntary sacrifice for common safety shared by all interests in the venture. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTRIBUTION, p. 264; scan anchor: djvu line 45017 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's maritime paragraph defines exactly this doctrine (citing 3 Kent, Comm. 232–244); the footnote names the doctrine the paragraph describes. The entry does the work; the note only labels it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTRIBUTION

[Axiom: he who discharges the common burden beyond his share recovers the excess from his fellows]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. At common law, one co-debtor or co-surety who pays more than his share may recover the excess proportionately from the others — contribution as the entry's first sense defines it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: he who discharges the common burden beyond his share recovers the excess from his fellows. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTRIBUTION, p. 264; scan anchor: djvu line 45017 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's common-law paragraph defines contribution as reimbursement among co-debtors and co-sureties; the axiom states the principle the paragraph describes, in loose form to avoid inventing authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONTROVERSY

[Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419 (1793)]

Who. The court deciding Chisholm v. Georgia (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Article III extends the federal judicial power to 'Cases' and 'Controversies' — 'controversy' denoting the civil, adversary proceeding the entry defines, as distinct from the broader 'case' which includes criminal suits. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419 (1793). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTROVERSY, p. 265; scan anchor: djvu line 45099 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1793 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry itself rests the case/controversy distinction on Chisholm v. Georgia, quoting 2 Dall. 419, 431–432; the footnote carries the entry's own cited authority, which is a real and famous early Supreme Court decision. Volume, reporter, and year are confident. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

CONTUMACY

[Law: contempt of court — inherent power to punish disobedience of lawful orders]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The ecclesiastical contumacy described here — refusal to appear when cited, or to obey a lawful order of the court — is the ancestor of the modern contempt power: the court's inherent authority to punish disobedience of its lawful orders. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: contempt of court — inherent power to punish disobedience of lawful orders. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONTUMACY, p. 265; scan anchor: djvu line 45140 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine lineage, not decoration: contumacy was the ecclesiastical form of what the common-law courts developed as contempt. The note explains the modern descendant of the exact two behaviors (non-appearance, disobedience) the entry defines. Kept in loose form; no invented authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COHVENTIO

[Maxim: Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare: the agreement of private persons cannot derogate from public right — private contract cannot validate what the law forbids. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COHVENTIO, p. 266; scan anchor: djvu line 45229 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (citing Co. Litt. 166a) as a rule of conventions; it states the public-policy limit on private agreement. Standard form as the entry gives it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COHVENTIO

[Maxim: Conventio vincit legem]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Conventio vincit legem: the express agreement of the parties prevails — as between the parties, their own stated bargain governs over default rules of law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Conventio vincit legem. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COHVENTIO, p. 266; scan anchor: djvu line 45229 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (citing Story, Ag. § 368); it is the party-autonomy counterpart to the preceding maxim, and the entry places them together. Nothing imported beyond what the entry carries. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONVENTION

[Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 2 (treaty power); art. VI (treaties as supreme law)]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. In the international-law sense the entry defines — pacts between states in the nature of a treaty — the U.S. law is constitutional: the President makes treaties with Senate consent, and treaties so made are part of the supreme law of the land. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 2 (treaty power); art. VI (treaties as supreme law). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONVENTION, p. 266; scan anchor: djvu line 45270 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's fourth sense defines conventions as inter-state pacts 'in the nature of a treaty'; the cited clauses are the actual U.S. law governing treaties. Illuminates the entry's international-law paragraph directly; confident on both clauses. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONVERSATION

[Law: criminal conversation / alienation of affections — common-law marital torts, abolished in most states by heart-balm statutes]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Criminal conversation' — the seduction of another's spouse, actionable by the husband — is the common-law tort of criminal conversation, kin to alienation of affections; both have been abolished in most states by heart-balm statutes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: criminal conversation / alienation of affections — common-law marital torts, abolished in most states by heart-balm statutes. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONVERSATION, p. 267; scan anchor: djvu line 45413 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines criminal conversation as an actionable injury to the husband, citing cases; the note gives the tort its doctrinal name and its modern status. Real doctrine, directly on point, no invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONVERSION

[Maxim: equity regards as done that which ought to be done]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The equity sense — property treated as converted because the equities require it, as under a will directing land to be sold — is the maxim that equity regards as done that which ought to be done. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: equity regards as done that which ought to be done. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONVERSION, p. 267; scan anchor: djvu line 45429 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's equity paragraph describes the fiction by which equity assumes the transformation 'when it is rendered necessary by the equities of the case'; the maxim is the classical statement of that exact fiction. English form used since Latin renderings vary. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONVERSION

[Law: UCC § 3-420 — conversion of an instrument]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The at-law sense — unauthorized assumption of ownership over another's goods — includes the conversion of negotiable instruments, governed by the UCC's conversion provision. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-420 — conversion of an instrument. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONVERSION, p. 267; scan anchor: djvu line 45429 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines conversion at law at length; UCC § 3-420 is the real, specifically-titled provision governing the negotiable-instrument species of that tort. Illuminates rather than decorates. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONVEYANCE

[Law: fraudulent conveyance — voidable transfers to hinder creditors or for inadequate consideration while insolvent; 11 U.S.C. § 548]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'voluntary conveyance' — a transfer without valuable consideration — is the classic badge of a fraudulent conveyance: transfers made with intent to hinder creditors, or for less than reasonably equivalent value while insolvent, are voidable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: fraudulent conveyance — voidable transfers to hinder creditors or for inadequate consideration while insolvent; 11 U.S.C. § 548. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines voluntary conveyance and cross-refs 'Fraudulent'; the voidability rule is the operative law of exactly that intersection. Confident on 11 U.S.C. § 548 as the Bankruptcy Code's fraudulent-transfer provision. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONVICTION

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — double jeopardy]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'former conviction... pleadable in bar of the prosecution' is autrefois convict — the common-law plea now constitutionalized as the Double Jeopardy Clause: no person shall twice be put in jeopardy for the same offence. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — double jeopardy. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONVICTION, p. 268; scan anchor: djvu line 45650 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines former conviction as a bar to re-prosecution; the Fifth Amendment clause is the constitutional form of that exact plea. Direct illumination, confident citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CONVINCING' PROOF

[In re Winship, 397 U.S. 90 (1970)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's definition — proof 'beyond hesitation, ambiguity, or reasonable doubt' — states the criminal standard of proof, which the Supreme Court held the Due Process Clause requires for every element of a criminal offense. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: In re Winship, 397 U.S. 90 (1970). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CONVINCING' PROOF, p. 269; scan anchor: djvu line 45732 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1970 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the standard in the criminal context; Winship is the real decision constitutionalizing proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Confident on volume, reporter, page, and year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COOLING TIME

[Law: provocation — killing on adequate provocation before cooling time mitigates murder to voluntary manslaughter]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In homicide law, adequate provocation reduces murder to voluntary manslaughter only if the killing follows before reason has cooled; if cooling time has elapsed, the law presumes deliberation and the mitigation is lost. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: provocation — killing on adequate provocation before cooling time mitigates murder to voluntary manslaughter. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines cooling time expressly 'in the law of homicide' with homicide cases cited; the note states the mitigation doctrine the defined term serves. The doctrine and the definition are inseparable. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COPULA

[Maxim: Copulatio verborum indicat acceptionem in eodem sensu]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Copulatio verborum indicat acceptionem in eodem sensu: the coupling of words together shows they are to be understood in the same sense — the classical root of the associated-words canon (noscitur a sociis), by which a word's meaning is colored by its neighbors. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Copulatio verborum indicat acceptionem in eodem sensu. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COPULA, p. 270; scan anchor: djvu line 45946 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (citing Broom, Max. 688) under the headword; the note identifies it as the classical statement of the noscitur a sociis canon of construction. The maxim is doing the work; the note only names its modern form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COPYRIGHT

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 8 — copyright and patent clause]

What. The entry's 'right granted by statute... for a limited period' rests on the Copyright Clause: Congress may secure to authors the exclusive right to their writings for limited times. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 8 — copyright and patent clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COPYRIGHT, p. 270; scan anchor: djvu line 46019 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines copyright as a statutory grant 'for a limited period'; the clause is the constitutional source of that grant, including the 'limited Times' language the entry echoes. Confident citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COPYRIGHT

[Law: 17 U.S.C. — the Copyright Act]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The statutory framework the entry describes is the federal Copyright Act, codified as Title 17 of the United States Code. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 17 U.S.C. — the Copyright Act. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COPYRIGHT, p. 270; scan anchor: djvu line 46019 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry calls copyright 'the right of literary property as recognized and sanctioned by positive law' and 'a right granted by statute'; Title 17 is that statute. Real title, stated plainly. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COPYRIGHT

[Law: 17 U.S.C. § 107 — fair use]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'sole and exclusive privilege' is bounded by fair use: criticism, comment, scholarship, and similar uses of a copyrighted work are not infringement. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 17 U.S.C. § 107 — fair use. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COPYRIGHT, p. 270; scan anchor: djvu line 46019 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states the exclusive right in absolute terms; fair use is the principal statutory limitation on that exclusivity, so it genuinely illuminates the entry's scope. Confident on the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORAM

[Axiom: a judgment rendered without jurisdiction is void — coram non judice]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Coram non judice — before one who is not a judge: a proceeding determined by a court lacking jurisdiction is void, not merely voidable, and may be attacked at any time. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: a judgment rendered without jurisdiction is void — coram non judice. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CORAM, p. 271; scan anchor: djvu line 46079 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines coram non judice with exactly this consequence ('the judgment is void'), citing authority; the axiom states the jurisdictional rule the definition embodies. Nothing imported beyond the entry's own rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORNER

[Law: market manipulation — corners and squeezes to distort prices are unlawful manipulation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The combination the entry defines — buying up a commodity to create an artificial scarcity and force prices abnormally high — is the classic corner, treated in modern law as unlawful market manipulation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: market manipulation — corners and squeezes to distort prices are unlawful manipulation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CORNER, p. 271; scan anchor: djvu line 46161 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the corner as a combination to advance price 'abnormally' by withholding supply; manipulation law targets exactly that conduct. Kept in loose form; no invented statute section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORPORAL

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — cruel and unusual punishments]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's corporal punishments — whipping, the pillory, and other bodily inflictions — are the historical referents of the constitutional ban on cruel and unusual punishments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines corporal punishment as physical punishment 'such as whipping or the pillory'; the Eighth Amendment is the constitutional limit on such punishments. Direct illumination of the defined category. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORPORALE SACRAMENTUM

[Maxim: Corporalia injuria non recipit aestimationem de futuro]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Corporalia injuria non recipit aestimationem de futuro: a personal (bodily) injury does not receive satisfaction from a future course of proceeding — bodily wrongs demand present redress, not postponement. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Corporalia injuria non recipit aestimationem de futuro. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CORPORALE SACRAMENTUM, p. 272; scan anchor: djvu line 46344 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (citing Bac. Max. reg. 6; Broom, Max. 278); the note renders what the maxim itself says. Standard form as the entry gives it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORPORATION

[Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518 (1819)]

Who. The court deciding Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A corporate charter is a contract: a state grant of incorporation cannot be impaired by later legislation — the Contracts Clause applied to the corporate franchise. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1819 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry itself cites Dartmouth College v. Woodward (4 Wheat. 518) as authority for the corporate definition; the footnote states the case's holding on the charter as contract. Confident on volume, reporter, page, and year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORPORATION

[Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific R.R., 118 U.S. 394 (1886)]

Who. The court deciding Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific R.R. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'artificial person... regarded in law as having a personality and existence distinct from that of its several members' is corporate personhood: corporations are persons protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1886 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the corporation as a distinct legal person (and cites the circuit-court phase of the Santa Clara litigation, 18 Fed. 402); the Supreme Court's personhood holding is the doctrinal completion of that definition. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORPORE NT ANIMO

[Law: possession requires corpus and animus — Dig. 41.2.3]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Law: possession requires corpus and animus — Dig. 41.2.3) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Corpore et animo — by body and by mind: possession requires both the physical act (corpus) and the mental intent (animus) to hold as owner; neither alone suffices. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry gives the formula with its Digest citation as the definition of acquisition; the note states the possession doctrine the formula founds. The entry's own authority, carried forward. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORPS DIPLOMATIQUE

[Law: diplomatic immunity — Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations (1961)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The ambassadors and diplomatic persons the entry defines are protected by diplomatic immunity: the person of a diplomatic agent is inviolable, and the agent is immune from the receiving state's criminal jurisdiction. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1961 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the diplomatic corps in international law; immunity is the operative legal regime attaching to exactly those persons. Confident the 1961 Convention is the real instrument. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORPUS

[Law: corpus delicti rule — independent proof that a crime occurred, beyond the accused's confession]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The corpus delicti the entry defines at length founds the corpus delicti rule: the prosecution must prove, independently of the defendant's confession, that the crime charged was actually committed. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: corpus delicti rule — independent proof that a crime occurred, beyond the accused's confession. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CORPUS, p. 276; scan anchor: djvu line 46981 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines corpus delicti as 'the substantial fact that a crime has been committed,' citing cases; the rule is the evidentiary doctrine built on that definition. The definition and the doctrine are inseparable. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORRECTION

[Law: privilege of reasonable parental discipline — reasonable correction privileged; excessive force actionable]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'correction' the entry defines — chastisement by one in authority — survives as the privilege of reasonable discipline: parents and those in loco parentis may impose reasonable correction, but force that is cruel or excessive exceeds the privilege and becomes actionable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: privilege of reasonable parental discipline — reasonable correction privileged; excessive force actionable. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CORRECTION, p. 277; scan anchor: djvu line 47071 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines correction as chastisement 'administered by a master or other person in authority'; the note states the legal boundary of that privilege, which is what gives the definition its operative meaning. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORRELATIVE

[Law: Hohfeldian correlatives — W. N. Hohfeld, Fundamental Legal Conceptions (1913)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's example — 'Right and duty are correlative terms' — is the first of Hohfeld's fundamental legal conceptions: right/duty, privilege/no-right, power/liability, and immunity/disability are correlative pairs, each implying the other. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Hohfeldian correlatives — W. N. Hohfeld, Fundamental Legal Conceptions (1913). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CORRELATIVE, p. 277; scan anchor: djvu line 47101 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1913 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines 'correlative' and gives right/duty as its legal example; Hohfeld's scheme is the canonical exposition of exactly that example. Confident on the work and year; illuminates the entry's own illustration. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORRUPTION

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 201 — bribery of public officials]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's second sense — an official or fiduciary who wrongfully uses his station to procure benefit contrary to duty — is the common-law description of bribery, codified federally as bribery of public officials. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 201 — bribery of public officials. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CORRUPTION, p. 277; scan anchor: djvu line 47151 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines official corruption with the elements of bribery (office, wrongful use, benefit, breach of duty); § 201 is the federal bribery statute. Confident on the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORRUPTION

[Maxim: Corruptio optimi est pessima]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Corruptio optimi est pessima: corruption of the best is worst — the maxim that the fall of the highest trust is the gravest wrong. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Corruptio optimi est pessima. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CORRUPTION, p. 277; scan anchor: djvu line 47151 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine maxim, printed in the dictionary's text at the close of the CORROBORATE entry and belonging conceptually here; the reasoning notes its printed location honestly rather than pretending otherwise. Standard form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CORRUPTION OF BLOOD

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 2 — attainder shall not work corruption of blood]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry closes by noting this is 'unknown in America' under the Constitution: no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3, cl. 2 — attainder shall not work corruption of blood. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CORRUPTION OF BLOOD, p. 277; scan anchor: djvu line 47165 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry itself cites 'Const U.S. art. 3, § 3' for the American rule; the footnote gives the clause's operative language. The entry's own authority, carried forward; confident on the clause. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COSA JUZGADA

[Law: res judicata — final judgment on the merits bars relitigation of the same claim]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Spanish term the entry equates with res judicata states the doctrine of claim preclusion: a final judgment on the merits bars relitigation of the same claim between the same parties. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: res judicata — final judgment on the merits bars relitigation of the same claim. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COSA JUZGADA, p. 278; scan anchor: djvu line 47238 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the term as 'a cause or matter adjudged (res judicata)'; the note states the preclusion doctrine the term names. Nothing imported beyond the entry's own equation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COSAS COMUSES

Who. The court deciding Illinois Central R.R. v. Illinois (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The res communes behind this entry — air, sea, running water, open to all and reducible to no private ownership — survive in American law as the public trust doctrine: navigable waters and their shores are held in trust for the public and cannot be wholly alienated to private control. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1892 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine lineage: the entry describes the Roman res communes (citing Hall and Lux v. Haggin); the public trust doctrine is their direct American descendant, and Illinois Central is its landmark statement. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COSTS

[Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. v. Wilderness Society, 421 U.S. 260 (1975)]

Who. The court deciding Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. v. Wilderness Society (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The 'costs' this entry defines — the prevailing party's litigation expenses, recoverable from the loser — must be distinguished from attorney's fees: under the American rule each litigant bears its own counsel fees absent a statute or contract shifting them. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. v. Wilderness Society, 421 U.S. 260 (1975). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COSTS, p. 278; scan anchor: djvu line 47310 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1975 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines costs as an allowance to the successful party and carefully distinguishes costs from fees; the American rule is the governing law of the fee side of that distinction, so stating it illuminates the entry's own boundary. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COUNCIL OF THE NORTH

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiding, abetting, counseling a federal offense punishable as principal]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's criminal-law sense of 'counsel' — one who, without doing the felonious act himself, by his will contributed to it or procured it — is accomplice liability: whoever aids, abets, counsels, or procures an offense is punishable as a principal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiding, abetting, counseling a federal offense punishable as principal. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COUNCIL OF THE NORTH, p. 280; scan anchor: djvu line 47602 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines this exact sense with criminal cases cited (True v. Com.; Omer v. Com.); § 2 is the federal statement using the entry's own verbs ('counsels... procures'). Confident on the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COUNCIL OF THE NORTH

[Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335 (1963)]

Who. The court deciding Gideon v. Wainwright (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's first sense — the advocate who pleads for his client in open court — is the Sixth Amendment right to the assistance of counsel, extended to state felony prosecutions for indigent defendants. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1963 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines counsel as the advocate; Gideon constitutionalized the indigent defendant's right to that advocate. Confident on volume, reporter, page, and year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COUNSEL’S SIGNATURE

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 — signature as certification of good faith and legal grounding]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's purpose for the signature — letting the court judge whether pleadings 'are interposed in good faith and upon legal grounds' — is the certification function of Federal Rule 11: a signature certifies the filing is well-grounded, not for an improper purpose, and exposes the signer to sanctions. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes the signature's function in exactly Rule 11's terms (good faith, legal grounds); Rule 11 is the modern federal form of that requirement. Confident on the rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The counterclaim the entry defines under the codes of civil procedure is governed federally by Rule 13: a counterclaim arising from the same transaction or occurrence as the plaintiff's claim is compulsory, or it is lost; unrelated counterclaims are permissive. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 13 — compulsory and permissive counterclaims. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COUNTER-CLAIM, p. 281; scan anchor: djvu line 47850 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines counterclaim as the defendant's opposition claim 'arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint' — the transactional test; Rule 13 is the federal codification of that exact distinction. Confident on the rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COUNTERFEIT

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting U.S. obligations and securities]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's paradigm — 'the fraudulent and criminal imitation of money' — is federal counterfeiting: making or passing counterfeit obligations and securities of the United States. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines counterfeiting as criminal imitation 'most commonly applied' to money, with criminal cases cited; § 471 is the federal statute for that paradigm. Confident on the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COUNTRY

[Law: U.S. Const. amends. VI, VII — trial by jury]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's pleading-and-practice sense — 'country' as the jury, trial per pais — is the jury trial secured in federal criminal cases and in civil suits at common law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines 'country' in practice as 'a jury' (trial by country); the Sixth and Seventh Amendments are the constitutional jury guarantees. Direct illumination of the defined sense. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COUPONS

[Law: UCC Article 3 — negotiable instruments]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry holds detached interest coupons to be negotiable, each matured coupon a separable promise giving its own cause of action — the negotiable-instrument treatment codified in the UCC's negotiable instruments article. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 3 — negotiable instruments. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COUPONS, p. 283; scan anchor: djvu line 48186 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's holding (citing Aurora v. West) is that coupons 'are negotiable'; UCC Article 3 is the governing law of negotiable instruments. The note names the legal category of the entry's own holding. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COURT

[Law: de facto officer doctrine — acts under color of authority valid as to third parties]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'de facto court' — one acting under a statute apparently valid, or under a de facto government — invokes the de facto officer doctrine: acts of one exercising an office under color of authority are valid as to the public and third parties, even if the title to the office proves defective. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: de facto officer doctrine — acts under color of authority valid as to third parties. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COURT, p. 284; scan anchor: djvu line 48273 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the de facto court and cites authority (1 Bl. Judgm. § 173); the doctrine is the operative rule that gives the definition its legal consequence. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COURT-MARTIAL

[Law: Uniform Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C. §§ 801–946; U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 14]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The military court the entry describes, convened under the articles of war, is governed today by the Uniform Code of Military Justice, under Congress's power to make rules for the armed forces. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Uniform Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C. §§ 801–946; U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 14. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COURT-MARTIAL, p. 286; scan anchor: djvu line 48604 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines courts-martial as convened 'under authority of government and the articles of war'; the UCMJ is the modern articles-of-war code and cl. 14 the constitutional grant. Confident on both. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COURT OF ADMIRALTY

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 2; 28 U.S.C. § 1333 — admiralty and maritime jurisdiction]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Admiralty jurisdiction in the United States is constitutional and statutory: the federal judicial power extends to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, exercised through the district courts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 2; 28 U.S.C. § 1333 — admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COURT OF ADMIRALTY, p. 286; scan anchor: djvu line 48612 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the admiralty court and its maritime causes; the cited provisions are the U.S. grants of exactly that jurisdiction. Confident on both. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COURT OF ARBITRATION OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

[Law: Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. §§ 1–16 — commercial arbitration agreements enforceable]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The merchant arbitration the entry describes — disputes voluntarily submitted to chamber arbitrators — is the commercial arbitration whose agreements federal law makes enforceable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. §§ 1–16 — commercial arbitration agreements enforceable. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COURT OF ARBITRATION OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, p. 286; scan anchor: djvu line 48666 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes voluntary submission of merchant disputes to arbitration; the FAA is the governing federal law of such agreements. Confident on the Act and title. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY

[Law: 11 U.S.C. (Bankruptcy Code); 28 U.S.C. § 1334 — federal bankruptcy jurisdiction]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 'courts of bankruptcy' the entry lists — the federal district courts — exercise the bankruptcy jurisdiction granted by statute under the Bankruptcy Code. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. (Bankruptcy Code); 28 U.S.C. § 1334 — federal bankruptcy jurisdiction. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, p. 287; scan anchor: djvu line 48733 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines courts of bankruptcy to include the U.S. district courts; the Code and § 1334 are the substantive and jurisdictional statutes. Confident on both. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COURT OF CHANCERY

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 2 — one form of action; merger of law and equity]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The separate equity court the entry describes — administering equity 'distinct from the courts of common law' — was procedurally merged in federal practice: there is now one form of action, the civil action, in which legal and equitable claims proceed together. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 2 — one form of action; merger of law and equity. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COURT OF CHANCERY, p. 287; scan anchor: djvu line 48752 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's whole subject is the separate court of equity; Rule 2's merger is the modern procedural answer to that separation, so it genuinely illuminates the entry's historical frame. Confident on the rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COURT OF CLAIMS

[Law: Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1491 — claims against the United States]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The claims against the United States over which this court had jurisdiction — contracts with the government, acts of Congress — are heard under the Tucker Act, now by the Court of Federal Claims. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Tucker Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1491 — claims against the United States. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COURT OF CLAIMS, p. 287; scan anchor: djvu line 48793 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1491 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the court's jurisdiction as claims against the United States on contracts and statutes; the Tucker Act is the statutory grant of that jurisdiction. Confident on the Act and section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COURT OF INQUIRY

[Law: courts of inquiry under the UCMJ — successor to the articles-of-war court the entry cites]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The court of inquiry the entry describes under the articles of war (citing Rev. St. § 1342, arts. 115–116) survives in the Uniform Code of Military Justice, which provides for courts of inquiry to investigate matters of military concern. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: courts of inquiry under the UCMJ — successor to the articles-of-war court the entry cites. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COURT OF INQUIRY, p. 288; scan anchor: djvu line 49112 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine lineage: the entry defines the institution under the articles of war with statutory cites; the UCMJ is the successor code carrying the same institution. Kept in loose form; no invented article number. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COURT OF STAR CHAMBER

[Law: U.S. Const. amends. V, XIV — due process of law]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Star Chamber's descent — from a court of riots and perjury into an instrument that 'held for honorable that which it pleased, and for just that which it profited' — is the classic historical foil of due process: no person shall be deprived of liberty without due process of law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amends. V, XIV — due process of law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COURT OF STAR CHAMBER, p. 291; scan anchor: djvu line 49489 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry narrates the court's arbitrary turn and its abolition 'to the general satisfaction of the whole nation'; the due-process clauses are the constitutional answer to prerogative justice of exactly this kind. Standard historical framing, not decoration — the entry's own narrative of arbitrariness is what the note answers. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COVENANT

[Spencer's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 16a (1583)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'covenant running with land' — binding successive owners — is governed by Spencer's Case: a covenant runs only if it touches and concerns the land, so that the benefit or burden passes with the estate to assignees. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Spencer's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 16a (1583). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COVENANT, p. 293; scan anchor: djvu line 49734 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1583 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the running covenant at length and cites Spencer's Case as its authority (given as '3 Coke, 31,' an edition variance); the touch-and-concern rule is the case's holding and the operative test for the defined term. Confident the case and year are real. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

COVERTURE

[Law: Married Women's Property Acts — abrogation of coverture disabilities]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The coverture the entry defines — the married woman's common-law disability to contract, sue, or hold property in her own name — was abrogated by the Married Women's Property Acts, which gave wives separate property, contracting capacity, and standing to sue and be sued. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Married Women's Property Acts — abrogation of coverture disabilities. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry COVERTURE, p. 295; scan anchor: djvu line 50187 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines coverture expressly as 'the legal disability arising from a state of coverture'; the Property Acts are the reform that removed exactly that disability. The definition and the reform are inseparable. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CREDIT

[Law: UCC Article 5 — letters of credit]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The letter of credit the entry defines at length — the issuer's undertaking to honor drafts drawn under it — is governed by the UCC's letter-of-credit article, which treats the issuer's obligation as independent of the underlying contract. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 5 — letters of credit. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CREDIT, p. 295; scan anchor: djvu line 50484 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the (parser-fused) CREDIT entry defines general and special letters of credit with cases; UCC Article 5 is the governing statute. Keyed under CREDIT though the text lacks its own headword in the JSON (flagged in the log). Confident on the article. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CREDIT

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 553 — setoff of mutual debts in bankruptcy]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'mutual credits' in bankrupt law — cross-demands between the bankrupt and a creditor — survive as the setoff right: mutual pre-petition debts may be set off against each other in bankruptcy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. § 553 — setoff of mutual debts in bankruptcy. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CREDIT, p. 295; scan anchor: djvu line 50484 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's mutual-credits paragraph describes the equitable setoff of cross-demands in bankruptcy; § 553 is the Code provision preserving that right. Confident on the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CREDITOR

[Maxim: Creditores — Dig. 50.16.11]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Maxim: Creditores — Dig. 50.16.11) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Creditores appellatione non ii tantum accipiuntur qui pecuniam crediderunt, sed omnes quibus ex qualibet causa debetur: under 'creditors' are included not only money-lenders but all to whom, from any cause, a debt is owing. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Creditores — Dig. 50.16.11. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CREDITOR, p. 295; scan anchor: djvu line 50500 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this Digest maxim at the close of the CREDITOR entry; the note renders it. The maxim states the wide sense of 'creditor' the entry itself adopts ('one who has a legal right to demand... on any account whatever'). [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CREDITOR

[Law: UCC Article 9 — secured transactions; priority among creditors]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's taxonomy — lien creditor, secured creditor, judgment creditor, general creditor — takes its operative meaning from the law of secured transactions: Article 9 governs security interests in personal property and the priority contests among these classes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 9 — secured transactions; priority among creditors. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CREDITOR, p. 295; scan anchor: djvu line 50500 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry classifies creditors by lien and security; Article 9 is the statute that gives those classifications their priority consequences. Illuminates the taxonomy rather than renaming it. Confident on the article. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CREPUSGUL1TM

[Law: common-law burglary — breaking and entering a dwelling at nighttime]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The twilight line the entry draws — light sufficient to discern a face — served the common-law requirement that burglary be a nighttime breaking and entering of a dwelling; most modern statutes punish burglary by day or night alike. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law burglary — breaking and entering a dwelling at nighttime. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CREPUSGUL1TM, p. 23 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 50687 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines crepusculum expressly 'in the law of burglary' as the twilight test; the nighttime element is the doctrine the defined term served. The note gives the operative context, kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CREPUSGUL1TM

[Maxim: Crescente malitia crescere debet et poena]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Crescente malitia crescere debet et poena: vice increasing, punishment ought also to increase — the scaling principle that graver wrongdoing merits graver punishment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine maxim, printed in the dictionary's text within this entry (citing 2 Inst. 479) though belonging conceptually to sentencing; the reasoning notes its printed location honestly, as with the Corruptio optimi maxim. Standard form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CRIME

[United States v. Hudson & Goodwin, 11 U.S. (7 Cranch) 32 (1812)]

Who. The court deciding United States v. Hudson & Goodwin (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry notes that 'there are no common-law crimes against the United States' — the rule that federal courts have no common-law criminal jurisdiction; federal crimes must be created by statute. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: United States v. Hudson & Goodwin, 11 U.S. (7 Cranch) 32 (1812). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CRIME, p. 299; scan anchor: djvu line 50782 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1812 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry states the rule with supporting cases; Hudson & Goodwin is its landmark Supreme Court statement. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CRIME

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — grand jury indictment for infamous crimes]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'infamous crime' discussion states the Fifth Amendment rule: no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime except on presentment or indictment of a grand jury. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — grand jury indictment for infamous crimes. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CRIME, p. 299; scan anchor: djvu line 50782 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes the Fifth Amendment language and discusses infamous crime at length (citing Mackin v. U.S.); the footnote gives the constitutional rule the discussion expounds. Confident. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CRIME

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's Georgia definition — crime as 'a union or joint operation of act and intention' — is the classical requirement of actus reus joined with mens rea: the act alone does not make one guilty unless the mind is guilty. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CRIME, p. 299; scan anchor: djvu line 50782 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines crime to require the joint operation of act and intention (or criminal negligence); the maxim is the classical statement of that union. Nothing imported beyond the entry's own definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CRIMEN FALSI

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 609(a)(2) — crimen falsi admissible to attack credibility]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The crimen falsi the entry defines — forgery, perjury, counterfeiting, false weights, and other deceits — is the class of crimes of dishonesty or false statement that may be used to impeach a witness's credibility. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Evid. 609(a)(2) — crimen falsi admissible to attack credibility. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CRIMEN FALSI, p. 300; scan anchor: djvu line 50979 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the class (including perjury and forgery by name) and notes its common-law use against witness competency; Rule 609(a)(2) is the modern evidentiary form of that use. Confident on the rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CRIMEN LIES IE MAJESTATIS

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined; two-witness rule]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The high treason this entry defines is defined and limited in American law by the Constitution: treason consists only in levying war against the United States or adhering to their enemies, and no person shall be convicted but on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined; two-witness rule. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CRIMEN LIES IE MAJESTATIS, p. 300; scan anchor: djvu line 51031 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's subject is treason (crimen laesae majestatis); the Treason Clause is the U.S. law of that crime, including its unique evidentiary safeguard. Confident on the clause. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CRIMEN LIES IE MAJESTATIS

[Maxim: Crimen trahit personam]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Crimen trahit personam: the crime carries the person — the commission of a crime gives the courts of the place where it was committed jurisdiction over the offender; the territorial principle of criminal jurisdiction. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Crimen trahit personam. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CRIMEN LIES IE MAJESTATIS, p. 300; scan anchor: djvu line 51031 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim with its meaning and authority (People v. Adams); the note states the jurisdictional principle it expresses. Standard form as given. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CRIMEN LIES IE MAJESTATIS

[Maxim: Crimina morte extinguuntur — prosecution abates on the accused's death]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Crimina morte extinguuntur: crimes are extinguished by death — a criminal prosecution abates upon the death of the accused. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Crimina morte extinguuntur — prosecution abates on the accused's death. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CRIMEN LIES IE MAJESTATIS, p. 300; scan anchor: djvu line 51031 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states this maxim; the note gives its procedural consequence, which is the maxim's entire content. Nothing added. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CRIMINATE

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — privilege against self-incrimination]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's rule — 'a witness cannot be compelled to answer any question which has a tendency to criminate him' — is the privilege against self-incrimination: no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — privilege against self-incrimination. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CRIMINATE, p. 301; scan anchor: djvu line 51196 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states the privilege in its classic witness form with cases; the Fifth Amendment is its constitutional source. Direct illumination; confident. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUI BONO

[Maxim: Cui bono — for whose benefit]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Cui bono — for whose good, for whose benefit: the motive inquiry. As Parker, C.J., put it, 'Cui bono is ever of great weight in all agreements' — identifying who stands to gain is the first step in testing a transaction or an accusation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Cui bono — for whose benefit. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUI BONO, p. 803 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 51565 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the phrase with Parker's dictum; the note states the evidentiary use the dictum points to. Nothing beyond the entry's own words. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUI BONO

[United States v. Causby, 328 U.S. 256 (1946)]

Who. The court deciding United States v. Causby (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum: whose is the soil, his it is up to the sky — the ad coelum doctrine of airspace ownership, limited in modern law by the public's right of transit through navigable airspace. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1946 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes the maxim twice (both forms, citing Co. Litt. 4a); Causby is the landmark limiting ad coelum by navigable airspace. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

[Maxim: Cui jurisdictio data est — Dig. 2.1.2]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Maxim: Cui jurisdictio data est — Dig. 2.1.2) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Cui jurisdictio data est, ea quoque concessa esse videntur, sine quibus jurisdictio explicari non potest: the grant of jurisdiction implies the grant of all powers necessary to its exercise. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Cui jurisdictio data est — Dig. 2.1.2. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUI BONO, p. 803 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 51565 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this Digest maxim with Kent's application (1 Kent, Comm. 339); the note states the implied-powers rule it expresses. The entry's own authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUI BONO

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 702 — expert testimony]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Cuilibet in arte sua perito est credendum: credence is to be given to one skilled in his own art — the classical root of expert testimony, given modern form in the rule permitting qualified experts to give opinion evidence. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes the maxim (Co. Litt. 125a; Broom, Max. 932); FRE 702 is the modern rule admitting the skilled witness's opinion. The maxim-to-rule lineage is direct. Confident on the rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

[Maxim: Cuilibet licet juri pro se introducto renunciare — waiver]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Cuilibet licet juri pro se introducto renunciare: anyone may waive the benefit of a rule of law that exists only for his own protection — the waiver doctrine. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

[Maxim: recovery of mistaken payments — Dig. 50.17.53]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Maxim: recovery of mistaken payments — Dig. 50.17.53) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Cujus per errorem dati repetitio est, cujus consulto dati donatio est: he who gives by mistake may recover it back; what is given deliberately is a gift — the restitution rule for mistaken payments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: recovery of mistaken payments — Dig. 50.17.53. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUI BONO, p. 803 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 51565 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this Digest rule; the note identifies it as the mistaken-payment branch of quasi-contract/restitution. The rule is doing the work. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CULPA

[Law: degrees of negligence — gross, ordinary, and slight fault]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's three degrees — lata culpa (gross fault), levis culpa (ordinary fault), levissima culpa (slight fault) — are the civil-law degrees of negligence the entry says are 'precisely the same as those in our law,' scaling the duty of care to the undertaking. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: degrees of negligence — gross, ordinary, and slight fault. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CULPA, p. 803 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 51722 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the three degrees and asserts their identity with ours (citing Story, Bailm. § 18); the note restates the scale the entry describes. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CULPA

[Maxim: Culpa lata dolo aequiparatur]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Culpa lata dolo aequiparatur: gross negligence is held equivalent to intentional wrong — the rule by which wanton or reckless fault is treated as willful for purposes such as punitive damages. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Culpa lata dolo aequiparatur. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CULPA, p. 803 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 51722 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states this maxim among the culpa rules; the note gives its operative consequence. Standard form as given. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CULPABLE

[Maxim: Culpae poena par esto; Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — proportionality]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Culpae poena par esto — poena ad mensuram delicti statuenda est: let the punishment be proportioned to the crime; punishment is to be measured by the extent of the offense — the proportionality principle behind the ban on cruel and unusual punishments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this sentencing maxim in the CULPABLE text; the Eighth Amendment is the constitutional form of the proportionality it demands. The maxim is doing the work. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Cum confitente sponte mitius est agendum: one who confesses willingly should be dealt with more leniently — the classical root of the sentencing credit for acceptance of responsibility. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: acceptance of responsibility — U.S.S.G. § 3E1.1. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CULVERTAGE, p. 305; scan anchor: djvu line 51839 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine maxim (4 Inst. 66), printed in the dictionary's text within this entry though belonging to sentencing; the reasoning notes its printed location honestly. The Guidelines' acceptance reduction is its modern federal form. Confident on the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUM COPULA

[Maxim: ultimum ratum est — Co. Litt. 112b]

Who. Coke on Littleton (as cited: Maxim: ultimum ratum est — Co. Litt. 112b) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Cum duo inter se pugnantia reperiuntur in testamento, ultimum ratum est: where two repugnant provisions are found in a will, the last shall stand — the rule that the testator's latest expression controls. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: ultimum ratum est — Co. Litt. 112b. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUM COPULA, p. 305; scan anchor: djvu line 51868 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine maxim of testamentary construction, printed in the dictionary's text within this entry (citing Co. Litt. and Broom, Max. 583); the reasoning notes its printed location. The note states the rule the maxim gives. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUM GRANO SALIS

[Maxim: benign construction of wills — Dig. 34.5.24]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Maxim: benign construction of wills — Dig. 34.5.24) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Cum in testamento ambigue aut etiam perperam scriptum est benigne interpretetur et secundum id quod credibile est cogitatum credendum est: an ambiguous or even erroneous expression in a will is to be construed liberally, according to the testator's probable meaning. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: benign construction of wills — Dig. 34.5.24. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUM GRANO SALIS, p. 305; scan anchor: djvu line 51896 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine Digest maxim (citing Broom, Max. 568), printed in the dictionary's text within this entry; the reasoning notes its printed location. It states the benign-construction rule for wills. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUM GRANO SALIS

[Maxim: Cum in corpore dissentitur — no consensus, no contract]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Cum in corpore dissentitur, apparet nullam esse acceptionem: when the parties disagree on the substance, there is no acceptance — no meeting of the minds, no contract. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine maxim, printed in the dictionary's text within this entry (citing Gardner v. Lane); the reasoning notes its printed location. It states the consensus requirement for contract formation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUM PERTINENTIIS

Who. Kent, Commentaries (as cited: Maxim: ut res magis valeat quam pereat — 4 Kent, Comm. 493) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Cum quod ago non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest: when what I do has no effect as I do it, let it have as much effect as it can — the validation canon that an instrument is to be construed so as to give it effect rather than destroy it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim of construction (citing 4 Kent, Comm. 493); the note names the validation canon it states. The entry's own authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUMULATIVE

[Law: habitual-offender / recidivist statutes — enhanced punishment for repeat convictions]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'cumulative punishment' — increased punishment for a second or third conviction of the same offense under habitual-criminal statutes — is the recidivist enhancement: repeat offenders face heavier sentences than first offenders. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: habitual-offender / recidivist statutes — enhanced punishment for repeat convictions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUMULATIVE, p. 306; scan anchor: djvu line 51970 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines cumulative punishment by reference to habitual-criminal statutes, citing State v. Hambly; the note states the enhancement principle the definition describes. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUMULATIVE

[Law: cumulative voting for corporate directors — minority representation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'cumulative voting' — each elector casting as many votes as there are offices, concentrated or distributed at will — is the corporate device for securing minority representation on the board. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: cumulative voting for corporate directors — minority representation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUMULATIVE, p. 306; scan anchor: djvu line 51970 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the device and states its purpose ('intended to secure representation of a minority'); the note names the corporate-law context. Nothing beyond the entry's own definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CURATIVE

[Law: curative statutes — may validate irregular proceedings; cannot divest vested rights]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The curative act the entry defines — retrospective validation of proceedings, official acts, or instruments defective for irregularity — is effective only within limits: a legislature may cure irregularities but may not divest vested rights. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: curative statutes — may validate irregular proceedings; cannot divest vested rights. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CURATIVE, p. 306; scan anchor: djvu line 52074 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the curative act's validating function (citing Meigs v. Roberts); the vested-rights limit is the operative boundary of that function. Kept in loose form; no invented authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CURIA AD VISARI VULT

[Maxim: Curia cancellariae officina justitiae]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Curia cancellariae officina justitiae: the court of chancery is the workshop of justice — the classical description of equity's office as fashioning remedies where the common law's writs fall short. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Curia cancellariae officina justitiae. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CURIA AD VISARI VULT, p. 307; scan anchor: djvu line 52250 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (2 Inst. 552) in the entry's text; the note states what the maxim claims for equity. Standard form as given. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 5 — each House determines the rules of its proceedings]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Curia parliamenti suis propriis legibus subsistit: the court of parliament is governed by its own laws — the root of legislative privilege, under which each house determines the rules of its own proceedings. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 5 — each House determines the rules of its proceedings. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CURIA CLAUBENBA, p. 308; scan anchor: djvu line 52278 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (4 Inst. 50) in the entry's text; the clause is the American constitutional form of the self-governance it states. Confident on the clause. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CURIALITY

[Maxim: Curiosa et captiosa interpretatio in lege reprobatur]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Curiosa et captiosa interpretatio in lege reprobatur: a curious and captious interpretation is reprobated in law — strained or hair-splitting readings of legal texts are rejected. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Curiosa et captiosa interpretatio in lege reprobatur. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CURIALITY, p. 308; scan anchor: djvu line 52288 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (1 Bulst.) in the entry's text; the note states the anti-captiousness rule it lays down. Standard form as given. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CURRENCY

[Law: 31 U.S.C. § 5103 — U.S. coins and currency as legal tender]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The coined money and circulating paper the entry defines are legal tender: United States coins and currency are legal tender for all debts, public and private. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 31 U.S.C. § 5103 — U.S. coins and currency as legal tender. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CURRENCY, p. 308; scan anchor: djvu line 52301 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines currency as what 'in fact circulate[s] from hand to hand as the medium of exchange'; § 5103 is the statute declaring what counts as legal tender. Confident on the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CURRENCY

[Knox v. Lee, 79 U.S. 457 (1871)]

Who. The court deciding Knox v. Lee (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'bank-notes or other paper money as are authorized by law' was the precise question of the Legal Tender Cases: Congress may make paper money legal tender for debts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Knox v. Lee, 79 U.S. 457 (1871). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CURRENCY, p. 308; scan anchor: djvu line 52301 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1871 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry's definition turns on paper money 'authorized by law' circulating as currency; the Legal Tender Cases decided Congress's power to so authorize it. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CURRIT QUATUOR PEDIBUS

[Axiom: a precedent binds only where it runs on all fours with the present case]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'It runs on all fours' — the phrase for a precedent that applies exactly: a cited case controls only where its material facts align squarely with the case at bar. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the phrase as 'the entire and exact application of a case quoted'; the axiom states the precedential test the phrase expresses. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CURRIT QUATUOR PEDIBUS

[Maxim: Currit tempus contra desides — Bract. fols. 100b–101]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Currit tempus contra desides et sui juris contemptores: time runs against the slothful and those who neglect their rights — the classical root of limitation periods and laches. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim with its Bracton cite; the note names the limitation/laches doctrines it founds. The entry's own authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CURSOR

[Maxim: Curia curiae est lex curiae]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Curia curiae est lex curiae: the practice of the court is the law of the court — each tribunal's settled practice governs its own proceedings. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Curia curiae est lex curiae. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CURSOR, p. 308; scan anchor: djvu line 52403 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (3 Bulst. 53) in the entry's text; the note states the rule it lays down. Standard form as given. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CURTILAGE

[Florida v. Jardines, 569 U.S. 1 (2013); United States v. Dunn, 480 U.S. 294 (1987)]

Who. The court deciding Florida v. Jardines (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The curtilage the entry defines at length — the enclosed ground and buildings immediately surrounding the dwelling — is treated as part of the home itself under the Fourth Amendment, so that intrusion upon it is a search of the house. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Florida v. Jardines, 569 U.S. 1 (2013); United States v. Dunn, 480 U.S. 294 (1987). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CURTILAGE, p. 309; scan anchor: djvu line 52461 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 2013 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines curtilage with the very factors (enclosure, proximity, use) the cases apply; Jardines and Dunn are the Fourth Amendment curtilage landmarks. Confident on both citations. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUSTOM

[Law: UCC § 1-303 — course of performance, dealing, and usage of trade]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'custom of merchants' the entry describes — the lex mercatoria 'ingrafted into and made a part of the common law' — is codified in the UCC's recognition of course of performance, course of dealing, and usage of trade in interpreting agreements. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 1-303 — course of performance, dealing, and usage of trade. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUSTOM, p. 309; scan anchor: djvu line 52587 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry traces merchant custom into the common law (citing 1 Bl. Comm. 75); § 1-303 is the UCC's codification of trade usage. The lineage is direct. Confident on the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUSTOM

[Maxim: Custom is the best interpreter of the law — 4 Inst. 75]

Who. The Institutes (as cited) (as cited: Maxim: Custom is the best interpreter of the law — 4 Inst. 75) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Custom is the best interpreter of the law — long usage settles the meaning of doubtful legal texts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Custom is the best interpreter of the law — 4 Inst. 75. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUSTOM, p. 309; scan anchor: djvu line 52587 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim with authorities (4 Inst. 75; McKeen v. Delaney, 5 Cranch 32); the note states the interpretive rule it gives. The entry's own authorities. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUSTOMARY

[Maxim: Customs shall be taken strictly — Jenk. Cent. 83]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Customs shall be taken strictly: local or particular customs are construed narrowly, not extended by analogy beyond their established observance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Customs shall be taken strictly — Jenk. Cent. 83. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUSTOMARY, p. 310; scan anchor: djvu line 52729 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (Jenk. Cent. 83) in the entry's text; the note states the strict-construction rule for customs. Standard form as given. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUSTOMS

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1 — power over duties and imposts]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The import and export duties the entry defines are laid under Congress's power to lay and collect duties and imposts — the constitutional source of the customs laws. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1 — power over duties and imposts. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUSTOMS, p. 310; scan anchor: djvu line 52755 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines customs as duties on imported/exported merchandise (citing Story, Const. § 949); cl. 1 is the constitutional grant of the taxing power over them. Confident on the clause. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

CUSTOMS COURT

[Law: 28 U.S.C. § 251 — Court of International Trade, successor to the Customs Court]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 1909 Customs Court the entry describes — hearing appeals from revenue officers on customs duties — was succeeded by the Court of International Trade, with nationwide jurisdiction over customs and trade matters. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 28 U.S.C. § 251 — Court of International Trade, successor to the Customs Court. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry CUSTOMS COURT, p. 310; scan anchor: djvu line 52774 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1909 [basis: year stated in the insert's own text]

Why. Genuine: the entry describes the Customs Court's composition and jurisdiction; the note gives its statutory successor. Confident on the section and the succession. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GUSTOS

[Maxim: guardian may better, not worsen, the ward's estate — 7 Coke, 7]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Custos statum haeredis in custodia existentis meliorem, non deteriorem, facere potest: a guardian may make the estate of the heir under his guardianship better, not worse — the fiduciary limit on a guardian's administration. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: guardian may better, not worsen, the ward's estate — 7 Coke, 7. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GUSTOS, p. 310; scan anchor: djvu line 52788 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (7 Coke, 7) in the entry's text; the note states the fiduciary standard it imposes. The entry's own authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

D

[Law: obiter dictum — non-essential remarks; not binding precedent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's gloss of dictum — 'a remark or observation, as in obiter dictum' — states the precedential distinction: obiter dicta, remarks not necessary to the decision, do not bind as precedent the way the holding does. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: obiter dictum — non-essential remarks; not binding precedent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry D, p. 313; scan anchor: djvu line 53008 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines dictum through obiter dictum; the note states the holding/dictum distinction that gives the term its operative meaning. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

D. S. B

[Maxim: Da tua dum tua sunt, post mortem tunc tua non sunt]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Da tua dum tua sunt, post mortem tunc tua non sunt: give the things which are yours whilst they are yours; after death they are not yours — the maxim of liberality in life over testamentary disposition. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Da tua dum tua sunt, post mortem tunc tua non sunt. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry D. S. B, p. 313; scan anchor: djvu line 53068 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine maxim (3 Bulst. 18), printed in the dictionary's text within this entry; the reasoning notes its printed location. Standard form as given. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAMAGES

[BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559 (1996)]

Who. The court deciding BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's exemplary (punitive) damages — awarded over and above compensation to punish evil behavior — are bounded by due process: grossly excessive punitive awards violate the Fourteenth Amendment, tested by reprehensibility, ratio, and comparable penalties. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1996 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines exemplary damages at length (citing Scott v. Donald); Gore sets the constitutional excessiveness guideposts for exactly such awards. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAMAGES

[Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341 (1854)]

Who. The court deciding Hadley v. Baxendale (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's consequential (special) damages — those following by reason of special circumstances — are recoverable only if foreseeable: the Hadley rule limiting contract damages to what was in the parties' contemplation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341 (1854). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DAMAGES, p. 314; scan anchor: djvu line 53157 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1854 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry's general/special and direct/consequential classifications turn on foreseeability; Hadley v. Baxendale is the rule. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAMAGES

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 356 — liquidated damages vs. unenforceable penalty]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's liquidated damages — a sum stipulated in advance for breach — are enforceable only as a genuine pre-estimate; a stipulated sum operating as a penalty for breach is void. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 356 — liquidated damages vs. unenforceable penalty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DAMAGES, p. 314; scan anchor: djvu line 53157 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines liquidated damages as the parties' stipulated sum; § 356 is the validity test distinguishing them from penalties. Confident on the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAMAGES

[Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R. Co., 248 N.Y. 339 (1928)]

Who. The court deciding Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R. Co. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's proximate and remote damages — the immediate and direct results versus those cut off by intervening cause — are the proximate-cause inquiry: liability extends only to the foreseeable scope of the risk created. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1928 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry classifies damages by proximity and remoteness in causation terms; Palsgraf is the landmark on the duty/proximate-cause boundary. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAMNATU8

[Law: lex Aquilia — Roman action for wrongful damage to property]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The actio damni injuriae this (parser-fused) entry defines — the civil-law action for damage intentionally done to another's slave or beast — is the Aquilian action, the Roman ancestor of the modern law of wrongful damage to property. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: lex Aquilia — Roman action for wrongful damage to property. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DAMNATU8, p. 815 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 53515 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the fused entry defines the action (citing Calvin); the note names it as the Aquilian action, its proper doctrinal identity. Keyed under its own headword though fused into entry 482's tail (flagged in the log). [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAMNIFICATION

[Maxim: Damnum sine injuria esse potest]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Damnum sine injuria esse potest: there may be damage inflicted without any act of injustice — loss without legal wrong, the companion maxim to damnum absque injuria. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (Lofft, 112) in the entry's text; the note states it. Standard form as given. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAMNOSA HASREDITAS

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 554 — abandonment of burdensome estate property]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The damnosa haereditas the entry applies to the bankrupt's burdensome property — a leasehold whose rent exceeds its revenue — is dealt with by abandonment: the trustee may abandon property that is burdensome or of inconsequential value to the estate. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry expressly applies the term to the bankrupt's chargeable property, citing cases; § 554 is the Code's abandonment provision for exactly such property. Confident on the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAMNUM

[Law: act of God — irresistible natural force excusing liability]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's damnum fatale — loss from a cause beyond human control, 'for which bailees are not liable' — is the act-of-God defense: irresistible natural force excusing performance or liability. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: act of God — irresistible natural force excusing liability. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DAMNUM, p. 316; scan anchor: djvu line 53570 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines damnum fatale with the bailee rule (citing Story, Bailm. § 465 and Dig. 4.9.3.1); the note names the common-law equivalent. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAMNUM

[Law: preventive injunction — equitable relief against threatened injury]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's damnum infectum — damage threatened but not yet committed, against which 'a preventive interdict might be obtained' — is the ancestor of the preventive injunction against threatened harm. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: preventive injunction — equitable relief against threatened injury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DAMNUM, p. 316; scan anchor: djvu line 53570 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine lineage: the entry describes the Roman preventive interdict for imminent damage; the injunction is its modern equitable form. The entry's own description does the work. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA

[Maxim: Damnum absque injuria — no action lies without violation of a legal right]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Damnum absque injuria — loss without legal injury: harm that invades no right redressible by action, as where one blocks a neighbor's new windows or injures a rival's trade by fair competition, gives no cause of action. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry is the maxim's definition, with the entry's own illustrations (the blocked windows, the rival establishment) and authorities including Marbury v. Madison; the footnote states the maxim the entry defines. Nothing imported. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DANO

[Maxim: Dans et retinens, nihil dat — gift requires delivery]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Dans et retinens, nihil dat: one who gives and yet retains gives nothing — retention of control defeats a gift, which requires delivery to be effectual. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Dans et retinens, nihil dat — gift requires delivery. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DANO, p. 317; scan anchor: djvu line 53720 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (Tray. Lat. Max. 129) in the entry's text; the note states the delivery requirement it expresses. Standard form as given. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GY-PRES

[Law: cy-près — failed charitable purpose applied to a near charitable purpose]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The cy-près rule the entry defines — carrying out the donor's intention 'as near as may be' when literal effect is impossible or illegal — applies above all to charitable trusts: where the designated charitable purpose fails, the court directs the funds to a near charitable purpose rather than letting the gift fail. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: cy-près — failed charitable purpose applied to a near charitable purpose. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GY-PRES, p. 311; scan anchor: djvu line 52932 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the rule for charitable bequests with cases (citing Beekman v. Bonsor, Jackson v. Brown, Philadelphia v. Girard); the note states the charitable-trust doctrine the definition describes. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DATE

[Law: a deed takes effect from delivery; the stated date is not conclusive]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's point that the date of a deed is the time 'as given or stated in the deed itself,' not necessarily when it was executed, states a conveyancing rule: a deed takes effect from delivery, not from its date, and the true date of execution may be proved by parol. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: a deed takes effect from delivery; the stated date is not conclusive. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DATE, p. 317; scan anchor: djvu line 53769 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's long Bemcnt discussion establishes that the written date is the stated time, not necessarily the actual one; the note states the delivery rule and parol-date rule that give the point its operative meaning. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DATIO

[Law: accord and satisfaction — substituted performance accepted in discharge]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's datio in solutum — 'a giving in payment,' which the entry itself calls 'a species of accord and satisfaction' — is the civilian form of accord and satisfaction: the creditor's agreement to accept substituted performance in discharge of the obligation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: accord and satisfaction — substituted performance accepted in discharge. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DATIO, p. 317; scan anchor: djvu line 53810 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry draws the accord-and-satisfaction analogy itself; the note names the common-law counterpart. Nothing imported beyond naming. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAUPHIN

[Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306 (1950)]

Who. The court deciding Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'day in court' — 'the opportunity to present one's claims or rights in a proper forensic hearing before a competent tribunal' — is the fundamental requisite of due process: notice and the opportunity to be heard. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1950 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: this dictionary entry (its headword dropped by the parser, fused into entry 510's tail — flagged in the log) defines 'day in court' in due-process terms; Mullane states the requisite in its classic form. Confident on the citation. Keyed under DAY, its true headword. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAUPHIN

[Law: days of grace — abolished for negotiable instruments; payable on the stated date]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'days of grace' — the merchant-custom three days allowed after a bill's stated time for payment — are a historical relic: days of grace for negotiable instruments were abolished, so an instrument is payable on its stated date. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: days of grace — abolished for negotiable instruments; payable on the stated date. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DAUPHIN, p. 317; scan anchor: djvu line 53858 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes days of grace as established merchant custom 'demandable as of right'; the note states their abolition, which is what gives the historical definition its modern significance. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DAYXIGHT

[Law: burglary at common law required nighttime breaking and entering]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry defines daylight — the time before sunrise and after sunset counted as day — for the offense of burglary, because burglary at common law was a nighttime offense: breaking and entering in the night. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: burglary at common law required nighttime breaking and entering. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DAYXIGHT, p. 819; scan anchor: djvu line 54060 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry ties its day/night line expressly to 'defining the offense of burglary'; the note states the nighttime element that made the line matter. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE -XQUITATE

[Maxim: De aequitate — equity relieves where strict law gives nothing]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. De aequitate — 'In strict law, I can claim nothing, but in equity this by no means obtains': equity's office is to relieve where the strict law gives no claim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: De aequitate — equity relieves where strict law gives nothing. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE -XQUITATE, p. 819; scan anchor: djvu line 54095 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes this maxim (Fleta, lib. 8, c. 2, § 10) as the definition of the phrase; the note states the equitable principle it expresses. Standard form as given. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE ALTO ET BASSO

[Law: Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. §§ 1–16 — arbitration agreements enforceable]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's phrase — 'the absolute submission of all differences to arbitration' — is the submission agreement: modern law enforces agreements to arbitrate disputes rather than litigate them. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. §§ 1–16 — arbitration agreements enforceable. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE ALTO ET BASSO, p. 819; scan anchor: djvu line 54127 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the phrase as total submission to arbitration; the FAA is the federal statute enforcing such submissions. Confident on the Act and title. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE ARBITRATIONS FACTA

[Law: a valid arbitration award is final and bars relitigation of the claim]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ the entry describes — barring an action brought for a cause already settled by arbitration — states the finality of arbitration: a valid award extinguishes the claim and bars a later action on it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: a valid arbitration award is final and bars relitigation of the claim. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE ARBITRATIONS FACTA, p. 819; scan anchor: djvu line 54182 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the writ's entire function is that the arbitrated settlement defeats the new action; the note states the finality doctrine. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE BIEN ET DE MAE

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — right to trial by jury in criminal cases]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's phrase — by which the accused 'put himself upon a jury,' submitting entirely to their verdict — is the ancient form of the criminal jury right: the accused's right to trial by an impartial jury. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — right to trial by jury in criminal cases. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE BIEN ET DE MAE, p. 819; scan anchor: djvu line 54254 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes the accused's submission of his cause to a jury 'for good and evil'; the note names the constitutional guarantee of that trial. Confident on the amendment. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE BENE ESSE

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 27 — depositions to perpetuate testimony]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's taking evidence de bene esse — examination 'out of the regular course, in order to prevent the evidence being lost by the death or the absence of the witness,' usable only if the witness cannot later be examined — is the ancestor of perpetuation practice: depositions taken to preserve testimony against loss. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 27 — depositions to perpetuate testimony. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE BENE ESSE, p. 819; scan anchor: djvu line 54308 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the provisional examination against loss of testimony; Rule 27 is the procedural descendant. Confident on the rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE BONE MEMORIE

[Law: testamentary capacity — a will requires the testator be of sound mind]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's phrase — 'of good memory; of sound mind' — states the capacity requirement for testamentary acts: a will is valid only if the testator is of sound mind. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: testamentary capacity — a will requires the testator be of sound mind. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE BONE MEMORIE, p. 819; scan anchor: djvu line 54322 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the phrase as sound mind (citing 2 Inst. 510); the note names the capacity doctrine the phrase expresses. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE BONIS ASPORTATIS

[Law: conversion — the modern action for wrongful taking of personal property]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's trespass de bonis asportatis — 'the action of trespass for taking personal property' — is the ancestor of conversion: the modern action for the wrongful taking or detention of personal property. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: conversion — the modern action for wrongful taking of personal property. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE BONIS ASPORTATIS, p. 819; scan anchor: djvu line 54325 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the writ as the trespass action for taking goods; conversion is its recognized descendant. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE BONIS TESTATORIS, OR INTE8TATI

[Axiom: an executor sued in his representative capacity answers from the estate's goods, not his individual property]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The de bonis testatoris judgment embodies the representative-capacity principle: an executor answers for the decedent's debts from the estate's goods, not his own. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: an executor sued in his representative capacity answers from the estate's goods, not his individual property. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's whole point is the distinction between estate goods and the executor's own property; the axiom states that distinction in modern fiduciary terms without stretching. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE BONIS TESTATORIS AC SI

[Axiom: a representative who defeats creditors by false pleading answers personally for the resulting loss]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Where an executor falsely pleads a release or other bar to creditors, the de bonis testatoris ac si judgment charges him personally if the estate proves insufficient — false pleading by a fiduciary converts representative liability into personal liability. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: a representative who defeats creditors by false pleading answers personally for the resulting loss. [Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — 'the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The prisoner's 'for good and ill' was absolute submission to the jury's verdict — the ancient pleading ancestor of the modern right to trial by jury. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — 'the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE BONO ET MALO, p. 321; scan anchor: djvu line 54398 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes putting oneself upon a jury with absolute submission to its verdict; the Sixth Amendment text quoted is verbatim and the lineage from jury-submission pleading to the jury right is direct, not forced. DE OHAMPERTIA

[Law: common-law doctrine of champerty and maintenance]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ enforced the statute of champertors — the common-law doctrine of champerty and maintenance, under which a bargain to prosecute another's suit for a share of the proceeds is void. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law doctrine of champerty and maintenance. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE OHAMPERTIA, p. 321; scan anchor: djvu line 54466 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry names the statute of champertors as the writ's purpose; the annotation states the doctrine the statute enforced, kept to axiom form since champerty's modern status varies by jurisdiction. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE COMMUNI DIVTDUNDO

[Law: partition — a cotenant's right to compel division of property held in common]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The civil-law action for dividing common property is the ancestor of modern partition: a cotenant may compel division of property held in common. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: partition — a cotenant's right to compel division of property held in common. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE COMMUNI DIVTDUNDO, p. 321; scan anchor: djvu line 54546 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the action as 'for dividing a thing held in common'; partition is its direct modern counterpart, not an analogical reach. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE CONFLICTU LEOUM

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Concerning the conflict of laws' — the entry titles the field now systematized as choice-of-law doctrine. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE CONFLICTU LEOUM, p. 321; scan anchor: djvu line 54565 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry is literally the title under which conflict-of-laws works were written; the Restatement is the field's modern authority, cited by short title only. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiding and abetting; 'aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures']

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Of counsel … to commit a crime' — counseling an offense is accessory liability; one who counsels, commands, induces, or procures a crime is punishable as a principal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiding and abetting; 'aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE CONSILIO, p. 321; scan anchor: djvu line 54582 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines de consilio as counsel or advice to commit a crime; the federal aiding-and-abetting statute covers exactly 'counsels, commands, induces or procures,' quoted verbatim from the statute's operative language. Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Law: actio de dolo malo, Dig. 4.3 — Roman-law action for fraud) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The actio de dolo malo (Dig. 4.3) is the Roman-law action for fraud — the civil-law root from which the modern action of deceit descends. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: actio de dolo malo, Dig. 4.3 — Roman-law action for fraud. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE DOLO MALO, p. 323; scan anchor: djvu line 54747 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: cites the authority the entry itself cites (Dig. 4, 3), and the illumination — Roman fraud action to modern deceit — is the real doctrinal lineage, borderline restatement but adding the descent the entry omits. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE DOMO REPARANDA

[Axiom: cotenants share the burdens of common property; one who pays the common charge has contribution against the rest]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ compelling a co-tenant to contribute to repairs states the contribution principle: one who pays more than his share of common charges recovers the excess from his fellows. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: cotenants share the burdens of common property; one who pays the common charge has contribution against the rest. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE DOMO REPARANDA, p. 323; scan anchor: djvu line 54750 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's writ is precisely a contribution remedy between co-owners; the axiom states the common-law principle it enforced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE DONIS

[Law: Statute De Donis Conditionalibus (1285) — creation of the fee tail]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. De Donis Conditionalibus (13 Edw. I, 1285; Westm. 2 c.1) converted the fee-simple conditional into the fee tail — an estate descendible only to the lineal heirs of the donee's body. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute De Donis Conditionalibus (1285) — creation of the fee tail. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE DONIS, p. 323; scan anchor: djvu line 54755 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry identifies the statute by regnal year and parliament; the annotation states its operative doctrinal consequence, which the entry's truncated body only begins to reach. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE EJECTIONS FIRMS

[Law: action of ejectment — ancestor of modern possessory land actions]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ of ejectione firmae grew by extension into the action of ejectment — the ancestor of modern actions to recover possession of land (unlawful detainer, quiet title). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: action of ejectment — ancestor of modern possessory land actions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE EJECTIONS FIRMS, p. 323; scan anchor: djvu line 54792 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry itself narrates the writ's expansion beyond damages into recovery of the land; the modern possessory actions are its direct descendants. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE ESC1ETA

[Law: escheat — property of one dying without heirs reverts to the sovereign]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ of escheat enforced the lord's reversion where a tenant died without heir — the feudal root of modern escheat, by which property of one dying intestate without heirs passes to the state. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: escheat — property of one dying without heirs reverts to the sovereign. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE ESC1ETA, p. 323; scan anchor: djvu line 54810 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the writ as the lord's recovery on failure of heirs; escheat is the live doctrine of the same rule, stated as axiom. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE ESTREPAMENTO

[Law: waste — one in possession must not impair the inheritance; courts restrain waste by injunction]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Estrepement restrained waste pendente lite — the ancestor of the modern waste doctrine and of injunctions against waste during litigation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: waste — one in possession must not impair the inheritance; courts restrain waste by injunction. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE ESTREPAMENTO, p. 324; scan anchor: djvu line 54859 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry is precisely a waste-restraint writ; the annotation names the doctrine it enforced, without over-specific injunction standards quoted from memory. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE FACTO

[Law: de facto officer doctrine — acts under color of title are valid as to the public and third persons]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The de facto/de jure distinction grounds the de facto officer doctrine: the acts of one exercising an office under color of title, though legally defective, are valid as to the public and third persons. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: de facto officer doctrine — acts under color of title are valid as to the public and third persons. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE FACTO, p. 324; scan anchor: djvu line 54942 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines de facto at length as what 'exists actually and must be accepted for all practical purposes, but which is illegal or illegitimate'; the de facto officer rule is the operative legal consequence of that definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE FAIRE ECHEIXE

[Law: marine-insurance doctrine of deviation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A license 'to touch and trade at intermediate ports' is an anti-deviation clause — it answers the marine-insurance doctrine of deviation, under which an unjustified departure from the described voyage voids the policy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: marine-insurance doctrine of deviation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE FAIRE ECHEIXE, p. 324; scan anchor: djvu line 54984 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the clause as equivalent to a touch-and-trade license; deviation is the doctrine that makes such a clause necessary, a direct doctrinal link rather than analogy. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE FAXSO MONETA

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting U.S. obligations and securities]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The statute made importing false coin forfeitable with life and goods — the medieval ancestor of federal counterfeiting law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting U.S. obligations and securities. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE FAXSO MONETA, p. 324; scan anchor: djvu line 54995 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes a counterfeiting statute; the federal counterfeiting section is its modern counterpart, cited by section number only. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE IDIOTA INQUIRENDO

[Law: guardianship/conservatorship — judicial determination of incapacity and appointment of a guardian of person or estate]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ inquiring whether a man be an idiot is the ancestor of modern judicial determinations of incapacity — guardianship and conservatorship proceedings. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: guardianship/conservatorship — judicial determination of incapacity and appointment of a guardian of person or estate. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE IDIOTA INQUIRENDO, p. 326; scan anchor: djvu line 55184 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's writ is precisely an incapacity inquisition; modern guardianship is its direct procedural descendant. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE INJURIA

[Law: replication de injuria — the traverse denying the defendant's matter of justification or excuse]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The replication de injuria is the plaintiff's special traverse: where the defendant admits the acts but pleads new matter of justification or excuse, the plaintiff replies that the acts were done of the defendant's own wrong, denying the justification. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: replication de injuria — the traverse denying the defendant's matter of justification or excuse. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE INJURIA, p. 326; scan anchor: djvu line 55213 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines this exact pleading device; the annotation states its operative mechanics, a named technical doctrine, not an analogy. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE INOFFIGIOSO TESTAMENTO

[Law: elective share / forced heirship — a surviving spouse's statutory share despite the will's terms]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The querela inofficiosi testamenti (Inst. 2.18) let close kin set aside a will that disinherited them without cause — the Roman root of forced heirship and the surviving spouse's elective share. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: elective share / forced heirship — a surviving spouse's statutory share despite the will's terms. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE INOFFIGIOSO TESTAMENTO, p. 326; scan anchor: djvu line 55240 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry titles the civil-law action against an undutiful will; the elective share is its modern counterpart, cited without a statute section quoted from memory. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE MANUCAFTIONE

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — 'Excessive bail shall not be required']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The writ of manucaption discharged on mainprise one whose offered bail had been refused — the medieval enforcement of the right against excessive bail. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's writ exists precisely to cure refused bail; the Eighth Amendment clause is quoted verbatim and states the same guarantee the writ enforced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE MANUTENENDO

[Law: maintenance — officious intermeddling in the suit of another]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ lay against the offense of maintenance — officious intermeddling in another's suit, the companion doctrine to champerty without the bargain for a share. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: maintenance — officious intermeddling in the suit of another. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE MANUTENENDO, p. 327; scan anchor: djvu line 55410 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry names maintenance as the offense the writ punished; the annotation states the doctrine, kept distinct from champerty (#14). [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE MERCATORIBUS

[Law: statute merchant / statute staple — enrolled commercial obligations with speedy enforcement]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Statute of Acton Burnel (11 Edw. I) authorized the recognizance by statute merchant — an enrolled commercial obligation enforceable by speedy process, ancestor of modern commercial security devices. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: statute merchant / statute staple — enrolled commercial obligations with speedy enforcement. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE MERCATORIBUS, p. 327; scan anchor: djvu line 55444 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine historical doctrine: the entry identifies the statute and its mechanism; the annotation names the institution and its place in commercial-law lineage without claiming a modern code article. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE NON SANE MEMORIE

[Law: non compos mentis — the common-law incapacity standard]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Of unsound mind' — non compos mentis is the common-law standard of incapacity, grounding doctrines from testamentary capacity to competency to stand trial. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: non compos mentis — the common-law incapacity standard. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE NON SANE MEMORIE, p. 328; scan anchor: djvu line 55551 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine though borderline: the entry gives the phrase as synonymous with non compos mentis, and that phrase is itself the operative legal standard; the annotation states its doctrinal office. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE NOVI OPERIS NTTNCIATIONE

[Law: injunction against threatened injury (quia timet) — Roman novi operis nuntiatio as ancestor]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The civil-law interdict against a threatened 'new work' in derogation of the plaintiff's rights is the Roman ancestor of the injunction against threatened injury. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: injunction against threatened injury (quia timet) — Roman novi operis nuntiatio as ancestor. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE NOVI OPERIS NTTNCIATIONE, p. 328; scan anchor: djvu line 55556 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the interdict as lying where the defendant 'is about to erect' injurious work; preventive equitable relief is its direct descendant. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE NOVO

[Law: de novo review — appellate decision anew, without deference]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Anew; afresh' — de novo is the standard of appellate review under which the court decides the matter anew, without deference to the tribunal below. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: de novo review — appellate decision anew, without deference. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE NOVO, p. 328; scan anchor: djvu line 55564 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the phrase is the doctrine's name; the annotation states the standard the phrase denotes in modern practice. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE ODIO ET ATIA

[Law: probable-cause determination — continued detention requires just cause of suspicion]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ inquired whether a murder prisoner was held on just cause of suspicion or merely 'through hatred and ill will,' admitting him to bail if no due cause appeared — an early form of the probable-cause determination conditioning detention. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's mechanism is a judicial test of the cause of detention with release on failure; probable-cause review is its modern counterpart, stated without a case cite from memory. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE PALABRA

[Law: parol evidence rule — extrinsic oral evidence inadmissible to vary a complete writing]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'By word; by parol' — parol is the operative term of the parol evidence rule, under which extrinsic oral evidence is inadmissible to vary a complete writing. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: parol evidence rule — extrinsic oral evidence inadmissible to vary a complete writing. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE PALABRA, p. 328; scan anchor: djvu line 55629 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine though terminological: the entry glosses the very word the rule is named for; the annotation states the rule that gives the term its legal office. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE PIPA VINI GARIANDA

[Law: bailment — the bailee's duty of care; see Coggs v. Bernard (1703)]

Who. The court deciding Law: bailment — the bailee's duty of care; see Coggs v. Bernard (1703) (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The writ of trespass for carelessly carrying a pipe of wine — the case Jones used to illustrate Coggs v. Bernard — states the bailee's duty of care over goods entrusted to him. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: bailment — the bailee's duty of care; see Coggs v. Bernard (1703). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE PIPA VINI GARIANDA, p. 329; scan anchor: djvu line 55669 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1703 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry itself invokes Coggs v. Bernard as the case's doctrinal home; the annotation names bailment, the doctrine that case founded. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE PLEGHS ACQUIETANDI8

[Law: suretyship — a surety who pays the principal's debt is entitled to indemnity from the principal]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ let a surety compelled to pay recover against the principal who defaulted — the surety's right of indemnity against the principal debtor. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: suretyship — a surety who pays the principal's debt is entitled to indemnity from the principal. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE PLEGHS ACQUIETANDI8, p. 329; scan anchor: djvu line 55697 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's mechanism is exactly surety-indemnity; the annotation states the live suretyship doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE PRJEROGATIVA REGIS

[Law: parens patriae — the sovereign as guardian of persons under legal disability]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The statute gave the king ward of the lands of idiots, 'taking the profits without waste, and finding them necessaries' — the feudal origin of parens patriae, the sovereign as guardian of those under legal disability. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: parens patriae — the sovereign as guardian of persons under legal disability. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE PRJEROGATIVA REGIS, p. 329; scan anchor: djvu line 55723 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes the idiot-wardship clause; parens patriae is the classic doctrinal name for exactly that sovereign guardianship. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE QUOTA LITIS

[Law: contingent fee — agreement to share the proceeds of recovery as compensation for prosecuting the claim]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The civil-law quota litis — a contract to give part of a hard-to-recover claim in exchange for services to recover the rest — is the structural ancestor of the contingent fee agreement. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: contingent fee — agreement to share the proceeds of recovery as compensation for prosecuting the claim. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE QUOTA LITIS, p. 329; scan anchor: djvu line 55762 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines exactly a proceeds-sharing recovery contract; the contingent fee is the modern institution of the same structure, not a loose analogy. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE REOORDO ET FROCESSU MOTTEND IS

[Law: writ of error / appellate review — decision on the transmitted record]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ sending the record and process to a superior court, 'a species of writ of error,' is the ancestor of appellate review — the reviewing court decides on the transmitted record. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: writ of error / appellate review — decision on the transmitted record. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE REOORDO ET FROCESSU MOTTEND IS, p. 330; scan anchor: djvu line 55812 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry names the writ as a species of writ of error; the annotation states the appellate function it performed. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE RESCUSSU

[Law: rescue — the offense of forcibly freeing one lawfully arrested or in custody]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ of rescue lay where distrained cattle or arrested persons were forcibly rescued — the procedural ancestor of the offense of rescue, forcibly freeing one lawfully in custody. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: rescue — the offense of forcibly freeing one lawfully arrested or in custody. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE RESCUSSU, p. 330; scan anchor: djvu line 55857 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the writ by the act of rescue; the annotation names the substantive offense of the same act. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Where. Cited source: Law: plea of not guilty — denies the charge and puts the prosecution to its proof. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE KEEN CULPABLE, p. 330; scan anchor: djvu line 55873 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry is the plea itself in Law French; the annotation states the plea's operative effect. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE BA VIE

[Law: life estate pur sa vie vs. pur autre vie]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Of his own life, as distinguished from pur autre vie' — the life estate pur sa vie, measured by the tenant's own life, as against pur autre vie, measured by another's. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: life estate pur sa vie vs. pur autre vie. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE BA VIE, p. 330; scan anchor: djvu line 55877 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry draws exactly this distinction; the annotation names the estates it distinguishes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE BE BENE OERENDO

[Law: peace bond / recognizance to be of good behavior]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'For behaving himself well; for his good behavior' — the condition of the recognizance to be of good behavior, the peace bond binding one to keep the peace. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: peace bond / recognizance to be of good behavior. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE BE BENE OERENDO, p. 330; scan anchor: djvu line 55909 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine and distinct from #4: de se bene gerendo is the recognizance condition, not judicial tenure; the peace bond is its modern form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE SON TORT

[Law: executor de son tort — one who intermeddles with a decedent's estate without authority is liable as executor]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A stranger who takes upon himself to act as executor without just authority is an 'executor of his own wrong' — executor de son tort — and answers as executor for his intermeddling. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: executor de son tort — one who intermeddles with a decedent's estate without authority is liable as executor. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE SON TORT, p. 330; scan anchor: djvu line 55931 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines this named doctrine; the annotation states its liability rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PE TEMPS PONT MEMORIE NE COURT

[Law: time immemorial / prescription — enjoyment from beyond legal memory presumes lawful origin]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Time whereof memory runneth not' — time immemorial, the root of prescription: rights enjoyed from beyond legal memory are presumed lawful in origin. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the phrase; the annotation names the prescription doctrine built on it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PE VICINETO

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — 'by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'From the neighborhood' — the jury of the vicinage, whose modern form is the Sixth Amendment's guarantee of trial by a jury of the State and district where the crime was committed. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — 'by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PE VICINETO, p. 330; scan anchor: djvu line 56078 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry applies the term to a jury (3 Bl. Comm. 360); the vicinage clause is quoted verbatim and is the constitutional form of the same requirement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE WARRANTIA CHARTJE

[Law: covenant of warranty — the grantor's covenant to defend the grantee's title]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ compelled the feoffor to warrant the land where the feoffee was impleaded — the ancestor of the covenant of warranty, by which a grantor defends the grantee's title. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's writ enforces warranty of title; the covenant of warranty is its modern conveyancing form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEAD BODY

[Law: no property in a corpse — quasi-property of the next of kin for burial]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. There is no property in a corpse in the ordinary commercial sense; the next of kin hold a quasi-property right in the body for purposes of burial. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: no property in a corpse — quasi-property of the next of kin for burial. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEAD BODY, p. 332; scan anchor: djvu line 56124 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the corpse as a legal subject (with its own case cite); the no-property rule with the burial quasi-property exception is the classic doctrine governing it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEAD-PLEDGE

[Law: mortgage — from mortuum vadium, the 'dead pledge']

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'A mortgage; mortuum vadium' — the mortgage is the 'dead pledge,' the pledge that is dead to the pledgor until redemption. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: mortgage — from mortuum vadium, the 'dead pledge'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEAD-PLEDGE, p. 332; scan anchor: djvu line 56161 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry gives the etymology as the definition; the annotation states the doctrinal content the etymology carries (dead until redeemed). [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEAF AND DUMB

[Dusky v. United States, 362 U.S. 402 (1960)]

Who. The court deciding Dusky v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A deaf-and-dumb person 'may be tried for felony if the prisoner can be made to understand by means of signs' — the 1910 statement of competency to stand trial: the accused must be able to understand the proceedings. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1960 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry's test (can the prisoner be made to understand) is the competency inquiry; Dusky is the modern competency standard, cited with high confidence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEATH

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — 'no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'civil death' — the change depriving one of civic rights and juridical capacities — is the doctrine of attainder and corruption of blood, which the Constitution forbids as a consequence of treason. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — 'no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEATH, p. 332; scan anchor: djvu line 56267 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines civil death as deprivation of civic rights; the attainder clause is the constitutional answer to that doctrine, quoted in its operative phrase. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEBET ET DETINET

[Law: debet et detinet vs. detinet — the pleading distinction between debt and detinue]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'He owes and detains' — the formula in debt brought by the original contracting party, as against detinet alone: the pleading mark distinguishing the action of debt from detinue. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: debet et detinet vs. detinet — the pleading distinction between debt and detinue. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEBET ET DETINET, p. 833; scan anchor: djvu line 56405 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry explains the formula's office in the action of debt; the annotation names the debt/detinue pleading distinction it marks. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEBITUM

[Maxim: 'Debitum et contractus sunt nullius loci' — debt and contract are of no place]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Debitum et contractus sunt nullius loci' — debt and contract are of no place: the obligation is purely personal, and the action is transitory, maintainable wherever the debtor may be found. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: 'Debitum et contractus sunt nullius loci' — debt and contract are of no place. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEBITUM, p. 833; scan anchor: djvu line 56519 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the maxim is quoted verbatim from the entry's body; the annotation states the transitory-action doctrine the maxim embodies. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEBITUM IN FRIES ENTI SOLVENDUM IN FUTURO

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 101(5) — 'claim' includes rights to payment whether matured or unmatured]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A debt complete when contracted though performance cannot be required till a future period — the unmatured obligation, cognizable as a present claim though not yet payable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. § 101(5) — 'claim' includes rights to payment whether matured or unmatured. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEBITUM IN FRIES ENTI SOLVENDUM IN FUTURO, p. 833; scan anchor: djvu line 56531 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the unmatured-but-complete obligation; the Bankruptcy Code's claim definition is its modern doctrinal home, cited by section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DECEIT

[Law: fraud/deceit — misrepresentation, scienter, intent, reliance, damages]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry defines the tort of deceit — fraudulent misrepresentation to another's damage; its elements are misrepresentation of material fact, scienter, intent to induce reliance, justifiable reliance, and resulting damages. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: fraud/deceit — misrepresentation, scienter, intent, reliance, damages. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DECEIT, p. 336; scan anchor: djvu line 56845 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines deceit with its own cases; the annotation states the tort's elements, complementing #48's Roman root rather than duplicating it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DECENNARY

[Maxim: 'Deceptis non decipientibus, jura subveniunt']

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the maxim 'Deceptis non decipientibus, jura subveniunt' — the laws help the deceived, not the deceivers: the equitable principle behind relief for fraud. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: 'Deceptis non decipientibus, jura subveniunt'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DECENNARY, p. 336; scan anchor: djvu line 56927 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the maxim is quoted verbatim from the entry's body; the annotation states the fraud-relief principle it expresses. Placed where the maxim appears, per the well's per-entry discipline. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DECESSUS

[Maxim: 'Decet tamen principem servare leges quibus ipse servatus est']

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the maxim 'Decet tamen principem servare leges quibus ipse servatus est' — it behoves the prince to keep the laws by which he himself is preserved: the sovereign is bound by law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: 'Decet tamen principem servare leges quibus ipse servatus est'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DECESSUS, p. 337; scan anchor: djvu line 56953 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the maxim is quoted verbatim from the entry's body; the annotation states the rule-of-law principle it expresses. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DECLARATION

[Law: complaint — Fed. R. Civ. P. 8; the modern form of the declaration]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The declaration — the plaintiff's first pleading at law, specifying the facts constituting his cause of action — is the ancestor of the modern complaint. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: complaint — Fed. R. Civ. P. 8; the modern form of the declaration. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DECLARATION, p. 337; scan anchor: djvu line 57054 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the declaration as the plaintiff's opening pleading; the complaint is its direct procedural descendant. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DECLARATOR

[Law: declaratory judgment — 28 U.S.C. § 2201]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Scotch action of declarator — to have a right judicially ascertained and declared, with nothing further claimed — is the ancestor of the declaratory judgment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: declaratory judgment — 28 U.S.C. § 2201. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DECLARATOR, p. 338; scan anchor: djvu line 57177 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the action as pure declaration of right; the Declaratory Judgment Act is its modern statutory form, cited by section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DECLINATION

[Law: judicial disqualification — 28 U.S.C. § 455]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Scotch declination — a plea to the jurisdiction on the ground that the judge is interested in the suit — is the ancestor of judicial disqualification for interest or bias. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: judicial disqualification — 28 U.S.C. § 455. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DECLINATION, p. 338; scan anchor: djvu line 57237 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's plea is exactly disqualification for judicial interest; the federal disqualification statute is its modern counterpart, cited by section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DECOY

[Law: personal jurisdiction by in-state service ('tag jurisdiction')]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. To decoy a person within the jurisdiction 'so that he may be served with process' invokes personal jurisdiction by in-state service — jurisdiction founded on service within the forum. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: personal jurisdiction by in-state service ('tag jurisdiction'). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DECOY, p. 339; scan anchor: djvu line 57298 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's example is precisely service-based personal jurisdiction; the annotation names the doctrine, without a case cite from memory. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DECRY

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — Congress's power 'to coin Money, regulate the Value thereof']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The king's prerogative to 'cry down any coin of the kingdom, and make it no longer current' is the royal form of the coinage power the Constitution vests in Congress. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — Congress's power 'to coin Money, regulate the Value thereof'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DECRY, p. 340; scan anchor: djvu line 57566 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states the prerogative over the currency; the Coinage Clause is its constitutional successor, quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEDI

[Law: implied covenants from words of conveyance — 'dedi' anciently implied warranty of title]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'I have given' — anciently held to imply a warranty of title: certain words of conveyance carry implied covenants. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: implied covenants from words of conveyance — 'dedi' anciently implied warranty of title. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEDI, p. 340; scan anchor: djvu line 57585 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states the implied-warranty rule with its own case; the annotation names the conveyancing doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEDICATION

[Law: common-law dedication — offer by the owner and acceptance by or on behalf of the public]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Dedication in real-property law — the owner's deliberate appropriation of land to public use, accepted by or on behalf of the public — requires both the owner's intent (offer) and public acceptance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law dedication — offer by the owner and acceptance by or on behalf of the public. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEDICATION, p. 340; scan anchor: djvu line 57606 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's definition contains both appropriation and acceptance; the annotation states the doctrine's two elements. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEEM

[Axiom: what a statute 'deems' to be so, is so for the purposes of that statute]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Statutory 'deemed': when a statute provides that certain acts are 'deemed' of a particular nature, they are of that nature for the statute's purposes — the legal fiction as an interpretive principle. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: what a statute 'deems' to be so, is so for the purposes of that statute. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEEM, p. 342; scan anchor: djvu line 57857 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

DEFALCATION

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(4) — defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Defalcation — misappropriation of funds held in a fiduciary capacity — is nondischargeable in bankruptcy: debts for fraud or defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity survive discharge. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. § 523(a)(4) — defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEFALCATION, p. 342; scan anchor: djvu line 57892 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines defalcation as fiduciary misappropriation; § 523(a)(4) is the exact statutory home of that wrong, cited by section with confidence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEFAMATION

[New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964)]

Who. The court deciding New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Defamation, comprehensive of libel and slander, is limited by the First Amendment: a public official must prove actual malice — knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard of truth. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1964 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines defamation as injuring reputation by false statements; Sullivan states the constitutional limit on that tort, cited with high confidence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEFAULT

[Law: default judgment — Fed. R. Civ. P. 55]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In practice, default is the defendant's omission to plead or defend — the ground of default judgment, entered against a party who fails to plead or otherwise defend. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: default judgment — Fed. R. Civ. P. 55. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEFAULT, p. 342; scan anchor: djvu line 57933 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's 'in practice' sense is exactly the default that Rule 55 answers; the rule is cited by number with confidence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEFEASANCE

[Law: defeasance — the collateral instrument defeating a conveyance on condition performed]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A defeasance is the collateral instrument that defeats the force of another deed upon condition performed — the device by which an absolute conveyance was made in substance a mortgage, defeated by payment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: defeasance — the collateral instrument defeating a conveyance on condition performed. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEFEASANCE, p. 843 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 57975 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the defeasance as the instrument defeating another deed; the annotation states its classic office in mortgage law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEFEASIBLE

[Law: defeasible fees — fee simple determinable; fee simple subject to condition subsequent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An estate is defeasible where it may be defeated on a condition subsequent — the defeasible fees: the fee simple determinable and the fee simple subject to condition subsequent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: defeasible fees — fee simple determinable; fee simple subject to condition subsequent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEFEASIBLE, p. 843 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 57999 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine and distinct from #302: the entry defines the quality of being defeasible with the equity-of-redemption example; the annotation names the estates. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEFEAT

[Law: fraudulent transfer — 11 U.S.C. § 548]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. To 'hinder, delay, or defeat creditors' is the classic formula of the fraudulent transfer — a transfer made with intent to put assets beyond creditors' reach. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

DEFENERATION

[Law: usury — exaction of interest above the lawful rate]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Defeneration — the act of lending money on usury — states the usury prohibition: the exaction of interest above the lawful rate. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: usury — exaction of interest above the lawful rate. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEFENERATION, p. 344; scan anchor: djvu line 58184 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the term as usurious lending; the annotation states the prohibition it names. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEFENSE

[Law: affirmative defense — Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry divides defense into denial and justification — the latter being the affirmative defense: matter which, though admitting the claim, defeats it, and which must be affirmatively pleaded. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: affirmative defense — Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEFENSE, p. 344; scan anchor: djvu line 58192 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's denial/justification taxonomy is the affirmative-defense distinction; Rule 8(c) is its pleading home, cited by rule with confidence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEFINITIO

[Maxim: 'Omnis definitio periculosa est' — every definition in law is perilous]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the civil-law maxim 'Omnis definitio periculosa est' (Dig. 50.17.202) — every definition in law is perilous, since few can be framed that cannot be subverted. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: 'Omnis definitio periculosa est' — every definition in law is perilous. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEFINITIO, p. 346; scan anchor: djvu line 58491 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

DEFINITIVE

[Law: final judgment rule — 28 U.S.C. § 1291]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A definitive judgment finally settles the controversy, as against an interlocutory one — the distinction behind the final-judgment rule: only final decisions are appealable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: final judgment rule — 28 U.S.C. § 1291. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEFINITIVE, p. 346; scan anchor: djvu line 58543 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry draws the definitive/interlocutory distinction at length; § 1291 is its appellate-jurisdiction counterpart, cited by section with confidence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEHORS

[Law: appellate review confined to the record — matter dehors the record]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Dehors the record' — foreign to the record: in error and appellate practice the court decides on the record, and matter dehors the record is not noticed. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: appellate review confined to the record — matter dehors the record. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEHORS, p. 347; scan anchor: djvu line 58673 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry gives 'dehors the record' as the term's legal office (3 Bl. Comm. 387); the annotation states the record-confinement rule it marks. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEI GRATIA

[Law: U.S. Const. pmbl. — 'We the People']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. By way of contrast: 'by the grace of God' imports sovereignty by divine commission — the American constitutional order grounds sovereignty instead in the people. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. pmbl. — 'We the People'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEI GRATIA, p. 347; scan anchor: djvu line 58678 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine contrast-illumination: the entry asserts the divine-right formula; the preamble's popular-sovereignty formula is its direct constitutional antithesis, quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DELICT

[Law: actions ex delicto vs. ex contractu]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Roman delict — wider than 'tort,' embracing violations of public and private duty — grounds the fundamental classification of actions as ex delicto (founded on wrong) or ex contractu (founded on contract). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: actions ex delicto vs. ex contractu. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DELICT, p. 348; scan anchor: djvu line 58938 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry contrasts delict with tort and notes its breadth; the annotation states the classification the term founds. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DELICTUM

[Maxim: 'In pari delicto melior est conditio defendentis']

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the maxim 'In pari delicto melior est conditio defendentis' — where the parties are equally in fault, the defendant's condition is the better: the court leaves them where it finds them. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: 'In pari delicto melior est conditio defendentis'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DELICTUM, p. 349; scan anchor: djvu line 59002 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states the depositary's obligations; the annotation names the bailment doctrine, complementing #140. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEPOSITION

[Law: deposition — Fed. R. Civ. P. 30]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The deposition — testimony taken on interrogatories, not in open court, reduced to writing and authenticated for use at trial — is the modern discovery deposition. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: deposition — Fed. R. Civ. P. 30. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEPOSITION, p. 357; scan anchor: djvu line 60388 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the deposition procedurally; Rule 30 is its modern home, cited by rule with confidence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEPOSIT U M

[Law: depositum — gratuitous bailment; the gratuitous bailee answers only for gross negligence; see Coggs v. Bernard]

Who. The court deciding Law: depositum — gratuitous bailment; the gratuitous bailee answers only for gross negligence; see Coggs v. Bernard (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Depositum — the naked bailment of goods to be kept for the bailor's use without reward — is the gratuitous bailment, whose bailee answers only for gross negligence. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: depositum — gratuitous bailment; the gratuitous bailee answers only for gross negligence; see Coggs v. Bernard. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEPOSIT U M, p. 357; scan anchor: djvu line 60442 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines depositum as bailment without reward and cites Coggs v. Bernard; the annotation states Holt's rule for the gratuitous bailee that the cited case establishes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEPRIVE

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — 'nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. In provisions that no person be 'deprived of his property' without due process, 'deprive' denotes a taking altogether — the guarantee of the Due Process Clauses. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — 'nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEPRIVE, p. 358; scan anchor: djvu line 60523 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry is explicitly about the word 'deprive' in due-process provisions; the Fifth Amendment clause is quoted verbatim and is the provision the entry construes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEROGATION

[Maxim: 'Lex posterior derogat priori' — a later law derogates from an earlier one]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Derogation — the partial repeal of a law by a subsequent act limiting its scope — is expressed in the maxim that a later law derogates from an earlier one. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: 'Lex posterior derogat priori' — a later law derogates from an earlier one. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEROGATION, p. 869; scan anchor: djvu line 60706 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines derogation as partial repeal (Dig. 50.17.102); the maxim states the lex-posterior rule it embodies, cited with confidence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DESERTION

[Law: desertion — willful abandonment as a fault ground for divorce; unauthorized absence as a military offense]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Desertion — willful, unjustified abandonment of a station or condition — is the fault ground of divorce for abandonment, and, in military life, the offense of unauthorized absence from duty. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: desertion — willful abandonment as a fault ground for divorce; unauthorized absence as a military offense. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DESERTION, p. 869; scan anchor: djvu line 60880 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines desertion across matrimonial and public life; the annotation states its two live doctrinal forms without a statute number quoted from memory. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DESIRE

[Law: precatory words — 'desire'/'wish' creates no trust absent clear intent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Where a will uses 'desire' of management and distribution, courts read shades from mere preference to positive command — the doctrine of precatory words: 'desire' or 'wish' creates no trust absent clear imperative intent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: precatory words — 'desire'/'wish' creates no trust absent clear intent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DESIRE, p. 869; scan anchor: djvu line 61021 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes exactly the precatory-words problem; the annotation names the doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DESSAISISSEMENT

[Law: bankruptcy estate — 11 U.S.C. § 541]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Dessaisissement — the bankrupt's immediate deprivation of the enjoyment and administration of his property — is the French form of the bankruptcy divestiture whose American counterpart is the bankruptcy estate. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: bankruptcy estate — 11 U.S.C. § 541. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DESSAISISSEMENT, p. 869; scan anchor: djvu line 61115 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the divestiture on bankruptcy; § 541 is its functional counterpart, stated as counterpart rather than lineage, cited by section with confidence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DESUETUDE

[Law: desuetude — unenforceability of a statute through long disuse]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Desuetude — disuse, the cessation of use, applied to obsolete statutes — is the doctrine that a statute may become unenforceable through long and general disuse. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: desuetude — unenforceability of a statute through long disuse. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DESUETUDE, p. 362; scan anchor: djvu line 61192 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry applies the term to obsolete statutes with its own case; the annotation names the doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DETAINER

[Law: unlawful detainer — summary action to recover possession]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Detainer — withholding from one lawfully entitled the possession of land or goods; the wrongful keeping is 'unlawful detainer' — the summary action to recover possession. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: unlawful detainer — summary action to recover possession. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DETAINER, p. 362; scan anchor: djvu line 61200 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines unlawful detainer; the annotation names the possessory action it denotes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DETINUE

[Law: detinue — ancestor of modern replevin; recovery of specific chattels]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Detinue lies for the recovery in specie of personal chattels from one who acquired possession lawfully but retains it without right — the common-law ancestor of modern replevin. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: detinue — ancestor of modern replevin; recovery of specific chattels. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DETINUE, p. 362; scan anchor: djvu line 61304 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the action with its own cases; the annotation states its place as replevin's ancestor, closing the deferrals at #9/#10. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DETRIMENT

[Law: consideration — benefit to the promisor or detriment to the promisee]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry notes that consideration may consist in 'detriment' suffered by the party — the detriment theory: consideration is a benefit to the promisor or a detriment to the promisee. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: consideration — benefit to the promisor or detriment to the promisee. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DETRIMENT, p. 363; scan anchor: djvu line 61382 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry invokes detriment as consideration with its code cites; the annotation states the classic consideration formula. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEVASTAVIT

[Law: devastavit — an executor's waste as breach of fiduciary duty, answered personally]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'He has wasted' — the executor's or administrator's waste, mismanagement, or misappropriation of estate assets: a breach of fiduciary duty involving loss to the estate, rendering him personally liable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: devastavit — an executor's waste as breach of fiduciary duty, answered personally. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEVASTAVIT, p. 363; scan anchor: djvu line 61426 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine and distinct from #0: the entry defines the wrong (devastavit) itself; #0 annotated the judgment (de bonis propriis) that follows it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEVXSAVXT VEL NON

[Law: devisavit vel non — the issue trying a paper's validity as a will]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Devisavit vel non — the issue sent to a court of law to try whether a paper asserted and denied to be a will was the testator's will — is the ancestor of the will contest. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: devisavit vel non — the issue trying a paper's validity as a will. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEVXSAVXT VEL NON, p. 364; scan anchor: djvu line 61575 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the chancery-to-law issue; the annotation names its modern descendant, the will contest. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DEVOLUTIVE APPEAL

[Law: stay pending appeal — Fed. R. App. P. 8; cf. Louisiana suspensive appeal]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Louisiana devolutive appeal — which does not suspend execution of the judgment — states the suspensive/devolutive distinction behind the stay pending appeal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: stay pending appeal — Fed. R. App. P. 8; cf. Louisiana suspensive appeal. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DEVOLUTIVE APPEAL, p. 364; scan anchor: djvu line 61740 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the devolutive appeal by its non-suspensive character; the annotation names the stay doctrine that distinction founds, cited by rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DE BONO GESTXT

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 1 — judges 'shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'For good behavior' is the tenure formula of Article III judges — the Constitution's own de bono gestu clause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 1 — judges 'shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DE BONO GESTXT, p. 321; scan anchor: djvu line 54412 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the phrase as 'for good behavior,' and Article III uses the identical formula verbatim for judicial tenure; a phrase-match with the founding text, not a stretch. [Key uses the chunk's verbatim OCR headword 'DE BONO GESTXT'; correct spelling is 'DE BONO GESTU'.] [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DICTUM

[Axiom: Obiter dicta do not bind; only the ratio decidendi of a decision is authoritative precedent under stare decisis]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The operative legal consequence of the dictum/holding distinction is that obiter dicta do not bind; only the ratio decidendi of a decision is authoritative precedent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: Obiter dicta do not bind; only the ratio decidendi of a decision is authoritative precedent under stare decisis. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DICTUM, p. 366; scan anchor: djvu line 61881 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry exhaustively defines obiter dictum but the Law well's contribution is the principle that follows from the definition: because dicta are not the court's determination of the point pending, they lack precedential force. This is the genuine illumination of the entry — why the distinction matters in law — not a restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DIES

[Maxim: Dies dominicus non est juridicus — Co. Litt. 135a; Noy, Max. 2; Wing. Max. 7, max. 5; Broom, Max. 21]

Who. Coke on Littleton (as cited: Maxim: Dies dominicus non est juridicus — Co. Litt. 135a; Noy, Max. 2; Wing. Max. 7, max. 5; Broom, Max. 21) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The maxim states the legal rule behind dies non juridicus: Sunday is not a court day, so it counts differently in computation of time for judicial proceedings. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Dies dominicus non est juridicus — Co. Litt. 135a; Noy, Max. 2; Wing. Max. 7, max. 5; Broom, Max. 21. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DIES, p. 366; scan anchor: djvu line 61967 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Copied verbatim from the entry's own closing maxims. It is a genuine, long-standing maxim with real citations given in the text, and it directly illuminates the dies non juridicus branch of the entry — the rule, not just the vocabulary. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DIFFORCIARE

[Maxim: Ubi jus ibi remedium — where there is a right, there is a remedy]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Denying justice after demand is actionable because the law's standing principle is that every right has its remedy — the wrong described is a breach of this maxim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Borderline considered carefully: the entry defines difforciare rectum (denying justice to one who demands it). The maxim is the classic governing principle of denial-of-justice law, and it genuinely illuminates why the described conduct is a legal wrong rather than a mere moral one. Included with this reasoning stated plainly. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DIGEST

[Law: Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian — Institutes, Digest (Pandects), Codex, Novellae]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Digest (Pandects) is one of the four compilations of Justinian's Corpus Juris Civilis, alongside the Institutes, the Codex, and the Novellae — the collection behind every 'Dig.' citation in this dictionary. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian — Institutes, Digest (Pandects), Codex, Novellae. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DIGEST, p. 367; scan anchor: djvu line 62167 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Real, verifiable legal-historical fact that genuinely orients the reader: the entry says 'Dig.' always means Justinian's Digest; the footnote places that Digest inside the authoritative compilation it belongs to. Not a restatement — it adds the structural fact the entry assumes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DILATORY

[Maxim: Dilationes in lege sunt odiosae — delays in law are odious (Branch, Princ.)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Dilatory pleas and defenses are disfavored because delays in law are odious — the maxim states the principle behind the doctrine. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Dilationes in lege sunt odiosae — delays in law are odious (Branch, Princ.). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DILATORY, p. 367; scan anchor: djvu line 62268 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Copied verbatim from the body where it appears under DILAPIDATION, but it genuinely governs THIS entry: the entry defines defenses whose object is delay without touching the merits, and the maxim is the stated principle of the law's hostility to such tactics. Placed where it belongs; not forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DIME

[Law: Coinage Act of 1792 — first federal coinage act, establishing the U.S. Mint and decimal coinage including the dime]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The dime is a creation of the federal coinage power, first authorized as part of the decimal coinage by the Coinage Act of 1792. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Coinage Act of 1792 — first federal coinage act, establishing the U.S. Mint and decimal coinage including the dime. When. 1792 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the dime as a U.S. silver coin of ten cents; the genuine Law-well illumination is the specific statute that created it. The Coinage Act of 1792 is a real, certain statute and it established the dime — specific to this entry, not a generic currency note. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DISABLE

[Maxim: Nullus commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria — no one can take advantage of his own wrong]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim that 'the party shall not disable himself' is an instance of the broader principle that no one may take advantage of his own wrong — a party cannot plead his own disability to escape his own act. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nullus commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria — no one can take advantage of his own wrong. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DISABLE, p. 371; scan anchor: djvu line 62786 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The body states the express common-law maxim (4 Coke, 123b) but not the canonical general principle it instantiates. This maxim is the genuine, famous form of that principle and illuminates why self-disabling is barred — it is the no-profit-from-one's-own-wrong rule, not a restatement of the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DISCHARGE

[Local Loan Co. v. Hunt, 292 U.S. 234 (1934)]

Who. The court deciding Local Loan Co. v. Hunt (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The bankruptcy discharge defined here exists, in the Supreme Court's statement of its purpose, to relieve the honest debtor from the weight of oppressive indebtedness and permit him to start afresh. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Local Loan Co. v. Hunt, 292 U.S. 234 (1934). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DISCHARGE, p. 372; scan anchor: djvu line 62936 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1934 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Scoped to the bankruptcy paragraph only. The entry defines what the discharge does (release from provable debts); the case states why the discharge exists — the 'fresh start' purpose — which the definition does not supply. A confident, famous citation; not forced onto the contract/criminal/maritime senses. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DISCOVERT

[Johnson v. M'Intosh, 21 U.S. (8 Wheat.) 543 (1823)]

Who. The court deciding Johnson v. M'Intosh (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The international-law sense of discovery — the finding of lands previously unknown as a foundation of national ownership — received its classic American statement in Johnson v. M'Intosh: discovery gave the discovering sovereign title, subject to the native right of occupancy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1823 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Scoped to the international-law paragraph only. The entry states the discovery doctrine in one sentence with one citation (Martin v. Waddell); Johnson v. M'Intosh is the landmark authority that gives the doctrine its content. Confident this Marshall Court citation is real. Not extended to the patent, practice, or mining senses. [Chunk artifact: idx 85 headword is OCR-mangled as "DISCOVERT", duplicating idx 84; this footnote belongs to idx 85 (the discovery-definition body) only — merge must target by index.] [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DISCRETION

[Maxim: Discretio est discernere per legem quid sit justum — 10 Coke, 140]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Judicial discretion, in Coke's compressed maxim, is knowing through law what is just — discretion bounded by law, not arbitrary will. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Discretio est discernere per legem quid sit justum — 10 Coke, 140. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DISCRETION, p. 375; scan anchor: djvu line 63382 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Copied verbatim from where the maxim appears in the body (misplaced under DISCREPANCY). It genuinely illuminates this entry's thesis — discretion guided by law 'so as to do substantial equity and justice' (Faber v. Bruner, quoted in the entry) — giving the reader the canonical short form. Placement corrected to the entry it governs. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DISHONOR

[Law: UCC §§ 3-502 (dishonor), 3-503 (notice of dishonor)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The mercantile-law rule stated here — dishonor on non-payment or non-acceptance according to tenor, with the holder's duty of prompt notice preserving recourse against drawer and indorsers — is carried into modern uniform law by UCC Article 3's dishonor and notice-of-dishonor provisions. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC §§ 3-502 (dishonor), 3-503 (notice of dishonor). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DISHONOR, p. 375; scan anchor: djvu line 63567 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the 1910-era common-law and California-code rule; the UCC sections are the genuine living codification of the same doctrine. Confident these are the real UCC dishonor provisions.

DISSOLUTION

[Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518 (1819)]

Who. The court deciding Dartmouth College v. Woodward (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The constitutional qualification on legislative dissolution of a corporation — 'where that is constitutional' — rests on the rule that a corporate charter is a contract within the Contract Clause (U.S. Const. art. I, § 10), limiting the legislature's power to dissolve or impair it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518 (1819). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DISSOLUTION, p. 379; scan anchor: djvu line 64152 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1819 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Scoped to the corporations paragraph only. The entry names the constitutional limit without identifying it; Dartmouth College is the canonical authority for that limit. Confident this landmark citation is real. Not extended to dissolution of contracts or of injunctions. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 17 — exclusive congressional legislation over the seat of government]

What. The entry's constitutional claim — that the District is neither state nor territory but subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress — rests on the District Clause, giving Congress power 'to exercise exclusive Legislation' over the seat of government. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 17 — exclusive congressional legislation over the seat of government. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, p. 882 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 64570 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry asserts the constitutional consequence without naming its source; the clause is the genuine, specific, real authority behind it. Confident in this citation. Not a restatement — it identifies the constitutional text the entry invokes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DOLLAR

[Law: Coinage Act of 1792 — established the dollar as the U.S. monetary unit]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The dollar as the United States' monetary unit, valued at one hundred cents, was established by the Coinage Act of 1792, which created the U.S. Mint and the decimal coinage. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Coinage Act of 1792 — established the dollar as the U.S. monetary unit. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DOLLAR, p. 387; scan anchor: djvu line 65400 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1792 [basis: year carried in the citation]

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

Why. The entry defines the dollar as the American money unit; the genuine Law-well illumination is the statute that made it the unit. Same statute as the DIME footnote — not duplication, but the same historical fact illuminating two distinct entries (the dollar as unit, the dime as its tenth). Confident the Act is real and did this. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DOLUS

[Maxim: Dolo malo pactum se non servaturum — an agreement induced by fraud cannot stand (Dig. 2, 14, 7, 9)]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Maxim: Dolo malo pactum se non servaturum — an agreement induced by fraud cannot stand (Dig. 2, 14, 7, 9)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The operative legal consequence of dolus in contract is the Digest rule that an agreement induced by fraud cannot stand. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Dolo malo pactum se non servaturum — an agreement induced by fraud cannot stand (Dig. 2, 14, 7, 9). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DOLUS, p. 387; scan anchor: djvu line 65430 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines dolus at length (guile, deceit, malicious fraud); the maxim states the principle the definition serves — fraud vitiates the agreement it induces. Copied in its standard certain form (the body carries it in garbled OCR under DOLO); placed on the entry it governs rather than where the OCR landed it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DONATIO

[Maxim: Donatio non praesumitur — a gift is not presumed (Jenk. Cent. 109)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Gift law's operative presumption rule is that a gift is not presumed — one who claims a gift must prove the donative intent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Donatio non praesumitur — a gift is not presumed (Jenk. Cent. 109). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DONATIO, p. 391; scan anchor: djvu line 66134 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Copied verbatim from the entry's own maxim list. The entry classifies gifts exhaustively; the maxim states the principle behind gift litigation — the burden rule — which the classification does not supply. The compressed anchor adds clarity to a long entry. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DRAFT

[Law: UCC § 3-104 — negotiable instrument; a draft is an order, a note a promise]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The draft's defining character as an order — as opposed to a note, which is a promise — is the operative classification in modern negotiable-instruments law: an instrument is a 'draft' if it is an order and a 'note' if it is a promise. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-104 — negotiable instrument; a draft is an order, a note a promise. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DRAFT, p. 396; scan anchor: djvu line 66998 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

Why. The entry defines the draft as 'an order for the payment of money drawn by one person on another'; the UCC provision is the genuine living rule that turns on exactly that order/promise distinction — the doctrinal point of the entry. Confident this is the real UCC provision. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DUCES TECUM

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 45 — subpoenas, including the subpoena duces tecum]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'bring with you' writ's modern procedural form is the federal subpoena for production of documents and things, governed by the federal subpoena rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 45 — subpoenas, including the subpoena duces tecum. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DUCES TECUM, p. 400; scan anchor: djvu line 67716 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the historical writ and names the subpoena duces tecum as its usual form; the rule is the genuine living procedural anchor for that form. Confident FRCP 45 is the real subpoena rule. Cited in the looser form; not a restatement of the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DUCROERE

[Law: U.S. Const. amends. V, XIV § 1 — due process of law]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 'due process of law' expounded throughout this entry is the constitutional guarantee that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry gives the doctrine's content at length through treatises and cases (Story, Cooley, Pennoyer v. Neff); the footnote names the constitutional text every cited authority is construing. Confident in both citations. Not a restatement — it identifies the source the entry expounds. [Chunk artifact: the DUE entry lost its headword in parsing; its full body (incl. the due-process exposition) is merged into idx 351 under headword "DUCROERE" — merge must target idx 351 by index/body.] [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DUODECEMVIRALE JUDICIUM

[Law: U.S. Const. amends. VI, VII — trial by jury]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The trial by jury named by this Latin term is preserved in American law by the Bill of Rights' jury-trial guarantees in criminal and civil cases. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amends. VI, VII — trial by jury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DUODECEMVIRALE JUDICIUM, p. 403; scan anchor: djvu line 68168 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry names the institution in one line; the amendments are its genuine constitutional anchor — why the term matters in American law. Confident in these citations. Analogous treatment to DUCES TECUM: historical form given its living anchor, not a restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EARNEST

[Law: UCC § 2-201(3)(c) — part payment / part performance exception to the statute of frauds]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Earnest as part payment binding the sale lives on in the modern statute of frauds: where payment has been made and accepted (or goods received and accepted), the sale-of-goods contract is enforceable despite the writing requirement. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-201(3)(c) — part payment / part performance exception to the statute of frauds. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EARNEST, p. 407; scan anchor: djvu line 68885 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines earnest's function (part payment binds the contract); the UCC provision is the genuine living rule giving that function legal effect under the statute of frauds. Confident this is the real UCC exception. Not a restatement — the entry does not state the enforceability consequence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ELECTION

[Maxim: Electio semel facta, et placitum testatum non patitur regressum — election once made, and plea witnessed, suffers not a recall (Co. Litt. 146)]

Who. Coke on Littleton (as cited: Maxim: Electio semel facta, et placitum testatum non patitur regressum — election once made, and plea witnessed, suffers not a recall (Co. Litt. 146)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The operative consequence running through the election doctrines — equitable election, election of remedies, the widow's election — is that an election once made binds: it suffers no recall. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Electio semel facta, et placitum testatum non patitur regressum — election once made, and plea witnessed, suffers not a recall (Co. Litt. 146). When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Copied verbatim from where the maxim appears in the body (under ELECTED) and placed on the entry it governs. The entry expounds the many election doctrines; the maxim states the binding-force principle common to them — the Law-well anchor behind the entry, not a restatement of any one definition. EMINENT DOMAIN

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation (Takings Clause)]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The constitutional condition on the eminent-domain power stated throughout this entry is the Takings Clause: private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation (Takings Clause). When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the power at length with its cases (Kohl v. U.S. in the body); the footnote names the constitutional limit on the power — public use plus just compensation — which is the operative constitutional principle. Reserved for this entry per the anti-duplication rule (declined at DOMAIN/DOMINIO). Confident in the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EMOLUMENT

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 8 (foreign emoluments); art. II, § 1, cl. 7 (presidential emoluments)]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The term's most significant operative use in American law is constitutional: the Emoluments Clauses bar federal office-holders from accepting foreign presents or emoluments without Congress's consent, and bar any other emolument to the President beyond his stated compensation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 8 (foreign emoluments); art. II, § 1, cl. 7 (presidential emoluments). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EMOLUMENT, p. 420; scan anchor: djvu line 71005 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines emolument as profit annexed to office; the clauses are the specific constitutional home of the defined term — where the word does its highest-stakes legal work, restricting what office-holders may receive. Confident these clauses are real. Borderline weighed; kept as the term's genuine constitutional anchor, not a generic note. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

DIED SON ACTE

[Maxim: Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam — the act of God does no injury to anyone]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines the act of God; the classic maxim states the legal consequence attached to it — a pure act-of-God event, beyond human foresight or control, carries no liability. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam — the act of God does no injury to anyone. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry DIED SON ACTE, p. 367; scan anchor: djvu line 62119 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry gives the term (an event beyond human foresight or control); the maxim is the genuine common-law principle that makes the term legally operative — the defense against liability for vis major. Standard, certain form; not forced. [Chunk headword is OCR-mangled as 'DIED SON ACTE';

What. The dwelling-house carries the law's special protection under the castle doctrine: to every man his own house is his safest refuge, as his castle and fortress for defense and repose. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Domus sua cuique est tutissimum refugium — to every man his own house is his safest refuge (5 Coke, 91a; 11 Coke, 82a; 3 Inst. 162). When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines domus as house/dwelling; the maxim states the operative legal principle attached to the dwelling — the castle doctrine quoted in the same body — which is why the dwelling has special legal status (burglary, defense of habitation). Copied in the standard certain form; genuinely illuminating, not decorative. What. The policy principle behind the institution of dower is the law's favor toward it: the law favors dower as the reward of chastity, and therefore it is to be preserved. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Doti lex favet; praemium pudoris est; ideo parcatur — the law favors dower; it is the reward of chastity; therefore let it be preserved (Co. Litt. 31). EMOTIONAL INSANITY

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Emotional insanity with reasoning faculties unimpaired fails the M'Naghten test, which excuses criminal liability only for a defect of reason preventing knowledge of the act's nature or wrongfulness. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: M'Naghten's Case, 10 Cl. & F. 200, 8 Eng. Rep. 718 (H.L. 1843). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EMOTIONAL INSANITY, p. 421; scan anchor: djvu line 71031 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1843 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's whole point is that reasoning remains unimpaired amid violent emotion; M'Naghten makes cognitive defect the dispositive element of the insanity defense, so the case genuinely illuminates why this species of aberration does not excuse. Real canonical authority, not a restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EMPIRIC

[Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U.S. 114 (1889)]

Who. The court deciding Dent v. West Virginia (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. States may constitutionally require medical practitioners to hold a diploma or pass examination under the police power, which is the legal basis for prosecuting unqualified 'empirics' as the entry's cited board-of-health cases do. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U.S. 114 (1889). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EMPIRIC, p. 421; scan anchor: djvu line 71111 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1889 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry quotes state cases penalizing quackery; Dent supplies the genuine constitutional axiom behind them (state power to license physicians). Real case, real principle, directly explains the entry's legal context rather than restating it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

What. The federal exemplar of the 'Employer liability act' class the entry names is FELA, which abrogated the fellow-servant rule for railroad employees injured through employer negligence. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C. §§ 51–60. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EMPLOYER, p. 421; scan anchor: djvu line 71152 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the genus of statutes abolishing the fellow-servant rule; FELA is the canonical real statute of that genus. Citing the species illuminates the genus without inventing authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EMPRESARIOS

[Law: Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 9 Stat. 922 (1848)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Mexican land grants held by empresarios came under U.S. court adjudication because the treaty ending the Mexican-American War guaranteed the property rights of Mexican grantees. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, 9 Stat. 922 (1848). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EMPRESARIOS, p. 422; scan anchor: djvu line 71223 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1848 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry cites a U.S. Supreme Court case deciding a Mexican land grant but never says why U.S. courts sat in judgment of Mexican concessions; the treaty is the real jurisdictional bridge. Genuine historical-legal illumination, not forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EMPTOR

[Law: UCC § 2-314 — implied warranty of merchantability]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The common-law maxim caveat emptor ('let the buyer beware') is displaced in sales of goods by the implied warranty of merchantability, which obligates the seller of goods fit for ordinary purposes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-314 — implied warranty of merchantability. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EMPTOR, p. 422; scan anchor: djvu line 71268 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the maxim; the footnote states its real modern statutory qualification. UCC § 2-314 is a genuine, citable section in direct doctrinal tension with the maxim — illumination, not restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EN MOST MEYNE

[Law: Statute of Mortmain, 7 Edw. I, st. 2 (De Viris Religiosis) (1279)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Statutes of Mortmain restricted conveyances of land into the 'dead hand' of religious corporations, giving operative legal force to the Law-French phrase meaning 'in mortmain.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of Mortmain, 7 Edw. I, st. 2 (De Viris Religiosis) (1279). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EN MOST MEYNE, p. 423; scan anchor: djvu line 71351 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is only the phrase 'in a dead hand; in mortmain'; the 1279 statute is the real law that made the phrase matter. Genuine link: term to its operative statute. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EN RECOUVREMENT

[Law: UCC § 3-206 — restrictive indorsements]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The French 'en recouvrement' indorsement, which authorizes collection without transferring property in the bill, is the civil-law analogue of the UCC restrictive indorsement for collection. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-206 — restrictive indorsements. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EN RECOUVREMENT, p. 423; scan anchor: djvu line 71358 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Real UCC section governing exactly this device (indorsement conferring collection authority, not ownership). A genuine doctrinal parallel that illuminates the civil-law entry for a common-law reader. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EN VENTRE SA MERE

[Maxim: Nasciturus pro iam nato habetur, quotiens de commodis eius agitur]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. “An unborn child is deemed born whenever its own interests are at stake” — the Roman maxim stating the very fiction the entry describes: the law treats the child en ventre as in being for beneficial purposes such as legacies, guardianship, and limitations. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nasciturus pro iam nato habetur, quotiens de commodis eius agitur. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EN VENTRE SA MERE, p. 423; scan anchor: djvu line 71372 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The maxim (Dig. 1.5.7) is the verbatim canonical statement of the principle the entry recites. This is the strongest class of law-well link: entry states a doctrine, footnote names its classical formulation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ENCOURAGE

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiding and abetting]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. In criminal law, 'encouraging' an offense is the conduct of aiding and abetting: federal law punishes as a principal whoever 'aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures' the commission of an offense. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiding and abetting. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ENCOURAGE, p. 423; scan anchor: djvu line 71475 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the criminal-law sense of encourage as instigate/incite; 18 U.S.C. § 2 is the genuine federal doctrine making such encouragement punishable as principal liability. Real statute, direct doctrinal fit, not a restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ENGRAVING

[Law: Copyright Act of 1802 — extended copyright to prints and engravings]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Engravings became a term of art in copyright law because the Copyright Act of 1802 expressly extended the 1790 Act's protection to prints and engravings. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Copyright Act of 1802 — extended copyright to prints and engravings. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ENGRAVING, p. 425; scan anchor: djvu line 71781 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1802 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry is a copyright-law definition; the 1802 amendment is the real statute that put 'engraving' into copyright law in the first place. Historical-legal illumination, cited in loose form to avoid a risky volume number. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ENGROSSING

[Law: Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2 — monopolization]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The common-law misdemeanor of engrossing — cornering a market in victuals to force prices — is the ancestor of the modern federal offense of monopolization. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C. § 2 — monopolization. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ENGROSSING, p. 425; scan anchor: djvu line 71811 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry fully states the ancient market-cornering offense and its repeal; the Sherman Act is its genuine statutory successor (same wrong, federal form). Real section, real lineage, illuminates why the ancient offense still matters. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ENLISTMENT

[In re Grimley, 137 U.S. 147 (1890)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Though framed as 'contracting to serve,' enlistment creates a military status rather than an ordinary contract, binding even a recruit whose enlistment was fraudulently obtained. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: In re Grimley, 137 U.S. 147 (1890). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ENLISTMENT, p. 426; scan anchor: djvu line 71896 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1890 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's own citation (Morrissey v. Perry, 137 U.S. 157) sits beside Grimley in the same volume; Grimley genuinely tensions the entry's contract framing with the status doctrine. Real case, directly illuminating. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ENS LEGIS

[Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518 (1819)]

Who. The court deciding Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A corporation is 'an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law' — the classical American statement of the ens legis doctrine the entry defines. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1819 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Marshall's verbatim definition is the canonical authority for the very doctrine the entry states (artificial being vs. natural person, applied to corporations). Strongest-class link: entry states doctrine, footnote names its classical authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ENTREPOT

[Law: Warehousing Act of 1846 — U.S. bonded warehouse system]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The French entrepôt — goods warehoused duty-free pending re-export — has its American functional analogue in the bonded-warehouse system established by the Warehousing Act of 1846. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Warehousing Act of 1846 — U.S. bonded warehouse system. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ENTREPOT, p. 428; scan anchor: djvu line 72225 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1846 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry describes the French institution; the 1846 Act is the real U.S. statute creating the same legal device (duty-free deposit for re-export). Cited loosely and framed as an analogue, not the same law, to avoid overclaiming. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ENUMERATED

[Maxim: Expressio unius est exclusio alterius]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The canon giving 'enumerated' powers its bite is the maxim 'Expressio unius est exclusio alterius' — the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another; the entry's printed Latin ('Enumeratio iaflmat regnlaa in caaibns non enomeratis,' citing Bac. Aph. 17) is a corrupted setting of Bacon's maxim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ENUMERATED, p. 429; scan anchor: djvu line 72519 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is about the maxim's legal work but prints it corrupted; restoring the correct canonical form is an addition, not an echo. Real maxim, transparent repair. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ENVOY

[Law: Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, Art. 14 (1961)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The second-class rank the entry describes is codified in the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, which divides heads of mission into three classes, the second being 'envoys, ministers and internuncios,' ranking after ambassadors. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1961 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Real treaty article with a verbatim class structure matching the entry's definition — the modern codification of the rank described. Direct fit, not forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EQUAL

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1 — Uniformity Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 'equal and uniform' requirement the entry defines has its federal constitutional root in the Uniformity Clause: 'all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 1 — Uniformity Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EQUAL, p. 431; scan anchor: djvu line 72774 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Real constitutional provision stating the federal version of the entry's principle. Genuine root, not restatement — the entry gives the doctrine, the footnote gives its constitutional source. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EQUIVALENT

[Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Prods. Co., 339 U.S. 605 (1950)]

Who. The court deciding Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Prods. Co. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The patent-law 'equivalent' the entry defines is governed by the doctrine of equivalents: a device infringes if it performs substantially the same function in substantially the same way to obtain the same result. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Prods. Co., 339 U.S. 605 (1950). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EQUIVALENT, p. 434; scan anchor: djvu line 73264 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1950 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Graver Tank is the canonical case establishing the modern doctrine of equivalents — the named doctrine the entry's three-characteristic definition describes. Real case, directly illuminating. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ERASURE

[Pigot's Case, 11 Co. Rep. 26b (1614)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A material erasure or alteration of a written instrument by a party to it avoids the instrument — the legal consequence of the act the entry defines. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Pigot's Case, 11 Co. Rep. 26b (1614). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ERASURE, p. 434; scan anchor: djvu line 73306 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1614 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines erasure from an instrument; Pigot's Case is the classic authority that a material alteration by the obligee voids the deed. Real case, real rule, directly the doctrine behind the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ESCAPE

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 751 — escape from federal custody]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Escape from lawful custody, which the entry defines in its voluntary and negligent forms, is a federal offense when committed against federal custody. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 751 — escape from federal custody. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ESCAPE, p. 436; scan anchor: djvu line 73600 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Real statute criminalizing escape from federal custody — the modern federal form of the common-law offense the entry defines. Direct fit, not forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ESPOUSALS

[Law: heart-balm statutes — abolition of breach-of-promise-to-marry actions]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The espousal contract — a mutual promise to marry in the future — was once enforceable by an action for breach of promise to marry, an action abolished across the states by the 'heart-balm' statutes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: heart-balm statutes — abolition of breach-of-promise-to-marry actions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ESPOUSALS, p. 437; scan anchor: djvu line 73872 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Real legal development directly governing the entry's subject: the espousal promise's enforceability died with the heart-balm reforms. Cited loosely (state-by-state abolition, no single statute) to avoid overclaiming. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ESTOPPEL

[Maxim: Allegans contraria non est audiendus]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. “He who alleges things contradictory to each other is not to be heard” — the classical maxim stating the estoppel principle: the law bars a man from alleging or denying a fact contrary to his own previous allegation, conduct, or admission. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Allegans contraria non est audiendus. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ESTOPPEL, p. 442; scan anchor: djvu line 74684 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The maxim is the verbatim classical formulation of the very doctrine the entry defines. Strongest-class link: entry states doctrine, footnote names its classical maxim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ETIQUETTE OF THE PROFESSION

[Law: ABA Canons of Professional Ethics (1908)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The bar's unwritten code of honor took its first national written form in the ABA Canons of Professional Ethics (1908), the first American codification of lawyers' professional duties. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: ABA Canons of Professional Ethics (1908). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ETIQUETTE OF THE PROFESSION, p. 446; scan anchor: djvu line 75148 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1908 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the tacit professional code; the 1908 Canons are the real instrument that first wrote it down nationally. Historical-legal illumination, cited loosely. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EUNDO, MORANDO, ET REDEUNDO

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 1 — Speech or Debate Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The legislator's privilege from arrest while going, remaining, and returning is constitutionally stated in the Speech or Debate Clause: Senators and Representatives 'shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 1 — Speech or Debate Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EUNDO, MORANDO, ET REDEUNDO, p. 446; scan anchor: djvu line 75169 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

EX PARTE

[Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306 (1950)]

Who. The court deciding Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Because ex parte relief issues 'without notice to, or contestation by, any person adversely interested,' due process constrains it: notice must be reasonably calculated to apprise interested parties, with an opportunity to be heard. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1950 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Mullane is the canonical case stating the notice-and-hearing requirement — the genuine constitutional boundary on the very 'without notice' feature the entry defines. The entry describes the practice; the footnote states its limit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EX POST FACTO LAW

[Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 386 (1798)]

Who. The court deciding Calder v. Bull (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The Constitution's narrower meaning of 'ex post facto' — criminal laws only, in four classes — was fixed by Justice Chase in Calder v. Bull: every law that makes criminal an innocent act, aggravates a crime, increases punishment, or alters legal rules of evidence to convict. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. (3 Dall.) 386 (1798). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EX POST FACTO LAW, p. 463; scan anchor: djvu line 76471 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1798 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry cites the constitutional prohibition and promises the narrower construction; Calder is the canonical authority supplying it. Real case, directly the authority the entry's 'extracts' point to. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

[Law: False Claims Act qui tam provisions, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729–3733]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The relator proceeding — a private person instigating suit in the sovereign's name ('State ex rel. Doe v. Roe') — survives in federal law as the qui tam action, in which a private relator sues on behalf of the United States. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: False Claims Act qui tam provisions, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729–3733. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EX RELATIONE, p. 463; scan anchor: djvu line 76606 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Real statute codifying the modern form of the relator device the entry defines: the private relator suing in the government's name. Genuine doctrinal descendant, not forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EXACTION

[Law: Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1951 — extortion under color of official right]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The officer's wrongful taking 'under color of his official authority' that the entry defines is now the federal offense of extortion under color of official right. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1951 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Real statute, the modern federal form of the official-right taking the entry defines and distinguishes from extortion at common law. Direct counterpart, not a restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EXCESSIVE

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — Excessive Bail Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 'excessive bail' the entry defines at length is constitutionally barred: 'Excessive bail shall not be required.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — Excessive Bail Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EXCESSIVE, p. 457; scan anchor: djvu line 77305 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Real constitutional provision, verbatim clause, the source of the doctrine the entry defines. Genuine root, not restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EXEMPTION

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 522 — bankruptcy exemptions]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 'exemption laws' the entry defines — property of a judgment debtor held free from levy and sale on execution — take modern federal statutory form in the Bankruptcy Code's exemption provision. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. § 522 — bankruptcy exemptions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EXEMPTION, p. 463; scan anchor: djvu line 78235 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Real Code section directly codifying the entry's exemption doctrine in federal bankruptcy. The entry states the genus; the footnote gives the canonical federal species. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EXEQUATUR

[Law: Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, Art. 12 (1963)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The consular exequatur — the receiving state's certificate recognizing a consul's official character and authorizing his duties — is codified in the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, whose Article 12 is titled 'The exequatur.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, Art. 12 (1963). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EXEQUATUR, p. 463; scan anchor: djvu line 78271 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1963 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Real treaty article on the verbatim subject the entry defines — the modern international law of the instrument described. Direct fit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EXORDIUM

[Law: Expatriation Act of 1868 — expatriation as a natural and inherent right]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The voluntary abandonment of one's country the entry defines is, in American law, 'a natural and inherent right of all people' — the Expatriation Act of 1868 repudiating the doctrine of perpetual allegiance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Expatriation Act of 1868 — expatriation as a natural and inherent right. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EXORDIUM, p. 463; scan anchor: djvu line 78622 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1868 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Real act directly fixing the legal status of the act the entry defines. The entry describes the act; the footnote gives its American statutory charter. Genuine, not forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EXPERTS

[Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 U.S. 579 (1993)]

Who. The court deciding Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The opinion testimony of expert witnesses the entry defines is admitted only through the trial judge's gatekeeping for reliability and relevance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1993 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Daubert is the canonical case establishing the modern admissibility standard for expert opinion testimony — directly the law governing the witnesses the entry defines. Real case, genuine illumination. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EXPROPRIATION

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — Takings Clause]

What. The eminent-domain sense of expropriation — compulsory taking of private property for public use on compensation made — is constitutionally stated in the Takings Clause: 'nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — Takings Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EXPROPRIATION, p. 468; scan anchor: djvu line 79112 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Real constitutional provision, verbatim clause, directly the American law of the power the entry defines. Strongest-class link: entry states doctrine, footnote names its constitutional source. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EXTERRITORIAXITY

[Law: Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, Art. 31 (1961)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The foreign minister's privilege of exemption from the receiving state's laws is codified in the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, which immunizes diplomatic agents from the criminal jurisdiction of the receiving state. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1961 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Real treaty article directly codifying the privilege the entry defines — the contemporary international law of exterritoriality. Direct fit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EXTRADITION

[Law: U.S. Const. art. IV, § 2, cl. 2 — Extradition Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Interstate extradition within the American Union, which the entry notes, rests on the Extradition Clause: 'A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. IV, § 2, cl. 2 — Extradition Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EXTRADITION, p. 471; scan anchor: djvu line 79588 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Real constitutional provision, verbatim-adjacent, the direct source of the interstate extradition the entry invokes. Genuine root, not restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EYE- WITNESS

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 602 — witness must have personal knowledge]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An eye-witness is only competent because he 'saw the act' — the modern evidence rule still demands personal knowledge before any witness may testify. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Evid. 602 — witness must have personal knowledge. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EYE- WITNESS, p. 473; scan anchor: djvu line 79825 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the person by firsthand observation ('one who saw the act, fact, or transaction to which he testifies'); Rule 602 is the living form of exactly that requirement, barring testimony without personal knowledge. Direct descent, not analogy. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EYOTT

[Law: alluvion — accretion by gradual water action vests in the riparian owner]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A small island rising in a river fell under the common-law doctrine of alluvion — land gained by the gradual, imperceptible action of the water belongs to the riparian owner. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: alluvion — accretion by gradual water action vests in the riparian owner. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EYOTT, p. 473; scan anchor: djvu line 79829 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (citing Bracton and Fleta) defines the very subject of the alluvion/accretion doctrine: an island formed by a river's action. The doctrine decides who owns it. The link is the subject matter itself. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

EYRE

[Law: Judiciary Act of 1789, § 4 — Justices required to ride circuit]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The justices in eyre — royal judges riding a circuit of the realm — are the ancestor of the American practice of circuit riding, where early Supreme Court Justices traveled the federal circuits to hold court. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Judiciary Act of 1789, § 4 — Justices required to ride circuit. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry EYRE, p. 473; scan anchor: djvu line 79832 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1789 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Both institutions answer the same problem (justice must travel to the people) with the same device (itinerant judges holding court in specified places). The eyre is the direct English model; circuit riding is its American descendant. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

F

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — cruel and unusual punishments]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Branding the letter 'F' on felons admitted to clergy was a corporal sanction of the old criminal law; the modern boundary is the Eighth Amendment's ban on cruel and unusual punishments, which ended such bodily marks. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — cruel and unusual punishments. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry F, p. 474; scan anchor: djvu line 79861 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry documents a state-inflicted bodily punishment for crime; the Eighth Amendment is the constitutional rule that now governs whether the state may inflict such punishment. It explains why the practice is history, not law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

F. O. B

[Law: UCC § 2-319 — F.O.B. and F.A.S. terms]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Free on board' is not merely mercantile slang — Article 2 of the UCC codifies F.O.B. terms, distinguishing shipment contracts from destination contracts and fixing where risk of loss passes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-319 — F.O.B. and F.A.S. terms. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry F. O. B, p. 474; scan anchor: djvu line 79868 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry quotes three cases construing F.O.B. contracts; UCC § 2-319 is the statute that now defines those exact terms for sale-of-goods contracts. The citation is the code section that governs the entry's subject. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FABRICA

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — power to coin money; 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 'making or coining of money' is a sovereign prerogative: the Constitution vests it in Congress, and counterfeiting — the unlawful 'fabricare' — is a federal crime. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — power to coin money; 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FABRICA, p. 474; scan anchor: djvu line 79887 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry covers both lawful and unlawful coining; the two citations are the lawful source of the power and the criminal prohibition of the unlawful making. Both are real and on point. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FABRIC ARE

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5; 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. See FABRICA: the lawful coining flows from Congress's constitutional power to coin money, and the unlawful making is the federal crime of counterfeiting. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 5; 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FABRIC ARE, p. 474; scan anchor: djvu line 79890 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Same subject as FABRICA, including the entry's own reference to counterfeiting prosecutions (1 Salk. 842). The constitutional power and the counterfeiting statute are the genuine modern anchors. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FABRICATE

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1519 — falsification/fabrication of evidence in federal matters]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Fabricating evidence — manufacturing or warping facts after the event with intent to deceive — is the core of federal obstruction-by-falsification law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1519 — falsification/fabrication of evidence in federal matters. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FABRICATE, p. 474; scan anchor: djvu line 79895 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1519 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's definition ('to arrange or manufacture circumstances ... with the purpose of using them as evidence, and of deceitfully making them appear as if accidental') is the conduct § 1519 criminalizes. Direct fit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAC SIMILE PROBATE

[Law: the armchair rule of will construction]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Ordering probate 'in fac simile' so the court can read the testator's meaning from the paper's very appearance is the probate form of the armchair rule: the court seats itself in the testator's chair and weighs every surrounding circumstance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the armchair rule of will construction. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAC SIMILE PROBATE, p. 474; scan anchor: djvu line 79930 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's practice — let appearance illuminate meaning — is exactly what the armchair rule requires courts to do when construing wills. The doctrine genuinely illuminates the procedure, and vice versa. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACE

[Law: facial invalidity — an instrument disclosing a fatal defect in its own terms is void on its face]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Void on its face' remains live pleading doctrine: a complaint or instrument that discloses its own fatal defect is demurrable without extrinsic evidence. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: facial invalidity — an instrument disclosing a fatal defect in its own terms is void on its face. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FACE, p. 474; scan anchor: djvu line 79938 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's whole point is the legal force of what the paper shows 'by the mere language employed.' The pleading rule — defects patent on the face defeat the action — is that point in active use. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACIES

[McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792 (1973)]

Who. The court deciding McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The 'prima facie case' the entry defines is the standard modern employment-discrimination framework: the Supreme Court's four-element prima facie showing that shifts the burden of production. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1973 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines a prima facie case as one 'apparently good and maintainable' on first examination; McDonnell Douglas built the most famous modern application of that structure — the plaintiff's initial showing that compels the defendant to answer. The case name and citation are certain. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACIO TTT DES

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 71 — consideration as bargained-for exchange]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The civil-law innominate contract 'I do that you may give' is the Roman ancestor of the common-law doctrine of consideration — a performance bargained for in exchange. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Black's own text (2 Bl. Comm. 445) gives the servant-for-wages example; the Restatement's bargained-for-exchange test is the modern statement of the same element the innominate contract isolates: something done for something given. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACIO ITT FACIAS

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 71 — consideration as bargained-for exchange]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The sibling innominate contract 'I do that you may do' — mutual performances, or forbearance on one side for performance on the other — is the same bargained-for-exchange root, covering exchange of acts rather than act for price. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 71 — consideration as bargained-for exchange. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FACIO ITT FACIAS, p. 475; scan anchor: djvu line 80022 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's own examples (each does the other's work; marriage together; forbearance for performance) are textbook consideration under the modern test. Same reasoning as FACIO UT DES, applied to the mutual-performance form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACT

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VII — right of trial by jury]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's central contrast — 'questions of fact are for the jury; questions of law for the court' — is preserved by the Seventh Amendment's guarantee of jury trial in suits at common law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VII — right of trial by jury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FACT, p. 475; scan anchor: djvu line 80033 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the fact/law division as the operating rule; the Seventh Amendment is the constitutional guarantee that keeps that division alive in federal civil cases. The link is the entry's own closing sentence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACTA

[Maxim: Facta sunt potentiora verbis — deeds are more powerful than words]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry itself preserves the maxim 'Facta sunt potentiora verbis' — deeds are more powerful than words — and anchors a second maxim to 12 Coke 124. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Facta sunt potentiora verbis — deeds are more powerful than words. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FACTA, p. 476; scan anchor: djvu line 80186 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry; Black's maxims are within the Law well's sources ('maxims' listed in the brief's citation forms). The annotation records the genuine maxim the entry carries, not a paraphrase. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACTXO TESTAMENTI

[Law: Banks v. Goodfellow (1870) — the leading testamentary-capacity test]

Who. The court deciding Law: Banks v. Goodfellow (1870) — the leading testamentary-capacity test (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Capacity to make a will — the entry's 'factio activa' — is tested by the classic rule: the testator must understand the nature of the act, the extent of his property, and the claims of those he might benefit. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Banks v. Goodfellow (1870) — the leading testamentary-capacity test. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FACTXO TESTAMENTI, p. 476; scan anchor: djvu line 80200 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1870 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the capacity itself, citing the Institutes; Banks v. Goodfellow is the landmark statement of what that capacity requires in the common-law world. The case and its test are certain. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACTO

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 541(c)(1) — ipso facto clauses unenforceable in bankruptcy]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Ipso facto' — by the act itself, without further proceeding — survives as a live bankruptcy term of art: clauses that terminate rights ipso facto upon insolvency or filing are unenforceable against the estate. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. § 541(c)(1) — ipso facto clauses unenforceable in bankruptcy. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FACTO, p. 476; scan anchor: djvu line 80208 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines 'by the mere effect of a fact, without anything superadded'; the Bankruptcy Code provision is the modern statute that turns on exactly that phrase and its effect. The statutory language itself uses 'ipso facto.' [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACTO

[Law: the Factors' Acts (1823–1842) — protection of buyers from entrusted factors]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The FACTOR sub-entry — a commercial agent entrusted with possession of goods to sell in his own name — was the subject of the Factors' Acts, which protected bona fide purchasers dealing with such agents. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the Factors' Acts (1823–1842) — protection of buyers from entrusted factors. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FACTO, p. 476; scan anchor: djvu line 80208 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1823 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry describes the factor's powers (possession, sale in his own name); the Factors' Acts are the statutes that allocated the risk those powers created, validating sales to good-faith buyers. Direct statutory subject-matter match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACTORY

[Law: the English Factory Acts (1802 onward; extended 1844) — early statutory labor protection]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's statutory definition (7 Vict. c. 15) belongs to the Factory Acts — the first generation of labor-protective legislation, regulating hours and conditions in the mills the statute defines. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the English Factory Acts (1802 onward; extended 1844) — early statutory labor protection. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FACTORY, p. 476; scan anchor: djvu line 80310 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1802 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry is itself a statute's definition; the annotation names the legislative tradition it belongs to and why the definition exists — to delimit the workplaces the new labor law reached. Honest context, no stretch. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACTUM

[Weatherhead v. Baskerville, 11 How. 354 — Black's own cited authority on due execution]

Who. The court deciding Weatherhead v. Baskerville (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry cites Weatherhead v. Baskerville, 11 How. 354, for the testamentary rule that due execution means proof the testator 'well knew and understood the contents' — knowledge, not mere signature. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Weatherhead v. Baskerville, 11 How. 354 — Black's own cited authority on due execution. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FACTUM, p. 477; scan anchor: djvu line 80368 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The citation is the entry's own; the annotation records what the entry says the case stands for, verbatim in substance: factum requires the testator's understanding of the will's contents. No year invented; no holding invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FACULTIES

[Law: ability-to-pay — the standing measure of alimony and support awards]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The husband's 'faculties' — tangible property, income, and earning ability — survive as the central alimony inquiry: modern statutes and courts still measure support by the supporting spouse's ability to pay. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: ability-to-pay — the standing measure of alimony and support awards. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FACULTIES, p. 477; scan anchor: djvu line 80447 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's definition (2 Bish. Mar. & Div.; Lovett; Wright) is the 19th-century form; the ability-to-pay standard is its living descendant. Same question — what can he render — asked in every support case today. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FADERFIUM

[Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — agreements in consideration of marriage]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A marriage gift made at the wedding sits inside the Statute of Frauds' marriage provision: promises made in consideration of marriage must be in writing to be enforceable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — agreements in consideration of marriage. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FADERFIUM, p. 477; scan anchor: djvu line 80490 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1677 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry is a gift from the bride's kin at marriage; the statute is the standing rule that governs enforceability of marriage-consideration promises. It illuminates the legal frame in which such gifts and promises operate. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAESTIN G-MEN

[Law: frankpledge — Anglo-Saxon collective surety, ancestor of bail and suretyship]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Saxon 'faesting-men' — men of substance pledged to answer for each other's good behavior — are the frankpledge system, the ancestor of modern suretyship and bail. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: frankpledge — Anglo-Saxon collective surety, ancestor of bail and suretyship. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAESTIN G-MEN, p. 477; scan anchor: djvu line 80502 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the institution (Cowell; Du Cange); the annotation names it — frankpledge — and its genuine descendants. This is identification of the historical institution, not analogy. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAGGOT VOTES

[Law: 7 & 8 Will. III c. 25, § 7 — against split and sham franchise qualifications]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry cites Parliament's own remedy — 7 & 8 Will. III c. 25, § 7 — against votes manufactured by sham conveyances: an early statute against electoral fraud, ancestor of modern vote-fraud prohibitions. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 7 & 8 Will. III c. 25, § 7 — against split and sham franchise qualifications. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAGGOT VOTES, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80530 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The citation is the entry's own (via Wharton); the annotation records that the manufactured-vote problem was met by statute in 1695, framing the genuine historical anti-fraud lineage. Nothing added beyond the entry's authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAIDA

[Axiom: the state alone may lawfully punish homicide; private vengeance is itself criminal]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The recognized feud — vengeance by the victim's kin — was displaced by the state's monopoly on lawful force: private retaliation for homicide is murder, however ancient the enmity. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: the state alone may lawfully punish homicide; private vengeance is itself criminal. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAIDA, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80541 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry records the Teutonic rule that feud justified vengeance; the axiom states the principle that buried it — the king's peace, then the criminal law, absorbed all lawful retaliation. The contrast genuinely illuminates the entry. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAILLITE

[Law: 11 U.S.C. — the Bankruptcy Code]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The French 'faillite' — the debtor unable to meet his engagements — is the civil-law form of bankruptcy, whose American body is the Bankruptcy Code. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. — the Bankruptcy Code. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAILLITE, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80584 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (Code de Com. arts. 442, 580; La. Civ. Code art. 3522) defines the condition; the annotation points to where that condition is now administered in American law. Same legal subject, modern locus. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FAILURE

[Axiom: failure of consideration defeats enforcement]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Failure of consideration — consideration once good that 'has since become worthless or has ceased to exist' — defeats enforcement of the promise it supported. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: failure of consideration defeats enforcement. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAILURE, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80590 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's own definition (Shirk v. Neible and others) states the rule; the annotation states it as the standing contract principle. No citation invented; the principle is the entry's own doctrine distilled. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAINT PLEADER

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 — good-faith, non-frivolous pleadings; sanctions]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Fraudulent, false, or collusive pleading 'to the deception of a third person' is met by the modern rule that pleadings must be signed in good faith and non-frivolous, on pain of sanctions. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry names the abuse (collusive pleading to deceive); Rule 11 is the procedural rule that polices exactly that abuse — sham and bad-faith pleading. Direct functional match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FAIRLY

[Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N.J. Eq. 234 — Black's own cited authority on 'fairly' vs. 'truly']

Who. The court deciding Lawrence v. Finch (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's own authority — Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N.J. Eq. 234 — holds that 'fairly' is not 'truly': testimony may be truly yet unfairly reported, and fairly yet not strictly true, fixing the commissioner's oath. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N.J. Eq. 234 — Black's own cited authority on 'fairly' vs. 'truly'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAIRLY, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80739 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The case is the entry's own citation and the whole entry is its holding; the annotation preserves that holding verbatim in substance. Allowed: authorities Black's itself cites. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

FAIT

[Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — land conveyances in writing]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A deed 'lawfully executed' is the sealed instrument at the root of conveyancing — and conveyances of land still require writing under the Statute of Frauds. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — land conveyances in writing. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAIT, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80753 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1677 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the deed; the statute is the standing formality rule that still governs the deed's principal subject, land. The link is the deed's continuing legal habitat. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAIT ENROLLS

[Law: recording acts — enrollment/registration protects bona fide purchasers]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The enrolled deed — a bargain and sale made matter of record — is the ancestor of the recording acts, under which enrollment protects the bona fide purchaser against later claims. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: recording acts — enrollment/registration protects bona fide purchasers. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAIT ENROLLS, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80760 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. 1 Keb. 568 (the entry's citation) is the old practice; the recording acts are its modern form, serving the same function: public notice through enrollment. Genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAITHFULLY

[Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 3 — the Take Care Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Faithfully' in an officer's bond imports punctilious discharge of duty — the same word the Constitution lays on the President: he 'shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 3 — the Take Care Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAITHFULLY, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80788 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's cases (State v. Chadwick and others) give the word its weight in bonds; the Take Care Clause is the most famous legal use of the identical term, imposing the identical duty — faithful execution of office. Verbatim constitutional text. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FALCARE

[Law: profit à prendre — a right to take timber, minerals, or other produce from another's land]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'jus falcandi' — the right of cutting wood on another's land — is the classic example of a profit à prendre, the right to take a natural product from another's soil. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: profit à prendre — a right to take timber, minerals, or other produce from another's land. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FALCARE, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80813 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Black's defines the profit as exactly this kind of right elsewhere in the dictionary; the entry's jus falcandi (Bract. fol. 231) is a textbook instance. The annotation names the living property doctrine the entry describes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FALCIDIA

[Law: La. Civ. Code arts. 1493–1496 — forced heirship]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Spanish-law Falcidian fourth — one-fourth of the inheritance that could not be willed away from the heir — is the forced-heirship principle that survives in Louisiana, the Roman/Spanish law's American heir. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: La. Civ. Code arts. 1493–1496 — forced heirship. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FALCIDIA, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80831 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1493 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the inalienable heir's portion; Louisiana's forced-heirship articles are the genuine modern American form of that same Roman/Spanish rule. Same doctrine, living code. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FALCIDIAN LAW

[Law: La. Civ. Code arts. 1493–1496 — forced heirship; cf. Black's own FORCED HEIRS]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The lex Falcidia (40 B.C.) — no more than three-fourths of an estate in legacies, one-fourth secured to the heir — is the Roman root of forced heirship, still living in Louisiana's Civil Code. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: La. Civ. Code arts. 1493–1496 — forced heirship; cf. Black's own FORCED HEIRS. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FALCIDIAN LAW, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80836 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1493 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry (Mackeld.; Inst. 2, 22) states the rule; the annotation traces its genuine survival — the Spanish-law channel into Louisiana — rather than treating it as dead antiquity. Black's own later entry FORCED HEIRS carries the same doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FALCIDIAN PORTION

[Law: La. Civ. Code arts. 1493–1496 — the forced heir's legitime]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The heir's secured one-fourth — the Falcidian portion — is the ancestor of the forced heir's legitime in Louisiana, the portion of the estate the testator cannot defeat by will. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: La. Civ. Code arts. 1493–1496 — the forced heir's legitime. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FALCIDIAN PORTION, p. 478; scan anchor: djvu line 80852 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1493 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Same lineage as FALCIDIAN LAW: the entry's 'at least one-fourth' is the fixed share that Louisiana still reserves to forced heirs under the name legitime. Direct descent. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FALSA DEMONSTRATIO

[Maxim: Falsa demonstratio non nocet — false description does not vitiate]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves one of construction's great maxims verbatim — 'Falsa demonstratio non nocet' — false description does not vitiate where the person or thing intended is otherwise certain. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Falsa demonstratio non nocet — false description does not vitiate. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FALSA DEMONSTRATIO, p. 480; scan anchor: djvu line 80945 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted in the entry with Broom's Maxims and American cases (Cleaveland v. Smith, 2 Story 291); the maxim remains the working rule for saving wills and deeds despite misdescription. The annotation records the maxim the entry carries. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FALSA MONETA

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting U.S. obligations]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. False or counterfeit money is a federal crime: the Constitution gives Congress the coinage power, and counterfeiting United States obligations is punishable by fine and imprisonment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (Cod. 9, 24) names the Roman offense; § 471 is its American statutory form. Same offense, living statute. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting; state forgery statutes]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. To counterfeit — the entry's example is counterfeiting a seal (Bract. fol. 276b) — is forgery in its classic form, criminalized federally for money and securities and by every state for instruments generally. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 471 — counterfeiting; state forgery statutes. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FALSARE, p. 480; scan anchor: djvu line 80983 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the act; the annotation gives its modern criminal locus. The seal-counterfeiting example is the historical core of the forgery offense. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FALSONARIUS

[Law: forgery and counterfeiting statutes — e.g., 18 U.S.C. § 471]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The forger or counterfeiter — the entry's 'falsonarius' — is the defendant in the forgery and counterfeiting offenses that descend from the Roman crimen falsi. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: forgery and counterfeiting statutes — e.g., 18 U.S.C. § 471. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FALSONARIUS, p. 482; scan anchor: djvu line 81233 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Companion to FALSARE: the entry names the offender; the annotation names the offenses. The crimen falsi lineage is the genuine thread. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FALSE

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1001 — false statements require knowledge and willfulness]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. In law 'false' means 'designedly untrue and deceitful' — the scienter element — and that definition is the mental state the federal false-statements statute punishes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1001 — false statements require knowledge and willfulness. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FALSE, p. 480; scan anchor: djvu line 80990 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's cases (Hatcher v. Dunn and others) insist 'false' implies 'intention to perpetrate some treachery or fraud'; § 1001's 'knowingly and willfully' is that same element in statutory form. The definition genuinely illuminates the crime. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FALSEHOOD

[Law: forgery and fraud statutes — modern forms of the crimen falsi]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Scottish nominate crime of 'falsehood' — fraudulent imitation or suppression of truth to another's prejudice — is the common-law ancestor of the modern forgery and fraud offenses. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: forgery and fraud statutes — modern forms of the crimen falsi. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FALSEHOOD, p. 480; scan anchor: djvu line 81139 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (2 Broun 77–78) traces the crime from writ-falsification to the modern name 'forgery'; the annotation notes where the offense now lives. The FALSI CRIMEN sub-entry states the same genus. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FALSIFICATION

[Law: the equitable bill to surcharge and falsify an account (1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 525)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Showing an account's debit item to be false or erroneous is the equitable bill to surcharge and falsify — the chancery remedy for settling disputed accounts, cited in the entry itself through Story. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the equitable bill to surcharge and falsify an account (1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 525). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FALSIFICATION, p. 480; scan anchor: djvu line 81171 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's authorities (Story; Phillips v. Belden; Pitt v. Cholmondeley) are the remedy's own sources; the annotation names the bill of which the entry describes the procedure. Internal to the entry's authorities. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FALSIFYING A RECORD

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2071 — concealment or falsification of public records]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Falsifying a court or public record — 'a high offense against public justice' in the entry — is a federal crime when the record is a federal one: concealment, removal, or mutilation of public records is punishable by fine and imprisonment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2071 — concealment or falsification of public records. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FALSIFYING A RECORD, p. 480; scan anchor: djvu line 81196 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 2071 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry notes England punishes it by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98 and the United States 'generally, by statute'; § 2071 is the federal statute that does so. The entry's own framing invites the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAXSO RETORN O BREVXUM

[Law: officer's liability for false return of process — surviving common-law tort]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The dead writ against a sheriff for false return of process survives in substance: a ministerial officer remains liable for a false return, the modern action sounding in tort against the officer. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: officer's liability for false return of process — surviving common-law tort. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAXSO RETORN O BREVXUM, p. 482; scan anchor: djvu line 81227 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The writ (Reg. Jud. 43b) is obsolete, but the liability it enforced — the sheriff answerable for falsely returning the court's process — persists as a tort action. The annotation marks the genuine survival, not the dead form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

F ALSUS

[Maxim: Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus — false in one thing, false in all]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the evidence maxim verbatim — 'Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus' — false in one thing, false in all: a witness shown to have sworn falsely in one detail may be disbelieved as to the rest. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus — false in one thing, false in all. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry F ALSUS, p. 482; scan anchor: djvu line 81245 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted with the entry's own cases (The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. 339; Grimes v. State); the maxim remains a standard jury instruction on witness credibility. Recorded, not paraphrased. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAHA

[Law: defamation — the tort protecting reputation (fama) against false publication]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Fama — fame, character, reputation, 'report of common opinion' — is the interest the law of defamation protects: reputation injured by false statement is the gist of the libel and slander actions. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: defamation — the tort protecting reputation (fama) against false publication. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAHA, p. 482; scan anchor: djvu line 81266 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the protected thing; the annotation names the tort that protects it. The connection is the subject matter itself, not analogy. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAMACIDE

[Law: slander — spoken defamation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A 'killer of reputation' — a slanderer — is the defendant in a slander action: spoken defamation injuring reputation is actionable where the words are false and published to a third person. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: slander — spoken defamation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAMACIDE, p. 482; scan anchor: djvu line 81286 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is one line; the annotation gives the one-line tort it names. Direct identity between the entry's slanderer and the slander defendant. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAMILIES ERCISGUNSJE

[Law: partition — the action dividing co-owned property, in kind or by sale]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Roman action for partition of the aggregate succession among co-heirs is the ancestor of the modern partition suit, by which co-owners divide — or sell and divide the proceeds of — common property. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: partition — the action dividing co-owned property, in kind or by sale. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAMILIES ERCISGUNSJE, p. 482; scan anchor: djvu line 81322 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (Mackeld. Rom. Law § 499) describes the action's two offices — partition and contribution for expenses — which are the two offices of the modern partition suit. Genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAMILY

[Law: homestead exemptions — e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 522(d)(1); state homestead laws]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's homestead discussion (Miller v. Finegan) turns on 'family' as the operative word: homestead exemptions protect the family home, and the federal exemption preserves the debtor's interest in it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: homestead exemptions — e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 522(d)(1); state homestead laws. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAMILY, p. 482; scan anchor: djvu line 81336 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself raises homestead law and cites the family-definition cases; the annotation points to where that law now operates. The link is inside the entry's own discussion. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAMOSCS

[Law: libel — written defamation; descendant of the famosus libellus]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The civil-law 'famosus libellus' — a libelous writing, the species of injuria answering to libel — is the Roman ancestor of the libel action. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: libel — written defamation; descendant of the famosus libellus. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAMOSCS, p. 483; scan anchor: djvu line 81431 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry says the term 'denotes that species of injuria which corresponds nearly to libel or slander'; the annotation records the descent it asserts. The entry's own comparative claim, kept honest. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FAKE

[Law: common-carrier law — duties to passengers; regulation of fares]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'fare' — the price of passage, here in a railroad case (Chase v. New York Cent. R. Co.) — is the consideration in the carrier-passenger relation, governed by the law of common carriers with its duties to carry and its regulated rates. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-carrier law — duties to passengers; regulation of fares. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAKE, p. 483; scan anchor: djvu line 81456 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's citation is a carrier case about the fare; the annotation names the body of law that governs the carrier-passenger bargain the fare prices. Subject-matter match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FANATICS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — the Religion Clauses]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's statute — 13 Car. II c. 6, naming Quakers, Anabaptists, and dissenters 'fanatics' — is the persecuting law the American Religion Clauses answer: no established church, and free exercise protected against such acts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — the Religion Clauses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FANATICS, p. 483; scan anchor: djvu line 81502 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry documents the state-church penal regime; the First Amendment is the constitutional repudiation of that regime. The contrast genuinely illuminates both. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FARO

[Law: state gambling prohibitions — banking games of chance criminalized]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Faro — 'an unlawful game of cards' in which players stake money against the bank — is the classic banking game that state anti-gambling statutes criminalized; the entry's own cases (Ward v. State; U.S. v. Smith) are gambling prosecutions. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: state gambling prohibitions — banking games of chance criminalized. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FARO, p. 484; scan anchor: djvu line 81580 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the game as unlawful and cites criminal cases; the annotation names the body of law that made it so. The link is inside the entry's own framing. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAS

[Axiom: Blackstone's higher-law doctrine — human law must conform to divine and natural law (1 Bl. Comm. 41)]

Who. Blackstone, Commentaries (as cited: Axiom: Blackstone's higher-law doctrine — human law must conform to divine and natural law (1 Bl. Comm. 41)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Fas — right, justice, the divine law (3 Bl. Comm. 2) — is Blackstone's divine-law pole: human law (jus) is valid only insofar as it squares with the law of nature and of God, the higher law that no human enactment can contradict. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: Blackstone's higher-law doctrine — human law must conform to divine and natural law (1 Bl. Comm. 41). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAS, p. 484; scan anchor: djvu line 81604 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites Blackstone for the term; the annotation states the jurisprudential doctrine the term carries in his system — the higher-law test by which human laws are judged. Genuine Blackstonian content, not decoration. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FASTI

[Maxim: Fatetur facinus qui judicium fugit — he who flees judgment confesses his guilt]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim — 'Fatetur facinus qui judicium fugit' (he who flees judgment confesses his guilt) — is the ancient root of the evidence rule that a defendant's flight may be shown as consciousness of guilt. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Fatetur facinus qui judicium fugit — he who flees judgment confesses his guilt. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FASTI, p. 484; scan anchor: djvu line 81634 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim (8 Inst. 14); the maxim is the classical statement of the flight-as-consciousness-of-guilt inference still given in criminal trials. The annotation records the maxim and its living evidentiary form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FATHER

[Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645 (1972)]

Who. The court deciding Stanley v. Illinois (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The 'putative father' — the alleged father of an illegitimate child, one of the entry's own categories — won constitutional standing in the unwed-father cases: a state may not deny him a hearing on fitness before taking his children. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645 (1972). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FATHER, p. 484; scan anchor: djvu line 81644 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1972 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry catalogs putative, step-, and adoptive fathers (Lind v. Burke; State v. Nestaval); Stanley is the landmark on the putative father's due-process rights. Certain of case, volume, page, year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FATOM

[Law: force majeure / act of God — UCC § 2-615, excuse by failure of presupposed conditions]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Fatum as 'an event or cause of loss, beyond human foresight or means of prevention' is the civilian definition of force majeure — the supervening event that excuses contractual performance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: force majeure / act of God — UCC § 2-615, excuse by failure of presupposed conditions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FATOM, p. 484; scan anchor: djvu line 81677 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's definition is the doctrine's definition; UCC § 2-615 is its American sales-law form (commercial impracticability by supervening contingency). The link is definitional identity. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FATUUS

[Maxim: Fatuus praesumitur qui in proprio nomine errat — he who errs in his own name is presumed simple]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the maxim 'Fatuus praesumitur qui in proprio nomine errat' — a man is presumed simple who errs in his own name — and states the rule that the fatuus is 'non compos mentis,' lacking legal capacity. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Fatuus praesumitur qui in proprio nomine errat — he who errs in his own name is presumed simple. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FATUUS, p. 484; scan anchor: djvu line 81685 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim (Cod. 6, 24, 14; Van Alst v. Hunter, 5 Johns. Ch. 148); the non-compos-mentis rule the entry states is the incapacity doctrine voiding the contracts, marriages, and wills of the unsound. Maxim recorded, doctrine named. FAUCES TERRE

[Law: the bay rule — closing lines across bay mouths; cf. UNCLOS art. 10]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'jaws of the land' — headlands enclosing an arm of the sea (The Harriet, 1 Story 251; Hale, De Jure Maris) — is the fauces-terrae test for whether waters are territorial: the modern law of the sea still draws closing lines across bay mouths. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the bay rule — closing lines across bay mouths; cf. UNCLOS art. 10. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAUCES TERRE, p. 485; scan anchor: djvu line 81729 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's authorities are the admiralty sources of the bay doctrine; the annotation names the doctrine's modern form. The entry is the doctrine's history; the cite is its present. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAULT

[Law: negligence and comparative fault — liability graded by fault; cf. La. Civ. Code art. 3556, par. 13]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's three civil-law degrees of fault — gross, slight, very slight (La. Civ. Code art. 3556, par. 13) — are the ancestors of modern negligence and comparative-fault analysis, which still grades liability by the quality of the defendant's care. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: negligence and comparative fault — liability graded by fault; cf. La. Civ. Code art. 3556, par. 13. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAULT, p. 485; scan anchor: djvu line 81736 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's own Louisiana source is the civilian statement; the annotation traces the grading-by-fault idea into modern tort law. Same analytical spine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FAUTOR

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiding and abetting; accomplices punishable as principals]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The fautor — favorer, abettor; in Spanish law the accomplice who aids another's crime — is the aider and abettor, punishable as a principal under federal law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — aiding and abetting; accomplices punishable as principals. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAUTOR, p. 485; scan anchor: djvu line 81773 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's Spanish-law sense ('accomplice ... who aids or assists another in the commission of a crime') is the § 2 definition. Direct statutory match for the entry's own definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxims include the root of the criminal law's solicitude for the accused — 'Favorabiliores rei potius quam actores habentur,' the defendant's condition is favored over the plaintiff's (Dig. 50, 17, 125; Broom, Max. 715). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Favorabiliores rei potius quam actores habentur — the defendant's condition is favored. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FAVOR, p. 485; scan anchor: djvu line 81815 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim with the entry's sources; the maxim is the classical ground of strict construction of penal statutes and, ultimately, the presumption of innocence. The annotation records the maxim and its genuine doctrinal fruit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEAL AND DIVOT

[Law: profit à prendre — e.g., the right of turbary, taking turf for fuel]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Scots right of 'feal and divot' — taking turf for fuel, like England's right of turbary — is a profit à prendre: a right to take a natural product from another's land. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: profit à prendre — e.g., the right of turbary, taking turf for fuel. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEAL AND DIVOT, p. 485; scan anchor: djvu line 81844 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry likens the right to turbary; turbary is the textbook profit à prendre. The annotation names the property doctrine the entry describes, as with FALCARE's jus falcandi. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEAR

[Law: assault — intentional apprehension of imminent harmful or offensive contact]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Fear as 'apprehension of harm' is the gist of the tort of assault: intentionally causing another to apprehend imminent harmful or offensive contact is actionable though no blow lands. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: assault — intentional apprehension of imminent harmful or offensive contact. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEAR, p. 485; scan anchor: djvu line 81876 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the mental state; assault is the tort built on exactly that state. The link is the entry's own definition put to work. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEASANCE

[Law: malfeasance, misfeasance, nonfeasance — the classification of official and tortious wrongdoing]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry points to the great trichotomy — malfeasance, misfeasance, nonfeasance — which still classifies wrongful doing in tort and in the law of public office: evil doing, wrongful doing, and failure to do. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: malfeasance, misfeasance, nonfeasance — the classification of official and tortious wrongdoing. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEASANCE, p. 486; scan anchor: djvu line 81897 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines feasance and cross-refers the three compounds; the annotation states what the trichotomy does in living law. The classification is the entry's own subject. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEASANT

[Law: distress damage feasant — distraint of trespassing cattle]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Damage feasant' — cattle 'doing damage' on another's land — names the common-law right of distress damage feasant: impounding trespassing beasts until the damage is paid. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: distress damage feasant — distraint of trespassing cattle. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEASANT, p. 486; scan anchor: djvu line 81906 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's phrase is the doctrine's name; the annotation states the remedy the phrase denotes. This is identification, not analogy. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEASOR

[Law: joint tortfeasors — joint and several liability]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'tort-feasor' — one who commits a tort — is the defendant of the law of joint tortfeasors: where several concur in one injury, each is liable for the whole. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: joint tortfeasors — joint and several liability. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEASOR, p. 486; scan anchor: djvu line 81911 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the actor; the annotation gives the liability doctrine built on the term. The tort-feasor is the unit of the joint-tortfeasor rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FECIAE LAW

[Law: international law — the modern system of diplomacy, war/peace, and treaties]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The fecial law — Rome's law of embassies, declarations of war, and treaties of peace — is what the entry calls it: 'the nearest approach to a system of international law known to the ancient world.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: international law — the modern system of diplomacy, war/peace, and treaties. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FECIAE LAW, p. 486; scan anchor: djvu line 81926 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry makes the lineage claim itself; the annotation names the modern system that inherited the fecial college's three offices. The link is the entry's own thesis, kept honest. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FECI AXES

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11 — Congress's power to declare war]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The feciales declared Rome's wars and peaces; in the American Constitution that high function is vested in Congress, which alone may declare war. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11 — Congress's power to declare war. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FECI AXES, p. 486; scan anchor: djvu line 81934 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (1 Kent, Comm. 6) describes the war-declaring priesthood; the clause is the American vesting of the same sovereign function. Genuine functional parallel with a real citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEDERAX

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. X — powers not delegated are reserved]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's long discussion of 'federal' versus 'national' is the Federalist debate in miniature; the Constitution's answer is the reserved-powers rule — what is not granted is retained by the states or the people. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. X — powers not delegated are reserved. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEDERAX, p. 486; scan anchor: djvu line 81942 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry weighs whether the Union is a compact of states or a national government; the Tenth Amendment is the textual settlement of that question. The annotation gives the entry's debate its constitutional locus. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FEE-FARM

[Law: ground rents — perpetual rents reserved on conveyance, e.g., Maryland ground rents]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The fee-farm — land held in perpetuity at a yearly rent, 'very nearly the emphyteusis of the Roman law' — survives in America as the ground rent: a perpetual rent reserved on conveyance of the fee. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: ground rents — perpetual rents reserved on conveyance, e.g., Maryland ground rents. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEE-FARM, p. 62 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 82170 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (2 Bl. Comm. 43) describes the tenure; the ground rent is its genuine American descendant — fee conveyed, rent reserved in perpetuity. Same structure, living form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FEB-TAIL

[Law: abolition of the fee tail — statutory conversion to fee simple in most states]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The estate tail — inheritance limited to the heirs of the body — has been abolished by statute in most American states, typically converted into a fee simple absolute. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: abolition of the fee tail — statutory conversion to fee simple in most states. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEB-TAIL, p. 488; scan anchor: djvu line 82288 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (1 Washb. Real Prop.) describes the estate; the annotation records its genuine modern fate — legislative abolition, the reason the estate tail is now a classroom topic rather than a conveyancer's tool. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FEED

[Law: estoppel by deed / after-acquired title — after-acquired title inures to the grantee]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'the interest when it accrues feeds the estoppel' (Christmas v. Oliver) is the classic statement of estoppel by deed: title acquired after a warranted conveyance inures to the grantee — it 'feeds' the earlier estoppel. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: estoppel by deed / after-acquired title — after-acquired title inures to the grantee. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEED, p. 488; scan anchor: djvu line 82301 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The quotation is the doctrine's locus classicus; the annotation names the doctrine it states. The link is the entry's own quoted rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEHMGERICHTE

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — the right to a public trial]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The secret Vehmic tribunals — courts 'usurping many of the functions of the governments,' inspiring dread — are the antitype of the Sixth Amendment's public-trial guarantee. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — the right to a public trial. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEHMGERICHTE, p. 488; scan anchor: djvu line 82310 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (Enc. Brit.) describes secret justice; the amendment is the constitutional repudiation of secret justice. The contrast genuinely illuminates the entry — this is what the guarantee was written against. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEIGNED

[Sorrells v. United States, 287 U.S. 435 (1933) — entrapment]

Who. The court deciding Sorrells v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'feigned accomplice' — one who pretends to join a crime 'for the purpose of discovering their plans and securing evidence' (People v. Bolanger) — is the undercover operative, whose conduct is bounded by the entrapment defense. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Sorrells v. United States, 287 U.S. 435 (1933) — entrapment. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEIGNED, p. 488; scan anchor: djvu line 82322 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1933 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry describes the state's feigned conspirator; Sorrells is the Supreme Court's limit on that device — government inducement of the otherwise-unwilling. Certain of case, volume, page, year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FELLATION

[Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003) — criminal sodomy laws unconstitutional]

Who. The court deciding Lawrence v. Texas (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry is a bare cross-reference to Sodomy; the modern constitutional status of sodomy prohibitions was settled when the Court struck them down as violating due-process liberty. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003) — criminal sodomy laws unconstitutional. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FELLATION, p. 488; scan anchor: djvu line 82366 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 2003 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The cross-reference points to the offense; the annotation gives the offense's current constitutional standing. Certain of case, volume, page, year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FELLOW-SERVANTS

[Law: the fellow-servant rule — superseded by workers' compensation statutes]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry states the fellow-servant rule at length (2 Thomp. Neg.; a string of railroad cases): at common law the master was not liable for injuries a servant suffered through a fellow servant's negligence. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the fellow-servant rule — superseded by workers' compensation statutes. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FELLOW-SERVANTS, p. 488; scan anchor: djvu line 82376 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the rule's own exposition; the annotation records its genuine modern fate — legislative displacement by workers' compensation. The rule as stated is history; the annotation says so. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FELO DE SE

[Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702 (1997)]

Who. The court deciding Washington v. Glucksberg (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The 'felon of himself' — suicide, once punished by forfeiture (4 Bl. Comm. 189) — is no longer a crime; the modern constitutional line holds there is no fundamental right to assisted suicide, leaving the states to legislate. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702 (1997). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FELO DE SE, p. 488; scan anchor: djvu line 82398 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1997 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry (Hale, P.C. 411) states the old crime; Glucksberg states the current constitutional boundary. Certain of case, volume, page, year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FELON

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 922(g) — felons barred from possessing firearms]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The felon — 'one convicted of felony' — carries collateral consequences beyond sentence, including the federal firearms disability imposed on all convicted felons. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 922(g) — felons barred from possessing firearms. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FELON, p. 480 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 82420 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the status; the annotation gives the status's most prominent federal consequence. Real statute, real disability, same subject. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FELONIA

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make one guilty unless the mind is guilty]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'per feloniam, with a criminal intention' (Co. Litt. 391) is the mens-rea element — the guilty mind without which the guilty act does not make a felon. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make one guilty unless the mind is guilty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FELONIA, p. 480; scan anchor: djvu line 82423 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's Latin phrase states the element; the maxim states the principle. The annotation pairs the entry's own terminology with the principle it expresses. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FELONICE

[Law: Fed. R. Crim. P. 7(c)(1) — the indictment must state the offense's essential facts]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Felonice' was classed by Coke among the voces artis — words of art no periphrasis can supply (4 Coke 39) — because an indictment had to give the accused fair notice of the charge in the law's own terms. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Crim. P. 7(c)(1) — the indictment must state the offense's essential facts. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FELONICE, p. 480; scan anchor: djvu line 82438 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The old indispensable word served the notice function; Rule 7(c)(1) is the modern statement of that function — the indictment must tell the defendant what he must meet. The voces-artis rule and the rule are the same demand in different dress. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FELONIOUS

[Law: homicide — murder and manslaughter as the degrees of unlawful killing]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'felonious homicide' — killing without justification or excuse, in the two degrees of murder and manslaughter (4 Bl. Comm. 188, 190) — is the common-law classification American homicide statutes still use. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: homicide — murder and manslaughter as the degrees of unlawful killing. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FELONIOUS, p. 480; scan anchor: djvu line 82445 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the classification with its own authorities; the annotation notes that the murder/manslaughter division remains the working structure of homicide law. The entry's doctrine, kept current. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FELONY

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 3559 — classification of offenses; felony = more than one year]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The felony/misdemeanor line, which once turned on forfeiture (abolished by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), is drawn in federal law by authorized punishment: a felony is an offense punishable by more than one year's imprisonment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 3559 — classification of offenses; felony = more than one year. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FELONY, p. 480; scan anchor: djvu line 82480 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry says American law defines felony mostly by statute; § 3559 is the federal statute that does it. Direct answer to the entry's own observation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEME

[Law: the Married Women's Property Acts (19th c.) — abolished coverture's disabilities]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The feme covert — the married woman under coverture's disabilities, contrasted with the feme sole — was emancipated by the Married Women's Property Acts, which gave wives the capacity to own, contract, and sue. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the Married Women's Property Acts (19th c.) — abolished coverture's disabilities. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEME, p. 480; scan anchor: djvu line 82545 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (Hoker v. Boggs; Rhea v. Rhenner) catalogs the disabilities; the Acts are the legislation that ended them. The annotation records the doctrine's genuine fate. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FENERATION

[Marquette Nat'l Bank v. First of Omaha Serv. Corp., 439 U.S. 299 (1978)]

Who. The court deciding Marquette Nat'l Bank v. First of Omaha Serv. Corp. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Feneration — 'the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending' — is usury in its root sense; the modern law's leading rate case lets national banks charge their home state's rate nationwide. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Marquette Nat'l Bank v. First of Omaha Serv. Corp., 439 U.S. 299 (1978). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FENERATION, p. 490; scan anchor: djvu line 82615 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1978 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the practice; Marquette is the Supreme Court's controlling decision on interest-rate exportation — the modern usury battleground. Certain of case, volume, page, year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEODUM

[Law: Tenures Abolition Act 1660, 12 Car. II c. 24 — abolished feudal military tenures]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The feodum — the fee in all its classes, from feodum simplex to feodum talliatum (2 Bl. Comm. 58, 62) — was the feudal tenure the Tenures Abolition Act swept away, converting military tenures into free socage. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Tenures Abolition Act 1660, 12 Car. II c. 24 — abolished feudal military tenures. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEODUM, p. 490; scan anchor: djvu line 82680 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1660 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry catalogs the feudal fee; the statute (cited in the neighboring FEODARY entry) is what ended the tenure system the entry describes. Genuine historical terminus. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEOFFEE

[Law: Statute of Uses, 27 Hen. VIII c. 10 (1536)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'feoffee to uses' — one to whom land was conveyed for the use of a third party, the cestui que use — is the ancestor of the trustee; the Statute of Uses executed such uses into legal estates. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of Uses, 27 Hen. VIII c. 10 (1536). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEOFFEE, p. 491; scan anchor: djvu line 82761 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1536 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry names the parties of the use; the statute is the landmark legislation on the device, and the use is the trust's direct ancestor. Certain statute and year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FEOFFMENT

[Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — land conveyances in signed writing]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Feoffment worked 'by transmutation of possession' through livery of seisin (2 Bl. Comm. 310) — the ceremony the Statute of Frauds displaced, requiring conveyances of land to be in signed writing, though delivery of the deed remains essential. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — land conveyances in signed writing. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEOFFMENT, p. 491; scan anchor: djvu line 82768 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1677 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry describes the old passing of seisin; the statute is what replaced the ceremony with writing. The annotation marks the genuine procedural succession. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FERAE NATURAE

[Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. 175 (N.Y. 1805) — first possession of wild animals]

Who. The court deciding Pierson v. Post (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Animals ferae naturae — wild by nature, as against tame (domitae naturae) — are owned by first possession: the fox, the whale, the wildfowl belong to whoever first captures them. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1805 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry (Fleet v. Hegeman; Gillet v. Mason) states the wild/tame distinction; Pierson is the classic American case applying it — the fox belongs to its captor, not its pursuer. Certain cite. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FERIA

[Law: dies non — process not servable on Sunday/holidays]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The feria as 'a day on which process could not be served' is the dies-non rule: at common law and still in many states, process may not be served on Sunday (or the service is voidable). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: dies non — process not servable on Sunday/holidays. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FERIA, p. 491; scan anchor: djvu line 82856 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the rule in its definition; the annotation names it — dies non juridicus — and its survival. The link is the entry's own stated rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FERMENTED LIQUORS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XXI — repeal of Prohibition]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's careful definition — beer, wine, hard cider, but not distilled liquors (State v. Lemp; State v. Biddle) — is prohibition-era liquor law; the Twenty-first Amendment repealed Prohibition and returned liquor control to the states. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. XXI — repeal of Prohibition. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FERMENTED LIQUORS, p. 492; scan anchor: djvu line 82909 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's cases are the liquor prosecutions of the era; the amendment is the constitutional event that frames them. Genuine context for a definition built for that litigation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FERRIAGE

[Law: franchise and rate regulation — ferry tolls fixed by law; the ferry as common carrier]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Ferriage — 'the price or fare fixed by law' for public transportation across a river, bay, or lake (People v. San Francisco & A. R. Co.) — is rate regulation of a franchise: the ferry as common carrier serving the traveling public at lawful tolls. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: franchise and rate regulation — ferry tolls fixed by law; the ferry as common carrier. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FERRIAGE, p. 492; scan anchor: djvu line 82947 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's own definition makes the toll law-fixed and the service public; the annotation names the regulatory frame — franchised carriers with fixed rates — that the entry describes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FERRY

[Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 36 U.S. 420 (1837)]

Who. The court deciding Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry treats the ferry 'in law as a franchise' — the exclusive right to carry passengers across the water — and the great American franchise case held such grants strictly construed, implying no monopoly beyond the grant's terms. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 36 U.S. 420 (1837). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FERRY, p. 492; scan anchor: djvu line 82964 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1837 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's franchise analysis (12 C.B., N.S., 32) is the English side; Charles River Bridge is the American decision on ferry/bridge franchises and implied exclusivity. Certain of case, volume, page, year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FESTA IN CAFPIS

[Maxim: Festinatio justitiae est noverca infortunii — hasty justice is the stepmother of misfortune]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves Hobart's maxim — 'Festinatio justitiae est noverca infortunii' — hasty justice is the stepmother of misfortune: the classical warning that speed in adjudication breeds error. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Festinatio justitiae est noverca infortunii — hasty justice is the stepmother of misfortune. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FESTA IN CAFPIS, p. 492; scan anchor: djvu line 83016 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim (Hob. 97); the maxim is the traditional counterweight to the demand for dispatch, underlying due-process deliberation requirements. Recorded as the entry carries it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FESTING-MAIT

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — the right to a speedy trial]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The sub-entry's 'festinum remedium' — a speedy remedy, the assize so called by Westminster 2 (13 Edw. I c. 24) — is the medieval form of the speedy-justice principle the Sixth Amendment guarantees in criminal cases. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — the right to a speedy trial. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FESTING-MAIT, p. 492; scan anchor: djvu line 83024 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (Cowell; the statute) names speed as a remedy's virtue; the amendment is the constitutional form of that virtue. The frankpledge headword itself is covered by FAESTING-MEN; the annotation attaches to the sub-entry's genuine principle. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FETTERS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — cruel and unusual punishments]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Fetters — irons securing convicts and prisoners — sit under the Eighth Amendment: bodily restraints imposed by the state are bounded by the ban on cruel and unusual punishments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — cruel and unusual punishments. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FETTERS, p. 492; scan anchor: djvu line 83047 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the restraint; the amendment is the constitutional limit on the state's use of such restraints. It explains the modern law of the entry's subject. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FED ET LIEU

[Law: adverse possession — actual, open, and notorious possession ripening into title]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Feu et lieu' — hearth and home, 'importing actual settlement upon land by a tenant' — states the actual-possession idea at the heart of adverse possession: title by real, settled occupancy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: adverse possession — actual, open, and notorious possession ripening into title. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FED ET LIEU, p. 493; scan anchor: djvu line 83079 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is Canadian/French settlement law; the annotation links its operative concept — actual settlement — to the common-law doctrine that turns on the same fact. The concept, not the jurisdiction, is the link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FEW

[Law: certainty of description — deeds and pleadings must describe with reasonable certainty]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's rule — 'few' will not answer 'in cases where exact description is required' (Butts v. Stowe; Allen v. Kirwan) — is the certainty requirement for deeds, pleadings, and indictments: descriptions must be definite enough to identify. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: certainty of description — deeds and pleadings must describe with reasonable certainty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FEW, p. 494; scan anchor: djvu line 83281 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the rule with its cases; the annotation names the doctrine the rule belongs to. The link is the entry's own stated principle. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FF

[Law: the Digest (Pandects) — Justinian's compilation, the civilian core]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'FF' designates the Digest or Pandects — the 'fragments' of the jurists compiled in Justinian's Corpus Juris Civilis (Mackeld. Rom. Law § 74) — the core text of the civilian tradition. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the Digest (Pandects) — Justinian's compilation, the civilian core. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FF, p. 494; scan anchor: djvu line 83289 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry explains the siglum; the annotation states what the siglum designates and its standing. The entry's own authority (Mackeld.) is the source. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIANZA

[Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — surety promises in writing]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The fianza in its special sense — a surety or guarantor, 'the contract or engagement of suretyship' (Martinez v. Runkle) — is governed by the great formality rule: a promise to answer for another's debt must be in writing. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II c. 3 (1677) — surety promises in writing. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIANZA, p. 494; scan anchor: djvu line 83302 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1677 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the surety engagement; the statute is the standing enforceability rule for exactly that engagement. Direct functional match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIAT

[Maxim: Fiat justitia, ruat caelum — let justice be done though the heavens fall]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'Fiat justitia' practice — the king's indorsement granting a writ of error — carries the famous maxim in its full form: let justice be done though the heavens fall. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Fiat justitia, ruat caelum — let justice be done though the heavens fall. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIAT, p. 494; scan anchor: djvu line 83329 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry gives the practice (Jacob) and begins the maxim; the annotation records the maxim whole. The maxim is the practice's motto, not an import. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIGTIO

[Maxim: Fictio legis neminem laedit — a fiction of law injures no one]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry is a treasury of the fictions maxims, including 'Fictio legis neminem laedit' — a fiction of law injures no one (2 Rolle 602): the boundary rule for every legal fiction. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Fictio legis neminem laedit — a fiction of law injures no one. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIGTIO, p. 494; scan anchor: djvu line 83362 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim with the entry's sources (with 'Fictio cedit veritati' and 'Fictio juris non est ubi veritas' alongside); the maxim is the standing limit on fictions — they may serve procedure but must work no injury. Recorded as carried. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FICTION

[Law: legal fictions — e.g., the fictitious parties in ejectment]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A fiction — 'something known to be false or unreal assumed as true' (Best, Ev. 419; Maine, Anc. Law) — is exemplified by the classic procedural fictions, such as the fictitious parties of the old action of ejectment, always bounded by 'fictio legis neminem laedit.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: legal fictions — e.g., the fictitious parties in ejectment. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FICTION, p. 494; scan anchor: djvu line 83397 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry theorizes the fiction (Maine); the annotation gives the textbook instance every law student meets. The instance genuinely illustrates the entry's theory. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FICTITIOUS

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III — case or controversy; no advisory opinions]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'fictitious action' — brought 'for the sole purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on a point of law, not for the settlement of any actual controversy' (Smith v. Junction Ry.) — is the advisory opinion, which Article III courts may not give. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III — case or controversy; no advisory opinions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FICTITIOUS, p. 495; scan anchor: djvu line 83447 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's definition is the advisory-opinion definition; the case-or-controversy requirement is the constitutional rule that bars it. Definitional identity. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FICTITIOUS

[Law: fictitious-business-name (DBA) statutes — registration of assumed names]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'fictitious name' that by long use 'may become an assumed name' for 'ordinary business and legal purposes' (Pollard v. Fidelity; Carlock v. Cagnacci) is the subject of the fictitious-business-name (DBA) registration statutes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: fictitious-business-name (DBA) statutes — registration of assumed names. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FICTITIOUS, p. 495; scan anchor: djvu line 83447 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the name ripening into a lawful business designation; the DBA statutes are the modern registration regime for exactly that. The entry's own trajectory points to them. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIDEI-COMMISSUM

[Law: the trust — the fidei-commissum as the Roman ancestor; Succession of Meunier, 52 La. Ann. 79]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The fidei-commissum — property given with the direction to transfer it to another — is the Roman trust, recognized in Louisiana (Succession of Meunier, 52 La. Ann. 79, the entry's own case) and the ancestor of the Anglo-American trust. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the trust — the fidei-commissum as the Roman ancestor; Succession of Meunier, 52 La. Ann. 79. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIDEI-COMMISSUM, p. 495; scan anchor: djvu line 83492 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (Story, Eq. Jur.; Meunier; Cortario v. Cantu) asserts the trust lineage; the annotation records it with the entry's own Louisiana authority. The link is the entry's thesis, kept honest. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FIDE-JUSSOR

[Law: bail bonds — sureties bound for the defendant's appearance]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The fide-jussor — one bound by stipulation to pay another's debt (Mackeld. § 452; Inst. 3, 16, 1) — survives in the bail bond: the entry itself notes admiralty 'fide jussors' were the sureties taken on a defendant's arrest. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: bail bonds — sureties bound for the defendant's appearance. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIDE-JUSSOR, p. 495; scan anchor: djvu line 83512 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry makes the bail connection itself (3 Bl. Comm. 108); the annotation names the modern institution. The link is inside the entry. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIDES

[Law: uberrima fides — utmost good faith in insurance; the agent's fiduciary duty]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'uberrima fides' — the utmost good faith — is the insurance-law duty: the assured must disclose every material circumstance, the contract being one of utmost good faith; and 'Fides servanda est' binds the agent to his principal's confidence (Story, Ag. § 192). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: uberrima fides — utmost good faith in insurance; the agent's fiduciary duty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIDES, p. 495; scan anchor: djvu line 83545 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Both doctrines are stated in the entry with their sources (3 Burrows 1672; Story); the annotation names their modern habitats. The entry's own maxims, placed. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FIDUCIARY

[Meinhard v. Salmon, 249 N.Y. 458 (1928)]

Who. The court deciding Meinhard v. Salmon (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The fiduciary — 'invested with rights and powers to be exercised for the benefit of another' (Svanoe v. Jurgens) — is held to Cardozo's standard: 'the punctilio of an honor the most sensitive.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Meinhard v. Salmon, 249 N.Y. 458 (1928). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIDUCIARY, p. 496; scan anchor: djvu line 83612 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1928 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the fiduciary character; Meinhard is the classic statement of the loyalty the character demands. Certain of case, volume, page, year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

[Law: receivership — court-appointed custodians of property in litigation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Spanish-law 'fiel' — a sequestrator, 'a person in whose hands a thing in dispute is judicially deposited; a receiver' (Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 9, l. 1) — is the equity receiver: the court's custodian of disputed property. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: receivership — court-appointed custodians of property in litigation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FTKL, p. 496; scan anchor: djvu line 83699 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the judicial depositary; the receiver is its modern equitable form, serving the identical office. Same function, living institution. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIELDAD

[Law: prejudgment attachment/sequestration — seizure of disputed property pending judgment]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Spanish-law fieldad — sequestration of disputed property, allowed in six cases (Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 3, l. 1) — is prejudgment attachment: seizure pendente lite to preserve the property for the eventual judgment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: prejudgment attachment/sequestration — seizure of disputed property pending judgment. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIELDAD, p. 496; scan anchor: djvu line 83726 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the remedy; the annotation names its modern procedural family. The office — preserving disputed property for the judgment — is identical. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIERI FACIAS

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 69 — execution of money judgments]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The fi. fa. — the writ commanding the sheriff to levy the judgment from the debtor's goods and chattels — is the classic writ of execution, whose federal successor is the execution procedure for money judgments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 69 — execution of money judgments. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIERI FACIAS, p. 497; scan anchor: djvu line 83753 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the writ's office; Rule 69 is the modern federal procedure performing that office. The writ's substance survives in the rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FIERI FECI

[Maxim: Fieri non debet, sed factum valet — it ought not be done, but done, it is valid]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the maxim 'Fieri non debet, sed factum valet' — it ought not be done, but done, it is valid (Shep. Touch. 9; 5 Coke 39; Nichols v. Ketcham) — the rule that an irregular but completed act may stand. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Fieri non debet, sed factum valet — it ought not be done, but done, it is valid. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIERI FECI, p. 497; scan anchor: djvu line 83779 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim with the entry's authorities, 'a maxim frequently applied in practice'; the annotation records it as carried. It is the doctrinal cousin of the de-facto-officer rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIGHT

[Law: battery — intentional harmful or offensive touching]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'encounter, with blows or other personal violence, between two persons' (State v. Gladden; Carpenter v. People) is battery in its factual dress: intentional harmful or offensive touching, tort and crime alike. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: battery — intentional harmful or offensive touching. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIGHT, p. 497; scan anchor: djvu line 83811 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the factual event; battery is the legal category for it. The entry's own cases include a criminal battery prosecution. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIQHTWITE

[Law: breach of the peace / disorderly conduct]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Saxon fightwite — a fine 'for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace' (Cowell) — is breach of the peace in its oldest form: the public-order offense of quarreling to the community's disturbance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: breach of the peace / disorderly conduct. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIQHTWITE, p. 497; scan anchor: djvu line 83818 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the offense; the annotation names its modern statutory family. Same offense — quarrel disturbing the peace — modern name. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FILARE

[Law: filing — delivery to the clerk constitutes filing; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The FILE sub-entry's rule — 'a paper is said to be filed when it is delivered to the proper officer, and by him received to be kept on file' (Phillips v. Beene; Holman v. Chevaillier) — is the filing rule: delivery to the clerk, not the judge's reading of it, constitutes filing. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: filing — delivery to the clerk constitutes filing; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 5(d). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FILARE, p. 497; scan anchor: djvu line 83835 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the rule with its cases; the annotation names the rule. The entry's own definition is the doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FILIATE

[Maxim (reversed by science): Filiatio non potest probari — filiation cannot be proved]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. To 'filiate' — to fix a bastard child on its father (2 W. Bl. 1017) — was governed by the maxim 'Filiatio non potest probari' (Co. Litt. 126): filiation cannot be proved. Genetic testing has reversed the maxim: paternity is now proved to a scientific certainty. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim (reversed by science): Filiatio non potest probari — filiation cannot be proved. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FILIATE, p. 497; scan anchor: djvu line 83886 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The maxim is quoted verbatim; the annotation records both the old rule and its genuine modern reversal — DNA paternity testing under the Uniform Parentage Act regime. The contrast illuminates the entry. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FILIUS

[Maxim: Filius in utero matris est pars viscerum matris — the unborn child as part of the mother]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves 'Filius in utero matris est pars viscerum matris' — a son in the mother's womb is part of the mother's bowels (7 Coke 8) — the old common-law view underlying the born-alive rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Filius in utero matris est pars viscerum matris — the unborn child as part of the mother. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FILIUS, p. 498; scan anchor: djvu line 83923 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim with its Coke citation; the maxim is the historical root of the born-alive rule in criminal law. Recorded as carried, with its doctrinal fruit named. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FILL

[Law: public office — appointment requires the appointee's acceptance (Johnston v. Wilson, 2 N.H. 202)]

Who. The court deciding Law: public office — appointment requires the appointee's acceptance (Johnston v. Wilson (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's office rule — 'the office cannot be considered as actually filled until his acceptance, either express or implied' (Johnston v. Wilson) — states the acceptance requirement for public appointment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: public office — appointment requires the appointee's acceptance (Johnston v. Wilson, 2 N.H. 202). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FILL, p. 498; scan anchor: djvu line 83952 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The citation is the entry's own; the annotation states the rule the entry states. The link is internal to the entry's authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FILLY

[Law: variance — material variance between indictment and proof defeats the charge]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's case — an indictment for stealing a 'filly' not sustained by proof of stealing a 'mare' (Lunsford v. State) — is the variance rule: a material variance between the charge and the proof is fatal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: variance — material variance between indictment and proof defeats the charge. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FILLY, p. 498; scan anchor: djvu line 83976 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's whole point is the variance; the annotation names the doctrine the case illustrates. The link is the entry's own holding. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FILUM

[Law: the thread rule — riparian and highway title to the center line (filum aquae; filum viae)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The filum aquae — the thread of water, 'the middle line of a stream,' bounding riparian owners (Ingraham v. Wilkinson) — and the filum viae — the road's middle line — state the thread rule: title runs to the center line. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the thread rule — riparian and highway title to the center line (filum aquae; filum viae). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FILUM, p. 498; scan anchor: djvu line 83982 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines both phrases with their authorities; the annotation names the boundary doctrine they state. The entry is the doctrine's exposition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIN

[Law: affirmative defenses — e.g., limitations, accord and satisfaction; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The fin de non recevoir — the plea that 'shows that the plaintiff has no right to bring it,' by prescription, compromise, or accord and satisfaction (Pothier) — is the affirmative defense: matter in bar that defeats the action without reaching the merits. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: affirmative defenses — e.g., limitations, accord and satisfaction; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIN, p. 498; scan anchor: djvu line 84007 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (Pothier, Proc. Civile) describes the plea's office; the affirmative defense is its common-law counterpart, with limitations and accord and satisfaction on Rule 8(c)'s own list. Genuine parallel. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FINAL

[Law: 28 U.S.C. § 1291 — appellate jurisdiction over final decisions]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's contrast — 'final' versus 'interlocutory' (Johnson v. New York; Garrison v. Dougherty) — is the final-judgment rule: federal appellate jurisdiction reaches only final decisions of the district courts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 28 U.S.C. § 1291 — appellate jurisdiction over final decisions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FINAL, p. 498; scan anchor: djvu line 84023 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines finality for appealability; § 1291 is the statute that makes finality the gate of federal appeal. Direct statutory match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FINALI8 CONCORDIA

[Law: consent/agreed judgments — settlements entered as judgments]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The finalis concordia — the 'final agreement entered by the litigating parties upon the record, by permission of court, settling the title to the land,' binding 'like any judgment of the court' (1 Washb. Real Prop.) — is the consent judgment: settlement with the force of adjudication. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: consent/agreed judgments — settlements entered as judgments. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FINALI8 CONCORDIA, p. 498; scan anchor: djvu line 84067 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's description is the consent judgment's definition; the annotation names the modern device. The fine's conveyancing use is history; its agreed-judgment structure survives. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FINDER

[Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Strange 505 (1722)]

Who. The court deciding Armory v. Delamirie (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The finder — 'one who discovers and takes possession of another's personal property, which was then lost' (Kincaid v. Eaton) — takes title against all but the true owner: the chimney-sweep's jewel is the classic case. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Strange 505 (1722). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FINDER, p. 499; scan anchor: djvu line 84114 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1722 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the finder; Armory is the foundational finder-versus-all-but-the-true-owner decision. Certain of case and report. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FINDING-

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a) — findings of fact set aside only if clearly erroneous]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A 'finding of fact' — the court's or jury's determination on the evidence (Williams v. Giblin; Morphy v. Bennett) — is reviewed on appeal only for clear error: the appellate court does not retry the facts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a) — findings of fact set aside only if clearly erroneous. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FINDING-, p. 499; scan anchor: djvu line 84123 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the finding; the rule states its appellate consequence. The definition and the standard of review belong together. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FINE-FORCE

[Law: duress and necessity — compulsion and inevitable constraint as defenses]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'An absolute necessity or inevitable constraint' (Plowd. 94; 6 Coke 11) is duress and necessity in their root form: the law excuses — or mitigates — acts compelled by overwhelming constraint. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: duress and necessity — compulsion and inevitable constraint as defenses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FINE-FORCE, p. 500; scan anchor: djvu line 84323 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the compulsion; the annotation names the defenses built on it. The definition is the defenses' common ancestor. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FINES LE ROT

[Law: contempt — fines for contempt of court]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The king's fines — payable 'for any contempt or offense,' for trespass, false denial of one's deed, 'or anything in contempt of law' (Termes de la Ley) — are the ancestors of the contempt fine: the court's pecuniary sanction for disobedience. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: contempt — fines for contempt of court. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FINES LE ROT, p. 500; scan anchor: djvu line 84330 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry lists contempts fined to the king; the modern contempt fine is the same sanction in the court's hands. Genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FINIS

[Maxim: Finis finem litibus imponit — an end puts an end to litigation; the root of res judicata]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'Finis finem litibus imponit' — a fine puts an end to litigation (3 Inst. 7a) — is the res-judicata maxim: the judgment that ends the controversy bars its renewal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Finis finem litibus imponit — an end puts an end to litigation; the root of res judicata. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FINIS, p. 500; scan anchor: djvu line 84341 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim with its Coke citation; the maxim is the classical statement of the finality principle res judicata enforces. Recorded as carried, with its fruit named. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FINIUM REGUNDORUM ACTIO

[Law: quiet-title and boundary actions — suits settling disputed boundaries]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Roman action 'for regulating boundaries' between neighboring landholders (Mackeld. Rom. Law § 499) is the ancestor of the modern boundary and quiet-title suits that settle disputed lines. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: quiet-title and boundary actions — suits settling disputed boundaries. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FINIUM REGUNDORUM ACTIO, p. 500; scan anchor: djvu line 84367 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the action's office; the annotation names its modern forms. Same office — fixing the disputed line — modern procedure. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIRE

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. II — the right to keep and bear arms]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'fire-arms' — 'all sorts of guns, fowling-pieces, blunderbusses, pistols, etc.' (Harris v. Cameron; Atwood v. State) — are the subject of the Second Amendment's keep-and-bear-arms guarantee. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. II — the right to keep and bear arms. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIRE, p. 500; scan anchor: djvu line 84400 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the arms; the amendment is the constitutional law of those arms. The definition genuinely frames the amendment's subject. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIRME

[Maxim: Firmior et potentior est operatio legis quam dispositio hominis]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the maxim 'Firmior et potentior est operatio legis quam dispositio hominis' — the operation of the law is firmer and more powerful than the disposition of man (Co. Litt. 102a): what the law effects by its own operation stands above private arrangement. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Firmior et potentior est operatio legis quam dispositio hominis. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIRME, p. 501; scan anchor: djvu line 84512 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim; the maxim states the operation-of-law principle — title by descent, by forfeiture, by execution — that no private disposition can defeat. Recorded as carried. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FIRST-CLASS

[Law: marketable title — title free from reasonable doubt]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'first-class title' sub-entry — 'a marketable title, shown by a clean record' — names the marketable-title standard: title free from reasonable doubt, such as a purchaser may be compelled to accept. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: marketable title — title free from reasonable doubt. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIRST-CLASS, p. 502; scan anchor: djvu line 84607 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's sub-entry is the doctrine's definition; the annotation names the doctrine. The link is the entry's own stated standard. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FISCUS

[Law: forfeiture — the fiscus as the historic repository of forfeited property]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The fiscus as 'the repository of forfeited property' (in English law, 'the king's treasury') is the historic home of forfeiture: property forfeited to the crown entered the fiscus, as forfeited property now vests in the state. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: forfeiture — the fiscus as the historic repository of forfeited property. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FISCUS, p. 502; scan anchor: djvu line 84669 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the fiscus's forfeiture function (Spelman); the annotation notes where forfeited property vests today. The function is the link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FISH

[Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N.J.L. 1 (1821) — the public-trust doctrine]

Who. The court deciding Arnold v. Mundy (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'fish royal' — whale and sturgeon, the king's prerogative (1 Bl. Comm. 290) — is discussed through Arnold v. Mundy, the landmark American decision on the public-trust doctrine: navigable waters and their fisheries are held in trust for the people. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N.J.L. 1 (1821) — the public-trust doctrine. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FISH, p. 502; scan anchor: djvu line 84684 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1821 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The citation is the entry's own; the annotation states the doctrine the case founded — the public trust in navigable waters — which is the genuine modern frame for the entry's royal-fish prerogative. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FISHERY

[Law: profit à prendre — the several fishery; the public right of fishery in navigable waters]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The fishery as 'a right or liberty of taking fish' — 'a species of incorporeal hereditament, anciently termed piscary' (2 Bl. Comm. 34, 39) — is a profit à prendre in its several form, and in its common form the public right of fishery in navigable waters. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: profit à prendre — the several fishery; the public right of fishery in navigable waters. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FISHERY, p. 502; scan anchor: djvu line 84705 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (Kent; Arnold v. Mundy; Gould v. James) is the classic exposition; the annotation names the property doctrine (profit) and the public-trust right the entry's 'common fishery' describes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FISHING BILL

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1) — discovery limited to relevant, proportional matters]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'fishing bill' — a bill in equity seeking discovery 'upon general, loose, and vague allegations' (Story, Eq. Pl. § 325) — is the ancestor of the modern 'fishing expedition' objection: discovery is limited to relevant, proportional matters. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1) — discovery limited to relevant, proportional matters. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FISHING BILL, p. 502; scan anchor: djvu line 84753 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry names the abuse; the rule states its modern boundary. The fishing-expedition objection is the direct descendant of the fishing-bill rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FISSURE VEIN

[Law: General Mining Act of 1872, 30 U.S.C. §§ 22 et seq. — lode mining claims]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The mining-law 'fissure vein' — a lode filling a pre-existing fissure (Crocker v. Manley) — belongs to the federal lode-claim system: the General Mining Act governs location, extralateral (apex) rights, and patent of such veins. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: General Mining Act of 1872, 30 U.S.C. §§ 22 et seq. — lode mining claims. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FISSURE VEIN, p. 502; scan anchor: djvu line 84766 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1872 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the geologist's lode; the Act is the statute that makes the lode a mining claim with extralateral rights. The entry's subject is the statute's subject. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FIT

[Law: the insanity defense — M'Naghten's Case (1843)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'fit of insanity' in medical jurisprudence (Gunter v. State) points to the insanity defense: the M'Naghten test asks whether the accused knew the nature and quality of the act or that it was wrong. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the insanity defense — M'Naghten's Case (1843). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIT, p. 603; scan anchor: djvu line 84798 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1843 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry is the medical side; the annotation gives the legal test the medicine serves. The insanity defense is the genuine legal habitat of the entry's 'fit of insanity.' [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FIVE-MILE ACT

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — the Religion Clauses]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 1665 Five-Mile Act — barring nonconformist ministers from corporate towns (Brown) — is Clarendon Code persecution of the kind the Religion Clauses repudiate: no establishment, and free exercise secured against such penal laws. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — the Religion Clauses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIVE-MILE ACT, p. 603; scan anchor: djvu line 84815 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1665 [basis: year stated in the insert's own text]

Why. Same reasoning as FANATICS: the entry documents the penal regime; the amendment is its constitutional repudiation. The Act is one of the penal laws the Clauses answer. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FIX

[Law: challenges for cause — the impartial-jury guarantee excludes fixed-opinion jurors]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'fixed belief or opinion' that disqualifies a juror — a settled opinion the juror 'could not exclude from his mind' (Bales v. State; Curley v. Com.) — is the challenge for cause: the impartial-jury guarantee excludes the prejudiced venireman. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: challenges for cause — the impartial-jury guarantee excludes fixed-opinion jurors. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FIX, p. 603; scan anchor: djvu line 84822 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the disqualification rule with its cases; the annotation names the procedural device and the constitutional guarantee behind it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IX AO

[Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397 (1989)]

Who. The court deciding Texas v. Johnson (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry gives the statutory flag (Rev. St. §§ 1791, 1792) — thirteen stripes, the star-bearing union — whose desecration the Court held to be protected expression: the government may not prohibit the expressive burning of the flag. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397 (1989). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IX AO, p. 604; scan anchor: djvu line 84970 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1989 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the flag the statute creates; the case is the leading decision on the flag's constitutional status. Certain of case, volume, page, year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLAGRANS

[Law: warrantless arrest for offenses committed in the officer's presence — flagrante delicto]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Flagrante delicto — 'in the very act of committing the crime' (4 Bl. Comm. 307) — is the classic ground of warrantless arrest: an offense committed in the officer's presence justifies arrest without a warrant. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: warrantless arrest for offenses committed in the officer's presence — flagrante delicto. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLAGRANS, p. 604; scan anchor: djvu line 84999 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (with the French Code d'Instr. Crim. art. 41 form at FLAGRANT DELICT) defines the circumstance; the annotation states its procedural consequence. The circumstance is the arrest rule's trigger. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLAGRANT NECESSITY

[Law: necessity — the choice-of-evils defense]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'flagrant necessity' — 'urgency rendering lawful an otherwise illegal act, as an assault to remove a man from impending danger' — is the necessity defense: the choice of the lesser evil, justified by imminent greater harm. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: necessity — the choice-of-evils defense. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLAGRANT NECESSITY, p. 604; scan anchor: djvu line 85016 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's definition is the defense's definition, with the textbook illustration. Definitional identity. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLASH CHECK

[Law: worthless-check statutes — knowing issuance on insufficient funds criminalized]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'flash check' — drawn by one 'who has no funds at the banker's and knows that such is the case' — is the worthless check: criminal worthless-check statutes punish knowing issuance on insufficient funds. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: worthless-check statutes — knowing issuance on insufficient funds criminalized. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLASH CHECK, p. 604; scan anchor: djvu line 85021 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the scienter ('and knows that such is the case'); the statutes punish exactly that. The definition is the offense's elements. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLAT

[Law: the foreshore — the high/low-water-mark boundary; littoral rights and the public trust]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'flat' as 'the space between high and low water mark along the edge of an arm of the sea, bay, tidal river, etc.' (Thomas v. Hatch; Church v. Meeker) is the foreshore: the littoral boundary where private title meets the public trust. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the foreshore — the high/low-water-mark boundary; littoral rights and the public trust. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLAT, p. 604; scan anchor: djvu line 85025 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the zone with its cases; the annotation names the boundary doctrine the zone determines. The entry is the doctrine's subject matter. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLEE FROM JUSTICE

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1073 — unlawful flight to avoid prosecution]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. To 'flee from justice' — leaving home or concealing oneself 'to avoid detection or punishment for some public offense' (Streep v. U.S., 160 U.S. 128) — is a distinct federal offense when the flight crosses state lines to avoid prosecution. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1073 — unlawful flight to avoid prosecution. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLEE FROM JUSTICE, p. 604; scan anchor: djvu line 85058 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the conduct with its cases; the statute criminalizes the interstate form. Direct statutory match for the entry's definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLEE TO THE WALL

[Law: the duty to retreat — retreat required before deadly self-defense where the rule obtains]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. To 'flee to the wall' — 'the exhaustion of every possible means of escape' before killing in self-defense — states the duty to retreat: where the rule survives, self-defense requires retreat before deadly force. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the duty to retreat — retreat required before deadly self-defense where the rule obtains. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLEE TO THE WALL, p. 604; scan anchor: djvu line 85070 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's metaphor is the doctrine's classic expression; the annotation names the doctrine. The entry is the rule's exposition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLOATABLE

[Law: navigability — The Daniel Ball, 77 U.S. 557 (1870); waters usable as highways of commerce]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'floatable stream' — 'used for floating logs, rafts, etc.' (Gerrish v. Brown; Gaston v. Mace) — feeds the navigability doctrine: waters usable as highways of commerce are navigable waters subject to federal authority. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: navigability — The Daniel Ball, 77 U.S. 557 (1870); waters usable as highways of commerce. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLOATABLE, p. 505 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 85144 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1870 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's floatable-for-commerce streams are the factual predicate of the navigability test; the case states the test. The entry's streams are the doctrine's raw material. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLOTSAM, FLOTSAN

[Law: maritime salvage and wreck — the law of flotsam, jetsam, and ligan]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Flotsam — goods floating when cast overboard for the ship's safety or when she sinks, 'distinguished from jetsam and ligan' (Bract.; 5 Coke 106; 1 Bl. Comm. 292) — is the subject of maritime salvage and wreck law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: maritime salvage and wreck — the law of flotsam, jetsam, and ligan. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLOTSAM, FLOTSAN, p. 505 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 85247 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the classic exposition with its authorities; the annotation names the admiralty body that administers the distinctions the entry draws. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLOWING LANDS

[Law: riparian rights — flowage of another's land actionable; flowage easements]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. To 'flow' lands — 'raising and setting back water on another's land, by a dam placed across a stream' (Call v. Middlesex) — is the actionable invasion of riparian rights: flowage without right is a trespass, remediable by the mill acts' procedures or by injunction and damages. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: riparian rights — flowage of another's land actionable; flowage easements. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLOWING LANDS, p. 505 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 85257 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the wrong with its case; the annotation states the wrong's legal consequence. The entry is the cause of action's factual core. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLUMEN

[Maxim: Flumina et portus publica sunt — rivers and ports are public; fishing common to all]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the public-waters maxim — 'Flumina et portus publica sunt, ideoque jus piscandi omnibus commune est': rivers and ports are public, therefore the right of fishing there is common to all (Dav. Ir. K.B. 55). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Flumina et portus publica sunt — rivers and ports are public; fishing common to all. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLUMEN, p. 505 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 85269 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim with the entry's source; the maxim is the classical root of the public right of fishery and navigation. The entry's servitude-of-drip sense is the private-law companion, noted as carried. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLYING SWITCH

[Law: railroad negligence — the carrier's duty of care; cf. FELA, 45 U.S.C. §§ 51–60]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The flying switch — uncoupling cars in motion and throwing them onto a side track (Greenleaf v. Illinois Cent. R. Co.; Baker v. Railroad Co.) — is a classic railroad-negligence fact pattern: the carrier's duty of care to its workers and the public. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: railroad negligence — the carrier's duty of care; cf. FELA, 45 U.S.C. §§ 51–60. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLYING SWITCH, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 85316 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's cases are negligence actions built on the maneuver; the annotation names the liability framework the maneuver was litigated under. The entry's own citations are the anchor. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FLYMAN-FRYMTH

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1071 — concealing a fugitive from arrest]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The old-English offense of harboring a fugitive — 'one of the rights of the crown' — is a federal crime in its modern form: concealing a fugitive from arrest. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1071 — concealing a fugitive from arrest. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FLYMAN-FRYMTH, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 85330 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the harboring offense; the statute punishes the same conduct. Direct modern locus. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FOCALE

[Law: estovers — the tenant's right to take wood for fuel and repairs]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'right of taking wood for the fire' — fire-bote (Cunningham) — is estovers in its fuel form: the tenant's common-law right to take wood for fuel, repairs, and implements of husbandry. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: estovers — the tenant's right to take wood for fuel and repairs. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOCALE, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 85337 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the taking-right; estovers is the property doctrine that names and bounds it. The entry's fire-bote is the doctrine's vocabulary. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FCEDUS

[Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2 — the treaty power; art. VI, cl. 2 — treaties as supreme law]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The foedus — 'a treaty; a league; a compact' in international law — is made in American law by the President with the Senate's advice and consent, and once made is supreme law of the land. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 2, cl. 2 — the treaty power; art. VI, cl. 2 — treaties as supreme law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FCEDUS, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 85354 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the international-law instrument; the clauses are the constitutional law of that instrument in the United States. The definition genuinely frames the clauses' subject. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FCEMINA VIBO CO-OPERTA

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIX — women's suffrage]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the exclusionary maxims verbatim — 'Foeminae ab omnibus officiis civilibus vel publicis remotae sunt' (Dig. 50, 17, 2): women are excluded from all civil and public offices — the rule the Nineteenth Amendment repudiated. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIX — women's suffrage. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FCEMINA VIBO CO-OPERTA, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 85357 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The maxims state the old exclusion from public life; the amendment is the constitutional reversal of that exclusion. The contrast genuinely illuminates the entry — this is what the amendment buried. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FCETICHJE

[Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Org., 597 U.S. 215 (2022)]

Who. The court deciding Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Org. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Foeticide — 'the act by which criminal abortion is produced' (1 Beck, Med. Jur. 288) — names the offense whose constitutional status the Court returned to the states: there is no federal constitutional right to abortion. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Org., 597 U.S. 215 (2022). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FCETICHJE, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 85400 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 2022 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the criminal act; Dobbs states its current constitutional standing. Certain of case, volume, page, year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

F CETERA

[Law: accession — partus sequitur ventrem; the offspring follows the mother]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The foetura — 'the produce of animals' acquired by the owner 'by virtue of his right' (Ayer, Mod. Civil Law) — states the accession rule: the owner of the mother owns the offspring. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: accession — partus sequitur ventrem; the offspring follows the mother. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry F CETERA, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 85405 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the rule; the annotation names the property doctrine (accession) and its maxim. The entry's own FOLLOW entry quotes the same maxim — the dictionary corroborates itself. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FCETES

[Law: en ventre sa mere — the posthumous child deemed born for inheritance]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The foetus — 'an infant en ventre sa mere' — carries the en-ventre-sa-mere rule: a child conceived but unborn at the ancestor's death is deemed living for purposes of inheritance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: en ventre sa mere — the posthumous child deemed born for inheritance. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FCETES, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 85411 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the term; the annotation states its dispositive legal consequence — the posthumous child's capacity to take. The term's whole legal significance is that rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FOG

[Law: the Rules of the Road — fog signals and safe speed in restricted visibility]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Fog in maritime law — any condition 'which thickens the air, obstructs the view, and so increases the perils of navigation' (Flint v. P.M.R. Co.) — triggers the Rules of the Road: fog signals, safe speed, and heightened lookout in restricted visibility. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the Rules of the Road — fog signals and safe speed in restricted visibility. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOG, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 85414 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the peril with its marine-insurance case; the annotation gives the navigational duties the peril imposes. The peril and the duties belong together. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FOIRTHOCHT

[Law: premeditation — first-degree murder requires willful, deliberate, premeditated killing]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Forethought — 'premeditated' (1 Pitc. Crim. Tr.) — is the mental element of first-degree murder: a willful, deliberate, premeditated killing. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: premeditation — first-degree murder requires willful, deliberate, premeditated killing. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOIRTHOCHT, p. 607; scan anchor: djvu line 85450 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the Scots term; the annotation gives its homicide-law office. The term's legal weight is entirely in the murder grades. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FOLC-GEMOTE

[Law: trial by jury — the folkmoot's judicial function as ancestor of the jury]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The folc-gemote — the Saxon 'general assembly of the people' with 'judicial functions of a limited nature' (Spelman; Cunningham) — is the ancestor of the jury and of local self-government: judgment by the community. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: trial by jury — the folkmoot's judicial function as ancestor of the jury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOLC-GEMOTE, p. 607; scan anchor: djvu line 85456 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the assembly's judicial office; the annotation names its genuine descendant. This is institutional lineage, not analogy. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FOLC-LAND

[Law: the public domain — public lands held for the people]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Folc-land — 'land of the folk,' inalienable in perpetuity and reverting to the community on the grant's expiration (Wharton) — is the public domain in its oldest form: the people's land, disposable only by the community's authority. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the public domain — public lands held for the people. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOLC-LAND, p. 607; scan anchor: djvu line 85468 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's inalienability-and-reverter structure is the public-land idea; the annotation names its modern form. Same conception of communal title. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FOLC- RIGHT

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 — equal protection of the laws]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The folc-right — 'the common right of all the people,' the jus commune declaring 'the same equal right, law, or justice to be due to persons of all degrees' (1 Bl. Comm. 65, 67; Wharton) — is the equal-protection idea in Saxon dress. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 — equal protection of the laws. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOLC- RIGHT, p. 607; scan anchor: djvu line 85491 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's 'equal right, law, or justice to persons of all degrees' is the equal-protection principle stated generally; the clause is its American constitutional form. Genuine conceptual identity. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FOLD-COURSE

[Law: profit à prendre — e.g., common of foldage/pasture]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The fold-course — 'the right of folding on another's land, which is called common foldage' (Co. Litt. 6a) — is a profit à prendre: a right to use another's land for the fold, appurtenant or in gross. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: profit à prendre — e.g., common of foldage/pasture. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOLD-COURSE, p. 607; scan anchor: djvu line 85500 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Fourth instance of the identification (after FALCARE, FEAL AND DIVOT, FISHERY's several fishery); each entry gets its own judgment, and the identification is exact in each. The entry's own 'common foldage' is the doctrine's vocabulary. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FOLLOW

[Maxim: Mobilia sequuntur personam — movables follow the person]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's illustrations include the conflicts maxim 'the situs of personal property follows that of the owner' — mobilia sequuntur personam: movables are governed by the law of the owner's domicile. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Mobilia sequuntur personam — movables follow the person. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOLLOW, p. 607; scan anchor: djvu line 85559 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the rule in English; the annotation records the maxim the entry invokes (with 'partus sequitur ventrem' as its companion, already noted at FOETURA). The dictionary's own cross-illustration. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FOR

[Law: UCC § 3-402 — signatures by representatives]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The agency formula — signing a note or instrument 'for' another, 'importing agency or authority' (Emerson v. Hat Mfg. Co.; Wilks v. Black) — is governed by the representative-signature rule: a signature as agent, with the principal disclosed, binds the principal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-402 — signatures by representatives. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOR, p. 608; scan anchor: djvu line 85634 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's cases turn on the 'for' formula importing agency; § 3-402 is the negotiable-instruments rule for that formula. Direct code match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORATRE

[Law: compurgation — oath-helpers in the wager of law; ancestor of character witnesses]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The foratre — 'one who could make oath, i.e., bear witness for another' (Cowell; Spelman) — is the compurgator: the oath-helper who swore to the party's credibility in the old wager of law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: compurgation — oath-helpers in the wager of law; ancestor of character witnesses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORATRE, p. 608; scan anchor: djvu line 85721 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the office; the annotation names the institution — compurgation — to which the office belonged. Institutional identification. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORBANNITTTS

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1651 — piracy under the law of nations]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The forbannitus — 'a pirate; an outlaw; one banished' — meets the modern piracy statute: piracy as defined by the law of nations is a federal crime punishable by life imprisonment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1651 — piracy under the law of nations. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORBANNITTTS, p. 608; scan anchor: djvu line 85730 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1651 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry names the pirate; the statute is the living piracy law. The 'law of nations' phrase in the statute is the entry's international-law context. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORBARRER

[Law: estoppel — from Law French forbarer, to bar out]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Forbarer — Law French 'to bar out; to preclude; hence, to estop' — is the etymological root of estoppel: the doctrine that bars a party from asserting what his own conduct has denied. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: estoppel — from Law French forbarer, to bar out. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORBARRER, p. 608; scan anchor: djvu line 85733 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry gives the root; the annotation names the doctrine grown from it. The estoppel entry elsewhere in the dictionary is the doctrine's home; this is its etymology, honestly labeled. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORBEARANCE

[Law: forbearance as consideration — forbearance to enforce a claim supports a promise]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Forbearance — 'delay in exacting the enforcement of a right; indulgence granted to a debtor' (Reynolds v. Ward) — is valid consideration: forbearance to sue on a claim, even a doubtful one, will support a promise. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: forbearance as consideration — forbearance to enforce a claim supports a promise. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORBEARANCE, p. 608; scan anchor: djvu line 85739 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the indulgence; the annotation gives its contract-law office — the reason forbearance matters in litigation. The definition's doctrinal payoff. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORCED HEIRS

[Law: La. Civ. Code art. 1495 — forced heirs]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry cites the exact article — Civil Code La. art. 1495: forced heirs are those 'whom the testator or donor cannot deprive of the portion of his estate reserved for them by law' — confirming the Falcidian lineage annotated at FALCIDIA/FALCIDIAN LAW. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: La. Civ. Code art. 1495 — forced heirs. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORCED HEIRS, p. 509 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 85811 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1495 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The citation is the entry's own; the annotation records that Black's own later entry corroborates the batch-2 Louisiana annotations — the lex Falcidia's living American form, cited to the article. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FORCED 8 ALE

[Law: execution sales — judicial sales under court process; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 69]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The forced sale — 'a sale made under the process of the court, and in the mode prescribed by law' (Sampson v. Williamson) — is the execution sale: the sheriff's sale under writ of execution that passes the debtor's title whether he consents or not. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: execution sales — judicial sales under court process; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 69. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORCED 8 ALE, p. 509; scan anchor: djvu line 85820 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the sale with its cases (Patterson v. Taylor distinguishing mortgage-power sales); the annotation names the procedure. The entry is the doctrine's exposition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER

[Law: unlawful-detainer / summary-eviction statutes — the modern FED action]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The FED action — 'a summary proceeding to recover possession of premises forcibly or unlawfully detained,' trying possession not title (Gore v. Altice; Eveleth v. Gill) — survives as the unlawful-detainer/summary-eviction statutes: the landlord's speedy possessory remedy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: unlawful-detainer / summary-eviction statutes — the modern FED action. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER, p. 509; scan anchor: djvu line 85902 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's 'object of the law being to prevent the disturbance of the public peace by the forcible assertion of a private right' is the policy the modern summary statutes still serve. Genuine survival. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORCIBLE TRESFASS

[Law: robbery — taking personal property by force or intimidation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The North Carolina 'forcible trespass' — 'taking or seizing the personal property of another by force, violence, or intimidation' (State v. Lawson) — describes robbery: the felonious taking of personal property from the person by force or intimidation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: robbery — taking personal property by force or intimidation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORCIBLE TRESFASS, p. 509; scan anchor: djvu line 85917 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's definition is robbery's definition applied to the trespass form; the annotation names the felony the conduct constitutes. The elements match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORECLOSURE

[Law: the equity of redemption — cut off by foreclosure; statutory foreclosure procedures]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Foreclosure — the chancery process 'by which all further right existing in a mortgagor to redeem the estate is defeated and lost to him' (2 Washb. Real Prop. 237) — cuts off the equity of redemption; modern statutes provide judicial and nonjudicial foreclosure procedures. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the equity of redemption — cut off by foreclosure; statutory foreclosure procedures. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORECLOSURE, p. 510; scan anchor: djvu line 85966 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the classic exposition (Goodman v. White; Arrington v. Liscom); the annotation states the doctrine's core — the equity of redemption and its foreclosure — and its modern procedural forms. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FOREIGN

[Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U.S. 113 (1895) — comity; recognition of foreign judgments]

Who. The court deciding Hilton v. Guyot (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'made, done, or rendered in another state or jurisdiction' points to the foreign-judgment problem: American courts recognize foreign-country judgments by comity where the foreign court had jurisdiction and the proceedings were fair. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U.S. 113 (1895) — comity; recognition of foreign judgments. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOREIGN, p. 510; scan anchor: djvu line 86042 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1895 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the jurisdictional foreignness; the case states the recognition rule for judgments from such jurisdictions. The entry's definition frames the case's subject. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FOREIGNER

[Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365 (1971) — alienage as a suspect classification]

Who. The court deciding Graham v. Richardson (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The foreigner — 'one owing allegiance to a foreign state or sovereign' — is the alien of equal-protection law: classifications by alienage are suspect, and states may not deny aliens the equal protection of the laws. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365 (1971) — alienage as a suspect classification. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOREIGNER, p. 511; scan anchor: djvu line 86133 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1971 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the status (with Tates v. Iams on domiciled vs. transient foreigners); the case gives the status its constitutional consequence. The definition frames the doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FOREJUDGE

[Law: disbarment — expulsion of an attorney for misconduct]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. To 'forejudge' — to expel an officer or attorney of the court 'for some offense or misconduct' (Cowell) — is disbarment in its oldest form: the court's power to deprive an attorney of his office for misconduct. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: disbarment — expulsion of an attorney for misconduct. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOREJUDGE, p. 511; scan anchor: djvu line 86149 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the court's expulsion power; disbarment is that power's modern disciplinary form. Same power, modern procedure. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FORENSIC

[Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., 509 U.S. 579 (1993)]

Who. The court deciding Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's forensic medicine — 'that science which teaches the application of every branch of medical knowledge to the purposes of the law' (Tayl. Med. Jur. 1) — is expert testimony, admissible only if reliable under the trial judge's gatekeeping standard. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., 509 U.S. 579 (1993). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORENSIC, p. 511; scan anchor: djvu line 86172 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1993 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the science's legal office; Daubert states the admissibility standard for the experts who practice it. Certain of case, volume, page, year. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FOREST

[Law: the Charter of the Forest (1217)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The royal forest — the prince's privileged hunting territory 'having a peculiar court and officers' (Manw.; 1 Bl. Comm. 289) — was limited by the Charter of the Forest, the companion of Magna Carta that curbed the forest prerogative. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the Charter of the Forest (1217). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOREST, p. 511; scan anchor: djvu line 86218 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the prerogative system; the charter is the legislation that restrained it. The entry's forest law is the charter's subject matter. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Forestalling — buying goods on their way to market to resell at a higher price (4 Bl. Comm. 158) — was the old market-manipulation offense; its modern form is monopolization and restraint of trade, and the entry itself notes both 'may enter into the manipulation of what is now called a corner.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1–2 — monopolization and restraints of trade. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORESTALLING THE MARKET, p. 511; scan anchor: djvu line 86283 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (Barton v. Morris) traces the offense to the 'corner'; the Sherman Act is the statute that polices the modern corner. The entry's own trajectory points to it. FORCHEAFUM declined as this entry's doublet. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORFEITABLE

[Law: forfeiture — 18 U.S.C. §§ 981–982; Austin v. United States, 509 U.S. 602 (1993) — Excessive Fines limit]

Who. The court deciding Law: forfeiture — 18 U.S.C. §§ 981–982; Austin v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The FORFEITURE sub-entry's classic exposition — forfeiture as 'punishment annexed by law' whereby the owner 'loses all his interest' (2 Bl. Comm. 267; 4 Bl. Comm. 381) — lives in the federal forfeiture statutes, bounded by the Excessive Fines Clause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: forfeiture — 18 U.S.C. §§ 981–982; Austin v. United States, 509 U.S. 602 (1993) — Excessive Fines limit. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORFEITABLE, p. 511; scan anchor: djvu line 86365 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1993 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry states the punishment's nature with its authorities; the annotation gives its modern statutory locus and constitutional limit. FORFEIT, FORISFACERE, FORISFACTUM, FORISFACTURA, FORISFACTUS declined as covered by this note. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORGERY

[Law: forgery statutes — state forgery laws; cf. 18 U.S.C. § 471 for federal obligations]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Forgery — 'the falsely making or materially altering, with intent to defraud, any writing which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy' (2 Bish. Crim. Law § 523) — is punished by every state's forgery statutes, and federally for money and securities. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: forgery statutes — state forgery laws; cf. 18 U.S.C. § 471 for federal obligations. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORGERY, p. 513; scan anchor: djvu line 86523 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the dictionary's main forgery exposition with its long case string; the annotation gives the offense's statutory homes. The evidence-sense sub-entry (Burrill) is the FABRICATE/§ 1519 territory, already annotated. FORGE declined as covered. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORISFAMHJARE

[Law: emancipation of minors — statutory release from parental authority]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Forisfamiliation — portioning off a son 'so that he could have no further claim upon his father,' freeing him 'from paternal authority' (Glanv. lib. 7, c. 3) — is emancipation in its oldest form; modern statutes emancipate minors from parental authority on marriage, military service, or court order. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: emancipation of minors — statutory release from parental authority. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORISFAMHJARE, p. 514; scan anchor: djvu line 86640 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the old procedure; the annotation names its modern statutory form. Same legal event — release from patria potestas — modern procedure. FORISFAMILIATUS declined as covered. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORISJURARE

[Law: expatriation — voluntary renunciation of nationality; cf. 8 U.S.C. § 1481]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Forisjurare — to forswear, to abjure — includes abjuring the realm (Britt. cc. 1, 16): the old practice of renouncing the kingdom, whose modern form is expatriation, the voluntary renunciation of nationality. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: expatriation — voluntary renunciation of nationality; cf. 8 U.S.C. § 1481. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORISJURARE, p. 514; scan anchor: djvu line 86708 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1481 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's 'abjure the realm' is the ancestor practice; expatriation is its modern statutory form — the citizen's renunciation of allegiance. The forisjurare patriam sense (renouncing parental authority, losing heirship) is the emancipation analogue, already noted at FORISFAMILIARE. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORMA

[Maxim: Forma legalis forma essentialis — legal form is essential form]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the form maxims — 'Forma legalis forma essentialis' (legal form is essential form, 10 Coke 100) and 'Forma non observata, infertur adnullatio actus' (12 Coke 7): where the law prescribes a form, non-observance is fatal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Forma legalis forma essentialis — legal form is essential form. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORMA, p. 514; scan anchor: djvu line 86753 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim with the entry's Coke citations; the maxims state the formality principle that voids unsolemn acts — the same principle behind the Statute of Frauds and will-execution formalities. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the

FORMA

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 2 — one form of action, the civil action]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The forms-of-action material preserved in this chunk's text — 'trover, trespass, debt, assumpsit' (Truax v. Parvis) — names the old personal actions, abolished by code pleading: there is now one form of action, the civil action. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 2 — one form of action, the civil action. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORMA, p. 514; scan anchor: djvu line 86753 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The forms-of-action exposition appears in the chunk (via the FORM-entry bleed at 449/454); the annotation is keyed to FORMA, the headword whose subject it is, and states the forms' genuine fate — merger into the single civil action. Data-quality note: the FORM headword's body is split across entries 449 and 454 by a parser artifact. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FORMALITY

[Law: will-execution formalities — writing, signature, attestation; cf. Statute of Frauds]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The formality — 'the conditions ... required by the law in the making of contracts or conveyances, or in the taking of legal proceedings, to insure their validity' (Succession of Seymour) — includes the will-execution formalities: writing, signature, and attestation, without which the will fails. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: will-execution formalities — writing, signature, attestation; cf. Statute of Frauds. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORMALITY, p. 514; scan anchor: djvu line 86784 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the genus with a succession case; the annotation gives the most litigated species — the testamentary formalities whose non-observance voids wills. The entry's own case is a succession-formalities case. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORMEDON

[Law: Real Property Limitation Act 1833, 3 & 4 Wm. IV c. 27 — abolished formedon]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Formedon — 'his writ of right' for the tenant in tail, granted by De donis (Westm. 2, 13 Edw. I c. 1), in its three species of descender, remainder, and reverter — was abolished with the old real actions in England by 3 & 4 Wm. IV c. 27. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Real Property Limitation Act 1833, 3 & 4 Wm. IV c. 27 — abolished formedon. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORMEDON, p. 615; scan anchor: djvu line 86826 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1833 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry (3 Bl. Comm. 191; Co. Litt. 316) gives the writ's history and cites the abolishing statute; the annotation records the writ's genuine fate per the entry's own citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORNICATION

[Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003) — private consensual adult intimacy protected]

Who. The court deciding Lawrence v. Texas (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Fornication — 'unlawful sexual intercourse between two unmarried persons' (Banks v. State; Hood v. State) — is the morals offense whose prosecutions the modern liberty cases have left desuetudinal: the state may not criminalize private consensual adult intimacy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003) — private consensual adult intimacy protected. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORNICATION, p. 615; scan anchor: djvu line 86924 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 2003 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the offense with its cases; Lawrence states the constitutional liberty that now bars such morals-offense prosecutions. The annotation states the current standing honestly — desuetude via the liberty rationale — rather than claiming a direct holding on fornication. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORSWEAR

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1621 — perjury]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. To forswear — 'to make oath to that which the deponent knows to be untrue,' wider than technical perjury (Fowle v. Robbins) — is perjury in its generic sense; federal law punishes false statements under oath before a competent tribunal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1621 — perjury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORSWEAR, p. 516; scan anchor: djvu line 86991 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1621 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry draws the forswear/perjury distinction with its cases; the statute is the federal perjury law the distinction serves. The entry's own analysis frames the cite. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORTHCOMING

[Law: garnishment — enforcement against the garnishee; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 69]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Scots 'forthcoming' — the action 'by which an arrestment (garnishment) is made effectual' (2 Kames, Eq. 288) — is garnishment enforcement: the decree applying the arrested sum to the creditor's claim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: garnishment — enforcement against the garnishee; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 69. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORTHCOMING, p. 516; scan anchor: djvu line 87021 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the enforcement action; garnishment is its modern procedural family — the creditor reaching the debtor's property in a third hand. Same office. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORTHCOMING BOND

[Law: forthcoming (delivery) bonds — Code Va. 1887, § 3617, the entry's own statute]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The forthcoming bond — given to the levying sheriff, 'conditioned that the property shall be forthcoming' at sale, letting goods remain with the debtor (Hill v. Manser; Code Va. 1887, § 3617) — is the delivery bond of execution law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: forthcoming (delivery) bonds — Code Va. 1887, § 3617, the entry's own statute. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORTHCOMING BOND, p. 516; scan anchor: djvu line 87029 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1887 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The citation is the entry's own; the annotation names the bond's place in execution procedure. The link is internal to the entry's authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORTHWITH

[Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U.S. 181 — the entry's own authority on 'forthwith']

Who. The court deciding Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's own Supreme Court authority — Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U.S. 181 — holds that 'forthwith' means 'within a reasonable time': not instantaneously, but with reasonable exertion confined to the object. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U.S. 181 — the entry's own authority on 'forthwith'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORTHWITH, p. 516; scan anchor: djvu line 87053 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The case is the entry's citation and the whole entry is its holding; the annotation preserves it. Year omitted as unverified. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORTIOR

[Maxim: Fortior et potentior est dispositio legis quam hominis]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves 'Fortior et potentior est dispositio legis quam hominis' — the disposition of the law is of greater force than that of man (Co. Litt. 234a; Broom, Max. 697): the law overrides the individual's expressed intention where they conflict. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Fortior et potentior est dispositio legis quam hominis. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORTIOR, p. 516; scan anchor: djvu line 87085 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim with the entry's sources; the maxim states the mandatory-law principle — against public policy, by operation of law, by statute — that defeats private arrangement. The entry's burden-shifting-presumption sense is the evidentiary companion, noted as carried. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The court deciding Law: treasure trove — the finder's title against all but the true owner; cf. Armory v. Delamirie (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'treasure-trove' sense (Jacob) states the finder's rule: treasure trove belongs to the finder against all but the true owner — the Armory principle applied to hidden treasure. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: treasure trove — the finder's title against all but the true owner; cf. Armory v. Delamirie. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORTUNA, p. 517; scan anchor: djvu line 87158 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry names the subject; the annotation states its rule, the same finder-title principle annotated at FINDER. The partition-by-lots maxim ('Fortunam faciunt judicem,' Co. Litt. 167) is recorded as carried. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FORTUNE-TELLERS

[Papachristou v. City of Jacksonville, 405 U.S. 156 (1972)]

Who. The court deciding Papachristou v. City of Jacksonville (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Fortune-tellers, 'punishable as rogues and vagabonds' (4 Bl. Comm. 62), were policed by the vagrancy laws — until the Court voided vagrancy ordinances for vagueness, ending the rogues-and-vagabonds regime. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Papachristou v. City of Jacksonville, 405 U.S. 156 (1972). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FORTUNE-TELLERS, p. 517; scan anchor: djvu line 87167 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1972 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry classifies the offenders under the vagrancy laws; the case struck those laws down. The entry's classification is the case's target. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FORUM

[Law: forum non conveniens; forum-selection clauses]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The forum — 'a place of jurisdiction; a place where a remedy is sought' (3 Story 347), with its forum actus, forum contractus, and forum delicti — is the subject of forum non conveniens and forum-selection law: which court may hear the cause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

FORURTH

[Law: bailment — the warehouseman's duties; cf. UCC Article 7 (documents of title)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The FORWARDING MERCHANT sub-entry — 'not being deemed a common carrier, but a mere warehouseman and agent' (Story, Bailm. §§ 502, 509; Schloss v. Wood) — states the bailment classification: the forwarder's duties are the warehouseman's, not the carrier's. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's whole point is the carrier/warehouseman line; bailment is the body of law on the warehouseman's side of it. The entry's own authorities are the bailment treatise and cases. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FOUNDATION

[Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518 (1819)]

Who. The court deciding Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's foundation — 'the incorporation or endowment of a college or hospital' — is illustrated by Dartmouth College v. Woodward: a corporate charter is a contract the state may not impair. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518 (1819). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOUNDATION, p. 518; scan anchor: djvu line 87344 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1819 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The citation is the entry's own; the case is the landmark holding a college's charter to be a Contract-Clause contract. Certain of case and report. FOUNDER declined as covered. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FOUNDLING

[Law: safe-haven laws — newborn surrender without prosecution]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The foundling — 'a deserted or exposed infant' — and the foundling hospitals (13 Geo. II c. 29) are the ancestors of the safe-haven laws: surrender of a newborn at a designated place without prosecution for abandonment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

FOX’S LIBEL ACT

[Law: Fox's Libel Act, 32 Geo. III c. 60 (1792) — general verdicts in libel]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Fox's Libel Act — 32 Geo. III c. 60 — 'secured to juries, upon the trial of indictments for libel, the right of pronouncing a general verdict' on the whole matter (Wharton): the jury's province against the judge-made rule that had confined juries to the fact of publication. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fox's Libel Act, 32 Geo. III c. 60 (1792) — general verdicts in libel. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FOX’S LIBEL ACT, p. 518; scan anchor: djvu line 87433 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1792 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The statute is the entry's subject; the annotation records what the entry says it did. The link is the entry's own account, kept honest. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FRACTION

[Law: computation of time — fractions of a day disregarded; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(a)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'fraction of a day' rule — 'generally, the law does not allow the fraction of a day' (2 Bl. Comm. 141) — governs computation of time: the law counts whole days, disregarding intraday fractions. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: computation of time — fractions of a day disregarded; cf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(a). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRACTION, p. 519; scan anchor: djvu line 87471 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the rule with its Blackstone source; the annotation names the procedural context — time computation — where the rule operates. FRACTIONAL's maxim ('Fractionem diei non recipit lex,' Lofft 572) is recorded under that headword. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FRACTIONAL

[Maxim: Fractionem diei non recipit lex — the law takes no notice of a fraction of a day]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry preserves the maxim 'Fractionem diei non recipit lex' — the law does not take notice of a portion of a day (Lofft 572). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Fractionem diei non recipit lex — the law takes no notice of a fraction of a day. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRACTIONAL, p. 519; scan anchor: djvu line 87480 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim with the entry's source; the maxim is the classical form of the time-computation rule annotated at FRACTION. Recorded as carried. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FRAIS

[Law: costs — 'costs follow the event'; the prevailing party's recovery]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The frais de justice — 'costs incurred incidentally to the action' — are the litigation costs that follow the event: the prevailing party recovers its costs of suit. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: costs — 'costs follow the event'; the prevailing party's recovery. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRAIS, p. 519; scan anchor: djvu line 87514 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the costs; the annotation states the award rule — the costs follow the event — that gives the definition its consequence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FRANC AIED

[Law: allodial title — ownership free of feudal services]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The franc alleu — 'an allod; a free inheritance; or an estate held free of any services except such as were due to the sovereign' — is allodial title: ownership free of feudal duties, which is the character of the American fee. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: allodial title — ownership free of feudal services. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRANC AIED, p. 519; scan anchor: djvu line 87529 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the allod; the annotation notes its modern significance — the American land title is allodial, the feudal incidents having been abolished. The definition's doctrinal payoff. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FRANCHISE

[Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519 (1839) — franchises as legislative grants]

Who. The court deciding Bank of Augusta v. Earle (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's franchise — 'a special privilege conferred by government,' exercisable only by legislative grant (Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 595) — is the charter doctrine: to be a corporation is a franchise, and corporate powers are franchises held of the state. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519 (1839) — franchises as legislative grants. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRANCHISE, p. 519; scan anchor: djvu line 87538 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1839 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The long case string is the entry's own; Bank of Augusta is the landmark on corporate franchises as state grants. The entry's definition is the case's doctrine. Data-quality note: the 'R' headword at entry 536 is a parser artifact — its body continues this FRANCHISE entry. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

FRANKING PRIVILEGE

[Law: 39 U.S.C. § 3210 — the congressional franking privilege]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The franking privilege — sending matter through the mails 'without payment of postage, in pursuance of a personal or official privilege' — is the congressional frank, regulated by statute. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 39 U.S.C. § 3210 — the congressional franking privilege. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRANKING PRIVILEGE, p. 520; scan anchor: djvu line 87765 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the privilege; the statute is its modern regulation. The privilege's subject is the statute's subject. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FRATER

[Maxim (superseded): Frater fratri uterino non succedet in hereditate paternae]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry preserves the half-blood maxim — 'Frater fratri uterino non succedet in hereditate paternae': a brother shall not succeed a uterine brother in the paternal inheritance (2 Bl. Comm. 223) — 'now superseded by the statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, § 9.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim (superseded): Frater fratri uterino non succedet in hereditate paternae. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRATER, p. 520; scan anchor: djvu line 87778 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim with the entry's own note of supersession (Broom, Max. 530); the annotation records both the maxim and its genuine fate — abolition of the half-blood exclusion. The entry's history, kept whole. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FRATERNAL

[Law: fraternal benefit societies — regulated under state insurance codes]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The fraternal benefit association — 'organized and carried on for the mutual aid and benefit of its members, not for profit,' paying death and sick benefits from member assessments (National Union v. Marlow) — is regulated under the insurance laws as the fraternal benefit society. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: fraternal benefit societies — regulated under state insurance codes. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRATERNAL, p. 521; scan anchor: djvu line 87814 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the institution with its cases; the annotation names its regulatory home. The institution's legal habitat. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FRATERNITY

[Law: corporations vs. voluntary associations — Cuddon v. Eastwick, 1 Salk. 192]

Who. The court deciding Law: corporations vs. voluntary associations — Cuddon v. Eastwick (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's Cuddon v. Eastwick distinction — a corporation's laws 'bind strangers,' while a fraternity's 'laws and ordinances cannot bind strangers' (1 Salk. 192) — states the corporation/voluntary-association line: only the chartered body has governing power over non-members. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: corporations vs. voluntary associations — Cuddon v. Eastwick, 1 Salk. 192. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRATERNITY, p. 521; scan anchor: djvu line 87843 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The quotation is the entry's own; the annotation states the doctrinal line the case draws. The link is the entry's authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FRATRICIDE

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The killing of a sibling is criminal only where the guilty act joins a guilty mind; homicide law punishes the culpable killing, not the bare act of killing. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRATRICIDE, p. 521; scan anchor: djvu line 87865 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines only the act (killing of a brother or sister); the maxim genuinely illuminates the criminal-law half by supplying the mens rea requirement the definition assumes but does not state. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FRAUD

[Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337 (1889)]

Who. The court deciding Derry v. Peek (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Common-law deceit requires a false representation made knowingly, without belief in its truth, or recklessly — the scienter backbone of the entry's 'actual fraud' as distinguished from constructive fraud. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337 (1889). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRAUD, p. 521; scan anchor: djvu line 87869 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1889 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: this is the classic House of Lords authority on the fraud/scienter element, directly on the entry's actual-fraud doctrine, not a forced analogy. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FREE ON BOARD

[Law: UCC § 2-319 — F.O.B. and F.A.S. terms]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'free on board' delivery term the entry defines is codified in the Uniform Commercial Code's provision on F.O.B. and F.A.S. terms. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-319 — F.O.B. and F.A.S. terms. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FREE ON BOARD, p. 523; scan anchor: djvu line 88272 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine and direct: UCC § 2-319 is the modern uniform-law home of the exact commercial term the entry defines. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FREEDMAN

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIII (1865) — abolition of slavery]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry notes the term's U.S. usage 'respecting negroes who were formerly slaves'; the Thirteenth Amendment (1865) abolished slavery, making 'freedman' a living American legal category. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIII (1865) — abolition of slavery. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FREEDMAN, p. 523; scan anchor: djvu line 88284 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1865 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the constitutional anchor of the entry's American half; stated as the historical-legal fact, not stretched. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FREIGHT

[Law: common carrier's possessory lien on cargo for unpaid freight]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Freight being 'the price or compensation paid' for carriage, the carrier's security for that price is a possessory lien on the goods carried for unpaid freight. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

Where. Cited source: Law: common carrier's possessory lien on cargo for unpaid freight. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FREIGHT, p. 524; scan anchor: djvu line 88420 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the lien doctrine explains the commercial security behind the 'price' the entry defines. Loose [Law:] form used; no case invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FRESH

[Law: hot-pursuit doctrine — exigent-circumstances exception to the warrant requirement]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'fresh pursuit' and 'fresh suit' — immediate pursuit of a fleeing thief — are the medieval ancestors of the modern hot-pursuit doctrine in criminal procedure. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: hot-pursuit doctrine — exigent-circumstances exception to the warrant requirement. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRESH, p. 525; scan anchor: djvu line 88549 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine lineage: Bracton's fresh pursuit and the modern hot-pursuit exception share the same operative principle — flight justifies immediate warrantless action. Loose form; nothing invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES

[Law: Friendly Societies Act 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 60]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The consolidating statute for these mutual-relief associations is the Friendly Societies Act 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 60, which the entry itself cites. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Friendly Societies Act 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 60. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, p. 525; scan anchor: djvu line 88639 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1875 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: drawn verbatim from the entry's own authority citation; the footnote names the statute the entry is about. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FRIENDLY SUIT

[Muskrat v. United States, 219 U.S. 346 (1911)]

Who. The court deciding Muskrat v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A suit brought by agreement to obtain the court's opinion on a doubtful question tests the Article III case-or-controversy requirement; federal courts refuse jurisdiction over non-adversarial, advisory suits. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Muskrat v. United States, 219 U.S. 346 (1911). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRIENDLY SUIT, p. 525; scan anchor: djvu line 88649 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1911 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Muskrat is the classic authority denying federal jurisdiction to collusive/advisory

FRIVOLOUS

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 — sanctions for frivolous pleadings]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The frivolous pleading the entry defines — insufficient on its face, interposed for delay — draws its modern sanction from the federal rule against frivolous filings. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 11 — sanctions for frivolous pleadings. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FRIVOLOUS, p. 526; scan anchor: djvu line 88710 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Rule 11 is the living procedural consequence of the pleading type the entry defines; the link is definitional, not decorative. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FUGAM FECIT

[Law: U.S. Const. Art. III, § 3, cl. 2 — no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's operative rule is forfeiture: flight from a treason or felony indictment forfeited the party's goods and land profits; the Constitution bars that forfeiture beyond the attainted person's life. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. Art. III, § 3, cl. 2 — no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FUGAM FECIT, p. 528 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 89100 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the constitutional clause directly answers the forfeiture-upon-flight rule the entry states; it is the living repudiation of the old doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FUGITIVE

[Law: U.S. Const. Art. IV, § 2, cl. 2 — the Extradition Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 'fugitive from justice' the entry defines is the subject of the constitutional duty of interstate rendition. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. Art. IV, § 2, cl. 2 — the Extradition Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FUGITIVE, p. 528 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 89127 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the clause is the living authority for the rendition of fugitives from justice that the entry defines; no invented case, the entry already cites Roberts v. Reilly itself. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FUNCTUS OFFICIO

[Law: arbitration — an arbitrator is functus officio upon issuing the final award]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The term's classic living application is arbitration: once the arbitrator issues the final award, the office is functus officio and the award cannot be revisited. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: arbitration — an arbitrator is functus officio upon issuing the final award. FUNDAMENTAL LAW

[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803)]

Who. The court deciding Marbury v. Madison (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Fundamental law being the constitution itself, the judiciary's duty to enforce it against repugnant statutes was established in the charter case of judicial review. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1803 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Marbury is the American authority for fundamental-law (constitutional) supremacy over ordinary legislation, directly on the entry's definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

[M'Naghten's Case, 10 Cl. & Fin. 200 (1843)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's maxims hold the madman 'not answerable or punishable for his actions'; the modern insanity test asks whether the accused knew the nature of the act or that it was wrong. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: M'Naghten's Case, 10 Cl. & Fin. 200 (1843). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FURIOSUS, p. 630; scan anchor: djvu line 89534 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1843 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: M'Naghten's right-and-wrong rule is the direct descendant of the maxim 'furiosus solo furore punitur' the entry quotes; the lineage is the real history of the defense. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FURTHERANCE

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — principals; aiding and abetting]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 'furthering, helping forward' of a criminal project the entry defines is federal accomplice liability: one who aids, abets, counsels, commands, induces or procures an offense is punishable as a principal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — principals; aiding and abetting. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FURTHERANCE, p. 531; scan anchor: djvu line 89700 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the statute is the living codification of the criminal-law 'furthering' the entry describes; loose form, no invented case. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

FURTUM

[Law: Model Penal Code § 223.1 — consolidation of theft offenses]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's fragmented theft taxonomy — furtum manifestum, grave, oblatum, with intent to steal at the core — was answered by the modern consolidation of the common-law theft offenses into a single crime. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Model Penal Code § 223.1 — consolidation of theft offenses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FURTUM, p. 531; scan anchor: djvu line 89709 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: consolidation is the modern doctrinal answer to the entry's scattered Roman/Scots/common-law theft categories. Loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

FUTURES

[Irwin v. Williar, 110 U.S. 499 (1884)]

Who. The court deciding Irwin v. Williar (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'purely speculative transactions' — nominal sale for future delivery, none ever intended, margin settled on price differences — are, when no delivery is intended, wagers and void. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Irwin v. Williar, 110 U.S. 499 (1884). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry FUTURES, p. 532; scan anchor: djvu line 89783 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1884 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine and verified by search: the Court held 'if, under guise of a contract to deliver goods at a future day, the real intent be to speculate in the rise or fall of prices, and the goods are not to be delivered... the whole transaction is nothing more than a wager, and is null and void' — the entry's fact pattern verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GABEL

[Law: U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8, cl. 1 — the Taxing and Spending Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. An excise being 'a tax on movables,' the constitutional authority under which American excises are laid is the Taxing and Spending Clause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8, cl. 1 — the Taxing and Spending Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GABEL, p. 533; scan anchor: djvu line 89859 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the clause is the authority for the excise the entry defines; stated as the constitutional fact, not stretched. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GAIK

[Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189 (1920)]

Who. The court deciding Eisner v. Macomber (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The 'increment of value' the entry names is not taxable until realized: mere appreciation, without severance from the investment, is not income. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189 (1920). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GAIK, p. 533; scan anchor: djvu line 89924 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1920 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the realization doctrine decides exactly what counts as taxable 'increment of value' — the entry's own phrase. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GALLOWS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — cruel and unusual punishments]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The gallows being the instrument of capital punishment, the constitutional boundary on that punishment is the Eighth Amendment's bar on cruel and unusual punishments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — cruel and unusual punishments. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GALLOWS, p. 533; scan anchor: djvu line 89983 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the amendment is the living limit on the punishment the gallows serves. Loose form, no invented case. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GAMING

[Law: wagering contracts void as against public policy; Irwin v. Williar, 110 U.S. 499 (1884)]

Who. The court deciding Law: wagering contracts void as against public policy; Irwin v. Williar (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's agreement to risk money on chance is a wagering contract, and wagering contracts are held illegal and void as against public policy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: wagering contracts void as against public policy; Irwin v. Williar, 110 U.S. 499 (1884). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GAMING, p. 534; scan anchor: djvu line 90074 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1884 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the verified Irwin holding states the rule generally ('in this country, wagering contracts are held to be illegal and void as against public policy'), directly on the entry's definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GAOL

[Law: U.S. Const. Art. I, § 9, cl. 2 — the Suspension Clause; habeas corpus]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The gaol being 'a place for the confinement of offenders,' the legal instrument that tests the lawfulness of that confinement is the writ of habeas corpus. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. Art. I, § 9, cl. 2 — the Suspension Clause; habeas corpus. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GAOL, p. 534; scan anchor: djvu line 90172 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: habeas is the remedy against unlawful gaol detention; the clause is its constitutional home. Loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GAOL DELIVERY

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — the right to a speedy trial]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Gaol delivery — 'clearing of a gaol of the prisoners confined therein, by trying them' — is the institutional ancestor of the guarantee that accused persons be tried promptly, not warehoused. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine lineage: the old commission to try-and-deliver and the modern speedy-trial right share the same principle — detention must end in trial. Loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GARNISHMENT

[Law: Consumer Credit Protection Act, Title III, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1671–1677 — limits on wage garnishment]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The garnishment process the entry defines — warning a third party holding the debtor's effects — is capped by federal law, which limits wage garnishment to a share of disposable earnings. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Consumer Credit Protection Act, Title III, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1671–1677 — limits on wage garnishment. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GARNISHMENT, p. 535; scan anchor: djvu line 90332 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1671 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the federal ceiling on the exact attachment process the entry defines; stated as the statutory fact, not stretched. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GAVELKIND

[Law: intestacy statutes — per stirpes/per capita equal distribution among heirs]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Gavelkind's partible descent — lands dividing among all sons rather than passing to the eldest — is the ancestor of modern equal-share intestate distribution. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: intestacy statutes — per stirpes/per capita equal distribution among heirs. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GAVELKIND, p. 637; scan anchor: djvu line 90537 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine lineage: the Kentish custom of partible inheritance and modern equal-share intestacy share the same distributive principle. Loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GERRYMANDER

[Shaw v. Reno, 509 U.S. 630 (1993)]

Who. The court deciding Shaw v. Reno (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The 'sinister or unlawful purpose' districting the entry defines — including packing districts by race, religion, or nationality — is unconstitutional when drawn predominantly on racial lines, violating equal protection. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Shaw v. Reno, 509 U.S. 630 (1993). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GERRYMANDER, p. 639; scan anchor: djvu line 90953 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1993 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Shaw is the modern authority striking down racial gerrymandering, directly on the entry's 'unlawful purpose' examples. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GIFT

[Law: elements of a valid inter vivos gift — donative intent, delivery, acceptance]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The voluntary gratuitous transfer the entry defines is legally effective only where three elements concur: donative intent, delivery, and acceptance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: elements of a valid inter vivos gift — donative intent, delivery, acceptance. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GIFT, p. 640; scan anchor: djvu line 91072 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the elements test every 'voluntary conveyance... made gratuitously' the entry names. Loose form; no invented case. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GIVING IN PAYMENT

[Law: accord and satisfaction]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Louisiana dation en paiement — delivery and acceptance of property 'in satisfaction of a debt, instead of a payment in money' — is the civil-law form of the common-law accord and satisfaction. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: accord and satisfaction. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GIVING IN PAYMENT, p. 541; scan anchor: djvu line 91313 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: definitional identity between the entry's translated phrase and the common-law doctrine; the link is textual, not decorative. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

GRAFT

[Law: after-acquired title — estoppel by deed feeds the estoppel]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Equity's 'confirmation, by relation back' of a mortgagee's right where the mortgagor later acquires good title is the after-acquired-title doctrine: estoppel by deed feeds the estoppel. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: after-acquired title — estoppel by deed feeds the estoppel. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GRAFT, p. 646; scan anchor: djvu line 92118 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

GUERILLA PARTY

[Ex parte Quirin, 317 U.S. 1 (1942)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The irregular fighters the entry defines — armed men 'not regularly or organically connected with the armies of either belligerent' — are unlawful combatants, triable by military commission. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Ex parte Quirin, 317 U.S. 1 (1942). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GUERILLA PARTY, p. 552; scan anchor: djvu line 93159 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1942 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Quirin is the American authority on the status and trial of un-uniformed irregular belligerents, directly on the entry's definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

GUEST

[Law: innkeeper's common-law strict liability for guests' goods]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The guest the entry defines — the traveler lodging at an inn — is protected by the innkeeper's common-law strict liability, as an insurer, for the guest's goods. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: innkeeper's common-law strict liability for guests' goods. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry GUEST, p. 552; scan anchor: djvu line 93166 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the liability rule is the legal content behind the guest/boarder distinction the entry draws. Loose form; no case invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM

[Law: writ of possession — enforcement of a judgment for possession of land]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The habere facias possessionem — the sheriff placing the successful ejectment plaintiff in actual possession — survives as the writ of possession enforcing a judgment for possession of land. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: writ of possession — enforcement of a judgment for possession of land. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the Establishment Clause is the constitutional answer to the heresy-penal law the entry states; the link is repudiation, stated as such. Loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

HA LIT AX LAW

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIV — due process of law]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Halifax law — 'lynch law,' the summary unauthorized trial and infliction of death — is the absence of due process of law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIV — due process of law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HA LIT AX LAW, p. 559 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 94279 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines private summary justice; the amendment is its constitutional repudiation. Headword keyed as in the chunk (OCR 'HA LIT AX LAW' for HALITAX LAW). [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HALLAZCO

[Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Str. 505 (1722)]

Who. The court deciding Armory v. Delamirie (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The Spanish-law rule — the finder taking possession of an ownerless thing becomes its owner as first occupant — matches the common-law finder's title, good against all but the true owner. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Str. 505 (1722). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HALLAZCO, p. 559; scan anchor: djvu line 94321 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1722 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the classic finder's-title case across the Spanish/common-law divide, directly on the entry's first-occupant rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HAMSOCNE

[Semayne's Case, 5 Coke 91a (1604)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Saxon 'right of security and privacy in a man's house' is the castle doctrine: the house of every one is to him as his castle and fortress. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Semayne's Case, 5 Coke 91a (1604). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HAMSOCNE, p. 560; scan anchor: djvu line 94462 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1604 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Semayne's is the classic common-law statement of the house-privilege the entry defines. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HANDSALE

[Law: UCC § 2-204 — formation in general; contract by conduct]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The handsale — shaking of hands 'held necessary to bind a bargain' — is contract formation by conduct: agreement may be shown by the parties' acts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-204 — formation in general; contract by conduct. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HANDSALE, p. 560; scan anchor: djvu line 94526 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the section codifies formation by conduct, the modern form of the handsale custom the entry describes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine, not forced: the entry's entire definition is the mitigation doctrine itself, and its cited

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

Missouri authorities (State v. Wieners, 66 Mo. 25; State v. Seaton, 106 Mo. 198) are real precedents applying it. MPC § 210.3 is the modern codification of the same rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HEBBERMAN

[Law: 4 Hen. VII c. 15 — statute regulating fishing in the Thames below London Bridge, cited in the entry as authority]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The unlawful Thames fisher is a creature of the cited statute, 4 Hen. VII c. 15, which restricted fishing below London Bridge. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 4 Hen. VII c. 15 — statute regulating fishing in the Thames below London Bridge, cited in the entry as authority. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HEBBERMAN, p. 565; scan anchor: djvu line 95274 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry itself cites the statute as its authority, and the statute is the term's legal source — the offense exists because the statute created it. No forcing; the link is the entry's own. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HEBBING- WEARS

[Law: St. 23 Hen. VIII c. 5 — statute concerning fish weirs, cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Fish weirs in ebbing water were prohibited by statute; the term denotes the regulated device under St. 23 Hen. VIII c. 5. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: St. 23 Hen. VIII c. 5 — statute concerning fish weirs, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HEBBING- WEARS, p. 565; scan anchor: djvu line 95284 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the statute cited in the entry is the legal source of the term's significance; without it the word would be a mere dictionary curiosity. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HECK

[Law: 23 Hen. VIII c. 18 — statute regulating fish-engines, cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An engine for taking fish in the River Ouse, regulated by statute. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 23 Hen. VIII c. 18 — statute regulating fish-engines, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HECK, p. 565; scan anchor: djvu line 95298 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's only legal content is the cited Henrician statute; the annotation records that statutory source rather than inventing doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HEDGE-BOTE

[Law: 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 35 — common of estovers, cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Hedge-bote is a species of estovers — the common-law right of a tenant to take wood from the demised land for repairs — treated by Blackstone alongside house-bote and plough-bote. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 35 — common of estovers, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HEDGE-BOTE, p. 565; scan anchor: djvu line 95310 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry cites 2 Bl. Comm. 35 as its authority, and Blackstone's estovers doctrine is exactly what gives the term legal meaning — the right is limited to what is needed for repair and cannot be sold. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HEIR

[Maxim: Nemo est haeres viventis — no one is the heir of a living person]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. At common law the heir succeeds by descent on the ancestor's death — which is why no one can be heir of a living person. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nemo est haeres viventis — no one is the heir of a living person. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HEIR, p. 565; scan anchor: djvu line 95340 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the maxim states the definitional core of the entry (succession 'upon the death of his ancestor'), and the entry's own authorities (Hoover v. Smith, 96 Md. 393; Fletcher v. Holmes, 32 Ind. 510) are real precedents applying the common-law definition. Nothing forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

HEIR-LOOMS

[Law: 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 427 — heir-looms as members of the inheritance, cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Chattels that pass with the inheritance to the heir rather than to the executor, as limbs of the freehold — Blackstone's doctrine of heir-looms. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 427 — heir-looms as members of the inheritance, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HEIR-LOOMS, p. 567; scan anchor: djvu line 95613 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry cites 2 Bl. Comm. 427 as its authority; Blackstone's passage is the source of the definition quoted. Direct, unforced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HEXR8

[Law: Rule in Shelley's Case — 'heirs' construed as words of limitation; the ancestor takes the fee and the heirs take by descent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In conveyancing, 'heirs' operates as a word of limitation, not of purchase — it marks the quantum of the estate (a fee) taken by the grantee, which is why the word is used where a fee is intended to pass. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Rule in Shelley's Case — 'heirs' construed as words of limitation; the ancestor takes the fee and the heirs take by descent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HEXR8, p. 567; scan anchor: djvu line 95633 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the word's office in deeds of conveyance, and the limitation-versus-purchase distinction is the governing doctrine for that office. The Rule in Shelley's Case is the locus classicus; stated in [Law:] form to avoid any invented reporter citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HENCEFORTH

[Law: Thomson v. American Surety Co., 170 N.Y. 109, 62 N.E. 1073 — words of futurity import prospective operation, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Thomson v. American Surety Co. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A word of futurity: in statutes and legal instruments it imports action from the present forward and excludes the past — the prospective-operation canon. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Thomson v. American Surety Co., 170 N.Y. 109, 62 N.E. 1073 — words of futurity import prospective operation, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HENCEFORTH, p. 567; scan anchor: djvu line 95694 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's entire point is a canon of construction, and its own cited authority decides exactly that point. Quoted reporter cite is from the entry itself, not invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HERBAGE

[Law: Bracton fol. 222; Co. Litt. 46 — authorities on profits and commons, cited in the entry; profit à prendre doctrine]

Who. Coke on Littleton (as cited: Law: Bracton fol. 222; Co. Litt. 46 — authorities on profits and commons, cited in the entry; profit à prendre doctrine) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. A right to pasture cattle on another's ground is a profit à prendre — an incorporeal hereditament distinct from a mere easement — bounded as the entry states (it does not include cutting grass or picking apples). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Bracton fol. 222; Co. Litt. 46 — authorities on profits and commons, cited in the entry; profit à prendre doctrine. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HERBAGE, p. 568; scan anchor: djvu line 95803 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry cites Bracton and Coke on Littleton as its authorities, and the profit-à-prendre classification is the live doctrine under which herbage sits — confirmed by the entry's own limitation in Simpson v. Coe, 4 N.H. 303. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HERCISCENDA

[Law: Digest 10.2 (familiae herciscundae) — the Roman partition action, cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The actio familiae herciscundae was the Roman-law action by which co-heirs compelled partition of an undivided inheritance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Digest 10.2 (familiae herciscundae) — the Roman partition action, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HERCISCENDA, p. 568; scan anchor: djvu line 95844 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry is a civil-law definition and cites Dig. 10, 2 as its source; the annotation states what that source contains. Digest 10.2 is the genuine locus; no forcing. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HEREAFTER

[Law: Tremont & S. Mills v. Lowell, 165 Mass. 265, 42 N.E. 1134 — 'hereafter' indicative of future time only, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Tremont & S. Mills v. Lowell (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Like 'henceforth,' 'hereafter' is a word of futurity in statutes and instruments — it excludes both the present and the past, marking the prospective-operation canon. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Tremont & S. Mills v. Lowell, 165 Mass. 265, 42 N.E. 1134 — 'hereafter' indicative of future time only, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HEREAFTER, p. 568; scan anchor: djvu line 95883 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

BCEREDAD

[Law: hereditas jacens doctrine — Roman law; the unentered inheritance lies vacant (the entry cross-references 'hereditas jacens,' q.v.)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Heredad yacente is the Spanish form of the Roman hereditas jacens — an inheritance not yet entered upon or appropriated, lying vacant as a juridical vacancy until acceptance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: hereditas jacens doctrine — Roman law; the unentered inheritance lies vacant (the entry cross-references 'hereditas jacens,' q.v.). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry BCEREDAD, p. 568; scan anchor: djvu line 95905 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry itself derives the Spanish term from the Latin hereditas jacens and cross-references it; the annotation states the Roman doctrine that gives the term its legal content. Internal cross-reference allowance. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HEREDERO

[Maxim: Haeres censeatur cum defuncto una eademque persona — Las Partidas 7, 9, 13, as cited in the entry]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The heir succeeds to the deceased's juridical personality — 'the heir is deemed one and the same person with the deceased' — the universal-succession principle of the Partidas. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Haeres censeatur cum defuncto una eademque persona — Las Partidas 7, 9, 13, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HEREDERO, p. 568; scan anchor: djvu line 95914 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the maxim is quoted in the entry from a real source (Alfonso X's Siete Partidas) and states the doctrinal core of heirship — universal succession — beyond the bare definition. Verbatim from the entry's Latin. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HEREDITAMENTS

[Law: 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 17 — hereditaments corporeal and incorporeal; Co. Litt. 96, both cited in the entry]

Who. Coke on Littleton (as cited: Law: 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 17 — hereditaments corporeal and incorporeal; Co. Litt. 96, both cited in the entry) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Hereditaments divide into corporeal (land itself) and incorporeal (rights issuing out of land, like rents and profits) — Blackstone's classification, which is why heir-looms and customary furniture can be hereditaments though they are chattels. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 17 — hereditaments corporeal and incorporeal; Co. Litt. 96, both cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HEREDITAMENTS, p. 568; scan anchor: djvu line 95933 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry cites both authorities; the corporeal/incorporeal division is the doctrine that makes the entry's inclusion of chattels intelligible. Direct, unforced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

[Law: Andrews v. Thayer, 40 Conn. 157 — 'heretofore' denotes time past, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Andrews v. Thayer (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The past-time counterpart of the futurity words: 'heretofore' denotes time past in distinction from present or future, with no more precise signification. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Andrews v. Thayer, 40 Conn. 157 — 'heretofore' denotes time past, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HERETOFORE, p. 568; scan anchor: djvu line 96043 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

HERIOT

[Law: 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 422 — heriot service and heriot custom, cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A customary death-duty to the lord of the fee, divided into heriot service (reserved by grant, little more than rent) and heriot custom (resting on immemorial usage alone) — Blackstone's doctrine. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 2 Blackstone, Commentaries 422 — heriot service and heriot custom, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HERIOT, p. 568; scan anchor: djvu line 96064 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry cites 2 Bl. Comm. 422 as authority; the service/custom distinction is the doctrine giving the term legal content. Same handling as hedge-bote and heir-looms. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HERITABLE

[Law: Heritable Jurisdictions (Scotland) Act 1746, 20 Geo. II c. 43 — abolished heritable jurisdictions, cited in the entry as 'St. 20 Geo. II']

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The great Scots heritable jurisdictions — private grants of criminal jurisdiction to families — were abolished in the aftermath of the 1745 rising. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Heritable Jurisdictions (Scotland) Act 1746, 20 Geo. II c. 43 — abolished heritable jurisdictions, cited in the entry as 'St. 20 Geo. II'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HERITABLE, p. 670; scan anchor: djvu line 96111 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1746 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry cites the statute as the abolishing authority; the annotation identifies it. The 1746 Act is the real statute behind the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HERMAPHRODITE

[Maxim: Hermaphroditus tam masculo quam feminae comparatur, secundum praevalentiam sexus incalescentis — Co. Litt. 8, as cited in the entry]

Who. Coke on Littleton (as cited: Maxim: Hermaphroditus tam masculo quam feminae comparatur, secundum praevalentiam sexus incalescentis — Co. Litt. 8, as cited in the entry) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. At common law an intersex person was deemed male or female according to the predominance of the sex — Coke's rule for legal classification. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Hermaphroditus tam masculo quam feminae comparatur, secundum praevalentiam sexus incalescentis — Co. Litt. 8, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HERMAPHRODITE, p. 670; scan anchor: djvu line 96156 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the maxim is the entry's own cited authority (Co. Litt. 8) and states the legal rule, not mere medicine. The scan OCR garbles the Latin, so the maxim is cited in canonical form as a [Maxim:] citation rather than presented as a verbatim entry quote. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HIDED

[Law: St. 1 Hen. VII cc. 5, 6 — statutes concerning sanctuary, cited in the entry as authority]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Sanctuary — a place of protection from arrest — was a statutory creature, limited and regulated by the cited Henrician statutes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: St. 1 Hen. VII cc. 5, 6 — statutes concerning sanctuary, cited in the entry as authority. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HIDED, p. 671; scan anchor: djvu line 96286 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

HIGHWAY

[Law: Abbott v. Duluth (C.C.) 104 Fed. 837 — public highway defined by the public right of use, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Abbott v. Duluth (C.C.) (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A highway is defined not by ownership of the soil but by the public's right of passage — roads become highways by dedication and public acceptance, which is why 'every person has the right to use' them. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Abbott v. Duluth (C.C.) 104 Fed. 837 — public highway defined by the public right of use, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HIGHWAY, p. 671; scan anchor: djvu line 96361 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's definition turns on the public right of passage, and its own cited authorities decide that point; the dedication-and-acceptance doctrine is what gives the definition legal content. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HINDER AND DELAY

[Law: Statute of 13 Eliz. c. 5 (1571) — conveyances made to 'delay, hinder or defraud creditors' are void]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A transfer made to 'hinder and delay' creditors is the classic badge of a fraudulent conveyance — voidable by creditors even absent a completed fraud. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of 13 Eliz. c. 5 (1571) — conveyances made to 'delay, hinder or defraud creditors' are void. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HINDER AND DELAY, p. 572; scan anchor: djvu line 96473 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1571 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry's 'hinder and delay' phrasing is verbatim the Statute of Elizabeth's operative language, and its cited cases (Walker v. Sayers, 5 Bush (Ky.) 582; Burdick v. Post, 12 Barb. 186) are real authorities applying fraudulent-conveyance law. Nothing forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The court deciding Law: Berniaud v. Beecher (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Where a written instrument is latently ambiguous about identity, parol evidence is admissible to show who was intended — so 'his' does not conclusively denote a male. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Berniaud v. Beecher, 71 Cal. 38, 11 Pac. 802 — parol evidence admissible to identify the person intended by an initial-plus-pronoun reference, cited in the entry. HITHERTO

[Law: Mason v. Jones, 18 Barb. (N.Y.) 479 — 'hitherto' restricts to time past, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Mason v. Jones (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The past-time member of the construction-canon family: 'hitherto' always restricts the matter to a period already passed. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Mason v. Jones, 18 Barb. (N.Y.) 479 — 'hitherto' restricts to time past, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HITHERTO, p. 673; scan anchor: djvu line 96606 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: construction-canon definition with the entry's own cited authority; citation taken from the body. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HOASTMEN

[Law: Statute of Monopolies, 21 Jac. I c. 3 (1624) — monopolies declared void, cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Newcastle hoastmen's exclusive dealing in sea coal was the archetypal monopoly struck at by the great statute against monopolies. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of Monopolies, 21 Jac. I c. 3 (1624) — monopolies declared void, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOASTMEN, p. 673; scan anchor: djvu line 96639 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1624 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry cites 21 Jac. I c. 3 as its authority, and that statute is the Statute of Monopolies — the term's legal significance is precisely as a monopolistic gild. High confidence on the statute's identity. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

[Maxim: Hoc quidem perquam durum est, sed ita lex scripta est — Dig. 40, 9, 12, 1; 3 Blackstone, Commentaries 430, both cited in the entry]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Maxim: Hoc quidem perquam durum est, sed ita lex scripta est — Dig. 40, 9, 12, 1; 3 Blackstone, Commentaries 430, both cited in the entry) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Ulpian's maxim, quoted by Blackstone: however hard the written law's result, equity has no power to abate its rigor — the supremacy of positive law over equitable softening. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Hoc quidem perquam durum est, sed ita lex scripta est — Dig. 40, 9, 12, 1; 3 Blackstone, Commentaries 430, both cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOO QUID EM FERQTTAM DURUM EST, SED ITA LEX SCRIPT A EST, p. 673; scan anchor: djvu line 96662 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry IS the maxim, with real sources cited (Ulpian via the Digest, Blackstone 3 Comm. 430). Cited in canonical Latin form as a [Maxim:] citation because the scan OCR garbles the phrase; not presented as a verbatim entry quote. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

HOLIDAY

[Law: negotiable-instruments law — presentment, demand, and protest are excluded on legal holidays; stated without a section number rather than risk a wrong one]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A legal holiday suspends the machinery of commercial paper — no presentment, demand, or protest is required on a day the law exempts, with time reckoned accordingly. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: negotiable-instruments law — presentment, demand, and protest are excluded on legal holidays; stated without a section number rather than risk a wrong one. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOLIDAY, p. 674; scan anchor: djvu line 96802 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's 'legal holiday' sub-definition is exactly this commercial-paper rule; the annotation states the doctrine behind the definition. No UCC section cited because the precise number cannot be verified here. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

HOLDER

[Law: UCC Article 3 — negotiable instruments; holder and holder-in-due-course doctrine (the entry's own authority: Bowling v. Harrison, 6 How. 258)]

Who. The court deciding Law: UCC Article 3 — negotiable instruments; holder and holder-in-due-course doctrine (the entry's own authority: Bowling v. Harrison (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The holder — one who acquires a bill, note, or check by indorsement or delivery — is the foundation of negotiable-instruments law; only a holder in due course takes free of personal defenses. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 3 — negotiable instruments; holder and holder-in-due-course doctrine (the entry's own authority: Bowling v. Harrison, 6 How. 258). HOLOGRAPH

[Law: holographic-will doctrine — a will wholly in the testator's handwriting needs no witnesses (the entry's authorities: Estate of Billings, 64 Cal. 427, 1 Pac. 701; Harrison v. Weatherby, 180 Ill. 418)]

Who. The court deciding Law: holographic-will doctrine — a will wholly in the testator's handwriting needs no witnesses (the entry's authorities: Estate of Billings, 64 Cal. 427, 1 Pac. 701; Harrison v. Weatherby (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A holographic will — written entirely in the testator's own hand — is valid without attesting witnesses; the handwriting itself is the solemnity. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: holographic-will doctrine — a will wholly in the testator's handwriting needs no witnesses (the entry's authorities: Estate of Billings, 64 Cal. 427, 1 Pac. 701; Harrison v. Weatherby, 180 Ill. 418). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOLOGRAPH, p. 674; scan anchor: djvu line 96878 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the operative term and cites real authorities applying the doctrine; the annotation states the rule those authorities stand for. Nothing forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HOME

[Law: Langhammer v. Munter, 80 Md. 518, 31 Atl. 300 — 'home' distinguished from technical 'domicile,' cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Langhammer v. Munter (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Residence is mere abode; domicile is residence plus the intent to remain permanently or indefinitely — and domicile, not residence, governs jurisdiction, voting, and succession. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Langhammer v. Munter, 80 Md. 518, 31 Atl. 300 — 'home' distinguished from technical 'domicile,' cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOME, p. 675; scan anchor: djvu line 97015 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's point is the home/domicile distinction and its own cited authority decides it; the reporter citation is taken from the body. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HOMICIDE

[Law: 4 Blackstone, Commentaries 177 — homicide and its divisions, cited in the entry; see also Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 303, among the entry's authorities, for the classic definition of murder]

Who. The court deciding Law: 4 Blackstone, Commentaries 177 — homicide and its divisions, cited in the entry; see also Commonwealth v. Webster (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Homicide is the genus — the killing of a human being — and is not necessarily a crime; it divides into murder, manslaughter, and non-criminal homicide (justifiable or excusable). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 4 Blackstone, Commentaries 177 — homicide and its divisions, cited in the entry; see also Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 303, among the entry's authorities, for the classic definition of murder. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOMICIDE, p. 676; scan anchor: djvu line 97169 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's load-bearing sentence is 'Homicide is not necessarily a crime,' and Blackstone 4 Comm. 177 is the real source of the classification; the Webster citation is taken from the body. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HOMIOIDII1M

[Law: Bracton fols. 120b–121 — homicidium ex justitia, ex necessitate, ex casu, ex voluntate, cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Bracton's fourfold classification: homicide in execution of justice, from inevitable necessity (self-defense), by accident, and voluntary — the ancestor of the modern justifiable/excusable/criminal division. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Bracton fols. 120b–121 — homicidium ex justitia, ex necessitate, ex casu, ex voluntate, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOMIOIDII1M, p. 677; scan anchor: djvu line 97287 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry is Bracton's classification with the folios cited; the annotation states what the classification is. Stored headword key is the OCR form; the Latin terms are quoted as the entry gives them. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HOMINES

[Maxim: Hominum causa jus constitutum est — law is established for the benefit of man, quoted in the entry]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The humanist root of all law: law exists for man's sake, not man for law's. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Hominum causa jus constitutum est — law is established for the benefit of man, quoted in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOMINES, p. 677; scan anchor: djvu line 97327 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry's body; citing it as a [Maxim:] records a real axiom the entry itself carries. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HONE8TE VTVE RE

HOSPITAL

[Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518 (1819) — charter of an eleemosynary corporation is a contract protected from state impairment]

Who. The court deciding Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A hospital, as an eleemosynary (charitable) corporation, holds its charter as a contract — beyond the state's power to impair. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518 (1819) — charter of an eleemosynary corporation is a contract protected from state impairment. HOSPITALLERS

[Law: 32 Hen. VIII c. 24 — dissolution of the Hospitallers, lands given to the sovereign, cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Knights Hospitallers' English lands and goods were forfeited to the Crown by the dissolution statute. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 32 Hen. VIII c. 24 — dissolution of the Hospitallers, lands given to the sovereign, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOSPITALLERS, p. 580; scan anchor: djvu line 97800 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry cites the statute as its authority and the statute is the legal source of the forfeiture described. Statute-as-source handling. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HOSTES

[Maxim: Hostes sunt qui nobis vel quibus nos bellum decernimus; caeteri proditores vel praedones sunt — 7 Coke, 24 (from Calvin's Case), quoted in the entry] [Law: hostis humani generis — pirates as enemies of all mankind, the root of universal jurisdiction over piracy]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Enemies in law are those with whom war is declared, on either side — all others are traitors or pirates; and pirates are hostis humani generis, enemies of the human race, answerable to every nation's courts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Hostes sunt qui nobis vel quibus nos bellum decernimus; caeteri proditores vel praedones sunt — 7 Coke, 24 (from Calvin's Case), quoted in the entry] [Law: hostis humani generis — pirates as enemies of all mankind, the root of universal jurisdiction over piracy. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: both doctrines are stated in the entry itself with real sources (7 Coke 24, i.e. Calvin's Case (1608) on allegiance and enmity). Canonical Latin used per garbled-OCR discipline; the universal-jurisdiction point is the live doctrine behind 'enemies of the human race.' HOUSEBREAKING

[Law: common-law burglary — breaking and entering a dwelling-house by night with intent to commit a felony therein (the definition the entry invokes)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Housebreaking becomes burglary when done by night: at common law, burglary is the breaking and entering of a dwelling-house in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony therein. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law burglary — breaking and entering a dwelling-house by night with intent to commit a felony therein (the definition the entry invokes). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOUSEBREAKING, p. 682; scan anchor: djvu line 98158 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry invokes burglary's definition without stating it; the annotation supplies the missing elements rather than restating the entry. No citation ventured beyond the doctrine's settled formulation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HUNG JURY

[Law: manifest-necessity doctrine — retrial after a hung jury does not violate double jeopardy (United States v. Perez)]

Who. The court deciding Law: manifest-necessity doctrine — retrial after a hung jury does not violate double jeopardy (United States v. Perez) (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A jury irreconcilably divided cannot return a verdict — and a genuinely deadlocked jury permits retrial; the double-jeopardy clause is no bar. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: manifest-necessity doctrine — retrial after a hung jury does not violate double jeopardy (United States v. Perez). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HUNG JURY, p. 583 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 98388 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's one-line definition omits the controlling legal consequence, which the annotation supplies rather than restating the entry. Perez named in [Law:] form without a reporter gamble. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

HUSBAND

[Law: coverture — 'the legal existence of a wife is incorporated with that of her husband' (the entry's definition); abrogated by the Married Women's Property Acts]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. At common law husband and wife were one person in law — coverture merged the wife's legal existence into the husband's, suspending her capacity to contract, sue, or hold property in her own name. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: coverture — 'the legal existence of a wife is incorporated with that of her husband' (the entry's definition); abrogated by the Married Women's Property Acts. IDEM 8ONAN8

[Law: idem sonans — 'sounding the same'; substantially identical pronunciation defeats a variance objection (the entry's authority: State v. Griffie, 118 Mo. 188, 23 S.W. 878)]

Who. The court deciding Law: idem sonans — 'sounding the same'; substantially identical pronunciation defeats a variance objection (the entry's authority: State v. Griffie (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Under the idem sonans rule, names that sound alike though spelled differently are treated as the same name in pleading — no fatal variance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: idem sonans — 'sounding the same'; substantially identical pronunciation defeats a variance objection (the entry's authority: State v. Griffie, 118 Mo. 188, 23 S.W. 878). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IDEM 8ONAN8, p. 687; scan anchor: djvu line 99043 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the pleading doctrine with real authorities (1 Cromp. & M. 806; State v. Griffie); the annotation states the rule those authorities establish. Stored headword key is the OCR form of 'IDEM SONANS'. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IDENTIFICATION

[Maxim: Identitas vera colligitur ex multitudine signorum — true identity is gathered from a multitude of signs, quoted in the entry]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Identity is proved not by a single mark but by the concurrence of many — the accumulation of signs is what establishes sameness. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Identitas vera colligitur ex multitudine signorum — true identity is gathered from a multitude of signs, quoted in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IDENTIFICATION, p. 687; scan anchor: djvu line 99077 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the maxim is quoted in the entry and states the governing principle of its subject (proof of identity). Cited in canonical form per garbled-OCR discipline, as a [Maxim:] citation rather than a verbatim entry quote. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IF

[Law: Sutton v. West, 77 N.C. 431 — 'if' implies a condition precedent in deeds and wills, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Sutton v. West (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. In deeds and wills 'if,' as a rule, imports a condition precedent — the estate or gift vests only upon the happening of the stated event, unless other words control. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Sutton v. West, 77 N.C. 431 — 'if' implies a condition precedent in deeds and wills, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IF, p. 689; scan anchor: djvu line 99210 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: construction-canon definition with the entry's own cited authority; the reporter citation is taken from the body. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IGNORANTIA

[Maxim: Ignorantia eorum quae quis scire tenetur non excusat — ignorance of those things which one is bound to know excuses not (Hale, P.C. 42, as cited in the entry)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Ignorance excuses only what one could not be bound to know — ignorance of what one is bound to know is no excuse. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ignorantia eorum quae quis scire tenetur non excusat — ignorance of those things which one is bound to know excuses not (Hale, P.C. 42, as cited in the entry). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IGNORANTIA, p. 689; scan anchor: djvu line 99313 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's subject is ignorance and it quotes this maxim from Hale with the cite; the maxim states the operative limit of the ignorance excuse. Latin quoted verbatim as the entry gives it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

XLLATA ET INVECTA

[Law: invecta et illata — the Roman tacit hypothec over goods brought into the leased house, paralleled in the entry with the common-law right of distress]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Goods the tenant brings onto leased premises (invecta et illata) were tacitly hypothecated to the Roman landlord — the ancestor of the common-law landlord's distress for rent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: invecta et illata — the Roman tacit hypothec over goods brought into the leased house, paralleled in the entry with the common-law right of distress. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry XLLATA ET INVECTA, p. 690; scan anchor: djvu line 99434 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry itself draws the Roman-to-common-law parallel; the annotation names the Roman doctrine (invecta et illata) that gives the term its legal content. Stored headword key is the OCR form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. To 'compass or imagine' the sovereign's death is treason — but the imagining, being an act of the mind, must be demonstrated by some overt act proved against the accused. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: treason — compassing or imagining the king's death requires proof by overt act (4 Blackstone, Commentaries 78, cited in the entry); cf. U.S. Const. Art. Who. The court deciding Law: trademark infringement — likelihood of confusion; an imitation 'likely to induce the belief that it is genuine' infringes (the entry's definition; Wagner v. Daly (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. An imitation of a trade-mark infringes when it so resembles the genuine mark as to be likely to induce belief that it is genuine — the likelihood-of-confusion test. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: trademark infringement — likelihood of confusion; an imitation 'likely to induce the belief that it is genuine' infringes (the entry's definition; Wagner v. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states the test with a real cited authority; the annotation names the live doctrine (likelihood of confusion) the definition embodies. Borderline but kept — it names the doctrine rather than restating. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The court deciding Law: self-defense — imminent-danger requirement; judged by the reasonable-person standard (the entry's authorities: U.S. v. Outerbridge (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Deadly force in self-defense is justified only against imminent danger — danger so immediate it must be met at once and cannot await the law's protection — judged by what would put a reasonable and prudent man to his instant defense. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: self-defense — imminent-danger requirement; judged by the reasonable-person standard (the entry's authorities: U.S. v. Outerbridge, 27 Fed. Cas. 390; State v. entry IMPAIR, p. 693; scan anchor: djvu line 99890 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry exists to gloss the constitutional phrase and cites the commentaries (Story, Kent) that expound it; the annotation pins the phrase to its constitutional source, quoted verbatim from the Constitution. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Impeachment is the House's accusation and the Senate's trial of a public officer — for 'Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors' — before a quasi-political court. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. Art. I, §2, cl. 5 (House's 'sole Power of Impeachment'); Art. I, §3, cl. 6 (Senate's 'sole Power to try all Impeachments'); Art. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IMPEACHMENT, p. 693; scan anchor: djvu line 100010 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes the impeachment process without citing its source; the annotation supplies the constitutional loci, quoted from the Constitution itself. Adds the source rather than restating. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IMPERITIA

[Maxim: Imperitia culpae adnumeratur — want of skill is reckoned as culpa, as blameable conduct or neglect (Dig. 50, 17, 132, as cited in the entry)]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Maxim: Imperitia culpae adnumeratur — want of skill is reckoned as culpa, as blameable conduct or neglect (Dig. 50, 17, 132, as cited in the entry)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. Want of skill counts as fault — the unskilled practitioner answers for the harm his unskillfulness causes, as if for negligence. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Imperitia culpae adnumeratur — want of skill is reckoned as culpa, as blameable conduct or neglect (Dig. 50, 17, 132, as cited in the entry). [Law: impossibility of performance — excuse and discharge (the entry's authority: Klauber v. San Diego Street-Car Co., 95 Cal. 353; see Taylor v. Caldwell (1863), the leading authority on discharge by supervening impossibility)]

Who. The court deciding Law: impossibility of performance — excuse and discharge (the entry's authority: Klauber v. San Diego Street-Car Co. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Where performance becomes physically or legally impossible, the promisor is excused — and a contract impossible from the outset is void; supervening impossibility discharges. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: impossibility of performance — excuse and discharge (the entry's authority: Klauber v. San Diego Street-Car Co., 95 Cal. 353; see Taylor v. IMPRISONMENT

[Law: false imprisonment — intentional, unlawful confinement without legal justification (the entry's definition; State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 Atl. 863, cited in the entry)]

Who. The court deciding Law: false imprisonment — intentional, unlawful confinement without legal justification (the entry's definition; State v. Shaw (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Imprisonment is any intentional restraint of personal liberty — no prison walls required — which is why an unlawful private restraint is false imprisonment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: false imprisonment — intentional, unlawful confinement without legal justification (the entry's definition; State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 Atl. 863, cited in the entry). IX FORMA PAUPERIS

[Law: in forma pauperis — 28 U.S.C. §1915; leave to proceed without prepayment of fees]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Leave to proceed in forma pauperis — to sue without prepayment of fees or liability for costs — opens the courts to the poor suitor. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: in forma pauperis — 28 U.S.C. §1915; leave to proceed without prepayment of fees. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IX FORMA PAUPERIS, p. 602; scan anchor: djvu line 101446 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1915 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the IFP proceeding; the annotation pins it to its federal statutory form. 28 U.S.C. §1915 is the well-known IFP statute; stated in [Law:] form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN ITINERE

[Law: stoppage in transitu — the unpaid seller's right to stop goods in transit (the entry equates in itinere with in transitu)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Goods still in itinere — in course of transportation, not yet delivered to the buyer — may be stopped in transitu: the unpaid seller may retake them on the buyer's insolvency. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: stoppage in transitu — the unpaid seller's right to stop goods in transit (the entry equates in itinere with in transitu). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN ITINERE, p. 602; scan anchor: djvu line 101607 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry invokes in transitu without stating its doctrine; the annotation supplies the stoppage rule rather than restating. No invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN LIMINE

[Law: motion in limine — pretrial motion to exclude evidence, decided at the threshold]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A motion in limine is decided 'at the threshold' — a pretrial motion asking the court to exclude evidence before it is ever offered to the jury. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: motion in limine — pretrial motion to exclude evidence, decided at the threshold. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN LIMINE, p. 604; scan anchor: djvu line 101695 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the phrase; the annotation names the live motion it denotes. No invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

IN LOCO PARENTIS

[Law: in loco parentis — assumption of parental duties imposes parental obligations (the entry's authorities: Wetherby v. Dixon, 19 Ves. 412; Brinkerhoff v. Merselis, 24 N.J. Law 683)]

Who. The court deciding Law: in loco parentis — assumption of parental duties imposes parental obligations (the entry's authorities: Wetherby v. Dixon (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. One who stands in loco parentis — voluntarily assuming a parent's charge — is burdened with a parent's duties and clothed with a parent's rights and responsibilities. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: in loco parentis — assumption of parental duties imposes parental obligations (the entry's authorities: Wetherby v. Dixon, 19 Ves. 412; Brinkerhoff v. Merselis, 24 N.J. Law 683). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN LOCO PARENTIS, p. 604; scan anchor: djvu line 101704 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the status with real authorities; the annotation states the duty-imposing doctrine the status carries. Citations taken from the body. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IX MORTUA MANU

[Law: mortmain — the dead hand; ecclesiastical landholding restrained by statute (1 Blackstone, Commentaries 479, cited in the entry)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Land held in mortua manu — in mortmain, the 'dead hand' — is land held by religious corporations, whose members were civiliter mortui; the mortmain statutes restrained such holdings from accumulating without license. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: mortmain — the dead hand; ecclesiastical landholding restrained by statute (1 Blackstone, Commentaries 479, cited in the entry). IN ODIUM SPOLIATORIS

[Maxim: In odium spoliatoris omnia praesumuntur — to the prejudice of a despoiler all things are presumed; every presumption is made against a wrongdoer (1 Vern. 452; The Saratoga, 1 Gall. 174; 1 Greenl. Ev. §348, as cited in the entry)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Against a despoiler every presumption is made — the wrongdoer's destruction or suppression of evidence is taken at its worst against him. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: In odium spoliatoris omnia praesumuntur — to the prejudice of a despoiler all things are presumed; every presumption is made against a wrongdoer (1 Vern. 452; The Saratoga, 1 Gall. 174; 1 Greenl. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN ODIUM SPOLIATORIS, p. 605; scan anchor: djvu line 101864 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the headword IS the anti-spoliator canon and the entry quotes it with real authorities; citing as [Maxim:] records the root of the adverse-inference/spoliation doctrine. Latin quoted verbatim as the entry gives it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HOGSHEAD

[Law: habendum clause doctrine — 'to have and to hold' defines the estate conveyed; see the entry's authorities Thompson v. Sandford, 13 Ga. 241 and Bank of Michigan v. Niles, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 407]

Who. The court deciding Law: habendum clause doctrine — 'to have and to hold' defines the estate conveyed; see the entry's authorities Thompson v. Sandford (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. 'To have and to hold' is the habendum clause of a deed — the part that defines and limits the quantum of the estate granted to the grantee. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: habendum clause doctrine — 'to have and to hold' defines the estate conveyed; see the entry's authorities Thompson v. Sandford, 13 Ga. 241 and Bank of Michigan v. Niles, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 407. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOGSHEAD, p. 673; scan anchor: djvu line 96719 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's own example phrase is the habendum, and the habendum's office (limiting the estate) is the doctrine that illuminates the definition. The entry's cited cases are real. (The HOLD, v. definition sits in the body of the stored 'HOGSHEAD' entry; annotated under the stored key.) When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines 'act of honor' and the annotation states the doctrine it names; distinct from the HOLDER Article-3 annotation. No invented citation. (The HONOR, v. definition sits in the body of the stored 'HONESTUS' entry; annotated under the stored key.) [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

HOPCOH

[Law: Cockrill v. Armstrong, 31 Ark. 589 — precatory words sufficient in proper cases to create a trust, cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Cockrill v. Armstrong (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Precatory words in a will — 'hope,' 'desire,' 'wish' — are not merely hortatory; where the testator's intent is imperative enough they create a trust (the precatory-trust doctrine). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Cockrill v. Armstrong, 31 Ark. 589 — precatory words sufficient in proper cases to create a trust, cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry HOPCOH, p. 679; scan anchor: djvu line 97622 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states the rule and cites the deciding authority; the reporter citation is taken from the body. (The HOPE, v. definition sits in the body of the stored 'HOPCOH' entry; annotated under the stored key.) [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN JBQUALI JURE

[Maxim: In aequali jure melior est conditio possidentis — in a case of equal right the condition of the party in possession is the better (Plowd. 296, as cited in the entry)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Where right is equal on both sides, possession decides — the party in possession holds the better position. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: In aequali jure melior est conditio possidentis — in a case of equal right the condition of the party in possession is the better (Plowd. 296, as cited in the entry). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN JBQUALI JURE, p. 599; scan anchor: djvu line 100911 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the maxim directly illuminates the headword ('in equal right') and is quoted with the entry's own authority (Plowden 296). Positive application of the incidental-maxim rule — here the maxim is the entry's subject. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IX FAVOREM LIBER TATIS

[Maxim: In favorem libertatis — in favor of liberty, the entry's headword]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The law favors liberty: presumptions and constructions resolve in favorem libertatis — toward freedom, not bondage. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: In favorem libertatis — in favor of liberty, the entry's headword. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IX FAVOREM LIBER TATIS, p. 602; scan anchor: djvu line 101416 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the headword IS the liberty-favoring canon; citing it as a [Maxim:] records a real axiom. (The Co. Litt. 124 form of this maxim was declined under IMPIGNORATION as incidental; it rides here on its proper headword.) [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IX FAVOREM VITAS

[Law: presumption of innocence — 'In favorem vitae, libertatis, et innocentiae omnia praesumuntur' (Lofft 125, as cited in the entry)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In favor of life, liberty, and innocence every presumption is made — the root of the presumption of innocence: the accused is presumed innocent, and doubt favors life. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: presumption of innocence — 'In favorem vitae, libertatis, et innocentiae omnia praesumuntur' (Lofft 125, as cited in the entry). When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the headword IS the life-favoring canon and the entry quotes Lofft's formulation; the annotation states the presumption-of-innocence doctrine it grounds. Latin quoted verbatim as the entry gives it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN PAIS

[Law: equitable estoppel (estoppel in pais) — representations relied upon to another's detriment cannot be denied]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Estoppel by matter in pais is the ancestor of modern equitable estoppel: a party who represents a fact on which another reasonably relies is barred from denying it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: equitable estoppel (estoppel in pais) — representations relied upon to another's detriment cannot be denied. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN PAIS, p. 605; scan anchor: djvu line 101931 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's core content is that matters 'in pais' (without legal proceedings) generate estoppel; the genuine link is the living doctrine of equitable estoppel, which is the same principle under its modern name — illumination, not force-fit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN PARI CAUSA

[Maxim: In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Digest maxim quoted whole — 'In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet,' in an equal cause he who has possession is to be preferred — is the classical root of the possession-favoring tie-breaker in property disputes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN PARI CAUSA, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 101968 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry IS this maxim, quoted from Dig. 50, 17, 128, 1; annotating it as a maxim of law is verbatim and genuine — no stretching needed. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

IN PARI DELICTO

[Maxim: In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis — in a case of equal fault the condition of the defending party is the better one]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Where the parties are equally at fault, courts leave them as found — the in pari delicto defense bars recovery on illegal bargains. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis — in a case of equal fault the condition of the defending party is the better one. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN PARI DELICTO, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 101977 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Black's states the maxim verbatim (Broom, Max. 290, 729; Story, Ag. s 195); it remains the live illegality defense in contract law, so citing the maxim itself genuinely illuminates the entry. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The court deciding Law: canon of construction — statutes in pari materia are construed together; e.g., United Society v. Eagle Bank (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Statutes in pari materia — upon the same subject — are construed together as one system, a live canon of statutory interpretation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: canon of construction — statutes in pari materia are construed together; e.g., United Society v. Eagle Bank, 7 Conn. 457, as cited in the entry. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the term by its operative legal use (citing United Society v. Eagle Bank, 7 Conn. 457 verbatim from the body); the canon named is the genuine law-well content of the term. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN PERSON

[Law: 28 U.S.C. s 1654 — parties may plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Appearing 'in person' is the historic form of pro se representation, secured federally by the statute permitting parties to plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 28 U.S.C. s 1654 — parties may plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN PERSON, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 102027 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1654 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines appearing in person instead of through counsel; 28 U.S.C. s 1654 codifies exactly that right, so the link is direct and illuminating. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN PERSONAM, IN REM

[Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714 (1878)]

Who. The court deciding Pennoyer v. Neff (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The in personam/in rem divide is the foundation of American jurisdiction: a court needs personal jurisdiction over the defendant for in personam judgments, and only power over the thing for in rem dispositions. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714 (1878). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN PERSONAM, IN REM, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 102033 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1878 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Pennoyer is the landmark case drawing the territorial line between in personam and in rem jurisdiction that the entry explicates; no other case more directly illuminates the distinction. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

[International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310 (1945)]

Who. The court deciding International Shoe Co. v. Washington (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Modern personal jurisdiction replaced Pennoyer's territorial presence test with minimum contacts, refining — not abolishing — the in personam/in rem boundary. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310 (1945). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN PERSONAM, IN REM, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 102033 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1945 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. International Shoe is the governing modern statement of in personam jurisdiction (minimum contacts, fair play and substantial justice); pairing it with Pennoyer gives the reader the doctrine's arc. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'For pious uses' is the civil-law root of charitable-use jurisdiction, the class of gifts the Statute of Charitable Uses and the cy-pres doctrine exist to protect. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of Charitable Uses, 43 Eliz. I c. 4 (1601) — pious and charitable uses favored at law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN PIOS TXSUS, p. 606; scan anchor: djvu line 102093 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1601 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's whole content is gifts for religious/pious purposes (2 Bl. Comm. 505); the 1601 statute is the historical anchor of charitable-trust law for exactly such gifts — a genuine lineage link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

When. 1872 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the term strictly within mining law (citing Williams v. Gibson); the Mining Law of 1872 is the governing federal framework for exactly those in-place lode claims. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN PROPRIA PERSONA

[Law: 28 U.S.C. s 1654 — parties may plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Acting in one's own proper person is pro se practice, codified federally as the right of parties to plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 28 U.S.C. s 1654 — parties may plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN PROPRIA PERSONA, p. 607; scan anchor: djvu line 102186 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1654 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Same operative content as IN PERSON; the statute codifies precisely this mode of appearance, making it the genuine law-well anchor. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN RE

[Law: 11 U.S.C. — bankruptcy cases captioned 'In re ___' (debtor's estate)]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Non-adversarial proceedings — bankruptcy estates, probate administrations, highway petitions — are captioned 'In re' under the statutes creating them, most prominently Title 11 bankruptcy cases. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. — bankruptcy cases captioned 'In re ___' (debtor's estate). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN RE, p. 607; scan anchor: djvu line 102196 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines 'in re' as the caption form for proceedings with a res but no adversary parties and names a bankrupt's estate as the exemplar; Title 11 is where that captioning lives today. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

IN SOLIDUM

[Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U.S. 510 (1927)]

Who. The court deciding Tumey v. Ohio (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The nemo-judex maxim in the body — that it is extremely unjust for any one to be judge in his own cause — is the due-process root of the impartial-tribunal requirement. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U.S. 510 (1927). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN SOLIDUM, p. 608; scan anchor: djvu line 102255 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1927 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry quotes the maxim against judging one's own cause; Tumey held that a judge with a direct pecuniary interest violates due process — the maxim's American constitutional expression. The footnote annotates the maxim content actually present in the body, not the headword alone. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN SOLIDUM

[Law: co-sureties bound in solidum — each liable for the whole, with contribution among co-sureties]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Where several sureties bind themselves, each is bound for the whole debt — the civil-law in solidum rule behind modern co-surety contribution. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: co-sureties bound in solidum — each liable for the whole, with contribution among co-sureties. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN SOLIDUM, p. 608; scan anchor: djvu line 102255 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry quotes Inst. 3, 21, 4 verbatim ('singuli in solidum tenentur'); the joint-and-several surety with pro rata contribution is the living form of that rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN REM

[Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714 (1878)]

Who. The court deciding Pennoyer v. Neff (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Proceedings in rem and quasi in rem — attachment, foreclosure, partition, lien enforcement — bind the thing rather than the person, and the jurisdictional limits of such proceedings were fixed in Pennoyer. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714 (1878). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN REM, p. 608; scan anchor: djvu line 102285 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1878 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry itself cites Pennoyer v. Neff for the proposition that attachment, foreclosure, and partition actions are substantially in rem; the case is the genuine doctrinal anchor of the entry's jurisdictional discussion. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

IN 8EPARAU

[Law: tenancy in severalty — exclusive ownership by one person, opposed to joint tenancy and tenancy in common]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'In several; in severalty' is the property term for sole ownership — a tenancy in severalty, where one person holds exclusively, as opposed to joint or common tenancy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: tenancy in severalty — exclusive ownership by one person, opposed to joint tenancy and tenancy in common. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN 8EPARAU, p. 608; scan anchor: djvu line 102375 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the phrase purely as a property concept (Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54); the live estate of tenancy in severalty is its direct doctrinal continuation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

IN SOLIDO

[Law: Louisiana Civil Code art. 2082 — solidary (in solido) obligation, each obligor bound for the whole]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An obligation in solido — each obligor liable for the whole — is the civil-law form of joint-and-several liability, codified for Louisiana in La. Civ. Code art. 2082 as cited in the entry. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Louisiana Civil Code art. 2082 — solidary (in solido) obligation, each obligor bound for the whole. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN SOLIDO, p. 608; scan anchor: djvu line 102387 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 2082 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's operative content is the solidary obligation with its Louisiana codification quoted; citing that article verbatim from the body is the genuine law-well link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

IN SOLO

[Maxim: Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum et ad inferos — he who owns the soil owns up to the heavens and down to the depths]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Ownership of the soil carries the column of space above and the earth below — the ad coelum maxim governing airspace and subsurface rights. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum et ad inferos — he who owns the soil owns up to the heavens and down to the depths. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN SOLO, p. 609; scan anchor: djvu line 102427 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry treats rights in solo alieno versus in solo proprio; the ad coelum maxim is the classic statement of what soil ownership entails, genuinely illuminating the entry's property content. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

IN SOLO

[Law: contra proferentem — Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 206, ambiguities construed against the drafter]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Ambiguous agreement language is construed against the party who chose it — the contra proferentem rule stated in the body's maxim that in the construction of agreements words are interpreted against the person using them. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: contra proferentem — Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 206, ambiguities construed against the drafter. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN SOLO, p. 609; scan anchor: djvu line 102427 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry quotes the Digest maxim (Dig. 45, 1, 33, 15) stating exactly this rule; Restatement (Second) s 206 is its modern American formulation — a genuine lineage, not a stretch. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN TERROREM

[Law: Uniform Probate Code s 3-905 — penalty clause for contest unenforceable against contests with probable cause]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. No-contest (in terrorem) clauses in wills are the modern form of the entry's conditional legacy: generally unenforced against contests brought with probable cause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Uniform Probate Code s 3-905 — penalty clause for contest unenforceable against contests with probable cause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN TERROREM, p. 609; scan anchor: djvu line 102480 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines in terrorem conditions as threats against disputing the will; UPC s 3-905 is the modern statute governing exactly those no-contest clauses. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

IN TERROREM FOPTTLI

[Law: 18 U.S.C. s 2101 — federal anti-riot statute]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The common-law riot formula 'to the terror of the people' survives in modern anti-riot statutes punishing travel or acts in furtherance of riot. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. s 2101 — federal anti-riot statute. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN TERROREM FOPTTLI, p. 609; scan anchor: djvu line 102487 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the technical riot-indictment phrase; the federal anti-riot statute is the modern criminal descendant of common-law riot — a genuine lineage link for an otherwise historical term. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN TOTO

[Maxim: In toto et pars continetur (Dig. 50, 17, 113)]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Maxim: In toto et pars continetur (Dig. 50, 17, 113)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The maxim quoted whole — 'In toto et pars continetur,' in the whole the part is contained — is the interpretive canon that the greater includes the lesser. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: In toto et pars continetur (Dig. 50, 17, 113). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN TOTO, p. 609; scan anchor: djvu line 102526 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry IS this maxim with its Digest citation; annotating it verbatim is genuine — no stretching needed. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN TRANSITU

[Law: UCC s 2-705 — seller's stoppage of delivery in transit]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Goods in transit give the unpaid seller a right of stoppage — the seller may retake delivery while the goods are still in transit to an insolvent buyer. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC s 2-705 — seller's stoppage of delivery in transit. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN TRANSITU, p. 609; scan anchor: djvu line 102543 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines 'in transitu' in the commercial-carriage context (2 Kent, Comm. 540-552); UCC s 2-705 codifies the classic stoppage-in-transitu right by name — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

IN VADIO

[Law: UCC Article 9 — attachment and perfection of security interests in pledged collateral]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Property 'in gage or pledge' is the historic form of the secured transaction: a creditor's interest in collateral securing a debt, now governed by UCC Article 9's attachment and perfection rules. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 9 — attachment and perfection of security interests in pledged collateral. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN VADIO, p. 609; scan anchor: djvu line 102554 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the pledge (2 Bl. Comm. 157); Article 9 is the modern codification of pledge and secured transactions — a genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

IN VTNCULIS

[Law: duress — Restatement (Second) of Contracts ss 175-176, contracts induced by improper threat are voidable]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Submission 'in vinculis' — to terms imposed by oppression and necessity — is the civil-law image of duress, which voids or voids consent extracted by improper threat. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: duress — Restatement (Second) of Contracts ss 175-176, contracts induced by improper threat are voidable. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN VTNCULIS, p. 610; scan anchor: djvu line 102588 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry applies the phrase figuratively to coerced submission (1 Story, Eq. Jur. s 302); the duress doctrine is its genuine modern legal expression. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INADEQUATE

[Axiom: equity acts only where the remedy at law is inadequate — the jurisdictional basis of equitable relief]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An 'inadequate remedy at law' is the jurisdictional gate of equity: only where damages or legal relief are unfitted to the end in view will equity entertain the suit. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: equity acts only where the remedy at law is inadequate — the jurisdictional basis of equitable relief. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INADEQUATE, p. 610; scan anchor: djvu line 102607 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the term precisely as equity's gatekeeping standard (citing Cruikshank v. Bidwell, 176 U.S. 73); the axiom restates the operative doctrine without inventing authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INADEQUATE

[Law: gross inadequacy of consideration — equity may relieve only where the price shocks the conscience]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Mere inadequacy of price does not void a sale; only gross inadequacy that shocks the conscience will move equity to set a bargain aside. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: gross inadequacy of consideration — equity may relieve only where the price shocks the conscience. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INADEQUATE, p. 610; scan anchor: djvu line 102607 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines 'inadequate price' with State v. Purcell and Stephens v. Ozbourne; the gross-inadequacy rule is the genuine doctrinal content of that sub-definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INADMISSIBLE

[Law: UCC s 2-202 / Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 213 — parol evidence rule]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's own example — parol evidence to contradict a written contract — is the parol evidence rule, barring extrinsic terms that contradict a complete writing. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC s 2-202 / Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 213 — parol evidence rule. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INADMISSIBLE, p. 610; scan anchor: djvu line 102634 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Black's illustrates inadmissibility with the parol-evidence example verbatim; the rule named is the genuine law-well content of the illustration. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INADVERTENCE

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(1) — relief from judgment for 'mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect']

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect' is the statutory formula for relief from a judgment — the grounds enumerated in Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(1). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(1) — relief from judgment for 'mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect'. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines inadvertence as used 'chiefly in statutory enumerations' of vacatur grounds and quotes the exact four-word formula; Rule 60(b)(1) contains that formula verbatim — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INABDIFICATIO

[Law: doctrine of accession — improvements affixed to another's land belong to the landowner; mistaken improver recovers in restitution]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Building on another's land with one's own materials is accession: the improvement passes with the land, and the mistaken improver's remedy lies in restitution. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: doctrine of accession — improvements affixed to another's land belong to the landowner; mistaken improver recovers in restitution. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INABDIFICATIO, p. 610; scan anchor: djvu line 102655 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the civil-law accession case; the accession/restitution framework is its genuine modern expression — stated as principle, no invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INALIENABLE

[Law: Declaration of Independence — 'endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness']

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Liberty is the entry's own example of an inalienable personal right — the unalienable rights of life and liberty proclaimed as the American founding's first legal axiom. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Declaration of Independence — 'endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness'. INCAPACITY

[Law: contractual capacity — Restatement (Second) of Contracts ss 12-14 (minors and mentally ill persons lack full capacity)]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Legal incapacity — minority, mental illness, and like impediments — defeats contractual capacity, and legal disability tolls limitation periods, as the entry's saving-clause discussion shows. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: contractual capacity — Restatement (Second) of Contracts ss 12-14 (minors and mentally ill persons lack full capacity). When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's operative content is want of legal ability to act (minors, femes covert, lunatics) plus tolling for legal disability; the Restatement capacity sections are the modern doctrinal home of exactly that. INCEST

[Law: Model Penal Code s 230.2 — incest between persons within the prohibited degrees of marriage]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Sexual intercourse within the degrees wherein marriage is prohibited is criminalized by state incest statutes, codified in the Model Penal Code. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Model Penal Code s 230.2 — incest between persons within the prohibited degrees of marriage. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCEST, p. 610; scan anchor: djvu line 102833 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines incest by reference to the prohibited degrees of marriage (citing People v. Stratton and others); MPC s 230.2 codifies exactly that definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INCITE

[Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444 (1969)]

Who. The court deciding Brandenburg v. Ohio (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. To incite — to instigate another to crime or to arouse a riot — is punishable as incitement only where the advocacy is directed to producing imminent lawless action. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444 (1969). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCITE, p. 612; scan anchor: djvu line 102934 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1969 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's examples are inciting a riot and instigating crime; Brandenburg is the governing case drawing the constitutional line for incitement — the genuine law-well anchor for the term's criminal sense. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INCIVTLE

[Maxim: Incivile est, nisi tota lege perspecta, una aliqua particula ejus proposita, judicare vel respondere (Dig. 1, 3, 24)]

Who. The Digest of Justinian (as cited: Maxim: Incivile est, nisi tota lege perspecta, una aliqua particula ejus proposita, judicare vel respondere (Dig. 1, 3, 24)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The maxim quoted whole — that it is improper to judge or advise upon one clause of a law without viewing the whole — is the whole-statute canon of construction. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Incivile est, nisi tota lege perspecta, una aliqua particula ejus proposita, judicare vel respondere (Dig. 1, 3, 24). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCIVTLE, p. 612; scan anchor: djvu line 102941 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry IS this maxim with its Digest citation; annotating it verbatim is genuine — the canon that a statute is read as a whole. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INCLOSE

[Law: jury sequestration — jurors secluded from outside contact and influence during trial and deliberations]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'To inclose a jury' — shutting jurors up by themselves — is jury sequestration, the practice of shielding jurors from outside influence during trial and deliberation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: jury sequestration — jurors secluded from outside contact and influence during trial and deliberations. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCLOSE, p. 612; scan anchor: djvu line 102965 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's operative legal content (Bell; Scotch practice) is sequestration by another name; naming the doctrine is illumination, not invention — stated as principle without a fabricated citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

IN CLOSURE

[Maxim: Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius (11 Coke, 58b)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The maxim quoted whole — 'Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius,' the inclusion of one is the exclusion of another — is the expressio unius canon of interpretation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius (11 Coke, 58b). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN CLOSURE, p. 612; scan anchor: djvu line 102979 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted whole in the body with its Coke citation; the maxim is the classic statement of the expressio unius canon — a genuine, verbatim annotation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INCOLA

[Law: domicile of choice — Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws s 18, residence plus intent to remain indefinitely]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Residence creates domicile — the maxim 'Incolas domicilium facit' — where domicile of choice requires residence coupled with intent to remain. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: domicile of choice — Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws s 18, residence plus intent to remain indefinitely. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCOLA, p. 612; scan anchor: djvu line 103009 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's maxim and its case (Arnold v. United Ins. Co.) state the domicile-by-residence rule; Restatement (Second) s 18 is its modern conflicts formulation — a genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INCOME

[Law: 26 U.S.C. s 61 — gross income defined; U.S. Const. amend. XVI — income-tax authority]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Income — the return from business, labor, or capital — is the tax base defined by the Code as gross income 'from whatever source derived,' under the Sixteenth Amendment's authority. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 26 U.S.C. s 61 — gross income defined; U.S. Const. amend. XVI — income-tax authority. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCOME, p. 612; scan anchor: djvu line 103019 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines income and the income tax (2 Steph. Comm. 573); s 61 is the Code's operative definition of the same tax base — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INCOMPATIBLE

[Law: incompatible offices doctrine — one person may not hold two offices, or stand in two relations, whose duties conflict]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Offices, relations, or rights that cannot legally coexist in one person — the entry's examples are lessor/lessee and trustee/beneficiary of the same property — are governed by the incompatible-offices doctrine. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: incompatible offices doctrine — one person may not hold two offices, or stand in two relations, whose duties conflict. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCOMPATIBLE, p. 613; scan anchor: djvu line 103087 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's operative content is legal incompatibility of offices and fiduciary relations (citing People v. Green and others); the doctrine named is its genuine expression — stated as principle, no invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INCONCLUSIVE

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 301 — presumptions in civil cases are rebuttable]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. That which may be rebutted — applied to evidence and presumptions — is the rebuttable presumption, which shifts only the burden of production. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Evid. 301 — presumptions in civil cases are rebuttable. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCONCLUSIVE, p. 613; scan anchor: djvu line 103132 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines inconclusive as rebuttable, applied to presumptions; Rule 301 governs rebuttable presumptions — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INCONSISTENT

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(d)(3) — a party may state inconsistent claims or defenses]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Inconsistent defenses — mutually repugnant pleas where both cannot stand — are permitted in modern pleading, which allows alternative and inconsistent claims and defenses. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(d)(3) — a party may state inconsistent claims or defenses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCONSISTENT, p. 613; scan anchor: djvu line 103137 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's exemplar is 'inconsistent defenses'; Rule 8(d)(3) is the modern pleading rule governing exactly them — a genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IN CONVENIENCE

[Law: canon against absurd or seriously inconvenient construction — statutes read to avoid sacrifice of public interests or serious hardship (Black, Interp. Laws)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The canon that statutes be construed to avoid 'inconvenience' — sacrifice of important public interests, or serious hardship to individuals — is the absurdity/inconvenience canon of statutory interpretation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: canon against absurd or seriously inconvenient construction — statutes read to avoid sacrifice of public interests or serious hardship (Black, Interp. Laws). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IN CONVENIENCE, p. 613; scan anchor: djvu line 103157 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the canon with its authority (Black, Interp. Laws, 102; Betts v. U.S.); the annotation names the canon the entry describes — genuine, no invented authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INCORPORAMUS

[Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. 518 (1819)]

Who. The court deciding Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Words of incorporation — 'we incorporate' — create the corporation as a legal body with perpetual succession, the corporate charter standing as a contract protected against impairment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1819 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry treats incorporation as the creation of a body with perpetual existence (1 Bl. Comm. 473); Dartmouth College is the landmark case on the corporate charter's legal nature — the genuine anchor for the corporation-creation sense. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INCORPOREAL

[Law: 17 U.S.C. s 102 (copyright subject matter); 35 U.S.C. s 101 (patentable subject matter)]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Incorporeal chattels — patent-rights and copyrights, the entry's own examples — are property in rights only, the subject of the federal intellectual-property statutes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 17 U.S.C. s 102 (copyright subject matter); 35 U.S.C. s 101 (patentable subject matter). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCORPOREAL, p. 613; scan anchor: djvu line 103213 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry names patent-rights and copyrights as incorporeal chattels (2 Steph. Comm. 72); the two Code sections are the statutes creating exactly those incorporeal rights. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INCRIMINATE

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — 'No person... shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The rule that a witness is not bound to give testimony tending to incriminate him is the privilege against self-incrimination: no person shall be compelled to be a witness against himself. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — 'No person... shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCRIMINATE, p. 614; scan anchor: djvu line 103271 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the privilege's operative rule verbatim; the Fifth Amendment's Self-Incrimination Clause is its constitutional source, quoted exactly. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INCUMBRANCE

[Law: covenant against encumbrances — grantor warrants the land free of undisclosed liens, charges, and third-person interests]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Mortgages, liens, easements, and other charges diminishing the estate's value are the subject of the covenant against incumbrances — the grantor's warranty that no undisclosed third-person interests burden the land. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: covenant against encumbrances — grantor warrants the land free of undisclosed liens, charges, and third-person interests. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INCUMBRANCE, p. 614; scan anchor: djvu line 103318 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the incumbrance and cross-references 'Covenant'; the covenant against encumbrances is the title-covenant counterpart of exactly this definition — genuine, stated as doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDE

[Maxim: Inde datae leges ne fortior omnia posset (Dav. Ir. K. B. 30)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The maxim quoted whole — 'Inde datae leges ne fortior omnia posset,' laws are made to prevent the stronger from having the power to do everything — states the protective purpose of law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Inde datae leges ne fortior omnia posset (Dav. Ir. K. B. 30). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDE, p. 614; scan anchor: djvu line 103380 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted whole in the body; the maxim genuinely states a jurisprudential axiom about law's purpose — verbatim annotation, no stretch. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDEBITATUS

[Law: indebitatus assumpsit — common count for a debt; ancestor of quasi-contract and restitution]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Indebitatus assumpsit — 'being indebted, he promised' — is the common count for debt, the ancestor of modern quasi-contract and restitution for money owed. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: indebitatus assumpsit — common count for a debt; ancestor of quasi-contract and restitution. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDEBITATUS, p. 614; scan anchor: djvu line 103388 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the form of action (debt alleged, promise to pay averred); its genuine modern expression is quasi-contract/restitution — stated as lineage, no invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDEBITI SOLUTIO

[Law: Restatement (Third) of Restitution and Unjust Enrichment s 6 — recovery of payment made by mistake (condictio indebiti)]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Payment of what is not due, made through ignorance or mistake, is recoverable by condictio indebiti — the civil-law root of restitution for mistaken payment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Restatement (Third) of Restitution and Unjust Enrichment s 6 — recovery of payment made by mistake (condictio indebiti). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDEBITI SOLUTIO, p. 615; scan anchor: djvu line 103415 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the payment-not-due and its recovery action (Dig. 12, 6; Bell); Restatement (Third) s 6 is the modern American statement of exactly that recovery. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDEBTEDNESS

[Law: 11 U.S.C. s 101 — definitions distinguishing 'debt,' 'claim,' and contingent liabilities]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Indebtedness implies absolute liability — a contingent surety obligation before default is not indebtedness — the distinction the Code draws between matured debts and contingent claims. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. s 101 — definitions distinguishing 'debt,' 'claim,' and contingent liabilities. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDEBTEDNESS, p. 615; scan anchor: djvu line 103425 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's operative point is the absolute-versus-contingent liability line (St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Goodfellow); Title 11's definitions section is where that line is drawn in modern law — a genuine, modestly stated link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDEGENCT

[Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973)]

Who. The court deciding Miller v. California (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Indecent publications — obscene, lewd, tending to corrupt morals — are the obscenity category whose constitutional boundary is the Miller test. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDEGENCT, p. 615; scan anchor: djvu line 103440 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1973 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines indecent publications as obscene/lewd (citing Dunlop v. U.S., 163 U.S. 486); Miller is the governing obscenity test — the genuine law-well anchor for the entry's publication sense. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDEFINITE PAYMENT

[Law: rule in Clayton's Case (Devaynes v. Noble) — appropriation of payments; debtor's direction first, then creditor's, then earliest debts]

Who. The court deciding Law: rule in Clayton's Case (Devaynes v. Noble) — appropriation of payments; debtor's direction first (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Payment without specification — a debtor owing several debts pays without directing application — is governed by the appropriation-of-payments rules: the debtor's direction controls, then the creditor's, then the law's (earliest debts first). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: rule in Clayton's Case (Devaynes v. Noble) — appropriation of payments; debtor's direction first, then creditor's, then earliest debts. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDEFINITE PAYMENT, p. 615; scan anchor: djvu line 103522 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. INDEMNITY

[Law: Cal. Civ. Code s 2772 — indemnity defined, as cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An indemnity is a collateral contract to save another harmless against anticipated loss — insurance being, as the entry says, a contract of indemnity — codified in California as Civil Code s 2772. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Cal. Civ. Code s 2772 — indemnity defined, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDEMNITY, p. 616; scan anchor: djvu line 103580 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's definition cites Cal. Civ. Code s 2772 verbatim and states the insurance-as-indemnity principle; the annotation preserves the entry's own authority and names the doctrine — genuine, no invention. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDENIZATION

[Law: 8 U.S.C. ss 1421-1458 — naturalization; U.S. Const. amend. XIV, s 1 — citizenship]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Indenization — the making of a denizen, or naturalizing — is the historic form of conferring subjectship, now governed by the federal naturalization statutes under the Fourteenth Amendment's citizenship clause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 8 U.S.C. ss 1421-1458 — naturalization; U.S. Const. amend. XIV, s 1 — citizenship. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDENIZATION, p. 616; scan anchor: djvu line 103641 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1421 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines naturalization; the cited Code sections are the modern naturalization framework — a genuine lineage link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDEPENDENCE

[Law: U.N. Charter art. 2(1) — sovereign equality of states]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Political independence — a state entirely autonomous, subject to no exterior power — is sovereignty, whose modern expression is the sovereign equality of states. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.N. Charter art. 2(1) — sovereign equality of states. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDEPENDENCE, p. 616; scan anchor: djvu line 103699 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines political independence as autonomy from exterior control; sovereign equality is the international-law expression of exactly that status — a genuine, modestly stated link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INDEPENDENT

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Agency s 220 — servant versus independent contractor test]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The independent contractor — engaged for results, not subject to the employer's control of methods — is distinguished from the servant/employee for purposes of vicarious liability. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Restatement (Second) of Agency s 220 — servant versus independent contractor test. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDEPENDENT, p. 616; scan anchor: djvu line 103707 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the independent contractor in agency/master-servant terms (citing People v. Orange County Road Const. Co. and others); Restatement (Second) s 220 is the classic formulation of that distinction. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INDEX

[Maxim: Index animi sermo (Broom, Max. 622)]

Who. Broom, Legal Maxims (as cited: Maxim: Index animi sermo (Broom, Max. 622)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The maxim bundled in the entry — 'Index animi sermo,' language is the exponent of the intention — is the intent-of-the-instrument canon: a statute's or instrument's language is the best guide to its intention. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Index animi sermo (Broom, Max. 622). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDEX, p. 617; scan anchor: djvu line 103758 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted whole in the body; the maxim genuinely states the plain-language/intent canon of construction — verbatim annotation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDIANS

[Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 30 U.S. 1 (1831)]

Who. The court deciding Cherokee Nation v. Georgia (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. An Indian tribe is a distinct aboriginal community — in Chief Justice Marshall's phrase, a 'domestic dependent nation' — neither a foreign state nor a mere voluntary association. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 30 U.S. 1 (1831). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDIANS, p. 617; scan anchor: djvu line 103769 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1831 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines 'Indian tribe' citing Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 17, verbatim; the case is the foundational statement of tribal status — the genuine anchor. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

INDIANS

[Law: 18 U.S.C. s 1151 — 'Indian country' defined]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Indian country' is a congressional term of art — all territory so designated in federal legislation — now defined by statute. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. s 1151 — 'Indian country' defined. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDIANS, p. 617; scan anchor: djvu line 103769 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines Indian country as whatever Congress has so designated (citing Waters v. Campbell); 18 U.S.C. s 1151 is the statute that now so designates — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDICIA

[Law: partnership by estoppel — one held out as a partner is liable as such to third persons relying on the representation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Indicia of partnership' — circumstances inducing the belief that one is really a partner — give rise to partnership by estoppel, binding the apparent partner to third persons. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: partnership by estoppel — one held out as a partner is liable as such to third persons relying on the representation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDICIA, p. 617; scan anchor: djvu line 103817 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's own example is indicia of partnership; partnership by estoppel is the doctrine that example illustrates — stated as principle, no invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDICTIO

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, s 8, cl. 11 — Congress's power to declare war]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Indictio belli — a declaration or indiction of war — is in American law the congressional war power. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, s 8, cl. 11 — Congress's power to declare war. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDICTIO, p. 617; scan anchor: djvu line 103843 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's content is the formal declaration of war; the cited clause vests exactly that power — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDICTMENT

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — 'No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Prosecution by indictment — accusation found and presented by a grand jury — is constitutionally required for federal capital or otherwise infamous crimes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — 'No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDICTMENT, p. 617; scan anchor: djvu line 103856 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the indictment and distinguishes presentment and information (citing Ex parte Bain, 121 U.S. 1); the Grand Jury Clause is the constitutional source of the requirement, quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INDIFFERENT

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — right to an impartial jury]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Indifferent' — impartial, unbiased, disinterested — is the historic term for a qualified juror, the common-law root of the impartial-jury guarantee. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — right to an impartial jury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDIFFERENT, p. 618; scan anchor: djvu line 103931 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines indifferent as impartial in the juror context (People v. Vermilyea); the Sixth Amendment secures exactly that impartiality — a genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDIGENA

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIV, s 1 — citizenship for persons born within the jurisdiction (jus soli)]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The indigena — a subject born within the realm (Co. Litt. 8a) — is the common-law root of birthright citizenship by place of birth. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIV, s 1 — citizenship for persons born within the jurisdiction (jus soli). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDIGENA, p. 618; scan anchor: djvu line 103935 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the jus soli rule from Coke; the Fourteenth Amendment's citizenship clause is its American constitutional form — a genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDIGENT

[Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 436 (1963)]

Who. The court deciding Gideon v. Wainwright (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The indigent person — needy and poor, without sufficient property for a living — is the beneficiary of the appointed-counsel right in criminal cases. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 436 (1963). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDIGENT, p. 618; scan anchor: djvu line 103940 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1963 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines indigence as the legal status (citing poor-law cases); Gideon is the landmark case giving that status its principal constitutional consequence — genuinely illuminating, not decorative. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDISPENSABLE

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 19 — required (formerly indispensable) parties; Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 139, as cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 19 — required (formerly indispensable) parties; Shields v. Barrow (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Indispensable parties — those without whom no final decree consistent with equity can be made — are the ancestors of the modern required-party joinder rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 19 — required (formerly indispensable) parties; Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 139, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDISPENSABLE, p. 618; scan anchor: djvu line 103992 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the equity term citing Shields v. Barrow verbatim; Rule 19 is its modern procedural form — a genuine lineage, with the entry's own authority preserved. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INDIVIDUAL

[Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific R.R., 118 U.S. 394 (1886)]

Who. The court deciding Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific R.R. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Whether 'individual' includes artificial persons — the entry's own question, with authority both ways — was settled for corporations by treating them as persons under the law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific R.R., 118 U.S. 394 (1886). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDIVIDUAL, p. 618; scan anchor: djvu line 104015 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1886 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry debates the restrictive sense (natural persons only) versus the inclusive sense (artificial persons), citing Bank of U.S. v. State and others; Santa Clara is the landmark corporate-personhood case — the genuine anchor for the debate. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDIVISUM

[Law: tenancy in common — undivided co-ownership interests]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. That which two or more hold in common without partition — undivided — is the tenancy in common, co-ownership of undivided interests. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: tenancy in common — undivided co-ownership interests. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDIVISUM, p. 619; scan anchor: djvu line 104074 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is purely the property concept of undivided co-ownership; the live estate of tenancy in common is its direct continuation — consistent with the batch-1 treatment of IN SEPARALI. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDORSE

[Law: UCC s 3-204 — indorsement defined]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. To indorse — writing one's name on the back of a bill or note to transfer it — is defined by the Code as the signature (other than as maker, drawer, or acceptor) that negotiates the instrument. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC s 3-204 — indorsement defined. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDORSE, p. 619; scan anchor: djvu line 104081 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines indorsement of negotiable instruments (citing Hartwell v. Hemmenway); UCC s 3-204 is the Code's definition of the same act — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INDORSEE

[Law: UCC s 3-302 — holder in due course]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An indorsee in due course — taking in good faith, for value, before dishonor, without notice — is the holder in due course, who takes the instrument free of most defenses. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC s 3-302 — holder in due course. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDORSEE, p. 619; scan anchor: djvu line 104091 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines 'indorsee in due course' by the classic elements (Cal. Civ. Code s 3123); UCC s 3-302 codifies the holder-in-due-course status with those elements — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDORSEMENT

[Law: UCC ss 3-204, 3-205 — indorsement; special and blank indorsements]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Indorsement — blank, special, qualified, restrictive, accommodation — is codified with its kinds, including the blank indorsement that makes the instrument payable to bearer. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC ss 3-204, 3-205 — indorsement; special and blank indorsements. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDORSEMENT, p. 619; scan anchor: djvu line 104107 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry catalogs the kinds of indorsement (citing Cal. Civ. Code s 3108); the cited UCC sections codify indorsement and its blank/special kinds — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INDUCEMENT

[Law: consideration — Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 71]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The inducement in contracts — the benefit moving the promisor — is consideration: a performance or return promise bargained for in exchange. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: consideration — Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 71. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDUCEMENT, p. 620; scan anchor: djvu line 104250 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's contract sense defines inducement as the promisor's benefit; Restatement (Second) s 71 is the modern definition of consideration — a direct, genuine link. The pleading and criminal-evidence senses are not annotated. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INDU8TRIAM, PER

[Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (1805)]

Who. The court deciding Pierson v. Post (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Qualified property in wild animals acquired per industriam — by reclaiming and taming, or by confining within one's immediate power — is the rule of capture by occupancy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (1805). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INDU8TRIAM, PER, p. 620; scan anchor: djvu line 104350 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1805 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry states the per industriam rule for ferae naturae (2 Steph. Comm. 5); Pierson v. Post is the classic American statement of capture-by-occupancy — the genuine anchor. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INEBRIATE

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 16 — contracts of intoxicated persons voidable]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The inebriate — incompetent to transact ordinary business by habitual intoxication — is the intoxicated person whose contracts are voidable for want of capacity. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 16 — contracts of intoxicated persons voidable. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INEBRIATE, p. 620; scan anchor: djvu line 104359 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's operative content is business incompetency from intoxication (Code N.C. 1883, s 1671); the Restatement section states the contractual consequence — a genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INELIGIBILITY

[Law: U.S. Const. art. II, s 1, cl. 5 — natural-born citizen requirement for the presidency]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's own example — that a naturalized citizen is ineligible for the presidency — is the natural-born-citizen qualification. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. II, s 1, cl. 5 — natural-born citizen requirement for the presidency. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INELIGIBILITY, p. 620; scan anchor: djvu line 104378 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry illustrates ineligibility with the presidential natural-born rule (Carroll v. Green); the cited constitutional clause is that rule — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INEVITABLE

[Law: UCC s 2-615 — excuse by failure of presupposed conditions; Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 265]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Inevitable accident — irresistible physical cause transcending human foresight — excuses performance of contract obligations, the modern doctrine of impossibility and commercial impracticability. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC s 2-615 — excuse by failure of presupposed conditions; Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 265. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INEVITABLE, p. 621; scan anchor: djvu line 104414 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the inevitable as suspending legal relations 'so far as to excuse from the performance of contract obligations' (citing Brousseau v. The Hudson and others); UCC s 2-615 and Restatement s 265 are the modern excuse doctrines — genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Conviction of an infamous crime — the entry's definition, with its common-law witness-disability consequence — is the category Ex parte Wilson construed for federal prosecution purposes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Ex parte Wilson, 114 U.S. 417, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 29 L. Ed. 89 — as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFAMY, p. 621; scan anchor: djvu line 104485 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites Ex parte Wilson verbatim for the infamy definition; the annotation preserves the entry's own authority — genuine, no invention. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INFANCY

[Law: infancy doctrine — contracts of minors voidable; Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 14]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Infancy — minority — carries contractual disabilities: the contracts of minors are voidable at the minor's option, the infancy doctrine. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: infancy doctrine — contracts of minors voidable; Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 14. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFANCY, p. 621; scan anchor: djvu line 104498 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines infancy by its contractual disabilities (citing Keating v. Railroad Co.); the infancy doctrine is the genuine doctrinal content — stated with its Restatement home. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INFANS

[Law: common-law infancy defense — under seven, irrebuttable presumption of incapacity for crime]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The infans — a child under seven — 'does not differ much from a lunatic' in capacity: at common law a child under seven is irrebuttably incapable of criminal intent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law infancy defense — under seven, irrebuttable presumption of incapacity for crime. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFANS, p. 621; scan anchor: djvu line 104518 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry quotes the maxim (Bracton; Dig. 50, 17, 5, 40; 1 Story, Eq. Jur.) stating the incapacity; the common-law infancy defense is its genuine expression — stated as doctrine, no invented case. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INFERENCE

[Law: Cal. Code Civ. Proc. s 1958 — inference defined, as cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An inference — the deduction the jury's reason makes from proved facts, without express direction of law — is the evidentiary inference the Code defines. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Cal. Code Civ. Proc. s 1958 — inference defined, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFERENCE, p. 622; scan anchor: djvu line 104641 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1958 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines inference citing Cal. Code Civ. Proc. s 1958 verbatim; the annotation preserves the entry's own authority — genuine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INFERIOR COURT

[Law: courts of limited jurisdiction — jurisdiction must appear of record; Ex parte Cuddy, 131 U.S. 280, 9 Sup. Ct. 703, 33 L. Ed. 154, as cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Inferior courts — of special, limited, or statutory jurisdiction — must show jurisdiction affirmatively on the record for presumptive validity of their judgments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: courts of limited jurisdiction — jurisdiction must appear of record; Ex parte Cuddy, 131 U.S. 280, 9 Sup. Ct. 703, 33 L. Ed. 154, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFERIOR COURT, p. 622; scan anchor: djvu line 104675 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the limited-jurisdiction rule citing Ex parte Cuddy verbatim; the annotation preserves that authority and names the doctrine — genuine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INFIDEL

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 601 — every person competent as a witness; belief no bar]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The infidel — one professing no religion to bind his conscience — was at common law incompetent as a witness; religious belief is no longer a bar to competency. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Evid. 601 — every person competent as a witness; belief no bar. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFIDEL, p. 622; scan anchor: djvu line 104715 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the old competency rule (1 Greenl. Ev. s 368; Hale v. Everett); Rule 601 is its modern repudiation — a genuine lineage link, stated as such. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INFIHT

[Maxim: Infinitum in jure reprobatur (12 Coke, 24)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The maxim bundled in the body — 'Infinitum in jure reprobatur,' that which is endless is reprobated in law, applied to litigation — is the finality axiom: litigation must end. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Infinitum in jure reprobatur (12 Coke, 24). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFIHT, p. 623; scan anchor: djvu line 104751 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted whole in the body with its Coke citation; the maxim genuinely states the anti-endless-litigation axiom (cf. interest reipublicae ut sit finis litium) — verbatim annotation of content actually present. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INFORMAL

[Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516 (1884)]

Who. The court deciding Hurtado v. California (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The INFORMATION bundled in this body — a criminal accusation preferred by a prosecuting officer without a grand jury — is the information, which states may use without violating due process. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516 (1884). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFORMAL, p. 623; scan anchor: djvu line 104788 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1884 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the criminal information (4 Bl. Comm. 308; U.S. v. Borger); Hurtado is the landmark holding states may prosecute by information — the genuine anchor. The footnote annotates the INFORMATION content in the body, not the INFORMAL headword. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INFORMATTJS NON SUM

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 55 — default judgment]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'I am not informed' — no defense advised — letting judgment by default pass, is the default-judgment procedure for failure to plead or defend. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's operative content is judgment by default on failure to defend; Rule 55 is the modern default-judgment rule — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INFORMER

[Law: qui tam — 31 U.S.C. s 3730(b), False Claims Act relator actions]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The common informer — who brings penal actions for a share of the fine — is the ancestor of the qui tam relator, authorized to sue for penalties in the government's name. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: qui tam — 31 U.S.C. s 3730(b), False Claims Act relator actions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFORMER, p. 623; scan anchor: djvu line 104846 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the common informer bringing penalty actions (citing U.S. v. Stocking); qui tam under the False Claims Act is the living form of that office — a genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INFORTUNIUM, HOMICIDE PER

[Law: homicide by misadventure — excusable homicide; killing without intent in a lawful act]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Killing in the doing of a lawful act, without intention of hurt, is homicide by misadventure — excusable homicide, carrying no criminal liability. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: homicide by misadventure — excusable homicide; killing without intent in a lawful act. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFORTUNIUM, HOMICIDE PER, p. 623; scan anchor: djvu line 104879 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the category; homicide by misadventure is its doctrinal name — stated as principle, no invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INFRA CORPUS COMITATUS

[Law: 28 U.S.C. s 1333 — federal admiralty and maritime jurisdiction]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Waters within the body of a county — exempt from admiralty jurisdiction — mark the historic boundary of the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 28 U.S.C. s 1333 — federal admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFRA CORPUS COMITATUS, p. 624; scan anchor: djvu line 104930 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's operative content is the admiralty-jurisdiction boundary for inland waters; s 1333 is the statute granting that jurisdiction — a genuine link to the boundary the entry draws. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INFRA DIGNITATEM CURLS

[Maxim: De minimis non curat lex — the law does not concern itself with trifles]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A bill in equity on a matter too trifling for the court's attention — demurrable as beneath the dignity of the court — is the de minimis rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: De minimis non curat lex — the law does not concern itself with trifles. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFRA DIGNITATEM CURLS, p. 624; scan anchor: djvu line 104936 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's content is exactly the de minimis principle (trifling matters demurrable); the maxim names it — a genuine, direct link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INFRA HOSPITIUM

[Law: innkeeper's liability — strict liability for goods of guests received infra hospitium]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. When the traveler's baggage comes within the inn — into the innkeeper's care and custody — the innkeeper's strict liability for guests' goods attaches. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: innkeeper's liability — strict liability for goods of guests received infra hospitium. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFRA HOSPITIUM, p. 624; scan anchor: djvu line 104948 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the attachment point of innkeeper liability; the common-law innkeeper rule is its genuine doctrinal expression — stated as principle, no invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INFRINGEMENT

[Law: 35 U.S.C. s 271 — patent infringement, including contributory infringement]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Infringement of patent rights — including contributory infringement, the intentional aiding of another's unlawful making or selling — is codified with direct and indirect infringement together. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 35 U.S.C. s 271 — patent infringement, including contributory infringement. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INFRINGEMENT, p. 624; scan anchor: djvu line 105004 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines infringement (especially of patents) and contributory infringement with its cases (Thomson-Houston); s 271 codifies both — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INHERENT POWER

[Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991)]

Who. The court deciding Chambers v. NASCO (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Authority possessed without derivation from another — inherent power — is the courts' inherent power to manage proceedings and sanction abuse, independent of rule or statute. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Chambers v. NASCO, Inc., 501 U.S. 32 (1991). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INHERENT POWER, p. 624; scan anchor: djvu line 105158 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1991 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines inherent power as underived authority; Chambers is the modern landmark on federal courts' inherent power — the genuine anchor for the concept. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INHERITABLE BLOOD

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, s 3, cl. 2 — 'no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Blood 'free from attainder' — capable of transmitting inheritance — is the purity the Constitution protects by forbidding corruption of blood for treason. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, s 3, cl. 2 — 'no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INHERITABLE BLOOD, p. 624; scan anchor: djvu line 105176 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines inheritable blood by freedom from attainder; the Treason Clause's corruption-of-blood prohibition is its constitutional counterpart, quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INHERITANCE

[Law: intestate succession — Uniform Probate Code art. 2, pt. 1, shares of heirs]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An estate descending to the heir — inheritance ab intestato — passes under the intestacy statutes distributing the estate to heirs at law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: intestate succession — Uniform Probate Code art. 2, pt. 1, shares of heirs. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INHERITANCE, p. 624; scan anchor: djvu line 105183 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines inheritance as the estate descending to the heir (2 Bl. Comm. 201); the UPC intestacy provisions are the modern statutory scheme for exactly that descent. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INHIBITION

[Law: writ of prohibition — extraordinary writ restraining an inferior tribunal from exceeding jurisdiction]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The ecclesiastical inhibition — a superior court forbidding an inferior judge to proceed — is closely analogous, as the entry says, to the common-law writ of prohibition. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: writ of prohibition — extraordinary writ restraining an inferior tribunal from exceeding jurisdiction. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INHIBITION, p. 626; scan anchor: djvu line 105242 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself draws the analogy to prohibition; naming the writ is illumination of the entry's own comparison — genuine, stated as doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INIQUITY

[Maxim: Iniquum est alios permittere, alios inhibere mercaturam (3 Inst. 181)]

Who. The Institutes (as cited) (as cited: Maxim: Iniquum est alios permittere, alios inhibere mercaturam (3 Inst. 181)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The bundled maxim — that it is inequitable to permit some to trade and prohibit others — states the anti-discrimination axiom of trade regulation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Iniquum est alios permittere, alios inhibere mercaturam (3 Inst. 181). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INIQUITY, p. 626; scan anchor: djvu line 105302 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted whole in the body; the maxim genuinely states the equal-treatment axiom for trade — verbatim annotation of content actually present. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INIQUITY

[Maxim: Iniquum est ingenuis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem (Co. Litt. 223a)]

Who. Coke on Littleton (as cited: Maxim: Iniquum est ingenuis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem (Co. Litt. 223a)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The bundled maxim — that it is unjust for freemen not to have free disposal of their own property — states the free-alienation axiom behind the law's hostility to restraints on alienation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Iniquum est ingenuis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem (Co. Litt. 223a). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INIQUITY, p. 626; scan anchor: djvu line 105302 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

INITIAL

[Law: Carmack Amendment, 49 U.S.C. s 14706 — initial carrier liability]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The initial carrier — who first receives the goods and begins transportation — bears the Carmack liability for loss or damage to interstate shipments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Carmack Amendment, 49 U.S.C. s 14706 — initial carrier liability. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INITIAL, p. 626; scan anchor: djvu line 105326 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the initial carrier in bailment (citing Beard v. Railway Co.); the Carmack Amendment fixes the initial carrier's liability — a genuine, direct link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INJUNCTION

[eBay Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388 (2006)]

Who. The court deciding eBay Inc. v. MercExchange (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The prohibitive writ of equity — granted where the act is unjust and not adequately redressable at law — issues under the four-factor equitable test for injunctive relief. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 2006 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the injunction by its equitable predicates (irreparable injury, inadequate legal remedy; U.S. v. Haggerty); eBay states the modern four-factor test for that relief — the genuine anchor. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INJURIOUS WORDS

[New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964)]

Who. The court deciding New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Injurious words — slander or libelous words — are defamation, whose constitutional boundary for public officials and public figures is actual malice. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1964 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the Louisiana category as slander/libel (La. Civ. Code art. 3501); Sullivan is the landmark defamation case — the genuine law-well anchor for the category. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The court deciding Law: domestic vs. foreign bills of exchange — Buckner v. Finley (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The inland (domestic) bill of exchange — drawer and drawee in the same country — is distinguished from the foreign bill in the law of negotiable paper. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: domestic vs. foreign bills of exchange — Buckner v. Finley, 2 Pet. 589, 7 L. Ed. 528, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INLAND, p. 628; scan anchor: djvu line 105639 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the inland bill citing Buckner v. Finley verbatim; the annotation preserves the entry's own authority — genuine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INN

[Law: 42 U.S.C. s 2000a — inns and hotels as places of public accommodation]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The innkeeper's common-law duty — obliged to entertain all travelers of good conduct with means of payment — survives as the public-accommodation duty of inns and hotels. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 42 U.S.C. s 2000a — inns and hotels as places of public accommodation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INN, p. 628; scan anchor: djvu line 105708 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the innkeeper's public duty (Pinkerton v. Woodward; Code Ga. 1882, s 2114); Title II covers inns as public accommodations — the genuine modern form of that public duty. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INNOCENT

[Law: innocent-agent doctrine — liability as principal for one who causes an innocent person to commit the offense]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The innocent agent — who does the unlawful act at another's solicitation, ignorant of its criminal character — incurs no guilt, but the guilty principal is liable through him. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: innocent-agent doctrine — liability as principal for one who causes an innocent person to commit the offense. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INNOCENT, p. 629; scan anchor: djvu line 105829 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the innocent agent with its cases (Smith v. State; State v. Carr); the doctrine named is its genuine expression — stated as principle, no invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INNOCENT

[Law: bona fide purchaser for value without notice — protected against prior equities]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The innocent purchaser — who buys for value without knowledge or means of knowledge of title defects — is the bona fide purchaser protected against prior unrecorded claims. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: bona fide purchaser for value without notice — protected against prior equities. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INNOCENT, p. 629; scan anchor: djvu line 105829 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the innocent purchaser (Hanchett v. Kimbark; Gerson v. Pool); the BFP doctrine is its genuine expression — stated as principle. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INNOVATION

[Law: novation — Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 280, substituted contract discharging the original duty]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Innovation — the exchange of one obligation for another, the second alone subsisting — is novation, discharging the original duty by substituted contract. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: novation — Restatement (Second) of Contracts s 280, substituted contract discharging the original duty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INNOVATION, p. 629; scan anchor: djvu line 105891 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry equates innovation with novation (Bell); the Restatement section states the novation rule — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INNUENDO

[Law: innuendo in defamation pleading — explanatory only; cannot enlarge the defamatory meaning (1 Chit. Pl. 422)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The innuendo — explaining the meaning of alleged libelous words — is only explanatory: it may apply what is already expressed but cannot add to, enlarge, or change the sense. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: innuendo in defamation pleading — explanatory only; cannot enlarge the defamatory meaning (1 Chit. Pl. 422). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INNUENDO, p. 630; scan anchor: djvu line 105958 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the innuendo rule with its authorities (Naulty v. Bulletin Co.); the annotation names the rule the entry describes — genuine, no invented authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INOFFICIOUS TESTAMENT

[Law: elective share — Uniform Probate Code s 2-201; forced heirship, La. Civ. Code]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The inofficiosa testamentum — a will depriving heirs of the portion the law entitles them to — is the civil-law root of forced heirship and the elective share. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: elective share — Uniform Probate Code s 2-201; forced heirship, La. Civ. Code. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INOFFICIOUS TESTAMENT, p. 630; scan anchor: djvu line 106007 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the inofficiosa will by the indefeasible heir's portion (Mackeld.; Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 3556); the elective share and Louisiana forced heirship are its modern forms — a genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INORDINATUS

[Law: inquest — grand jury as 'grand inquest'; coroner's inquest into death by violence or in prison]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The INQUEST bundled in this body — a body of men appointed by law to inquire, including the grand jury as 'grand inquest' and the coroner's inquest into sudden death — is the inquisitorial inquiry. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: inquest — grand jury as 'grand inquest'; coroner's inquest into death by violence or in prison. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INORDINATUS, p. 630; scan anchor: djvu line 106032 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The body is substantively the INQUEST definition; the footnote annotates that bundled content explicitly, naming its two principal forms — genuine, stated as doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INQUIRY

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 55(b)(2) — hearing to determine damages after default]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The writ of inquiry — commanding the sheriff by twelve men to inquire what damages the plaintiff sustained after interlocutory judgment by default — is the damages inquest on default. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 55(b)(2) — hearing to determine damages after default. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INQUIRY, p. 631; scan anchor: djvu line 106132 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the writ's function (Wharton); Rule 55(b)(2)'s damages hearing is its modern procedural form — a genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INSANITY

[M'Naghten's Case, 8 Eng. Rep. 718 (1843)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The legal test of insanity — want of reason preventing comprehension of the act's nature, or distinguishing right from wrong — is the M'Naghten rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: M'Naghten's Case, 8 Eng. Rep. 718 (1843). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INSANITY, p. 631; scan anchor: djvu line 106172 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1843 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's legal definition IS the M'Naghten right-wrong test (citing Crosswell v. People and others); the case is its source — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INSCRIPTION

[Law: recording statutes — inscription (registration) of mortgages and liens in the public records]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Inscription — entry of a mortgage, lien, or document at large in a book of public records — is recording, the registry system for land titles and liens. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: recording statutes — inscription (registration) of mortgages and liens in the public records. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INSCRIPTION, p. 637; scan anchor: djvu line 107205 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's modern-civil-law sense equates inscription with 'recording' or 'registration'; the recording system is its genuine expression — stated as doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INSIMUL

[Law: account stated — parties' agreement on a balance due, actionable in assumpsit; Fraley v. Bispham, 10 Pa. 325, 51 Am. Dec. 486, as cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: account stated — parties' agreement on a balance due, actionable in assumpsit; Fraley v. Bispham (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The insimul computassent count — 'they accounted together' — is the action on an account stated: parties settling accounts and the defendant engaging to pay the balance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: account stated — parties' agreement on a balance due, actionable in assumpsit; Fraley v. Bispham, 10 Pa. 325, 51 Am. Dec. 486, as cited in the entry. INSOLVENCY

[Law: 11 U.S.C. s 101(32) — 'insolvent' defined; Title 11 bankruptcy relief]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Insolvency — inability to pay debts, by the balance-sheet test or the equity test of debts as they fall due — is the condition bankruptcy law defines and relieves. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. s 101(32) — 'insolvent' defined; Title 11 bankruptcy relief. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INSOLVENCY, p. 638; scan anchor: djvu line 107310 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states both insolvency tests (citing Toof v. Martin; Dewey v. St. Albans Trust Co.) and distinguishes bankruptcy; the Code's definition section is the genuine modern anchor. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INSPECTION

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, s 10, cl. 2 — state inspection laws excepted from the imposts/duties prohibition]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. State inspection laws — for food, merchandise, and fitness for commerce — are the constitutionally excepted category the entry cites: absolutely necessary inspection charges survive the import-export prohibition. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, s 10, cl. 2 — state inspection laws excepted from the imposts/duties prohibition. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INSPECTION, p. 638; scan anchor: djvu line 107376 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines inspection laws citing Art. I, s 10, cl. 2 verbatim (with Gibbons v. Ogden; Turner v. Maryland); the annotation preserves the entry's own constitutional anchor — genuine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INSTIGATION

[Law: Model Penal Code s 5.02 — criminal solicitation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Instigation — inciting another to commit a crime — is criminal solicitation, punishable as an inchoate offense. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Model Penal Code s 5.02 — criminal solicitation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INSTIGATION, p. 639; scan anchor: djvu line 107557 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines instigation as inciting another to crime (State v. Fraker); MPC s 5.02 codifies solicitation — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INSURABLE INTEREST

[Law: insurable interest required — wager policies void; Insurance Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U.S. 460, 24 L. Ed. 251, as cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: insurable interest required — wager policies void; Insurance Co. v. Schaefer (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Without a real and substantial interest the contract would be a mere wager policy: insurable interest — in property, or a reasonable expectation of benefit from another's life — is what sustains the insurance contract. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: insurable interest required — wager policies void; Insurance Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U.S. 460, 24 L. Ed. 251, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INSURABLE INTEREST, p. 641; scan anchor: djvu line 107878 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the wager-policy rule and cites Schaefer verbatim (with Warnock v. Davis); the annotation preserves the entry's own authority — genuine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INSURANCE

[Law: Cal. Civ. Code s 2527 — insurance defined as indemnity contract, as cited in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Insurance is a contract of indemnity — one undertaking to indemnify another against loss from an unknown or contingent event — as codified in California. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Cal. Civ. Code s 2527 — insurance defined as indemnity contract, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INSURANCE, p. 641; scan anchor: djvu line 107914 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

INTENDMENT OF LAW

[Morissette v. United States, 344 U.S. 246 (1952)]

Who. The court deciding Morissette v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The INTENT bundled here — purpose and formulated design accompanying the act, 'the exercise of intelligent will' — is mens rea, the criminal intent the law presumes for common-law crimes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Morissette v. United States, 344 U.S. 246 (1952). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTENDMENT OF LAW, p. 644; scan anchor: djvu line 108374 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1952 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines criminal intent at length (Burrill, Circ. Ev. 284); Morissette is the landmark on mens rea as the presumed element of criminal offenses — the genuine anchor. The footnote annotates the bundled INTENT content explicitly. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the interdict's kinds and function (Mackeld.; Gaius, 4, 139); the prohibitory interdict's lineage to the injunction is genuine — stated as lineage, no invented authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INTERFERENCE

[Law: Leahy-Smith America Invents Act, Pub. L. 112-29 (2011) — first-inventor-to-file; interferences replaced by derivation proceedings]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The patent interference — the Patent Office proceeding to determine priority of invention between colliding claims — was abolished for new filings by the first-inventor-to-file reform. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Leahy-Smith America Invents Act, Pub. L. 112-29 (2011) — first-inventor-to-file; interferences replaced by derivation proceedings. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERFERENCE, p. 647; scan anchor: djvu line 108953 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 2011 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the interference proceeding (Milton v. Kingsley; Lowrey v. Cowles); the AIA is the statute that ended it — the genuine modern fate of the doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INTERLOCUTOR

[Law: 28 U.S.C. s 1291 — final decisions appealable; interlocutory orders generally not appealable]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The INTERLOCUTORY bundled here — provisional, not final, deciding some point but not the whole controversy — is governed by the final-decision rule for appealability. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 28 U.S.C. s 1291 — final decisions appealable; interlocutory orders generally not appealable. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERLOCUTOR, p. 648; scan anchor: djvu line 109038 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines interlocutory as non-final (Mora v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co.); s 1291 is the final-judgment rule making that distinction operative — a genuine link. The footnote annotates the bundled INTERLOCUTORY content explicitly. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INTERMEDDLE

[Law: executor de son tort — intermeddler with a decedent's estate liable as executor]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. One who intermeddles with an estate without right — the executor de son tort, the civil law's negotiorum gestor — is liable as executor for the intermeddling. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: executor de son tort — intermeddler with a decedent's estate liable as executor. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERMEDDLE, p. 648; scan anchor: djvu line 109084 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry names both the executor de son tort and the negotiorum gestor (McQueen v. Babcock; In re Shinn's Estate); the doctrine named is its genuine expression — stated as principle. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INTERMIXTURE OE GOODS

[Law: confusion of goods — loss falls on the party causing inseparable mixture]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Confusion of goods — mingling so neither owner's property can be separately identified — throws the loss on the wrongdoer who caused the confusion. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: confusion of goods — loss falls on the party causing inseparable mixture. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERMIXTURE OE GOODS, p. 648; scan anchor: djvu line 109137 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the confusion (citing Smith v. Sanborn); the confusion-of-goods rule is its genuine doctrinal content — stated as principle, no invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INTERNAL

[Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1 (1824)]

Who. The court deciding Gibbons v. Ogden (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Internal commerce — trade wholly within a state, as distinguished from commerce among the states — is the intrastate side of the Commerce Clause boundary. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1 (1824). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERNAL, p. 648; scan anchor: djvu line 109150 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1824 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines internal commerce against 'commerce' (the entry cross-references Commerce); Gibbons is the landmark drawing the interstate/intrastate commerce line — the genuine anchor. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INTERNATIONAL LAW

[The Paquete Habana, 175 U.S. 677 (1900)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The law of nations — regulating the intercourse of independent states in peace and war — is, in its customary form, part of the law applied by American courts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: The Paquete Habana, 175 U.S. 677 (1900). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERNATIONAL LAW, p. 649; scan anchor: djvu line 109220 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1900 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines international law (1 Kent, Comm. 1; Helm v. Bridault); The Paquete Habana is the landmark holding customary international law part of U.S. law — the genuine anchor. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INTERPELLATION

[Law: interpleader — Fed. R. Civ. P. 22 (rule interpleader); 28 U.S.C. s 1335 (statutory interpleader)]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The INTERPLEA bundled here — a party sued for property disclaiming interest and demanding rival claimants litigate between themselves — is interpleader. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: interpleader — Fed. R. Civ. P. 22 (rule interpleader); 28 U.S.C. s 1335 (statutory interpleader). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERPELLATION, p. 649; scan anchor: djvu line 109272 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The body bundles the interplea/interpleader plea (Bennett v. Wolverton; Rice v. Sally); the footnote annotates that bundled content explicitly — Rule 22 and s 1335 are its modern forms. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INTERPLEADER

[Law: interpleader — Fed. R. Civ. P. 22 (rule interpleader); 28 U.S.C. s 1335 (statutory interpleader)]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Where rival claimants claim the same fund of a disinterested stakeholder, the bill of interpleader makes them litigate title between themselves — now by rule and by statute. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: interpleader — Fed. R. Civ. P. 22 (rule interpleader); 28 U.S.C. s 1335 (statutory interpleader). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERPLEADER, p. 649; scan anchor: djvu line 109298 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the bill of interpleader (Brown; 1 & 2 Wm. IV c. 58) and its American forms; Rule 22 and s 1335 are the modern federal forms — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INTERPRET

[Maxim: Interpretatio chartarum benigna facienda est, ut res magis valeat quam pereat (Broom, Max. 543)]

Who. Broom, Legal Maxims (as cited: Maxim: Interpretatio chartarum benigna facienda est, ut res magis valeat quam pereat (Broom, Max. 543)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The bundled maxim — that deeds are to be interpreted liberally, so the thing may rather have effect than fail — is the ut res magis valeat quam pereat canon of effectiveness. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Interpretatio chartarum benigna facienda est, ut res magis valeat quam pereat (Broom, Max. 543). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERPRET, p. 649; scan anchor: djvu line 109333 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted whole in the body (with Jenk. Cent. 198 to the same effect); the maxim genuinely states the effectiveness canon — verbatim annotation of content actually present. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INTERPRETER

[Law: Court Interpreters Act, 28 U.S.C. s 1827 — interpreters in federal proceedings]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The interpreter sworn at trial to render a foreigner's or deaf person's evidence to the court is the court interpreter, provided for by statute in federal proceedings. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Court Interpreters Act, 28 U.S.C. s 1827 — interpreters in federal proceedings. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERPRETER, p. 649; scan anchor: djvu line 109475 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1827 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the sworn trial interpreter (Amory v. Pellowes; People v. Lem Deo); the Court Interpreters Act is the federal statutory form — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INTERROGATORIES

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 33 — interrogatories to parties]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Written questions propounded to a party — direct and cross, settled in advance for depositions — are the interrogatories of modern discovery practice. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 33 — interrogatories to parties. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERROGATORIES, p. 649; scan anchor: djvu line 109494 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines interrogatories in equity and deposition practice; Rule 33 governs interrogatories to parties — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INTERSTATE

[Law: Interstate Commerce Act of Feb. 4, 1887 — federal regulation of interstate commerce, as described in the entry]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Interstate Commerce Act of 1887 — regulating interstate carriage, requiring just and reasonable charges, and creating the commission — is the entry's own subject, described at length. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Interstate Commerce Act of Feb. 4, 1887 — federal regulation of interstate commerce, as described in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTERSTATE, p. 651; scan anchor: djvu line 109562 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1887 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines interstate commerce (Gibbons v. Ogden; Wabash R. Co. v. Illinois) and describes the 1887 Act in detail; the annotation preserves the entry's own subject — genuine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INTERVENTION

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 24 — intervention of right and permissive intervention]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The practice sense — a third person permitted by the court to make himself a party to protect his own interest in the dispute — is intervention by rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's practice definition (third party interposing to protect his interest) is exactly Rule 24's subject — a direct, genuine link. The international-law and ecclesiastical senses are not annotated. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INTESTABLE

[Law: Uniform Probate Code s 2-501 — testamentary capacity (sound mind)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. One without testamentary capacity — infant, lunatic, or person civilly dead — cannot make a will; capacity requires sound mind. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Uniform Probate Code s 2-501 — testamentary capacity (sound mind). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTESTABLE, p. 652; scan anchor: djvu line 109689 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines intestability by want of capacity; UPC s 2-501 states the capacity requirement — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. App. P. 3 — notice of appeal. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTESTATES, p. 652; scan anchor: djvu line 109732 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The body bundles intimation as appeal notice; the footnote annotates that bundled content explicitly — the federal notice-of-appeal rule is its genuine modern form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INTIMIDATION

[Law: 18 U.S.C. s 594 — intimidation of voters]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Intimidation of voters — made criminal by statute in several states — is the federal offense of intimidating voters. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. s 594 — intimidation of voters. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTIMIDATION, p. 652; scan anchor: djvu line 109765 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's sub-def is intimidation of voters (Respublica v. Gibbs); s 594 is the federal criminal statute for that offense — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

INTRA VIRES

[Law: ultra vires doctrine — corporate acts beyond chartered powers; intra vires its opposite]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An act intra vires — within the scope of a person's or corporation's powers — is the opposite of ultra vires, the doctrine policing acts beyond chartered authority. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: ultra vires doctrine — corporate acts beyond chartered powers; intra vires its opposite. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INTRA VIRES, p. 653; scan anchor: djvu line 109874 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines intra vires against ultra vires (Pittsburgh R. Co. v. Dodd); naming the ultra vires doctrine illuminates the entry's own contrast — genuine, stated as doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INUREMENT

[Maxim: Inutilis labor et sine fructu non est effectus legis (Co. Litt. 127b)]

Who. Coke on Littleton (as cited: Maxim: Inutilis labor et sine fructu non est effectus legis (Co. Litt. 127b)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The bundled maxim — that useless and fruitless labor is not the effect of law — states the axiom against vain legal acts and recoveries. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Inutilis labor et sine fructu non est effectus legis (Co. Litt. 127b). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INUREMENT, p. 654; scan anchor: djvu line 109999 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted whole in the body (with Wing. Max. p. 110, max. 38); the maxim genuinely states the anti-vain-acts axiom — verbatim annotation of content actually present, consistent with the bundled-maxim treatment. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INVASION

[Law: U.S. Const. art. IV, s 4 — federal protection of the states against invasion]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The incursion of an army for conquest or plunder — invasion in the military sense — is the invasion against which the federal government protects the states. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. IV, s 4 — federal protection of the states against invasion. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INVASION, p. 654; scan anchor: djvu line 110026 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines invasion as armed incursion (citing Aetna Ins. Co. v. Boon); Art. IV, s 4 is the constitutional guarantee against invasion — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INVECTA ET ILLATA

[Law: landlord's lien — lien on tenant's property as security for rent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Things carried into a hired tenement, pledged to the lessor as security for rent, are the civil-law hypothec — the ancestor of the landlord's lien on the tenant's property. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: landlord's lien — lien on tenant's property as security for rent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INVECTA ET ILLATA, p. 654; scan anchor: djvu line 110035 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the invecta et illata hypothec (Dig. 2, 14, 4; Bell); the landlord's lien is its genuine modern expression — stated as doctrine, no invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INVENTIO

[Law: treasure trove — finder takes against all but the true owner]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Finding as a mode of acquiring title — including treasure-trove — gives the finder title good against all but the true owner. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: treasure trove — finder takes against all but the true owner. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INVENTIO, p. 654; scan anchor: djvu line 110056 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry names treasure-trove among things found (Cowell); the treasure-trove rule is its genuine doctrinal content — stated as principle. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INVENTION

[Law: 35 U.S.C. ss 101-103 — patentable invention; novelty and non-obviousness]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Invention in patent law — contriving what did not before exist, as distinguished from discovery — is patentable only if novel and non-obvious. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 35 U.S.C. ss 101-103 — patentable invention; novelty and non-obviousness. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INVENTION, p. 654; scan anchor: djvu line 110066 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines patent-law invention and the invention/discovery distinction (Smith v. Nichols; Hollister); the patentability sections state its operative requirements — a genuine link distinct from the s 101 anchor at INCORPOREAL. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the invitee/licensee distinction and duties at length (Sweeney v. Old Colony; Bennett, cited verbatim); the Restatement sections name the categories — a genuine link. The OCR fragments at 468-469 are continuations, left bare. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INVITO

[Law: larceny — trespassory taking invito domino (without the owner's consent)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Larceny requires the taking invito domino — against the owner's will, without his consent — the trespassory element of the offense. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: larceny — trespassory taking invito domino (without the owner's consent). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INVITO, p. 87 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 110252 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the larceny requirement verbatim ('in order to constitute larceny, the property must be taken invito domino'); the annotation names the element — genuine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INVITO

[Maxim: Invito beneficium non datur (Dig. 50, 17, 69; Broom, Max. 699)]

Who. Broom, Legal Maxims (as cited: Maxim: Invito beneficium non datur (Dig. 50, 17, 69; Broom, Max. 699)) [basis: citation, treatise form, closed-table expansion]

What. The bundled maxim — that a benefit is not conferred on one unwilling to receive it — bars compelling acceptance of a benefit. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Invito beneficium non datur (Dig. 50, 17, 69; Broom, Max. 699). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INVITO, p. 87 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 110252 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted whole in the body; the maxim genuinely states the no-compelled-benefit axiom — verbatim annotation of content actually present. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

INVOLUNTARY

[Law: Model Penal Code s 210.3 — manslaughter]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Involuntary manslaughter — the unintentional killing by one engaged in an unlawful but not felonious act — is the misdemeanor-manslaughter category. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Model Penal Code s 210.3 — manslaughter. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry INVOLUNTARY, p. 87 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 110297 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines involuntary manslaughter (4 Steph. Comm. 52); MPC s 210.3 codifies manslaughter — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

IPSE DIXIT

[General Electric Co. v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136 (1997)]

Who. The court deciding General Electric Co. v. Joiner (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Ipse dixit — a bare assertion resting on an individual's authority — is the conclusory expert opinion courts reject: authority alone does not make evidence reliable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: General Electric Co. v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136 (1997). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IPSE DIXIT, p. 656; scan anchor: djvu line 110371 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1997 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines ipse dixit as bare assertion on individual authority; Joiner is the landmark rejecting expert ipse dixit under Daubert — the term's genuine modern legal home. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

IRRESISTIBLE IMPULSE

[Law: irresistible-impulse test — insanity destroying freedom of will and power of self-control]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The irresistible-impulse test — insanity destroying freedom of will and self-control, so the unlawful act cannot be resisted — supplements the right-wrong test of insanity. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: irresistible-impulse test — insanity destroying freedom of will and power of self-control. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry IRRESISTIBLE IMPULSE, p. 667; scan anchor: djvu line 110506 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the test with its cases (McCarty v. Com.; State v. Knight); the annotation names the doctrine the entry describes — genuine, stated without inventing a case citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

ITER

[Law: easement appurtenant — right of way (iter, actus, via)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Iter — a right of way as a servitude to a country estate, with actus and via as its greater kinds — is the easement appurtenant for passage. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: easement appurtenant — right of way (iter, actus, via). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ITER, p. 659; scan anchor: djvu line 110869 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the three civil-law ways (Heinecc.; Mackeld.); the easement appurtenant is their genuine common-law expression — stated as doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JACTITATION

[Law: slander of title — false disparagement of another's title to real estate]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Jactitation as disparagement of another's title to real estate — 'slander of title' — is the tort of slander of title. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: slander of title — false disparagement of another's title to real estate. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JACTITATION, p. 660; scan anchor: djvu line 110991 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states that slander of title 'comes under the head of jactitation'; naming the tort is genuine illumination of the entry's own classification — stated as doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JEDBURGH JUSTICE

[Law: due process — U.S. Const. amend. XIV, s 1; summary punishment without trial]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Jedburgh justice — summary hanging of a marauder without regular trial, 'lynch law' — is what due process forbids: no deprivation of life without due process of law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: due process — U.S. Const. amend. XIV, s 1; summary punishment without trial. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JEDBURGH JUSTICE, p. 661; scan anchor: djvu line 111121 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines extrajudicial execution; the Due Process Clause is the genuine constitutional prohibition of exactly that — a direct, illuminating contrast. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JEOFAILE

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 61 — harmless error; statutes of jeofails]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The statutes of amendments and jeofails — curing slips in pleading form by amendment or by the court's overlooking the exception — are the ancestors of harmless-error doctrine. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 61 — harmless error; statutes of jeofails. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JEOFAILE, p. 661; scan anchor: djvu line 111132 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the jeofail statutes' function (3 Bl. Comm. 407; Termes de la Ley); Rule 61's harmless-error rule is their modern procedural form — a genuine lineage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JEOPARDY

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — Double Jeopardy Clause; jeopardy attaches when the jury is impaneled and sworn]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Jeopardy — the danger of conviction and punishment, incurred when a valid indictment is found and the petit jury is impaneled and sworn — is the attachment point of the double-jeopardy protection. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — Double Jeopardy Clause; jeopardy attaches when the jury is impaneled and sworn. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JEOPARDY, p. 661; scan anchor: djvu line 111162 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines jeopardy by its attachment (State v. Nelson; People v. Terrill); the Double Jeopardy Clause turns on that attachment — a direct, genuine link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JETTISON

[Law: general average — jettison loss shared; Barnard v. Adams, 10 How. 303, 13 L. Ed. 417, as cited in the entry]

Who. The court deciding Law: general average — jettison loss shared; Barnard v. Adams (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Jettison — casting cargo overboard in extreme peril — produces a general average loss, shared by all interests in the venture. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: general average — jettison loss shared; Barnard v. Adams, 10 How. 303, 13 L. Ed. 417, as cited in the entry. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JETTISON, p. 661; scan anchor: djvu line 111204 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines jettison and the general average loss (Cal. Civ. Code s 2148) citing Barnard v. Adams verbatim; the annotation preserves the entry's own authority — genuine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JOBBER

[Law: Securities Exchange Act of 1934 — broker-dealer distinction and registration]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A jobber who buys and sells securities on the exchange operates as a dealer (or broker) under federal securities law, which distinguishes the two capacities and requires broker-dealers to register. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Securities Exchange Act of 1934 — broker-dealer distinction and registration. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JOBBER, p. 661; scan anchor: djvu line 111245 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1934 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines 'jobber' as a dealer in stocks and securities; the federal securities regime's broker/dealer framework is the genuine modern legal form of that office, so the link names the governing statute rather than forcing a maxim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JOCALIA

[Law: Married Women's Property Acts — abolition of coverture]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's rule — a married woman's jewels treated as assets for her husband's debts — is a coverture-era artifact; the Married Women's Property Acts of the nineteenth century displaced coverture by vesting married women with separate property rights. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Married Women's Property Acts — abolition of coverture. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JOCALIA, p. 661; scan anchor: djvu line 111250 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

JOINTURE

[Law: elective-share statutes — modern replacement of dower and jointure]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Jointure — and dower, which it commonly barred — have been abolished or replaced in most American states by elective-share statutes giving the surviving spouse a fixed share of the estate. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: elective-share statutes — modern replacement of dower and jointure. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JOINTURE, p. 662; scan anchor: djvu line 111429 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the dower-barring estate; elective-share statutes are the genuine modern successors, so the link maps the doctrine's living form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JOCK

[Maxim: Audi alteram partem — hear the other side]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'jour in court' — a day in court — is the procedural core of the maxim that no one is to be condemned unheard. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Audi alteram partem — hear the other side. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JOCK, p. 663; scan anchor: djvu line 111478 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself quotes Hale: 'Every process gives the defendant a day in court'; audi alteram partem is the canonical maxim for exactly that right — a genuine, not forced, match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nemo judex in causa sua — no one should be judge in his own cause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUDEX, p. 663; scan anchor: djvu line 111578 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry quotes 'Judex non potest esse testis in propria causa' (4 Inst. 279); nemo judex in causa sua is the canonical general maxim of the same rule — genuine kinship, not invention. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUDGE

[Axiom: de facto officer doctrine — acts under color of authority are valid]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A 'judge de facto' — one acting under color of lawful authority without full title — illustrates the de facto officer doctrine: acts of such officers are valid as to third parties and the public. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: de facto officer doctrine — acts under color of authority are valid. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUDGE, p. 604 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 111687 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the de facto judge; the de facto officer doctrine is the genuine principle giving those acts legal effect — it illuminates why the category matters. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUDGMENT

[Axiom: Res judicata — a final judgment on the merits bars relitigation of the same claim]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A final judgment on the merits is conclusive between the parties and their privies and bars relitigation of the same claim — the preclusion the entry's classification of final judgments is built for. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: Res judicata — a final judgment on the merits bars relitigation of the same claim. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUDGMENT, p. 604 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 111764 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Res judicata is the genuine doctrine for which 'final judgment' is the operative category; it names what the entry's long classification serves. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUDGMENT IN REM

[Axiom: judgments in rem are conclusive erga omnes — against all the world]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A judgment strictly in rem is conclusive against all the world, wherever its obligation is recognized — binding strangers as well as parties. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: judgments in rem are conclusive erga omnes — against all the world. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUDGMENT IN REM, p. 667; scan anchor: djvu line 112220 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself (quoting Bartero) states the distinguishing characteristic; the footnote distills it into canonical form — genuine, drawn from the entry's own authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUDICES SELECTI

[Law: U.S. Const. amends. VI & VII — right to trial by jury]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Roman selecti, whom the entry likens to modern jurors, find their modern guarantee in the constitutional jury-trial clauses. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amends. VI & VII — right to trial by jury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUDICES SELECTI, p. 668; scan anchor: djvu line 112362 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself draws the selecti-to-juror resemblance; the Sixth and Seventh Amendments are the genuine modern legal form of that institution — the link follows the entry's own bridge. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUDICIA

[Maxim: Judicia posteriora sunt in lege fortiora — the later decisions are the stronger in law]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim — the later decisions are the stronger in law — is the classical statement of the rule that later decisions in the same line control earlier ones. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Judicia posteriora sunt in lege fortiora — the later decisions are the stronger in law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUDICIA, p. 668; scan anchor: djvu line 112380 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry (8 Coke, 97); the footnote gives it in canonical form with its modern meaning — no invented content. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUDICIAL

[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803) — judicial review]

Who. The court deciding Marbury v. Madison (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Judicial power — the authority vested in courts as distinct from legislative and executive power — received its canonical American elaboration when the Supreme Court asserted review of legislative and executive acts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803) — judicial review. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUDICIAL, p. 668; scan anchor: djvu line 112407 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1803 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines judicial power by cases; Marbury is the genuine foundational case on what that power includes — confident the citation is real. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUDICIARY ACT

[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803)]

Who. The court deciding Marbury v. Madison (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Section 13 of this very Act — the mandamus provision — was the jurisdictional grant the Supreme Court struck down as unconstitutional. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1803 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The link is internal and historical: Marbury invalidated §13 of the Act the entry defines; genuine, not forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUDICIUM

[Law: Magna Carta c. 29 (1225) — judicium parium; 'law of the land']

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Judicium parium — judgment of peers — is Magna Carta's guarantee: no free man to be seized or imprisoned 'except by the lawful judgment of his equals or by the law of the land,' the ancestor of due process. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Magna Carta c. 29 (1225) — judicium parium; 'law of the land'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUDICIUM, p. 19 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 112622 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself cites 'Magna Charta, c. 29' for judicium parium; the footnote gives the chapter's genuine content — anchored in the entry's own authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUICIO

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 507 — priorities of claims in bankruptcy]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The juicio de concurso — ranking creditors where the estate cannot pay all in full — is the civil-law ancestor of the modern priority scheme for claims in bankruptcy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. § 507 — priorities of claims in bankruptcy. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUICIO, p. 670; scan anchor: djvu line 112712 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the concurso as creditor-ranking in insolvency; §507 is the genuine modern American codification of creditor priority — the link maps old form to living form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUMP BAIL

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — 'Excessive bail shall not be required']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Bail rests on the constitutional prohibition of excessive bail; jumping bail violates the bond obligation and forfeits the security. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — 'Excessive bail shall not be required'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUMP BAIL, p. 670; scan anchor: djvu line 112737 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines jumping bail as violation of the bail-bond obligation; the Eighth Amendment's bail clause is the genuine constitutional frame of that institution — the quote is verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUBA

[Maxim: Jura eodem modo destituuntur quo constituuntur — laws are abrogated by the same means by which they are made]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Among the entry's maxims, the canonical rule of legislative power is that laws are undone by the same authority that made them — the basis of repeal by the enacting sovereign. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Jura eodem modo destituuntur quo constituuntur — laws are abrogated by the same means by which they are made. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUBA, p. 670; scan anchor: djvu line 112795 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim in the entry (Broom, Max. 878); it states a genuine rule of legislative authority, not a decoration — the repeal must come from the lawmaker. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JURAMENTUM

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1621 — perjury]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The legal oath catalogued here is given its force by the perjury sanction: false swearing under oath in a proceeding is a federal crime. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1621 — perjury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JURAMENTUM, p. 671; scan anchor: djvu line 112909 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1621 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry catalogs the kinds of oaths taken in proceedings; perjury is the genuine sanction that gives the oath legal consequence — the link names the enforcement, not the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUR ARE

[Law: U.S. Const. art. VI — 'Oath or Affirmation']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim defines swearing as calling God to witness; American law accommodates conscience by permitting affirmation in place of oath. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. VI — 'Oath or Affirmation'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUR ARE, p. 671; scan anchor: djvu line 112960 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The constitutional oath-or-affirmation clause is the genuine modern legal form of the oath the entry defines — it preserves the obligation while releasing the religious form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

J TJRATOR

[Maxim: Juratores sunt judices facti — juries are the judges of fact]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim states the classical division of labor: juries judge the facts, the court declares the law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Juratores sunt judices facti — juries are the judges of fact. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry J TJRATOR, p. 672; scan anchor: djvu line 113007 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim in the entry (Jenk. Cent. 91); it is the canonical statement of the law/fact allocation between judge and jury — genuine, not invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JURE

[Maxim: Jure naturae aequum est neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuria fieri locupletiorem]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim in the entry (Dig. 50, 17, 206); it states the genuine foundation of restitution — the link names the living doctrine the maxim founded. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JURIS

[Maxim: Juris praecepta sunt haec: honeste vivere, alterum non laedere, suum cuique tribuere]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Ulpian's three precepts — to live honorably, to hurt nobody, to render to every one his due — are the canonical statement of law's aims, adopted by Blackstone. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Juris praecepta sunt haec: honeste vivere, alterum non laedere, suum cuique tribuere. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JURIS, p. 672; scan anchor: djvu line 113089 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim in the entry (Inst. 1, 1, 3; 1 Bl. Comm. 40); the precepts are the genuine classical foundation of the whole 'juris' family — the most central maxim in the batch. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JURISDICTION

[Axiom: a judgment rendered without jurisdiction is void]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Jurisdiction is essential to a valid judgment: a judgment rendered without jurisdiction is void and subject to collateral attack. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: a judgment rendered without jurisdiction is void. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JURISDICTION, p. 673; scan anchor: djvu line 113171 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the power at length; the axiom states the genuine consequence of its absence — the root of void-judgment doctrine — which is what makes the definition matter. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JURISPRUDENTIA

[Maxim: Jurisprudentia est divinarum atque humanarum rerum notitia, justi atque injusti scientia]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Ulpian's definition — jurisprudence as the knowledge of things divine and human, the science of right and wrong — is the canonical Roman account of the very term. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Jurisprudentia est divinarum atque humanarum rerum notitia, justi atque injusti scientia. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JURISPRUDENTIA, p. 674; scan anchor: djvu line 113426 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

JURY

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — 'No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The grand jury's screening function is constitutionally required in federal prosecutions: no person may be held for a capital or otherwise infamous crime without grand-jury indictment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — 'No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JURY, p. 674; scan anchor: djvu line 113482 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry details grand-jury composition and function; the Fifth Amendment's Grand Jury Clause is the genuine federal constitutional source of the institution — quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUS

[Maxim: Ignorantia juris non excusat — ignorance of the law is no excuse]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Within the maxim the entry discusses, 'jus' means the general law of the land — and ignorance of it excuses no one. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ignorantia juris non excusat — ignorance of the law is no excuse. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS, p. 675; scan anchor: djvu line 113628 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself expounds the maxim (citing Churchill v. Bradley); the footnote states it in canonical form with the entry's own gloss on 'jus' — genuine, drawn from the entry. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUS ABSTINENDI

[Maxim: Invito beneficium non datur — a benefit is not given to one unwilling]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Roman heir's right to renounce rests on the principle that a benefit cannot be forced on the unwilling — no one is compelled to accept an inheritance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Invito beneficium non datur — a benefit is not given to one unwilling. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS ABSTINENDI, p. 676; scan anchor: djvu line 113717 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The maxim is the canonical statement of the principle underlying the entry's right of renunciation — a genuine root, not a stretch. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS ABUTENDI

[Maxim: Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas — use your own property so as not to injure another's]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The most absolute property right the entry describes is bounded by the canonical no-harm rule: use your own so as not to injure another's. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas — use your own property so as not to injure another's. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS ABUTENDI, p. 676; scan anchor: djvu line 113725 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines full dominion; the sic-utere maxim is the genuine limiting principle of that dominion — the footnote illuminates by the boundary, not by restatement. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUS ACCRESCENDI

[Axiom: joint tenancy requires the four unities — time, title, interest, and possession]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The right of survivorship is the distinguishing mark of joint tenancy, which exists only where the four unities coincide: time, title, interest, and possession. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: joint tenancy requires the four unities — time, title, interest, and possession. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS ACCRESCENDI, p. 676; scan anchor: djvu line 113731 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's maxims govern survivorship's effects; the four unities are the genuine doctrinal frame in which survivorship operates — the principle that makes the entry's rules cohere. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS AQU1EDUCTUS

[Axiom: easements appurtenant run with the land]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Roman praedial servitude is the direct ancestor of the modern easement appurtenant, which runs with the land it benefits. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: easements appurtenant run with the land. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS AQU1EDUCTUS, p. 676; scan anchor: djvu line 113818 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines a servitude for bringing water across another's land; the running-with-the-land rule is the genuine modern form of that institution — old form to living form, as in batch 00. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS BEZXI

[Law: law of armed conflict — modern codification in the Geneva Conventions of 1949]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The classical jus belli is continued today in the law of armed conflict — the law of nations as applied to war, codified in modern treaty law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: law of armed conflict — modern codification in the Geneva Conventions of 1949. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS BEZXI, p. 676; scan anchor: djvu line 113831 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1949 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the law of war as the law of nations applied to a state of war; the Conventions are the genuine modern treaty form of exactly that body of law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUS CIVILE

[Maxim: Jus civile est quod sibi populus constituit — the civil law is what a people establishes for itself]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim is the classical statement of legal positivism: the civil law is what a people establishes for itself. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Jus civile est quod sibi populus constituit — the civil law is what a people establishes for itself. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS CIVILE, p. 676; scan anchor: djvu line 113846 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim in the entry (Inst. 1, 2, 1); the footnote gives the canonical form of the genuine principle — the people's enactment as the source of civil law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUS COMMUNE

[Maxim: Jus constitui oportet in his quae ut plurimum accidunt, non quae ex inopinato]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim states the principle of legislative generality: laws are made for the common case, not the rare or accidental one. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Jus constitui oportet in his quae ut plurimum accidunt, non quae ex inopinato. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS COMMUNE, p. 677; scan anchor: djvu line 113914 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim in the entry (Dig. 1, 3, 3; Broom, Max. 43); it is the canonical rule against legislating for freak cases — genuine, not decorative. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUS CUDENDA MONET A

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8 — Congress: 'To coin Money'; art. I, § 10 — states barred from coining money]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The sovereign's coinage right the entry describes is vested exclusively in Congress in American law, and the states are expressly barred from exercising it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8 — Congress: 'To coin Money'; art. I, § 10 — states barred from coining money. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS CUDENDA MONET A, p. 677; scan anchor: djvu line 113937 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the royal coinage prerogative; the Constitution's allocation is the genuine modern American form of that prerogative — confident of both clauses. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUS CURIALITATIS

[Law: elective-share statutes — modern replacement of dower and curtesy]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Curtesy — like dower — has been abolished in most American states, replaced by elective-share statutes giving the surviving spouse a fixed share of the estate. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: elective-share statutes — modern replacement of dower and curtesy. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS CURIALITATIS, p. 677; scan anchor: djvu line 113942 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Same genuine old-form-to-living-form map as JOINTURE in batch 00; curtesy's modern successor is the elective share — consistent and on point. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS DARE

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 1 — "All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States"]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The legislative prerogative the entry defines — to give or make the law — is vested by the Constitution in Congress. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 1 — "All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States". JUS DICERE

[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 177 (1803)]

Who. The court deciding Marbury v. Madison (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's definition — to declare the law, the province of a judge — is the classical form of the judicial function: 'It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 177 (1803). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS DICERE, p. 677; scan anchor: djvu line 113968 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1803 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Marshall's sentence is the canonical American statement of exactly the function the entry defines; confident the quote and citation are real. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS DISPONENDI

[Law: UCC § 2-401 — passing of title; reservation for security]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The vendor's reservation of the jus disponendi — withholding ownership while parting with possession — is governed in modern sales law by the title-passage rules, which give effect to the parties' manifested intent, including reservation for security. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-401 — passing of title; reservation for security. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS DISPONENDI, p. 677; scan anchor: djvu line 113972 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry poses the sales-law question of reserved ownership; § 2-401 is the genuine modern rule answering it — confident of the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS DIVIDENDI

[Law: Statute of Wills (1540) — testamentary disposition of land by statute]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Testamentary disposition of land — the right the entry names — derives from statute: in England the Statute of Wills (1540), in America the state wills acts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of Wills (1540) — testamentary disposition of land by statute. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS DIVIDENDI, p. 677; scan anchor: djvu line 113986 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1540 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry names the right; the statute is the genuine historical source of that right in the common-law world — the footnote supplies the source, not the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUS DUPLICATUM

[Maxim: Jus ex injuria non oritur — a right cannot arise from a wrong]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim is the classical root of the rule that no one may profit from his own wrong — as in the slayer rule barring a murderer from inheriting from his victim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Jus ex injuria non oritur — a right cannot arise from a wrong. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS DUPLICATUM, p. 677; scan anchor: djvu line 113989 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim in the entry (Broom, Max. 738); the slayer rule is the maxim's genuine living application — the footnote names what the maxim does in modern law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUS FTDUCIARIUM

[Axiom: the trust divides legal title (trustee) from equitable title (beneficiary)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'right in trust' the entry distinguishes from the legal right is the trust's defining split: the trustee holds legal title for the beneficiary's equitable, beneficial title. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: the trust divides legal title (trustee) from equitable title (beneficiary). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS FTDUCIARIUM, p. 678; scan anchor: djvu line 114040 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry names the trust-right as opposed to the legal right; the legal/equitable title split is the genuine doctrine of that distinction. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS GENTIUM

[Axiom: customary international law — general practice accepted as law (opinio juris)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Roman method the entry describes — treating rules common to all known nations as consonant with right reason — is the ancestor of modern customary international law, formed by general state practice accepted as law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: customary international law — general practice accepted as law (opinio juris). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS GENTIUM, p. 678; scan anchor: djvu line 114070 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's method paragraph invites the link: derivation from common custom is genuinely the classical root of the modern custom doctrine — not a stretch. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

JUS GLADII

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — "nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted"]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The sovereign's punishing power the entry defines is bounded in American law by the prohibition of cruel and unusual punishments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — "nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted". Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS GLADII, p. 678; scan anchor: djvu line 114115 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Illuminate by the limit, as with JUS ABUTENDI: the Eighth Amendment is the genuine constitutional boundary of the punishing power — quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

XUS MARITI

[Law: Married Women's Property Acts — abolition of coverture]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The husband's marital right to his wife's movables is a coverture rule, displaced by the Married Women's Property Acts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Married Women's Property Acts — abolition of coverture. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry XUS MARITI, p. 679; scan anchor: djvu line 114240 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Same genuine old-regime-to-superseding-law map as JOCALIA — the entry states the pre-reform rule; the statutes ended it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

XUS NAVIGANDX

[Maxim: Mare liberum — the sea is free (Grotius)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The navigation right the entry names rests on the classical principle that the sea is free to all nations. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Mare liberum — the sea is free (Grotius). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry XUS NAVIGANDX, p. 679; scan anchor: djvu line 114283 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the right of navigation by sea; mare liberum is the genuine classical principle of that right — Grotius's doctrine, not an invention. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

XUS OFFERENDI

[Axiom: subrogation — one who discharges another's obligation succeeds to the creditor's rights]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Roman subrogation the entry defines — succeeding to an elder creditor's lien on paying him — is the classical form of the living doctrine: one who discharges another's obligation steps into the creditor's shoes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

JUS PCENITENDI

[Axiom: material breach — an uncured material failure of performance excuses the other party and supports rescission]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Roman right to rescind an executory contract on the other's nonperformance is the classical form of the modern material-breach doctrine: an uncured material failure excuses the aggrieved party and supports rescission. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: material breach — an uncured material failure of performance excuses the other party and supports rescission. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS PCENITENDI, p. 679; scan anchor: djvu line 114360 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the Roman rescission right; the material-breach doctrine is its genuine modern form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS PUBLICUM

[Maxim: Jus publicum privatorum pactis mutari non potest — a public law cannot be altered by the agreements of private persons]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim states the root of mandatory law: public law cannot be altered by private agreement — the ancestor of the mandatory-versus-default distinction. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Jus publicum privatorum pactis mutari non potest — a public law cannot be altered by the agreements of private persons. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim in the entry; it states the genuine principle that mandatory law is not subject to private waiver. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS RELICTS

[Law: elective-share statutes — modern form of the widow's legal share]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The widow's legal share the entry describes — like dower and curtesy — has its modern American form in the elective-share statutes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: elective-share statutes — modern form of the widow's legal share. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS RELICTS, p. 681; scan anchor: djvu line 114519 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

Why. Consistent with the JOINTURE/CURIALITATIS pattern: the entry names the widow's portion; the elective share is its genuine modern successor. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS TERTH

[Axiom: jus tertii — title in a third person generally cannot be set up as a defense]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The plea the entry names is generally unavailable as a defense: a party may not defeat a claim by asserting title in a stranger — as the bailee who is estopped from disputing his bailor's title. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: jus tertii — title in a third person generally cannot be set up as a defense. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS TERTH, p. 681; scan anchor: djvu line 114572 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the plea; the axiom states the genuine rule governing it — the plea fails as a rule, succeeds only by exception. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS UTENDI

[Axiom: usufruct — the right to use and enjoy another's property without impairing its substance]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The right the entry defines — use without destroying the substance — is usufruct, the classical institution of use-and-enjoyment of another's property. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: usufruct — the right to use and enjoy another's property without impairing its substance. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS UTENDI, p. 681; scan anchor: djvu line 114606 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes usufruct without naming it; the footnote supplies the genuine institutional name — the contrast with jus abutendi is the usufruct/ownership line. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUS VENANDI ET PI8CANDI

[Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (1805) — rule of capture]

Who. The court deciding Pierson v. Post (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The hunting right the entry names is governed by the rule of capture: wild animals (ferae naturae) belong to no one until reduced to possession. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (1805) — rule of capture. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUS VENANDI ET PI8CANDI, p. 681; scan anchor: djvu line 114611 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1805 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry names the hunting/fishing right; Pierson states the genuine acquisition rule for the objects of that right — confident the case and citation are real. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUST

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — "nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation"]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 'just compensation' the entry expounds at length is the constitutional measure of the takings power: private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — "nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation". Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUST, p. 681; scan anchor: djvu line 114627 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's longest section is just compensation, citing Bauman v. Ross and Monongahela; the Fifth Amendment clause is its genuine source — quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUSTICIABLE

[Axiom: justiciability — standing, ripeness, mootness, political question]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. What is 'proper to be examined in courts' is determined today by the justiciability doctrines: standing, ripeness, mootness, and the political-question rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: justiciability — standing, ripeness, mootness, political question. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUSTICIABLE, p. 683; scan anchor: djvu line 114973 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The one-line entry names the concept; the footnote names its genuine modern doctrinal content — the term 'justiciable' is exactly what these doctrines elaborate. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

JUSTIFICATION

[Axiom: truth is a complete defense to defamation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In libel, the justification the entry defines — showing the statement true — is the complete defense: truth defeats the claim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: truth is a complete defense to defamation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry JUSTIFICATION, p. 684; scan anchor: djvu line 115060 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines justification in libel as proving truth; the axiom states the genuine rule — truth is the paradigmatic justification. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry (Jenk. Cent. 93); the Sixth Amendment's speedy-trial clause is its genuine constitutional embodiment — old form to living form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

BAST

[Axiom: general average — voluntary sacrifice for the common safety shared by all interests]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The jettison contribution the entry names (kast-geld) is general average: a voluntary sacrifice for the common safety is borne ratably by all interests in the maritime venture. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: general average — voluntary sacrifice for the common safety shared by all interests. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry BAST, p. 685; scan anchor: djvu line 115251 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines kast-geld as contribution for a jettison; general average is the genuine living maritime doctrine — an exact match, not a stretch. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

KENTUCKY RESOLUTIONS

[Law: U.S. Const. art. VI — Supremacy Clause: federal law "the supreme Law of the Land"]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Resolutions announced the nullification doctrine — the claimed right of a state to void federal law — which is answered by the constitutional declaration that federal law is the supreme law of the land. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. VI — Supremacy Clause: federal law "the supreme Law of the Land". Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry KENTUCKY RESOLUTIONS, p. 886 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 115456 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the nullification claim; the Supremacy Clause is the genuine constitutional text contradicting it — quoted, not invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

KIDNAPPING

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1201 — federal kidnapping (Federal Kidnapping Act)]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Beyond the common-law offense the entry describes, interstate kidnapping is a federal crime. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1201 — federal kidnapping (Federal Kidnapping Act). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry KIDNAPPING, p. 687; scan anchor: djvu line 115543 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry treats kidnapping at common law and in the states; § 1201 is the genuine federal statutory form — confident of the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

KING’S EVIDENCE

[Law: cooperation agreements; U.S.S.G. § 5K1.1 — substantial assistance]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The practice the entry describes — an accomplice testifying against confederates on promise of pardon — survives as the cooperating-witness regime: accomplice testimony taken under cooperation or substantial-assistance agreements. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: cooperation agreements; U.S.S.G. § 5K1.1 — substantial assistance. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry KING’S EVIDENCE, p. 687; scan anchor: djvu line 115713 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Old form to living form: the entry's 'king's evidence' is the ancestor of the modern federal cooperation/substantial-assistance practice — the map names the living institution. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

KLEPTOMANIA

[Axiom: M'Naghten rule — insanity requires inability to know the nature of the act or that it was wrong]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'mania' the entry invokes is judged in criminal law by the insanity test: the accused must not have known the nature of the act or that it was wrong. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: M'Naghten rule — insanity requires inability to know the nature of the act or that it was wrong. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry KLEPTOMANIA, p. 687; scan anchor: djvu line 115804 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry classifies kleptomania under insanity in medical jurisprudence; the M'Naghten rule is the genuine governing test for the criminal-law insanity the entry points to — stated as axiom to avoid an uncertain reporter cite. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

KNOCK DOWN

[Law: UCC § 2-328 — sale by auction complete on fall of the hammer]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The auctioneer's fall of the hammer the entry describes is the common-law moment of completion codified in sales law: a sale by auction is complete when the auctioneer so announces by the fall of the hammer. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-328 — sale by auction complete on fall of the hammer. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry KNOCK DOWN, p. 689; scan anchor: djvu line 115928 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Near-verbatim match: the entry defines 'knocked down' by the hammer's fall; § 2-328(2) codifies exactly that moment — confident. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

KNOWINGLY

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make a person guilty unless the mind is guilty]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The knowledge the entry defines is the mens rea element: criminal liability requires a guilty mind as well as a guilty act. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make a person guilty unless the mind is guilty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry KNOWINGLY, p. 689; scan anchor: djvu line 115955 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry expounds 'knowingly' as the indictment's knowledge averment; the maxim is the canonical statement of the mens-rea requirement — genuine, not forced. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LA CHAMBRE DBS ESTEXLLES

[Law: 16 Car. I, c. 10 (1641) — abolition of the Star Chamber]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Star Chamber the entry names was abolished by statute in 1641 as an instrument of arbitrary prerogative power. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 16 Car. I, c. 10 (1641) — abolition of the Star Chamber. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LA CHAMBRE DBS ESTEXLLES, p. 691; scan anchor: djvu line 116113 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1641 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry names the court; the abolishing statute is the genuine legal event defining its place in constitutional history — the court's significance is its abolition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

LABOR A JURY

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1503 — influencing or injuring a juror]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Tampering with a jury — endeavoring to influence jurors in their verdict — is federal obstruction of justice. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1503 — influencing or injuring a juror. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LABOR A JURY, p. 691; scan anchor: djvu line 116205 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1503 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the old practice of 'laboring' a jury; § 1503 is the genuine modern criminal prohibition of exactly that conduct — old form to living statute. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LACHES

[Maxim: Vigilantibus non dormientibus aequitas subvenit — equity aids the vigilant, not those who slumber]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Laches is the equitable bar the entry defines, governed by the maxim that equity aids the vigilant, not those who sleep on their rights. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Vigilantibus non dormientibus aequitas subvenit — equity aids the vigilant, not those who slumber. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LACHES, p. 692; scan anchor: djvu line 116268 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines laches as want of diligence barring equitable relief; the maxim is the canonical statement of that rule — an exact match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LJESA MAJESTAS

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined; two-witness rule]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The elastic Roman 'injured majesty' the entry describes is the abuse the American treason clause was written to prevent: treason is narrowly defined, requiring two witnesses to the same overt act. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined; two-witness rule. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LJESA MAJESTAS, p. 692; scan anchor: djvu line 116362 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry traces laesa majestas as any offense against the king's dignity; Art. III, § 3 is the genuine constitutional response — its narrowness guards against the very elasticity the entry describes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

UESIO ULTRA DIMIDIUM VEL ENORMIS

[Law: UCC § 2-302 — unconscionable contracts or clauses]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Roman lesion — relief where a party to an onerous contract was overreached by more than half the value — is the classical ancestor of the modern unconscionability doctrine. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-302 — unconscionable contracts or clauses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry UESIO ULTRA DIMIDIUM VEL ENORMIS, p. 692; scan anchor: djvu line 116368 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines laesio enormis; § 2-302 is the genuine modern form of relief against grossly unfair bargains — old form to living statute, confident of the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LANCETI

[Maxim: Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum et ad inferos — whoever owns the soil owns up to the heavens and down to hell]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's discussion — 'whoever owns the land owns the buildings above and the minerals below' — is the classical ad coelum rule: ownership of the soil extends upward to the heavens and downward to the depths. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum et ad inferos — whoever owns the soil owns up to the heavens and down to hell. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LANCETI, p. 694; scan anchor: djvu line 116545 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's Abbott passage paraphrases the maxim; the footnote states it canonically — the genuine root of the air/mineral rights the entry discusses. FLAGGED: 'LAND' is not a separate headword in the chunk; its full definition is embedded in entry 302 (LANCETI)'s body — parent to place. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

LANDLOCKED

[Axiom: easement by necessity — a landlocked parcel takes an implied way of access]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The landlocked parcel the entry describes takes the genuine implied right of access: an easement by necessity over the land that severs it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: easement by necessity — a landlocked parcel takes an implied way of access. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LANDLOCKED, p. 696; scan anchor: djvu line 116915 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

LANDLORD

[Axiom: implied warranty of habitability — residential leases carry a non-waivable warranty of fitness]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The landlord-tenant relation the entry defines now carries the implied warranty of habitability: residential leases warrant fitness for living, not waivable by the lease. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: implied warranty of habitability — residential leases carry a non-waivable warranty of fitness. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LANDLORD, p. 696; scan anchor: djvu line 116922 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the relation; the warranty is the genuine modern qualification of the landlord's side — the living law of the relation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LANDS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — "public use"; Kelo v. City of New London, 545 U.S. 469 (2005)]

Who. The court deciding Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — "public use"; Kelo v. City of New London (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The takings for railways and public undertakings in the entry's Lands Clauses Acts are the eminent-domain power, whose 'public use' requirement the modern cases elaborate. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — "public use"; Kelo v. City of New London, 545 U.S. 469 (2005). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LANDS, p. 696; scan anchor: djvu line 116958 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 2005 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry describes statutory takings for public undertakings; the public-use clause and its leading modern case are the genuine frame — JUST took the compensation half; this takes the authorization half. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

LANGUAGE

[Axiom: plain meaning rule — statutory words are given their ordinary meaning]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'language of the statute' as distinguished from its 'spirit' is the classic tension of statutory construction, governed by the plain-meaning rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: plain meaning rule — statutory words are given their ordinary meaning. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LANGUAGE, p. 696; scan anchor: djvu line 116998 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

L ARGENT

[Law: Model Penal Code § 223.1 — consolidation of theft offenses]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The common-law larceny the entry expounds — with its asportation and animus furandi elements — has been consolidated in modern codes with embezzlement and false pretenses into the unitary offense of theft. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Model Penal Code § 223.1 — consolidation of theft offenses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry L ARGENT, p. 697; scan anchor: djvu line 117111 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the full common-law exposition; the MPC consolidation is the genuine modern form — the footnote places the entry in the living law. Confident of the section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 611(c) — leading questions]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The leading question the entry defines is governed by the examination rule: leading questions are disfavored on direct examination and ordinarily allowed on cross. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Evid. 611(c) — leading questions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LEAPING QUESTION, p. 705; scan anchor: djvu line 118523 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the leading question with its cases; FRE 611(c) is the genuine rule the definition serves — confident of the rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LEASE

[Law: Statute of Frauds — leases over one year in writing]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The parol lease the entry names is limited by the writing requirement: leases exceeding one year must be in writing. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Statute of Frauds — leases over one year in writing. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LEASE, p. 706; scan anchor: djvu line 118635 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the parol (oral) lease; the Statute of Frauds is the genuine rule limiting that category — the footnote explains why the category is narrow. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

LEASING-MAKING

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — freedom of speech; the repudiated Sedition Act of 1798]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The seditious-slander offense the entry describes — untrue speeches in contempt of the king and council — is the kind of prosecution the First Amendment's speech guarantee repudiated. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — freedom of speech; the repudiated Sedition Act of 1798. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LEASING-MAKING, p. 706; scan anchor: djvu line 118742 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1798 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines a crime of political slander against the government; the First Amendment is the genuine constitutional repudiation of that crime — old offense to living liberty. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

LEAVE AND LICENSE

[Maxim: Volenti non fit injuria — to one who is willing, no injury is done]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The consent defense the entry defines — leave and license defeating trespass — is the classical volenti rule: to one who is willing, no legal injury is done. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Volenti non fit injuria — to one who is willing, no injury is done. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LEAVE AND LICENSE, p. 706; scan anchor: djvu line 118757 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines leave-and-license as consent defeating trespass; volenti is the canonical maxim of consent-as-defense — an exact match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LEGACY

[Law: anti-lapse statutes — gifts to predeceased legatees saved for their issue]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The lapse the entry defines — the legatee dying before the testator — is now qualified by anti-lapse statutes, which save the gift for the predeceased legatee's surviving issue. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: anti-lapse statutes — gifts to predeceased legatees saved for their issue. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LEGACY, p. 707; scan anchor: djvu line 118849 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines lapse; the anti-lapse statutes are the genuine modern qualification — the footnote states what now limits the entry's rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LEGATES

[Maxim: Legatos violare contra jus gentium est — to injure ambassadors is against the law of nations; Law: Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations (1961) — inviolability]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim — to injure ambassadors is against the law of nations — is the classical root of diplomatic inviolability, codified in the modern law of diplomacy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Legatos violare contra jus gentium est — to injure ambassadors is against the law of nations; Law: Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations (1961) — inviolability. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LEGATES, p. 708; scan anchor: djvu line 119144 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1961 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry's body (4 Coke, pref.) on legates; the Convention is its genuine modern codification — old root to living treaty. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LEGES

[Maxim: Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant — later laws abrogate prior laws contrary to them]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim states the temporal rule of statutory conflict: a later law abrogates a prior law contrary to it — the doctrine of implied repeal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant — later laws abrogate prior laws contrary to them. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LEGES, p. 709; scan anchor: djvu line 119261 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim in the entry (Broom, Max. 27, 29); it is the genuine rule of implied repeal — the most load-bearing of the entry's maxims. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LEGIBU8 SOLTTTUB

[Axiom: sovereign immunity — "the king can do no wrong"; suit only by consent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The emperor 'released from the laws' is the classical ancestor of sovereign immunity: the sovereign cannot be sued without its consent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: sovereign immunity — "the king can do no wrong"; suit only by consent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LEGIBU8 SOLTTTUB, p. 710; scan anchor: djvu line 119346 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the imperial prerogative; sovereign immunity is its genuine modern form — the link names the living doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LEGITIME

[Law: Louisiana forced heirship — the legitime (La. Civ. Code)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The legitime the entry defines — the portion a parent cannot take from his children without legal cause — survives in American law as Louisiana forced heirship. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Louisiana forced heirship — the legitime (La. Civ. Code). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LEGITIME, p. 710; scan anchor: djvu line 119465 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the civil-law legitime citing Louisiana cases; Louisiana forced heirship is its genuine living American form — the entry's own cases point there. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LEGITIM US

[Maxim: Pater est quem nuptiae demonstrant — the father is he whom the marriage points out]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim states the presumption of legitimacy: the father is he whom the marriage points out. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Pater est quem nuptiae demonstrant — the father is he whom the marriage points out. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LEGITIM US, p. 711; scan anchor: djvu line 119496 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted verbatim in the entry (Bract. fol. 63); the canonical presumption of legitimacy — the genuine rule the maxim states. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LETTRE

[Law: Habeas Corpus Act 1679; U.S. Const. art. I, § 9 — Suspension Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The lettres de cachet the entry describes — imprisonment without cause, trial, or stated reason — are the archetype of arbitrary detention answered by the writ of habeas corpus. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Habeas Corpus Act 1679; U.S. Const. art. I, § 9 — Suspension Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LETTRE, p. 713; scan anchor: djvu line 119892 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1679 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry narrates the abuse and its 1789 abolition; habeas corpus is the genuine legal institution raised against exactly such detention — the link names the remedy. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LIAKD

[New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964) — actual malice]

Who. The court deciding New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The common-law libel the entry expounds was constitutionally transformed: a public official cannot recover for defamation without proof of 'actual malice' — knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard of truth. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964) — actual malice. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LIAKD, p. 719; scan anchor: djvu line 120980 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1964 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry is the full pre-constitutional exposition of libel; Sullivan is the genuine modern constitutional frame of the tort — confident the case is real. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LETBADO

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8 — Congress: power to "grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal"]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The letter of marque the entry defines is the commission the Constitution empowers Congress to grant. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8 — Congress: power to "grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal". Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LETBADO, p. 712; scan anchor: djvu line 119703 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the letter of marque; the clause is its genuine constitutional source — quoted verbatim. FLAGGED: 'LETTER' is not a separate headword in the chunk; its definition is embedded across entry 474 (LETBADO)'s body and entry 475 (headword 'S')'s body — parent to place. LIBERTIES

[West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937)]

Who. The court deciding West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's paragraph 1 states the Lochner-era liberty-of-contract doctrine — liberty as the right to enter all contracts 'proper, necessary, and essential' — which the Supreme Court repudiated when it sustained minimum-wage legislation and ended the Lochner era. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U.S. 379 (1937). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LIBERTIES, p. 722; scan anchor: djvu line 121413 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1937 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry quotes Allgeyer v. Louisiana verbatim as its definition of Fourteenth Amendment 'liberty'; West Coast Hotel is the genuine case that overruled that reading — confident the citation is real. FLAGGED: 'LIBERTY' is not a separate headword in the chunk; the full LIBERTY entry is embedded in entry 513 (LIBERTIES)'s body — parent to place. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LIEUTENANT

[Maxim: Qui facit per alium facit per se]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'acting by vicarious authority' is the classic maxim of vicarious liability: he who acts through another is deemed to have acted himself. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Qui facit per alium facit per se. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LIEUTENANT, p. 726; scan anchor: djvu line 122251 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines a lieutenant etymologically as 'one who holds the post or office of another' and expressly invokes 'vicarious authority.' The maxim Qui facit per alium facit per se is the doctrinal root of vicarious liability and agency — the principal answers for the deputy's authorized acts because the deputy acts in the principal's stead. The link is definitional, not decorative: the maxim states the legal consequence of exactly the relation the entry describes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LIGEANCE

[Law: 8 U.S.C. § 1448 — naturalization oath renouncing foreign allegiance]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'faithful obedience of a citizen to his government' is given its modern statutory form in the naturalization oath, by which a new citizen renounces all foreign allegiance and swears allegiance to the United States. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 8 U.S.C. § 1448 — naturalization oath renouncing foreign allegiance. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LIGEANCE, p. 727; scan anchor: djvu line 122409 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1448 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines allegiance as the citizen's faithful obedience to his government. 8 U.S.C. § 1448 is the statute prescribing the oath every naturalized citizen takes, including the renunciation of 'all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty.' It is the chief living legal expression of the concept the entry defines, stated as a present statutory fact, not as commentary on

LIGHTERMAN

[Case: Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909 (1703)]

Who. The court deciding Case: Coggs v. Bernard (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'liable as a common carrier' rests on the common-law doctrine of the common carrier's strict liability for goods entrusted to him, classically systematized in the foundational bailment case. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Case: Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909 (1703). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LIGHTERMAN, p. 728; scan anchor: djvu line 122491 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1703 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's entire legal content is the single proposition that a lighterman answers as a common carrier. That liability is the common-law rule Holt C.J. expounded in Coggs v. Bernard, classifying bailments and fixing the carrier's extraordinary responsibility for goods committed to him. Naming the fountainhead authority genuinely illuminates the bare assertion; no broader principle is needed. LITEM SHAM FACERE

[Law: 28 U.S.C. § 455 — disqualification of a judge whose impartiality might reasonably be questioned]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's judge who 'from partiality or enmity, evidently favored either of the parties' states the exact mischief addressed by the federal judicial-disqualification statute, which requires disqualification where a judge's impartiality might reasonably be questioned. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 28 U.S.C. § 455 — disqualification of a judge whose impartiality might reasonably be questioned. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LITEM SHAM FACERE, p. 731; scan anchor: djvu line 123036 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's whole substance is judicial partiality as a wrong. 28 U.S.C. § 455 is the modern federal codification of the duty the entry describes the Roman judex violating. The link is substantive (same mischief, same remedy of stepping aside), not ornamental; loose [Law:] form used since no verbatim statutory quotation is ventured. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

LITIS DENUNCIATIO

[Law: UCC § 2-607(5) — vouching in the seller]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The civil-law vouching mechanism — a purchaser sued over property notifies his vendor and demands aid in defending the warranty — survives in modern sales law as 'vouching in' the seller. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-607(5) — vouching in the seller. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LITIS DENUNCIATIO, p. 732; scan anchor: djvu line 123268 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

Why. The entry describes notice to the warrantor with demand to defend; UCC § 2-607(5) provides that a buyer sued for breach of warranty may give the seller written notice of the litigation, and a seller who stands aside after seasonable notice is bound by determinations of fact common to the two actions. Same mechanism across fifteen centuries: notify the party ultimately liable and bind him by the result. Scope honestly noted: the UCC provision governs goods, the Roman form was general. LOAN

[Case: Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909 (1703)]

Who. The court deciding Case: Coggs v. Bernard (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'bailment without reward... to be used by the latter gratuitously' is the commodatum — the gratuitous loan for use — one of the six species of bailment systematized in the foundational bailment case. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Case: Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909 (1703). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LOAN, p. 733; scan anchor: djvu line 123440 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1703 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Holt C.J. in Coggs v. Bernard classified bailments, including commodatum: delivery of goods to be used gratuitously and returned, with the borrower answerable for the care appropriate to a gratuitous undertaking. The entry's definition maps exactly onto that species. Independent of the LIGHTERMAN annotation (different species, different reasoning); the case is among the most securely reported in the books. LOBBYING

[Case: Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 441 (1874)]

Who. The court deciding Case: Trist v. Child (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry defines lobbying as solicitation of legislators by means 'not addressed solely to the Judgment' — improper influence — and the law's answer is that contracts for such services are void as against public policy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Case: Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 441 (1874). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LOBBYING, p. 734; scan anchor: djvu line 123529 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1874 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's definition isolates the vice: influence not addressed to legislative judgment, procured by one who misrepresents. In Trist v. Child the Supreme Court held a contract for lobbying services — contingent compensation to procure legislation — void as against public policy. The case states the legal consequence of exactly the conduct the entry defines; citation taken from the reports with confidence. LOTTERY

[Case: FCC v. American Broadcasting Co., 347 U.S. 284 (1954)]

Who. The court deciding Case: FCC v. American Broadcasting Co. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's definition encodes the three classic elements of a lottery — prize, chance, and consideration — the triad the Supreme Court applied in holding that broadcast giveaway programs lacking consideration were not lotteries. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. 1954 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines a lottery as distribution 'of property by chance among persons who have paid... valuable consideration for the chance' — prize, chance, consideration. FCC v. American Broadcasting is the leading federal authority testing schemes against exactly those three elements. The case is the doctrinal home of the definition's own structure; citation taken from the reports with confidence. LUCRUM CESSANS

[Case: Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341 (1854)]

Who. The court deciding Case: Hadley v. Baxendale (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's civil-law distinction between lost gain (lucrum cessans) and actual loss (damnum datum) is the taxonomy within which the common law's great lost-profits authority operates: consequential damages are recoverable only as the parties' contemplation made them foreseeable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Case: Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341 (1854). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LUCRUM CESSANS, p. 741; scan anchor: djvu line 124706 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1854 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry draws the distinction; Hadley v. Baxendale states the recoverability rule for the lost-gain side — damages either arising naturally from the breach or within the reasonable contemplation of the parties (the mill-shaft case). The link is taxonomic and genuine: the entry names the category, the case governs its recovery. Citation among the most securely reported in contract law. [Maxim: Qui tacet consentire videtur]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Presence and silence at a transaction affecting one's interests, later treated as acquiescence barring disturbance of the arrangement, is the classical rule that he who is silent when he ought to speak is deemed to consent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Qui tacet consentire videtur. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LYING BY, p. 742; scan anchor: djvu line 124860 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states a rule of deemed acquiescence ('may be fairly supposed to acquiesce in it... prevented from doing so by reason that he has been lying by') — estoppel by silence. Qui tacet consentire videtur is that rule's classical formulation; the entry is nearly a paraphrase of the maxim. Genuine because the entry is rule-like, not a mere word-gloss. LYNCH LAW

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 — due process]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines lynch law by the absence of legal trial and lawful authority; the Fourteenth Amendment states the affirmative constitutional guarantee — no deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law — whose absence the entry describes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 — due process. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry LYNCH LAW, p. 742; scan anchor: djvu line 124898 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's substance is punishment 'without legal trial, and without the warrant or authority of law.' The Due Process Clause is the constitutional prohibition of exactly that: summary deprivation without process. The link is definitional and legal, not moralizing; loose [Law:] form, clause text stated only as confidently known. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MACHINE

[Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — patentable subject matter: 'process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter']

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines 'machine' as used in patent law; the patent statute is what gives the term that significance, naming 'machine' among the classes of patentable subject matter. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — patentable subject matter: 'process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MACHINE, p. 743; scan anchor: djvu line 125035 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's definition exists because 35 U.S.C. § 101 makes 'machine' a statutory category of patentable invention. The statute is the source of the patent-law meaning the entry expounds. Genuine: without the statutory category, the entry's 'in patent law' qualifier has no anchor. Section content stated as confidently known; loose [Law:] form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MAJESTAS

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Roman crimen majestatis — 'an offense against sovereignty... i.e., high treason' — is one of the few offenses the American Constitution itself defines, limiting treason to levying war against the United States or adhering to their enemies. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MAJESTAS, p. 747; scan anchor: djvu line 125820 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines high treason as the offense against sovereignty and the people's organic life. Article III, § 3 is the American law of that same offense-category: 'Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort.' Same offense, two legal orders; the clause gives the concept its modern constitutional content. Loose [Law:] form; clause text stated as confidently known. MANDAMIENTO

[Case: Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803)]

Who. The court deciding Case: Marbury v. Madison (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The high prerogative writ the entry defines — 'We command,' issuing from a court of superior jurisdiction — is the writ at the center of the landmark American mandamus decision, in which the relator sought mandamus against the Secretary of State. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Case: Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MANDAMIENTO, p. 753; scan anchor: djvu line 126749 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1803 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry's whole subject is the writ of mandamus. Marbury v. Madison is the most famous American instance of that writ: William Marbury's prayer was for mandamus compelling delivery of his commission, and the decision both disposed of the mandamus claim and established judicial review. The case is the writ's canonical American authority; citation taken from the reports with confidence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MANJTMISSION

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIII — 'Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude... shall exist within the United States']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines manumission as the act of liberating a slave from bondage; the Thirteenth Amendment is the supreme-law instance of that act — the constitutional abolition of slavery and involuntary servitude in the United States. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. XIII — 'Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude... shall exist within the United States'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MANJTMISSION, p. 757; scan anchor: djvu line 127414 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's substance is liberation from bondage as a legal act. The Thirteenth Amendment performs that act at the constitutional level, ending the status the entry's verb ('liberating a slave') presupposes. Same act, highest authority; the entry already cites a manumission case (Fenwick v. Chapman, 9 Pet. 472), and the Amendment names the capstone. Amendment text stated as confidently known; loose [Law:] form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MARQUE AND REPRISAL, LETTERS OF

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11 — Congress may 'grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The law-of-nations instrument the entry expounds — letters authorizing reprisal when one state's subjects are oppressed by another's — has its American constitutional home in Congress's power to grant letters of marque and reprisal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11 — Congress may 'grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MARQUE AND REPRISAL, LETTERS OF, p. 762; scan anchor: djvu line 128159 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the instrument and its law-of-nations ground. Article I, § 8, cl. 11 places that instrument in the American constitutional order, vesting the granting power in Congress alongside the powers to declare war and make rules concerning captures. The entry gives the what; the clause gives the where in our law. Clause stated as confidently known; loose [Law:] form. MARTIAL LAW

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

[Case: Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 2 (1866)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry defines martial law as the commander's arbitrary rule in war, suspending ordinary law; the Supreme Court's great war-powers decision states its constitutional boundary — martial law can never exist where the civil courts are open and unobstructed. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Case: Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 2 (1866). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MARTIAL LAW, p. 763; scan anchor: djvu line 128462 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1866 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry gives the what: rule by the commander's will in hostile or insurgent-held districts. Ex parte Milligan gives the controlling American limit: even in war, martial rule cannot be imposed where the courts are open and exercising jurisdiction. The case is the authority that bounds the power the entry describes; citation among the most securely reported in constitutional law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MELDFEOH

[Law: 31 U.S.C. § 3730 — False Claims Act qui tam relator's share]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Saxon informer's fee — recompense to him who discovers another's breach of the penal laws — is the ancient root of the modern qui tam reward, by which a private relator who exposes fraud on the government receives a share of the recovery. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 31 U.S.C. § 3730 — False Claims Act qui tam relator's share. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MELDFEOH, p. 770; scan anchor: djvu line 129538 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's whole substance is the reward mechanism: payment to the discoverer of penal-law breaches. 31 U.S.C. § 3730 codifies that mechanism's modern form — the qui tam relator's share of False Claims Act recoveries. Same mechanism across the centuries: the law pays the informer. Genuine doctrinal lineage, not ornament; loose [Law:] form. MERCHANTABLE

[Law: UCC § 2-314 — implied warranty of merchantability]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's quality term — 'fit for sale; vendible in market' — is the operative term of the implied warranty of merchantability, which the sales statute implies in every contract for the sale of goods by a merchant dealing in goods of that kind. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-314 — implied warranty of merchantability. Host locus: Black's

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MERCHANTABLE, p. 773; scan anchor: djvu line 130145 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines 'merchantable' as a quality standard. UCC § 2-314 is what gives that standard operative legal force: a warranty that goods shall be merchantable is implied where the seller is a merchant with respect to goods of that kind. The entry gives the word; the statute gives the warranty. Same pattern as MACHINE → 35 U.S.C. § 101. Section content stated as confidently known; loose [Law:] form. METES AND BOUNDS

[Maxim: Id certum est quod certum reddi potest — that is certain which can be made certain]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Land described by boundary lines and terminating points must be legally identifiable; where a description is vague, it survives if it can be made certain by reference to the description itself. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Id certum est quod certum reddi potest — that is certain which can be made certain. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry METES AND BOUNDS, p. 776; scan anchor: djvu line 130625 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's subject is the identification of land by boundaries; the genuine legal question a metes-and-bounds description raises is definiteness, and this maxim is the governing rule of construction for that exact question. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

METHOD

[Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — 'process' is a patentable subject-matter class]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry asks whether a 'method' can be the subject of a patent; federal law lists 'process' — a mode of treatment of materials producing a useful result — among the classes of patentable subject matter. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — 'process' is a patentable subject-matter class. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry METHOD, p. 776; scan anchor: djvu line 130640 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is itself a patent-law question about methods as patentable things, and the statute's 'process' class is the modern statutory answer to exactly that question. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ME TUB

[Law: common-law doctrine of duress — a contract obtained by duress is voidable at the victim's election]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Metus is defined as the degree of fear that amounts to duress avoiding a contract; at common law a contract induced by such duress is voidable at the election of the party coerced. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law doctrine of duress — a contract obtained by duress is

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's stated payoff is duress avoiding a contract; the voidability rule is the doctrine that gives the definition legal effect, cited in the loose [Law:] form because duress is common law, not a single codified section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MIDDLE THREAD

[Axiom: riparian thread rule — a grant bounded by a non-navigable stream extends to the middle thread]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Where a non-navigable stream forms the boundary of a grant, the grantee's line runs to the thread — the imaginary center line of the current — absent contrary intent in the deed. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: riparian thread rule — a grant bounded by a non-navigable stream extends to the middle thread. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MIDDLE THREAD, p. 777; scan anchor: djvu line 130786 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the middle thread; the thread rule is the substantive doctrine that makes the definition legally operative, and no case citation was added because none was verifiable. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MILITIA

[Law: U.S. Constitution art. I, § 8, cls. 15–16 — congressional power over the militia]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Constitution empowers Congress 'to provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions' and to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Constitution art. I, § 8, cls. 15–16 — congressional power over the militia. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MILITIA, p. 778; scan anchor: djvu line 130969 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

MIND

[Law: common-law testamentary capacity — a testator must have a sound mind and memory at execution]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'mind and memory' is the testamentary-capacity phrase: a valid will requires the testator to possess a sound mind and memory capable of understanding the nature of the act at the time of execution. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law testamentary capacity — a testator must have a sound mind and memory at execution. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MIND, p. 779; scan anchor: djvu line 131094 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

Why. MINISTERIAL

[Law: mandamus — lies to compel a ministerial act, not to direct discretion]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The ministerial/discretionary divide governs mandamus: the writ lies to compel performance of a clear ministerial act, but never to control or direct the exercise of discretion. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

MINOR

[Law: infancy doctrine — a minor's contracts are voidable at the minor's election, except for necessaries]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Minority's legal significance is the infancy doctrine: a minor's contracts are generally voidable at the minor's election, saving contracts for necessaries. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: infancy doctrine — a minor's contracts are voidable at the minor's election, except for necessaries. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MINOR, p. 781; scan anchor: djvu line 131448 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the minor as one under the age of legal competence; the voidability rule is the substantive consequence of that status in contract law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MINT

[Law: U.S. Constitution art. I, § 8, cl. 5 — congressional power to coin money]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A mint exists by sovereign authority; in the United States the Constitution gives Congress the power 'to coin Money, regulate the Value thereof.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The mineral estate may be severed from the surface estate, so that the mine — the excavation and the minerals — can be owned apart from the land above it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the mine as the excavation from which minerals are taken; the severance doctrine is the property-law rule giving the mine independent legal significance. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MISADVENTURE

[Maxim: Actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make a man guilty unless his mind be guilty]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Homicide by misadventure — a killing in the doing of a lawful act without intent of hurt — is excused because guilt requires a guilty mind as well as a guilty act. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make a man guilty unless his mind be guilty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISADVENTURE, p. 782; scan anchor: djvu line 131628 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

MISFORTUNE

[Maxim: Actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea — the act does not make a man guilty unless his mind be guilty]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. In homicide law misfortune always implies the actor was engaged in no unlawful act; without a guilty mind the killing is misadventure, not crime. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

[Law: the mischief rule of statutory construction — read the statute against the evil it was meant to cure]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Where a statute names the mischief — the evil or danger it was intended to cure — courts construe the statute in light of that mischief and the remedy provided. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the mischief rule of statutory construction — read the statute against the evil it was meant to cure. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISCHIEF, p. 783; scan anchor: djvu line 131718 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's legislative-parlance definition of mischief is the very premise of the mischief rule; the rule turns the definition into a method of interpretation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MISDESCRIPTION

[Law: common-law doctrine of misrepresentation — material deception in the subject-matter avoids the contract]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A contract induced by a misdescription that deceives a party in a material point is voidable: fraud and material misrepresentation vitiate consent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law doctrine of misrepresentation — material deception in the subject-matter avoids the contract. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISDESCRIPTION, p. 783; scan anchor: djvu line 131799 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines misdescription as error deceiving a party to his injury; the misrepresentation doctrine is the genuine rule of consequence for exactly that fact pattern. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MISDIRECTION

[Axiom: reversible error must be prejudicial; harmless error does not reverse]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An error in instructing the jury reverses the judgment only if prejudicial; harmless error — error not affecting the substantial rights of the parties — does not warrant reversal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: reversible error must be prejudicial; harmless error does not reverse. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISDIRECTION, p. 783; scan anchor: djvu line 131805 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states that misdirection is error for which judgment may be reversed; the axiom states the genuine condition — prejudice — that appellate review actually requires. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MISFEASANCE

[Axiom: misfeasance is actionable as undertaken performance done improperly; nonfeasance requires a pre-existing duty]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. One who undertakes a lawful act answers for injury caused by its improper performance; mere nonfeasance — failure to act — is actionable only where a duty to act already existed. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: misfeasance is actionable as undertaken performance done improperly; nonfeasance requires a pre-existing duty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISFEASANCE, p. 784; scan anchor: djvu line 131862 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines misfeasance against the implied nonfeasance contrast; the undertaking/duty distinction is the genuine tort doctrine that gives the contrast legal content. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MISERABILE DEPOSITUM

[Law: Roman-law rule of the necessary deposit (depositum necessarium) — the depositary in extremity answered in double damages]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The necessary deposit — made in extremity, as by shipwreck, fire, or other calamity — was guarded by a heightened duty: Roman law gave the depositor an action in double damages against a faithless depositary. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Roman-law rule of the necessary deposit (depositum necessarium) — the depositary in extremity answered in double damages. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISERABILE DEPOSITUM, p. 783; scan anchor: djvu line 131826 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the involuntary deposit under pressing necessity; the duplum action is the genuine doctrine that made the classification matter, kept in loose form since no Digest citation was verified. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MISNOMER

[Maxim: Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat — error in the name is nothing where the person is certain]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A misnomer does not vitiate the instrument where the person is otherwise certainly identified: error in the name is nothing when there is certainty as to the body. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat — error in the name is nothing where the person is certain. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISNOMER, p. 784; scan anchor: djvu line 131915 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines misnomer as an incorrect name in a pleading or deed; the maxim is the genuine rule of consequence — the misnaming is immaterial if identity is certain. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MISPRISION

[Law: common-law misprision of felony — concealment of a known felony is itself an offense]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Misprision of felony is the concealment of a known felony without making it known to authority; mere knowledge unreported, without assent to the crime, is itself the offense. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law misprision of felony — concealment of a known felony is itself an offense. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISPRISION, p. 784; scan anchor: djvu line 131933 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines misprision in terms of concealment and contempt; the duty-to-disclose principle is the genuine doctrine giving the definition legal content, kept loose-form to avoid anachronistic code citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MISREADING

[Law: non est factum — a deed misread to an illiterate or blind man is not his deed]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A deed whose contents were falsely read to an illiterate or blind party is not his deed: the plea of non est factum defeats an instrument the party never understood himself to be signing. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: non est factum — a deed misread to an illiterate or blind man is not his deed. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISREADING, p. 784; scan anchor: djvu line 131980 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the classic non est factum fact pattern and cites 5 Coke, 19 itself; the plea is the genuine defense the definition exists to support. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MISREPRESENTATION

[Law: UCC § 2-721 — remedies for material misrepresentation or fraud]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A contract induced by an intentional, material false statement of fact is voidable for fraud, and the defrauded party is not limited to rescission but may affirm and sue for damages. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-721 — remedies for material misrepresentation or fraud. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISREPRESENTATION, p. 784; scan anchor: djvu line 131992 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines fraudulent misrepresentation inducing a contract; UCC § 2-721 is the real statutory section governing remedies for exactly that wrong in the sale of goods. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MISTAKE

[Law: equitable relief for mutual mistake of material fact; mistake of law generally no excuse]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Equity relieves against mutual mistake of material fact, but the classical rule denied relief for bare mistake of law — the ignorance-of-law/ignorance-of-fact divide the entry's own definitions raise. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: equitable relief for mutual mistake of material fact; mistake of law generally no excuse. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISTAKE, p. 785; scan anchor: djvu line 132065 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines mistake as the product of ignorance of law or fact; the fact/law divide in granting relief is the genuine doctrine that divide exists to serve. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MISTRIAL

[United States v. Perez, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 579 (1824)]

Who. The court deciding United States v. Perez (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Retrial after a mistrial does not offend double jeopardy where the first trial was discharged for manifest necessity: the defendant's 'valued right' to one trial yields to the public interest in fair adjudication. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: United States v. Perez, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 579 (1824). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISTRIAL, p. 785; scan anchor: djvu line 132130 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1824 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the nugatory trial; Perez is the genuine foundational authority on the consequence that matters — when the state may try again — and the citation is used only because it is certain. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MITOYENNETR

[Axiom: party-wall doctrine — mutual easements of support in a common dividing structure]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A wall, ditch, or hedge dividing two estates and owned in common gives each neighbor mutual rights of support and maintenance — the party-wall doctrine of reciprocal easements. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: party-wall doctrine — mutual easements of support in a common dividing structure. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MITOYENNETR, p. 786; scan anchor: djvu line 132184 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's French joint-ownership term is genuinely illuminated for an English-law reader by the common-law party-wall doctrine, which governs the same physical and legal situation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MIXED

[Maxim: Ad quaestionem juris respondent judices, ad quaestionem facti juratores — judges answer questions of law, jurors questions of fact]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. On a trial, questions of law are for the judge and questions of fact for the jury; a mixed question — law applied to found facts — is resolved by the jury under the court's instruction. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ad quaestionem juris respondent judices, ad quaestionem facti juratores — judges answer questions of law, jurors questions of fact. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MIXED, p. 786; scan anchor: djvu line 132227 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines mixed questions as involving both law and fact; the maxim is the genuine allocation rule that makes the classification matter. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MIXTION

[Law: doctrine of confusion of goods — the wrongful commingler bears the loss]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Where one wrongfully commingles his goods with another's so they cannot be separated, the wrongdoer bears the loss and the innocent party takes the whole mass. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: doctrine of confusion of goods — the wrongful commingler bears the loss. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MIXTION, p. 786; scan anchor: djvu line 132262 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the confusion of goods; the loss-allocation rule is the genuine property doctrine the definition exists to trigger. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MOB

[Law: common-law riot — tumultuous disturbance by three or more persons]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. At common law a riot is a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three or more persons acting in concert toward a common unlawful purpose. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law riot — tumultuous disturbance by three or more persons. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MOB, p. 786; scan anchor: djvu line 132277 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the mob as a violent, disorderly assemblage defying law; the riot elements are the genuine criminal-law content of that definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MOBILIA

[Maxim: Mobilia sequuntur personam — movables follow the law of the person]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Movables follow the law of the person: succession to and disposition of movable property are governed by the law of the owner's domicile, not the situs of the goods. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Mobilia sequuntur personam — movables follow the law of the person. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MOBILIA, p. 786; scan anchor: djvu line 132308 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself quotes the maxim as its authority; the conflicts rule for movables is the genuine doctrine the maxim states, so the annotation explains rather than invents. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MODERAMEN INCULPATES TUTELS

[Law: moderamen inculpatae tutelae — self-defense is limited to proportionate, necessary force]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Justifiable defense is bounded by the due measure of blameless defense: force used in self-defense must be proportionate to the threat and cease when the danger ceases. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: moderamen inculpatae tutelae — self-defense is limited to proportionate, necessary force. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MODERAMEN INCULPATES TUTELS, p. 787; scan anchor: djvu line 132347 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the Roman-law name of the proportionality rule itself; the note states the rule's genuine content rather than importing anything foreign. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MODERATA MISERICORDIA

[Law: Magna Carta (1215) — amercements proportioned to the fault, the writ's stated foundation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Amercements must be proportioned to the offense: the writ lies where a court not of record amerces beyond the quality or quantity of the transgression. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Magna Carta (1215) — amercements proportioned to the fault, the writ's stated foundation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MODERATA MISERICORDIA, p. 787; scan anchor: djvu line 132355 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry says the writ is 'founded on Magna Charta'; the proportionality principle of the Charter's amercement chapter is the genuine source, cited loosely per the entry's own attribution. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MISSING SHIP

[Law: marine-insurance presumption of loss from lapse of time — a missing ship is presumed lost]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In marine insurance, a vessel missing beyond the average duration of similar voyages at the same season is presumed lost, and the presumption supports a claim for total loss. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: marine-insurance presumption of loss from lapse of time — a missing ship is presumed lost. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISSING SHIP, p. 785; scan anchor: djvu line 132043 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the missing ship by elapsed time exceeding the ordinary voyage; the presumption of loss is the genuine insurance-law consequence of that definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MISUSER

[Law: quo warranto — the writ to forfeit an office or franchise abused by misuser]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Abuse of an office or franchise (misuser) may work its forfeiture, and the writ of quo warranto lies to try the right and oust the usurper. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: quo warranto — the writ to forfeit an office or franchise abused by misuser. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MISUSER, p. 785; scan anchor: djvu line 132136 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines misuser as abuse of office or franchise citing 2 Bl. Comm. 153; forfeiture by quo warranto is the genuine remedy for exactly that abuse. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MOERDA

[Axiom: murder requires malice aforethought]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought — the malice distinguishing it from manslaughter and from excusable homicide. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: murder requires malice aforethought. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MOERDA, p. 788; scan anchor: djvu line 132547 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the one-word Saxon definition of murder; the malice-aforethought requirement is the genuine common-law content distinguishing the crime. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MOHATRA

[Axiom: substance over form in usury — a transaction's true character as a loan is determined by its substance, not its disguise]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A sham sale on credit at a high price with immediate resale for cash is a device to evade usury laws; courts look through the form of the transaction to its substance and treat the disguised premium as interest. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: substance over form in usury — a transaction's true character as a loan is determined by its substance, not its disguise. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MOHATRA, p. 788; scan anchor: djvu line 132561 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines mohatra as a fraudulent device to evade usury laws; the substance-over-form rule is the genuine doctrine courts use to defeat exactly such devices. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MOIETY

[Axiom: joint tenancy — seisin per my et per tout with survivorship] [Law: qui tam / moiety statutes — the informer takes half the penalty]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Joint tenants hold by moieties — each seised per my et per tout, of the half and of the whole — with the right of survivorship; and 'moiety acts' are penal statutes giving half the fine to the informer, the qui tam lineage. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: joint tenancy — seisin per my et per tout with survivorship] [Law: qui tam / moiety statutes — the informer takes half the penalty. MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT

[Law: justification in trespass — reasonable force to keep the peace, the office of the molliter manus imposuit plea]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. One may gently lay hands upon another to keep the peace or prevent a breach of it; reasonable force for that purpose is justified and defeats an action of trespass or assault. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: justification in trespass — reasonable force to keep the peace, the office of the molliter manus imposuit plea. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT, p. 788; scan anchor: djvu line 132606 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the Latin plea justifying the gentle laying-on of hands to keep the peace; the justification rule is the plea's entire legal content. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MONET

[Law: legal tender — lawful money is the medium in which debts are discharged]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Money is the just medium and measure of commutable things; tender of lawful money discharges a debt, and a creditor cannot be compelled to accept anything else in payment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: legal tender — lawful money is the medium in which debts are discharged. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MONET, p. 788; scan anchor: djvu line 132692 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry quotes 'Moneta est justum medium et mensura rerum commutabilium' as money's definition; the legal-tender rule is the genuine doctrine giving that definition operative force, kept distinct from the coinage-power note on MINT. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MONOGAMY

[Law: bigamy — a second marriage during the subsistence of the first is criminal]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Marriage contracted between one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others; contracting a second marriage while the first subsists is the crime of bigamy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: bigamy — a second marriage during the subsistence of the first is criminal. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MONOGAMY, p. 790; scan anchor: djvu line 132878 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines monogamy expressly against bigamy and polygamy; the criminal prohibition of bigamy is the genuine legal content of that opposition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MONOPOLY

[Law: Sherman Act § 2 — monopolization of trade unlawful]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The common-law hostility to monopolies quoted in the entry (11 Coke 80) continues in the federal prohibition: monopolization or attempted monopolization of trade or commerce is unlawful. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Sherman Act § 2 — monopolization of trade unlawful. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MONOPOLY, p. 790; scan anchor: djvu line 132925 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines monopoly in commercial law and cites the Case of Monopolies lineage; Sherman Act § 2 is the genuine modern statutory expression of that hostility, and the section is certain. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MOOKTARNAMA

[Maxim: Qui facit per alium facit per se — he who acts through another acts himself]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A written authority constituting an agent binds the principal: what the agent does within the authority is in law the act of the principal himself. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Qui facit per alium facit per se — he who acts through another acts himself. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MOOKTARNAMA, p. 790; scan anchor: djvu line 133079 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the power of attorney as the instrument constituting an agent; the maxim is the genuine agency principle that gives the instrument its legal effect. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MOORING

[Law: marine-insurance warranty of safe mooring — freedom from immediate insured peril]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A vessel is 'moored in safety' within a marine policy only when made fast free from immediate danger from the perils insured against; the warranty is breached by exposure to an imminent insured peril. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: marine-insurance warranty of safe mooring — freedom from immediate insured peril. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MOORING, p. 790; scan anchor: djvu line 133093 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines moored-in-safety by reference to a marine policy; the warranty rule is the genuine insurance-law content of that definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MORA

[Maxim: Mora reprobatur in lege — delay is reprobated in law] [Law: laches and limitation — stale claims are barred]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Delay is reprobated in law: equity aids the vigilant, not those who sleep upon their rights, and statutes of limitation bar the stale claim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Mora reprobatur in lege — delay is reprobated in law] [Law: laches and limitation — stale claims are barred. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MORA, p. 790; scan anchor: djvu line 133148 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself quotes the maxim; the note gives its genuine modern content — laches and limitation periods — rather than leaving the Latin bare. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MONTH

[Law: common-law construction — 'month' means a lunar month unless a calendar month is expressed]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. At common law 'month' in a legal instrument meant a lunar month of twenty-eight days unless a calendar month was expressed or plainly intended. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law construction — 'month' means a lunar month unless a calendar month is expressed. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MONTH, p. 790; scan anchor: djvu line 133027 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry catalogues the varieties of month; the lunar-month default is the genuine historical rule of construction for the term in legal instruments. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MORE OR LESS

[Law: sale in gross — 'more or less' disclaims warranty of quantity; boundaries control]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In a conveyance, 'more or less' after a statement of quantity negates warranty of the quantity: it is a sale in gross, the tract passing by its boundaries regardless of excess or deficiency. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: sale in gross — 'more or less' disclaims warranty of quantity; boundaries control. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MORE OR LESS, p. 792; scan anchor: djvu line 133278 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the phrase as denying warranty of quantity with the tract passing regardless; the sale-in-gross doctrine is the genuine name and rule for that construction. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MORMONISM

[Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145 (1878)]

Who. The court deciding Reynolds v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Plural marriages are indictable under federal and Utah statutes, and the Supreme Court upheld the federal anti-bigamy law against a free-exercise defense: religious belief does not excuse the criminal act. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145 (1878). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MORMONISM, p. 792; scan anchor: djvu line 133313 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1878 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry states the indictability of plural marriage under U.S. and Utah statutes; Reynolds is the certain landmark deciding exactly that question, so the citation is genuine, not decorative. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MORT CIVILE

[Law: attainder — felony conviction worked corruption of blood and forfeiture at common law]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. At common law conviction of felony worked attainder: corruption of blood and forfeiture of estate — the English ancestor of the civil death the entry describes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: attainder — felony conviction worked corruption of blood and forfeiture at common law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MORT CIVILE, p. 793; scan anchor: djvu line 133350 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes civil death upon felony conviction with succession passing as on intestacy; attainder is the genuine common-law doctrine behind those consequences. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MORTGAGE

[Maxim: Once a mortgage, always a mortgage — the equity of redemption cannot be clogged]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Once a mortgage, always a mortgage: the mortgagor's equity of redemption cannot be clogged or fettered by any stipulation in the mortgage itself. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Once a mortgage, always a mortgage — the equity of redemption cannot be clogged. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MORTGAGE, p. 793; scan anchor: djvu line 133382 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the mortgage as a conditional conveyance defeasible on performance; the equity-of-redemption maxim is the genuine equitable doctrine that defines the mortgagor's protected interest. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MORTGAGEE

[Law: mortgagee in possession — equitable duty to account for rents and profits]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A mortgagee in possession must account for the rents and profits received from the mortgaged premises, applying them toward the debt. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: mortgagee in possession — equitable duty to account for rents and profits. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MORTGAGEE, p. 794; scan anchor: djvu line 133583 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the mortgagee in possession by reference to satisfaction of his lien; the duty to account is the genuine equitable obligation attached to that possession. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MORTIS CAUSA

[Law: donatio mortis causa — revocable deathbed gift requiring delivery]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A donatio mortis causa — a gift in contemplation of death — is revocable until the donor's death, requires delivery, and fails if the donor recovers. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: donatio mortis causa — revocable deathbed gift requiring delivery. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MORTIS CAUSA, p. 794; scan anchor: djvu line 133617 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry introduces the phrase through donatio mortis causa; the revocability-and-delivery requirements are the genuine doctrine distinguishing it from an inter vivos gift. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MORTMAIN

[Law: statutes of mortmain — restraints on alienation of land to corporations]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The statutes of mortmain restrained the alienation of lands to corporations — the 'dead hand' — lest land become perpetually inalienable in ecclesiastical or corporate ownership. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: statutes of mortmain — restraints on alienation of land to corporations. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MORTMAIN, p. 794; scan anchor: djvu line 133627 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines mortmain as alienation to corporations producing perpetually inherent land; the statutes are the genuine legislative response the term exists to name. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MORTUARY TABLES

[Law: mortality tables — admissible to prove life expectancy in damage computation]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Mortality tables are admissible in evidence to establish a party's life expectancy in computing damages for wrongful death and personal injury. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: mortality tables — admissible to prove life expectancy in damage computation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MORTUARY TABLES, p. 794; scan anchor: djvu line 133666 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the tables as estimating probable duration of life; admissibility for life-expectancy proof is the genuine evidentiary use the definition serves. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MOTIVE

[Axiom: bad motive does not make a lawful act actionable; motive distinguished from intent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An act lawful in itself and violating no right is not actionable merely because done from a bad motive; motive — the inducement — is distinct from intent — the purpose. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: bad motive does not make a lawful act actionable; motive distinguished from intent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MOTIVE, p. 795; scan anchor: djvu line 133787 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states this rule as its central proposition; the annotation frames it as the genuine tort axiom it is, without quoting the entry as if it were external authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MULCT

[Maxim: Mulcta damnum famae non irrogat — a fine does not involve loss of character]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A pecuniary fine does not work infamy: mulct punishes the offense without attainting the offender's character. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Mulcta damnum famae non irrogat — a fine does not involve loss of character. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MULCT, p. 796; scan anchor: djvu line 133939 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself quotes the maxim as the law of mulcts; the note states its genuine content — fine without infamy — rather than importing anything foreign. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MULTIFARIOUSNESS

[Law: equity pleading — multifariousness is ground for demurrer]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A bill in equity joining distinct and independent matters against one or several defendants is multifarious and subject to demurrer. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: equity pleading — multifariousness is ground for demurrer. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MULTIFARIOUSNESS, p. 797; scan anchor: djvu line 134037 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the pleading fault; demurrer for multifariousness is the genuine procedural consequence the definition exists to support. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MULTIPLE POINDING

[Law: interpleader — the stakeholder compels rival claimants to settle their claims between themselves]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A stakeholder holding goods claimed by rival pretendants may compel the claimants to litigate among themselves, so that he is liable only in once and single payment — the office of interpleader. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: interpleader — the stakeholder compels rival claimants to settle their claims between themselves. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MULTIPLE POINDING, p. 797; scan anchor: djvu line 134060 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the Scotch action as corresponding to interpleader; the single-payment protection is the genuine doctrine both actions serve. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MULTIPLICITY

[Law: bill of peace — equity prevents multiplicity of actions]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Equity takes jurisdiction to prevent a multiplicity of suits: where many actions would lie on the same issue, a bill of peace settles the right once for all. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: bill of peace — equity prevents multiplicity of actions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MULTIPLICITY, p. 797; scan anchor: djvu line 134083 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines multiplicity of actions as obviated by the bill of peace; the prevention-of-multiplicity head of equity jurisdiction is the genuine doctrine the phrase names. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MULTITUDE

[Maxim: Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocinium — the multitude of those who err furnishes no excuse for error]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Numbers do not make wrong right: that many have erred the same way furnishes no patronage or excuse for the error. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocinium — the multitude of those who err furnishes no excuse for error. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MULTITUDE, p. 797; scan anchor: djvu line 134099 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself quotes the maxim as Coke's gloss on multitude; the note states its genuine content — concurrence in error is no defense. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION

[Law: Dillon's Rule — a municipal corporation has only state-granted powers]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A municipal corporation is the creature of the state: it possesses only those powers expressly granted to it, those necessarily implied, and those essential to its declared objects. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Dillon's Rule — a municipal corporation has only state-granted powers. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MUNICIPAL CORPORATION, p. 798; scan anchor: djvu line 134274 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the municipal corporation as created by government for political purposes with subordinate powers; Dillon's Rule is the genuine doctrine defining the limits of those powers. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MURDER

[Law: malice aforethought may be express or implied]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Malice aforethought — the distinguishing element of murder — may be express, as in a deliberate design to kill, or implied from the circumstances, as in a killing with a deadly weapon without provocation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: malice aforethought may be express or implied. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MURDER, p. 799; scan anchor: djvu line 134369 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry gives the full common-law definition of murder; express-versus-implied malice is the genuine doctrinal elaboration of its central element, kept distinct from the malice axiom already annotated on MOERDA. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MUTE

[Law: plea entered for the mute prisoner — the court enters not guilty on his behalf]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A prisoner who stands mute on arraignment is not thereby discharged: the court enters a plea of not guilty for him and the trial proceeds. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: plea entered for the mute prisoner — the court enters not guilty on his behalf. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MUTE, p. 800; scan anchor: djvu line 134588 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines standing mute on arraignment for treason or felony; the court-entered plea is the genuine procedural consequence that keeps the definition from being a dead end. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MUTUALITY

[Law: mutuality of obligation — both parties must be bound or neither is]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In a bilateral contract there must be mutuality of obligation: each party's promise must bind, or neither party is bound. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: mutuality of obligation — both parties must be bound or neither is. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MUTUALITY, p. 800; scan anchor: djvu line 134650 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines mutuality of assent and obligation in agreement; the both-bound-or-neither rule is the genuine contract doctrine the definition serves. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

MUTUUM

[Law: mutuum — ownership and risk pass to the borrower; an equivalent is returned]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In the loan for consumption ownership passes to the borrower at delivery: he bears the risk of loss and must return an equivalent in kind and quantity, not the identical things. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: mutuum — ownership and risk pass to the borrower; an equivalent is returned. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MUTUUM, p. 801; scan anchor: djvu line 134698 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines mutuum as a loan of consumables returnable in equivalent; the passage of ownership and risk is the genuine bailment-law content distinguishing it from commodatum. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MUTINY

[Law: mutiny punishable under military law (Articles of War)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Mutiny — insurrection of soldiers or seamen against their commanders — is punishable under military law, historically as a capital offense under the Articles of War. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: mutiny punishable under military law (Articles of War). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MUTINY, p. 800; scan anchor: djvu line 134619 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines mutiny and notes the Mutiny Act; punishability under military law is the genuine consequence the definition exists to trigger. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NAKED

[Maxim: Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio — from a naked pact no action arises]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A naked contract — nudum pactum — devoid of consideration is invalid: from a bare promise no action arises; and a naked authority, not coupled with an interest, is revocable at the principal's will. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio — from a naked pact no action arises. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NAKED, p. 802; scan anchor: djvu line 134801 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the naked contract as void for want of consideration; the maxim is the genuine rule of consequence, and the revocability of the naked authority is its agency-law corollary. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NARROW SEAS

[Law: territorial sea — coastal sovereignty over adjacent waters (cannon-shot rule)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Waters running between coasts not far apart raise the question of the territorial sea: the coastal state has sovereignty over the waters adjacent to its shores, historically measured by the cannon-shot or three-mile rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: territorial sea — coastal sovereignty over adjacent waters (cannon-shot rule). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NARROW SEAS, p. 803; scan anchor: djvu line 134906 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the narrow seas geographically; the territorial-sea doctrine is the genuine legal question that definition exists to raise. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NASOITURUS

[Law: the unborn child deemed in being — en ventre sa mere takes as if born, for beneficial purposes]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A child en ventre sa mere — in the mother's womb — is deemed already born whenever it is for its benefit, as to take under a marriage settlement or will. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the unborn child deemed in being — en ventre sa mere takes as if born, for beneficial purposes. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NASOITURUS, p. 803; scan anchor: djvu line 134911 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines nasciturus as the child hereafter born distinguished from natus; the deemed-born rule is the genuine doctrine giving the distinction legal effect in settlements. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NATION

[Cherokee Nation v. Georgia (1831) — Indian tribes as domestic dependent nations]

Who. The court deciding Cherokee Nation v. Georgia (1831) — Indian tribes as domestic dependent nations (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. An organized jural society may be a nation without being a foreign state: Indian tribes are domestic dependent nations, distinct political communities under the protection of the United States. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Cherokee Nation v. Georgia (1831) — Indian tribes as domestic dependent nations. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NATION, p. 803; scan anchor: djvu line 134926 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1831 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines nation broadly and cites Montoya v. U.S.; the domestic-dependent-nation doctrine is the genuine American-law application of that definition, cited year-only without reporter numbers. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NATURAE EAW

[Maxim: Lex iniusta non est lex — an unjust law is no law]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Natural law — the rule of conduct from the natural relations of human beings, prior to positive precept — judges human law: an unjust enactment is, in the Augustinian phrase, no law at all. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Lex iniusta non est lex — an unjust law is no law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NATURAE EAW, p. 803; scan anchor: djvu line 135177 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines jus naturae at length as binding on individuals and nations; the maxim is the genuine natural-law principle that gives the definition its critical edge, not a foreign import. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NATURALIZATION

[Law: U.S. Constitution art. I, § 8, cl. 4 — uniform rule of naturalization]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Constitution gives Congress the power 'to establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization' — the source of federal authority over the admission of aliens to citizenship. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Constitution art. I, § 8, cl. 4 — uniform rule of naturalization. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NATURALIZATION, p. 805; scan anchor: djvu line 135266 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines naturalization as clothing the alien with the citizen's rights; the constitutional clause is the genuine grant of power behind the act. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NATIVE

[Law: Fourteenth Amendment Citizenship Clause — birthright citizenship (U.S. v. Wong Kim Ark)]

Who. The court deciding Law: Fourteenth Amendment Citizenship Clause — birthright citizenship (U.S. v. Wong Kim Ark) (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Birth on the soil makes the citizen: the Fourteenth Amendment's Citizenship Clause confers citizenship on all persons born in the United States and subject to its jurisdiction. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fourteenth Amendment Citizenship Clause — birthright citizenship (U.S. v. Wong Kim Ark). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NATIVE, p. 803; scan anchor: djvu line 135072 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the native-born citizen and cites Wong Kim Ark itself; the Citizenship Clause is the genuine constitutional ground of that definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NATURALLY

[Law: Hadley v. Baxendale rule — consequential damages limited to the natural or contemplated]

Who. The court deciding Law: Hadley v. Baxendale rule — consequential damages limited to the natural or contemplated (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Damages for breach of contract are limited to those arising naturally in the usual course of things, or such as the parties reasonably contemplated as the probable result of breach. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Hadley v. Baxendale rule — consequential damages limited to the natural or contemplated. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NATURALLY, p. 805; scan anchor: djvu line 135293 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines 'naturally' in the damages sense with a case citation; the Hadley rule is the genuine doctrine the definition states, kept in loose form with the case name but no reporter numbers. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NAUTA

[Law: praetorian edict on nautae, caupones, stabularii — strict liability for goods received]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. By the praetor's edict, shipmasters — with innkeepers and stablekeepers — are answerable for the goods committed to them, a strict custodial liability surviving in the modern law of carriers and innkeepers. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: praetorian edict on nautae, caupones, stabularii — strict liability for goods received. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NAUTA, p. 805; scan anchor: djvu line 135348 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry cites Dig. 4, 9 as the nauta's source; the edict's strict custodial liability is the genuine doctrine of that title, not an imported gloss. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NAUTICUM FCENU8

[Law: bottomry/respondentia — the lender's maritime interest is lost with the ship]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Maritime interest on bottomry or respondentia is the price of the sea risk: the extraordinary rate is earned only if the venture survives — if the ship perishes, the lender loses the loan. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: bottomry/respondentia — the lender's maritime interest is lost with the ship. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NAUTICUM FCENU8, p. 805; scan anchor: djvu line 135373 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines nautical interest as the extraordinary rate for money lent on the hazard of the voyage; the risk-bearing term is the genuine maritime content of that definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NAVIGABLE

[Law: navigable-in-fact test — waters navigable in fact are navigable in law (The Daniel Ball)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In American law the English ebb-and-flow test does not govern: waters navigable in fact are navigable in law, and federal authority extends to waters that are or may be used as highways of interstate commerce. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: navigable-in-fact test — waters navigable in fact are navigable in law (The Daniel Ball). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NAVIGABLE, p. 806; scan anchor: djvu line 135432 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry expressly rejects the common-law tidal test for America; the navigable-in-fact test is the genuine doctrine replacing it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NE EXEAT BEPUBUCA

[Law: ne exeat — equitable writ restraining departure from the jurisdiction]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Ne exeat is the equitable writ restraining a defendant about to leave the state, granted to secure an equitable demand where the defendant's departure would defeat the court's jurisdiction. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: ne exeat — equitable writ restraining departure from the jurisdiction. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NE EXEAT BEPUBUCA, p. 807; scan anchor: djvu line 135644 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the American writ by reference to ne exeat regno; the restraint-to-secure-jurisdiction function is the genuine equitable content, annotated once on the American form to avoid duplication. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NE LUMINXBUB OFFICIATUR

[Law: ancient lights — prescriptive right to light through long-enjoyed windows]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The servitude restraining an owner from building so as to obstruct his neighbor's light survives in the common-law doctrine of ancient lights: a window long enjoyed gives a right to the light. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: ancient lights — prescriptive right to light through long-enjoyed windows. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NE LUMINXBUB OFFICIATUR, p. 807; scan anchor: djvu line 135667 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the Roman servitude ne luminibus officiatur; ancient lights is the genuine common-law parallel governing the same servitude. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NE QUID IN LOCO PUBLICO VEL IT IN ERE FIAT

[Law: public nuisance — no private obstruction of the public way]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Nothing may be put or erected in a public place or way: the interdict's modern content is the law of public nuisance — no private person may obstruct the public highway. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: public nuisance — no private obstruction of the public way. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NE QUID IN LOCO PUBLICO VEL IT IN ERE FIAT, p. 807; scan anchor: djvu line 135674 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the Roman interdict's title (Dig. 43, 8); public nuisance is the genuine doctrine carrying the same prohibition into modern law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NECESSARIES

[Law: infant's liability for necessaries — quasi-contractual recovery for necessaries furnished]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An infant is liable in quasi-contract for necessaries furnished to him — things proper and useful to his sustenance and station — though his other contracts are voidable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: infant's liability for necessaries — quasi-contractual recovery for necessaries furnished. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NECESSARIES, p. 808; scan anchor: djvu line 135806 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines necessaries as relative to the person's situation; the infant-necessaries rule is the genuine doctrine the definition exists to serve, complementing the infancy note on MINOR. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NECESSITY

[Maxim: Necessitas non habet legem — necessity has no law]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Necessity has no law: an act compelled by irresistible necessity — as the preservation of one's own life — may be justified where choice of conduct was impossible. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Necessitas non habet legem — necessity has no law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NECESSITY, p. 809; scan anchor: djvu line 135967 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry catalogues three kinds of legal necessity; the maxim is the genuine principle behind necessity as justification, not a foreign import. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NEGLIGENCE

[Law: reasonable-person standard — negligence measured objectively]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Negligence is judged by the objective standard: the omission to do what a reasonable person, guided by the considerations ordinarily regulating human conduct, would do in the same situation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: reasonable-person standard — negligence measured objectively. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NEGLIGENCE, p. 810; scan anchor: djvu line 136138 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the classic reasonable-man definition; the objective-standard rule is the genuine doctrine the definition states, framed as [Law:] rather than quoted back. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NEGOTIABLE

[Law: UCC Article 3 — holder in due course takes free of personal defenses]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The whole office of negotiability is the holder in due course: one who takes a negotiable instrument for value, in good faith, and without notice takes free of the transferor's personal defenses. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 3 — holder in due course takes free of personal defenses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NEGOTIABLE, p. 811; scan anchor: djvu line 136428 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines negotiability as transfer of title and the right to sue; the holder-in-due-course doctrine is the genuine commercial-law payoff of that definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NEGOTIOBTIM GESTIO

[Law: negotiorum gestio — the gestor owes due care and recovers necessary expenses]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. One who spontaneously intermeddles in another's affairs from benevolence is bound to complete the undertaking with due care, and may in turn recover necessary and useful expenses — quasi-contract on both sides. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: negotiorum gestio — the gestor owes due care and recovers necessary expenses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NEGOTIOBTIM GESTIO, p. 812; scan anchor: djvu line 136499 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the spontaneous agency; the due-care duty and expense recovery are the genuine civil-law consequences the definition exists to trigger. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NEMO

[Maxim: Nemo judex in causa sua — no one should be judge in his own cause]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. No one should be judge in his own cause: a tribunal with an interest in the outcome is disqualified, and justice must be administered by an impartial judge. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nemo judex in causa sua — no one should be judge in his own cause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NEMO, p. 812; scan anchor: djvu line 136567 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry catalogues the nemo maxims including 'a man cannot be a judge and a party in his own cause'; the maxim is the genuine root of disqualification for bias and natural justice. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NEUTRALITY

[Law: U.S. neutrality laws — no fitting out armed vessels or enlisting troops for a belligerent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A neutral takes no part between belligerents: fitting out or arming vessels, or enlisting troops, for either belligerent is forbidden by the neutrality laws. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. neutrality laws — no fitting out armed vessels or enlisting troops for a belligerent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NEUTRALITY, p. 816; scan anchor: djvu line 137127 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines neutrality and its 'neutrality laws' subhead; the prohibition is the genuine statutory content of that subhead. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NISI

[Law: decree/rule nisi — conditional order becoming absolute unless cause is shown]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A decree, rule, or order nisi is a conditional adjudication: it stands as valid and operative unless the party affected appears and shows cause against it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: decree/rule nisi — conditional order becoming absolute unless cause is shown. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NISI, p. 819; scan anchor: djvu line 137722 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines nisi as the 'unless' making adjudications conditional; the show-cause-or-stand rule is the genuine procedural content. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NO BILL

[Law: Fifth Amendment — no infamous prosecution without grand-jury presentment or indictment]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The grand jury's 'no bill' — not a true bill — is its screening office: no person may be held to answer for an infamous crime without the grand jury's presentment or indictment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fifth Amendment — no infamous prosecution without grand-jury presentment or indictment. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NO BILL, p. 820; scan anchor: djvu line 137796 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the no-bill endorsement; the Grand Jury Clause is the genuine constitutional ground of the screening function it records. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NOLLE PROSEQUI

[Law: prosecutorial discretion — the nolle prosequi as formal discontinuance]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The prosecutor may formally declare that he will no further prosecute — as to counts, defendants, or the whole case — an exercise of the executive discretion over criminal prosecution. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: prosecutorial discretion — the nolle prosequi as formal discontinuance. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOLLE PROSEQUI, p. 820; scan anchor: djvu line 137902 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the nolle prosequi as the prosecuting officer's declaration; prosecutorial discretion is the genuine doctrine the entry procedure expresses. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NOLO CONTENDERE

[Law: nolo contendere — conviction without collateral admission in civil proceedings]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Nolo contendere has the effect of a guilty plea for sentencing on the indictment, but it is not an admission of the facts usable against the defendant in a collateral civil action. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: nolo contendere — conviction without collateral admission in civil proceedings. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOLO CONTENDERE, p. 820; scan anchor: djvu line 137922 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the plea's dual effect itself; the note frames it as the genuine doctrine — punishment without estoppel — rather than quoting the entry back. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

XOCUBQBXTUM

[Law: private nuisance requires special damage — mere loss without legal injury is not actionable]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Only the injurious nuisance is remedied: a nocumentum damnosum — mere loss without legal injury — gives no action, while special damage beyond the public's makes the nuisance actionable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: private nuisance requires special damage — mere loss without legal injury is not actionable. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry XOCUBQBXTUM, p. 820; scan anchor: djvu line 137884 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry distinguishes nocumentum damnosum from injuriosum and notes remedy lay only for the latter; the special-damage rule is the genuine doctrine of that distinction. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NIGHT

[Law: common-law burglary — breaking and entering a dwelling-house in the nighttime]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Night is when darkness prevents discerning a man's face; the definition matters because common-law burglary is the breaking and entering of a dwelling-house in the nighttime. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law burglary — breaking and entering a dwelling-house in the nighttime. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NIGHT, p. 817; scan anchor: djvu line 137413 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry gives the common-law test of night from Hale; burglary's nighttime element is the genuine doctrine the test exists to serve. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NEW

[Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — patentable only if new and useful]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'New and useful' is the statutory threshold of patentability: only new and useful processes, machines, manufactures, and compositions of matter may be patented. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — patentable only if new and useful. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NEW, p. 816; scan anchor: djvu line 137157 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's patent-law subhead is the 'new and useful' phrase; the statute's threshold is its genuine source, complementing the METHOD note on patentable subject matter. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NOMINATE CONTRACTS

[Law: Roman consensual contracts — sale, hire, partnership, mandate bind by mere consent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Of the four Roman classes, the consensual contracts — sale, hire, partnership, mandate — bound by mere agreement without form: the ancestor of the modern rule that consent makes the contract. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Roman consensual contracts — sale, hire, partnership, mandate bind by mere consent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOMINATE CONTRACTS, p. 821; scan anchor: djvu line 138062 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry gives the fourfold division; the consensual class is the genuine living doctrine within it, connecting Roman form to modern contract law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NON-ACCESS

[Law: presumption of legitimacy — rebutted by proof of non-access]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A child born in wedlock is presumed legitimate, but proof of non-access — the absence of opportunity for intercourse between husband and wife — rebuts the presumption. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: presumption of legitimacy — rebutted by proof of non-access. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NON-ACCESS, p. 822; scan anchor: djvu line 138198 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines non-access in legal parlance as absence of intercourse or opportunity; the legitimacy presumption is the genuine doctrine the definition exists to defeat. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NON ACCREVIT INFRA SEX ANN08

[Law: limitation as affirmative defense — must be pleaded or waived]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Limitation is an affirmative defense: the statute does not extinguish the right of its own motion but must be pleaded — as by non accrevit — or it is waived. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: limitation as affirmative defense — must be pleaded or waived. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NON ACCREVIT INFRA SEX ANN08, p. 822; scan anchor: djvu line 138210 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is the plea of the statute of limitations; the must-be-pleaded rule is the genuine procedural content distinct from the substance of limitation already noted on MORA. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NON BIS IN IDEM

[Law: Fifth Amendment Double Jeopardy Clause — non bis in idem]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Not twice for the same: no person shall be twice tried or twice put in jeopardy for the same offense — the civil-law maxim answering to the Double Jeopardy Clause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fifth Amendment Double Jeopardy Clause — non bis in idem. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NON BIS IN IDEM, p. 823; scan anchor: djvu line 138298 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the maxim and its equivalence to the jeopardy rule itself; the constitutional clause is the genuine American anchor, not a foreign import. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NON COMPOS MENTIS

[Law: insanity defense — no criminal responsibility without a sound mind]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Criminal responsibility requires a sound mind: one who from mental derangement could not know the nature of the act or that it was wrong is excused from punishment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: insanity defense — no criminal responsibility without a sound mind. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NON COMPOS MENTIS, p. 823; scan anchor: djvu line 138334 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines non compos mentis across all varieties of mental derangement; the insanity excuse is the genuine criminal-law consequence of the status. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NON EST FACTUM

[Law: non est factum — denies execution in fact, not validity in law]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The plea denies execution in fact — that the deed was ever the defendant's deed — but it cannot be used to deny the deed's validity in point of law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: non est factum — denies execution in fact, not validity in law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NON EST FACTUM, p. 824; scan anchor: djvu line 138575 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself states this fact/law limit on the plea; the note frames it as the genuine scope rule, distinct from the misreading scenario annotated on MISREADING. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NON OBSTANTE

[Law: the dispensing power — the Crown's non obstante license, condemned by the Bill of Rights 1689]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The non obstante clause was the Crown's license to do what a statute restrained — the dispensing power, condemned when the Bill of Rights 1689 declared the pretended power of dispensing with laws illegal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the dispensing power — the Crown's non obstante license, condemned by the Bill of Rights 1689. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NON OBSTANTE, p. 826; scan anchor: djvu line 138872 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1689 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines the non obstante clause as a license to do what statute forbids; the dispensing-power controversy is the genuine constitutional history the clause exists to name. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NON PROSEQUITUR

[Law: dismissal for want of prosecution — non pros for the negligent plaintiff]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A plaintiff who neglects the steps his suit requires suffers judgment of non pros — dismissal for want of prosecution — and the defendant goes without day. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: dismissal for want of prosecution — non pros for the negligent plaintiff. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NON PROSEQUITUR, p. 827; scan anchor: djvu line 139013 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the non pros judgment for the plaintiff's neglect; dismissal for want of prosecution is the genuine doctrine the judgment expresses. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NON-USER

[Law: abandonment by non-user — easements lost, franchises forfeited]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A right acquired by use may be lost by non-user: abandonment extinguishes an easement, and neglect to exercise a franchise may work its forfeiture. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: abandonment by non-user — easements lost, franchises forfeited. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NON-USER, p. 828; scan anchor: djvu line 139204 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the rule outright for easements, franchises, and offices; the note frames it as the genuine abandonment/forfeiture doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NONSENSE

[Law: senseless words rejected — unintelligible matter struck as surplusage]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Unintelligible matter in a written agreement or will is rejected as surplusage: the instrument is construed as if the nonsense were not there. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: senseless words rejected — unintelligible matter struck as surplusage. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NONSENSE, p. 829; scan anchor: djvu line 139352 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines nonsense in instruments; the rejection-as-surplusage rule is the genuine construction doctrine the definition exists to trigger. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NON VALENTIA AGERE

[Maxim: Contra non valentem agere nulla currit praescriptio — prescription does not run against one unable to act]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Prescription does not run against one unable to sue: inability to act — non valentia agere — suspends the running of limitation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Contra non valentem agere nulla currit praescriptio — prescription does not run against one unable to act. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NON VALENTIA AGERE, p. 829; scan anchor: djvu line 139246 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the phrase as inability to sue; the maxim is the genuine prescription doctrine the phrase names. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NON-MAILABLE

[Law: exclusion from the mails — obscene matter barred (Comstock laws)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Letters and parcels excluded by law from the mails — by size, nature, or obscene character — are non-mailable; the obscenity exclusion is the Comstock legislation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: exclusion from the mails — obscene matter barred (Comstock laws). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NON-MAILABLE, p. 826; scan anchor: djvu line 138829 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines non-mailable by legal exclusion and names obscene character; the Comstock exclusion is the genuine statutory content of that ground. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NON JURIDICUS

[Law: dies non juridicus — no judicial proceedings on Sundays and legal holidays]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A dies non juridicus is a day on which judicial proceedings cannot be had — the Sunday and legal-holiday rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: dies non juridicus — no judicial proceedings on Sundays and legal holidays. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NON JURIDICUS, p. 826; scan anchor: djvu line 138781 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines dies non juridicus as a day barring legal proceedings; the Sunday rule is the genuine doctrine the term states. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MESSAGE, PRESIDENT’S

[Law: U.S. Constitution art. II, § 3 — President's duty to give Congress information of the State of the Union]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry is the constitutional duty of Article II, Section 3: the President 'shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Constitution art. II, § 3 — President's duty to give Congress information of the State of the Union. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MESSAGE, PRESIDENT’S, p. 775; scan anchor: djvu line 130492 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The dictionary entry itself cites 'Const U. S. art. 2, § 3' as its authority; the constitutional clause is the entry's whole subject, so the link is direct rather than force-fit. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

MUNITIONS OP WAR

[Law: contraband of war — munitions destined to a belligerent are liable to capture]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Munitions of war destined to a belligerent are contraband of war and liable to capture and condemnation — the neutral-trade consequence of the classification. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: contraband of war — munitions destined to a belligerent are liable to capture. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry MUNITIONS OP WAR, p. 798; scan anchor: djvu line 134337 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines munitions of war in international law and U.S. statutes; contraband is the genuine international-law consequence of the classification. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NOMINAI,

[Law: nominal damages — the law infers damage from invasion of a right]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Nominal damages vindicate a right where no actual loss is shown: the law infers some damage from the invasion of a legal right, and awards a trifling sum to mark the vindication. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: nominal damages — the law infers damage from invasion of a right. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOMINAI,, p. 821; scan anchor: djvu line 138028 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry lists nominal damages among its senses; the vindication-without-loss rule is the genuine doctrine the term exists to name. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NONSUIT

[Axiom: a judgment of nonsuit is not a judgment on the merits and does not support res judicata]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A nonsuit is not a judgment on the merits and therefore does not bar the plaintiff from suing again on the same cause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: a judgment of nonsuit is not a judgment on the merits and does not support res judicata. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NONSUIT, p. 829; scan anchor: djvu line 139355 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it states the entry's operative legal consequence — the whole point of a nonsuit versus a dismissal with prejudice — rather than restating the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NORTHAMPTON TABLES

[Maxim: Noscitur a sociis — the meaning of a word is known from the accompanying words]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The maxim embedded in this entry, noscitur a sociis — 'the meaning of a word is known from the accompanying words' — is a genuine canon of construction cited by Black's itself from Broom's Maxims, 588. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Noscitur a sociis — the meaning of a word is known from the accompanying words. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NORTHAMPTON TABLES, p. 830; scan anchor: djvu line 139446 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the maxim is quoted at length in the entry and attributed to its own authorities (1 Vent. 225; 3 Term R. 87; Broom, Max. 588); the footnote documents the maxim the entry itself teaches rather than imposing one. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NOT GUILTY

[Coffin v. United States, 156 U.S. 453 (1895)]

Who. The court deciding Coffin v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A verdict of not guilty vindicates the presumption that the accused is innocent until the prosecution proves guilt. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Coffin v. United States, 156 U.S. 453 (1895). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOT GUILTY, p. 830; scan anchor: djvu line 139473 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1895 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine because Coffin is the classic Supreme Court articulation of the presumption of innocence, which is the doctrinal ground of a not-guilty verdict; it illuminates the entry's function rather than restating it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NOT TRANSFERABLE

[Law: UCC § 3-104 — negotiable instrument; must be payable to order or bearer]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Writing 'not transferable' across an instrument destroys negotiability because a negotiable instrument must be payable to order or bearer. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-104 — negotiable instrument; must be payable to order or bearer. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOT TRANSFERABLE, p. 830; scan anchor: djvu line 139513 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it states the operative rule that makes the entry's statement true; UCC § 3-104 is the real, current statement of the negotiability requirement the entry presupposes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NOTICE

[Axiom: a bona fide purchaser for value without notice takes free of prior equitable interests]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The doctrine turns on the bona fide purchaser: one who takes for value without notice of a prior claim takes free of it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: a bona fide purchaser for value without notice takes free of prior equitable interests. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOTICE, p. 831; scan anchor: djvu line 139641 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry's elaborate taxonomy of statutory, actual, and constructive notice exists to serve exactly this consequence; it states the principle the definition is built for, not a paraphrase. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NOTING

[Law: UCC Article 3 — presentment and dishonor of negotiable instruments]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Noting is the first step of the commercial-law sequence of presentment, dishonor, and notice of dishonor governed by the law of negotiable instruments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 3 — presentment and dishonor of negotiable instruments. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOTING, p. 832; scan anchor: djvu line 139876 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry describes presentment and refusal of a bill of exchange, which is precisely the presentment-and-dishonor regime of UCC Article 3; it places the definition inside its governing statute. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NOTITIA

[Maxim: Notitia dicitur a noscendo; at notitia non debet claudicare — notice is named from knowledge, and notice ought not to halt]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Coke's maxim that notice is named from knowledge and 'ought not to halt,' i.e., be imperfect. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Notitia dicitur a noscendo; at notitia non debet claudicare — notice is named from knowledge, and notice ought not to halt. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOTITIA, p. 833; scan anchor: djvu line 139910 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from the entry's own authority (6 Coke, 29); the footnote records the maxim Black's itself cites rather than importing one. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NOTORIETY

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 201 — judicial notice of adjudicative facts]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Proof by notoriety is the ancestor of judicial notice: courts dispense with proof of matters of common knowledge. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Evid. 201 — judicial notice of adjudicative facts. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOTORIETY, p. 833; scan anchor: djvu line 139922 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry explicitly equates proof by notoriety with 'judicial notice,' and Fed. R. Evid. 201 is the modern rule stating that adjudicative facts of common knowledge need not be proved. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NOTORIOUS

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 201 — judicial notice of adjudicative facts]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Matters deemed notorious need no proof, which is the judicial-notice doctrine in its older dress. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Evid. 201 — judicial notice of adjudicative facts. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOTORIOUS, p. 833; scan anchor: djvu line 139931 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry states the exact proposition Rule 201 codifies — that certain matters of common knowledge are taken as proved without evidence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NOVATION

[Maxim: Novatio non praesumitur — novation is not presumed]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Novation is not presumed; the intention to substitute a new obligation for the old must appear. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Novatio non praesumitur — novation is not presumed. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOVATION, p. 833; scan anchor: djvu line 140005 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the maxim is the governing Roman-law rule of novation, quoted in the neighboring entry from Mackeld. Lat. Max. 109, and it states the operative presumption rule for the entry's doctrine rather than paraphrasing it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NOVELTY

[Law: 35 U.S.C. § 102 — conditions for patentability; novelty]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Novelty is the threshold condition of patentability: an invention already known or used cannot be patented. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 35 U.S.C. § 102 — conditions for patentability; novelty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOVELTY, p. 834; scan anchor: djvu line 140081 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry's 'want of novelty' objection is precisely the § 102 novelty bar; it names the statute the definition presupposes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NO VITAS

[Maxim: Novitas non tam utilitate prodest quam novitate perturbat — a novelty does not benefit so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Jenkyns' maxim that a novelty 'does not benefit so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Novitas non tam utilitate prodest quam novitate perturbat — a novelty does not benefit so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NO VITAS, p. 834; scan anchor: djvu line 140118 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the maxim is quoted verbatim in the entry from the entry's own authority (Jenk. Cent. p. 167, case 23); the footnote records Black's own cited maxim rather than importing one. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NOVODAKUB

[Maxim: Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum — a new adjudication does not make a new law, but declares the old]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that a new adjudication does not make new law but declares the old — the declaratory theory of adjudication. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum — a new adjudication does not make a new law, but declares the old. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NOVODAKUB, p. 834; scan anchor: djvu line 140137 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the maxim is quoted in the entry itself; it states the declaratory theory under which courts discover rather than make law, illuminating why a renewed charter (novodamus) re-declares rather than re-creates right. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NUDA POSSE8SIO

[Maxim: Nuda ratio et nuda pactio non ligant aliquem debitorem — naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Fleta's maxim that naked reason and naked promise bind no debtor. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nuda ratio et nuda pactio non ligant aliquem debitorem — naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NUDA POSSE8SIO, p. 834; scan anchor: djvu line 140230 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25; the same consideration doctrine that defines the entry's subject of bare possession and bare promise. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NUDE

[Maxim: Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio — from a naked pact no action arises]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that from a naked pact no action arises — the consideration rule stated negatively. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio — from a naked pact no action arises. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NUDE, p. 834; scan anchor: djvu line 140239 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 2 Bl. Comm. 445; it is the operative maxim defining the entry's 'nude contract' (one made without consideration). [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NUDUM FACTUM

[Maxim: Nudum pactum est ubi nulla subest causa praeter conventionem; sed ubi subest causa, fit obligatio, et parit actionem — a naked pact is where no cause underlies it beyond the agreement; but where a cause underlies it, there is obligation and it begets an action]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim defining nudum pactum: where no cause underlies the agreement beyond the convention itself it is a naked pact; where a cause underlies it, obligation and action follow. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nudum pactum est ubi nulla subest causa praeter conventionem; sed ubi subest causa, fit obligatio, et parit actionem — a naked pact is where no cause underlies it beyond the agreement; but where a cause underlies it, there is obligation and it begets an action. When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry; it states the consideration rule that makes the entry's subject operative in American law, reinforced by the entry's own cited cases (Justice v. Lang; Wardell v. Williams). [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NUGATORY

[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803)]

Who. The court deciding Marbury v. Madison (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A legislative act repugnant to the Constitution is void — the classic ground on which a statute is 'nugatory.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137 (1803). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NUGATORY, p. 834; scan anchor: djvu line 140277 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1803 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine because the entry states a legislative act may be nugatory 'because unconstitutional'; Marbury is the genuine American authority for judicial invalidation of statutes repugnant to the Constitution. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NUISANCE

[Maxim: Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas — use your own property so as not to injure another's]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Nuisance law rests on the maxim that one must so use one's own as not to injure another's. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas — use your own property so as not to injure another's. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NUISANCE, p. 834; scan anchor: djvu line 140282 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is the classic statement of the neighbor-law principle from which the entry's definition of nuisance (unreasonable use of one's own property working injury to another) derives. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NULLTUS FILIUS

[Maxim: Nullius hominis auctoritas apud nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequamur si quis attulerit — the authority of no man ought to prevail with us so as to prevent our following better opinions if anyone should present them]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Coke's rule of legal reasoning: no man's authority ought to prevail against better opinions. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nullius hominis auctoritas apud nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequamur si quis attulerit — the authority of no man ought to prevail with us so as to prevent our following better opinions if anyone should present them. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NULLTUS FILIUS, p. 837; scan anchor: djvu line 140603 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Co. Litt. 383b; it is recorded as the entry's own cited authority on the method of legal argument, not as a comment on bastardy. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NULLUM ARBITRIUM

[Maxim: Nullum crimen majus est inobedientia — no crime is greater than disobedience]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Jenkyns' maxim that no crime is greater than disobedience. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nullum crimen majus est inobedientia — no crime is greater than disobedience. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NULLUM ARBITRIUM, p. 837; scan anchor: djvu line 140620 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Jenk. Cent. p. 77, case 48, as applied to an officer's refusal; recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NULLUM FECERUNT ARBITRIUM

[Maxim: Nullum iniquum est praesumendum in jure — no iniquity is to be presumed in law]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Coke's maxim that no iniquity is to be presumed in law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nullum iniquum est praesumendum in jure — no iniquity is to be presumed in law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NULLUM FECERUNT ARBITRIUM, p. 837; scan anchor: djvu line 140638 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 7 Coke, 71; it states the presumption of lawful conduct, recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

NULLUM TEMPUS ACT

[Maxim: Nullum tempus occurrit regi — no lapse of time bars the king]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Nullum Tempus Act (3 Geo. III c. 16) was named for limiting the very maxim it contravened — that no lapse of time bars the king. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nullum tempus occurrit regi — no lapse of time bars the king. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NULLUM TEMPUS ACT, p. 837; scan anchor: djvu line 140668 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry itself names the Act for the maxim and explains that the Act limited the Crown's right to sue to sixty years 'in contravention of' it; the footnote records the maxim the entry presupposes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NUNDIKATION

[Maxim: Nunquam crescit ex postfacto praeteriti delicti aestimatio — the character of a past offense is never aggravated by a subsequent act]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that the character of a past offense is never aggravated by a subsequent act. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nunquam crescit ex postfacto praeteriti delicti aestimatio — the character of a past offense is never aggravated by a subsequent act. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NUNDIKATION, p. 838; scan anchor: djvu line 140816 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Dig. 50,17,139,1, Bacon's Maxims reg. 8, and Broom, Max. 42; it is the genuine antecedent of the rule against ex post facto aggravation of offenses. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NUNDIKATION

[Maxim: Nunquam decurritur ad extraordinarium sed ubi deficit ordinarium — we never resort to the extraordinary except where the ordinary fails]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that we never resort to the extraordinary where the ordinary remedy is available. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nunquam decurritur ad extraordinarium sed ubi deficit ordinarium — we never resort to the extraordinary except where the ordinary fails. NUKQUAM INDEBITATUS

[Maxim: Nunquam praescribitur in falso — there is never a prescription in falsehood]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that there is never prescription in fraud — no title ripens out of falsehood. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nunquam praescribitur in falso — there is never a prescription in falsehood. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NUKQUAM INDEBITATUS, p. 838; scan anchor: djvu line 140834 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry; it states the real rule that fraud defeats prescriptive title. The companion rhetorical maxim about never saying too much was declined as non-legal. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

NUPTIAL

[Maxim: Nuptiae non concubitus sed consensus faciunt — not cohabitation but consent makes the marriage]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Coke's maxim that not cohabitation but consent makes the marriage. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nuptiae non concubitus sed consensus faciunt — not cohabitation but consent makes the marriage. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry NUPTIAL, p. 889 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 140889 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Co. Litt. 33; it states the consent theory of marriage that the entry's definition of 'nuptial' presupposes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

OATH

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1621 — perjury]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The oath's legal sanction is perjury: a willfully false material statement under oath before a competent tribunal is punishable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1621 — perjury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OATH, p. 840; scan anchor: djvu line 140963 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1621 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine because the entry defines the oath as a reverent asseveration invoking divine witness; the perjury statute is the operative legal consequence that gives the definition its force, not a restatement of it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. An agreement founded on an immoral consideration is unenforceable — from a dishonorable cause no action arises. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ex turpi causa non oritur actio — from an immoral cause no action arises. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OB TURF EM CAUSAM, p. 841; scan anchor: djvu line 141142 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry's 'ob turpem causam' (Dig. 12,5) is precisely the Roman root of the ex turpi causa rule barring enforcement of immoral bargains; it states the consequence the definition presupposes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

OBEDIENTIA

[Maxim: Obedientia est legis essentia — obedience is the essence of law]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Coke's maxim that obedience is the essence of law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Obedientia est legis essentia — obedience is the essence of law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OBEDIENTIA, p. 841; scan anchor: djvu line 141158 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 11 Coke, 190; recorded as the entry's own cited authority — the classical statement of law's claim to be obeyed. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

OBITER

[Axiom: obiter dicta are persuasive only; the ratio decidendi alone binds]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An obiter dictum is not binding: only the ratio decidendi — the reason necessary to the decision — carries precedential force. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: obiter dicta are persuasive only; the ratio decidendi alone binds. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OBITER, p. 841; scan anchor: djvu line 141177 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry defines obiter dictum as remarks made incidentally and 'not directly upon the question'; the axiom states the precedential consequence the definition presupposes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

OBREPTION

[Axiom: fraud vitiates every transaction it touches]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry defines obreption as acquisition by fraud; the governing principle is that fraud vitiates every transaction it touches. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Why. Genuine because it states the operative legal consequence of obtaining a thing by fraud or false representations (the entry's definition), in axiom form to avoid fabricating a Latin citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

OBSCENE

[Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973)]

Who. The court deciding Miller v. California (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The 1910 definitions of obscenity were superseded by the modern three-part test for unprotected obscenity. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OBSCENE, p. 58 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 141754 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1973 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine because Miller states the governing American test for obscenity (prurient interest, patently offensive sexual conduct, lack of serious value); it presents the entry's common-law definitions as ancestors of the current standard rather than restating them. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

OBSTA PRINCIPIIS

[Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 635 (1886)]

Who. The court deciding Boyd v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry quotes Justice Bradley's charge that courts must be 'watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen, and against any stealthy encroachments thereon' — 'Obsta principiis.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S. 635 (1886). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OBSTA PRINCIPIIS, p. 845; scan anchor: djvu line 141814 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1886 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine because the maxim is embedded in the entry as a verbatim quotation from the entry's own cited Supreme Court authority; recorded, not imported. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

OCCUPANCY

[Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (N.Y. 1805)]

Who. The court deciding Pierson v. Post (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Occupancy as a mode of acquiring ownerless things is governed by the capture rule: pursuit alone is not possession; occupancy requires actual control. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (N.Y. 1805). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OCCUPANCY, p. 846; scan anchor: djvu line 141963 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1805 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine because Pierson is the classic American case on acquisition by occupancy (the fox-hunt), stating the rule the entry's definition of occupancy presupposes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

OFFICIO, EX, OATH

[Maxim: Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare — no one is bound to accuse himself]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The ex officio oath compelled a man to accuse himself; against it stands the privilege that no one is bound to be his own accuser. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare — no one is bound to accuse himself. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OFFICIO, EX, OATH, p. 860; scan anchor: djvu line 142692 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the ex officio oath's compulsion of self-accusation is precisely what the nemo tenetur maxim and the privilege against self-incrimination answer; it states the doctrinal counterweight the entry's definition presupposes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

OFFICIOUS WILL

[Maxim: Officium nemini debet esse damnosum — office ought not to be an occasion of loss to anyone]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that office ought not to be an occasion of loss to anyone. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Officium nemini debet esse damnosum — office ought not to be an occasion of loss to anyone. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OFFICIOUS WILL, p. 860; scan anchor: djvu line 142700 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry, which itself calls it 'A maxim'; recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

OFFICIOUS WILL

[Maxim: Officium conatus si effectus sequatur — the attempt becomes of consequence, if the effect follows]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Jenkyns' maxim that the attempt becomes of consequence if the effect follows. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Officium conatus si effectus sequatur — the attempt becomes of consequence, if the effect follows. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OFFICIOUS WILL, p. 860; scan anchor: djvu line 142700 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Jenk. Cent. 55; recorded as the entry's own cited authority on attempt and consequence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

OME BUENO

[Maxim: Omissio eorum quae tacite insunt nihil operatur — the omission of those things which are tacitly implied is of no consequence]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that the omission of things tacitly implied is of no consequence. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Omissio eorum quae tacite insunt nihil operatur — the omission of those things which are tacitly implied is of no consequence. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OME BUENO, p. 851; scan anchor: djvu line 142829 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 2 Bulst. 131; recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

OMITTANCE

[Maxim: Omne actum ab intentione agentis est judicandum — every act is to be judged by the intention of the doer]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that every act is to be judged by the intention of the doer. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Omne actum ab intentione agentis est judicandum — every act is to be judged by the intention of the doer. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OMITTANCE, p. 851; scan anchor: djvu line 142842 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Branch, Princ.; it states the intent principle underlying mens rea, recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

OMITTANCE

[Maxim: Omne crimen ebrietas et incendit et detegit — drunkenness both inflames and reveals every crime]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Coke's maxim that drunkenness both inflames and reveals every crime. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Omne crimen ebrietas et incendit et detegit — drunkenness both inflames and reveals every crime. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OMITTANCE, p. 851; scan anchor: djvu line 142842 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Co. Litt. 247a, 4 Bl. Comm. 26, and Broom, Max. 17; recorded as the entry's own cited authorities on intoxication in criminal law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

OMNIA PEKFORMAVIT

[Maxim: Omnia praesumuntur contra spoliatorem — all things are presumed against a despoiler or wrong-doer]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the leading evidence maxim that all things are presumed against a despoiler. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Omnia praesumuntur contra spoliatorem — all things are presumed against a despoiler or wrong-doer. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OMNIA PEKFORMAVIT, p. 851; scan anchor: djvu line 142952 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry, which itself calls it 'a leading maxim in the law of evidence' (Best, Ev. p. 340; Broom, Max. 938); recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

OMNIUM

[Maxim: Omnium contributione sarciatur quod pro omnibus datum est — that which is given for all is recompensed by the contribution of all]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the general-average principle that what is given for all is made good by the contribution of all. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Omnium contributione sarciatur quod pro omnibus datum est — that which is given for all is recompensed by the contribution of all. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OMNIUM, p. 852; scan anchor: djvu line 143119 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 4 Bing. 121, which the entry itself identifies as 'a principle of the law of general average'; recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

ONCE A MORTGAGE, ALWAYS A MORTGAGE

[Axiom: equity will not permit a clog on the equity of redemption]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The rule protects the equity of redemption: equity will not permit a mortgagor's right to redeem to be clogged or fettered by any subsequent agreement. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: equity will not permit a clog on the equity of redemption. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ONCE A MORTGAGE, ALWAYS A MORTGAGE, p. 853; scan anchor: djvu line 143210 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because 'once a mortgage, always a mortgage' is the classic statement of the anti-clogging rule; the axiom names the equitable principle the entry's rule serves rather than re-quoting the rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

ONCE IN JEOPARDY

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — double jeopardy]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Double jeopardy: no person shall be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb for the same offense. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — double jeopardy. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry ONCE IN JEOPARDY, p. 853; scan anchor: djvu line 143220 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry defines the condition of one already put in danger of conviction and punishment for the same offense; the Fifth Amendment clause is the governing American authority for the protection. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Coke's twofold division of opinion: common opinion among grave and discreet men bearing the appearance of truth, versus mere opinion among the vulgar without it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Opinio est duplex, scilicet, opinio vulgaris, orta inter graves et discretos, et quae vultum veritatis habet; et opinio tantum orta inter leves et vulgares homines, absque specie veritatis — opinion is of two kinds: common opinion, which springs up among grave and discreet men and has the face of truth; and mere opinion, sprung among light and vulgar men, without show of truth. OPPRESSION

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 242 — deprivation of rights under color of law]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The modern federal analogue of the common-law misdemeanor of oppression is the criminal prohibition on willful deprivation of rights under color of law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 242 — deprivation of rights under color of law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OPPRESSION, p. 866; scan anchor: djvu line 143677 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry defines oppression as a public officer wrongfully inflicting injury 'under color of his office'; § 242 is the current federal statute criminalizing official abuse under color of law, showing the doctrine's modern form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Co. Litt. 303a and Broom, Max. 188; recorded as the entry's own cited authorities on the value of procedural order. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

OSTENSIBLE AGENCY

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Agency § 8 — apparent authority]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Ostensible agency is the agency-by-estoppel doctrine: apparent authority binds the principal who clothes another with the indicia of agency. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Restatement (Second) of Agency § 8 — apparent authority. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OSTENSIBLE AGENCY, p. 861; scan anchor: djvu line 144572 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry's 'ostensible agency' is precisely apparent authority — authority the principal's conduct leads a third person reasonably to believe exists; the Restatement section is the governing American statement of the rule. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

OSTENSIBLE PARTNER

[Axiom: partnership by estoppel — one who represents himself as a partner is liable as such to those who extend credit in reliance]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. One who holds himself out as a partner is liable as a partner to third persons who rely on the representation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: partnership by estoppel — one who represents himself as a partner is liable as such to those who extend credit in reliance. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OSTENSIBLE PARTNER, p. 861; scan anchor: djvu line 144581 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry defines the ostensible partner as one 'made known and appears to the world as a partner'; the axiom states the estoppel consequence the definition presupposes, in axiom form to avoid inventing a statute section. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

OVERDUE

[Law: UCC § 3-302 — holder in due course; notice that the instrument is overdue]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An instrument that is overdue cannot be taken by a holder in due course: notice that it is overdue defeats holder-in-due-course status. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-302 — holder in due course; notice that the instrument is overdue. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OVERDUE, p. 864; scan anchor: djvu line 145037 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry defines when a negotiable instrument is overdue; the holder-in-due-course rule is the operative commercial-law consequence of overdue status — one who takes with notice of it takes subject to defenses. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

OVERT

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason; conviction only on testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or confession in open court]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. In treason, conviction requires the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason; conviction only on testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or confession in open court. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry OVERT, p. 865; scan anchor: djvu line 145170 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry's 'overt act' discussion (3 Inst. 12) concerns the proof of treason; Article III, § 3 constitutionalizes the overt-act requirement for treason convictions. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PACEATUR

[Maxim: Paci sunt maxime contraria vis et injuria — violence and injury are the things chiefly hostile to peace]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that violence and injury are the things chiefly hostile to peace. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Paci sunt maxime contraria vis et injuria — violence and injury are the things chiefly hostile to peace. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PACEATUR, p. 867; scan anchor: djvu line 145445 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Quoted in the entry from Co. Litt. 161 with the entry's own English gloss; the entry's Latin is OCR-garbled, so the standard form is recorded with the gloss rather than presented as verbatim from a clean text. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that private contracts do not derogate from public law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Pactis privatorum juri publico non derogatur — private contracts do not derogate from public law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PACTIONS, p. 868; scan anchor: djvu line 145589 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Broom, Max. 695; recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PACTITIOU8

[Maxim: Pacto aliquod licitum est, quod sine pacto non admittitur — by special agreement things are allowed which are not otherwise permitted]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Coke's maxim that by special agreement things are allowed which are not otherwise permitted. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Pacto aliquod licitum est, quod sine pacto non admittitur — by special agreement things are allowed which are not otherwise permitted. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PACTITIOU8, p. 868; scan anchor: djvu line 145599 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Co. Litt. 166; recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PAINS AND PENALTIES, BILLS OF

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, §§ 9, 10 — no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Bills of pains and penalties — legislative attainders inflicting punishment without trial — are forbidden in American law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, §§ 9, 10 — no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAINS AND PENALTIES, BILLS OF, p. 868; scan anchor: djvu line 145676 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry defines bills of pains and penalties as parliamentary acts attainting persons or inflicting penalties beyond common law; the Constitution's attainder clauses are the governing American prohibition of exactly that device. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PAPER

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. IV — security of persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The constitutional reference in this entry is the Fourth Amendment's security of 'persons, houses, papers, and effects' against unreasonable searches and seizures. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. IV — security of persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAPER, p. 870; scan anchor: djvu line 145897 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry itself invokes 'the constitutional provision' protecting papers; the footnote names the provision the entry gestures at, completing its own reference. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PARCU8

[Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 2 — power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The federal pardon power is vested by the Constitution in the President. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 2 — power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PARCU8, p. 872; scan anchor: djvu line 146254 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry (merged under this headword) defines the pardon as an act of grace from the power entrusted with executing the laws and cites the leading Supreme Court pardon cases (U.S. v. Wilson; Ex parte Garland); Article II, § 2 is the constitutional source of that power. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PARENTICIDE

[Maxim: Parentum est liberos alere etiam spurios — it is the duty of parents to support their children even when illegitimate]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that it is the duty of parents to support their children even when illegitimate. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Parentum est liberos alere etiam spurios — it is the duty of parents to support their children even when illegitimate. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PARENTICIDE, p. 872; scan anchor: djvu line 146343 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted in the entry from Lofft, 222; recorded as the entry's own cited authority on the parental support duty. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PARI DELICTO

[Maxim: In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis — where parties are in equal fault, the defendant's position is stronger]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Where parties are in equal fault, the defendant's position is the stronger — courts will aid neither. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis — where parties are in equal fault, the defendant's position is stronger. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PARI DELICTO, p. 873; scan anchor: djvu line 146394 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it states the operative in-pari-delicto rule — the consequence the entry's 'in equal fault' definition presupposes — in the classic maxim form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PARI RATIONE

[Maxim: Paria copulantur paribus — like things unite with like]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the maxim that like things unite with like. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Paria copulantur paribus — like things unite with like. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PARI RATIONE, p. 873; scan anchor: djvu line 146406 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Bac. Max.; recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PARI RATIONE

[Maxim: Paribus sententiis reus absolvitur — where the opinions are equal, the defendant is acquitted]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the rule that where the court is equally divided, the defendant is acquitted. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Paribus sententiis reus absolvitur — where the opinions are equal, the defendant is acquitted. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PARI RATIONE, p. 873; scan anchor: djvu line 146406 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 4 Inst. 64; it states the tie-goes-to-the-accused rule, recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PARITOR

[Maxim: Parum eadem est ratio, idem jus — of things equal, the reason is the same, and the same is the law (cf. the standard form Ubi eadem ratio, ibi idem jus)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the like-cases principle: of things equal, the reason is the same, and the same is the law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it states the like-cases-alike foundation of precedent reasoning; the entry's Latin appears OCR-affected, so it is recorded with the entry's own English gloss and the standard form noted rather than presented as clean verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PARIUM JUDICIUM

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — right to trial by an impartial jury]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Trial by a jury of one's peers is the constitutional jury right. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — right to trial by an impartial jury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PARIUM JUDICIUM, p. 873; scan anchor: djvu line 146522 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the entry defines parium judicium as trial by a jury of one's peers or equals; the Sixth Amendment is the American constitutional embodiment of that right. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PAROL

[Law: UCC § 2-202 — final written expression; parol or extrinsic evidence]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The term 'parol' names the parol evidence rule: extrinsic evidence of prior or contemporaneous oral agreements is inadmissible to contradict a complete written contract. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-202 — final written expression; parol or extrinsic evidence. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAROL, p. 874; scan anchor: djvu line 146665 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because the doctrine takes its name from this entry's term; UCC § 2-202 is the modern statutory statement of the rule for sales of goods. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PARTE XNAUDITA

[Maxim: Audi alteram partem — hear the other side]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Against ex parte action stands the rule that the other side must be heard. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Audi alteram partem — hear the other side. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PARTE XNAUDITA, p. 876; scan anchor: djvu line 146801 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

Why. Genuine because the entry defines action taken 'parte inaudita' — one side unheard; audi alteram partem is the foundational maxim of procedural fairness that the definition presupposes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PARTE NON COXPARENTE

[Maxim: Parte quacumque integrante sublata, tollitur totum — an integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Coke's maxim that an integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Parte quacumque integrante sublata, tollitur totum — an integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PARTE NON COXPARENTE, p. 876; scan anchor: djvu line 146806 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 8 Coke, 41; recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PARTE NON COXPARENTE

[Maxim: Partem aliquam recte intelligere nemo potest, antequam totum, iterum atque iterum, perlegerit — no one can rightly understand any part before he has read the whole, again and again]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Coke's hermeneutic rule that no one can rightly understand a part before reading the whole again and again. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Partem aliquam recte intelligere nemo potest, antequam totum, iterum atque iterum, perlegerit — no one can rightly understand any part before he has read the whole, again and again. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PARTE NON COXPARENTE, p. 876; scan anchor: djvu line 146806 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 3 Coke, 52; it states the whole-instrument rule of construction, recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PARTUS

[Maxim: Partus sequitur ventrem — the offspring follows the mother]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the status maxim that the offspring follows the mother. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Partus sequitur ventrem — the offspring follows the mother. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PARTUS, p. 878; scan anchor: djvu line 147287 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry; it states the real Roman-law rule of status (the child's condition follows the mother's), recorded as the entry's own cited maxim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PATER

[Maxim: Pater is est quem nuptiae demonstrant — the father is he whom the marriage points out]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes the paternity presumption: the father is he whom the marriage points out. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Pater is est quem nuptiae demonstrant — the father is he whom the marriage points out. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PATER, p. 881; scan anchor: djvu line 147842 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from 1 Bl. Comm. 446, Tate v. Penne, and the Digest; it states the presumption of paternity for children born in wedlock, recorded as the entry's own cited authorities. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PATRIA

[Maxim: Patria laboribus et expensis non debet fatigari — a jury ought not to be harassed by labors and expenses]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry quotes Jenkyns' maxim that a jury ought not to be harassed by labors and expenses. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Patria laboribus et expensis non debet fatigari — a jury ought not to be harassed by labors and expenses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PATRIA, p. 881; scan anchor: djvu line 147920 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine because it is quoted verbatim in the entry from Jenk. Cent. 6; recorded as the entry's own cited authority. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PAUPER

[Law: 28 U.S.C. § 1915 — proceedings in forma pauperis]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines the pauper's privilege of suing without costs (in forma pauperis); its living federal codification is 28 U.S.C. § 1915. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 28 U.S.C. § 1915 — proceedings in forma pauperis. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAUPER, p. 882; scan anchor: djvu line 148072 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1915 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine and direct: the entry is exactly about the poor litigant's exemption from costs, and § 1915 is the statute that grants that privilege in federal court. No inferential hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PADPERIES

[Law: common-law rule of strict liability for damage by wild animals (the ferae naturae rule)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Roman pauperies — liability of an animal's owner for damage done without the owner's fault — is the ancestor of the modern common-law rule of strict liability for harm done by wild animals kept by the owner. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law rule of strict liability for damage by wild animals (the ferae naturae rule). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PADPERIES, p. 882; scan anchor: djvu line 148090 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine doctrinal lineage: the Roman noxal/pauperies action (Inst. 4,9, cited in the entry) is the acknowledged root of modern strict liability for kept wild animals. Stated as a rule in loose form rather than a fabricated citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PAWNBROKER

[Law: UCC Article 9 — security interests in personal property; state pawnbroker licensing statutes]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A pawn is a pledge of personal property as security for a debt — the common-law bailment now governed in commercial law by UCC Article 9 (security interests in goods), alongside state pawnbroker-licensing statutes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 9 — security interests in personal property; state pawnbroker licensing statutes. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAWNBROKER, p. 883; scan anchor: djvu line 148151 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the pawnbroker's business as lending on deposited personal property, which is precisely the Article 9 pledge/secured-transaction structure, and pawnbrokers are in fact a licensed trade under state statutes. Direct, no hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PAWNEE

[Law: UCC Article 9 — the secured party holding collateral]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The pawnee is the pledgee — the secured party who holds the collateral — under modern secured-transactions law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 9 — the secured party holding collateral. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAWNEE, p. 883; scan anchor: djvu line 148167 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine one-step mapping: pawnee = secured party in the pledge structure the entry defines. Kept brief to avoid padding the trio. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 9 — the debtor granting a security interest. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAWNOR, p. 883; scan anchor: djvu line 148172 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine one-step mapping: pawnor = debtor/pledgor. Kept brief; the trio shares one doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PAX REGIS

[Law: the common-law offense of breach of the peace and modern disorderly-conduct statutes]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The king's peace — the public order the state guarantees — is the ancestor of the modern common-law and statutory offense of breach of the peace (disorderly conduct). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the common-law offense of breach of the peace and modern disorderly-conduct statutes. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAX REGIS, p. 883; scan anchor: djvu line 148181 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine lineage: the entry itself names the pax regis as the peace government maintains; breach of that peace is the direct doctrinal descendant, still charged today. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PAYABLE

[Law: UCC § 3-108 — payable on demand vs. payable at a definite time]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry distinguishes 'payable' (due now) from 'owing' (due in future); negotiable-instruments law codifies exactly this as 'payable on demand' versus 'payable at a definite time.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-108 — payable on demand vs. payable at a definite time. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAYABLE, p. 883; scan anchor: djvu line 148204 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine and direct: the entry's whole point is the timing distinction, and UCC § 3-108 is the statute that draws it for notes and drafts. No hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 3 — the payee as the person entitled to enforce a negotiable instrument (UCC § 3-301). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAYEE, p. 883; scan anchor: djvu line 148215 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the payee of mercantile paper; UCC Article 3 governs exactly who may enforce such paper. Direct mapping. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PAYMENT

[Law: UCC § 3-603 — tender of payment]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Payment as the discharge of a debt by delivery of money or value is given its commercial-paper form in the rule that tender of payment discharges the obligation to the extent of the amount tendered. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-603 — tender of payment. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAYMENT, p. 883; scan anchor: djvu line 148243 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines payment as discharge-by-delivery; § 3-603 is the statute stating the discharge consequence of tender. PAY (the verb entry) was deliberately left bare to avoid duplicating this one footnote. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PAYS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI (criminal jury trial); amend. VII (civil jury trial)]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Trial per pays' — trial by the country — is trial by jury, guaranteed in criminal cases by the Sixth Amendment and in federal civil cases by the Seventh. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI (criminal jury trial); amend. VII (civil jury trial). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PAYS, p. 884; scan anchor: djvu line 148305 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry equates trial per pays with trial by jury; the two amendments are the constitutional home of that right. No hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PEACEABLE

[Law: common-law prohibition of forcible entry; modern unlawful-detainer statutes]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Peaceable entry' and 'peaceable possession' are defined against their opposite: the common law forbade forcible entry on lands, a prohibition surviving in modern unlawful-entry and unlawful-detainer statutes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law prohibition of forcible entry; modern unlawful-detainer statutes. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEACEABLE, p. 884; scan anchor: djvu line 148364 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines peaceable entry/possession by contrast with force; the forcible-entry prohibition is the doctrine that gives the contrast legal meaning. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PECULATION

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 641 — embezzlement or theft of public money, property, or records]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Peculation — unlawful appropriation of public funds by the depositary entrusted with them — is the civil-law ancestor of the modern federal offense of embezzling public money, property, or records. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 641 — embezzlement or theft of public money, property, or records. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PECULATION, p. 884; scan anchor: djvu line 148398 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines misappropriation of government property by its custodian; § 641 criminalizes exactly that. PECULATUS (the twin entry) was left bare to avoid a duplicate footnote. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PEDE PULVEROSUS

[Law: the courts of piepowder (curia pedis pulverizati) — merchant courts of the law merchant]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'dusty-foot' itinerant merchants at fairs were served by the courts of piepowder — summary merchant courts administering the lex mercatoria, the medieval ancestor of modern commercial law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the courts of piepowder (curia pedis pulverizati) — merchant courts of the law merchant. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEDE PULVEROSUS, p. 885; scan anchor: djvu line 148554 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine historical-doctrinal link: the entry names the dusty-foot fair merchants; piepowder courts existed precisely for them and are the acknowledged root of the law merchant behind the UCC. One direct hop, kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PEDERASTY

[Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003)]

Who. The court deciding Lawrence v. Texas (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry defines the criminal offense; in the United States criminal sodomy statutes were held unconstitutional in Lawrence v. Texas. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEDERASTY, p. 885; scan anchor: djvu line 148559 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 2003 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine illumination of the entry's legal status: it states the offense as criminal law, and Lawrence is the controlling case that ended such criminalization in the U.S. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PEDIGREE

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(4) — statement of personal or family history (the pedigree exception)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Pedigree — lineage and family relationship — gives its name to the hearsay exception admitting statements of personal or family history. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(4) — statement of personal or family history (the pedigree exception). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEDIGREE, p. 885; scan anchor: djvu line 148564 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the evidence doctrine is literally named for the concept the entry defines. Direct, no hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PEDIS POSSESSIO

[Law: adverse possession — the requirement of actual, open, and notorious possession]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Pedis possessio — actual foothold possession — survives as the actual-possession element of adverse possession: the claimant must really occupy the land, not merely claim it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: adverse possession — the requirement of actual, open, and notorious possession. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEDIS POSSESSIO, p. 885; scan anchor: djvu line 148583 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry itself ties pedis possessio to adverse possession (Bailey v. Irby); the maxim names the actual-possession element still required today. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PEERAGE

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 8 — 'No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines the rank of nobleman; American law answers with the constitutional prohibition: no title of nobility shall be granted by the United States. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the clause is the direct American legal response to the institution the entry defines. One inferential step, and the connection is the clause's whole point. PEERESS left bare as the twin. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PEERS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — trial by an impartial jury; Magna Carta c. 39]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Trial by a jury of his peers' is the Sixth Amendment guarantee of trial by an impartial jury, rooted in Magna Carta's promise of judgment by one's peers. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VI — trial by an impartial jury; Magna Carta c. 39. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEERS, p. 886; scan anchor: djvu line 148614 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry gives 'trial by a jury of his peers' as the meaning; the Sixth Amendment and Magna Carta c. 39 are its legal homes. PEERS OF FEES left bare as the feudal-historical twin. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PENDENTE LITE

[Maxim: Pendente lite nihil innovetur]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's maxim — pendente lite nihil innovetur, 'during litigation nothing new should be introduced' — is the foundation of lis pendens: a pending suit over property is notice to the world, so no new interest can be created to defeat it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Pendente lite nihil innovetur. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PENDENTE LITE, p. 887; scan anchor: djvu line 148849 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the footnote identifies the governing principle the entry itself quotes, and names the living doctrine (lis pendens, with state lis-pendens statutes) built on it. PENDENCY and PENDENS left bare as twins. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PEONAGE

[Law: 42 U.S.C. § 1994 (Peonage Abolition Act of 1867); U.S. Const. amend. XIII]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Enforced servitude to work out a debt was abolished by the Peonage Abolition Act — the very statute (Rev. St. § 5526) the entry cites — under the Thirteenth Amendment's prohibition of involuntary servitude. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 42 U.S.C. § 1994 (Peonage Abolition Act of 1867); U.S. Const. amend. XIII. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEONAGE, p. 888; scan anchor: djvu line 148996 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

When. 1994 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine and direct: the entry defines peonage and cites the federal statute against it; the footnote gives the statute's modern codification and its constitutional root. No hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PEOPLE

[Law: U.S. Const. pmbl. — 'We the People of the United States'; popular sovereignty]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. In its constitutional-law sense — the body of citizens invested with political power — 'the people' is the Preamble's 'We the People': the sovereign body in the doctrine of popular sovereignty. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. pmbl. — 'We the People of the United States'; popular sovereignty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEOPLE, p. 888; scan anchor: djvu line 149013 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's constitutional definition is exactly the Preamble's people. Direct mapping, no hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PEPPERCORN

[Law: the rule that courts do not inquire into the adequacy of consideration]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A peppercorn rent works because courts do not weigh the adequacy of consideration: nominal consideration is still consideration. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the rule that courts do not inquire into the adequacy of consideration. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEPPERCORN, p. 888; scan anchor: djvu line 149052 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the peppercorn as a merely nominal rent; the adequacy rule is why the device is legally effective. Kept loose; no case citation invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PER QUOD

[Law: defamation per quod — extrinsic-fact defamation requiring special damages]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The per quod clause alleging special damage survives as defamation per quod: a statement whose defamatory meaning appears only with extrinsic facts, requiring the plaintiff to plead and prove special damages. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: defamation per quod — extrinsic-fact defamation requiring special damages. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PER QUOD, p. 890; scan anchor: djvu line 149321 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the per-quod special-damage clause in tort pleading; defamation per quod is the living doctrine named for and built on it. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PER QUOD CONSORTIUM AMISIT

[Law: the modern action for loss of consortium]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Whereby he lost the company [of his wife]' named the special damage in the old trespass action; the modern action for loss of consortium descends from it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the modern action for loss of consortium. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PER QUOD CONSORTIUM AMISIT, p. 890; scan anchor: djvu line 149331 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine lineage: the phrase named the gist of the historic action, and loss-of-consortium claims survive in modern tort law. PER QUOD SERVITIUM AMISIT left bare — the master's action is essentially extinct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PER SE

[Law: negligence per se]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'By itself; inherently' is the term of art in negligence per se: violation of a safety statute is negligence as a matter of law, without further proof of unreasonableness. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: negligence per se. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PER SE, p. 890; scan anchor: djvu line 149366 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the bare phrase; negligence per se is the leading doctrine employing it as a term of art. Framed as the doctrine, not a redefinition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PER STIRPES

[Law: intestate-succession statutes — distribution per stirpes (by representation); cf. UPC § 2-106]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Distribution 'by roots or stocks' — each group taking the share its deceased ancestor would have taken, by representation — is the method prescribed by modern intestate-succession statutes as against per capita distribution. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: intestate-succession statutes — distribution per stirpes (by representation); cf. UPC § 2-106. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PER STIRPES, p. 890; scan anchor: djvu line 149370 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines per stirpes in 'the law of descents and distribution'; the footnote names the living statutory home, twin to the PER CAPITA annotation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PERDUELLIO

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Roman offense of treason — hostility subversive of the laws — is defined in American constitutional law with matching narrowness: levying war against the United States, or adhering to their enemies. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERDUELLIO, p. 891; scan anchor: djvu line 149521 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the treason offense; the clause is treason's definition in living American constitutional law. Same PEERAGE-pattern treatment. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PEREMPTORY

[Law: peremptory challenges — strikes requiring no cause shown (Fed. R. Crim. P. 24(b)); race-based strikes barred by Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79 (1986)]

Who. The court deciding Law: peremptory challenges — strikes requiring no cause shown (Fed. R. Crim. P. 24(b)); race-based strikes barred by Batson v. Kentucky (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. 'Not requiring any cause to be shown' is the definition of the peremptory challenge in jury selection — a strike exercised without stating a reason — though race- or sex-based peremptory strikes are barred. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: peremptory challenges — strikes requiring no cause shown (Fed. R. Crim. P. 24(b)); race-based strikes barred by Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79 (1986). PERFIDY

[Law: prohibition of perfidy — Additional Protocol I, art. 37]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Beyond the general sense of broken faith, perfidy is a term of art in the law of armed conflict: feigning protected status (e.g., civilian, or a truce flag) to kill, wound, or capture is a prohibited act. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: prohibition of perfidy — Additional Protocol I, art. 37. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERFIDY, p. 892; scan anchor: djvu line 149643 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the word generally; the law of war gives it a precise legal meaning, which the footnote states. Confident on the article. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PERFORMANCE

[Law: UCC § 2-716 — specific performance for unique goods; equity's inadequacy rule (classically, land)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Specific performance — compelling the contract's precise terms rather than damages — is decreed in equity where damages are inadequate, classically for land, and codified for unique goods. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-716 — specific performance for unique goods; equity's inadequacy rule (classically, land). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERFORMANCE, p. 892; scan anchor: djvu line 149658 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines specific performance at length; the footnote names its living statutory and equitable homes. PERFORM left bare as the definitional twin. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Barter — exchange of movables — is brought within sale law by the rule that the price may be payable in money 'or otherwise.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-304(1) — price payable in money or otherwise. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERMUTATION, p. 894; scan anchor: djvu line 149940 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines barter; the section governs barter as a sale. Kept in loose form; no invented quotation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PERPETRATOR

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — principals]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The perpetrator — the person who actually commits the offense — is the principal, punishable as such whether he commits the act himself or through another. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — principals. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERPETRATOR, p. 894; scan anchor: djvu line 149966 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the actual committer; § 2 is the federal statement of principal liability (commits, or aids and abets). Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PERPETUATING TESTIMONY

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 27 — depositions to perpetuate testimony]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The proceeding to preserve testimony that might otherwise be lost — aged or departing witnesses — survives in federal practice as depositions to perpetuate testimony. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 27 — depositions to perpetuate testimony. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERPETUATING TESTIMONY, p. 894; scan anchor: djvu line 150020 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes the proceeding; Rule 27 is its modern federal form. Direct, no hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PERPETUITY

[Maxim: the Rule Against Perpetuities (Gray's formulation)]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A perpetuity — a future limitation that may not vest within the lawful period — is void under the Rule Against Perpetuities: no interest is good unless it must vest, if at all, not later than twenty-one years after some life in being at the creation of the interest. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: the Rule Against Perpetuities (Gray's formulation). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERPETUITY, p. 894; scan anchor: djvu line 150029 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the void limitation; the Rule is the doctrine that voids it. Stated in maxim form with the canonical formulation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PERPETUITY OF THE KING

[Maxim: Rex nunquam moritur — 'the king never dies']

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The fiction that the king never dies — the office reoccupied instantly for all political purposes — is stated in the classic maxim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Rex nunquam moritur — 'the king never dies'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERPETUITY OF THE KING, p. 894; scan anchor: djvu line 150062 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes the fiction; the maxim is the law-well's classic formulation of it. Borderline-circular but legitimate under the brief's maxim allowance. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PERQUISITES

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 8; art. II, § 1, cl. 7 — the Emoluments Clauses]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Perquisites — emoluments of office beyond salary — are the subject of the Constitution's Emoluments Clauses, barring federal officers from accepting foreign emoluments and fixing the President's compensation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 8; art. II, § 1, cl. 7 — the Emoluments Clauses. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERQUISITES, p. 894; scan anchor: djvu line 150072 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines perquisites as emoluments of office; the clauses are the constitutional law of such emoluments. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PERSON

[Law: 1 U.S.C. § 1 — 'person' includes corporations and associations; Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific R.R., 118 U.S. 394 (1886)]

Who. The court deciding Law: 1 U.S.C. § 1 — 'person' includes corporations and associations; Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific R.R. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's artificial persons — corporations, 'created and devised by law' — are persons for federal statutory and Fourteenth Amendment purposes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 1 U.S.C. § 1 — 'person' includes corporations and associations; Santa Clara County v. Southern Pacific R.R., 118 U.S. 394 (1886). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERSON, p. 895; scan anchor: djvu line 150128 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1886 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry's artificial/natural-person distinction is exactly what these sources govern. PERSONABLE and PERSONA left bare — same well, fuller entry wins. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PERSONATE

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 912 — impersonating a federal officer or employee]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Criminal personation — assuming another's character to deceive and defraud — is the conduct punished by the federal impersonation statute. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 912 — impersonating a federal officer or employee. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERSONATE, p. 896; scan anchor: djvu line 150290 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the offense; § 912 is its federal statutory form. Direct, no hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PERTINENT

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 401 — relevant evidence]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Pertinent evidence — directed to the issue and tending to prove the allegations — is relevant evidence in the modern formulation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Evid. 401 — relevant evidence. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERTINENT, p. 896; scan anchor: djvu line 150350 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines pertinence as tending to prove the allegations; Rule 401 is the modern definition of relevance. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PERVERSE VERDICT

[Sparf v. United States, 156 U.S. 51 (1895)]

Who. The court deciding Sparf v. United States (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A verdict by which the jury refuses to follow the judge's direction on a point of law is jury nullification: the jury's power to acquit against the law, though not a right the court must instruct upon. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Sparf v. United States, 156 U.S. 51 (1895). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERVERSE VERDICT, p. 896; scan anchor: djvu line 150375 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1895 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry describes nullification; Sparf is the leading American case on the jury's relation to the law. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the

PETIT

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — grand jury; amends. VI, VII — petit (trial) jury]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Petit' as used in 'petit jury' names the trial jury, as distinguished from the grand jury of accusation: the Fifth Amendment requires the grand jury, the Sixth and Seventh secure the petit (trial) jury. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — grand jury; amends. VI, VII — petit (trial) jury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PETIT, p. 897; scan anchor: djvu line 150436 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry cross-refs 'petit jury'; the footnote gives the constitutional distinction that is the legal content of the compound. Not a duplicate of PAYS. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PETITION

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — the right to petition for redress of grievances]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines the petition as an address seeking redress or favor from authority; the First Amendment secures the right 'to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. I — the right to petition for redress of grievances. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PETITION, p. 897; scan anchor: djvu line 150475 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the petition; the amendment guarantees the right. Direct. PETITIONER left bare as the agent-noun twin. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PETITIONING CREDITOR

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 303 — involuntary bankruptcy cases]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The creditor at whose instance a bankruptcy adjudication is made against the debtor is the petitioner in an involuntary case. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. § 303 — involuntary bankruptcy cases. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PETITIONING CREDITOR, p. 897; scan anchor: djvu line 150548 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the petitioning creditor; § 303 governs involuntary petitions. Direct, no hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PETO

[Law: the precatory-trust doctrine]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'I request' — words that created a Roman fideicommissum (trust) — raise the modern precatory-words question: precatory language in a will creates a trust only if testamentary intent to impose one appears. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the precatory-trust doctrine. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PETO, p. 898; scan anchor: djvu line 150580 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry says peto created a Roman trust; the footnote states the modern rule for such words. Kept loose; no unverifiable section number cited. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PETTY

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 19 — 'petty offense' defined; state theft statutes — petty vs. grand larceny by value]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Petty' in compounds like petty larceny marks the lesser grade of the offense: federal law defines 'petty offense,' and state theft statutes grade petty against grand larceny by value taken. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 19 — 'petty offense' defined; state theft statutes — petty vs. grand larceny by value. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PETTY, p. 898; scan anchor: djvu line 150601 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's compounds are the value-graded offenses; the footnote names the modern grading. PICKERY left bare as the Scotch twin. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PILLAGE

[Law: the prohibition of pillage as a war crime (Rome Statute, art. 8)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Pillage — the forcible wartime taking of private property — is prohibited as a war crime in the law of armed conflict. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the prohibition of pillage as a war crime (Rome Statute, art. 8). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PILLAGE, p. 899; scan anchor: djvu line 150837 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines wartime pillage; the footnote states its status in the law of armed conflict. Kept loose; no subparagraph specified. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PILOT

[Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 53 U.S. 299 (1852)]

Who. The court deciding Cooley v. Board of Wardens (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The licensed pilot conducting vessels through rivers, channels, and ports is the subject of the leading case sustaining state pilotage regulation under the Commerce Clause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 53 U.S. 299 (1852). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PILOT, p. 899; scan anchor: djvu line 150848 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1852 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the pilot and notes licensing ('branch pilot'); Cooley is the leading American pilotage case. Confident on the citation. PILOTAGE and PILOTAGE AUTHORITIES left bare as twins. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PIRACY

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1651 — piracy as defined by the law of nations; U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 10]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Piracy — robbery on the high seas as defined by the law of nations, which the entry defines at length — is the federal offense codified under Congress's constitutional power to define and punish piracies. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1651 — piracy as defined by the law of nations; U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 10. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PIRACY, p. 900; scan anchor: djvu line 150929 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1651 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the law-of-nations offense with its own case cites; § 1651 is its federal codification and the clause its constitutional basis. PIRATE, PIRATICAL, PIRATICALITER left bare as twins. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PLACER

[Law: the General Mining Act of 1872 (30 U.S.C. ch. 2) — placer mining claims]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Placer claims — superficial mineral deposits located under the acts of Congress — are creatures of the federal mining laws. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the General Mining Act of 1872 (30 U.S.C. ch. 2) — placer mining claims. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PLACER, p. 901; scan anchor: djvu line 151121 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1872 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines placer claims 'under the acts of congress,' citing Rev. St. § 2329; the 1872 Act is their statutory home. Kept loose; no pinpoint invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PLAGIARISM

[Law: 17 U.S.C. § 501 — copyright infringement]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Plagiarism — passing off another's literary composition as one's own — is not itself the legal wrong; its legal cognate is copyright infringement. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 17 U.S.C. § 501 — copyright infringement. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PLAGIARISM, p. 902; scan anchor: djvu line 151287 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine cognate: the entry defines the act; infringement is the legal wrong answering to appropriation of another's writings. Framed as the cognate to avoid conflating the ethical term with the legal one. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PLAGIARIUS

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 1201 — kidnapping]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

PLAINTIFF

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 17(a) — real party in interest]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'use plaintiff' — the action brought in the assignor's name for the assignee's benefit, where the assignee could not sue in his own name — is the old device that the real-party-in-interest rule modernized: actions must now be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 17(a) — real party in interest. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PLAINTIFF, p. 902; scan anchor: djvu line 151341 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the 'use plaintiff' is exactly what Rule 17(a) replaced. Direct, confident. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PLEADING

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a) — notice pleading]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The common-law system the entry describes — alternate responsive allegations narrowing to a single issue — was succeeded by notice pleading: a short and plain statement of the claim showing entitlement to relief. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a) — notice pleading. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PLEADING, p. 904; scan anchor: djvu line 151687 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes the old issue-pleading system; Rule 8(a) is its modern successor. PLEA, PLEAD, PLEADED, PLEADER, PLEADINGS left bare as definitional twins. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRECEDENT

[Maxim: Stare decisis et non quieta movere]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. An adjudged case furnishing authority for later like cases binds under the doctrine of stare decisis: stand by decisions and do not disturb settled things. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Stare decisis et non quieta movere. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRECEDENT, p. 928; scan anchor: djvu line 155782 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the precedent as authority; stare decisis is the doctrine giving it that authority. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PRECEDENT CONDITION

[Law: the condition precedent in contract law (Restatement (Second) of Contracts)]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A condition that must happen or be performed before an estate can vest or be enlarged is the condition precedent of contract law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the condition precedent in contract law (Restatement (Second) of Contracts). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRECEDENT CONDITION, p. 928; scan anchor: djvu line 155794 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines it; the footnote names the doctrinal home. Kept loose; no section number invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRE-EMPTION

[Law: federal preemption — U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2 (the Supremacy Clause)]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Beyond the older senses the entry gives (international detention, the crown's preference, the settler's purchase right), pre-emption in modern American law chiefly names federal displacement of state law under the Supremacy Clause. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: federal preemption — U.S. Const. art. VI, cl. 2 (the Supremacy Clause). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRE-EMPTION, p. 930; scan anchor: djvu line 156024 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry gives the older senses; the footnote adds the dominant modern sense sharing the name and preference logic. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRE-EMPTIONER

[Law: the Preemption Act of 1841 — settlers' rights to purchase public lands]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The settler who by settlement or cultivation gains the exclusive right to purchase public land is the beneficiary of the federal preemption statutes for settlers. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the Preemption Act of 1841 — settlers' rights to purchase public lands. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRE-EMPTIONER, p. 930; scan anchor: djvu line 156063 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1841 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the pre-emptioner; the 1841 Act is the statute. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PREFER

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 547 — preferential transfers avoidable in bankruptcy]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. To prefer one creditor over others — giving advantage or priority in payment — is the preferential transfer that bankruptcy law avoids. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. § 547 — preferential transfers avoidable in bankruptcy. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PREFER, p. 930; scan anchor: djvu line 156084 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines preferring a creditor; § 547 avoids such preferences. The cleanest headword-to-statute mapping of the operation. Confident. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PEEVE FORTE ET DURE

[Law: Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(a)(4) — failure or refusal to plead; plea of not guilty entered]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Pressing-to-death for standing mute is extinct; the modern rule is that a defendant who refuses to plead has a plea of not guilty entered for him. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(a)(4) — failure or refusal to plead; plea of not guilty entered. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEEVE FORTE ET DURE, p. 886; scan anchor: djvu line 148641 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine illumination: the entry describes the punishment for standing mute, and Rule 11(a)(4) is the living rule that replaced it — mute now means not-guilty, not death. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PEKAL

[Maxim: Penal statutes are to be strictly construed]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry defines actions on penal statutes; such statutes are governed by the canon that penal laws are strictly construed. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Penal statutes are to be strictly construed. Host locus: Black's Law

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEKAL, p. 886; scan anchor: djvu line 148687 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the strict-construction canon is the named rule governing exactly the penal actions the entry defines. Kept in loose maxim form; no case citation invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PEB AUTBE VIE

[Law: the estate pur autre vie]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'For another's life' names the measuring life of the estate pur autre vie — a freehold estate lasting for the life of a person other than the holder. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the estate pur autre vie. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEB AUTBE VIE, p. 889; scan anchor: djvu line 149134 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the phrase is the definition of this still-recognized life estate's measuring life. Direct, no hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PEB AVERSIONEM

[Law: the common-law rule for sales in gross]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A sale 'by turning away' — in bulk, by estimation, without particular examination — is the civil-law form of the common-law sale in gross, where neither party gets relief for excess or deficiency in quantity. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the common-law rule for sales in gross. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEB AVERSIONEM, p. 889; scan anchor: djvu line 149138 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine doctrinal analogue: per aversionem (Pothier, cited in the entry) is the bulk/estimation sale, and the sale-in-gross rule is its common-law counterpart. Kept loose; no citation invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PEB CAPITA

[Law: intestate-succession statutes — per capita distribution at each generation; cf. UPC § 2-106]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Per capita distribution — equal shares to all takers in equal degree, without reference to stocks — is the method prescribed by modern intestate-succession statutes for takers of the same generation, as against per stirpes representation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: intestate-succession statutes — per capita distribution at each generation; cf. UPC § 2-106. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEB CAPITA, p. 889; scan anchor: djvu line 149153 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines per capita in 'the law of descent and distribution'; the footnote names the living statutory home of the rule. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's

 All Rights Reserved, Without Prejudice

original Why, carried verbatim]

PEB POBMAM DONI

[Law: the Rule in Shelley's Case (1581)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Taking 'by the form of the gift' rather than by operation of law is the pivot of the Rule in Shelley's Case: where the ancestor takes a freehold with remainder to his heirs, the heirs take by descent, not per formam doni. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the Rule in Shelley's Case (1581). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEB POBMAM DONI, p. 889; scan anchor: djvu line 149206 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1581 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the rule's whole point is the contrast the phrase names — form-of-the-gift taking versus taking by descent. The entry cites 2 Bl. Comm. on the phrase; Shelley's Case is the doctrine built on it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PEB INCURIAM

[Law: the per incuriam doctrine of precedent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A decision given 'through inadvertence' — without regard to a relevant statute or binding authority — is said to be per incuriam and is not followed as binding precedent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the per incuriam doctrine of precedent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEB INCURIAM, p. 889; scan anchor: djvu line 149218 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the phrase names a real doctrine of precedent; the footnote states it. Kept loose with no invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PER INDUSTRIAM HOMINES

[Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (1805)]

Who. The court deciding Pierson v. Post (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Reclaiming wild animals 'by human industry' belongs to the law of property in ferae naturae, whose leading American statement is the occupancy (capture) rule of Pierson v. Post. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. R. 175 (1805). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PER INDUSTRIAM HOMINES, p. 889; scan anchor: djvu line 149221 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1805 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine doctrinal family: the entry's phrase concerns how human action creates property in wild animals, and Pierson v. Post is the foundational American case on that question. Confident on the citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PEB INFORTUNIUM

[Law: Magna Carta c. 39 (per legem terrae); U.S. Const. amends. V, XIV — due process of law]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry embeds per legem terrae — 'by the law of the land; by due process of law' — the Magna Carta phrase (c. 39) that is the historical ancestor of due process of law under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Magna Carta c. 39 (per legem terrae); U.S. Const. amends. V, XIV — due process of law. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEB INFORTUNIUM, p. 889; scan anchor: djvu line 149227 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry itself equates per legem terrae with due process of law and cites authority; the footnote names the lineage. PER MISADVENTURE left bare as the twin. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PEB MIMAS

[Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 175 — duress by threat]

Who. The Restatement, as cited [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'By threats' points to duress: a contract induced by an improper threat is voidable by the victim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 175 — duress by threat. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PEB MIMAS, p. 889; scan anchor: djvu line 149248 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine one-hop: the entry says 'See Duress'; § 175 is the modern statement of duress by threat. No invented citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PER MT ET PER TOUT

[Law: joint tenancy with right of survivorship — the four unities]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'By the half and by the whole' describes joint tenancy: for tenure and survivorship each tenant holds the whole, for alienation only his share — the estate defined by the four unities of time, title, interest, and possession. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: joint tenancy with right of survivorship — the four unities. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PER MT ET PER TOUT, p. 890; scan anchor: djvu line 149290 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry describes exactly how joint tenants hold; the four unities are the modern doctrinal statement of that holding. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PER VERBA DE PRJESENTI

[Law: common-law marriage — marriage by verba de praesenti]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Marriage 'by words of the present tense' — present words of mutual taking as husband and wife — is the classic common-law marriage formula, as against verba de futuro (future words, mere espousal unless consummated). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law marriage — marriage by verba de praesenti. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PER VERBA DE PRJESENTI, p. 891; scan anchor: djvu line 149431 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's phrase is the operative formula of common-law marriage, still the basis of the doctrine in states recognizing it. PER VERBA DE FUTURO left bare; the one footnote carries the pair's distinction. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PERICTJXTJM

[Law: UCC §§ 2-509, 2-510 — risk of loss in sales of goods]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's maxim — the risk of a thing sold, not yet delivered, is the purchaser's — is the risk-of-loss rule, codified for sales of goods in the UCC's risk-of-loss articles. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC §§ 2-509, 2-510 — risk of loss in sales of goods. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PERICTJXTJM, p. 892; scan anchor: djvu line 149698 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry quotes Kent stating the rule; §§ 2-509 and 2-510 are its modern codification. Direct, no hop. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PLENA JETAS

[Law: the age of majority — 18 in most jurisdictions; cf. U.S. Const. amend. XXVI]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Full age' is the age of majority — 18 in most American jurisdictions for most purposes, the voting age fixed at 18 by the Twenty-sixth Amendment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the age of majority — 18 in most jurisdictions; cf. U.S. Const. amend. XXVI. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PLENA JETAS, p. 906; scan anchor: djvu line 151992 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines full age; the footnote states the modern rule. Framed as the modern rule rather than trivia. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PCENITENTXA

[Law: Model Penal Code § 5.01(4) — renunciation of criminal purpose]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Locus poenitentiae — room to reconsider and withdraw before the contract is concluded, or before the intended crime is committed — survives in criminal law as renunciation: voluntary and complete withdrawal from an inchoate crime is a defense. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Model Penal Code § 5.01(4) — renunciation of criminal purpose. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PCENITENTXA, p. 907; scan anchor: djvu line 152337 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines locus poenitentiae in both senses; MPC § 5.01(4) is the modern criminal-law form. Kept in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PONENDUM IN BAIXTUM

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — 'Excessive bail shall not be required']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The old writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in bailable cases is the ancestor of the modern guarantee against excessive bail. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — 'Excessive bail shall not be required'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PONENDUM IN BAIXTUM, p. 912; scan anchor: djvu line 153084 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry is the writ securing bail; the amendment is the modern guarantee. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PONIT 8E SUPER PATRIAM

[Law: Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(a)(1) — pleas of not guilty, guilty, and nolo contendere]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'He puts himself upon the country' — the recorded plea of not guilty in a criminal action — is one of the pleas a defendant may enter under modern criminal procedure. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(a)(1) — pleas of not guilty, guilty, and nolo contendere. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PONIT 8E SUPER PATRIAM, p. 912; scan anchor: djvu line 153100 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry records the common-law not-guilty plea; Rule 11(a)(1) is its modern form. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PORTXO LEGITIMA

[Law: forced heirship — Louisiana's legitime]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The birthright portion of which the heir cannot be deprived by will — the civil-law legitime — is preserved in American law as forced heirship. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: forced heirship — Louisiana's legitime. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PORTXO LEGITIMA, p. 914; scan anchor: djvu line 153410 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine cognate: the entry defines the legitime; Louisiana preserves forced heirship in the United States. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

POSSE GOMTTATUS

[Law: the Posse Comitatus Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1385]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The power of the county — the body of citizens the sheriff may summon to keep the peace and pursue felons — gives its name to the federal act limiting the use of the military as a posse. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the Posse Comitatus Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1385. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry POSSE GOMTTATUS, p. 915; scan anchor: djvu line 153537 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the posse comitatus; the Act, named for it, restricts the Army and Air Force from acting as such. Direct, confident. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

POSSESSION VATJT TITHE

[Maxim: Possession vaut titre — 'possession is (about) as good as title']

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Possession raises a prima facie title — the possessor is presumed owner until the contrary appears — stated in the classic form of the maxim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Possession vaut titre — 'possession is (about) as good as title'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry POSSESSION VATJT TITHE, p. 917; scan anchor: djvu line 153854 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states the rule; the maxim is its classic formulation. Kept on the PENDENTE LITE pattern. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRASCRIPTIO, p. 926; scan anchor: djvu line 155385 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines prescription as title by long possession; adverse possession is its common-law form. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRE8UMPTIO

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 301 — presumptions in civil cases]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Presumption — including the strong presumption (præsumptio fortior) that shifts the burden of proof to the opposite party — is governed in federal civil practice by the presumptions rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Evid. 301 — presumptions in civil cases. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRE8UMPTIO, p. 926; scan anchor: djvu line 155465 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines presumption and burden-shifting; Rule 301 is the federal rule. Direct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PR2ETERITIO

[Law: pretermitted-heir statutes — omitted children take an intestate share (cf. UPC § 2-302)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The testator's silent passing-over of an heir has its modern form in pretermitted-heir statutes: a child omitted from the will takes an intestate share. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: pretermitted-heir statutes — omitted children take an intestate share (cf. UPC § 2-302). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PR2ETERITIO, p. 927; scan anchor: djvu line 155534 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the Roman passing-over; the statutes are its modern form. Kept loose. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PREFERENCE

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 547 — preferences]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Transfers by an insolvent debtor favoring one creditor over others are the classic target of fraudulent-transfer and preference law: under the Bankruptcy Code the trustee may avoid certain pre-petition transfers made on account of an antecedent debt. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. § 547 — preferences. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PREFERENCE, p. 930; scan anchor: djvu line 156093 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine, not forced: § 547 is literally titled 'Preferences' and governs exactly the act this entry defines — a debtor paying one creditor ahead of the pro rata distribution. The entry's own cited cases (e.g., Pirie v. Chicago Title & Trust Co.) are preference cases. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the

PREJUDICE

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 41 — effect of dismissal]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'without prejudice' sense is the procedural one: under Fed. R. Civ. P. 41 a dismissal 'without prejudice' is not an adjudication on the merits, so the party's rights are preserved and the claim may be refiled. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 41 — effect of dismissal. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PREJUDICE, p. 931; scan anchor: djvu line 156182 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines 'without prejudice' as a declaration that no rights are waived or lost; Rule 41 is the federal rule that gives that phrase its operative meaning for dismissals. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PREMEDITATE

[Axiom: premeditation and deliberation distinguish first-degree murder from lesser homicide]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Premeditation and deliberation — thinking of the act beforehand, contriving and designing it — are the elements that elevate an intentional killing to murder in the first degree. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: premeditation and deliberation distinguish first-degree murder from lesser homicide. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PREMEDITATE, p. 931; scan anchor: djvu line 156241 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's long string of murder cases all turn on exactly this distinction; the axiom states the principle those cases apply, without inventing any citation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PREMIUM

[Axiom: every enforceable promise requires consideration]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The premium is the consideration for the underwriter's promise: the price paid for coverage, without which the insurance contract lacks the bargained-for exchange that makes it enforceable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: every enforceable promise requires consideration. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PREMIUM, p. 931; scan anchor: djvu line 156334 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine but borderline: the entry itself defines premium as 'the consideration for the insurance'; the axiom states the contract principle that gives the definition its legal force. Kept because it illuminates rather than decorates. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the

PREPONDERANCE

[Addington v. Texas, 441 U.S. 418 (1979)]

Who. The court deciding Addington v. Texas (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Preponderance of the evidence — proof that a fact is more likely than not — is the default burden of persuasion in civil cases, sitting below 'clear and convincing evidence' and 'beyond a reasonable doubt.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Addington v. Texas, 441 U.S. 418 (1979). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PREPONDERANCE, p. 931; scan anchor: djvu line 156397 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1979 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the comparative 'superiority of weight' standard; Addington is the Supreme Court decision that canvassed and ranked the three standards of proof, so it authoritatively situates preponderance among them. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PREROGATIVE

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 2 — the Suspension Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Of the prerogative writs the entry lists — mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, habeas corpus, certiorari — the great writ of habeas corpus survives constitutionally: its privilege may not be suspended except in rebellion or invasion. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 2 — the Suspension Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PREROGATIVE, p. 931; scan anchor: djvu line 156415 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry traces these writs to the crown's extraordinary power; the Suspension Clause is the American constitutional home of the most important of them, showing the doctrine's living continuation rather than its history alone. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PRESCRIBE

[Maxim: Vigilantibus non dormientibus aequitas subvenit]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Liberative prescription — the peremptory bar the entry equates with the statute of limitations — rests on the equitable rationale that the law aids those who assert their rights promptly, not those who sleep on them. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Vigilantibus non dormientibus aequitas subvenit. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRESCRIBE, p. 933; scan anchor: djvu line 156515 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry itself reduces liberative prescription to 'a peremptory and perpetual bar' when the creditor 'has been silent'; the maxim states the rationale behind that bar rather than inventing a new doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRESENCE

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — principals]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Constructive presence — being near enough, or actively cooperating with one actually present — grounds accomplice liability: one who aids or abets an offense, though not on the very spot, is punishable as a principal. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 2 — principals. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRESENCE, p. 933; scan anchor: djvu line 156639 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's 'constructive presence' doctrine exists precisely to make cooperating absentees liable as principals; § 2 is the federal codification of that principle. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRESENTMENT

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The grand-jury presentment the entry defines is constitutionally embedded: no person may be held for a capital or otherwise infamous crime 'unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRESENTMENT, p. 934; scan anchor: djvu line 156737 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the Fifth Amendment names presentment alongside indictment as the required accusatory instrument; the entry defines the instrument, the Amendment gives it constitutional force. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PRESENTMENT

[Law: UCC Article 3 — negotiable instruments: presentment and dishonor]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's second sense — production of a bill or note to the drawee or party liable for acceptance or payment — is the presentment regime codified for negotiable instruments, including the rules on dishonor and notice of dishonor. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC Article 3 — negotiable instruments: presentment and dishonor. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRESENTMENT, p. 934; scan anchor: djvu line 156737 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Article 3 is the uniform statute governing exactly the presentment-for-acceptance-or-payment procedure the entry describes; citing the article rather than a section number avoids overclaiming. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PRESIDENT

[Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 1]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The chief executive magistrate the entry defines holds the office created by the vesting clause: 'The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. II, § 1. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRESIDENT, p. 934; scan anchor: djvu line 156810 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's American sense ('chief executive magistrate') is defined by Article II's vesting clause, quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XII]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The body of electors the entry describes — apportioned as the entry says, per Article II — casts its ballots under the procedure prescribed by the Twelfth Amendment: separate ballots for President and Vice-President, with contingent election in the House if no majority. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. XII. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS, p. 934; scan anchor: djvu line 156861 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry cites Article II's apportionment; the Twelfth Amendment is the operative law governing how those electors actually vote, so it completes rather than repeats the entry. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PRESS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. I]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The 'liberty of the press' the entry invokes metaphorically is the constitutional guarantee: 'Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. I. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRESS, p. 934; scan anchor: djvu line 156871 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry's second sense is expressly the liberty-of-the-press phrase; the First Amendment is its textual home, quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRESUMPTION

[Law: Fed. R. Evid. 301 — presumptions in civil cases generally]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's taxonomy of presumptions of law — conclusive versus disputable — operates in federal civil practice under the rule that the party against whom a presumption is directed bears the burden of producing evidence to rebut it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Evid. 301 — presumptions in civil cases generally. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRESUMPTION, p. 934; scan anchor: djvu line 156924 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Rule 301 is the federal rule allocating the burden for exactly the disputable (rebuttable) presumptions the entry classifies; it gives the doctrine its modern procedural footing. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PRICE

[Law: UCC § 2-305 — open price term]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In sales law the price term need not be fixed for a contract to form: where the parties intend to contract but leave price open, the Code supplies a gap-filler (a reasonable price at time of delivery). [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-305 — open price term. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRICE, p. 937; scan anchor: djvu line 157317 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines price as the consideration for purchase; § 2-305 is the uniform rule on what happens when that consideration is left open, directly governing the entry's subject. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRIMA FACIE

[Axiom: a prima facie showing shifts the burden of production to the opposing party]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A prima facie case shifts the burden of production: once the proponent's evidence is strong enough to call for an answer, the opponent must come forward with rebutting evidence or lose. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: a prima facie showing shifts the burden of production to the opposing party. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRIMA FACIE, p. 938; scan anchor: djvu line 157383 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine but borderline: the entry describes the burden shift without naming it; the axiom names the procedural consequence (burden of production, distinct from persuasion), which is the principle courts apply. Kept for the naming value. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRINCIPLE

[Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — patent-eligible subject matter]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's patent-law rule — a principle is patentable when new in its application to a useful purpose — sits inside the statutory gate for patent-eligible subject matter: abstract principles as such are excluded, their practical applications admitted. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 35 U.S.C. § 101 — patent-eligible subject matter. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRINCIPLE, p. 939; scan anchor: djvu line 157743 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: § 101 is the statute that draws exactly the line the entry describes (principle vs. application of the principle to a useful purpose). [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PRIOR

[Law: UCC § 9-322 — priorities among conflicting security interests]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'Prior tempore potior jure' — first in time, preferred in right — is the ancestor of modern priority rules; its living commercial form is that among conflicting security interests in the same collateral, the first to file or perfect generally prevails. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 9-322 — priorities among conflicting security interests. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRIOR, p. 939; scan anchor: djvu line 157781 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry states the maxim; § 9-322 is the uniform rule that operationalizes it for secured transactions, giving the ancient maxim its modern working form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRISON

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 751 — escape from federal custody]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The common-law 'prison-breaking' the entry defines — escape from lawful custody by force — is the ancestor of the modern escape offense; federally, escape or attempted escape from federal custody is a standalone crime. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 751 — escape from federal custody. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRISON, p. 939; scan anchor: djvu line 157837 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: § 751 is the living federal form of the offense the entry describes at common law; it names the descendant rather than restating the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRIVATION

[Law: UCC § 1-302 — variation by agreement; non-disclaimable duties]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's maxim — private agreement does not derogate from public law — is operationalized in the Code: the obligations of good faith, diligence, reasonableness, and care may not be disclaimed by agreement. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 1-302 — variation by agreement; non-disclaimable duties. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRIVATION, p. 941; scan anchor: djvu line 157950 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: rather than echoing the maxim, this cites the concrete uniform rule that enforces it — some duties survive any private bargain. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRIVIES

[Axiom: judgments bind parties and their privies]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The six kinds of privies exist for one operative reason: a judgment binds not only the parties to the action but those in privity with them, which is why privity is the gateway to res judicata and collateral estoppel. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: judgments bind parties and their privies. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRIVIES, p. 941; scan anchor: djvu line 157986 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the axiom states the procedural consequence the whole taxonomy serves; no citation is invented, and the principle is what makes the classification matter. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRIVATEER

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 11]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. What distinguished a lawful privateer from a pirate was the commission: Congress holds the power 'to declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry lists statements in legislative debates as absolutely privileged; the constitutional source is the Speech or Debate Clause — 'for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place' — which also carries the 'privileged from Arrest' language matching the entry's privilege from arrest. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Why. Genuine: the clause is the textual home of both the absolute legislative privilege and the arrest privilege the entry describes; quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PRIVITY

[Law: UCC § 2-318 — third-party beneficiaries of warranties]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry states the old rule that privity of contract is essential to sue on a contract; modern sales law abrogates that bar for warranties, extending express and implied warranties to third-party beneficiaries beyond the contracting parties. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-318 — third-party beneficiaries of warranties. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRIVITY, p. 942; scan anchor: djvu line 158276 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: § 2-318 is the uniform provision that limits the very privity requirement the entry states, so it marks the rule's modern boundary rather than repeating it. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PRIZE

[Law: 28 U.S.C. § 1333 — federal admiralty and maritime jurisdiction]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The federal district courts' prize jurisdiction the entry notes is an exercise of the federal admiralty grant: the district courts have original jurisdiction, exclusive of state courts, over civil cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, under which prize cases fall. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 28 U.S.C. § 1333 — federal admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRIZE, p. 942; scan anchor: djvu line 158359 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: prize is admiralty; § 1333 is the jurisdictional statute behind the prize-court jurisdiction the entry attributes to the federal district courts. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRO CONFESSO

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 55 — default judgment]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A bill in equity taken pro confesso for want of an answer is the ancestor of the modern default judgment: where a defendant fails to plead or defend, the court may enter judgment by default. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 55 — default judgment. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRO CONFESSO, p. 944; scan anchor: djvu line 158433 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Rule 55 is the living procedural form of exactly the pro confesso decree the entry defines — judgment upon failure to answer. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRO EMTORE

[Axiom: a bona fide purchaser for value without notice takes free of prior undisclosed claims]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Usucapio pro emtore — acquisition 'as a purchaser' — required good faith, and is the Roman root of the bona fide purchaser rule: one who buys for value without notice of a prior claim takes free of it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: a bona fide purchaser for value without notice takes free of prior undisclosed claims. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRO EMTORE, p. 944; scan anchor: djvu line 158494 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine but borderline: the entry never names the descendant doctrine; the axiom names the living rule that grew from the Roman title, which is illumination rather than repetition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PRO HAC VICE

[Axiom: courts may admit out-of-jurisdiction counsel pro hac vice for a single matter]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The phrase's living use is in admission of counsel: a court may admit an attorney not licensed in the jurisdiction pro hac vice — for that case only, typically on motion and association with local counsel. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: courts may admit out-of-jurisdiction counsel pro hac vice for a single matter. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRO HAC VICE, p. 944; scan anchor: djvu line 158516 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine but borderline: no single statute governs (it is court rules), so no citation is invented; the axiom states the universally practiced principle the phrase denotes. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRO INTERESSE SUO

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 24 — intervention]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'A third party may be allowed to intervene in a suit pro interesse suo' is the intervention practice codified for federal courts: intervention of right where the applicant's interest may be impaired, and permissive intervention where a common question of law or fact exists. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 24 — intervention. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRO INTERESSE SUO, p. 945; scan anchor: djvu line 158549 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Rule 24 is the federal rule governing exactly the third-party intervention the entry describes; a direct match, not a stretch. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRO RATA

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 726 — distribution of property of the estate]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's insolvent-estate example is the Code's distribution rule: after secured and priority claims, creditors within the same class share pro rata — each receiving the same proportion of its claim. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. § 726 — distribution of property of the estate. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRO RATA, p. 945; scan anchor: djvu line 158594 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: § 726 is the distribution statute whose within-class pro rata sharing the entry describes; distinct from the PREFERENCE footnote, which concerned avoidance of transfers. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRO SE

[Law: 28 U.S.C. § 1654 — parties may conduct their own cases personally]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The living right behind the phrase: in all courts of the United States, parties may plead and conduct their own cases personally or by counsel. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 28 U.S.C. § 1654 — parties may conduct their own cases personally. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRO SE, p. 945; scan anchor: djvu line 158623 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1654 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: § 1654 is the federal statute securing the pro se appearance the entry defines; a direct match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROBABLE

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. IV]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's classic definition of probable cause is the Fourth Amendment's operative term: 'no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. IV. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROBABLE, p. 945; scan anchor: djvu line 158668 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the Amendment makes probable cause the constitutional threshold for warrants; the entry defines the threshold, the Amendment gives it force. Quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PROBATION

[Law: 18 U.S.C. § 3561 — sentence of probation]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The modern criminal-administration sense the entry defines — release under suspension of sentence during good behavior — is a federal sentencing option: a defendant found guilty of an offense may be sentenced to a term of probation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 18 U.S.C. § 3561 — sentence of probation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROBATION, p. 946; scan anchor: djvu line 158844 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: § 3561 authorizes exactly the probation disposition the entry describes; the statutory home of the defined practice. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROCEDURE

[Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938)]

Who. The court deciding Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's substance/procedure distinction is the axis of Erie: federal courts sitting in diversity apply state substantive law but federal procedural law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROCEDURE, p. 947; scan anchor: djvu line 158956 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1938 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Erie is the decision that made the substance-versus-procedure classification outcome-determinative; it gives the entry's distinction its most famous application. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROCEEDING

[Axiom: final judgments are immune from collateral attack]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The 'collateral proceeding' sub-entry states the rule's setting; the rule itself is that a final judgment cannot be attacked collaterally — it must be challenged by direct appeal or other direct review. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: final judgments are immune from collateral attack. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROCEEDING, p. 947; scan anchor: djvu line 158981 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine but borderline: the entry defines the collateral-proceeding setting without stating the consequence; the axiom states the consequence courts apply. Kept for the naming value. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PROCEEDS

[Law: UCC §§ 9-315, 9-102 — secured party's rights in proceeds]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The operative legal term of art: a security interest in collateral automatically extends to identifiable proceeds of its disposition — whatever is received upon sale, exchange, or other disposition. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC §§ 9-315, 9-102 — secured party's rights in proceeds. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROCEEDS, p. 948; scan anchor: djvu line 159092 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Article 9's proceeds rules are the Code meaning of the headword; the footnote gives the commercial-law content the general definition lacks. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROCESS

[Law: U.S. Const. amends. V, XIV]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'process of law' cross-reference points to due process: no person shall 'be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amends. V, XIV. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROCESS, p. 948; scan anchor: djvu line 159127 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the due process clauses are the constitutional content of 'process of law'; quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROCESS

[Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U.S. 780 (1876)]

Who. The court deciding Cochrane v. Deener (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. For the patent-law sense, the Supreme Court authority the entry itself cites defines a patentable process as an art — a means or method of producing a result, irrespective of any particular machine. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U.S. 780 (1876). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROCESS, p. 948; scan anchor: djvu line 159127 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1876 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Cochrane is the defining process-patent decision and the very authority the entry cites; the footnote anchors the entry's definition to its source. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROCHEIN

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 17(c) — minors and incompetents appear by next friend or guardian ad litem]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The prochein ami (next friend) the entry defines is the representative by whom minors and incompetent persons sue and defend where they cannot act in their own names. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 17(c) — minors and incompetents appear by next friend or guardian ad litem. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROCHEIN, p. 19 (page anchor suspect — Brick 21 §D); scan anchor: djvu line 159344 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Rule 17(c) is the federal rule codifying exactly the next-friend practice the entry describes; a direct match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROCURATION

[Law: UCC § 3-402 — signature by representative]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Indorsing a bill or note 'by procuration' (per proc.) — signing as proxy for another — is governed by the Code's signature-by-representative rule, which allocates liability between the principal and the agent according to how the signature discloses the representative capacity. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-402 — signature by representative. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROCURATION, p. 960; scan anchor: djvu line 159507 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines exactly the per-procuration indorsement; § 3-402 is the uniform rule on the legal effect of such representative signatures on negotiable instruments. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PRODUCE

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 45 — subpoena]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Production of books and writings at trial 'in obedience to a subpoena duces tecum' is the compelled-production procedure of the federal subpoena rule. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 45 — subpoena. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRODUCE, p. 951; scan anchor: djvu line 159690 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Rule 45 is the federal rule governing subpoenas, including subpoenas duces tecum commanding production of documents and things; a direct match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROGRESSION

[Maxim: Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Coke maxim carried in this entry — it is forbidden to do on one's own land what may injure another's — states the same principle as 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas,' the foundation of the law of private nuisance. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROGRESSION, p. 952; scan anchor: djvu line 159902 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine but borderline: the entry states the maxim without naming its doctrinal home; the footnote names private nuisance as that home. The famous maxim form is used because it is the form in which the principle is universally cited. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PROLONGATION

[Axiom: a binding extension of time to the principal debtor discharges the surety]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. A binding prolongation of time granted to the principal debtor discharges the surety, because it alters the surety's risk without the surety's consent. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: a binding extension of time to the principal debtor discharges the surety. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROLONGATION, p. 952; scan anchor: djvu line 160008 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the axiom is the operative suretyship rule the entry itself states as the consequence of prolongation; no citation is invented. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROMISSORY

[Law: UCC §§ 3-104, 3-106 — negotiable instruments; unconditional promise or order]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The promissory note the entry defines — an unconditional written promise, signed by the maker, to pay a sum certain in money to bearer or to order — is the canonical negotiable instrument: the Code defines negotiability and the unconditional promise or order that makes an instrument negotiable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC §§ 3-104, 3-106 — negotiable instruments; unconditional promise or order. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROMISSORY, p. 954; scan anchor: djvu line 160119 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Article 3 is the uniform law of exactly the instrument the entry defines; the sections named supply the negotiability test the definitions presuppose. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROMUTUUM

[Axiom: money paid by mistake may be recovered in restitution]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The quasi-contract for money paid by mistake — the recipient's obligation to return as much — is the civil-law root of the common-law action for money had and received, the modern law of restitution for mistaken payments. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: money paid by mistake may be recovered in restitution. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROMUTUUM, p. 954; scan anchor: djvu line 160197 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine but borderline: the entry defines the Roman institution without naming its descendant; the axiom names the living doctrine (restitution/money had and received), which is illumination rather than repetition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PROPER

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 19 — required joinder of parties]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'necessary party' — one without whom no substantial decree can be made — is the modern 'required party': where complete relief cannot be accorded without a person, the court must order that person joined if feasible. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 19 — required joinder of parties. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROPER, p. 955; scan anchor: djvu line 160301 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Rule 19 is the federal rule codifying the necessary-party doctrine the entry defines; a direct match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROPTER

[Axiom: jurors are subject to challenge for cause for implied bias]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The propter affectum, propter defectum, and propter delictum challenges are the common-law species of challenge for cause for implied bias: a juror may be removed where relationship, interest, formed opinion, or disqualifying status implies partiality as a matter of law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: jurors are subject to challenge for cause for implied bias. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROPTER, p. 968; scan anchor: djvu line 160791 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine but borderline: the entry lists the species of challenge without stating the living practice; the axiom names the consequence — removal for cause — that these challenges serve. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PROSPECTIVE

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, §§ 9–10]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's prospective/retrospective distinction has constitutional bite: retrospective criminal legislation is barred — 'No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed' — as against Congress and, separately, the states. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, §§ 9–10. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROSPECTIVE, p. 959; scan anchor: djvu line 160950 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the ex post facto clauses are the constitutional prohibition on the retrospective laws the entry distinguishes from prospective ones; quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROSPECTUS

[Law: Securities Act of 1933 — registration and prospectus requirements]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The prospectus the entry defines — the document inviting the public to subscribe to an issue of securities — is federally regulated: public offerings require registration and a conforming prospectus. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Securities Act of 1933 — registration and prospectus requirements. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROSPECTUS, p. 959; scan anchor: djvu line 160957 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1933 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the '33 Act is the federal statute governing exactly the public-subscription prospectus the entry describes; cited in loose form to avoid overclaiming section numbers. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PROVE

[Law: 11 U.S.C. § 501 — filing of proofs of claim]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's second sense — presenting and establishing a claim against a bankrupt or insolvent estate to receive a dividend — is the proof-of-claim procedure: creditors file proofs of claim to share in the distribution. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 11 U.S.C. § 501 — filing of proofs of claim. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROVE, p. 961; scan anchor: djvu line 161309 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: § 501 is the Code section authorizing the filing of proofs of claim the entry describes; a direct match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PROVISIONAL

[Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 64 — seizure of person or property under state remedies]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The provisional remedies the entry lists — injunction, receiver, attachment, arrest — secure the plaintiff against loss while the action pends; federally, every state-law remedy for seizing person or property to secure satisfaction of a potential judgment is made available. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Fed. R. Civ. P. 64 — seizure of person or property under state remedies. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROVISIONAL, p. 962; scan anchor: djvu line 161452 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Rule 64 is the federal rule incorporating the provisional remedies (attachment, garnishment, replevin, sequestration) the entry catalogs. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PROVOCATION

[Axiom: adequate provocation mitigates murder to voluntary manslaughter]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry defines provocation but not its great doctrinal consequence: adequate provocation — conduct arousing heat of passion in a reasonable person — reduces an intentional killing from murder to voluntary manslaughter. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: adequate provocation mitigates murder to voluntary manslaughter. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROVOCATION, p. 962; scan anchor: djvu line 161571 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the heat-of-passion mitigation is the operative legal consequence of the provocation the entry defines; the entry never names it, so the axiom illuminates rather than repeats. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROXIMATE

[Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R. Co., 248 N.Y. 339 (1928)]

Who. The court deciding Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R. Co. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's proximate-cause definition is the doctrine of Palsgraf: liability turns on foreseeability — a duty is owed only to those within the reasonably foreseeable zone of danger, not to the world at large. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R. Co., 248 N.Y. 339 (1928). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROXIMATE, p. 962; scan anchor: djvu line 161612 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1928 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Palsgraf is the canonical proximate-cause decision, and its foreseeability holding is exactly the 'efficient cause' analysis the entry's definition performs. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PROXY

[Law: 15 U.S.C. § 78n (Securities Exchange Act § 14) — proxy solicitation]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Voting by proxy in the corporate setting — the appointment the entry defines — is federally regulated: the proxy solicitation rules govern the disclosures and procedures for obtaining shareholder votes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 15 U.S.C. § 78n (Securities Exchange Act § 14) — proxy solicitation. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROXY, p. 962; scan anchor: djvu line 161647 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: § 14 is the federal statute regulating the corporate-proxy practice the entry describes; cited in loose form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRUDENCE

[Axiom: negligence is judged by the reasonably prudent person standard]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry defines prudence as the care required by the circumstances, contrasted with negligence; the operative standard it implies is the reasonable-person test: negligence is the failure to exercise the care of a reasonably prudent person under the circumstances. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: negligence is judged by the reasonably prudent person standard. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRUDENCE, p. 962; scan anchor: djvu line 161668 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine but borderline: the entry supplies the definition and the contrast; the axiom states the negligence standard courts build from it. Kept for the standard-naming value. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PUBLIC

[Kelo v. City of New London, 545 U.S. 482 (2005)]

Who. The court deciding Kelo v. City of New London (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'public use' sub-entry — the constitutional restriction on taking private property by eminent domain — received its modern reading in Kelo: 'public use' encompasses public purpose, including economic development that benefits the community. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Kelo v. City of New London, 545 U.S. 482 (2005). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PUBLIC, p. 964; scan anchor: djvu line 161755 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 2005 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Kelo is the decision construing exactly the 'public use' limitation the entry defines; it gives the sub-entry its current operative meaning rather than restating the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PUBLICANUS

[Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306 (1950)]

Who. The court deciding Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co. (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. MERGE FLAG: this PUBLICATION text (7 senses) is merged into the PUBLICANUS body in the chunk; no standalone PUBLICATION headword exists. Sense 5 — publication of a summons where personal service cannot be made — must satisfy due process: notice reasonably calculated, under all the circumstances, to apprise interested parties of the action. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306 (1950). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PUBLICANUS, p. 964; scan anchor: djvu line 161901 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1950 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Mullane states the constitutional test for exactly the service-by-publication procedure the entry defines; the merge flag tells the merge step where this text lives. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PUNISHMENT

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's 'cruel and unusual punishment' definition is the Eighth Amendment's operative phrase: 'nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PUNISHMENT, p. 966; scan anchor: djvu line 162169 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the Amendment is the textual source of the phrase the entry defines at length; quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PUNITIVE

[BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 768 (1996)]

Who. The court deciding BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Punitive damages — the entry's cross-referenced term — are constitutionally bounded: grossly excessive awards violate due process, judged by reprehensibility, the ratio to compensatory damages, and comparable civil penalties. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 768 (1996). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PUNITIVE, p. 966; scan anchor: djvu line 162196 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1996 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine but borderline: the entry is only a cross-ref, but the due-process limit is the term's most important operative law, and the entry gives no other hook. The guideposts summarize the holding without overclaiming. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PURCHASE

[Law: Rule in Shelley's Case]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The entry's 'words of purchase' discussion is the ground of the Rule in Shelley's Case: in 'to A for life, remainder to his heirs,' the word 'heirs' operates as a word of limitation, not purchase — A takes the fee. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Rule in Shelley's Case. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PURCHASE, p. 967; scan anchor: djvu line 162266 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine but borderline: the Rule is the landmark presupposed by the entry's purchase/limitation distinction; cited without a reporter page to avoid inventing one. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PUT

[Law: U.S. Const. amends. VI, VII — trial by jury]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Puts himself upon the country' is the old common-law formula for demanding trial by jury; its constitutional guarantee is the Sixth Amendment in criminal cases and the Seventh in civil cases at common law. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amends. VI, VII — trial by jury. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PUT, p. 968; scan anchor: djvu line 162544 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the entry defines the phrase as trusting the case 'to the arbitrament of a jury'; the Amendments are the constitutional home of that jury right. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

QUALIFICATION

[Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 319]

Who. The court deciding Cummings v. Missouri (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry cites Cummings v. Missouri for the definition; the case's holding is the limit on the definition: post-Civil-War test oaths imposed as 'qualifications' for office were struck down as bills of attainder and ex post facto laws — legislatures may set qualifications, but not attainder by another name. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 319. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUALIFICATION, p. 971; scan anchor: djvu line 163107 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the citation (volume and page) comes from the entry's own body, so nothing is invented; the year is omitted rather than guessed. The holding gives the constitutional boundary of the defined term. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority the host entry itself invokes — the case is cited in the entry's own text, and the insert surfaces it [basis: citation located in host body (mechanical containment check)]

QUARANTINE

[Law: 42 U.S.C. § 264 — federal quarantine authority]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's first sense — detention of vessels from infected ports — is exercised federally as the quarantine authority over communicable disease: regulations for apprehension, detention, and conditional release to prevent interstate spread. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 42 U.S.C. § 264 — federal quarantine authority. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUARANTINE, p. 975; scan anchor: djvu line 163490 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: § 264 is the federal statute behind the maritime quarantine the entry defines; the widow's-quarantine sense is left alone as historical dower law. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

QUARTERING SOLDIERS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. III]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The act the entry defines — billeting soldiers in private houses without the owners' consent — is the evil the Third Amendment bars: 'No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. III. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUARTERING SOLDIERS, p. 976; scan anchor: djvu line 163714 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the Amendment is the constitutional prohibition of exactly the practice defined; quoted verbatim, a direct match. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

QUESTION

[Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962)]

Who. The court deciding Baker v. Carr (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The entry's 'Political question' cross-reference is the justiciability doctrine: disputes textually committed to the political branches, or lacking judicially manageable standards, are nonjusticiable — the six-factor test of Baker v. Carr. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186 (1962). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUESTION, p. 978; scan anchor: djvu line 163942 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1962 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Baker v. Carr is the decision that systematized the political-question doctrine the entry cross-references; it gives the bare cross-ref its operative content. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

QUI TAM

[Vermont Agency of Natural Resources v. United States ex rel. Stevens, 529 U.S. 765 (2000)]

Who. The court deciding Vermont Agency of Natural Resources v. United States ex rel. Stevens (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Beyond the False Claims Act provision footnoted under Q.T., the qui tam device's constitutional footing matters: relators have Article III standing as partial assignees of the government's damages claim, and the qui tam provisions are a valid exercise of congressional power. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Vermont Agency of Natural Resources v. United States ex rel. Stevens, 529 U.S. 765 (2000). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUI TAM, p. 980; scan anchor: djvu line 164379 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 2000 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine and non-duplicative: Stevens answers the standing question the entry's definition raises but does not resolve; it adds law rather than repeating the § 3730 note. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

QUIA TIMET

[Law: 28 U.S.C. § 2201 — declaratory judgments]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The bill quia timet — equity's preventive aid to one who fears future injury to his rights — is the ancestor of the declaratory judgment: in cases of actual controversy, federal courts may declare the parties' rights before injury occurs. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 28 U.S.C. § 2201 — declaratory judgments. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUIA TIMET, p. 981; scan anchor: djvu line 164454 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: § 2201 is the statutory successor to the quia timet bill the entry defines; the lineage is direct, not analogical. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

QUO ANIMO

[Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'The quo animo is the real subject of inquiry' — intention or motive — states the mens rea principle: the act alone does not make one guilty unless the mind is guilty. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Actus reus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUO ANIMO, p. 983; scan anchor: djvu line 164785 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the maxim is the canonical statement of the intent-inquiry the entry defines; standard form, confidently cited. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PREVAILING PARTS’

[Law: 42 U.S.C. § 1988 — attorney's fees to the prevailing party]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'Prevailing party' is an operative term of art, not mere description: fee-shifting statutes award litigation costs and attorney's fees to the party that prevails, so the label carries a direct monetary consequence. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 42 U.S.C. § 1988 — attorney's fees to the prevailing party. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PREVAILING PARTS’, p. 937; scan anchor: djvu line 157218 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1988 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry defines who counts as prevailing; § 1988 is the federal statute that makes the status matter by authorizing fee awards to the prevailing party. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

PRINOEPS

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — Takings Clause]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's civil-law maxim — the prince and the republic may take private property for just cause — is the ancient root of eminent domain, which American law conditions on public use and just compensation: 'nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. V — Takings Clause. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PRINOEPS, p. 939; scan anchor: djvu line 157575 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

PROROGATES JURISDICTION

[Axiom: subject-matter jurisdiction cannot be conferred by the parties' consent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The Scots doctrine the entry describes — jurisdiction conferred on an otherwise incompetent judge by the parties' consent — is the opposite of the American rule: subject-matter jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent, waiver, or estoppel, and its absence may be raised at any time. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Axiom: subject-matter jurisdiction cannot be conferred by the parties' consent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PROROGATES JURISDICTION, p. 968; scan anchor: djvu line 160825 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: the illumination is the contrast — the entry describes a doctrine American law rejects, and the axiom states the rejecting rule, which is what an American reader needs. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PUBLIC I JURIS

[Illinois Central R.R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U.S. 387 (1892)]

Who. The court deciding Illinois Central R.R. Co. v. Illinois (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Things publici juris — open to or exercisable by all, such as public waters — are the subject of the public trust doctrine: the state holds navigable waters in trust for the public and cannot abdicate that trust to private parties. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Illinois Central R.R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U.S. 387 (1892). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PUBLIC I JURIS, p. 965; scan anchor: djvu line 161982 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1892 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: Illinois Central is the foundational American statement of the public-trust doctrine for the very 'public water' example the entry gives. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

PURSUIT OP HAPPINESS

[Law: Declaration of Independence (1776); U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 — liberty]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry expounds the right 'as used in constitutional law' without naming its sources: the phrase comes from the Declaration of Independence (1776), and its constitutional work — personal freedom, liberty of contract and conscience, family relations — is done by Fourteenth Amendment liberty. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Declaration of Independence (1776); U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 — liberty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry PURSUIT OP HAPPINESS, p. 968; scan anchor: djvu line 162501 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1776 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. Genuine: the entry discusses the constitutional right at length but cites neither its founding source nor its operative clause; the footnote supplies both. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

Q. T

[Law: 31 U.S.C. § 3730 — False Claims Act qui tam actions]

Who. The United States Code (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. Qui tam — 'who sues for the king as well as himself' — survives as the private-enforcement device of the False Claims Act: a private relator may sue for fraud on the government and share in the recovery. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: 31 U.S.C. § 3730 — False Claims Act qui tam actions. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry Q. T, p. 969; scan anchor: djvu line 162667 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: § 3730 is the federal qui tam provision — the living form of the abbreviated action; it gives the bare abbreviation its operative content. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

QUAKED IU SB BENE DEMERIT

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 1]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. 'During good behavior' — the tenure clause the entry describes in grants of office — is the constitutional tenure of the federal judiciary: judges 'shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 1. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUAKED IU SB BENE DEMERIT, p. 973; scan anchor: djvu line 163233 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: Article III, § 1 is the American instantiation of the quamdiu se bene gesserit tenure the entry defines; quoted verbatim. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

QUANTI BUNORI8

[Law: UCC § 2-714 — damages for breach of warranty]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The civil-law action reducing the agreed price for defects is the ancestor of the buyer's warranty damages: the difference between the value of the goods as warranted and their value as delivered. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 2-714 — damages for breach of warranty. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUANTI BUNORI8, p. 975; scan anchor: djvu line 163448 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Genuine: § 2-714 is the uniform measure for exactly the defect-in-value claim the quanti minoris action brought; the ancient action's modern form. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

QUOD PERMITTAT PROSTERNERE

[Maxim: Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas — use your own property so as not to injure another's]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. This nuisance-abatement writ is the procedural expression of the maxim that one must use one's own property so as not to injure another's. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas — use your own property so as not to injure another's. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUOD PERMITTAT PROSTERNERE, p. 986; scan anchor: djvu line 165265 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the writ as lying 'to abate a nuisance'; the sic utere maxim states the substantive principle of neighbor-law that makes nuisance actionable, so it genuinely illuminates why such a writ exists rather than restating the definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

QUOD PROSTRAVIT

[Maxim: Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas — use your own property so as not to injure another's]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The judgment 'that he do abate' upon a nuisance indictment enforces the maxim that property must be used so as not to injure another. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas — use your own property so as not to injure another's. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUOD PROSTRAVIT, p. 986; scan anchor: djvu line 165311 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Same genuine root as QUOD PERMITTAT PROSTERNERE: the writ seeks abatement and this is the judgment granting it; the sic utere maxim is the substantive principle both serve. Citing the same maxim for both is honest, not duplicative padding. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

QUOD RECUPERET

[Maxim: Ubi jus ibi remedium — where there is a right, there is a remedy]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The standard judgment formula 'that he recover' is the procedural embodiment of the principle that where the law recognizes a right it furnishes a remedy. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ubi jus ibi remedium — where there is a right, there is a remedy. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUOD RECUPERET, p. 986; scan anchor: djvu line 165339 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Borderline but genuine: the entry is about the form of judgment for a prevailing plaintiff; ubi jus ibi remedium explains why such a recovery-formula exists at all — right without an enforcing judgment would be empty. Kept because the link explains the form's purpose, not merely its wording. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

QUORUM

[Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 5 — 'a Majority of each [House] shall constitute a Quorum to do Business']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The Constitution itself fixes the quorum principle for Congress: 'a Majority of each [House] shall constitute a Quorum to do Business.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. I, § 5 — 'a Majority of each [House] shall constitute a Quorum to do Business'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUORUM, p. 987; scan anchor: djvu line 165439 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the default rule that quorum is a majority absent contrary law; Article I, Section 5 is that rule's most authoritative American instantiation, quoted briefly and exactly. Directly illuminating, not decorative. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

QUOTA

[Maxim: Aequitas est quasi aequalitas — equality is equity]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. A quota — each co-obligor's proportional share of a common liability — is measured by the equitable principle of contribution: equality is equity. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Aequitas est quasi aequalitas — equality is equity. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUOTA, p. 987; scan anchor: djvu line 165484 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines quota as the proportional part falling on each of those collectively responsible; the maxim states the principle by which courts apportion a shared burden among co-obligors (contribution). Genuine: the maxim gives the why behind the proportional division. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

QUOTIENT VERDICT

[Law: quotient/chance verdicts as jury misconduct — see Hamilton v. Owego Waterworks, 22 App. Div. 573, 48 N.Y. Supp. 106, as cited in Black's 2e]

Who. The court deciding Law: quotient/chance verdicts as jury misconduct — see Hamilton v. Owego Waterworks (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. A verdict fixed by prior agreement to accept the average of jurors' sums is a chance verdict — jury misconduct and ground for a new trial, not a deliberated judgment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: quotient/chance verdicts as jury misconduct — see Hamilton v. Owego Waterworks, 22 App. Div. 573, 48 N.Y. Supp. 106, as cited in Black's 2e. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUOTIENT VERDICT, p. 987; scan anchor: djvu line 165502 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the averaging process and cites cases treating it; the black-letter rule that such verdicts are set aside as misconduct is the legal consequence that makes the definition matter. Case cite is taken from the entry's own body and flagged as such rather than independently verified. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

QUOUSQUE

[Law: words of limitation vs. words of purchase in conveyancing (e.g., 'to A and his heirs')]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. As a word of limitation, 'quousque' ('until') belongs to the doctrine distinguishing words of limitation — which measure the estate's duration — from words of purchase, which name the taker. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: words of limitation vs. words of purchase in conveyancing (e.g., 'to A and his heirs'). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry QUOUSQUE, p. 988; scan anchor: djvu line 165560 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's whole legal content is that quousque is 'used as a word of limitation'; the limitation/purchase distinction is the doctrine that gives that classification its meaning. Genuine doctrinal illumination. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RACE

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. XV — 'The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged ... on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. In American law 'race' is a constitutionally protected classification: the Fifteenth Amendment bars denial of the vote 'on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. XV — 'The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged ... on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RACE, p. 989; scan anchor: djvu line 165631 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry itself invokes the Fifteenth Amendment's 'race, color, or previous condition of servitude' language; the Amendment is the operative legal significance of the term in U.S. law, quoted briefly and exactly. Strong, direct link. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RACK

[Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — 'nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted']

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The rack is the historical paradigm of the 'cruel and unusual punishments' forbidden by the Eighth Amendment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. amend. VIII — 'nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted'. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RACK, p. 989; scan anchor: djvu line 165664 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry is purely descriptive of the torture engine; the Eighth Amendment's prohibition is historically aimed at precisely such engines, giving the definition its legal significance. Quoted briefly and exactly. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

RAFFLE

[Law: the prize–chance–consideration test distinguishing lotteries]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Courts sort raffles from lotteries by the three-element test — prize, chance, and consideration — which is exactly the classification exercise the entry's cases perform. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: the prize–chance–consideration test distinguishing lotteries. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RAFFLE, p. 989; scan anchor: djvu line 165695 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry turns on whether a raffle is a lottery (citing State v. Pinchback holding it is not); the three-element test is the operative legal standard courts apply to that question. Genuine: it explains the cited cases' reasoning. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RAILROAD

[Case: Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113 (1877)]

Who. The court deciding Case: Munn v. Illinois (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. Railroads as common carriers are 'affected with a public interest' and hence subject to rate regulation — the doctrinal footing for the railroad commissions the entry describes. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Case: Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113 (1877). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RAILROAD, p. 989; scan anchor: djvu line 165729 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1877 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry describes commissions 'appointed ... to regulate railway traffic ... with power ... to regulate'; Munn supplies the constitutional doctrine (businesses affected with a public interest may be rate-regulated) that authorizes such commissions. Directly illuminating the regulatory passage. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RAPE

[Law: common-law rule that penetration, however slight, completes the offense of rape]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. At common law the 'carnal knowledge' element was complete upon penetration, however slight — emission was not required. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law rule that penetration, however slight, completes the offense of rape. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RAPE, p. 991; scan anchor: djvu line 165941 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines rape as 'unlawful carnal knowledge ... forcibly and against her will'; the penetration rule gives the operative legal meaning of 'carnal knowledge,' the definition's load-bearing phrase. RAPPORT A SUCCESSION

[Law: doctrine of advancement / hotchpot in succession]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The common-law analogue is the doctrine of advancement: lifetime gifts to an heir are presumed made in anticipation of their share and must be brought into hotchpot for equal division. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: doctrine of advancement / hotchpot in succession. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RAPPORT A SUCCESSION, p. 991; scan anchor: djvu line 165974 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry describes the civil-law/Louisiana proceeding for restoring advancements to the succession; the common-law advancement doctrine is the same principle in the parallel system, giving genuine comparative illumination rather than a mere translation. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RASURE

[Law: UCC § 3-407 — alteration of negotiable instruments]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. An erasure that materially alters a written instrument invokes the alteration doctrine: a material alteration made without the obligor's assent voids or discharges the instrument. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 3-407 — alteration of negotiable instruments. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RASURE, p. 991; scan anchor: djvu line 165997 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines rasure as scraping away letters/words from a written instrument and distinguishes it from obliteration; rasure is a species of alteration, and the alteration doctrine states its legal consequence. UCC 3-407 is the modern codification of that consequence. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RATABLE ESTATE

[Case: McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819)]

Who. The court deciding Case: McCulloch v. Maryland (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. What counts as 'ratable' is the legislature's exercise of the taxing power — 'the power to tax involves the power to destroy.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Case: McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RATABLE ESTATE, p. 991; scan anchor: djvu line 166009 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1819 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry defines ratable estate as the property 'the legislature designates as taxable'; McCulloch states the nature and magnitude of that designating power. The Marshall dictum is quoted exactly and is the canonical statement of the taxing power's scope. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RATAM REM HABERE

[Maxim: Ratihabitio mandato aequiparatur — ratification is equivalent to prior command]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. This civil-law 'holding a thing ratified' is the root of the agency rule that subsequent ratification is equivalent to prior authority, relating back to the act. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ratihabitio mandato aequiparatur — ratification is equivalent to prior command. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RATAM REM HABERE, p. 991; scan anchor: djvu line 166015 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines ratam rem habere as 'to ratify or confirm it' (Dig. 46, 8, 12, 1); the ratihabitio maxim states the operative legal effect of ratification in the descended agency doctrine. Direct lineage, genuinely illuminating. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RATIHABITIO

[Maxim: Ratihabitio mandato aequiparatur — ratification is equivalent to express command]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The entry's own maxim — ratification is equivalent to express command — is the agency rule that a principal's later assent adopts the agent's unauthorized act as his own. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Ratihabitio mandato aequiparatur — ratification is equivalent to express command. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RATIHABITIO, p. 992; scan anchor: djvu line 166113 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the maxim (Dig. 46, 3, 12, 4; Broom, Max. 867); the footnote records its operative meaning in the descended agency doctrine, where ratification relates back to the act. The maxim's canonical application, genuinely illuminating. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RATIO

[Law: ratio decidendi vs. obiter dicta in stare decisis]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. In precedent only the ratio decidendi — the ground of decision — binds; what is said beyond it is obiter dictum. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: ratio decidendi vs. obiter dicta in stare decisis. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RATIO, p. 992; scan anchor: djvu line 166123 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines ratio decidendi and ratio legis; the binding/obiter distinction is the stare decisis doctrine that gives ratio decidendi its force. Without it the definition is inert vocabulary; with it, the entry explains precedent. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RATIONE PRIVILEGII

[Case: Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. 175 (N.Y. 1805)]

Who. The court deciding Case: Pierson v. Post (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. The franchise described is an exception to the general rule that wild animals (ferae naturae) belong to no one until reduced to possession by capture. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Case: Pierson v. Post, 3 Cai. 175 (N.Y. 1805). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RATIONE PRIVILEGII, p. 992; scan anchor: djvu line 166198 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1805 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry describes a special franchise to take game on another's land; Pierson states the background occupancy rule that makes the franchise an exception worth naming. Genuine doctrinal context for the property-in-wild-animals entry. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

What. In Spanish law causa is the civil-law counterpart of common-law consideration — the juridical reason that makes a promise enforceable. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: civil-law causa as the counterpart of common-law consideration. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RAZON, p. 993; scan anchor: djvu line 166260 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry gives 'cause (causa)' with a Las Partidas cite; the causa/consideration parallel states the term's legal function in the civil-law contract system. Genuine comparative illumination of a one-line definition. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RE

[Law: in rem jurisdiction in probate, bankruptcy, and admiralty proceedings]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. 'In re' captions typically mark in rem proceedings — probate, bankruptcy, admiralty — where jurisdiction runs against the estate or thing rather than against a defendant. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: in rem jurisdiction in probate, bankruptcy, and admiralty proceedings. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RE, p. 993; scan anchor: djvu line 166263 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines 'Re' as 'in the matter of' for one-party proceedings; the in rem character explains why such proceedings are so captioned — there is no defendant, only a thing or estate before the court. Genuine, not decorative. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

REAP

[Maxim: Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit — whatever is affixed to the soil belongs to the soil]

Who. The maxim itself, as stated in the citation [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. The real/personal line is policed by the annexation rule: whatever is planted in or affixed to the soil belongs to the soil — quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Maxim: Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit — whatever is affixed to the soil belongs to the soil. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry REAP, p. 993; scan anchor: djvu line 166315 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. Headword is the OCR of REAL ('relating to land, as distinguished from personal property'); the maxim states the operative test — annexation — by which chattels cross the line into realty (the fixture doctrine). Directly illuminates the defined distinction. Keyed under the chunk's headword as printed. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

REASONABLE

[Case: Vaughan v. Menlove (1837) — the objective reasonable-person standard]

Who. The court deciding Case: Vaughan v. Menlove (1837) — the objective reasonable-person standard (as cited) [basis: citation, case form]

What. In law 'reasonable' invokes the objective standard — the conduct of the reasonable person in like circumstances — not the actor's own subjective capacity. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Case: Vaughan v. Menlove (1837) — the objective reasonable-person standard. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry REASONABLE, p. 994; scan anchor: djvu line 166424 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1837 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry catalogs 'reasonable' usages (reasonable act, reasonable cause, reasonable creature); the objective reasonable-person standard is the unifying legal meaning of the word across them, most famously in negligence. Genuine core doctrine. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

REASSURANCE

[Law: no privity between original insured and reinsurer; original insurer remains liable]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Reinsurance does not release the original insurer: the first insured has no privity with the reinsurer and looks only to his own insurer for payment. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: no privity between original insured and reinsurer; original insurer remains liable. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry REASSURANCE, p. 994; scan anchor: djvu line 166448 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines reassurance as the insurer's procuring cover for his own undertaking; the no-privity rule states the legal consequence that matters — the insured's rights are unaffected by the reinsurance. Genuine operative content. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

REBATE

[Law: Elkins Act of 1903 — prohibition of railroad rebates]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Railroad freight rebates of the kind described were outlawed as discriminatory preferences under federal interstate-commerce legislation. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Elkins Act of 1903 — prohibition of railroad rebates. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry REBATE, p. 994; scan anchor: djvu line 166461 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. 1903 [basis: year carried in the citation]

Why. The entry expressly includes 'a deduction ... from a stipulated rate for the transportation of freight by a railroad'; the Elkins Act's rebate ban is the legal consequence that makes that clause significant. Directly on point. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

REBEL

[Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined]

Who. The Constitution of the United States (as cited) [basis: citation, statute/instrument form, closed-table]

What. In U.S. law the domestic category for armed resistance to lawful government is treason, which the Constitution narrowly defines as 'levying War against [the United States], or in adhering to their Enemies.' [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: U.S. Const. art. III, § 3 — treason defined. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry REBEL, p. 994; scan anchor: djvu line 166473 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry (via Vattel) defines rebels as subjects taking up arms against lawful government; treason is the operative constitutional offense for that conduct, quoted briefly and exactly. Genuine: gives the American legal category for the defined conduct. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

REBELLIOUS ASSEMBLY

[Law: common-law unlawful assembly, rout, and riot]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. This statutory twelve-person offense belongs to the common-law family of unlawful assembly, rout, and riot — graduated by how far the disturbance proceeds. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: common-law unlawful assembly, rout, and riot. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry REBELLIOUS ASSEMBLY, p. 994; scan anchor: djvu line 166505 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines a statutory form of unlawful assembly; the common-law trio is the general framework it belongs to, showing where the twelve-person statutory threshold sits. Genuine context, not decoration. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

REBUT

[Law: a presumption shifts the burden of production to the opponent]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Rebuttal is the mechanism of the burden of proof: a presumption shifts the burden of going forward with evidence, and rebutting evidence meets it. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: a presumption shifts the burden of production to the opponent. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry REBUT, p. 994; scan anchor: djvu line 166529 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry's own example (plaintiff raises a presumption of liability; defendant adduces evidence showing it ill-founded) describes burden-shifting; the stated rule names the evidence-law principle at work. Genuine: explains the example's structure. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION

[Law: praesumptio juris et de jure (conclusive) vs. praesumptio juris tantum (rebuttable)]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The counterpart is the conclusive (irrebuttable) presumption — praesumptio juris et de jure — which no evidence may contradict, as against the rebuttable praesumptio juris tantum. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: praesumptio juris et de jure (conclusive) vs. praesumptio juris tantum (rebuttable). Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION, p. 994; scan anchor: djvu line 166553 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines the rebuttable species; the conclusive/rebuttable contrast is the classification the definition belongs to, and the Latin pair is the classical statement of it. Genuine doctrinal completion. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

How. By an authority supplied from the Law well's research — the citation does not appear in the host entry's text [basis: citation absent from host body (mechanical containment check); provenance: Phase 1 worker annotation]

RECALL

[Law: Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, art. 9 — persona non grata]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. The counterpart is the receiving state's power to declare a diplomat persona non grata and require his recall — the two mechanisms by which a diplomatic mission ends. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, art. 9 — persona non grata. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RECALL, p. 995; scan anchor: djvu line 166591 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry defines recall as the sending state's act; persona non grata is the receiving state's correlative power, completing the diplomatic-law picture. Genuine bilateral illumination. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RECAPTION

[Law: UCC § 9-609 — secured party's right to take possession of collateral]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Recaption is the common-law ancestor of modern self-help repossession: a secured party may retake collateral without judicial process if it can be done without breach of the peace. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: UCC § 9-609 — secured party's right to take possession of collateral. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RECAPTION, p. 995; scan anchor: djvu line 166602 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry states the privilege's limit — 'so it be not in a riotous manner, or attended with a breach of the peace'; UCC 9-609 carries the identical limit into modern secured transactions. Genuine lineage: the same rule, then and now. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]

RECEIPT

[Law: parol evidence admissible to explain or contradict a mere receipt]

Who. OPEN — citation names no decider, statute, or work in expandable form

What. Because a receipt is a mere admission and not a contract, parol evidence is admissible to explain or contradict it — the converse of the parol evidence rule for written contracts. [basis: the insert's own text, verbatim, in its printed form]

Where. Cited source: Law: parol evidence admissible to explain or contradict a mere receipt. Host locus: Black's Law Dictionary, 2nd edition (1910), entry RECEIPT, p. 995; scan anchor: djvu line 166641 [basis: citation + host entry record (entries.json)]

When. OPEN — no year in citation or insert text

Why. The entry stresses that a receipt is 'a mere admission of a fact' and only 'prima facie evidence'; the parol-evidence distinction states the legal consequence of that characterization. Directly illuminates the definition's key phrase. [basis: the phase worker's recorded reasoning — the edition's original Why, carried verbatim]
